Atlas

Using the Atlas

Welcome to the Atlas of the Northern Realms, Witcher! In this expansive chapter, cartographers have pinpointed hundreds of areas of interest, danger, and general exploration so you can survey the landscape with an increased air of certainty. The following introduction explains how this information is disseminated on a realm, territory, and area basis.

A LAND DIVIDED: REALMS, TERRITORIES, AND AREAS

This Atlas is divided into the same Realms as those you discover on your World Map. However, expect to see more information than the in-game maps provide.

REALMS

The following realms are detailed:

White Orchard: An area once belonging to the Temerians, where Geralt spends most of his time during the Main Quest Prologue.
Vizima Royal Castle: The seat of Nilfgaardian power, where Emhyr var Emreis rules with an iron fist. This is a single, interior location.
Velen (No Man's Land): A war-torn and descimated landscape of pestilence and woe, fought over by the Nilfgaard and Redanians, while the peasant underclass ekes out a pitiful existence.
Novigrad: Encompassing the largest city of the Realms, as well as the northern territories (including the extensive Gustfields territory), and the second city of Oxenfurt. Ravaged by war, but in better shape than the corpse-strewn south.
The Skellige Isles: An archipelago off into the western oceans; a number of islands ruled over by war-like clans and chiefs known as jarls. A central seat of power resides on the largest island of Ard Skellig.
Other Worlds: During two Main Quests (The Isle of Mists, and Through Time and Space) you end up visiting hidden and strange locations that are otherwise impossible to access. Make the most of your time here by searching every nook and cranny.
Kaer Morhen: The hidden fortress of the Wolf School Witchers, this is as close to a home as Geralt knows. The rugged mountain landscape is both beautiful and dangerous to behold.
Toussaint: Ancient volcanic activity has sculpted the landscape of this duchy into an idyllic place where the wine flows freely, though recently, so has the blood.

TERRITORIES AND ISLANDS

Due to their tremendous size, the Territories of Velen, Novigrad, and Skellige have been further sub-divided into smaller land masses known as "territories" (or islands in the case of Skellige). These aren't shown on your in-game maps, and are segmented across naturally-occurring topography, such as rivers and roads, wherever possible. The following Territories are detailed:

Velen: Crow's Perch.
Velen: Mudplough.
Velen: Grayrocks.
Velen: The Descent.
Velen: Spitfire Bluff.
Velen: The Mire.
Velen: Crookback Bog.
Velen: Bald Mountain.
Novigrad: City of Novigrad.
Novigrad: Grassy Knoll.
Novigrad: Gustfields.
Novigrad: City of Oxenfurt.
Skellige: Ard Skellig.
Skellige: An Skellig.
Skellige: Faroe.
Skellige: Hindarsfjall.
Skellige: Spikeroog.
Skellige: Undvik.

How To Use This Guide

Additional Content

Geralt of Rivia's adventures don't end at the culmination of the Critical Path, as there are a number of free DLC assets, as well as two larger-scaled Expansions, available to you. The more basic DLC is covered here. The more involved DLC, and both Expansions, are introduced here, and a page number where more detailed information can be found, is also listed.

CONTENT MAY HAVE SHIFTED

Make sure you access the "Downloadable Content" section of your Main Menu, as this shows all DLC and expansions you have installed as well as four new options: to turn off and on the alternative looks for Ciri, Triss, and Yennefer, as well as the Ballad Heroes card set.

DOWNLOADABLE CONTENT

There are 13 pieces of Downloadable Content (DLC) for you to access for free. That's correct, no crowns need to change hands! Whenever you see the DLC icon throughout this guide, it refers to one of the following pieces of content:

ARMOR AND ARMAMENTS

The following content is additional armor for yourself (torso, gloves, boots, and trousers) and your horse (blinders, saddle, and saddlebags); or armaments (crossbows that complement a particular armor set). If you'd like to "look the part" when roaming a specific location, feel free to purchase this equipment, which costs you crowns, and can only be worn when you reach a certain level. For statistical information on these items, see A Witcher's Tools in your free online eGuide.

Elite Crossbow Set

This offers you three different crossbows, each accessible when you reach a different level (though you can buy them beforehand), and each requiring you to purchase them from a particular vendor. Consider them to be part of the three new Armor Sets, if you wish to fully complete each one.

Crossbow Type	Vendor	Nearest Signpost	Specific Location	Approximate Cost
Nilfgaardian Crossbow (Level 7)	Merchant (Quartermaster)	Crow's Perch	In the upper stronghold, inside Crow's Perch	300

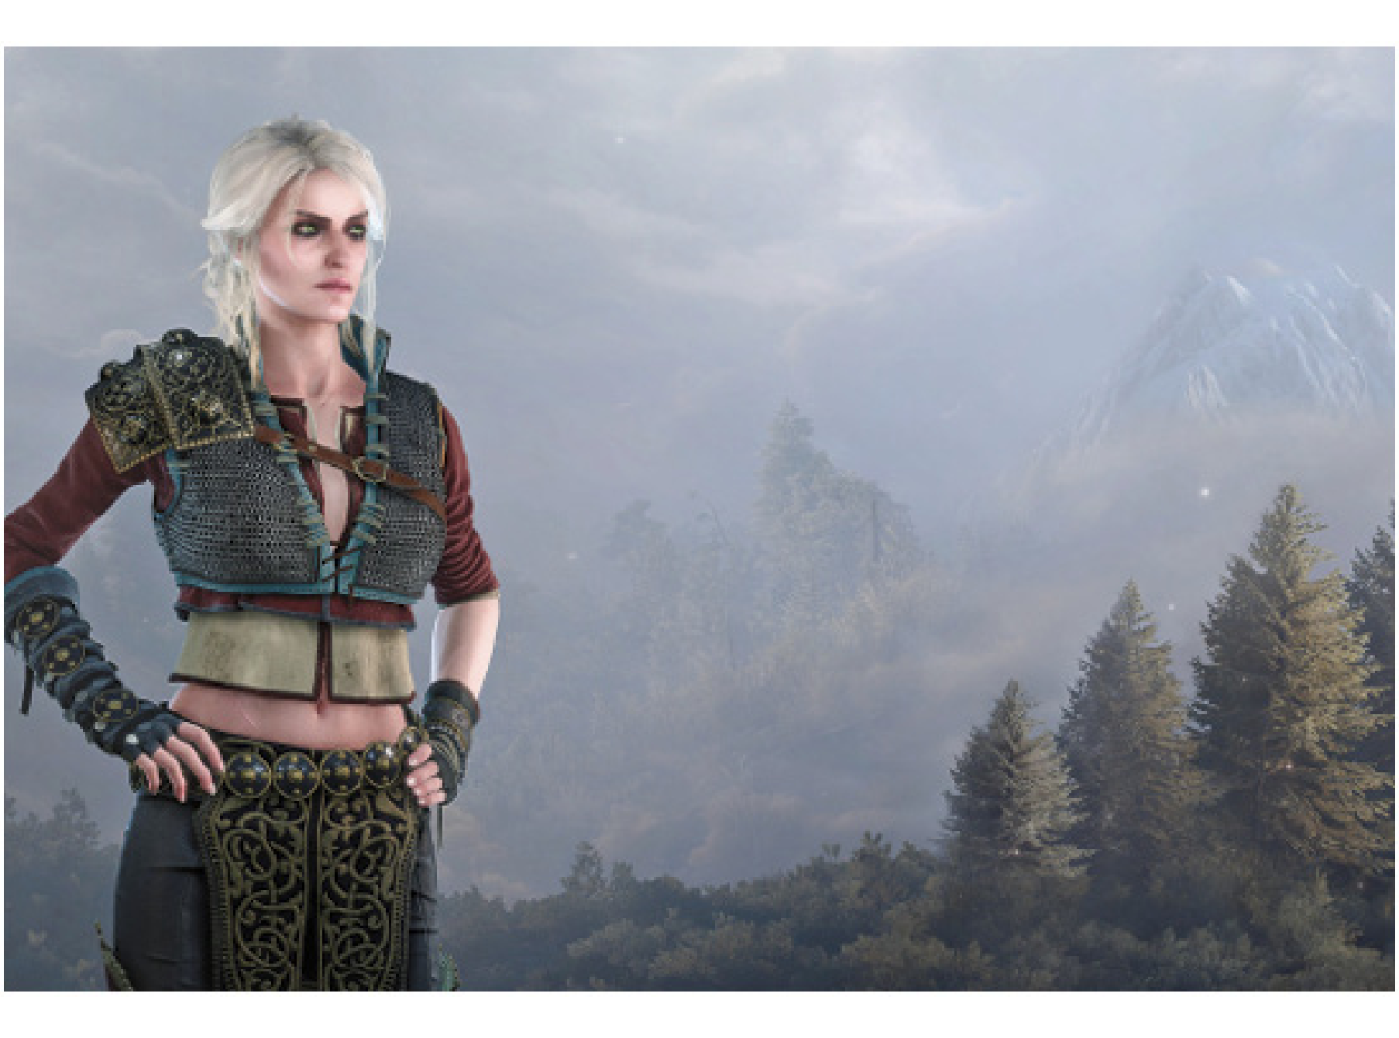
ALTERNATIVE LOOKS AND STYLES

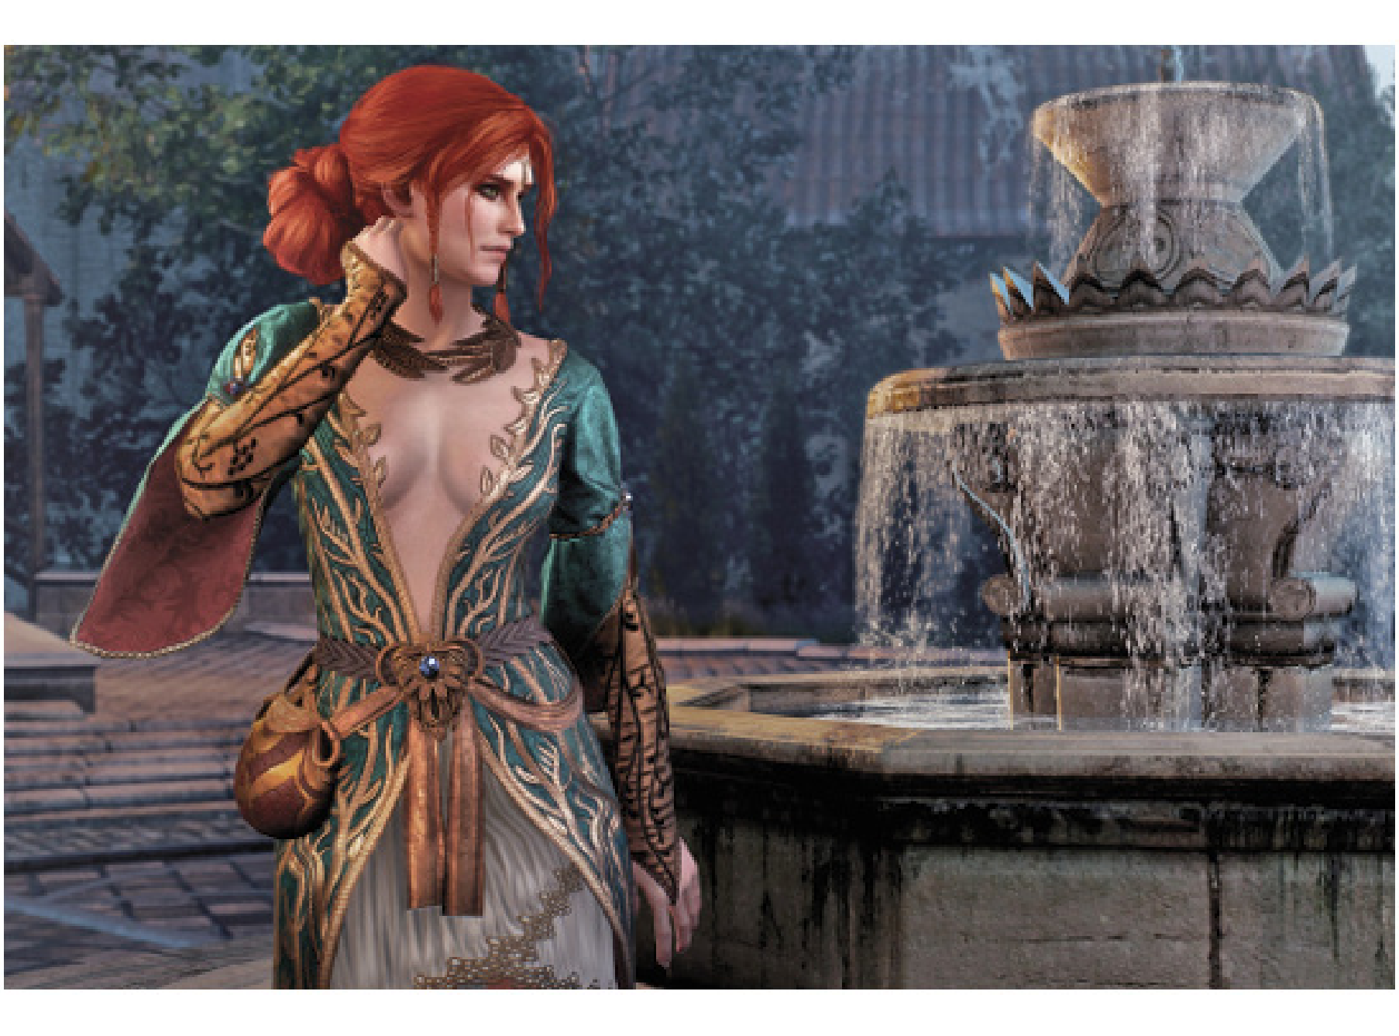
This type of content changes the appearance one of your closest friends, allows more styles to be attempted by a barber, and gives an alternate look to some of your Neutral Gwent cards. You can switch between looks for Ciri, Triss, Yennefer, and the Neutral Gwent cards in the "Options" part of the Downloadable Content Menu.

Alternative Look For Ciri



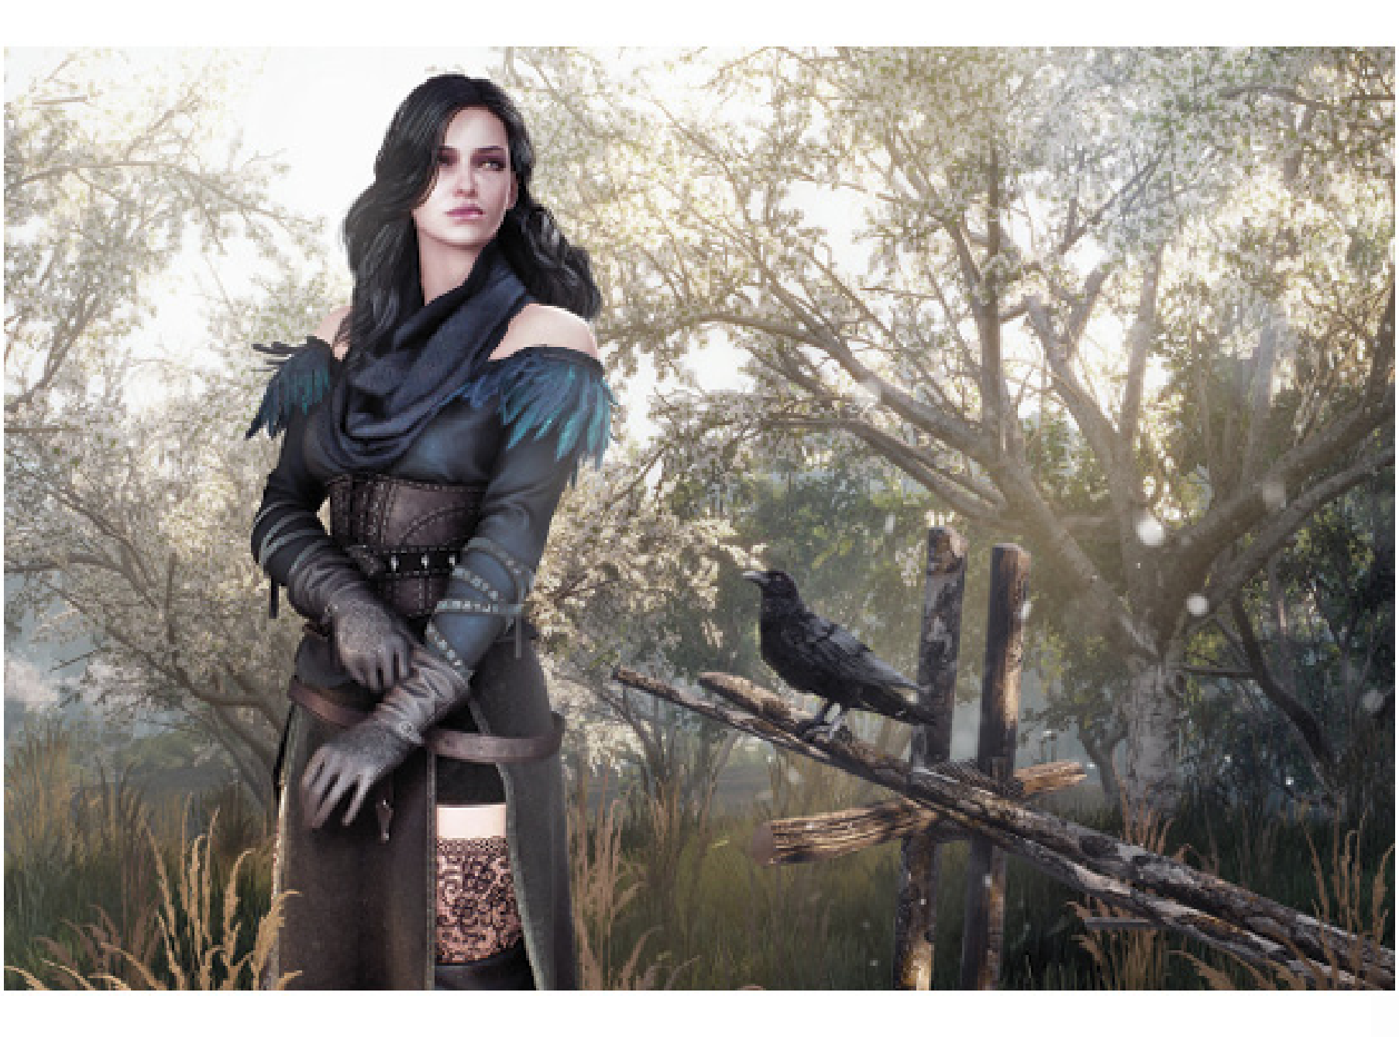
Ciri sports a more Skellige-centric look any time you see her (or play as her) during your adventure.

Alternative Look For Triss



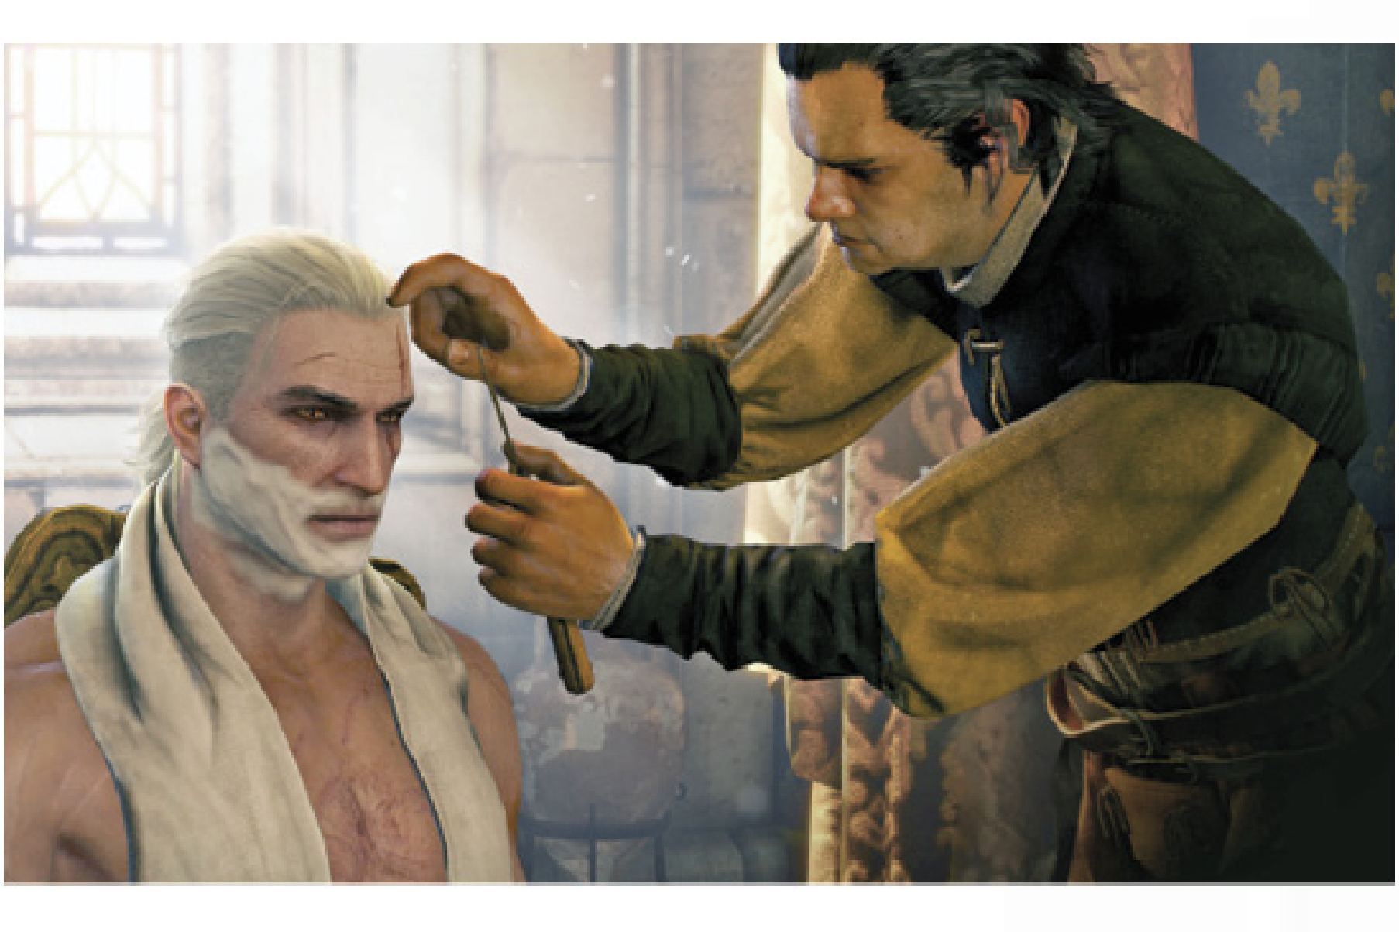
Triss has a lavish and ornate dress befitting a flame-haired sorceress, any time you see her.

Alternative Look For Yennefer



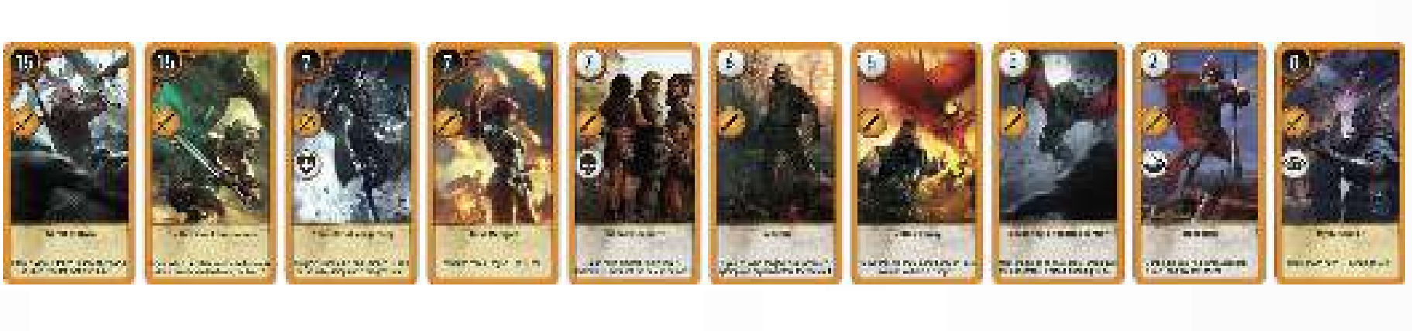
Yennefer's alternate outfit is still predominantly black, with raven feathers and a hint of naughtiness.

Beard And Hairstyle Set



When you visit any Barber across the Northern Realms and beyond, you can now choose from an increased number of looks for your locks and stubble. A haircut usually costs 10 crowns, and a beard style is five crowns. To locate a Barber, please consult this guide's Atlas.

"Ballad Heroes" Neutral Gwent Card Set

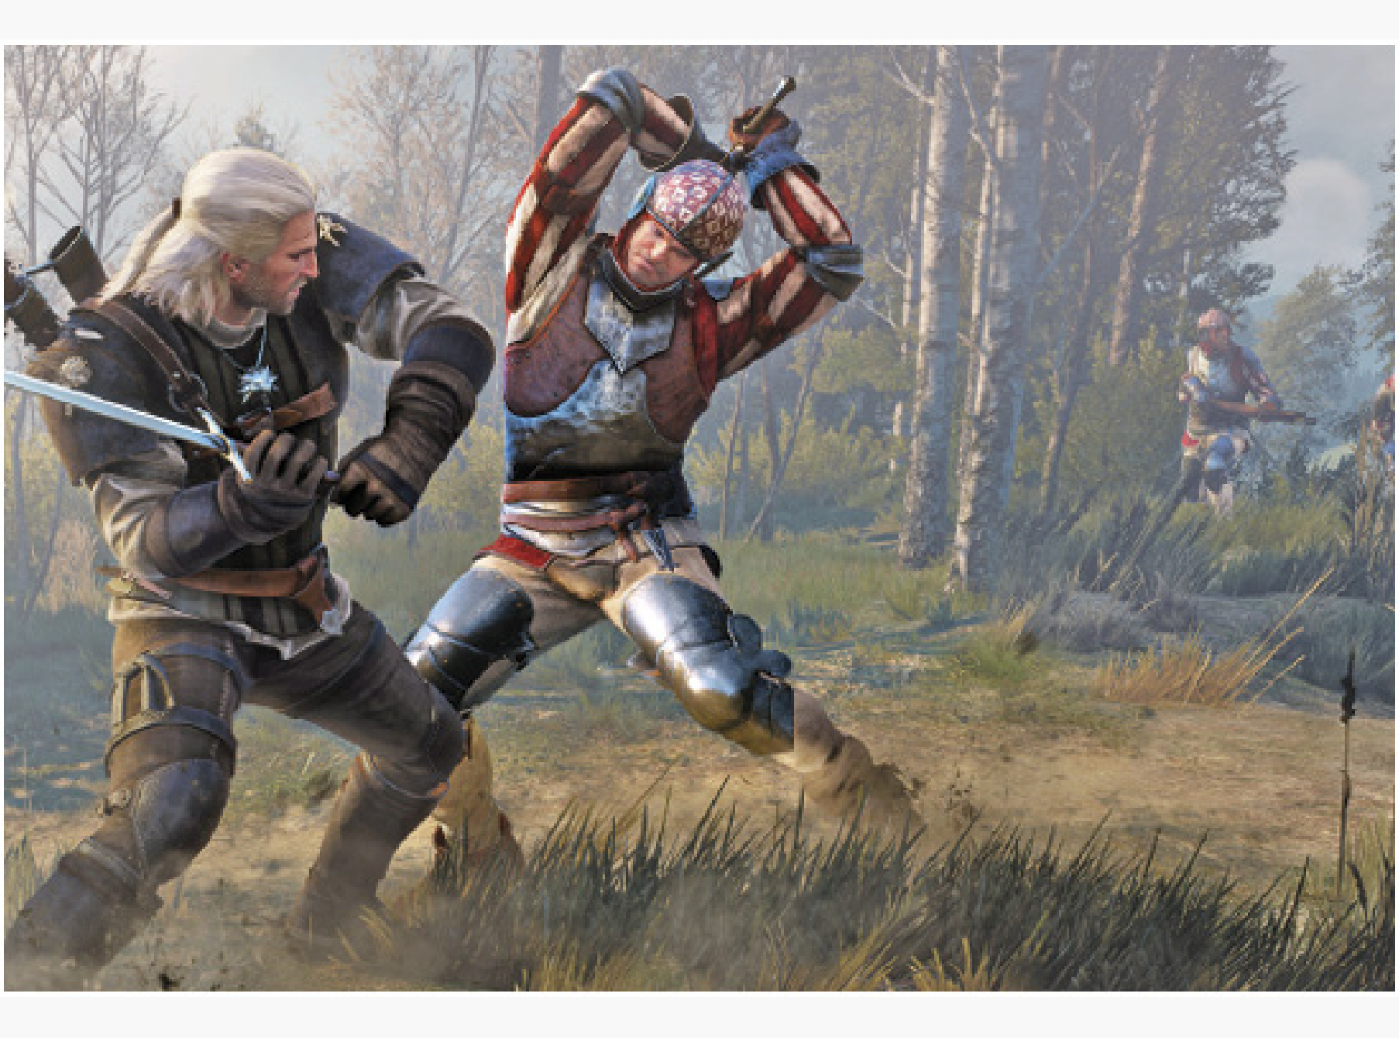


This is an alternate "look" to ten of your Gwent cards. Obviously, you need to have collected the cards before you can switch between the looks. Aside from the different picture on each of the ten Neutral cards, nothing changes. You can switch between the "Ballad Heroes" art and the original art in the "Options" part of the Downloadable Content Menu.

ADDITIONAL QUESTS AND OTHER CONTENT

The following pieces of content add to your overall adventuring experience. Some elements may be simply superficial additional ways to cleave a foe in twain. Others are entire quests.

New "Finisher" Animations



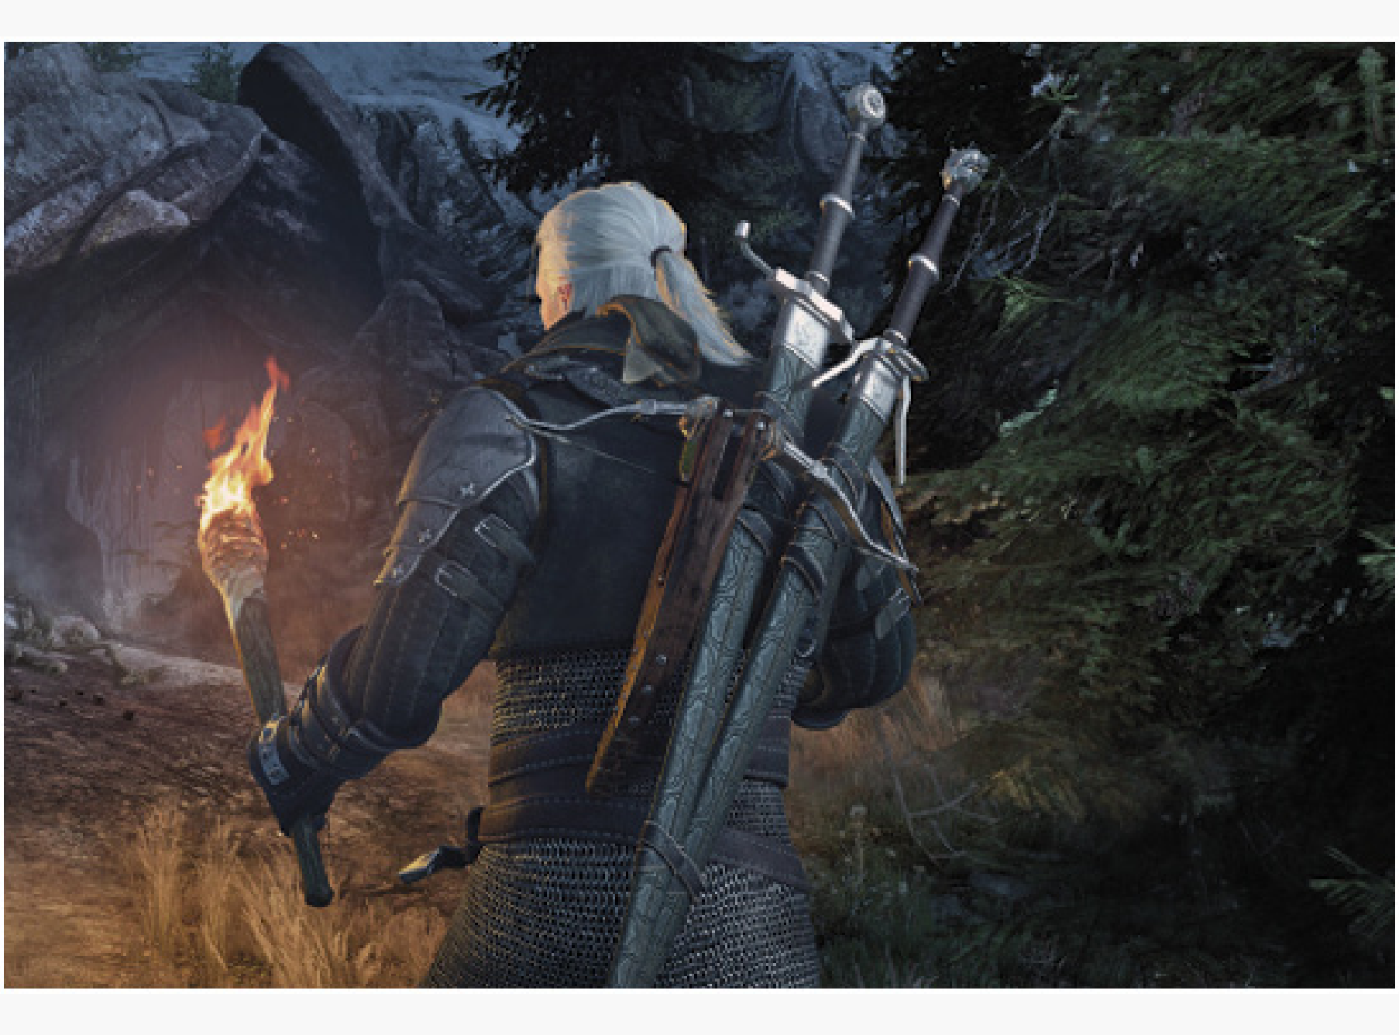
Slay your foes in new brutal and spectacular ways with this visceral end to certain bouts of combat! This works most proficiently when you strike a finishing (killing) blow on an enemy you are more powerful than, in terms of your level. Only human-sized enemies "benefit" from this series of dismemberment deaths!

New Game +

This is a new game mode that is accessible once you start a "New Game". This option then appears as a choice. It becomes available only after you complete the Critical Path quests. New Game + allows you to keep your character's progression and items, though all of the enemies encountered in the world are scaled up to provide you with new challenges.

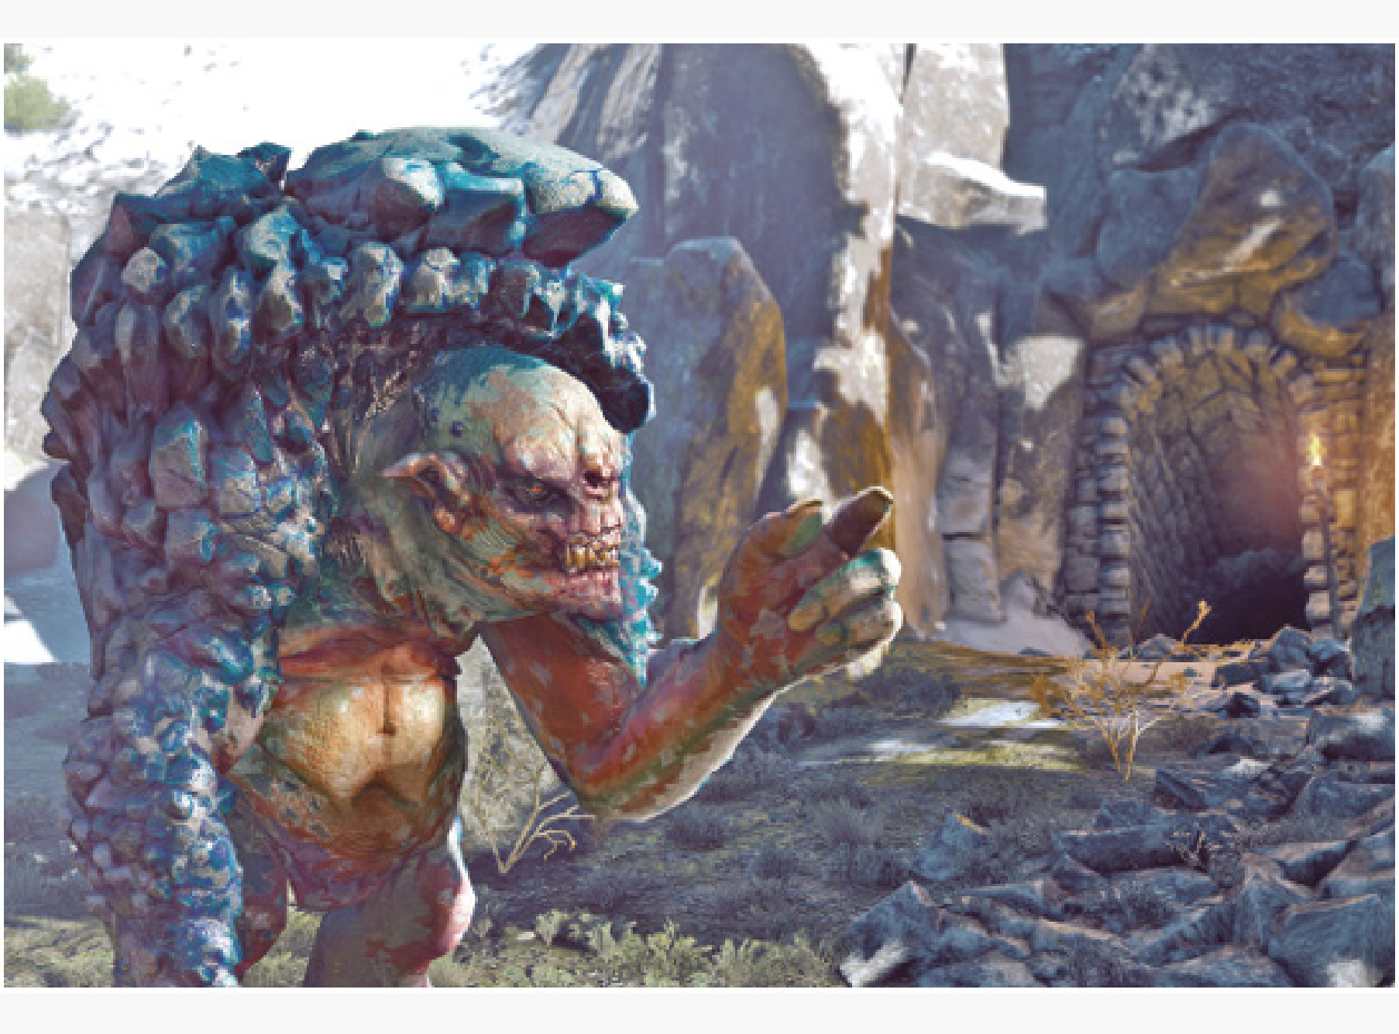
Need further challenge? Then choose a high difficulty level as well as New Game +!

New: Contract: Missing Miners



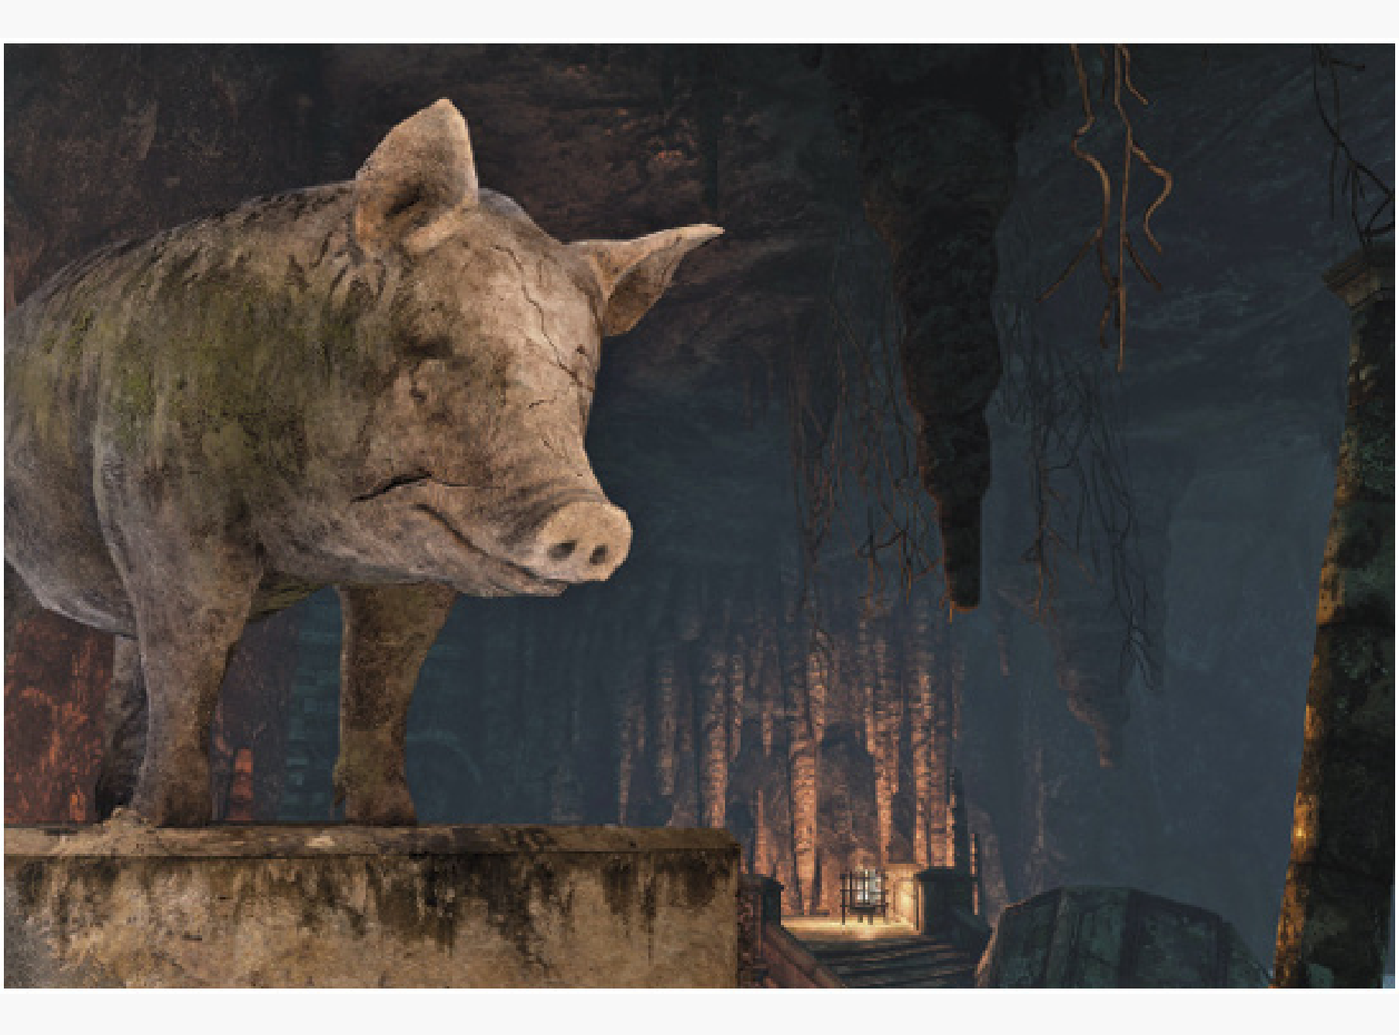
A group of miners has recently gone missing in the wilds of Ard Skellig. Can you track the beast responsible for their demise?

New: Contract: Skellige's Most Wanted



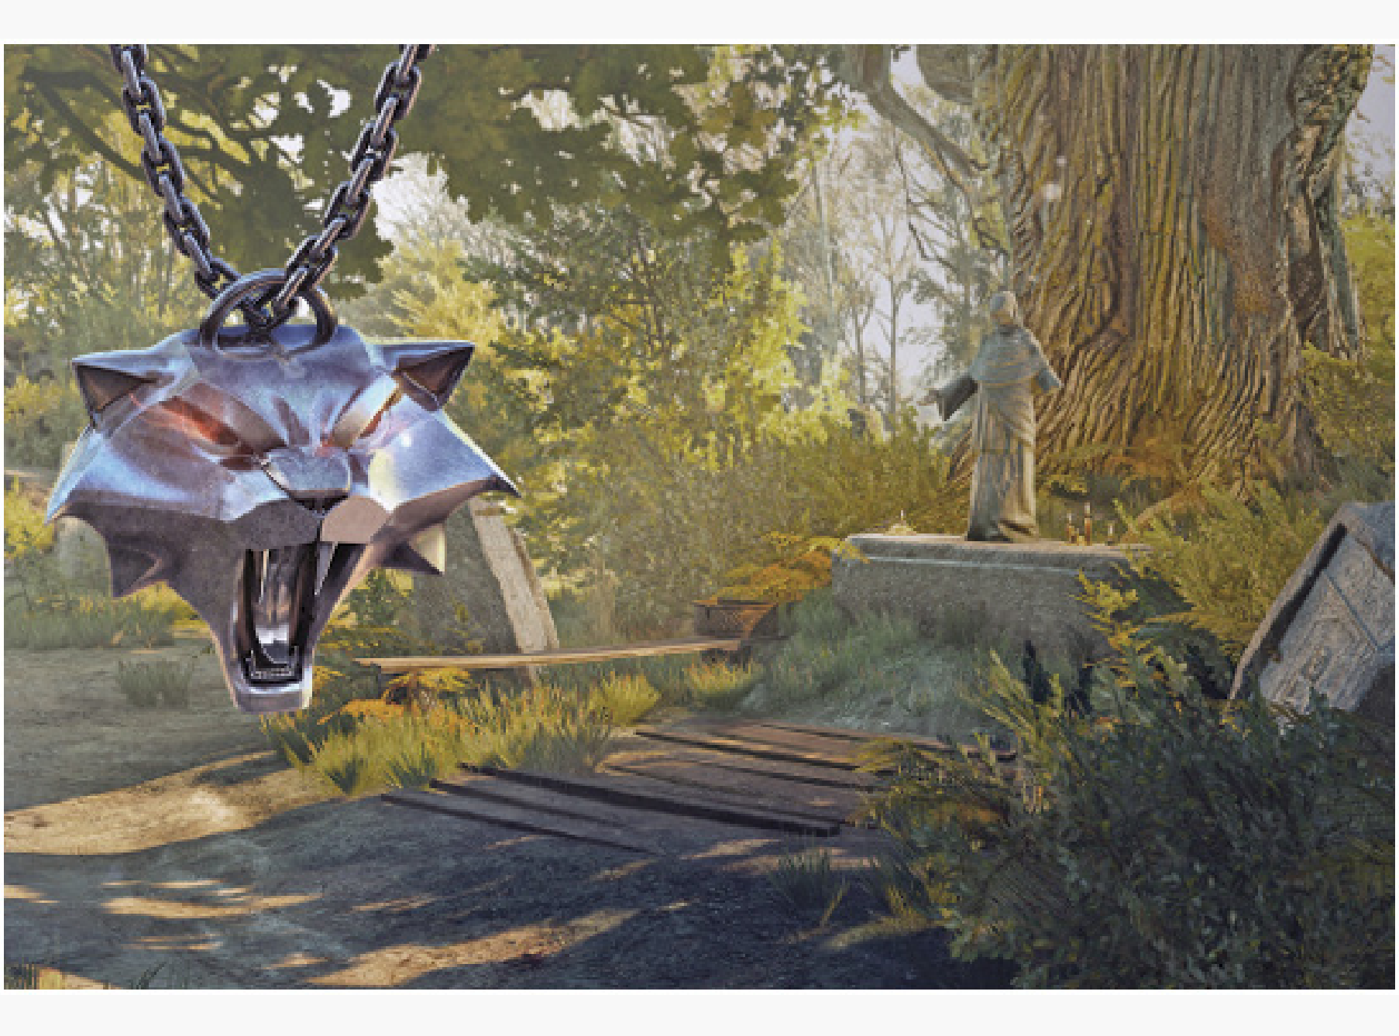
A quest in the Ard Skellig village Fyresdal piques your interest, though something doesn't seem quite right about the quest giver..

New: Secondary Quest: Fool's Gold



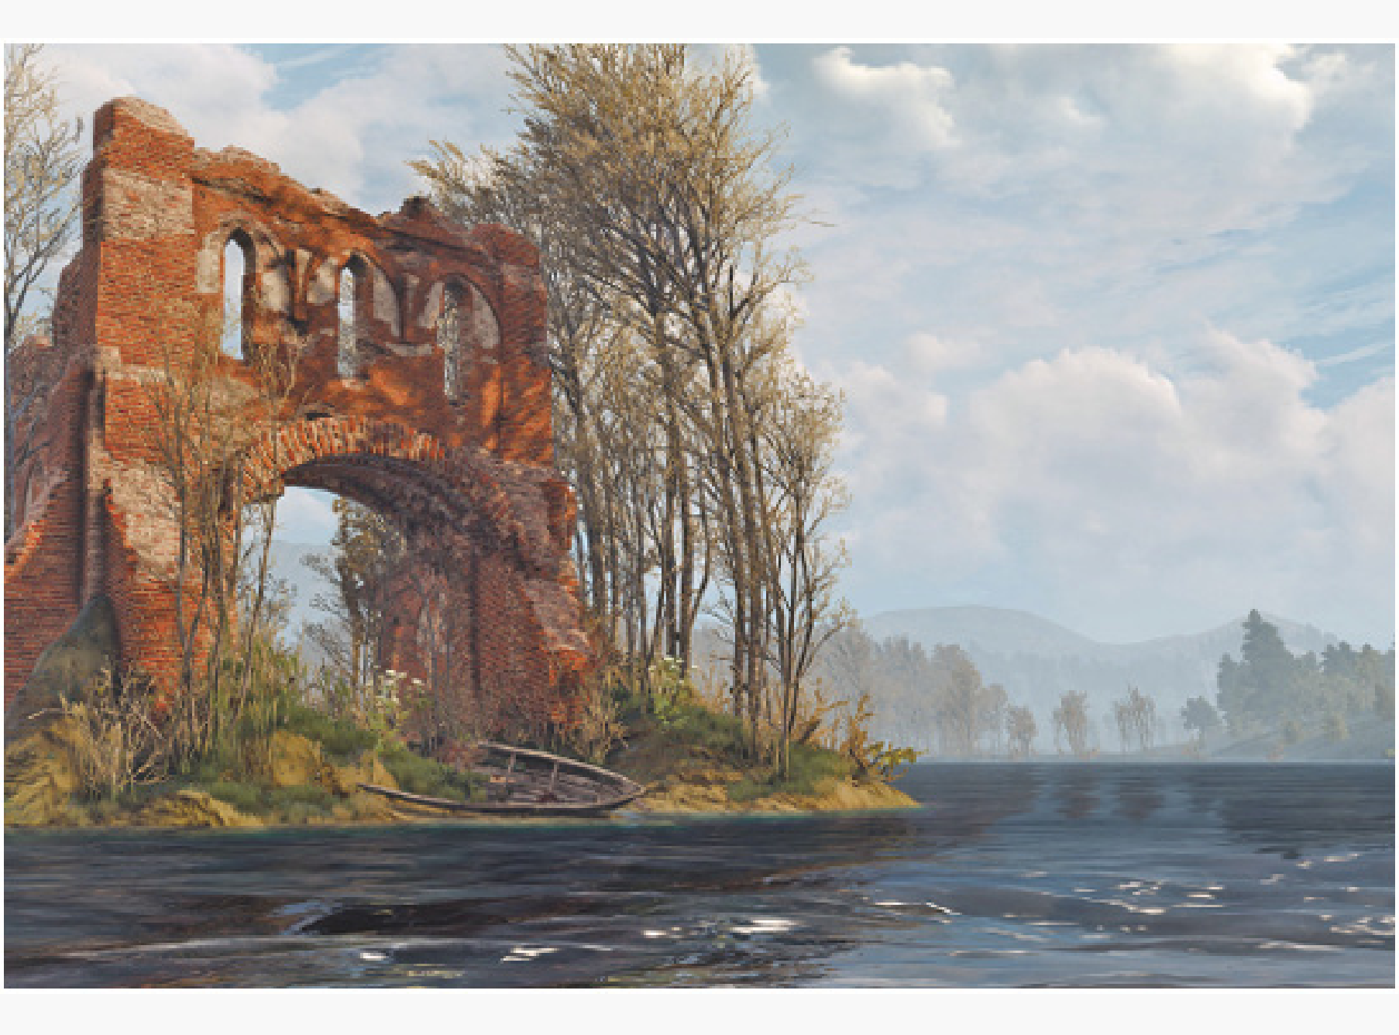
The village idiot of Lurtek is being bothered by hungry bandits: Time to visit this Velen hamlet and help him, and put a porcine plan into action.

New: Secondary Quest: Where The Cat And Wolf Play



Pinned to the Noticeboard in the Velen village of Oreton is a plea to help you discover the infamous "Beast of Honorton."

New Quest: Scavenger Hunt: Wolf School Gear



If you're craving some of the finest weapons and armor ever crafted, be sure to start the lengthy freeform foraging for Wolf School Gear.

EXPANSION CONTENT

This guide provides exhaustive information on all aspects of Geralt's two additional epic adventures:

Hearts Of Stone

This takes you on an adventure into the wilds of No Man's Land, and the nooks and alleys of Oxenfurt, where you'll try and complete a contract from the mysterious Man of Glass. Caught in a thick tangle of deceit, you will need all your cunning and strength to solve this mystery and emerge unscathed!

Blood And Wine

This tale introduces you to an all-new adventuring region of Toussaint; a land mostly untainted by war, where an atmosphere of careful indulgence and knightly ritual masks an ancient, bloody secret. Come for the wine, but stay for the intrigue!

Atlas
Map Legend

This Atlas employs a number of icons you may find familiar if you utilize the in-game map. For each area under examination, expect a brief synopsis of the important facts related to the area, followed by maps and imagery labeled with the following icons:

MAP LEGEND

SIGNPOSTS

These are important geographical locations and Fast-Travel points. All the nearby quests, points of interest, Gwent opportunities, and merchants are listed.

QUESTS

Every important quest that appears in your quest menu is flagged using these icons so you can quickly flip to the quest itself.

Main Quest	A critical path Main Quest begins at this point.
Secondary Quest	An optional Secondary Quest begins at this point.
Contracts	An optional monster hunt can begin at this point; this is usually the location of the quest giver, though most of these quests can be started by stumbling into the monster's territory.
Gwent Quest	An optional Secondary Quest related to the card game Gwent begins at this point.
Fistfight	An optional bout of fisticuffs is available here.
Horse Race	An optional race on horseback can occur at this point. Hearts of Stone and Blood and Wine Horse Races are also flagged with this iconography.
Scavenger Hunts	An optional treasure hunt to find diagrams for fabled arms and armor of the Witcher schools is available here (this may not be a starting point, as these quests can begin at any diagram stash).
Treasure Hunts	If you're looking for the smaller Treasure Hunts, usually involving the finding of a clue and key, before locating the chest itself, look for the Key and Chest icons in the "Chests" part of this legend.
Epilogue	One of the game's endings begins at this point.
DLC	Occasionally, a Secondary Quest or Contract is flagged with the letters "DLC", meaning it is a downloadable quest.
Hearts of Stone Content	This quest is available in the Hearts of Stone Expansion.
Blood and Wine Content	This quest is available in the Blood and Wine Expansion.
Hearts of Stone: Main Quests	A critical path Main Quest in the Hearts of Stone expansion begins at this point.
Hearts of Stone: Secondary Quests	An optional Secondary Quest in the Hearts of Stone expansion begins at this point.
Blood and Wine: Main Quests	A critical path Main Quest in the Blood and Wine expansion begins at this point.
Blood and Wine: Secondary Quests	An optional Secondary Quest in the Blood and Wine expansion begins at this point.

POINTS OF INTEREST

A variety of interesting areas not immediately obvious are dotted across the landscapes. They are divided into the following:

Abandoned Site	A location, sometimes in disrepair, that may have been taken over by monsters. Any Merchants you may see on the maps of this general area only appear after clearing the vicinity of enemies.
Bandit Camp	A (usually) small encampment with human-sized foes, who are almost always hostile. Usually, they are guarding a chest of reasonable value.
Boats	If you require a boat to sail the waterways of the Realms, look here.
Guarded Treasure	Expect treasure guarded by an enemy or monsters here. The type of enemy is listed.
Hanse	An outlaw stronghold, governed by an anarchic band of bandits, their dogs, and (usually insane) leader.
Knight Errant in Distress	A small bandit camp where a Ducal Knight is being held prisoner. Mount a rescue, without the foes killing the knight.
Monster Den	A monster-infested location, and constant worry for those living nearby. Investigate and rid the area of foes.
Monster Nest	A disgusting collection of spittle, rocks, branches, or other detritus. A Samum, Dancing Star or Grapeshot bomb required to destroy these nests.
Notice Board	A wooden board, usually found within a settlement, with a variety of notes. You can start some Secondary, Contract, Heroes' Pursuits, Fist Fights, and Gwent quests by reading the missives here. Initial tasks are listed throughout this Atlas; but additional tasks may be pinned to Notice Boards later on, so keep checking back.
Person(s) in Distress	A citizen, usually caged and in despair. Free them and they head to a particular location (also indicated).
Place of Haunting	These are areas where ghosts are known to have been seen. Produce the Magic Lamp given to you by Keira Metz to uncover more.
Place of Power	An important stone of magic that increases a particular ability. The Sign of the Place of Power is indicated, as well.
Smuggler's Cache	A small hidden item, sometimes valuable, and inside a chest or a bundle.
Spoils of War	Usually the site of a battle, and now usually pockmarked with bodies of the fallen. Sift through here for valuables.
Stash	A large chest, and permanent fixture in the location you find it, allows you to dump any unwanted equipment you've found.
The Prophet Lebioda's Footsteps	A series of five locations where stone mason caravans have encountered problems, and must be rescued. Only available during Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: Big Feet to Fill.
Unmarked Location	A dwelling of interest that does not appear on your World Map. Sometimes it is a place of business that you can visit, such as a tavern or local landmark in a city.
Vineyard Infestation	A local vintner is having a heck of a time with a Monster Nest, and prowling or burrowing enemies ruining his grapes. Treat these encounters just like Monster Nests.
Vintner's Contract	A special, Toussaint-only contract where you must rid the immediate area of any hostile beasts, before being rewarded by a grateful wine merchant.

MERCHANTS AND REPAIRS

Merchants and Repairs: Interact with the following traders and obtain a variety of services and enhancements. Most of these individuals are also Gwent players, too. Also seek out the complete list of Merchants.

Alchemy Supplies	Alchemists specialize in selling the materials required for Alchemy.
Armorer (Amateur, Journeyman, Master, or Grandmaster)	These traders specialize in making protective equipment from materials salvaged in the field, as well as selling basic equipment. If they have the skill to follow diagrams you bring to them, for a fee and for the materials required, an Armorsmith can make what you request. These smiths can sell equipment diagrams as well.
Barber	Change the appearance of Geralt's beard and flowing locks at any of these establishments.
Blacksmith (Amateur, Journeyman, or Master)	These traders focus entirely on the sales and creation of weaponry. For your purposes, this means steel swords, silver swords, and crossbows. As with Armorers, the Blacksmith's individual skill determines what diagrams they can craft from. Blacksmiths may also sell equipment diagrams.
Brothel	If you fancy an evening (or even a morning) of rumpy-pumpy, feel free to visit one of the three knocking shops of Novigrad.
Grindstone	Grindstones and Armorer's Tables are often found near a blacksmith or armorer. They provide a temporary increase to the effectiveness of your weapons (Grindstones) and armor (Armorer's Tables). They do not restore lost durability.
Armorer's Table
Herbalist	Instead of exploring the wilderness for wild flowers, mushrooms, or berries, purchase them here, instead.
Innkeep	Expect a variety of consumable goods; mainly food and alcoholic beverages.
Merchant (Shopkeeper)	A wide variety of goods can be found here, from rare books to swords, equipment, Gwent cards, foodstuffs, and many other trinkets.
Runewright	An Ofieri Runewright crafts runes and glyphs and can also form them into words to be placed in swords and armor. Rune- and glyphwords give their items new, powerful properties.
Wandering Merchant	Some merchants wander the roads, plying their wares. They tend to use the paths shown, resting at the start and finish of their path.
Vintner	Occasionally, Toussaint has these type of merchants, who specialize in various types of wine. These can be sold and drunk. What a bouquet… I'm getting the smell of chestnut… a soupcon of honey… and just the faintest whiff of dead Drowner...

GWENT PLAYERS AND VENDORS

Whether you're after a quick bout of Gwent, or you're aching to spend some crowns for a couple of rare cards, seek out the following individuals. Also seek out the complete list of Gwent Players and Vendors.

Gwent Player	Expect a game of Gwent at this location. The name of the Gwent player is noted. Remember that some Gwent vendors are also players, some players give you a random card if you beat them, and others are only accessible if you're completing a particular Gwent quest (so may not be available immediately).
Gwent Card Vendor	Expect to purchase multiple Gwent cards at this location. These sellers may not always be available, so buy what they have as soon as possible.

CHESTS

Gathering valuable items is extremely important during your adventure, and this guide details the (random) quality of the treasure you should expect to find:

Good Chest	Expect reasonably valuable (random) items in this type of chest.
Better Chest	Expect better, more valuable (random) loot.
Relic Chest	An extremely valuable relic is found in this chest.
Scavenger Hunt Chest	Loot from the Witcher School is found here, almost always in Diagram form.
Quest Chest	This chest is utilized in a specific quest. The loot itself is not required to complete the quest. Such quests may also be accessible when this quest isn't active, but it's usually advisable to find them during a quest that takes you to this location. Check the quest you are on to see if the location is mentioned.
Treasure Hunts: (Hidden Treasure)	Some chests require a key to unlock. This may be hidden somewhere, on the corpse of a fallen fellow with clues to read, or in an area to loot. Check the area where they key is shown carefully. A large proportion of these refer to named Treasure Hunt Quests.

DUNGEONS

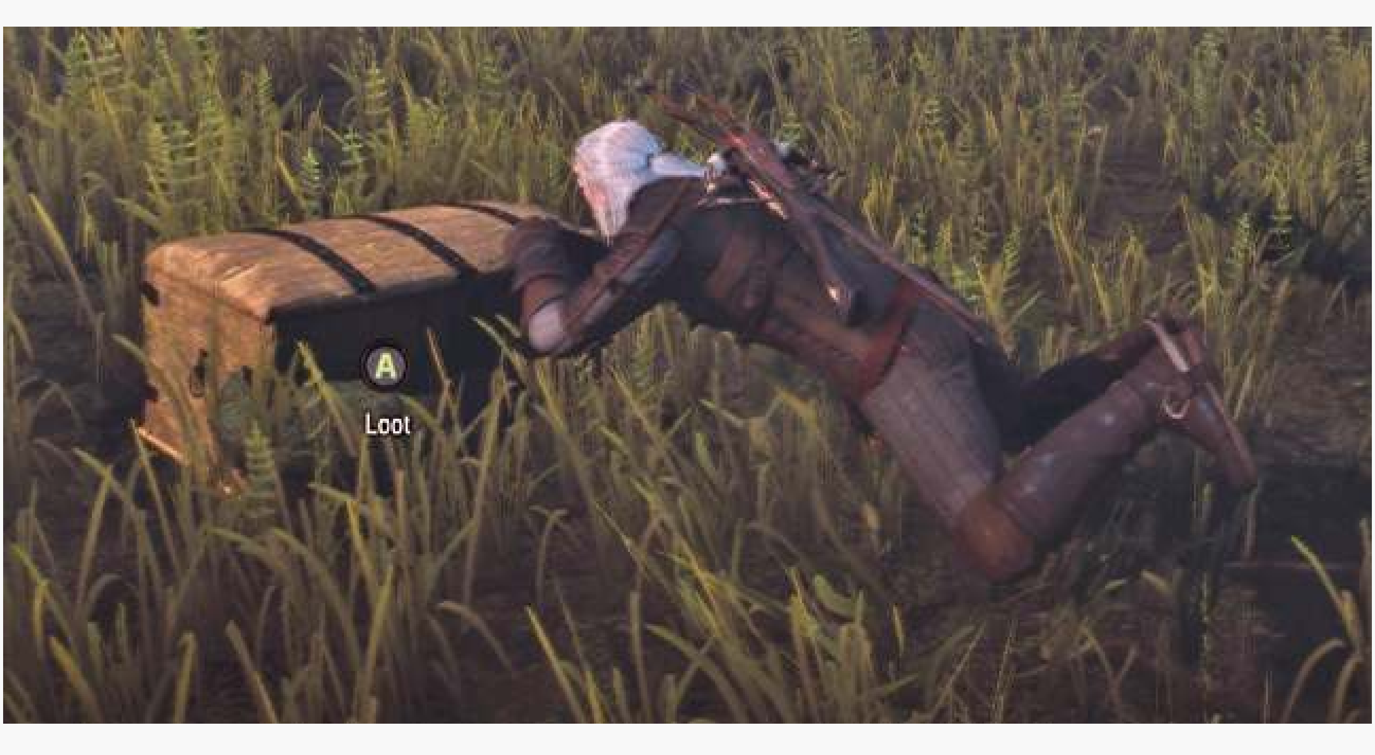
It is well worth checking each map area for these two icons—which show the locations of dungeons within a realm—instead of stumbling into a cavern without the knowledge of the monsters that may lie within. If a dungeon has an interior larger than a house, that map is also included so you can see how big the dungeon is that you're about to explore. A Dungeon icon with a small green chest in the lower-right, indicates that an important Scavenger Hunt chest is contained within the Dungeon itself.

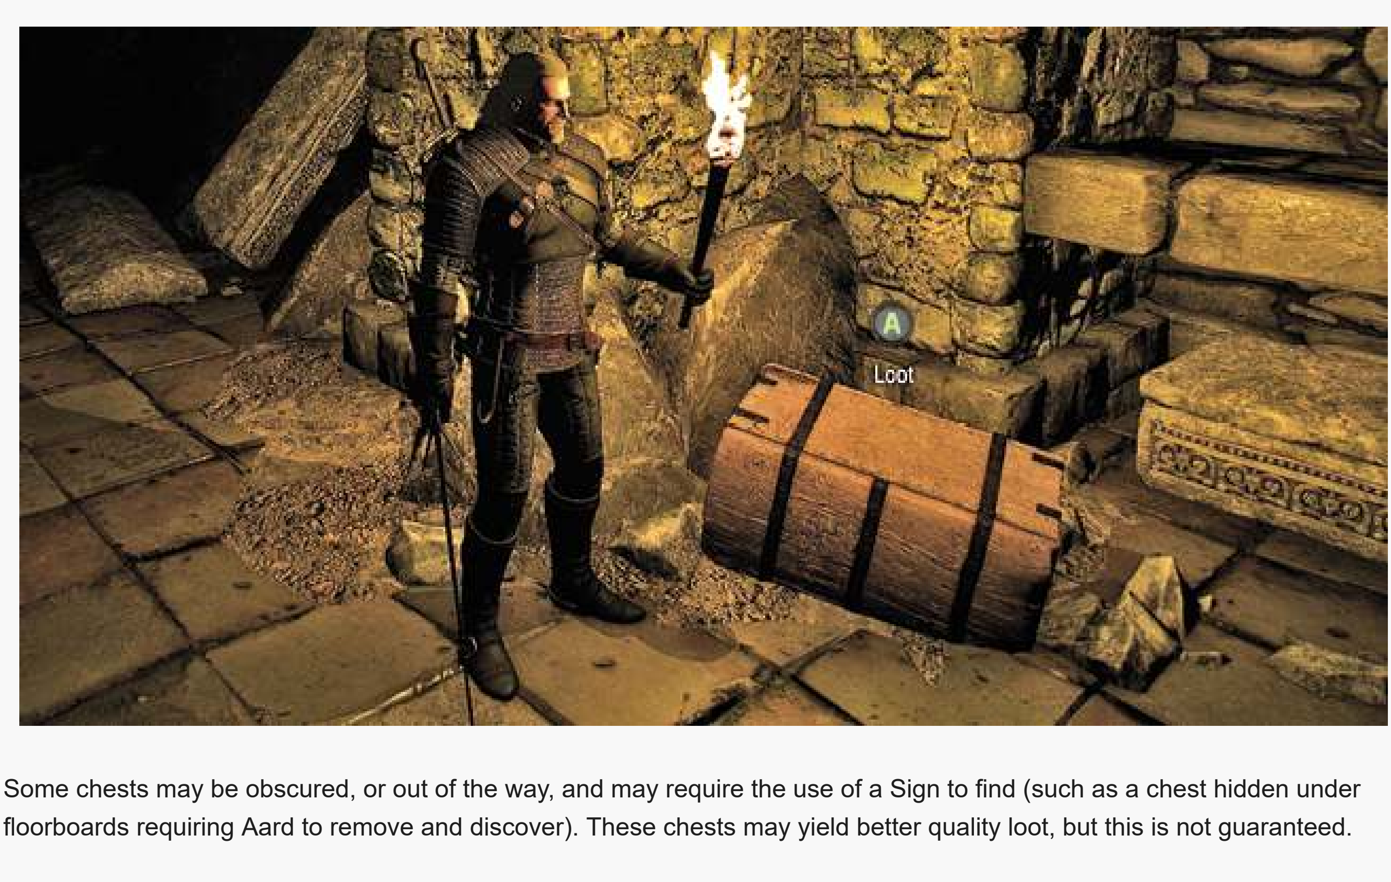
TYPES OF CHESTS

Chests of loot, for the most part, contain random items. However, some chests have more valuable contents than others, described in the Legend.

Chests can also be discovered while swimming underwater, or peering down into the water while on a boat, or by using your Witcher Senses.

Submerged underwater chests often yield better loot than those on dry land.





Some chests may be obscured, or out of the way, and may require the use of a Sign to find (such as a chest hidden under floorboards requiring Aard to remove and discover). These chests may yield better quality loot, but this is not guaranteed.

GETTING THE BEST GEAR

To be sure you're getting the best gear, recipes, Gwent cards, and ingredients we recommend keeping your Atlas chapter, or The Witcher 3: Wild Hunt Offical Map App, at hand. This way you can be confident you're getting as many nearby chests as possible.

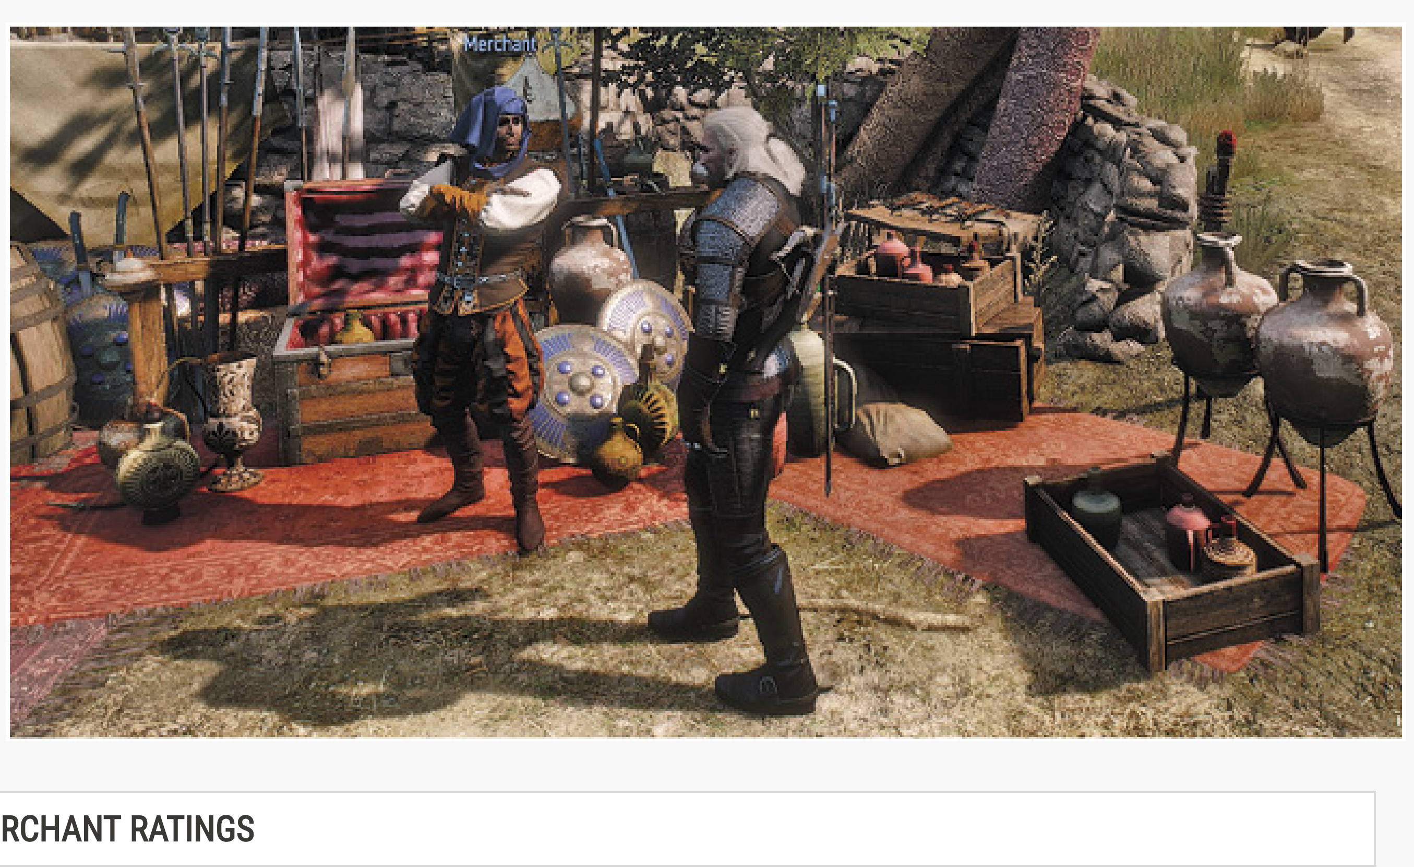
The chest icon also incorporates barrels, crates, otherwise seemingly-innocuous containers, and even occasional dead bodies, which hold valuable items. So, if you see a chest icon in this Atlas, but no chest in your game, be sure to rummage through any nearby containers.

JUST AN ILLUSION

During your travels there may be loot that is indicated on the Atlas maps, that is excellent in value, but seemingly unable to be accessed. Usually this is blocked by an illusion (a clue is an "*" asterisk icon appearing on the scenery blocking your path). We recommend you complete Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark, obtain the Eye of Nehaleni from Keira Metz, and interact with these illusions to dispel them, allowing access.

MERCHANTS, SELLING, AND STASHING

A thorough inspection from White Orchard to Toussaint, has revealed every single Merchant and trader you can interact with, so when your saddle bags are full, and you've become over-encumbered, you can sell off your haul as quickly as possible. Or, you can find a Stash Chest (also marked) and keep your valuables if you're more of a hoarding type.



MERCHANT RATINGS

Available Crowns	Money Rating
0	Zero
1-199	Poor
200-499	Below Average
500-999	Average
2000+	Rich

GOOD HUNTING TO YOU!

This Atlas could best be described as "exhaustive." There are locations of every Witcher Gear diagram and every Relic class item, but the pleasure of exploration and overcoming the obstacles needed to find certain chests has been left to you. We have striven to show what types of monsters may be nearby, but we leave the preparation up to you. If you're unsure about what monsters you might encounter and where, look around you, observe the area (always using your Witcher Senses) and turn to this guide's Bestiary for advice on tackling any threats you spot.

It's a pleasure to immerse yourself in the search for hidden treasure, and often hunts of this kind provide a very palatable sense of the world. While we have given you the chest's location, we encourage you to obtain and read any lore that might hint toward the approximate location of the treasure. Keep your eyes open, however, for the power of observation alone is sometimes enough to learn the story behind a cache.

How To Use This Guide

Quest List Table (Alphabetical)

QUEST CHAPTER: CRITICAL PATH

This part of the walkthrough gathers all of the original Main Quests in chronological order. These are divided into the Prologue and three Acts. They chart the critical path of Geralt and his adventures against the Wild Hunt.

In addition, Secondary Quests that influence the later decisions you make in the Critical Path, or are only accessible during a Main Quest, are also listed in this large chapter.

Quest Chapter: Main Quests: Hearts of Stone: This section covers all of the Main Quest activities that Geralt undertakes during the Hearts of Stone expansion.

Quest Chapter: Main Quests: Blood and Wine: The adventures Geralt of Rivia continue into the Duchy of Toussaint; all Blood and Wine expansion Main Quest activities are covered here.

QUEST CHAPTER: SECONDARY QUESTS

This part of the Walkthrough gathers all of the Secondary Quests of every different type. All are optional. Expect the following Secondary Quests:

- Secondary Quests (General): Ranging from small to immense, any time you see an exclamation point ("!") on your map, it is likely to start a quest. Simply check the quest name with the one in your in-game Quest menu, and follow the advice in this tome. The quests are listed by Territory, so you can (and should) easily cross-reference them in this guide's Atlas.
- Secondary Quests (DLC): These are Secondary Quests that are part of the free DLC.
- Secondary Quests: Hearts of Stone: This covers all non-critical quests that are available to you as part of this expansion.
- Secondary Quests: Blood and Wine: Every optional quest in the Duchy of Toussaint is detailed in this section of the guide.
- Contracts: Also known as Monster Hunts, these are high-level quests involving the tracking and slaughter of one or more named beasts; always high-level versions of a specific (and usually large) enemy. Advice on finding and killing them is detailed, along with a cross-reference to the guide's Bestiary.
- Gwent Quests: These appear in-game as Secondary Quests, but any that specifically require you to collect Gwent cards, or play professional Gwent players, occur in this specific section.
- The Heroes' Pursuits: These are further sub-divided into Fistfights and Horse Races: Gain notoriety by pummeling rivals for quick cash across the countryside, we tell you where! Also, gallop to victory in a variety of locations, winning equipment for your faithful steed named Roach (items that make him faster, or carry more stored items, for example).
- Treasure Hunts or Scavenger Hunts: Though the Atlas shows every chest of note, there are a number of specific Treasure Hunts to undertake too, and this section shows them all. Also in this section are in-depth Scavenger Hunt tactics, which take you on a freeform quest to uncover the very best Witcher gear.
- Epilogues and Endings: A complete list of every ending, and how previous choices you made affected the endings you received, are shown here. As you'd imagine, there are spoilers aplenty!

ATLAS OF THE NORTHERN REALMS

This sizable section of the guide reveals every hidden area, merchant, signpost, and building of note across the Northern Realms and beyond. It is designed so that you can see what you're about to encounter before you visit a new area. A full legend and introduction at the start of this chapter reveals much more. Then expect cartographical evidence for the following territories:

Cross-reference the interior maps of this chapter to the Walkthrough quest you are on, if you wish to gain further knowledge of an important area. Otherwise, this chapter is mainly useful for gaining pinpoint knowledge of where everything is, including hidden treasure chests, valuable loot, Gwent players, merchants, and your stash chests.

APPENDICES AND COMPENDIUMS

The back end of the book is crammed with a wealth of helpful information, much of it in handy table form, designed so that everything you require in a particular subject is showcased in one location. Here's what to look for:

- Bestiary: A document revealing critical combat knowledge for every single foe you'll ever encounter in your adventure, including some you only ever fight once!
- Merchants of the Northern Realms: If you're attempting to better your bartering, or find rare items to trade or sell, you need to know where to go for the best prices, and the largest collection of useful items to add to your own inventory. As luck would have it, a list of every single merchant throughout the Northern Realms and Toussaint is presented here.
- Inventory and Unique Items: The entirety of every important item, from swords to alchemy ingredients, is listed here along with helpful advice, statistics, locations, and other data.
- Places of Power: Strange monoliths dotted throughout the countryside award you with Sign boosts and ability points. They are shown throughout the Atlas, but this section lists them here, in much greater detail.
- Carnal Knowledge: Geralt of Rivia likes to put it about a bit, so it's helpful to learn exactly how many times this can happen, and with whom.
- Gwent: A Complete Card Checklist: Wouldn't it be great to have a picture of every single Gwent card, along with information on how exactly it is obtained? Then you've come to the right Appendix!
- Gwent: The Gwentlefolk of the Northern Realms: In order to obtain many of the Gwent cards, you must find and best dozens of individuals throughout the land. This Appendix details where every single one of them resides, what card or cards they have, and whether they can sell any to you.
- Achievements and Trophies: Every single award you're given during the course of your adventure is tallied here, along with any methodology needed to complete the Achievement or Trophy in question.

Introduction and Characters

The Witchers Of Kaer Morhen

GERALT OF RIVIA

Known to the elves as Gwynbleidd, and to those seeking his services, as the White Wolf, Geralt is a member of the Wolf School. He is no mere swinger of swords, but thoughtful, cunning, resourceful, and an exceptional warrior. Beneath a rather stoic exterior are murmurings of good humor, a readiness to help out those in distress, an offering of goodwill and a mastery of both his blades to help those requesting his aid.

CIRILLA FIONA ELEN RIANNON

Heiress to several thrones, the bearer of Elder Blood, and a powerful Source endowed with exceptional magical talent, Ciri is also known as the Lady of Time and Space. She seems to be living up to this name, as she has disappeared during this time of torment, forcing Geralt (who was bound to Ciri by destiny, and helped train her after she escaped a massacre in Cintra as tragedy and war deprived her of her real family) to search the lands of the Northern Realms for her—the "ashen-haired one".

VESEMIR

The oldest surviving member of the Wolf School of Witchers, Vesemir's bones may creak louder than the battlement floors of Kaer Morhen, but he shows no signs of hanging up his swords, especially since he can better any man in combat, with a combination of his blades and magical prowess. Though harsh and demanding of his students, he has become something of a mentor in these later years. His respect is now earned, not demanded.

ESKEL

Although he doesn't command the renown of his brethren, Eskel is a methodical, competent, and supremely talented Witcher that met the White Wolf when they were boys, thrusting their wooden practice swords at Kaer Morhen. Eskel walks the Witcher's Path separately from Geralt, but returns to winter at Kaer Morhen, and drinks to past successes and fallen friends.

LAMBERT

Among the very last to train within the walls of Kaer Morhen, Lambert is the youngest of the remaining Wolf School Witchers. He has a reputation for slaying the most ferocious and ravenous beasts of the Continent, but also a bluntness, arrogance, and caustic wit that many find offputting. Despite these shortcomings, he remains loyal to his companions.

Introduction

WITCHERS: NOT QUITE THE DEVILS YOU THOUGHT

A conviction has arisen amongst both mages and the hoi polloi that Witchers barely rise a hair's breadth above animals, that they are deformed and bloodthirsty mutants, and that in slaking this thirst they do not limit themselves to the fluids of monsters. Meanwhile the research and observations of Virgil of Ban Ard paints an entirely different picture of this caste.

Of course, it is an indisputable fact that the mutations Witchers undergo influence their temperament, immune system, strength and endurance, yet one cannot consider them unthinking beings forged only for killing as a result. In fact, Witchers cultivate a unique culture, a specialized body of knowledge, an effective training system, and even a code of honor. They know an incredible amount about the effects of ingesting various organic and inorganic substances, and also a small amount, but nevertheless, something about the fundamentals of magic (by which I mean the simple spells they call "Signs").

On the surface the Witchers appear to be a homogeneous social entity, but in truth their fighting styles, training regimens, and world views differ significantly depending on which school they adhere to. The best-known Witcher schools on the Continent are: the Wolf School, the Bear School, the Griffin School, the Viper School, and the Cat School.

FAIRYTALES AND STORIES

Then the fairy said to the Witcher: "I will tell you what to do: put on a pair of iron shoes and pick up an iron staff. Walk in the iron shoes to the end of the world, pat the ground before you with the staff, and sprinkle it with tears. Walk through fire and water, do not stop, do not look back. And when your shoes wear out, and when the iron staff shatters, when the wind and the heat dry your eyes so that you cannot shed another tear, then you will have reached the world's end, and you will have found what you seek and what you love. Perhaps."

And so the Witcher walked through fire and water without looking back. But he took neither the iron shoes nor the staff. He took only his Witcher's sword. He did not heed the words of the fairy.

And that's a good thing, because she was an evil fairy.

Sorceresses Of The Lodge

YENNEFER OF VENGERBERG

A formidable sorceress, Yennefer first met Geralt more than twenty years ago, when a djinn intertwined their fates together. Even though the intervening time has proved their relationship to be strong, it is frequently as stormy as the waters off Undvik. Completely the opposite of Geralt, Yennefer is more socially competent, adept at politicking, but was in the wrong place when the Wild Hunt captured her. Fleeing their grasp, she now stands at the right hand of Emhyr var Emreis.

TRISS MERIGOLD

When one turns to a dictionary to look up the word "sorceress," there should be little surprise to find a painting of Triss Merigold. The perfect example of this profession, this former mage advisor to King Foltest holds none of the pretentions and haughtiness so apparent in some of her sisters of the Lodge. A warm and personable charm has won over many cold hearts, not least that of Geralt of Rivia. She was last seen in the city of Novigrad, helping her fellow mages from the pogrom against their kind.

PHILIPPA EILHART

While Miss Eilhart was also an advisor to a king (Vizimir II), she took a more avid interest in the power her standing provided, with the Council of Mages and eventually the Lodge of Sorceresses itself. She has incredible talents, but a rather prickly nature about her. It is said that several kings found out just how prickly, since she was implicated in Vizimir's death, as well as the assassinations of two other monarchs. Little wonder that she has vanished into hiding, and is now the quarry of King Radovid's special forces.

KEIRA METZ

Geralt first met this sorceress when she was flung out of a window and fell on his head during a coup. Then he stumbled upon her deep in the Velen countryside. When her employment with King Foltest came to an end (as had the king himself), she was chased out of Temeria and forced into exile, as she had earned the wrath and hatred of King Radovid. Geralt discovers she is now eking out an existence as a witch—a wisewoman stuck curing ailments of animals and peasants alike, all the while waiting for the winds of fate to blow in her favor.

Friends Of The Witcher

DANDELION

The flamboyant troubadour and Oxenfurt academy graduate, Dandelion would be a court jester if his not-inconsiderable charisma hadn't allowed him to skirt any trouble—whether it was the numerous dalliances and affairs with the fairer sex, or skilled negotiations or stirring oratory to avoid the wrath of the powerful gentry. However, as his current whereabouts are unknown, this actor of some repute may have ruffled feathers one too many times.

ZOLTAN CHIVAY

A veteran of the Battle of Brenna, Zoltan Chivay is a ferocious force when armed with an axe, a master tactician when given a hillside and an ambush to attempt, and offers an ascerbic tongue when placated with mead. A soldier of fortune, player of Gwent, and loyal to both Dandelion and Geralt, he is a true force for good, and proves that no one is more loyal than a dwarf.

AVALLAC'H

Though little is known about this elven sage of the Aen Elle, it is apparent Avallac'h's path had crossed Geralt's in the preceeding years. Displaying an unnerving interest in the child of the Elder Blood, his exact motives remained unclear. With some investigation, it seems Avallac'h was a one-time tutor and mentor to Cirilla, as well as the chief advisor to the King of the Aen Elle—a monarch whose demise had precipitated a conflict between Avallac'h and the successor, Eredin.

Introduction and Characters

The Nilfgaardians

EMHYR VAR EMREIS

There are few more formidable figures alive today than Emhyr var Emreis, Deithwen Addan ya Carn aep Morvudd (the White Flame Dancing on the Grave of his Foes), otherwise known as the Emperor of Nilfgaard. While he rules half of the known world, he has conquering aspirations for the other half. His path crossed that of Geralt's, after the emperor learned his daughter Ciri was in great danger, and that the Witcher was a better tracker than any in his army. That, and a friendship with the sorceress Yennefer of Vengerberg, forged an unlikely (and mostly strained) alliance.

Introduction and Characters

The Redanians

RADOVID V THE STERN

An uncaring and paranoid ruler, seeking vengeance rather than compromise, and allegiance or a slow and wretched death, Radovid seeks to thwart Nilfgaard while continuing to slaughter as many mages as he can find, believing them the root cause of all evil in the world. Setting his sights on the Free City of Novigrad, he hopes to gain control of its treasury and strategic location. An intelligent man and puppet master, but one trapped in his own world of disturbing visions.

The Big Four of Novigrad

SIGISMUND DIJKSTRA

The former head of Redanian intelligence and a man Geralt had many dealings with in the past, Dijkstra the spy is masquerading as a count named Sigi Reuven, and has amassed a great wealth in the city of Novigrad as part of the Big Four crime families. Embroiled with Philippa Eilhart, and Radovid's frenzy of hatred for the sorceress, Dijkstra fell out of favor with the King, and has wisely gone to ground under the assumed name of "Sigi Reuven". But you can never keep a good political wrangler down…

FRANCIS BEDLAM, KING OF BEGGARS

Without a ruler for nigh on two hundred years, Novigrad's only "monarch" is the self-styled King of Beggars, a title that mocks the pomposity of such power. Managing a network of cut-purses and beggars, he offers them protection in exchange for the gossip they overheard as well as a cut of their ill-gotten gains. He holds court in the aptly titled Putrid Grove area of the city.

CARLO "CLEAVER" VARESE

A violent and terrifying dwarf, "Cleaver" lives up to his nickname as he enjoys torturing his victims by feeding them to pigs and hacking off their fingers with his namesake blade. Unbalanced even during periods of peace in Novigrad, a recent attack by his rival, Whoreson Junior, has left Cleaver spitting blood. He means to hunt down and murder every one of Whoreson's men, even if that results in leaving the city in ruins.

CYPRIAN "WHORESON JUNIOR" WILEY

One of Novigrad's most dangerous criminals, Whoreson Junior has inherited his father's businesses across the city, as well as his sadistic and shocking foibles toward the harlots he encounters. With the unwritten armistice between Novigrad's criminal groups broken, thanks to Whoreson's willingness to murder his three rivals, he has turned an already tumultuous time in Novigrad into utter chaos. Perhaps there is method to his madness?

The Temerian Two

VERNON ROCHE

Before his forces were driven from his homelands, and he was forced to camp in a gorge in the woods close to Oxenfurt, Vernon Roche was the commander of the Temerian Special Forces, and one of King Foltest's most trusted subordinates. Few matched Roche's expertise in acts ranging from the modest (slaying a band of Scoia'tael) to the impressive (putting down rebelions). But now, he has lost everything; his king, his lands, and most of his men. Now he stages ambushes against the overwhelming forces that occupy the land.

VES

Once a veteran officer of the Blue Stripes, and one of a handful of soldiers to survive the war with her commander. While Roche is stoic, Ves is much more headstrong, and but driven to reckless despair by the current situation of the war. It is fortunate, then, that her skills with the sword and the crossbow are nothing short of magical. Her sharpshooting and knife skills are utilized whenever she sees fit, a troubling tendency that Roche hopes to rein in.

Introduction and Characters

The Zealots Of Novigrad

THE ETERNAL FIRE

The persecution of the mages, under orders from Radovid himself, has spread to Novigrad. The Church of the Eternal Fire (a religious organization comprised of fanatics with a hunger for group executions) runs the city, at least on the surface. Caleb Menge, the commander of the Temple Guard, is an opportunist and paranoid force of fear in this city, helped by preachers such as Nathaniel Pastodi, who have their own hypocritical deviancy to hide. Now the Eternal Fire allies itself with witch hunters (such as Graden) sworn loyal to Radovid. This is a marriage of the most frightening aspects of zealotry.

The Downtrodden And Deviant

THE BLOODY BARON: PHILLIP STRENGER

After the abandonment of the wooden fortress known as Crow's Perch in northwest Velen, a new baron moved in with his motley band of men: a Temerian opportunist who negotiated this fortification with the Nilfgaard occupiers. The locals call him the "bloody baron," for the handling of his vassals wasn't the most tender. Now he sits and mopes. Some say with his violent bouts of drunkenness. Yet there may be a softer side to this sot.

THE CRONES OF CROOKBACK BOG

Beware the marshes of Crookback Bog, to the southwest of No Man's Land for the three crones (Whispess, Brewess, and Weavess) are said to lure in childen with the promises of sweet treats. Some hypothesize that these unwanted orphans are devoured, but others seem to venerate these ancient crones, said to be around since the reign of the first human kings. Tributes to the crones (in the form of human ears) are demanded. But these are old washerwomens' tales to frighten wayward children from drowning in the bog. Aren't they?

JOHNNY THE GODLING

The Witcher Geralt has a very difficult time believing such a little fellow as Johnny exists. No one could live in the stinking mire of Crookback Bog, unless they hope to become drowner food. But Johnny does indeed scurry about the marshes. He is a godling, a rare breed of creature of which little is known, and less is written about.

Introduction and Characters

The Oppressed, And The Peasantry

NONHUMANS

THE AEN SEIDHE

THE SCOIA'TAEL

DWARFS

HALFLINGS

You may not immediately see many elves (the Aen Seidhe), dwarves, or halflings on your travels through the Northern Realms, since they bear the brunt of oppression by all and sundry, from the lowliest peasant to the pogroms of King Radovid himself. The elves are particularly hated, with racism rife throughout Novigrad and the surrounding territories, and forcing many into shanty towns like Farcorners, to the south of the city. Little wonder that many nonhumans join the ranks of the Scoia'tael—outlaws that camp in the countryside to wait and ambush, existing as bandits. Only the halflings seem to have escaped the most vicious of persecutions. But for how long?

HUMANS

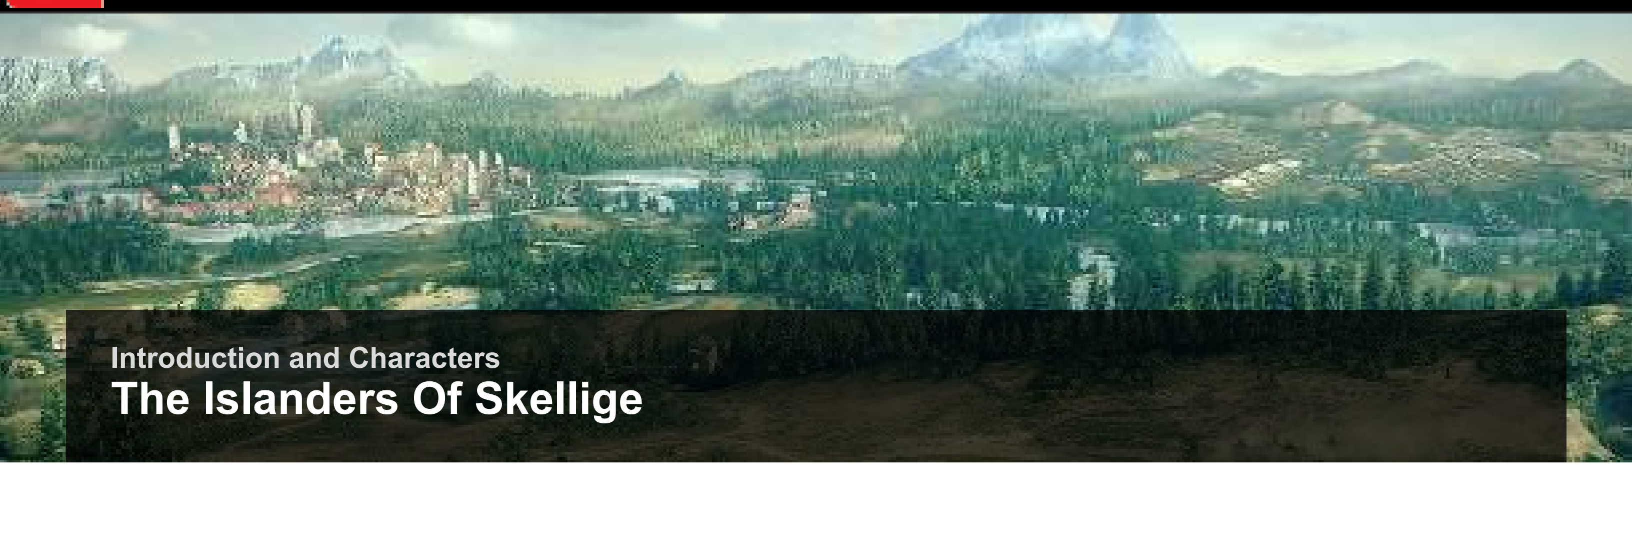
NORDLINGS

HUMANS

SOLDIERS

PRIESTESSES OF FREYA

The general peasant population of the Continent and Skellige have as wide a range of outlooks on life and work as there are ghosts on Fyke Isle. The Nordlings of Novigrad and Velen live in fear of Nilfgaardian invasion.Those existing in No Man's Land having paid a particularly terrible price during this time of war. Many enlist as soldiers. Others farm what is left of their lands. On the islands of Skellige, you'll find priestesses still worshipping the old goddess Freya.



Introduction and Characters

The Islanders Of Skellige

CRACH AN CRAITE

The sagas will sing of Crach an Craite's strength, courage, wisdom and generosity, but not omit the dogged determination he had for pursuing his foes. He is the mightiest of the Skellige Jarls, the Tirth ys Muire (or Wild Boar of the Sea) who devastated coastal villages during the raids of his youth. Long a friend of Geralt and Ciri's mother Pavetta, Crach is now at the apex of a new struggle for power among his people. He is proud that his two children are both favored claimants to the throne of Skellige, left vacant after the recent death of Good King Bran.

ERMION

An old acquaintance of Geralt's, Ermion is the leader of the Druid's Circle in Skellige, and advisor to Crach an Craite on matters concerning magic. He is the closest to a diplomat these islanders have. He is content to use reasoning as well as an uppercut or the swing of an axe. Naturally thoughtful to the point of being obstinate, one must learn patience before Ermion chooses to part any wisdom with you.

CERYS AN CRAITE

Her friends call her Sparrowhawk, she earned the nickname for her swift and fierce nature. Inheriting all of her father's resolve and courage, as well as his stubbornness, she is dauntlessly optimistic about her chances to rule Skellige, despite the many challenges she faces—not least the claim of her older brother. She seeks to prove a great deed that would earn her the widespread honor and respect those of Kaer Trolde already give her.

HJALMAR AN CRAITE

The eldest (by a few minutes) of Crach's twin children, the formidable Hjalmar exhibits many of his father's posture and character, and many saw him match (and perhaps overtake) Crach's fame as he began his own path of violence and bravado. His tendency to be reckless isn't seen as a shortfall, but rather stirs the hearts of the loot-craving youth from Trottheim to Svorlag. This has made him the obvious choice as the next King of Skellige. After one final saga, the defeat of the ice giant of Undvik.

JARL “MADMAN” LUGOS DRUMMOND

Though his silhouette doesn't cut the most imposing of shapes, there are not many islanders that would stand nose to nose with the Jarl of Clan Drummond. Ruling southern Ard Skellig with an almost unhinged fury, he is quick to shouting, faster with a blade, and would overthrow the ruling an Craite clan in a bloody coup if he wasn't bound by the laws of Skellige.

JARL UDALRYK AN BROKVAR

Once a just and fair ruler of the outer isle of Spikeroog, Jarl Udalryk of the Brokvar clan has been recently addled with a strange distemper, causing many of his closer friends to avoid him. Increasingly erratic, rumor has it that Udalryk believes the gods themselves speak to him, demanding sacrifices and revealing prophetic dreams. Most simply see him as madder than Jarl Lugos, which is saying something.

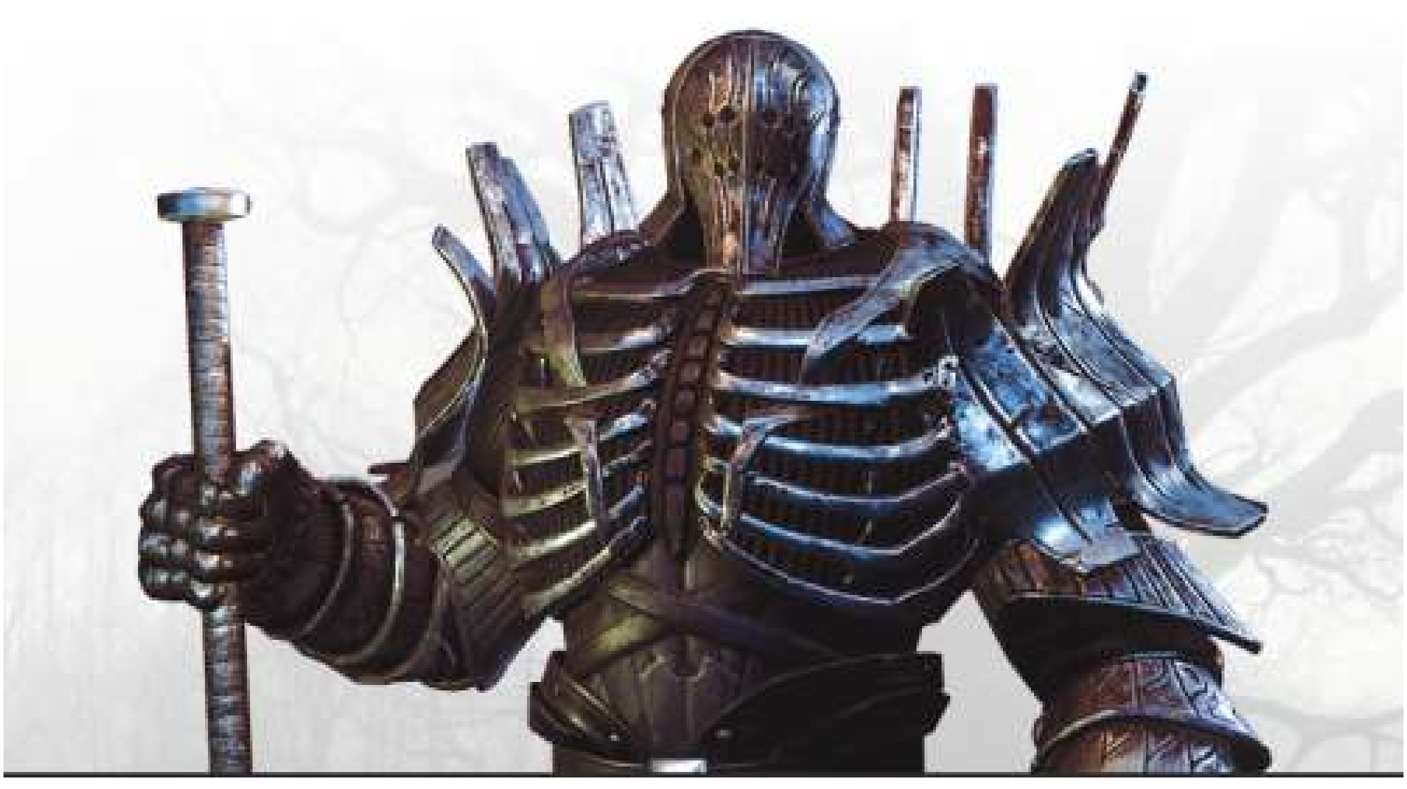
JARL HOLGER BLACKHAND

Jarl of the Dimun clan of Faroe, the thin mountainous outer isle to the southeast, Holger Blackhand may have a face like a slapped arse, a missing eye, and dark discoloring of his hand and forearm (earned by frostbite after his longship ran aground), but his plundering nature is formidable. He sees little difference between razing a village or ship flying a rival clan's flag, or attacking a settlement on the Continent.

JARL DONAR AN HINDAR

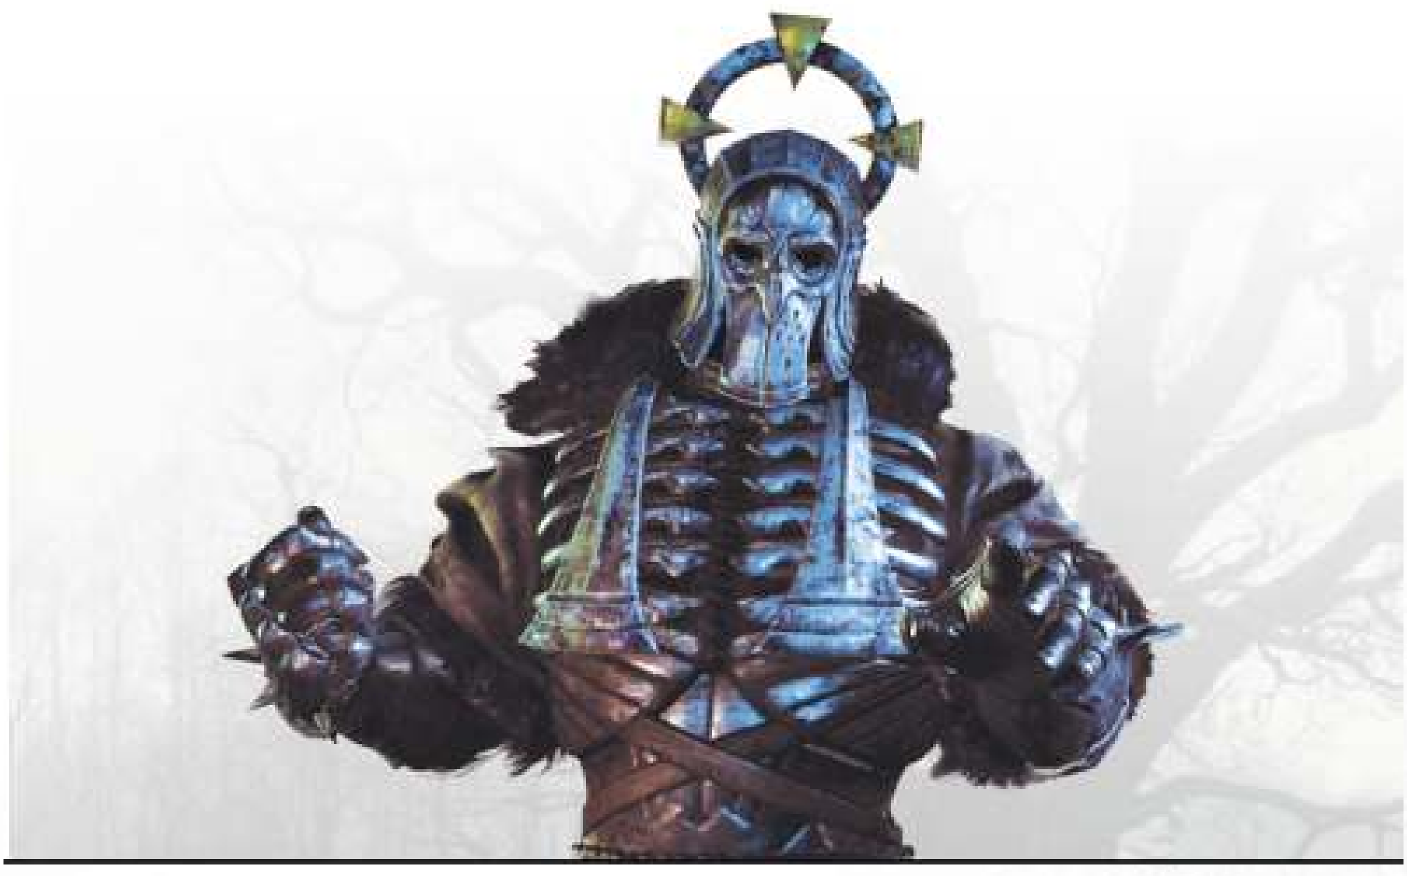
The eldest of the Jarls, Donar an Hindar rules the island that bears his name—Hindarsfjall to the east of Ard Skellig. An advanced age hasn't stopped him from being an active and respected leader. Only the chaotic temprement of Jarl Lugos gets his goat. He shares his home with Freya's Temple, and like the goddess, is considered pious, wise, and just. Unless he was ransacking the temples of the Continent in his youth, of course.

Leaders Of The Wild Hunt



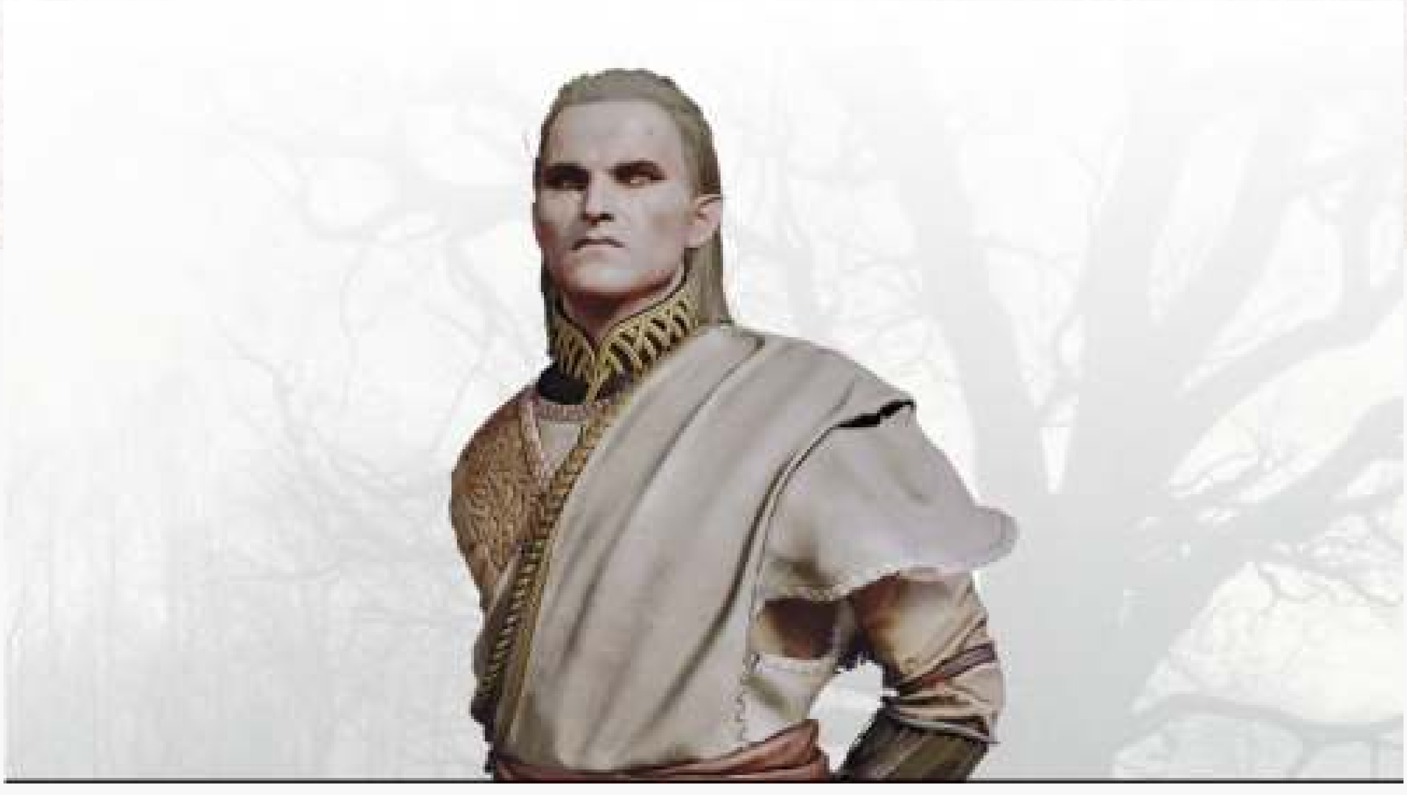
IMLERITH

The Wild Hunt are despoilers, burning red riders, and a portent of the White Frost. Their master tactician is Imlerith, a frequent guest in Geralt's nightmares, and one who had been chasing Ciri relentlessly. He is a powerful and brutal warrior, fighting in countless wars for the Aen Elle, in other worlds. Now he seeks to spill blood here, as he prizes physical confrontation above all else, taking advantage of the Crones' sabbath to wallow in pleasures of the flesh.



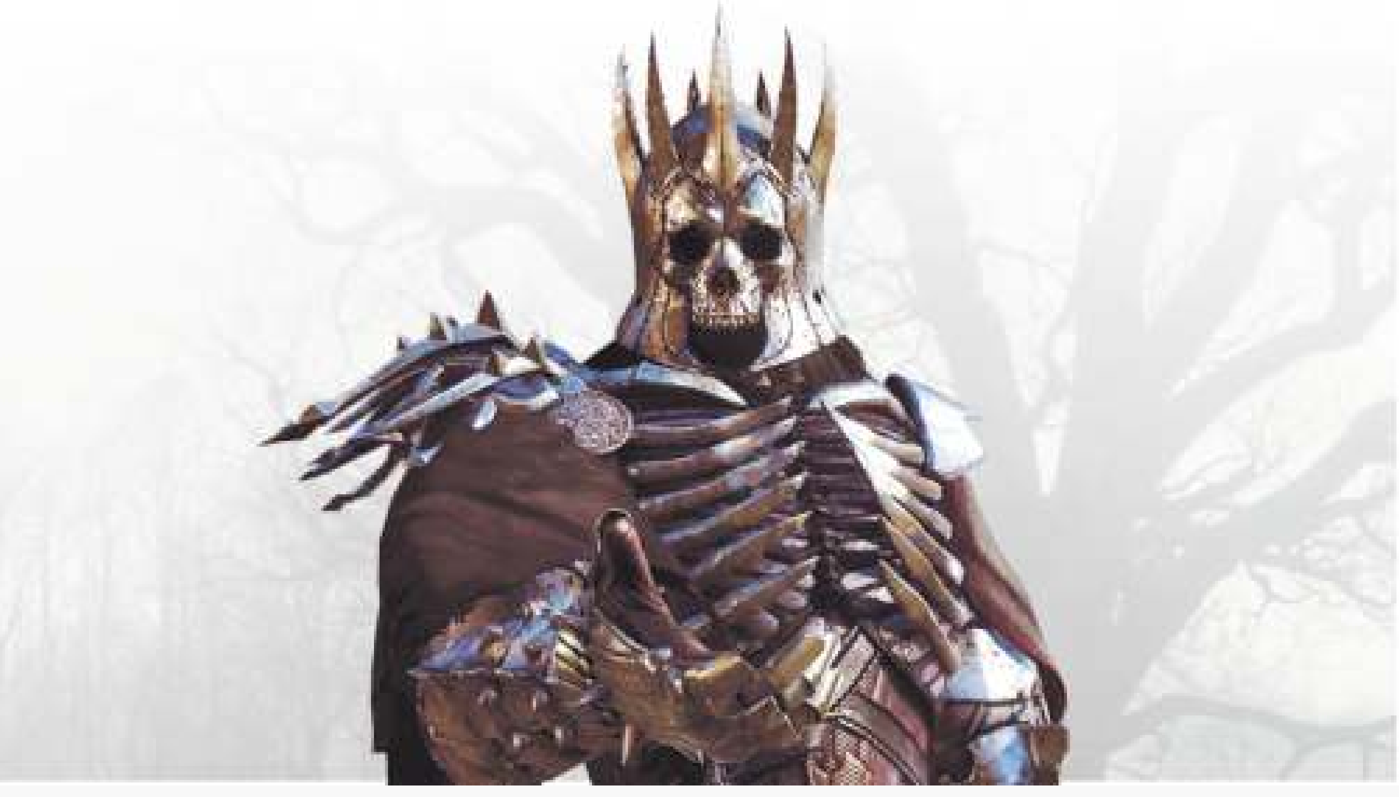
CARANTHIR

A senior adviser to Eredin, and an important asset as he understands nature and the essence of other-worldly passages; a series of portals that can bring a man (or in this case a ghostly unit of warriors) between worlds. He is responsible for the navigation of the Wild Hunt's Riders. He captains the demonic longship said to arrive at the Final Age. A vessel crafted from the claws of the dead. If you see a portal open, and armored foes with skeletal helms stride out, Caranthir was responsible.



GE'ELS

Enjoying the trust and respect of the Aen Elle world, Ge'els holds a high-ranking position after Eredin took power from the previous ruler, Auberon Muircetach. Ge'els is the master of the political theater, a conjurer of illusions, and a seminal orator and rhetorician of the highest ability. He acts as the viceroy while the Wild Hunt travels the worlds, and is rarely seen.



EREDIN BRÉACC GLAS

The king of the Wild Hunt, the lord of nightmares, and the force behind the mask of fright, only vague information about Eredin has coalesced into a terrifying knowledge. Eredin's cavalry (the Dearg Ruadhri) are an elite brigade from the world of the Alder Folk. Traveling via secret paths through the cold emptiness between worlds, he razes villages and summons the White Frost, capturing victims to take back as slaves. His current quarry is a power he wishes to harness, that of the Elder Blooded one called Cirilla.

The Borsodi Brothers (Hearts of Stone)

EWALD BORSODI

While pondering the next step in his adventure, Geralt of Rivia was approached by a mysterious stranger. This man did not say who he was, where he was from, how he knew of the Witcher, or how he had found him. They soon formed an uneasy partnership, one which would lead to Geralt witnessing a battle between two brothers over past wrongs and control of the family fortune.

HORST BORSODI

Horst Borsodi, owner of the most famous auction house in all the North, was considered a snobbish brute by many who knew him. He looked down his nose at all and sundry, and regularly had his men toss “undesirables” out of his place of business, following this up with a rough beating. It was said that none would walk behind the once rich and mighty Horst Borsodi’s casket when he died, and none would shed a tear over his grave...

A Quartet Of Criminals (Hearts of Stone)

CASIMIR BASSI

A demolitions specialist who had cut his teeth in the mines of Mahakam, this dwarf was proposed to Geralt as a possible partner in crime, one who could bypass the vault of a local auction house using explosives. Casimir seemed unreliable, given his oscillations between rage and despair after learning of his wife's cuckoldry, and his methods were far from subtle (though no one could deny their effectiveness).

EVELINE GALLO

To rob a vault, one needs to get inside the building containing said vault. To accomplish this, Geralt could use the help of a certain Eveline Gallo, a circus performer famed through all the North, and who, it seemed, used her considerable talents for less law-abiding purposes as well. As is often the case in life, Eveline was willing to help, but only in exchange for a favor; the Witcher had to save her circus troupe from humiliation.

HUGO HOFF

Geralt needed someone who could scale the glass-smooth wall of a tower abutting the Borsodis' Auction House. One of the few capable of this feat was Hugo Hoff, alias "Beef Patty," a Halfling with countless break-ins and robberies under his belt. His last know whereabouts were the seedy taverns of Oxenfurt, and it turned out Hugo Hoff was in no condition to join Geralt's crew.

QUINTO

Geralt has taken on a mad assortment of tasks in his life, many of which strayed far beyond his core trade of monster hunting. Recruiting a team to break into the vault in the Borsodis' Auction House, however, stood out as atypical even against this motley backdrop. One of the shady characters the Witcher was told would make a good candidate was Quinto, the most famed safecracker north of the Yaruga.

The Von Everec Family (Hearts of Stone)

IRIS VON EVEREC

Olgierd von Everec had once loved the beautiful and wealthy Iris so deeply, he was willing to sacrifice everything to overcome her family's objections and marry her. Yet the price he paid proved too much and their marriage slowly fell apart. Abandoned by Olgierd, Iris withered into a shadow of her former self, haunting his ancestral home with her rage and remorse and escaping into a painted netherworld.

THE BLACK CAT AND DOG

In the von Everec estate, a host of strange and horrifying creatures reside. Among these were a black cat and dog who, though able to speak, chose to say very little about themselves. Geralt surmised they were demons from another sphere, summoned by black magic, trapped in animal bodies, and bound to serve Iris von Everec. They seem not to feel sympathy for their mistress, as such feelings did not form a part of their nature and did not reside in even the darkest corners of their souls.

OLGIERD VON EVEREC

Olgierd was a unique character. He led an informal band who worshipped the ground he walked on, though he clearly was of a different sort than they: educated, a lover of art, and an adherent to a certain noble code. Yet Geralt also perceived something indefinable within the man, something years later he would call "a void crying out to be filled."

It seems once upon a time, Olgierd fell hopelessly in love with Iris, a beautiful young lady from a well-off family. Her parents accepted his proposal of marriage and all seemed set for a happy ending when a storm of misfortune sudden broke over the von Everec family. A chain of bad decisions and a few years of bad harvests left the once-wealthy family deeply in debt. Then the Borsodis purchased this debt and, with their brutal enforcement of its terms, drove the von Everecs into utter bankruptcy. Iris' parents revoked their approval of Olgierd, and betrothed Iris to an Ofieri prince. Out of desperation, Olgierd turned to Master Mirror—and soon won back his confidence, influence, and most importantly, his wife. It was only afterward that Olgierd discovered his contract with Master Mirror had a particularly strange (and horrifying) clause…

VLODIMIR VON EVEREC

The younger von Everec cut a strange figure, even for a ghost. He showed hints of noble refinement, but often his mannerisms better resembled those of a lifelong brawler or hooligan—no doubt because he had spent much of his living years raiding and marauding with a band of rough characters. One thing is certain: Vlodimir liked to have a good time and had found death sorely lacking in quality entertainment.

The Warm- And Cold-Hearted (Hearts of Stone)

SHANI

It came as a surprise to run into Shani, an old and dear friend of Geralt's from the time she was a coltish coed, who had grown into a dignified doctor and a fearless field medic for the Redanian Army. Geralt was reminded that he and Shani had once shared passionate (though passing) feelings for each other. Fate decreed Shani would not linger long in her hometown of Oxenfurt, for as long as the war lasted, she was the Redanian army's to command. Before leaving, Geralt thanked his friend, hoping they would meet again, later or, quite preferably, sooner.

GAUNTER O'DIMM – MASTER MIRROR

Geralt has escaped many predicaments, sometimes of his own doing, sometimes aided by others. One of the strangest helping hands was that extended to him by Master Mirror. Appearing out of nowhere, on the Ofieri boat where Geralt was being held captive, Master Mirror reminded the Witcher of their first encounter, when he helped Geralt find Yennefer in White Orchard. Now he was offering help again—this time for a price. A strange branding appeared on Witcher's face, providing proof of the seriousness of their pact and raising a suspicion later confirmed beyond all doubt...

The Lords And Ladies Of Beauclair (Blood and Wine)

DUCHESS ANNA HENRIETTA

If this world has ever known a ruler who enjoyed the absolute admiration of her subjects without the need for systematic repression or a particularly cruel hangman, it was, without a doubt, the sovereign of Toussaint, Duchess Anna Henrietta. Called Anarietta by those who knew her well, she was the widow of the late lamented Duke Raymund and one-time lover of a very famed and talented artist who would prefer to remain anonymous. A few years prior, when the Witcher and a band of friends were visiting Toussaint, Anna Henrietta had had the pleasure of meeting Geralt of Rivia. When a mysterious Beast began attacking her courtiers, the Duchess thus knew exactly whom to summon.

CAPTAIN DAMIEN DE LA TOUR

One of the Beauclair court was Damien de la Tour, the captain of the Ducal Guard. He was absolutely and unconditionally (to say “unthinkingly” would be unfair, yet not entirely inaccurate) devoted to his position and worshipped the ground the Duchess walked on. Some supposed he was in fact besotted with her. He came across as a typical soldier, i.e., a thickheaded lackey who, seeing Geralt, immediately decided he must prove who had the more massive unmentionables. Geralt treated this challenge with dispassionate superiority, yet accepted it nevertheless and in doing so earned himself another enemy. After he bloodied himself side by side with the Witcher, Damien decided the White Wolf was actually an altogether decent fellow who wished only to help.

MILTON DE PEYRAC-PEYRAN

Milton de Peyrac-Peyran was a baron from Toussaint and a member of Anna Henrietta’s inner circle of knights. This good-humored nobleman never met an overloaded banquet table he failed to unload of its burdens, yet nor did he ever shirk a fight against heavily-armed bandits or any other enemies of the duchy. Geralt had met Milton years ago, under very peculiar circumstances that deserve to be recounted properly and at length. Their roads crossed again when Milton came to the Witcher as the Duchess’ envoy, to ask our hero to journey with him to Toussaint.

PALMERIN DE LAUNFAL

Not all knights errant in Toussaint were embodiments of virtue, but if I had to choose one among them who did personify their chivalric creed, it would be Palmerin de Launfal. He is all the more admirable for the fact that, years ago, he was no stranger to the pleasures of eating, drinking and making merry in a variety of fashions. With time, however, he abandoned vice and drew closer to the knightly ideal. Geralt realized this when Palmerin came to him as an envoy from Anna Henrietta. The old-fashioned and somewhat naïve knight immediately made a good impression on him, for while he did take formalities and courtesies a tad too seriously, he was anything but pompous or grandiose.

GUILLAUME DE LAUNFAL

Guillaume de Launfal was the very model of a knight errant, the placard boy for Toussaint, if you will. When Geralt first met the young man, he was valiantly tilting at a windmill…which, to be fair, turned out to be hiding a ferocious giant. Getting himself into trouble clearly counted among Guillaume’s favorite hobbies. After a second saving, a wounded yet grateful Guillaume asked the Witcher to meet with him about a very urgent matter. The matter turned out, as is matters’ wont in Toussaint, to be an affair of the heart. Guillaume was tormented by unrequited love for the Duchess’ lady-in-waiting, Vivienne de Tabris. He suspected her frigidity and distance must be the result of some malicious curse. Geralt, a professional curse-breaker, naturally took the contract. To get a chance at an audience with Lady Vivienne, he had to take the wounded Guillaume’s place in the knights’ tourney.

SYANNA

Sylvia Anna…a lovely name, don’t you think? This beauty should come as no surprise, given it’s the name of the daughter of a duke and the sister of a duchess. Yet the fate Syanna (as her intimates called her) met was not as beautiful as might have been suspected for one so well-born—though, as it turns out, she had in truth been born rather inopportunely. She came into this world during an eclipse and thus fell victim to the panic surrounding the Curse of the Black Sun, which was said to affect young girls from ruling families birthed in similar circumstances. Though Geralt had serious doubts whether this curse truly existed, many claimed it caused horrible mutations which filled its victims with cruelty and a desire to kill. Syanna’s parents certainly seemed to be among the believers in the curse, for they deemed her too dangerous to be allowed to remain at court and forced her into exile. Syanna then fled to Nazair and soon, for all intents and purposes, dropped off the face of the planet.

Witcher Archetypes

ADRENALINE RUSH

This archetype focuses heavily on survivability and Adrenaline generation, with the suggested best armor and weapons for it being the Bear School Witcher armor and swords that can be crafted and upgraded (complete the Bear School Gear Scavenger Hunt Quest to recover the diagrams for this equipment). You get two of the most powerful swords in the game in terms of steel and silver swords, and heavy armor to survive the physical damage you suffer from wading in for melee.

CRITICAL REND

This archetype focuses on maximizing the damage from Rend and from your critical hits in general. Rend is one of the most powerful melee moves at Geralt's disposal, but it is not easy to land it consistently. To get the best chances to score critical hits, light armor is needed to make this build shine. The best light armor comes from diagrams of Cat School Witcher Gear (complete the Cat School Gear Scavenger Hunt Quest to recover the diagrams for this equipment). Light armor also helps with Stamina regeneration, a key factor in making this build work.

BOMBADIER

Sometimes you wish you had more bombs. This build provides for that very specific need. It takes a lot of work to hunt down the ingredients for this build to really work, but it is worth it. You will have more than enough bombs, and each bomb will be significantly more effective. Most encounters in the field should end decisively in your favor after many, many explosions.

SIGNING SURVIVALIST

Survivability on the harder difficulty settings of Witcher 3: Wild Hunt can be tough even for the best players. Where on the Story and Sword! and Just the Story! settings, you want to juice up your attack power to kill quickly, on Blood and Broken Bones! and Death March! Mode, you want to lean towards survival. This build allows you to do that with rapid Sign use, combined with significantly faster Stamina regeneration. Heavy focus is placed on Yrden and Quen, with Igni providing your magical punch that can also weaken enemy defenses.

Allies And Beasts Of Beauclair (Blood and Wine)

EMIEL REGIS ROHELLEC TERZIEFF-GODEFROY

Years ago, Regis joined Geralt's band of fellow travelers (of which Dandelion was a proud part) and set off in search of Ciri. Together they lived through many fascinating adventures and Regis proved himself a loyal friend, the kind you can trust with your life. Sadly, the expedition ended tragically for Regis. He was killed by Vilgefortz, who reduced him to nothing more than a wet stain. Hence the Witcher's immense surprise at encountering his old friend—after all, he had seen Regis die with his own eyes. But the thing is, that was not Regis' "final" death, nor even his first. As a young man, Regis had been a bit of a free spirit and overindulged in the drinking of blood. This lifestyle led to him being butchered by angry villagers. Regenerating from that took him fifty years, or nearly no time at all, for an immortal. When he was back in full health, he kicked the habit of blood drinking for good. Now, the circumstances in Toussaint were so dramatic, that fate brought Regis and Geralt together again in Beauclair, forming a formidable duo.

DETTLAFF VAN DER ERETEIN

When Geralt finally caught up with the Beast of Beauclair, he discovered it was a higher vampire named Dettlaff—and that he and the Beast shared a mutual acquaintance in Geralt's old friend Regis. Regis explained Dettlaff was more bestial than he and felt ill at ease in human society, yet was not a monster who murdered mindlessly. Further investigation revealed Dettlaff had acted out of the very human emotions of rage, revenge, and love. Yet his inability to control these emotions combined with his supernatural ability to kill made him a threat that had to be dealt with, one way or another.

THE UNSEEN ELDER

It is intriguing to learn that higher vampire society is organized in a strict hierarchy based on age: the older a vampire, the greater his say in their matters and the stricter the punishment for going against his will. One extremely elder vampire lived in Beauclair, in the cave where he had been deposited during the Conjunction of the Spheres. The only problem was that the more ancient members of the vampiric race were not very…how to put this…amenable to company. This particular elder so deeply disliked visitors Regis trembled at the very thought of having to disturb his peace.

Main Menu

When you start Witcher 3: Wild Hunt, you are greeted by the Main Menu. This allows you to select from the following options:

- Continue: If you already started a New Game, this enables you to continue from the very last save point, so you don't need to scroll through all your saved games.
- New Game: Select this when you wish to begin a brand new adventure. You are granted a number of choices, and then difficulty settings, which are discussed below (see "Starting a New Game").
- Load Game: Every time you save your progress during your adventure, you can access it from this menu selection. This allows you to choose a save point from wherever you like, in case you wish to try finishing a quest by making a different decision, for example.
- Options: You are presented with a wealth of self-explanatory options, allowing you to tweak and fiddle with a variety of settings, from audio levels to the buttons on your controller. Some interesting and important ones are discussed below (see "Options of Note").
- Downloadable Content: If you have downloaded any of the 16 (free) pieces of Downloadable Content, as well as the two Expansion Packs, they are listed here. Where appropriate, content you can turn "on" or "off" is available in the "Options" menu within this menu.

STARTING A NEW GAME

Begin a new adventure by selecting this menu. This allows you to select from the following menu choices:

- Fresh Start: You can begin a new game with any installed expansions included, but the main storyline quests must also be undertaken. This is a brand-new adventure.
- Hearts of Stone Only: The main storyline quests are disabled, and your gear and level are enhanced and raised so as to be suitable for the quests of this expansion. Choose this if you are primarily interested in playing this expansion as quickly as possible.
- Blood and Wine Only: The main storyline quests are disabled, and your gear and level are enhanced and raised so as to be suitable for the quests of this expansion. Choose this if you wish to play this second expansion as swiftly as possible.
- New Game +: Play the game again with added difficulty, by loading a game save you created after finishing the "base game" (the Critical Path adventure) and watched the Endings. A Planning Primer to make the most of this highly-entertaining mode is detailed later in this chapter (see "New Game +: A Planning Primer"), and some specific character archetypes have been created for this mode.

Training

Difficulty Settings

When you start a New Game of Witcher 3: Wild Hunt, you have a choice between four difficulty settings:

- Just the Story! (Easy): Enemies have less resistance to damage, and do not cause as much damage as they do on the “Story and Sword!” setting. This option is perfect for players who want to experience the narrative and do not wish to worry as much about challenging combat.
- Story and Sword! (Normal): The setting the game offers by default. Geralt is - less resilient than he is on “Just the Story!” difficulty, making combat a more demanding experience. This difficulty is recommended to series veterans, or players who feel confident in their abilities.
- Blood and Broken Bones! (Hard): For those seeking a serious challenge. This setting removes health regeneration through Meditation, and couples this with a serious increase in enemy lethality and resilience. Players who want a challenge up front, or those who have already played through the game at least once will find this to be a big, but logical, step up from “Story and Sword!” difficulty.
- Death March! (Dark): For the masochistic Witcher who enjoys the taste of their own blood as much as they do the blood of their enemies. Expect no mercy, save that you grant yourself by preparing extensively for every major battle you will face (or better yet, utilizing one of the character archetypes at the end of this chapter designed to thrive in this mode), and even then it may not be enough. Expect to be staring often at a screen that reminds you of what you already know: You Died.

CHANGING DIFFICULTY IN-GAME

If the challenge is becoming too much (or too easy) for you, simply access the Main Menu at any point during a game, visit the Options Menu, and change the difficulty to a level more suitable to you. This is particularly helpful before a nasty fight, and changing to a lesser difficulty technically isn’t considered cheating!

Training

Movement

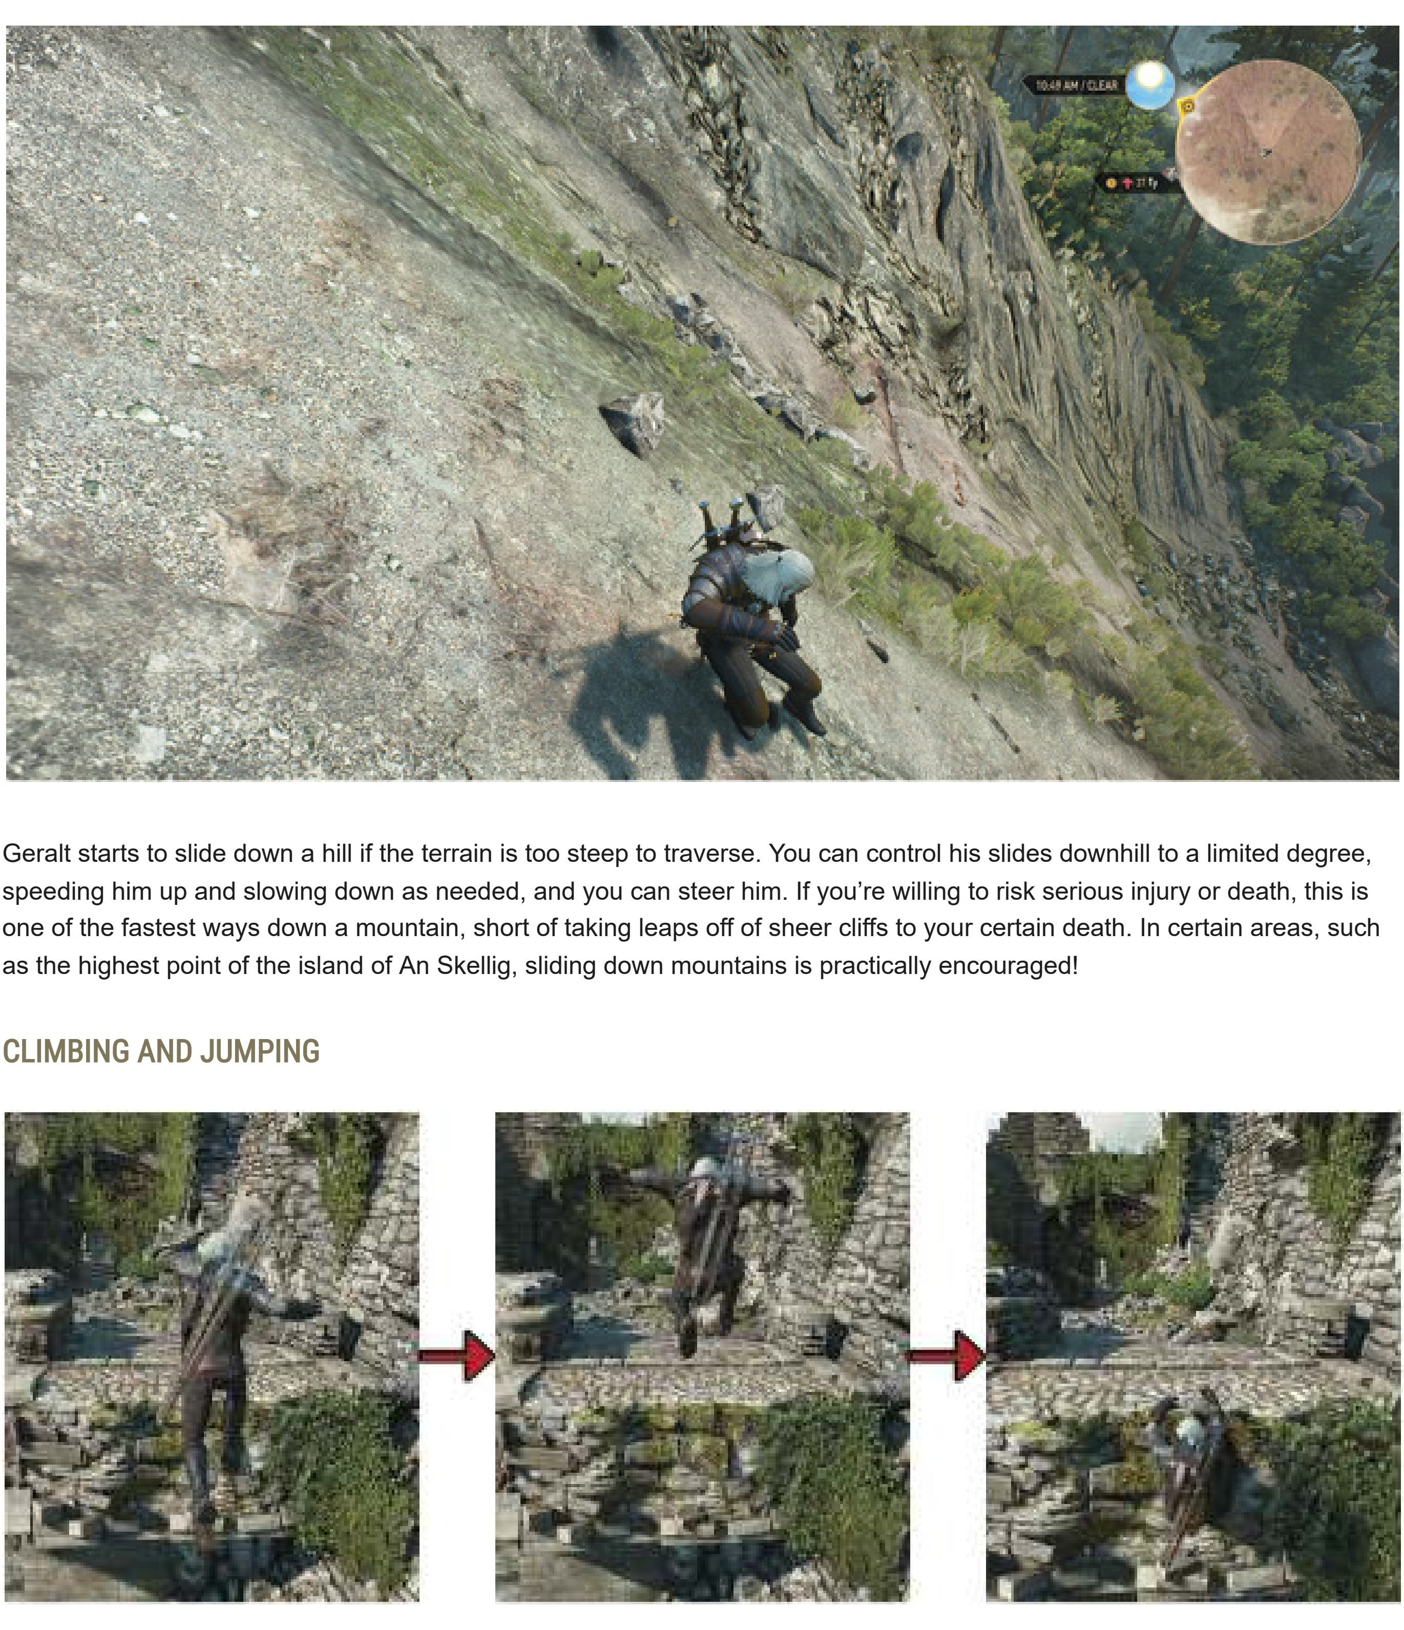
It is important to learn the basics of movement so you can maneuver your way into and out of any situation, whether it's a leap onto a horse, or a slide down a mountain. This section guides you through the main elements of movement.

ON FOOT

Geralt can walk, run, or sprint through the world (the latter of these costing Stamina). You can combine different speeds of movement with your ability to jump to climb ledges, or vault over large gaps.

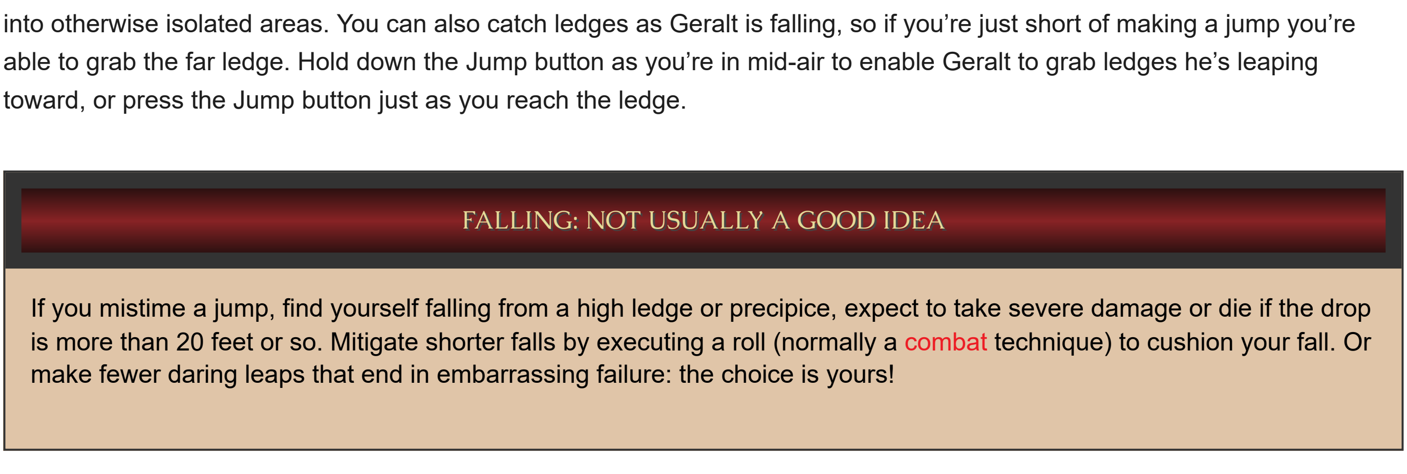
Movement during combat is handled using the same controls, but Geralt himself moves differently. He naturally points himself at the nearest enemy that he's in range of striking, or has been attacked by, in an attempt to prevent attacks from behind. You can also lock your camera on to enemies, which focuses Geralt's movements entirely around them. This is especially useful during one-on-one encounters, as all of Geralt's movements, evasions, and attacks, are aimed at that target. In encounters where Geralt faces many foes, it's important to be more flexible about how Geralt moves through the battle.

SLIDING



Geralt starts to slide down a hill if the terrain is too steep to traverse. You can control his slides downhill to a limited degree, speeding him up and slowing down as needed, and you can steer him. If you're willing to risk serious injury or death, this is one of the fastest ways down a mountain, short of taking leaps off of sheer cliffs to your certain death. In certain areas, such as the highest point of the island of An Skellig, sliding down mountains is practically encouraged!

CLIMBING AND JUMPING



Geralt can jump over small obstacles, clamber over fences and onto crates, climb ladders (by standing near one and using the climb button), or jump up to reach climbable ledges. Combined with Sprinting, you can make some impressive long jumps into otherwise isolated areas. You can also catch ledges as Geralt is falling, so if you're just short of making a jump you're able to grab the far ledge. Hold down the Jump button as you're in mid-air to enable Geralt to grab ledges he's leaping toward, or press the Jump button just as you reach the ledge.

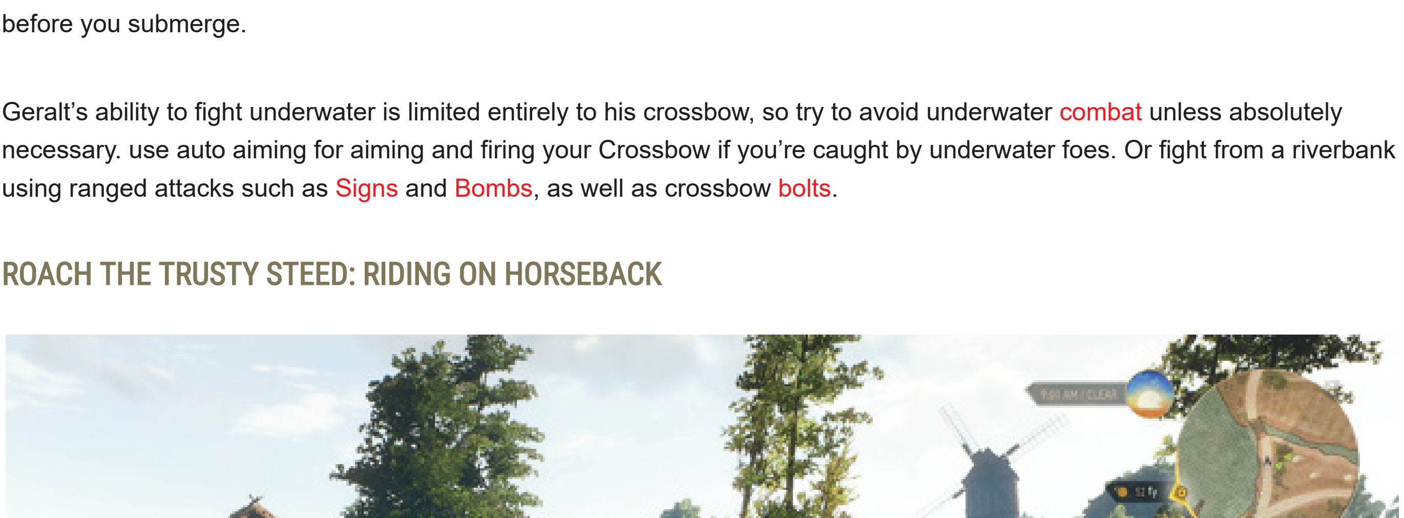
FALLING: NOT USUALLY A GOOD IDEA

If you mistime a jump, find yourself falling from a high ledge or precipice, expect to take severe damage or die if the drop is more than 20 feet or so. Mitigate shorter falls by executing a roll (normally a combat technique) to cushion your fall. Or make fewer daring leaps that end in embarrassing failure: the choice is yours!

LOOKING BEFORE YOU'RE LEAPING

If you're looking for places to land after a leap, or locations that you can definitely climb up, search for edges of rocks stained with bird droppings (these also show up in your Witcher Senses); expect to be able to haul yourself up on these areas, despite the unpleasant odor.

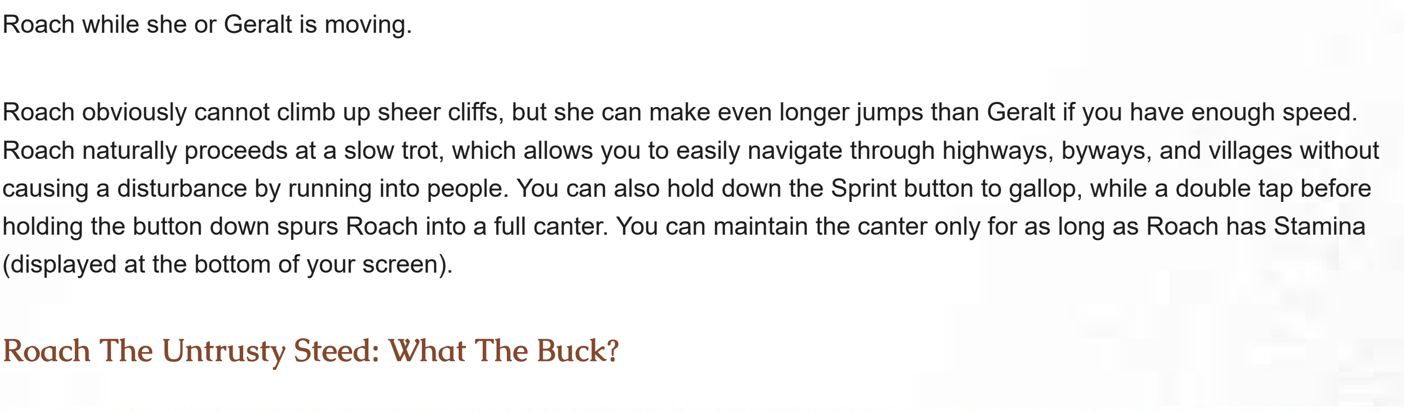
SWIMMING



Geralt is a powerful swimmer, able to "sprint" using the same controls as you would on land. You can also dive underwater to explore areas and seek treasure, just be aware Geralt can't stay underwater forever. If he runs out of breath, he loses Vitality over time until he either dies or gets air in his lungs. Need to lengthen your time underwater? Swig down a Killer Whale potion before you submerge.

Geralt's ability to fight underwater is limited entirely to his crossbow, so try to avoid underwater combat unless absolutely necessary. use auto aiming for aiming and firing your Crossbow if you're caught by underwater foes. Or fight from a riverbank using ranged attacks such as Signs and Bombs, as well as crossbow bolts.

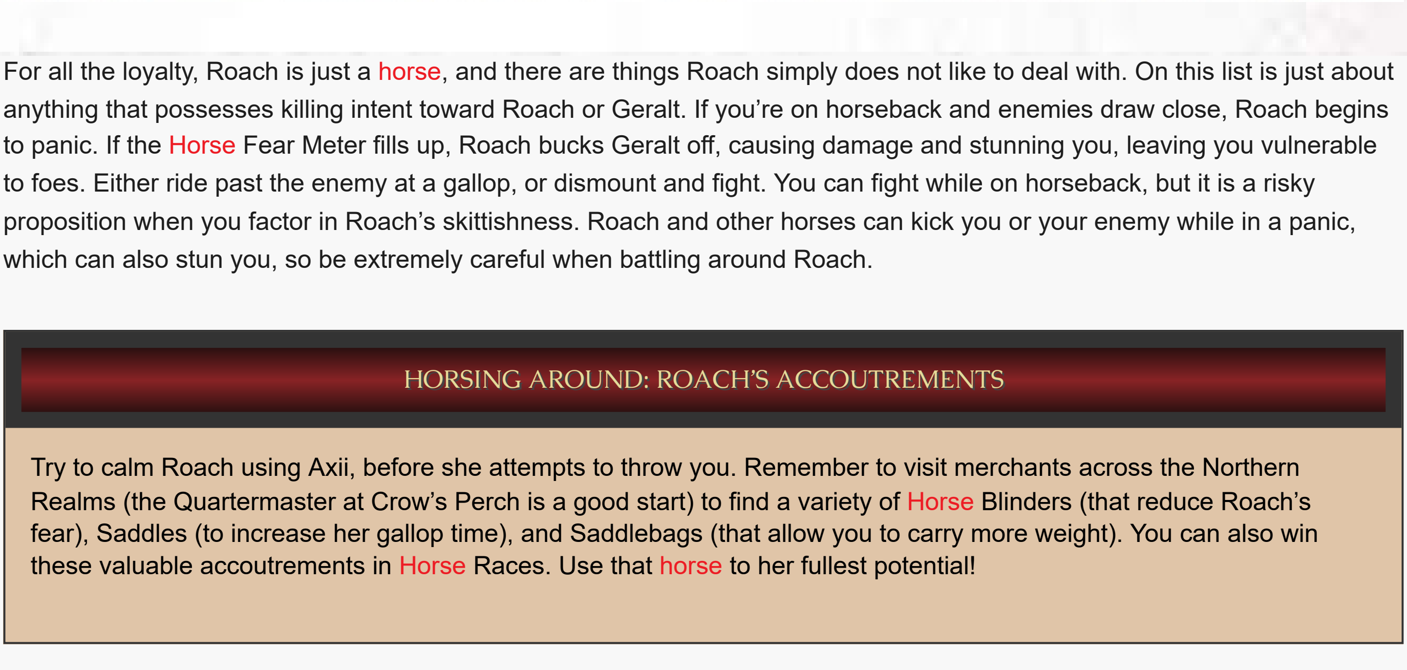
ROACH THE TRUSTY STEED: RIDING ON HORSEBACK



Geralt's trusty steed, Roach, handles similarly to Geralt himself. Roach is a constant companion and is yours from the start of your adventure. If you ever get separated from your horse, just whistle for her. If you need to make a quick escape, mount Roach while she or Geralt is moving.

Roach obviously cannot climb up sheer cliffs, but she can make even longer jumps than Geralt if you have enough speed. Roach naturally proceeds at a slow trot, which allows you to easily navigate through highways, byways, and villages without causing a disturbance by running into people. You can also hold down the Sprint button to gallop, while a double tap before holding the button down spurs Roach into a full canter. You can maintain the canter only for as long as Roach has Stamina (displayed at the bottom of your screen).

Roach The Untrusty Steed: What The Buck?

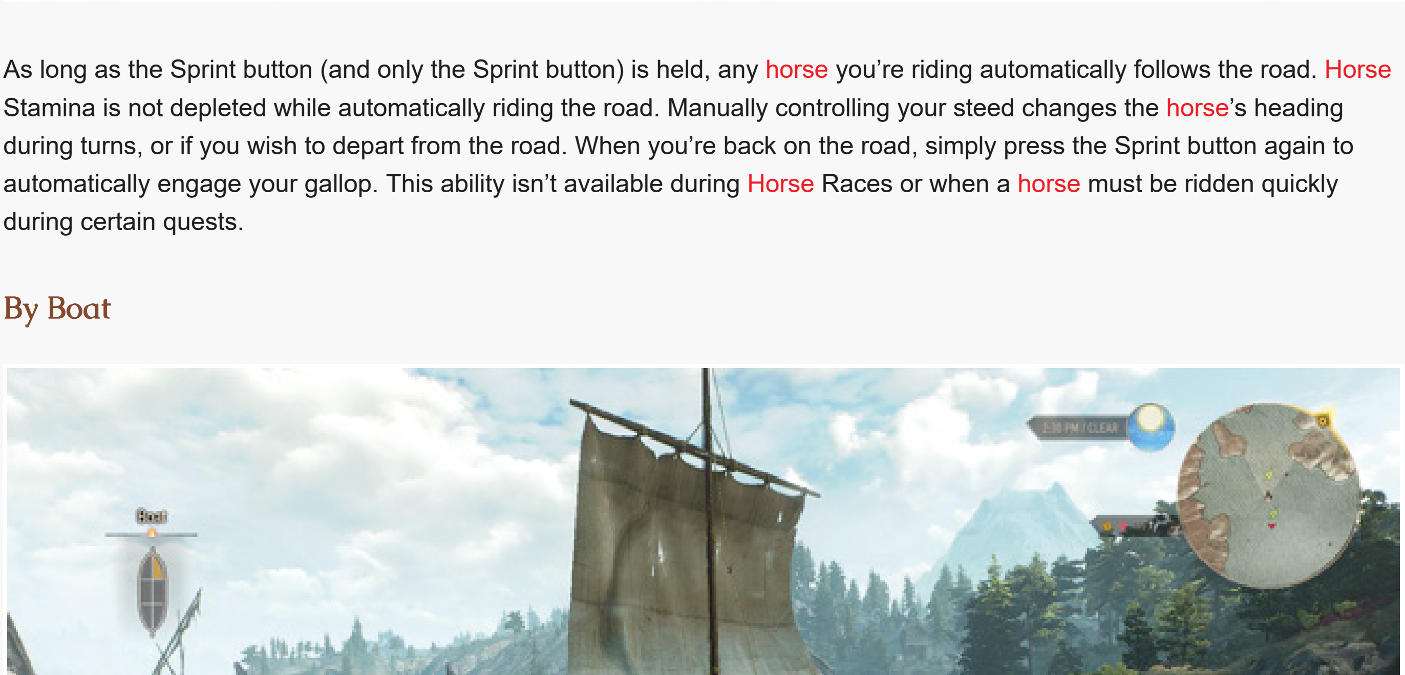


For all the loyalty, Roach is just a horse, and there are things Roach simply does not like to deal with. On this list is just about anything that possesses killing intent toward Roach or Geralt. If you're on horseback and enemies draw close, Roach begins to panic. If the Horse Fear Meter fills up, Roach bucks Geralt off, causing damage and stunning you, leaving you vulnerable to foes. Either ride past the enemy at a gallop, or dismount and fight. You can fight while on horseback, but it is a risky proposition when you factor in Roach's skittishness. Roach and other horses can kick you or your enemy while in a panic, which can also stun you, so be extremely careful when battling around Roach.

HORSING AROUND: ROACH'S ACCOUTREMENTS

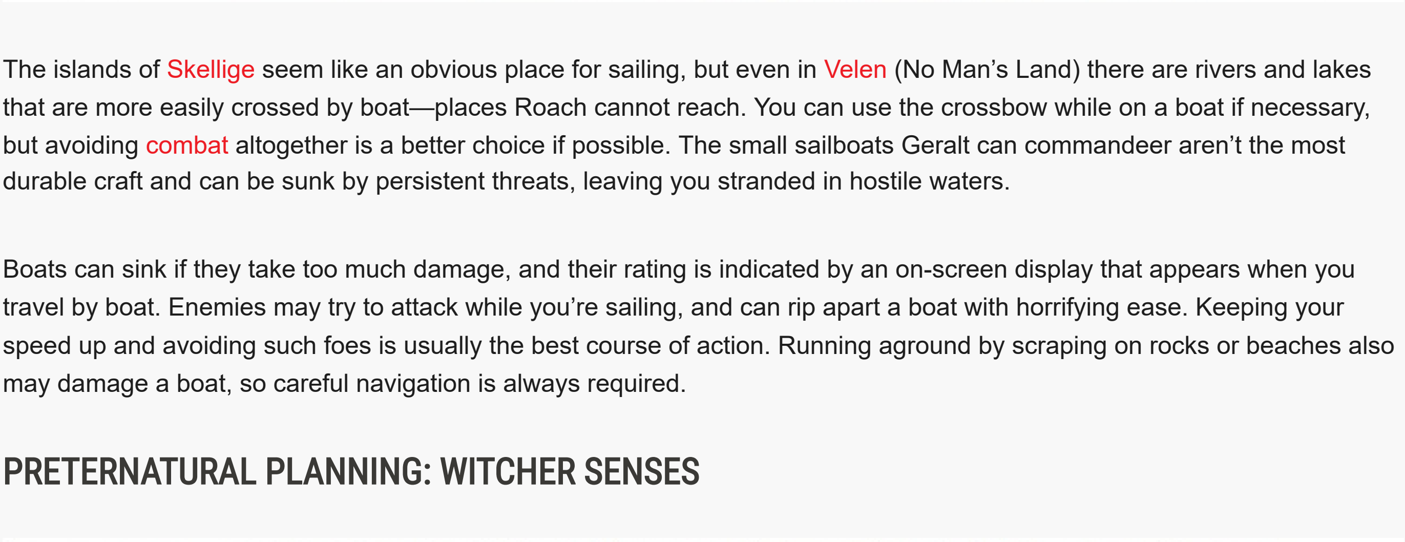
Try to calm Roach using Axii, before she attempts to throw you. Remember to visit merchants across the Northern Realms (the Quartermaster at Crow's Perch is a good start) to find a variety of Horse Blinders (that reduce Roach's fear), Saddles (to increase her gallop time), and Saddlebags (that allow you to carry more weight). You can also win these valuable accoutrements in Horse Races. Use that horse to her fullest potential!

Riding The Road (Automatically)



As long as the Sprint button (and only the Sprint button) is held, any horse you're riding automatically follows the road. Horse Stamina is not depleted while automatically riding the road. Manually controlling your steed changes the horse's heading during turns, or if you wish to depart from the road. When you're back on the road, simply press the Sprint button again to automatically engage your gallop. This ability isn't available during Horse Races or when a horse must be ridden quickly during certain quests.

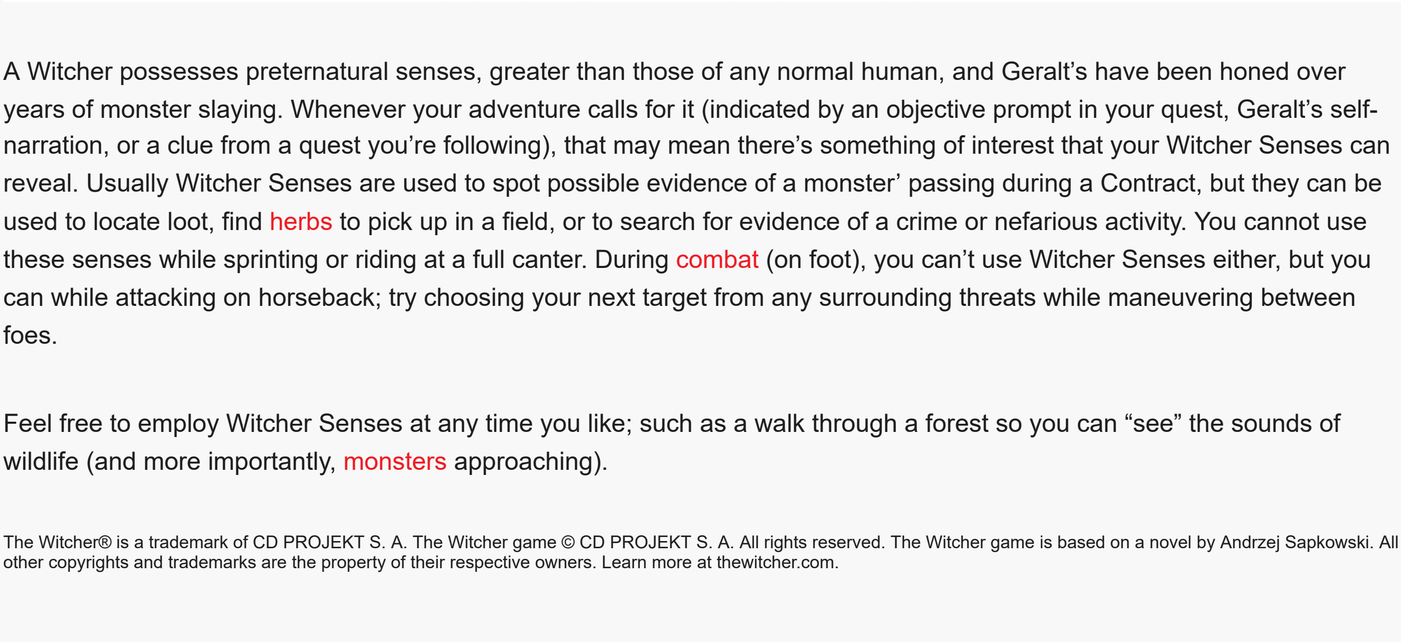
By Boat



The islands of Skellige seem like an obvious place for sailing, but even in Velen (No Man's Land) there are rivers and lakes that are more easily crossed by boat—places Roach cannot reach. You can use the crossbow while on a boat if necessary, but avoiding combat altogether is a better choice if possible. The small sailboats Geralt can commandeer aren't the most durable craft and can be sunk by persistent threats, leaving you stranded in hostile waters.

Boats can sink if they take too much damage, and their rating is indicated by an on-screen display that appears when you travel by boat. Enemies may try to attack while you're sailing, and can rip apart a boat with horrifying ease. Keeping your speed up and avoiding such foes is usually the best course of action. Running aground by scraping on rocks or beaches also may damage a boat, so careful navigation is always required.

PRETERNATURAL PLANNING: WITCHER SENSES



A Witcher possesses preternatural senses, greater than those of any normal human, and Geralt's have been honed over years of monster slaying. Whenever your adventure calls for it (indicated by an objective prompt in your quest, Geralt's self-narration, or a clue from a quest you're following), that may mean there's something of interest that your Witcher Senses can reveal. Usually Witcher Senses are used to spot possible evidence of a monster' passing during a Contract, but they can be used to locate loot, find herbs to pick up in a field, or to search for evidence of a crime or nefarious activity. You cannot use these senses while sprinting or riding at a full canter. During combat (on foot), you can't use Witcher Senses either, but you can while attacking on horseback; try choosing your next target from any surrounding threats while maneuvering between foes.

Feel free to employ Witcher Senses at any time you like; such as a walk through a forest so you can "see" the sounds of wildlife (and more importantly, monsters approaching).

Training

In-Game HUD

The HUD (Heads-Up Display) imparts critical information, particularly during combat, which help keep you alive if you pay attention. There are many elements that appear during special occasions, such as Boss Health meters, but the following items are both the most consistently displayed pieces of information, and also rank among the most important:

① Wolf Medallion: This medallion indicates when Geralt is in danger, or is near a powerful source of magic (usually a Place of Power). If you are playing with a force-feedback enabled controller, expect vibrations too!

② Experience Bar: As you kill monsters or men within a certain number of levels of Geralt's current level, or complete quests, you gain experience indicated by this meter. If the meter has been filled, it resets and you gain a level. A small indicator appears next to the bar to show that you have an ability point that you can assign to your character trees.

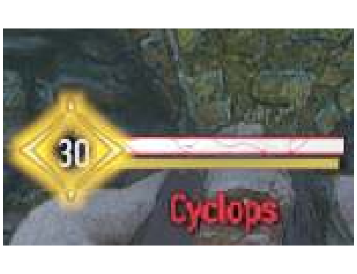
⑥ Adrenaline: Adrenaline builds during combat, indicated by the gray marks turning red. Having Adrenaline can lead to very beneficial effects during combat.

⑦ Chosen Sign: Next to the Stamina Bar is a symbol that shows which Sign you have selected in your Quick Access Menu. Make sure you have the right Sign chosen for your situation!

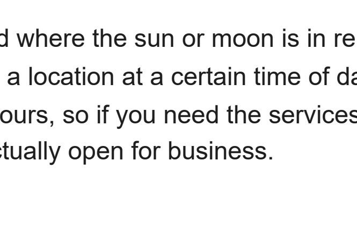
⑧ Item Condition: As Geralt uses his weapons, or sustains damage in combat, his equipment sustains damage. Should it become dangerously low on durability, an indicator appears on your HUD. Don't let your gear fall into disrepair!

⑨ Quick Access Items: Geralt can have one quickly accessed weapon or tool, such as the Crossbow, and two consumables, set up from the Quick Access Menu and your inventory screen. One helpful item is a torch to light your way in dark places, if you aren't brewing the Cat's Eye potion.

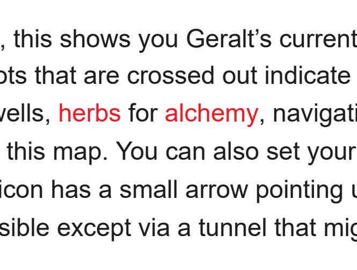
⑩ Enemy Vitality Bar: Enemies that have engaged in combat with Geralt will have their current Vitality and Stamina displayed over their head, as well as their current level. If an enemy is vulnerable to Silver Swords, their Vitality is displayed in silver, otherwise it is red. Important to note is the color of the enemy's level:



If it is red, or displayed as a skull, you are in for a very tough fight.



Green is an enemy closer to your level.



White levels indicate a near-inconsequential threat.

⑪ Current Time: Displays the time of day, and where the sun or moon is in relation to the time, and even the current weather conditions. You may be asked to go to a location at a certain time of day, which requires you to Meditate to pass the time. Many merchants are not available at all hours, so if you need the services of a blacksmith or ingredients merchant, come back when (or Meditate until) they are actually open for business.

⑫ Distance to Objective: Shows how far Geralt is from a waypoint, while indicating if the objective is above or below relative to his position.

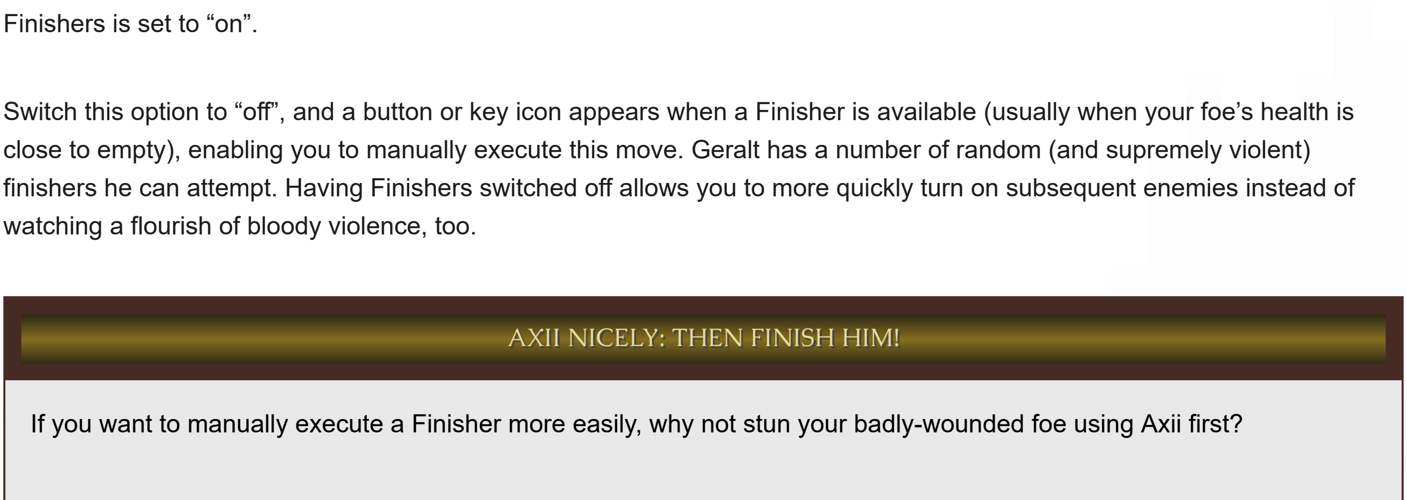
⑮ Controls: Based on Geralt's current state, whether on foot, on horseback, or in combat, a series of control prompts appears in this corner of the screen. If in combat, this display also shows you which sword is currently unsheathed. There may be situations where you're forced to fight humans and monsters simultaneously, and this can help you keep track of what you're using mid-fight.

OPTIONS OF NOTE

There is an abundance of options available to you. Almost all of them are easy to understand (and can be changed at your whim), and are accessible at any point in your adventure if you press Pause. However, a few options stand out as being particularly interesting:

GAMEPLAY > AUTOMATIC FINISHERS ("ON")



Notice the button icon near this badly wounded foe? This allows for manual Finishers, or to ignore Finishers altogether.

"Finishers" are executions you can undertake to complete combat with a human-sized foe. This always ends with a gruesome, and usually appendage-lopping, maneuver, and the copious spilling of enemy blood. Normally, Automatic Finishers is set to "on".

Switch this option to "off", and a button or key icon appears when a Finisher is available (usually when your foe's health is close to empty), enabling you to manually execute this move. Geralt has a number of random (and supremely violent) finishers he can attempt. Having Finishers switched off allows you to more quickly turn on subsequent enemies instead of watching a flourish of bloody violence, too.

AXII NICELY: THEN FINISH HIM!

If you want to manually execute a Finisher more easily, why not stun your badly-wounded foe using Axii first?

GAMEPLAY > COLOR-BLIND FRIENDLY WITCHER SENSES ("OFF")

If you have color-blindness, then switch this mode from "off" to "on." When you are using your Witcher Senses, you normally see areas of interest (such as footprints, partly-hidden corpses, or sounds) with a red outline. This changes the outline to blue. If you do not have color-blindness, you may find the color change makes it easier to spot areas of interest, easing your investigations. Note this option is accessible from the Main Menu > Gameplay option.

GAMEPLAY > TURNOFF WITCHER SENSES FISH-EYE EFFECT

If you suffer from motion sickness while playing games, you may feel queasy when Geralt quickly spins or changes direction. Switch this option to "on" and the background will stop warping during a turn, which can help alleviate this situation.

VIDEO > HUD CONFIGURATION

If you are finding that the In-Game HUD to be a little intrusive, or wish to add another layer of difficulty to your adventure, scroll through this menu and switch a variety of (mainly visual) functions off and on. Everything from your mini-map to your boat durability can be toggled here. For the greatest challenge, turn every HUD option off (though not having a mini-map is perhaps a step too far into the unknown!).

NEW GAME +: A PLANNING PRIMER

New Game + is a new mode that only unlocks after you finish the main Critical Path storyline of the base game. Choosing this mode, you can begin the game anew, but you keep your character progression, items, and all the aspects of the world around you are "scaled up" to provide you with new challenges. This is a great way to fully utilize the potential of items you may not have found until the end of the base game, or to try out new choices during the story. As you may know, the plot of your adventure unravels differently based on choices you make during quests (and this guide shows you each time one of these decisions must be made). Use this mode to try other options, such as romancing a different person, building up a different character archetype, or changing your difficulty settings.

ORIGINAL ASSASSIN: SIMULATING A SAVE

This game mode also allows you to "Simulate Witcher 2 Save", just as before. Select "On", and after the prologue, when you meet General Moorvran Voorhis (during Main Quest: Imperial Audience), you can choose to answer a number of plot-changing questions.

NEW GAME +: CHARACTER PROGRESSION

READ THE BASICS FIRST!

The following information pre-supposes that you already understand leveling, skill points, and other basic elements of your character progression. If you don't, simply look these terms up later in this Training chapter.

It is important to remember that when you transfer your character, all your skills, levels, and experience transfer with you. New Game + has a starting point at level 30, so if your character is below that level you are given enough experience points to raise to this level. However, if you are already above this level, no changes are made (you begin at the level above 30 you finished the previous game at).

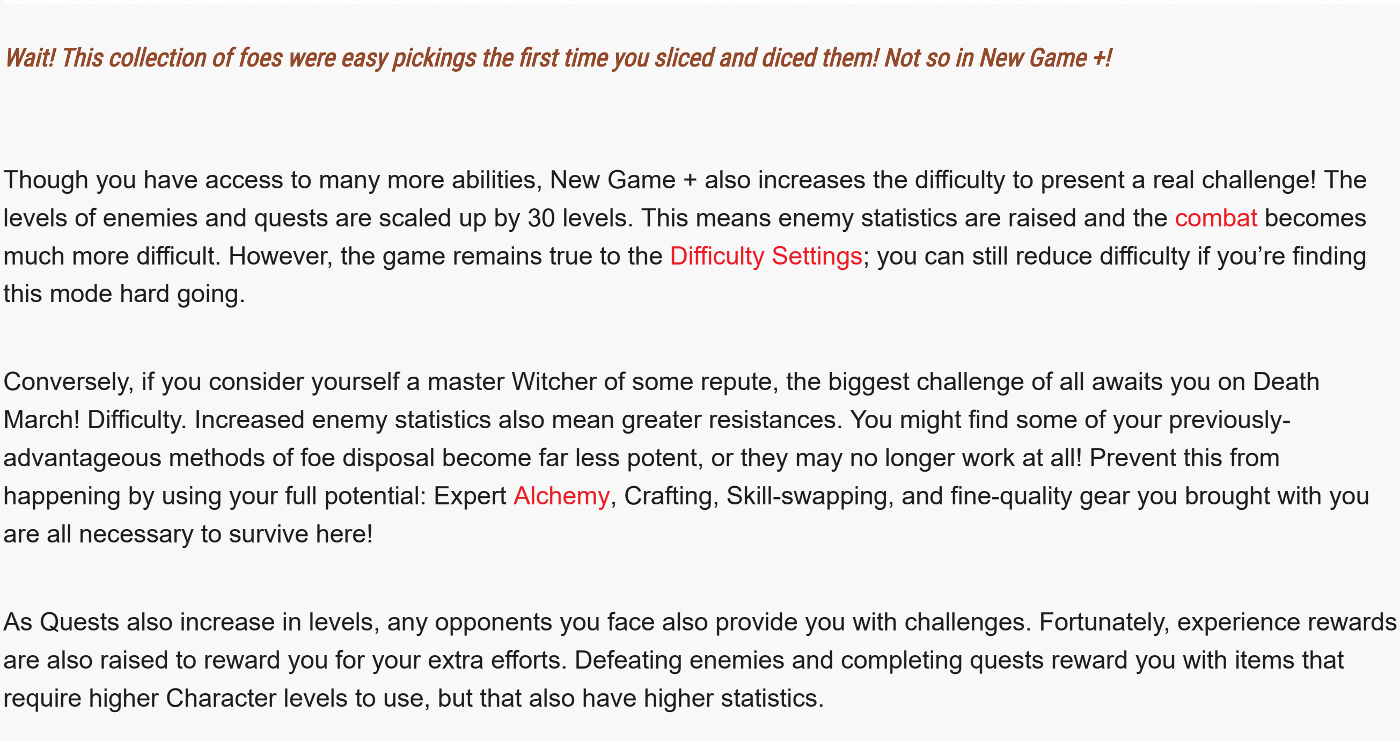
POTION OF CLEARANCE

At the start of the New Game +, you are granted one Potion of Clearance. Once used, it moves all your spent skill points back to the points' pool so you can redistribute them in a different way. This potion can also be bought in game so you can do this multiple times whenever you feel like it.

Ability Points that you obtained via visiting Places of Power are kept on your character. Also visiting Places of Power in New Game + for the first time rewards you with an ability point, just like in the initial adventure. This essentially means you can visit Places of Power in your first adventure, and then visit them all again in New Game +, doubling your ability points!

In New Game + you gain more ability points, but you don't receive additional ability slots. However, this enables you to buy some "support" abilities that you might not want to always employ, but might prove useful in specific circumstances. In the initial playthrough, you either had to resign from doing so due to lack of ability points, or had to redistribute all your points whenever you wanted a change. In New Game +, you can keep your build and use additional points to buy extra abilities and use them whenever you need without those restrictions. This proves especially helpful when playing on Death March difficulty, when enemies prove to be most dastardly in their prowess!

NEW GAME +: CHALLENGES AND A WITCHER'S FULL POTENTIAL



Wait! This collection of foes were easy pickings the first time you sliced and diced them! Not so in New Game +!

Though you have access to many more abilities, New Game + also increases the difficulty to present a real challenge! The levels of enemies and quests are scaled up by 30 levels. This means enemy statistics are raised and the combat becomes much more difficult. However, the game remains true to the Difficulty Settings; you can still reduce difficulty if you're finding this mode hard going.

Conversely, if you consider yourself a master Witcher of some repute, the biggest challenge of all awaits you on Death March! Difficulty. Increased enemy statistics also mean greater resistances. You might find some of your previously-advantageous methods of foe disposal become far less potent, or they may no longer work at all! Prevent this from happening by using your full potential: Expert Alchemy, Crafting, Skill-swapping, and fine-quality gear you brought with you are all necessary to survive here!

As Quests also increase in levels, any opponents you face also provide you with challenges. Fortunately, experience rewards are also raised to reward you for your extra efforts. Defeating enemies and completing quests reward you with items that require higher Character levels to use, but that also have higher statistics.

NEW GAME +: GEAR GATHERING

A good number of items you found during your initial playthrough are carried over to New Game +. However, there are exceptions:

- Quest Items: Such as rewards given or items found within a quest, as these could spoil your quests.
- Monster Trophies: As these are also quest-related items, your collection of previously-severed heads doesn't make the trip to New Game + mode.
- Special Items: Equipment pieces like the Eye of Nehaleni are not accessible (until you locate them during a specific quest), as they are also quest related.
- Crafting Recipes: You keep basic schematics on your person, but the rest is ready to be found again (with increased levels and statistics).
- Gwent Cards: You will find your Gwent decks demolished; the epic quest to "Collect 'em All" begins once again!
- Readable Items: Books, journals, and letters also relate to quests, so they are removed.

Fortunately, you get to keep everything else, so expect to begin your adventure back in White Orchard with your Witcher Sets, relic weapons, and an alchemy bag full of useful potions, bombs, and oils.

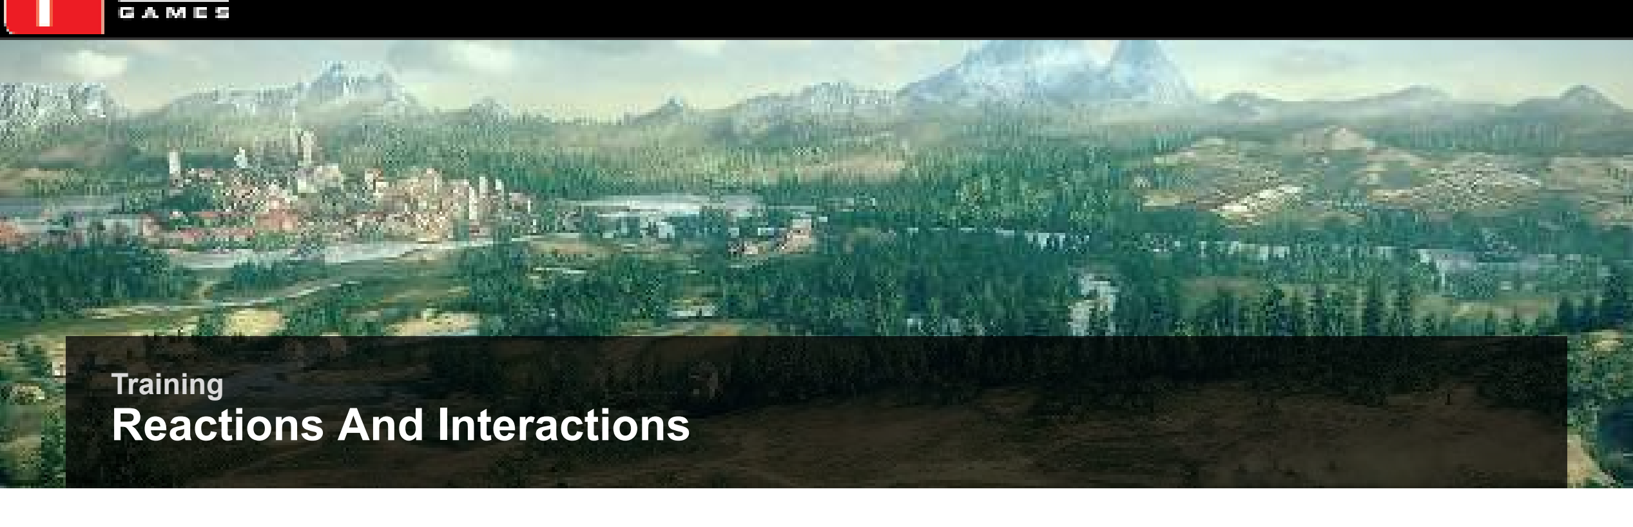
Training

Overview

Prior to traveling into the wilds of the Northern Realms, it is wise for you to fully grasp the actions and abilities of the Witcher Geralt (and to a much lesser extent, Cirilla). Learn about movement, fighting with the steel and silver swords of the Witcher, and mastering the use of Signs; though this is only the beginning of your training. Further your knowledge of alchemy, crafting, Witcher abilities (also known as skills), leveling, weapon and armor maintenance, Meditation and preparation, the economy of trading, and the variety of interesting (and usually dangerous) environmental areas, from Monster Nests to Points of Interest. Don't leave the confines of Kaer Morhen without a full understanding of this information.

Geralt of Rivia is a Witcher; a professional monster slayer for hire, who has collected countless bounties. A mutant feared by the creatures he hunts and the people he protects, Geralt would not have earned his reputation if he were unskilled. In a world plagued by monsters, and the men who would be monsters, Witchers are known for not just their martial prowess and their mutant nature, but also their almost encyclopedic knowledge of their prey, and the amount of preparation they are willing to undergo before battle.

You must be a smart, deliberate hunter—one who is willing to use the tools at your disposal, willing to take the time necessary to ensure that every encounter is weighted as much in your favor as possible, while also being more than capable of responding to the unexpected. But this is more than just being a fearsome combatant, however: Witchers use words almost as often as they employ blades to get what they want, whether it is important information about a contract, the right price for services rendered, or convincing others to allow them into places which they might otherwise be refused access. This section of the Witcher 3: Wild Hunt guide helps train you in the basics and more advanced techniques at your disposal.



Training

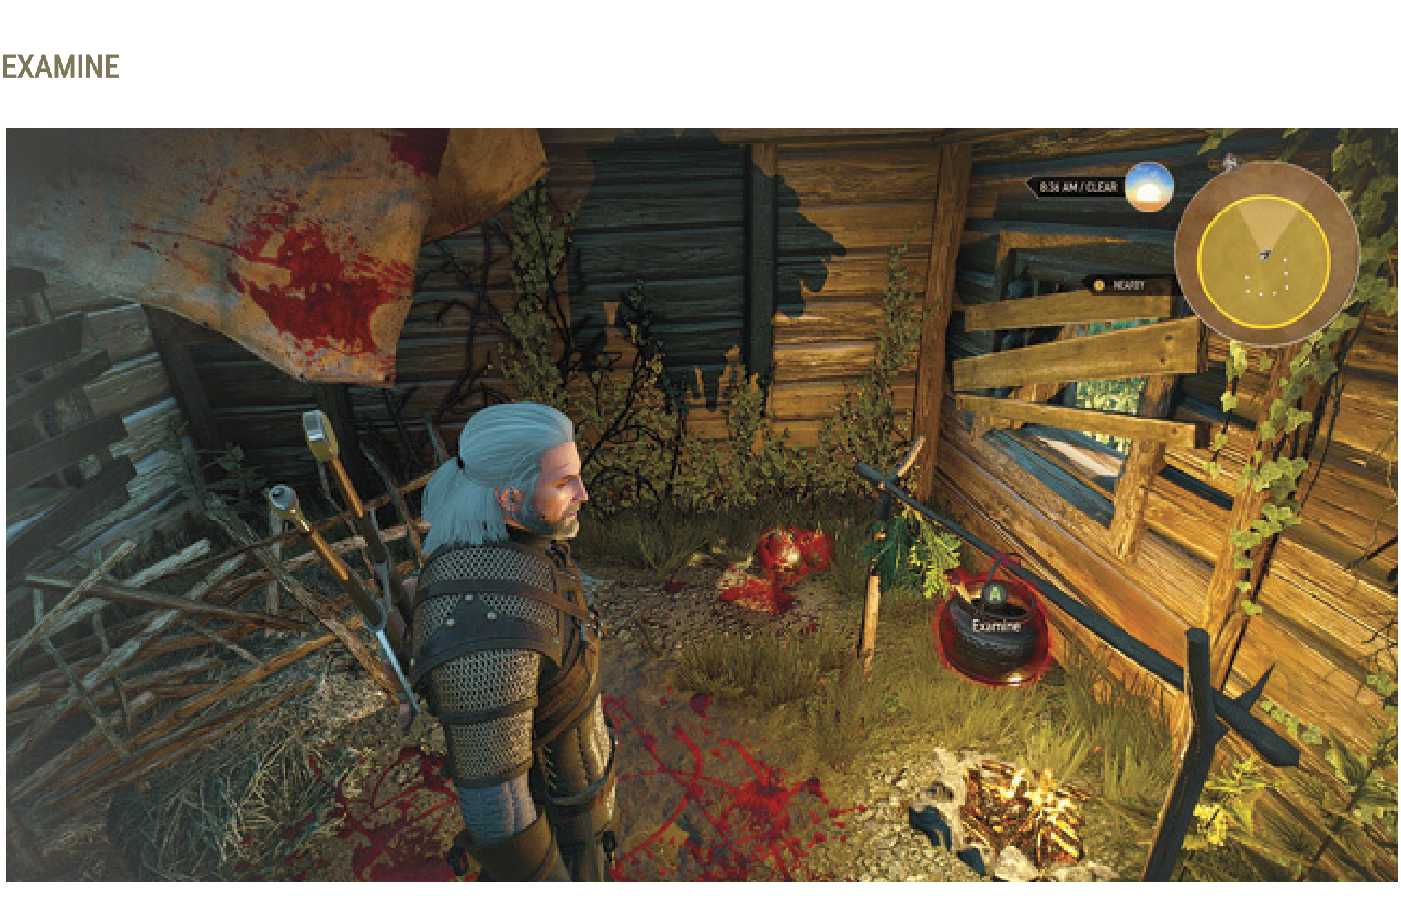
Reactions And Interactions

Geralt can interact with the world using more peaceful methods than putting fists into faces or swords to skulls. He must find the supplies he needs in the environment that surrounds him, pick up on clues or notes, or speak with individuals who know what he needs to know. For this type of interaction, learn the following techniques:

EXAMINATIONS AND ENVIRONMENTAL INTERACTIONS

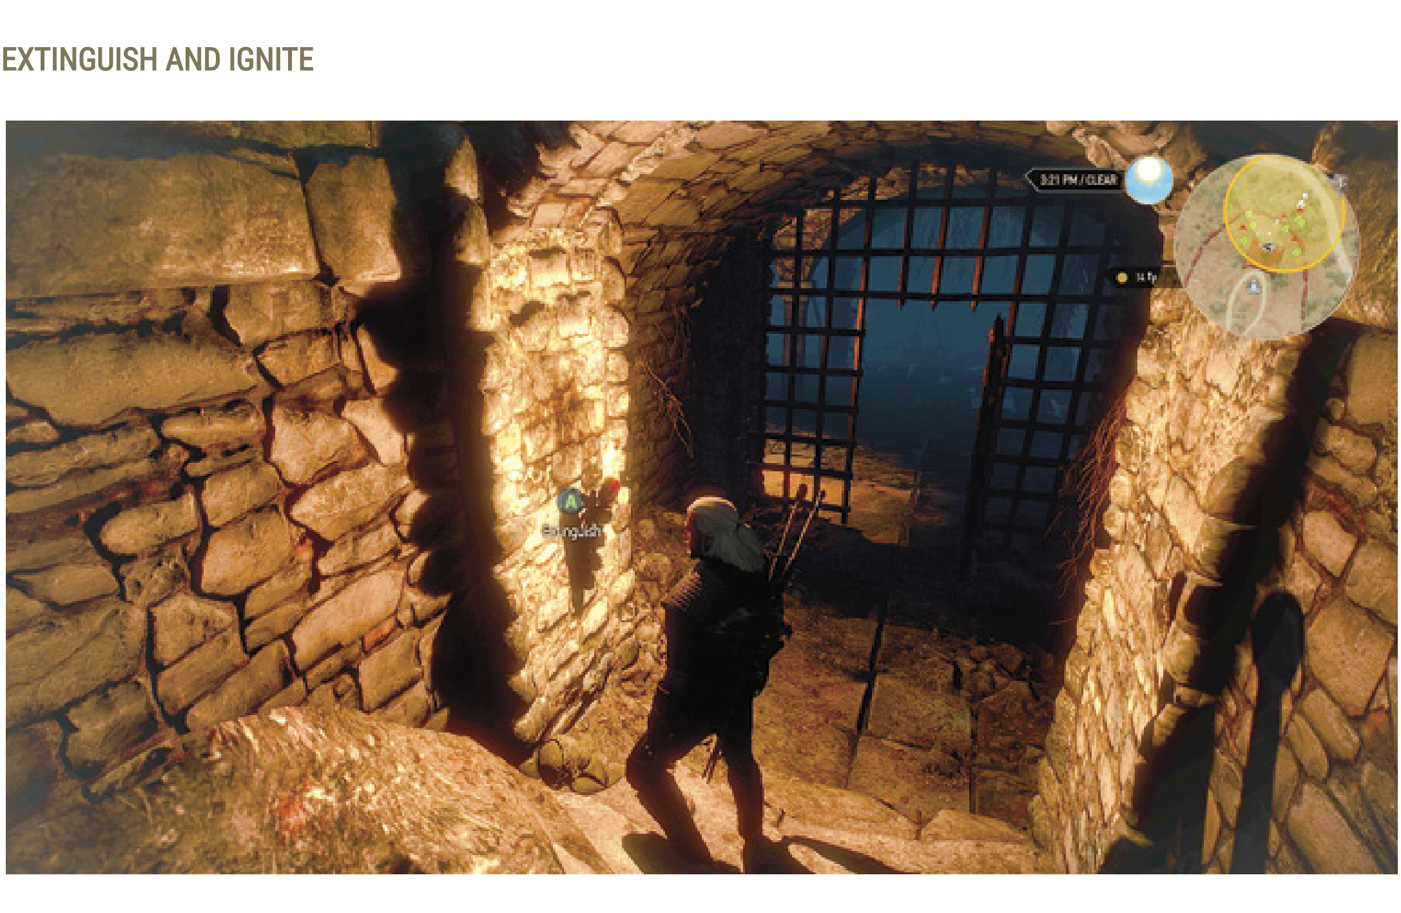
When you walk up to an item, object, or piece of scenery, and there's something to interact with, a context-sensitive button appears on your screen, allowing you a variety of exploratory options. The following are most common:

DESTROY



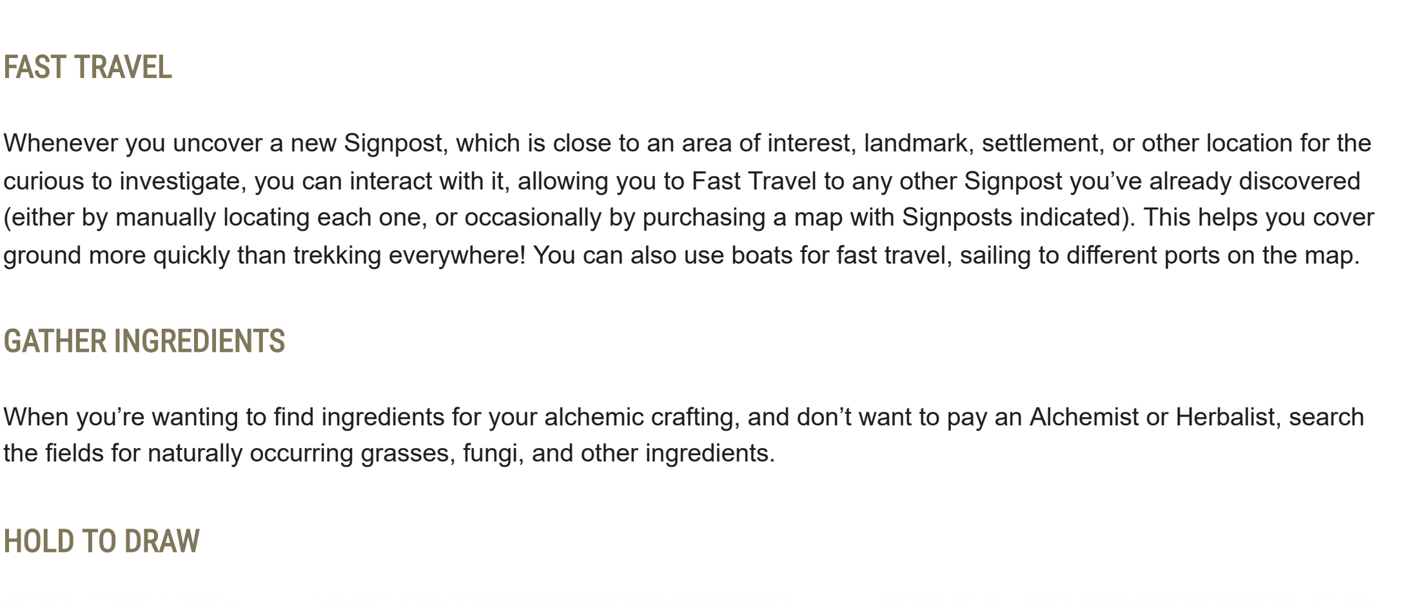
Kill! Rend! Dismember! Actually, as you use your swords and Signs to slay enemies, the only time you're able destroy some scenery is when you approach a Monster Nest. "Destroy" automatically removes a bomb from your inventory, and you drop it into the nest. At this point, you are advised to move away from the ensuing explosion, which occurs a few seconds later. This destroys the nest, removing the local monster threat. Once the dust settles, you can loot any valuables from the nest.

EXAMINE



This occurs almost always when you're using your Witcher Senses, and you discover a glowing area of interest (a mark, blood trail, footprints, or slumped corpse for example) that furthers an investigation during a quest. The mark is accompanied by a magnifying glass icon, which can appear on your mini-map if you switch "Witcher Senses on Mini-map" (in the Video > HUD Configuration Menu) to "on".

EXTINGUISH AND IGNITE



Many torches, candles, bonfires, and oil braziers across the land are either lit or unlit. Though you can use Igni to light these flammable targets, and Aard to extinguish them, you can also simply walk up to a flammable target and snuff the light out or quickly ignite it. This is useful if you're wandering a maze-like dungeon and want to keep track of where you've been, or want to illuminate an area without announcing your presence with a blast of Igni or Aard.

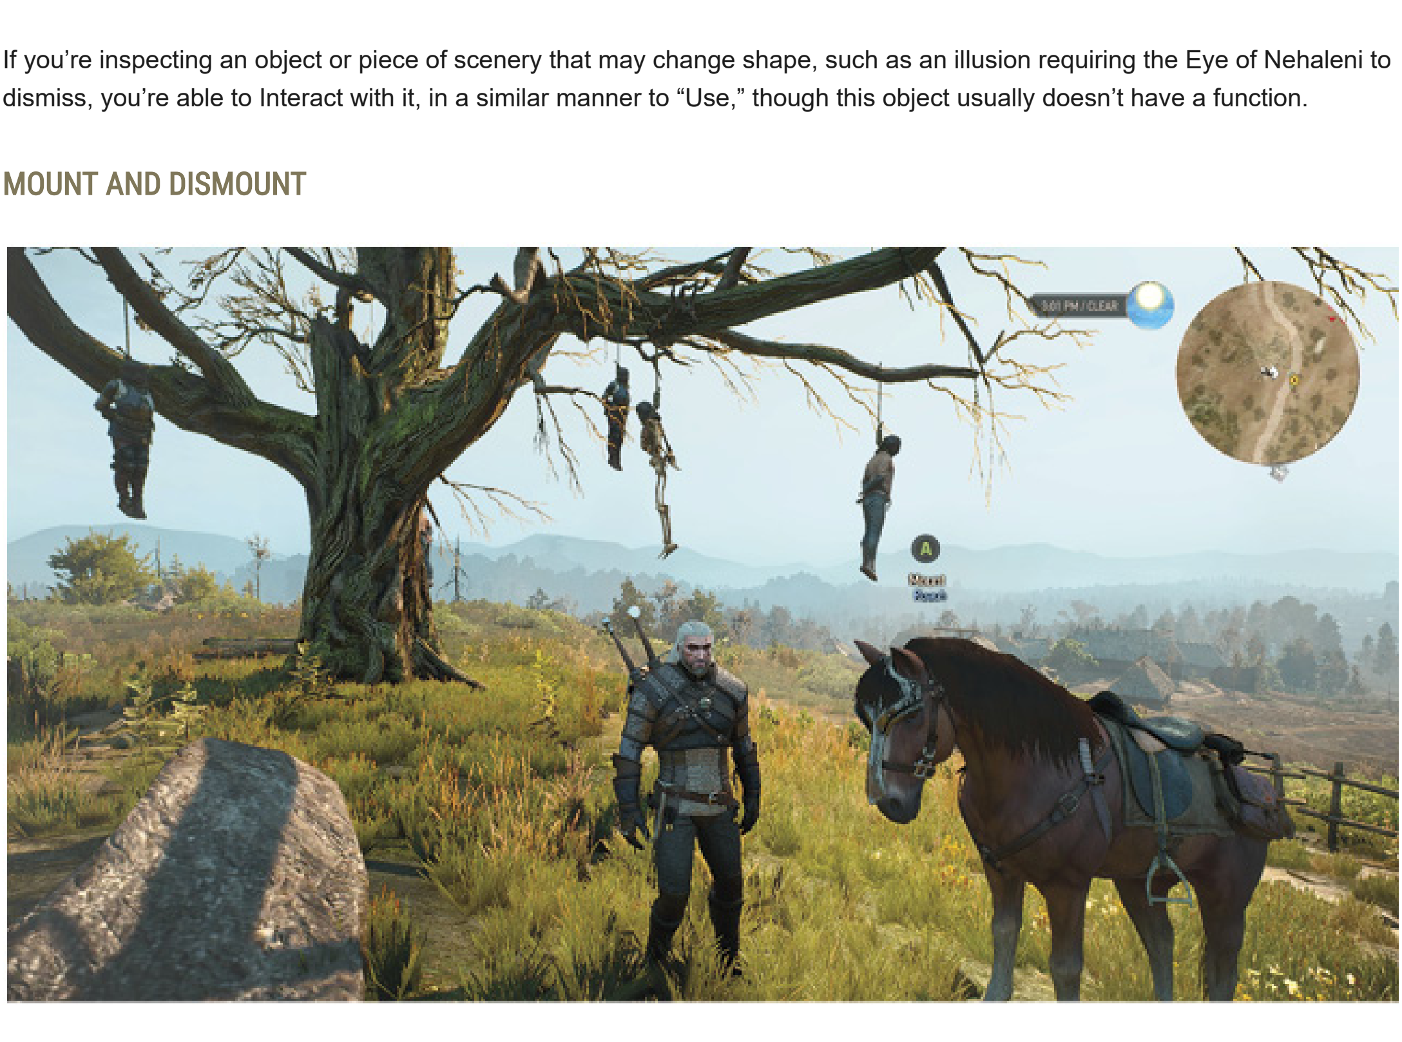
FAST TRAVEL

Whenever you uncover a new Signpost, which is close to an area of interest, landmark, settlement, or other location for the curious to investigate, you can interact with it, allowing you to Fast Travel to any other Signpost you've already discovered (either by manually locating each one, or occasionally by purchasing a map with Signposts indicated). This helps you cover ground more quickly than trekking everywhere! You can also use boats for fast travel, sailing to different ports on the map.

GATHER INGREDIENTS

When you're wanting to find ingredients for your alchemic crafting, and don't want to pay an Alchemist or Herbalist, search the fields for naturally occurring grasses, fungi, and other ingredients.

HOLD TO DRAW

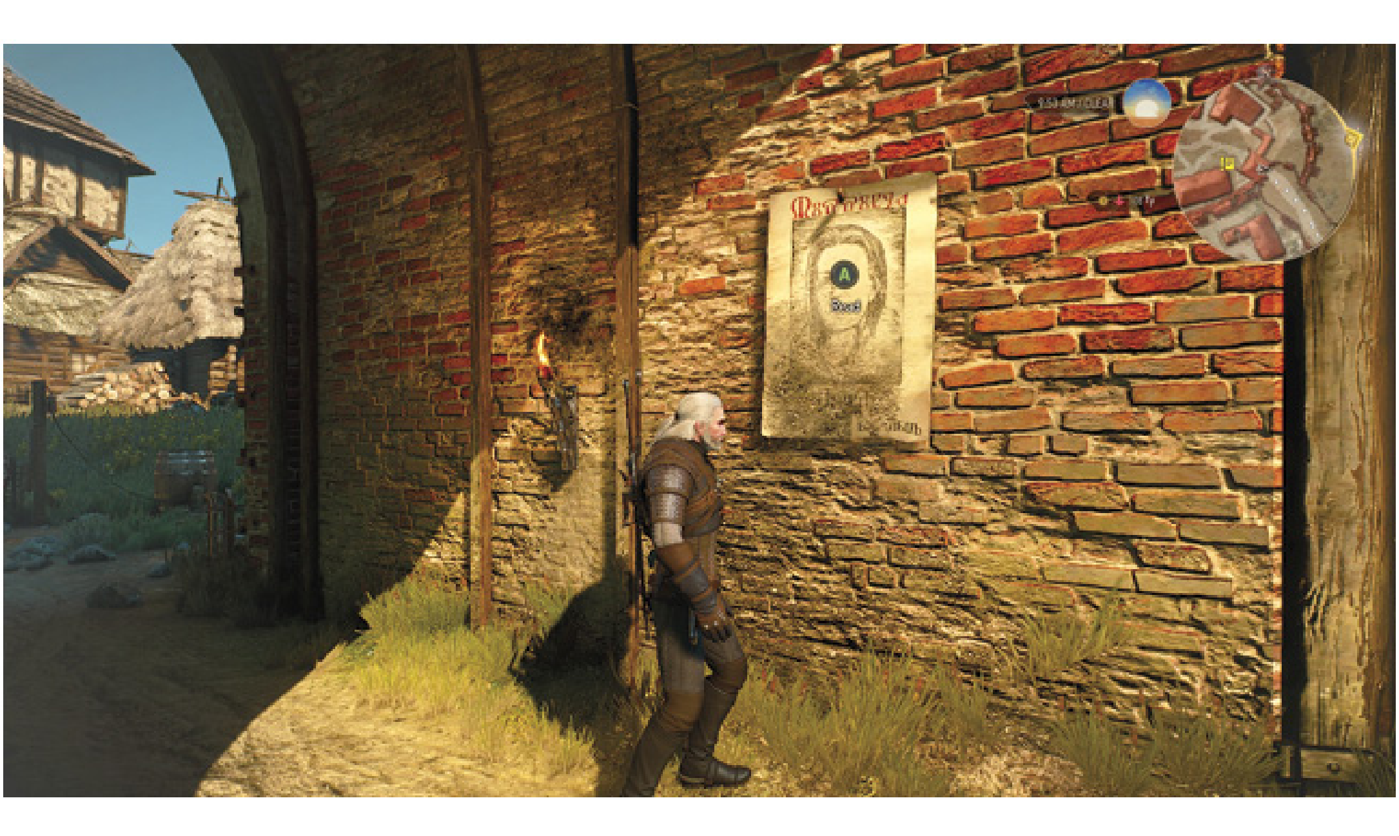


This only occurs when you discover a strange, glowing monument known as a Place of Power. Approach it, and hold the button (rather than tapping it) to draw the power from the monolith.

INTERACT

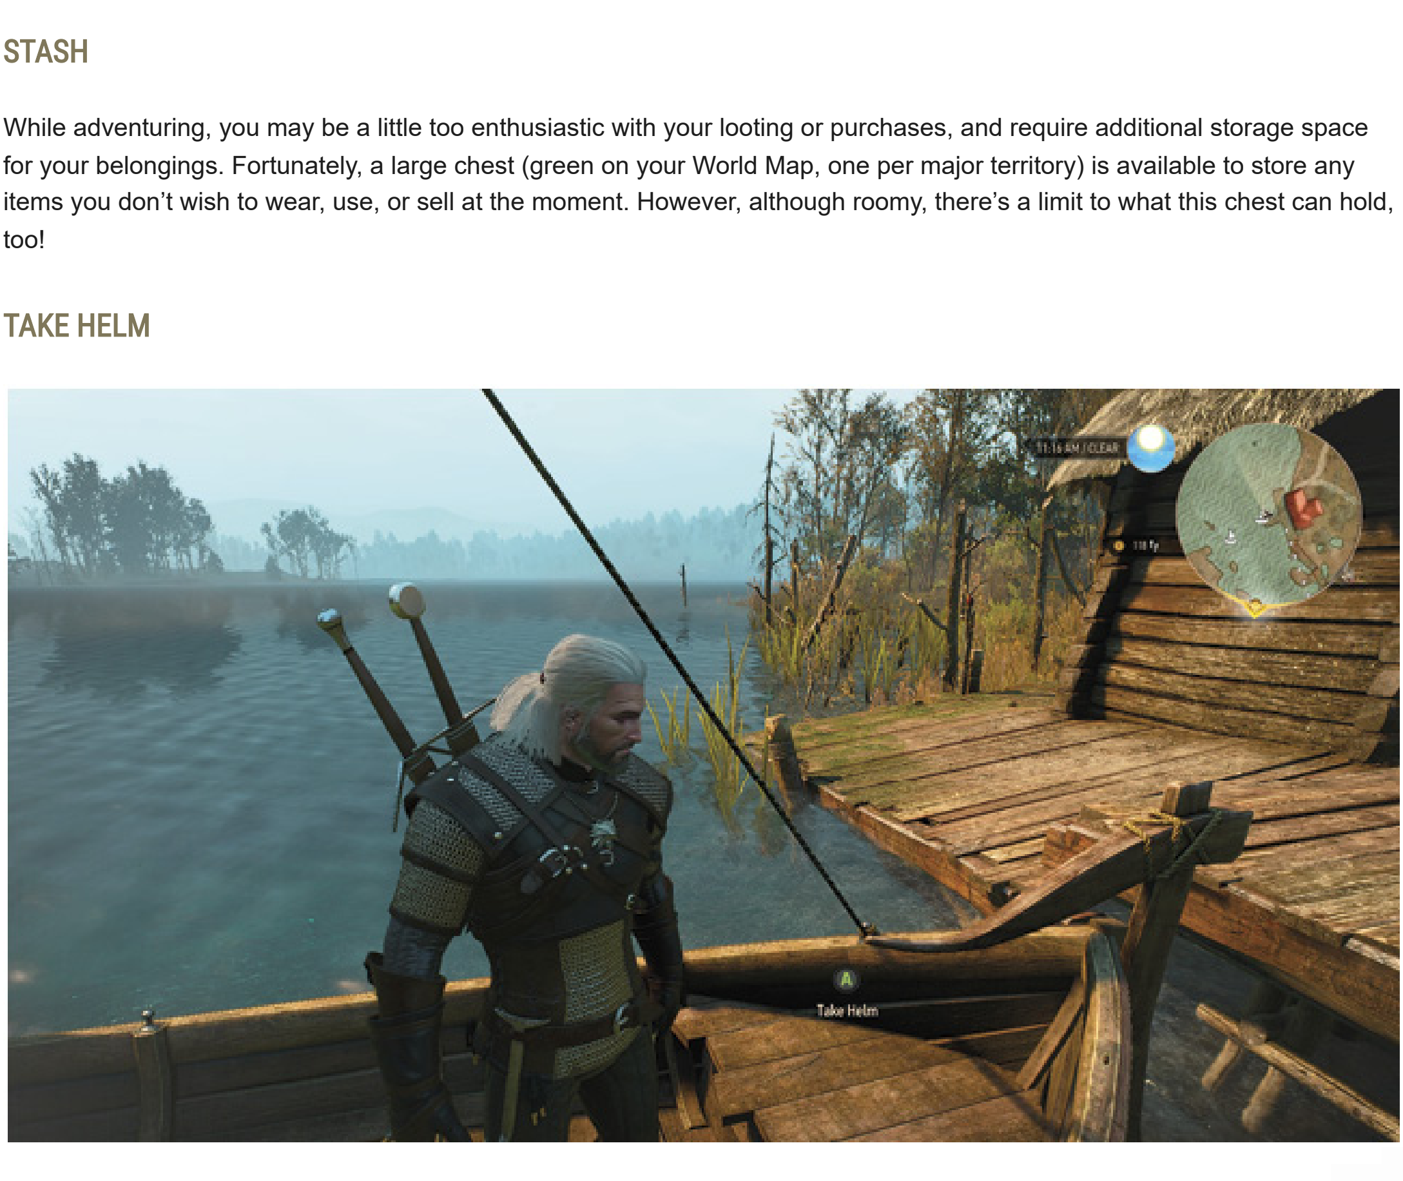
If you're inspecting an object or piece of scenery that may change shape, such as an illusion requiring the Eye of Nehaleni to dismiss, you're able to Interact with it, in a similar manner to "Use," though this object usually doesn't have a function.

MOUNT AND DISMOUNT



Whenever you whistle for Roach, or come across a horse (and perhaps even a unicorn) that you wish to ride, stepping closer to the beast enables you to mount it. Mount from behind to complete an impressive leapfrog onto the mount.

READ

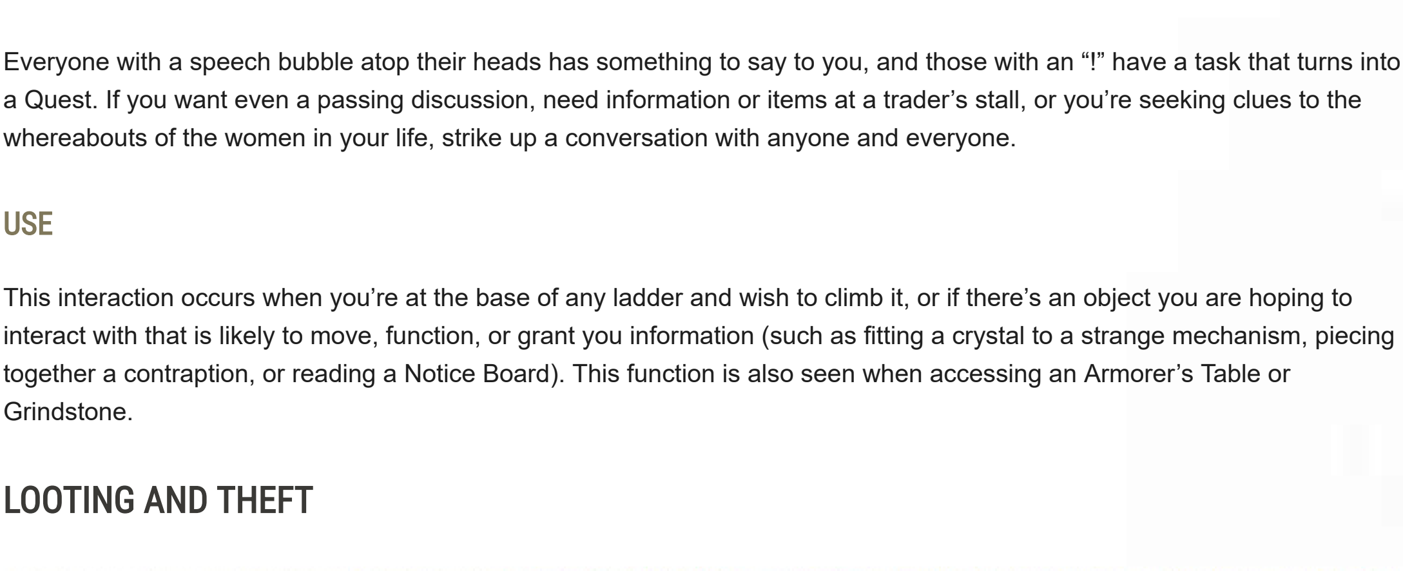


Dotted around settlements, usually plastered to walls, are posters with various information written on them. Feel free to read any of these; they give you pertinent information about the goings on in a settlement, and clues to quests you may wish to participate in. For example, over at Crow's Perch, the Baron's wife has gone missing. Have you seen her?

STASH

While adventuring, you may be a little too enthusiastic with your looting or purchases, and require additional storage space for your belongings. Fortunately, a large chest (green on your World Map, one per major territory) is available to store any items you don't wish to wear, use, or sell at the moment. However, although roomy, there's a limit to what this chest can hold, too!

TAKE HELM



When you're wanting to steer a boat, just standing on it isn't going to get you anywhere; instead you must move to the helm (back) of the vessel, interacting with the rudder, and start to steer your boat.

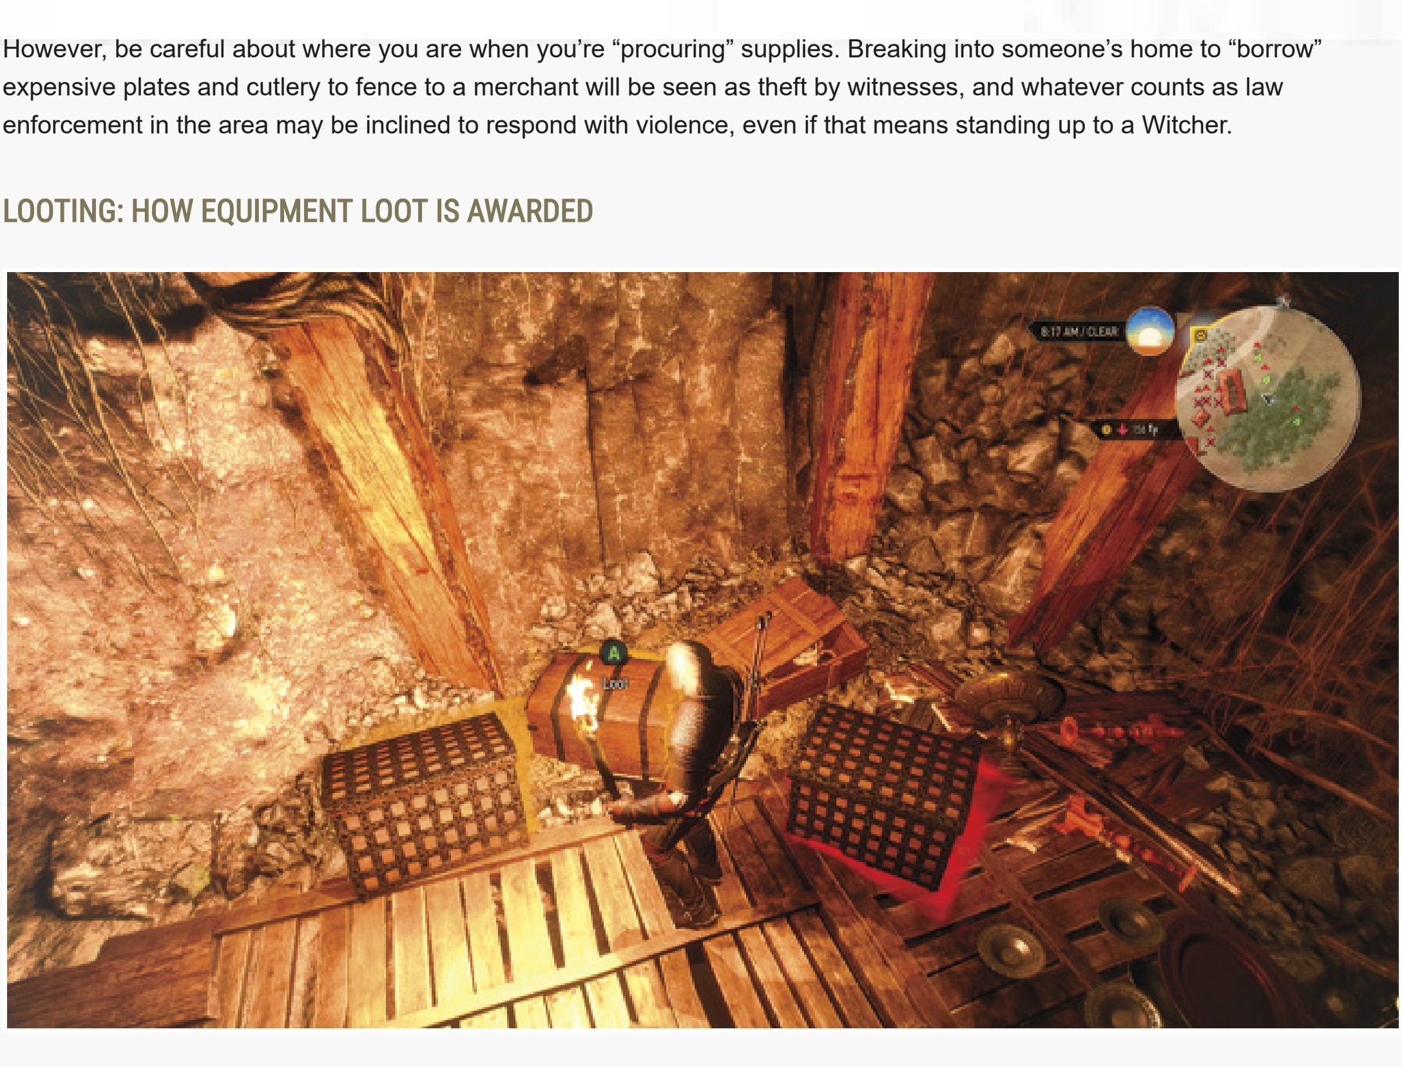
TALK

Everyone with a speech bubble atop their heads has something to say to you, and those with an "!" have a task that turns into a Quest. If you want even a passing discussion, need information or items at a trader's stall, or you're seeking clues to the whereabouts of the women in your life, strike up a conversation with anyone and everyone.

USE

This interaction occurs when you're at the base of any ladder and wish to climb it, or if there's an object you are hoping to interact with that is likely to move, function, or grant you information (such as fitting a crystal to a strange mechanism, piecing together a contraption, or reading a Notice Board). This function is also seen when accessing an Armorer's Table or Grindstone.

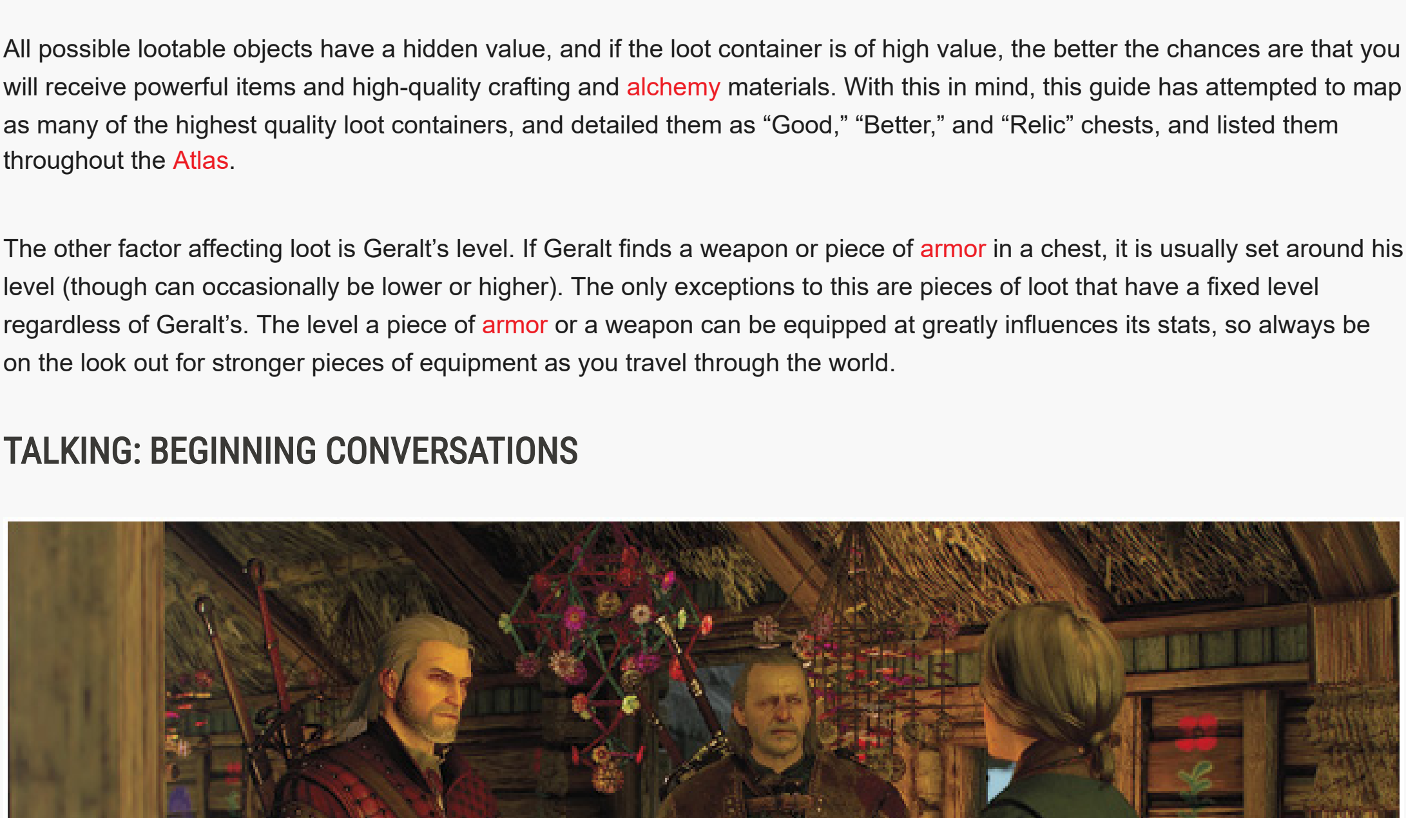
LOOTING AND THEFT



After combat, or while exploring a locale, Geralt can sift through containers, crates, leather bags, treasure chests, dead bodies, and just about anything that could possibly contain something of use. Plants of many varieties can be picked for use in potions and mutagen decoctions. Defeated enemies can be looted, or may leave behind bags that can be looted.

However, be careful about where you are when you're "procuring" supplies. Breaking into someone's home to "borrow" expensive plates and cutlery to fence to a merchant will be seen as theft by witnesses, and whatever counts as law enforcement in the area may be inclined to respond with violence, even if that means standing up to a Witcher.

LOOTING: HOW EQUIPMENT LOOT IS AWARDED

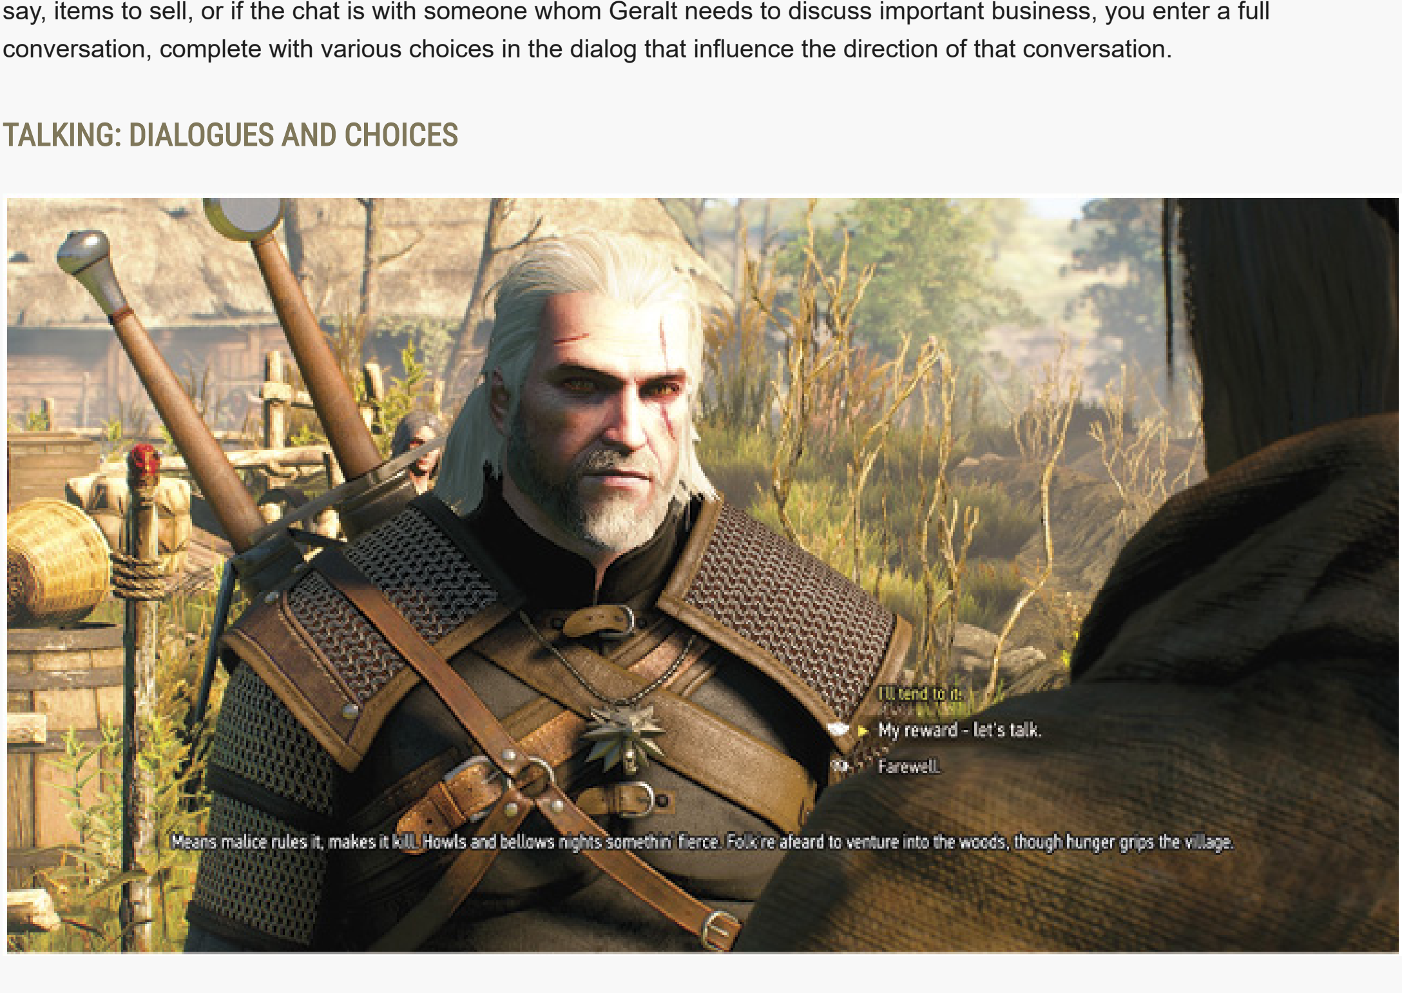


Outside of very specific items, almost all loot from any source (bags, chests, drawers, et al) is generated at random. However, the quality of the loot is usually dependent on the location you're searching. For example, you're much more likely to find Pig Hide or Dwarven Spirit in a farmer's bucket, compared to a Relic silver sword.

All possible lootable objects have a hidden value, and if the loot container is of high value, the better the chances are that you will receive powerful items and high-quality crafting and alchemy materials. With this in mind, this guide has attempted to map as many of the highest quality loot containers, and detailed them as "Good," "Better," and "Relic" chests, and listed them throughout the Atlas.

The other factor affecting loot is Geralt's level. If Geralt finds a weapon or piece of armor in a chest, it is usually set around his level (though can occasionally be lower or higher). The only exceptions to this are pieces of loot that have a fixed level regardless of Geralt's. The level a piece of armor or a weapon can be equipped at greatly influences its stats, so always be on the look out for stronger pieces of equipment as you travel through the world.

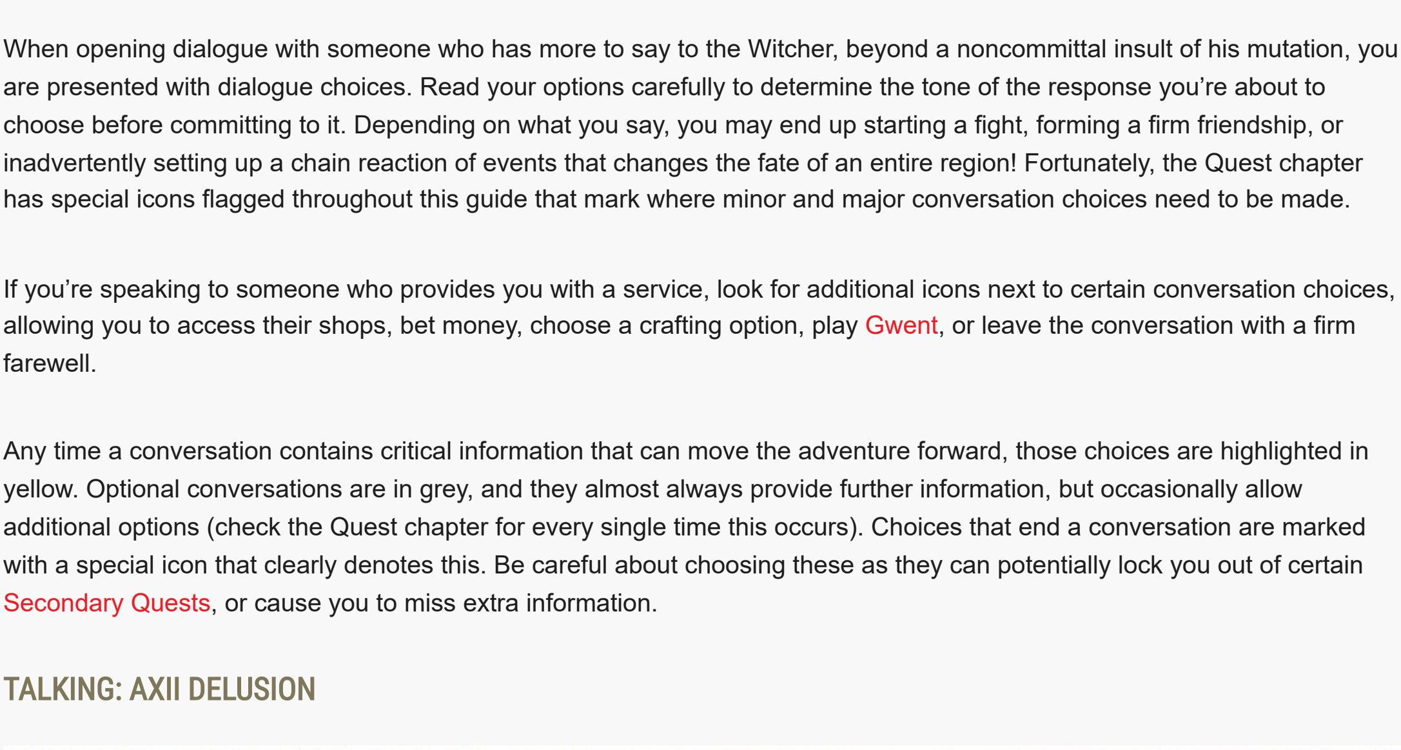
TALKING: BEGINNING CONVERSATIONS



Looking for a woman...
Show me what you got.
Pretty busy place.
There a contract on the griffin?
Master witchers... food and drink on the house. What can I get you?

It's worth at least talking to everyone you meet along your adventures, if only to find out what they have to say before you put the sword to them. Less blood-thirsty types also use conversations to gain additional knowledge, and even play games of Gwent. You can walk up to any individual who isn't already spoiling for a fight and try to speak with them. If they have more to say, items to sell, or if the chat is with someone whom Geralt needs to discuss important business, you enter a full conversation, complete with various choices in the dialog that influence the direction of that conversation.

TALKING: DIALOGUES AND CHOICES



I'll tend to it.
My reward - let's talk.
Farewell.
Means malice rules it, makes it kill. Howls and bellows nights somethin' fierce. Folk're afeard to venture into the woods, though hunger grips the village.

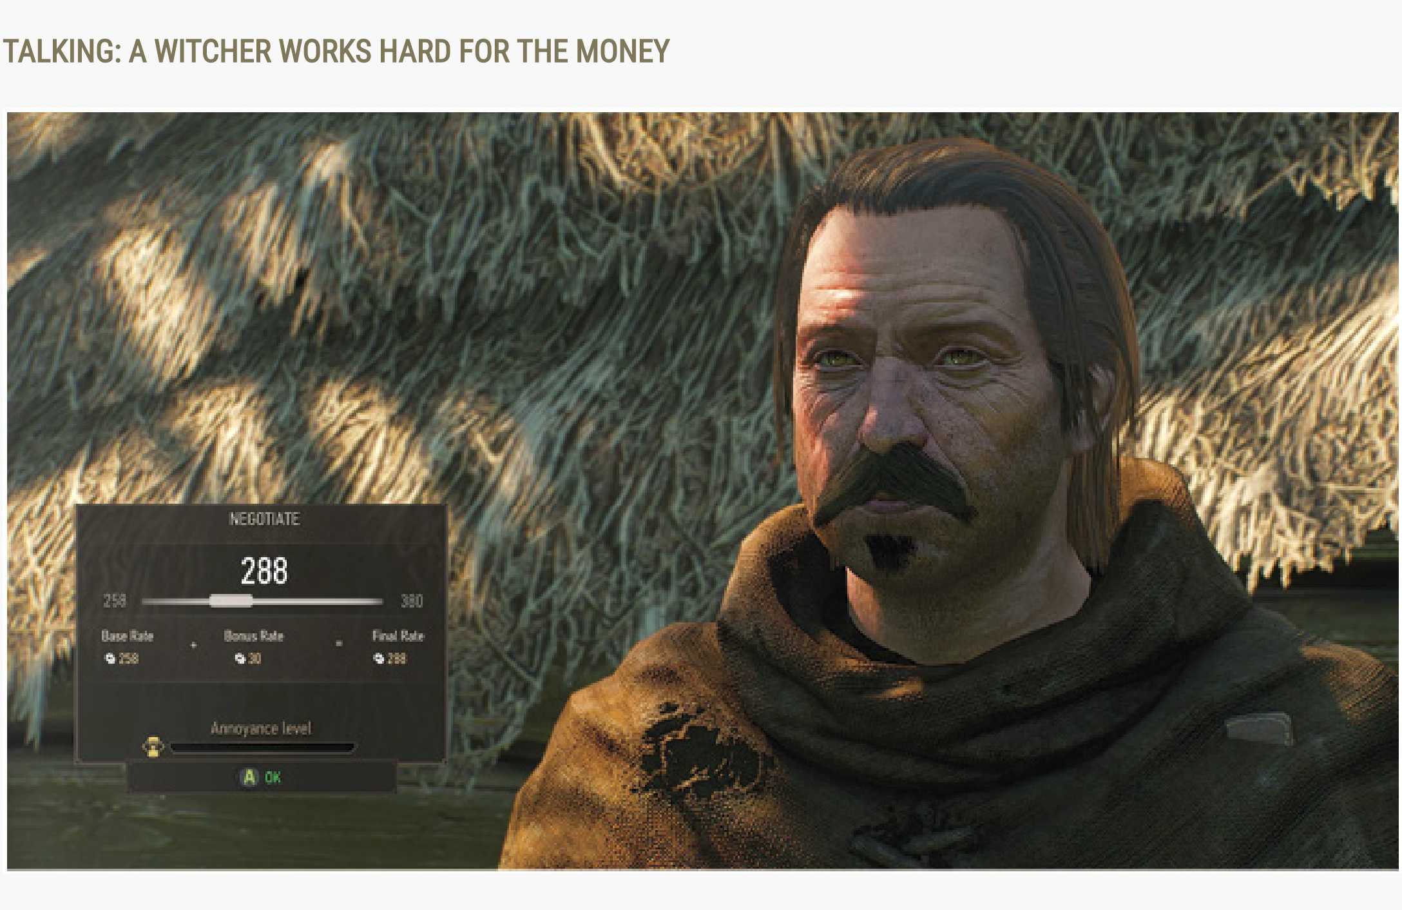
Oftentimes Geralt must use words, and the occasional Axii Delusion Sign, to coerce people to provide the information or items he needs.

When opening dialogue with someone who has more to say to the Witcher, beyond a noncommittal insult of his mutation, you are presented with dialogue choices. Read your options carefully to determine the tone of the response you're about to choose before committing to it. Depending on what you say, you may end up starting a fight, forming a firm friendship, or inadvertently setting up a chain reaction of events that changes the fate of an entire region! Fortunately, the Quest chapter has special icons flagged throughout this guide that mark where minor and major conversation choices need to be made.

If you're speaking to someone who provides you with a service, look for additional icons next to certain conversation choices, allowing you to access their shops, bet money, choose a crafting option, play Gwent, or leave the conversation with a firm farewell.

Any time a conversation contains critical information that can move the adventure forward, those choices are highlighted in yellow. Optional conversations are in grey, and they almost always provide further information, but occasionally allow additional options (check the Quest chapter for every single time this occurs). Choices that end a conversation are marked with a special icon that clearly denotes this. Be careful about choosing these as they can potentially lock you out of certain Secondary Quests, or cause you to miss extra information.

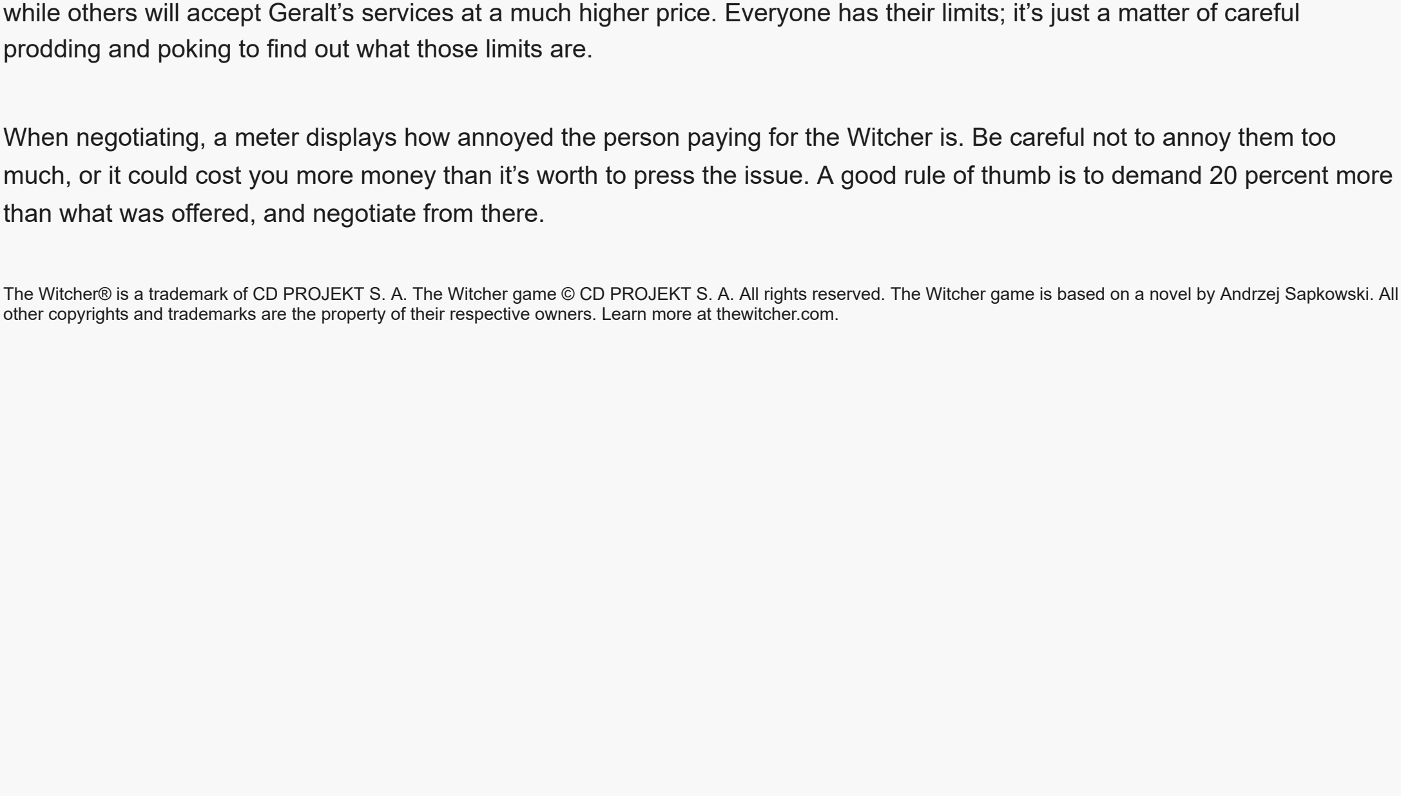
TALKING: AXII DELUSION



Raven-haired woman dressed in black and white. Seen her? Talk.

Occasionally, Geralt can choose to use the Axii Delusion ability to muddle the mind of the individual to whom he's speaking. This can prevent fights from starting, or allow you to convince someone to do something they otherwise would refuse to do. This ability does require you to spend points in Delusion on the Signs Character Ability tree in order to "convince" people who possess resistance to suggestion. The Quest chapter shows each time a conversation choice has an option for the Axii Delusion, and the level needed, so be sure to check there.

TALKING: A WITCHER WORKS HARD FOR THE MONEY



Witcher Contracts found on Notice Boards often start in earnest by finding the issuer of the request and speaking to them. Sometimes they offer a reward that Geralt may not feel the need to debate. Other times, you are given the opportunity to haggle, and squeeze more out of the deal. This takes a bit of finesse. Some people react poorly to demands for more money, while others will accept Geralt's services at a much higher price. Everyone has their limits; it's just a matter of careful prodding and poking to find out what those limits are.

When negotiating, a meter displays how annoyed the person paying for the Witcher is. Be careful not to annoy them too much, or it could cost you more money than it's worth to press the issue. A good rule of thumb is to demand 20 percent more than what was offered, and negotiate from there.

Controls

Geralt's search for Ciri and the Wild Hunt takes him across plains, and through forests, castles, and mountains. He travels by foot, on horseback, and even by boat. He also needs to fight monsters, men, and men who would be monsters if the choice was theirs. Learn how to control Geralt to the fullest, so you're not fumbling with the controls when a pack of Drowners swarms you.

Basic Alchemy

The fine art of Alchemy is the action of combining different substances to create a variety of helpful items, such as Bombs, Sword Oils, Potions, and Decoctions. Mixing herbs, substances, minerals, and rare mutagens extracted from monsters, alchemy is a requirement for those who wish to be fully prepared for combat.

ALCHEMY ABILITIES: A MUST FOR THE COMPETENT CHEMIST

Make sure you read the Training section on Abilities, as one of the ability branches involves Alchemy, and there are total of 25 different abilities (with level ranks for each) you can expend points on to make your brewing much more potent!

FINDING ALCHEMY FORMULAE

Many potions, oils, and bombs you can craft have a base formula that allows you to create the most basic form of that item. As you travel through the world and meet new merchants or find various loot caches, you can discover formulae that enhance the strength of your craft. A full list of vendors who sell Alchemy Formulae can be found in the Merchants Appendix.

The easiest way to quickly accrue Alchemic Formulae is to pay an Alchemist or Herbalist a visit; like this diminutive chap here.

EXAMPLE: THE DEVIL'S PUFFBALL (PART 1)

You've taken an interest in bombs. In particular, you're craving the formula for "Devil's Puffball" (as you want to lob poison bombs at Bandits). So you pay a halfling herbalist a visit. After perusing his shop, you come across a "Manuscript Page: Devil's Puffball." Though it's going to cost 248 crowns, you now have the ability to craft this bomb whenever you like, providing you have the ingredients. Remember, you could have discovered this formula by looting random chests, too.

CRAFTING ALCHEMY FORMULAE

Once you have an Alchemy Formula in your possession, whether you're at an Alchemist or Herbalist shop or not, you can set about crafting the formula itself. These "recipes" are listed in your Alchemy Menu; scroll down to the item you wish to craft, check you have the various necessary ingredients, and then craft it. Simple! Then, if the item is to be used by you in combat (such as a potion, oil, or bomb for example), you can place it in your Inventory (so it is carried), or your Consumables, Bombs, or Pockets (where it can easily be accessed).

EXAMPLE: THE DEVIL'S PUFFBALL (PART 2)

With the formula for this bomb in your Alchemy menu, you check the necessary ingredients to make this explosive: Saltpeter (1 unit) and Sewant Mushrooms (2 units). These ingredients make one set of three bombs. The halfling has both ingredients for sale; both the Saltpeter (10 units at 25 crowns each, enabling you to make up to ten sets of bombs) and the Sewant Mushrooms (5 units at 10 crowns each, enabling you to make up to two sets of bombs as each bomb set needs two units).

Alternatively, you could have trekked across the landscape searching for Sewant Mushrooms. Saltpeter is a Mineral, and can only be purchased from Herbalists (or randomly found).

MASTER ALCHEMY FORMULAE

The ultimate in Alchemy is obtaining a variety of rare herbs and ingredients, and collecting all the most potent of formulae, so you can craft the very best potions, bombs, and oils. These formulae can be found by exploring the different Points of Interest and Alchemy shops in the world.

EXAMPLE: THE DEVIL'S PUFFBALL (PART 3)

Craving the most potent Puffball of all, and having already created an Enhanced Devil's Puffball during your adventures, you make the journey to Ard Skellig, pay your dues by completing all the tasks the old druid Gremist has for you, before finally accessing his shop. Sure enough, the "Manuscript Page: Superior Devil's Puffball" is here! Though it's not quite a steal at 549 crowns, the formula is yours. Yes!

EXAMPLE: THE DEVIL'S PUFFBALL (PART 4)

Wait a moment though; it seems the Superior Devi's Puffball requires a great deal more ingredients than the normal and enhanced versions! You need: Endrega Heart (2), Alchemists' Powder (1), Sewant Mushrooms (2), Ginatia Petals (2), Enhanced Devil's Puffball (1), Calcium Equum (2), and Rebis (1).

Gremist has the Alchemists' Powder (5 units at 46 crowns each), the Ginatia Petals (4 units at 8 crowns each), and the Calcium Equum (8 units at 30 crowns each). You bring the Enhanced Devil's Puffball and the Sewant Mushrooms from your previous scavenging.

This just leaves Rebis. What is Rebis? It is a Substance used in alchemy. Though this means more searching for ingredients to make Rebis, the Alchemy Formula itself can be bought from Gremist for around 75 crowns.

BEST PRACTICES FOR ALCHEMY

Veteran Witchers have graciously provided a list of recommended tactics for making the most of Alchemy.

Craft early. Craft often. As soon as you can brew formulae, do so. Did you loot a new formula? Then check your Alchemy Menu to see if you can craft it right away. If not, keep those needed ingredients fresh in your mind so you can add the alchemy item to your inventory as soon as possible.

Purchase formulae in shops as you find them and add those potions, oils, and bombs to your arsenal. You quickly gain more advantages over the beasts and abominations during your adventures.

Geralt's potion supply is automatically restocked when you Meditate, as long as you have hard alcohol in your inventory. Keep a supply of alcohol in your inventory at all times!

Many herbs prefer to grow in certain areas of the world or in particular climates. On rocks, in caves, in shallow water, deep water, or in cultivated terrain that farmer's harvest in the villages Geralt comes across. Learn them and you find what you need in no time.

Herbs and ingredients have no impact on your carried weight, so don't hesitate to snatch up all of the herbs in the wild you can find. Once you've amassed a large supply, you can worry far less about collecting herbs in the later stages of the adventure.

If you're having a difficult time finding ingredients, visit the Alchemist and Herbalist shops and spend some of that extra coin to finish out the ingredients list quickly. This is helpful in even the Prologue quests.

Watch out for monster nests to clear them out and make use of the ingredients they carry. This is also serves as a source of ingredients for the Witcher Gear armor and weapons for crafting those items at blacksmiths.

Know your foe. The Bestiary is your best friend. All of the critical information on the items that work against the hordes of creatures you face is at your personal disposal. Also, learn the creature categories or "families" (for example: necrophages, relicts, elementals, etc.). When you have the chance to spot an enemy at a distance and you know what you're up against, you can pull up your inventory to apply the oils, down the potions, and slot the bombs that help you quickly dispatch the dark denizens before you. If it's not a specific monster you've encountered before, but you think you know what type it is, apply the oil for that enemy type and you'll conquer them in a flash.

If you enter a combat encounter and your sword doesn't have the oil that would help you against your enemies, don't forget to use your potions and bombs. They may be all you need to make quick work of the enemy and disable their most devastating attacks.

If you know you're going to facing large groups of humans, slather some Hanged Man's Venom on your steel sword. These are the most common enemies you face during quests inside the city walls of Novigrad, so it's a safe bet to keep this oil active as often as possible when you're not roaming the wilderness.

Keep a large stock of alcohol bases and Meditate as often as you feel the need to. Remember that Meditation can end any potion buffs you have active due to the passage of time while meditating.

Slot Swallow potions and save the rest. If you keep Swallow and some food handy in combat (such as Hattori's delicious Dumplings, you can always open your inventory to drink the other potions you need less often.

Getting weighed down by dozens of swords after slaughtering a batch of heartless witch hunters? Toss back a fiend decoction to grant you a bonus against your burden and hit some shops to offload for coin.

Locate the Corvo Bianco Vineyard in Toussaint, and after receiving the deed from the Duchess, improve the manor and gardens, uncovering an Alchemy lab, and use the table inside to add one additional charge to your potions (and bombs).

Potions, Bombs, And Oils

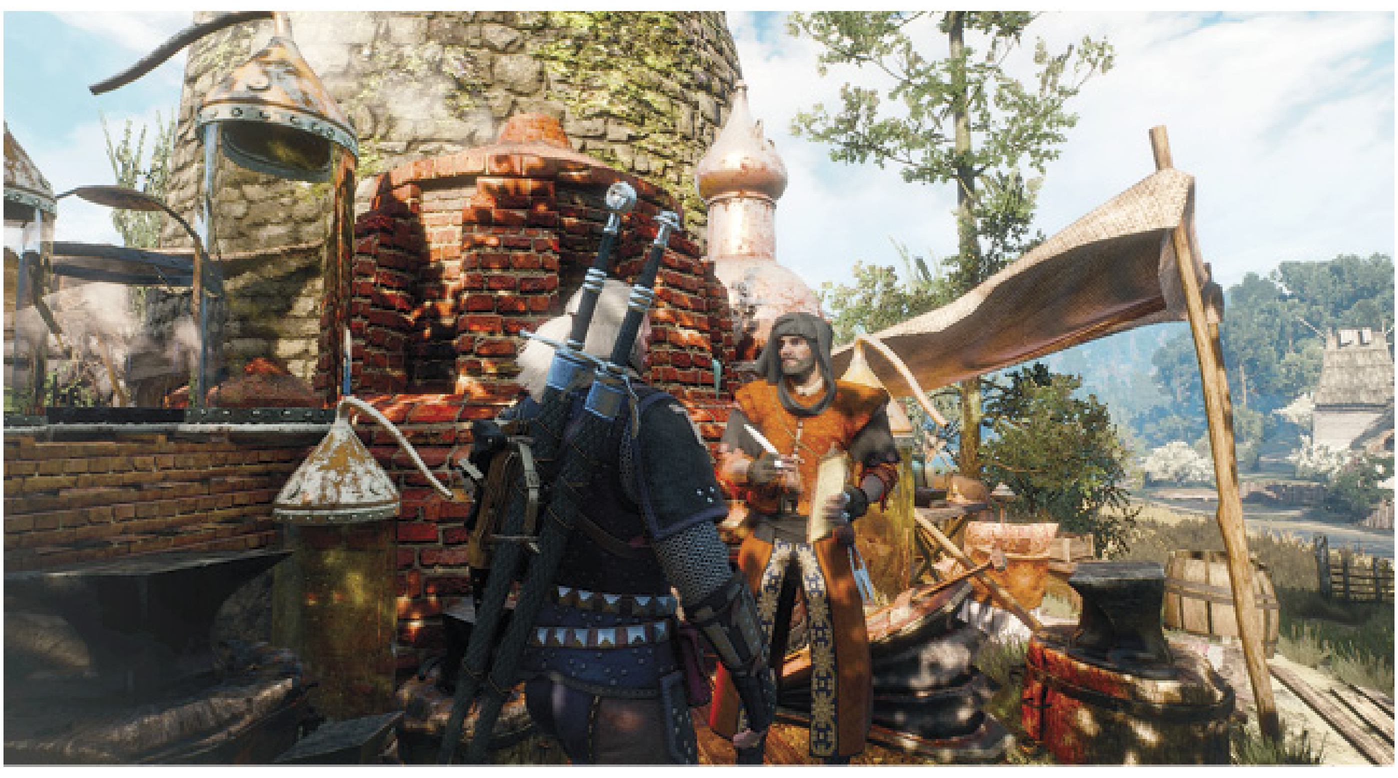
A Witcher is expected to make use of the land to survive. Herbs, minerals, and other alchemical ingredients found in the field or bought from Herbalists are among the many materials used to brew potions, sword oils, or act as the catalysts to bombs. Other materials, like rare metals or strips of cured leather, can be refined and used to craft new weapons and armor that far exceed the quality of worn items looted from dead foes.

To craft items or perform alchemy, Geralt must first possess crafting diagrams and alchemy formulae. These can be found randomly in the field by looting containers, or purchased from specialized vendors. Diagrams for ancient relics, including Witcher Schools Gear, are found during lengthy Scavenger Hunt quests to locate the base diagrams for that equipment. Advanced diagrams that enhance this gear involve additional lengthy searching with few clues. Fortunately, the Scavenger Hunt Quests show you the way.

Training

The Ofieri Runewright

A most accomplished crafter, the Ofieri Runewright, has graced the Northern Realms (and in particular the Upper Mill signpost area of northeast Gustfields territory in Novigrad). Unfortunately, the Runewright has lost his tools, and it is up to you to provide him with new ones. This is quite an expensive endeavor, but well worth the effort.



Once you've financed this Ofieri's operations in the Northern Realms, he becomes the ultimate Armorer, Blacksmith, and crafter!

THE WORLD'S NEVER-ENDING CREATION BE PRAISED!

Runewords and Glyphwords are divided in three tiers. Higher tier Runewords are more potent than ones from lower tier, but to gain access to these tiers, you have to fund better tools by providing gold to the Runewright, as part of Hearts of Stone: Secondary Quest: Enchanting. The total outlay to your funds is as follows:

- 5,000 crowns for Tier 1 (Amateur) Runewords and Glyphwords.
- 10,000 crowns for Tier 2 (Journeyman) Runewords and Glyphwords.
- 15,000 crowns for Tier 3 (Master) Runewords and Glyphwords.

Enchanting: When unlocked, Runewords can be placed only on swords with three available sockets for Runestones. Glyphwords can be placed only on Armor (torso, boots, trousers, and gloves) with three available sockets for Glyphs: Each Glyphword or Runeword takes up three entire sockets.

Add Sockets: However, the Runewright can (for a fee) add new sockets on items. The fee depends on the item quality. This allows any piece of armor or weapon to have Runewords or Glyphwords added. However, this has another effect; it allows lower-quality or lower-level equipment to be imbued with up to three Glyphs or Runestones, allowing you to augment your gear much earlier. Don't forget to do this!

ADDING RUNEWORDS AND GLYPHWORDS

To add a Glyphword or Runeword, you must have collected the requisite Glyphs or Runestones and have them in your Inventory. If an item already has enchantments, adding a Glyphword or Runeword removes all of the Runestones or Glyphs in an item; they are lost.

Just like Glyphs and Runestones, Glyphwords and Runewords can be removed from an item, but only by the Runewright. When removed, it leaves three empty sockets in the item.

The Runewright also sells a large number of Glyphs and Runestones, so it not necessary to scour the Northern Realms looking for them. Of course, they cost quite a number of crowns. The Runewright also sells schematics for these runes so you can craft them by yourself. The offer increases and upgrades the merchant.

This Runewright is also an accomplished Armorer and Blacksmith. Providing you fund his operations, he can craft everything either smith can, but the level of his proficiency depends on the upgrade level (during the quest):

- Tier 1 – Amateur Runewright
- Tier 2 – Journeyman Runewright
- Tier 3 - Master Runewright

EXAMPLE: FUNDING THE OFIERI RUNEWRIGHT

After befriending the Ofieri Runewright, you agree to fund his cause. After spending some considerable crowns (5,000), he can craft Amateur level Armor and Weapons, as well as Tier 1 Glyphwords and Runewords. He can also drill sockets into any weapon or armor, so utilize that skill as early as possible.

With another infusion of 10,000 crowns (15,000 total), Journeyman Armor and Weapons, as well as Tier 2 Glyphwords and Runewords, can be crafted.

With a final emptying of your coffers, you drop another 15,000 crowns (30,000 total!), and the Ofieri Runewright essentially becomes your go-to Armorer, Blacksmith, and crafting professional! Master level Armor and Weapons, as well as Tier 3 Glyphwords and Runewards, are all yours!

EXAMPLE GLYPHWORD: HEFT

Having a set of Feline Armor (Light), but choosing the Character Ability "Bear School Techniques" (each piece of heavy armor increases maximum Vitality by 5% and strong attack damage by 5%), enchanting Feline Armor with Heft enables you to take advantage of both the Bear School Techniques Ability, and a character archetype that usually favors strong attacks.

EXAMPLE RUNEWORD: SEVERANCE

After learning about the Whirl and Rend combat Abilities, this Runeword was embedded into your favorite sword. Now your range for both these attacks is increased by 1.1 and 1.9 yards respectively! Geralt is now a whirling dervish of death!

Upgrades (Glyphs And Runestones)

Glyphs and Runestones are “Upgrades” for your Armor and Weapons respectively.

GLYPHS

By placing a Glyph on a socketed piece of armor, a Witcher can enchant the item with a passive bonus that augments existing Sign abilities. Lesser Glyphs may only provide relatively weak bonuses, but can be combined with other lesser Glyphs to create Greater Glyphs with significant boosts to Geralt’s armor potential.

WITCHER GEAR
Required Level 34
8.51 100 % 2088

Make sure you add additional intensity to your favorite Signs by imbuing all your armor with Glyphs.

In order to enchant a piece of armor, a Glyph of Infusion must be prepared first. The base component to all armor enchantments, Glyphs of Infusion can be found by looting containers and corpses. Additionally, crafters like the blacksmith and armorer sells Glyphs of Infusion in their shop. For those who wish to extensively upgrade multiple pieces of gear, it is recommended you purchase the diagram for crafting Glyphs of Infusion as soon as possible.

Lesser Glyphs are special enchantments you can place into armor upgrade slots in order to receive passive bonuses to Sign abilities. They may be found in containers, nests and the corpses of monsters. Additionally, these enchantments can be found in shops in later stages of the game. The most economical option is to learn the basic techniques and materials needed to craft your own glyphs as needed.

Students of advanced crafting techniques may learn greater enchantments that can be used to combine multiple lesser Glyphs into a single Greater Glyph. This is an excellent way to augment your equipment while keeping additional upgrade slots open for other enchantments. Be warned! Once an enchantment is in place, it is impossible to remove without destroying the item.

RUNESTONES

Runestones can be used to enhance a socketed steel or silver sword with a permanent enchantment that increases weapon damage, adds persistent conditions to enemies, and augments spell power. Once a runestone has been embedded, it cannot be removed without destroying the weapon, and without the help of a smith. Runestones can be crafted from diagrams, or purchased from merchants. Crafting lesser and greater Runestones helps reduce the cost of upgrading, but requires the assistance of higher-level smiths that may be difficult to find early in your adventure.

For a complete list of Runestones and their effects, consult A Witcher’s Tools in your free eGuide.

EXAMPLE: THE ULTIMATE FELINE ARMOR

In your quest to become the most agile Witcher of all, you’ve focused on the Quen sign to help you during combat. Late into your adventure, you manage to obtain all the Grandmaster-level Feline Armor diagrams during a Blood and Wine Scavenger Hunt, bring them to Lazare Lafargue in Beauclair, and have him build you an ultimate set of Feline Armor. But is it?

No! Don’t forget that the Feline Armor has three sockets, and the Boots, Trousers, and Gauntlets each have two sockets: That’s a total of nine sockets! Remember that lower quality Feline armor doesn’t have as many total sockets:

Feline Armor	Number of Sockets
Feline Armor	1
Feline Boots	0
Feline Trousers	0
Feline Gauntlets	0
Feline Armor Total	1
Enhanced Feline Armor	2
Enhanced Feline Boots	0
Enhanced Feline Trousers	1
Enhanced Feline Gauntlets	0
Enhanced Feline Armor Total	3
Superior Feline Armor	3
Superior Feline Boots	1
Superior Feline Trousers	2
Superior Feline Gauntlets	1
Superior Feline Armor Total	7
Mastercrafted Feline Armor	3
Mastercrafted Feline Boots	1
Mastercrafted Feline Trousers	2
Mastercrafted Feline Gauntlets	1
Mastercrafted Feline Armor Total	7
Grandmaster Feline Armor	3
Grandmaster Feline Boots	2
Grandmaster Feline Trousers	2
Grandmaster Feline Gauntlets	2
Grandmaster Feline Armor Total	9

EXAMPLE: THE ULTIMATE FELINE ARMOR, BUT EARLIER!

Remember that the Ofieri Runewright, once you complete his series of quests, offers you the opportunity to add Sockets to equipment that normally has fewer or no sockets. Usually, this would be to insert Runes into them, but newly-created sockets can take Glyphs too. Now you can create up to seven sockets, and up to +70% Sign Intensity to your regular or Enhanced Feline armor too. Or many other armor types for that matter!

EXAMPLE: THE ULTIMATE FELINE STEEL SWORD

After some considerable adventuring, and a visit to Lazare Lafargue after the conclusion of a long Scavenger Hunt, you finally possess a Grandmaster Feline Steel Sword. Impressive! Furthermore, it has a +15% chance to cause bleeding after each strike. The only way to make this even more potent, is to add three Greater Devana Runestones, each giving you an additional +5% chance to cause bleeding. After visiting Eibhear Hattori, Trentin, the Ofieri Runewright, or Lazare Lafargue again (the only Blacksmiths who can craft Greater Runestones), you have any of them craft three Devana Runestones. This raises your Feline Steel Sword’s chance to cause bleeding to +30%! Amazing!

EXAMPLE: THE ULTIMATE FELINE STEEL SWORD, BUT EARLIER!

Remember that the Ofieri Runewright, once you complete his series of quests, offers you the opportunity to add Sockets to equipment that normally has fewer or no sockets. Usually, this would be to insert Runes into them, but newly-created sockets can take Runestones too. Now you can create up to three sockets for any of your Feline Steel Swords (or any other sword for that matter), enabling you to add up to three Runestones to a weapon that normally only has one or two available slots!

GREATER GLYPHS AND RUNESTONES

Need to find Greater Glyphs and Runestones in a hurry? Then visit the Master Armorers and the Master Blacksmiths and purchase from them, after you complete their associated quests (if necessary).

If you wish to know which Merchants have Glyphs and Runestones for sale, consult the “Upgrades” column in the Merchants Appendix.

Alchemic Creations

The following inventory items are created using Alchemy (though some can be purchased from vendors too, if you wish to expend more crowns instead of brewing your own). Remember that base materials, formulae, and recipes may all be needed in order to create the following items.

ALCHEMY SUBSTANCES: MUTAGENS

As you kill monsters, there's a chance that a Mutagen will be found amongst the loot you can scavenge. There are different types of Mutagens—some that are exclusive to the beast slain and others that are relatively common amongst a variety of monsters.

Mutagens are used in two separate ways. The first is in connection with your Character Abilities. By placing a Mutagen in the slot next to your activated Character Abilities, you gain a statistical bonus.

Once you've killed a fearsome or disgusting monster, inspect their innards for a possible mutagen to add to your collection.

The ability trees are color themed; red, blue, green, and yellow. These colors stand for Combat, Signs, Alchemy, and General Abilities respectively. This also holds true with Mutagens, which can be found in red, blue, and green. If you connect a mutagen to activated abilities of the same color, the bonus provided by the Mutagen increases by 100 percent for each ability matching that Mutagen's color. Geralt can gain thousands of points of Vitality and strike that much harder with his swords. His Signs will see massive intensity boosts. The second use of Mutagens comes with crafting decoctions, covered below.

EXAMPLE: GREATER BLUE MUTAGEN CREATION

Enter your Alchemy menu, and look in the "Alchemy Substances" area for a list of all the Mutagens you can create. In the case of mutagens, these are "Mutagens" (created from a number of "Lesser Mutagens") and "Greater Mutagens" (created from a number of "Mutagens). You're looking for a +10% Sign Intensity bonus for using a Greater Blue mutagen in your Mutagen Slot (Character Menu), so you concoct the following plan:

You kill a variety of monsters, and amass a large number of Lesser Mutagens from their corpses. This took a while, so you want to make the most of them! In your Alchemy Menu, you select "Blue Mutagen." It requires "Lesser Blue Mutagen (4)" to create. Fortunately, you have 13 Lesser Blue Mutagens, so you craft a total of three "Blue Mutagens" and have one Lesser Blue Mutagen left.

Now you select "Greater Blue Mutagen." It requires "Blue Mutagen (3.)" That's handy; you just created three of those from your Lesser Blue Mutagens! So you combine the three Blue Mutagens, create one Greater Blue Mutagens, then place it in your Character Menu, and link Sign Abilities to it to further boost your Sign-casting prowess!

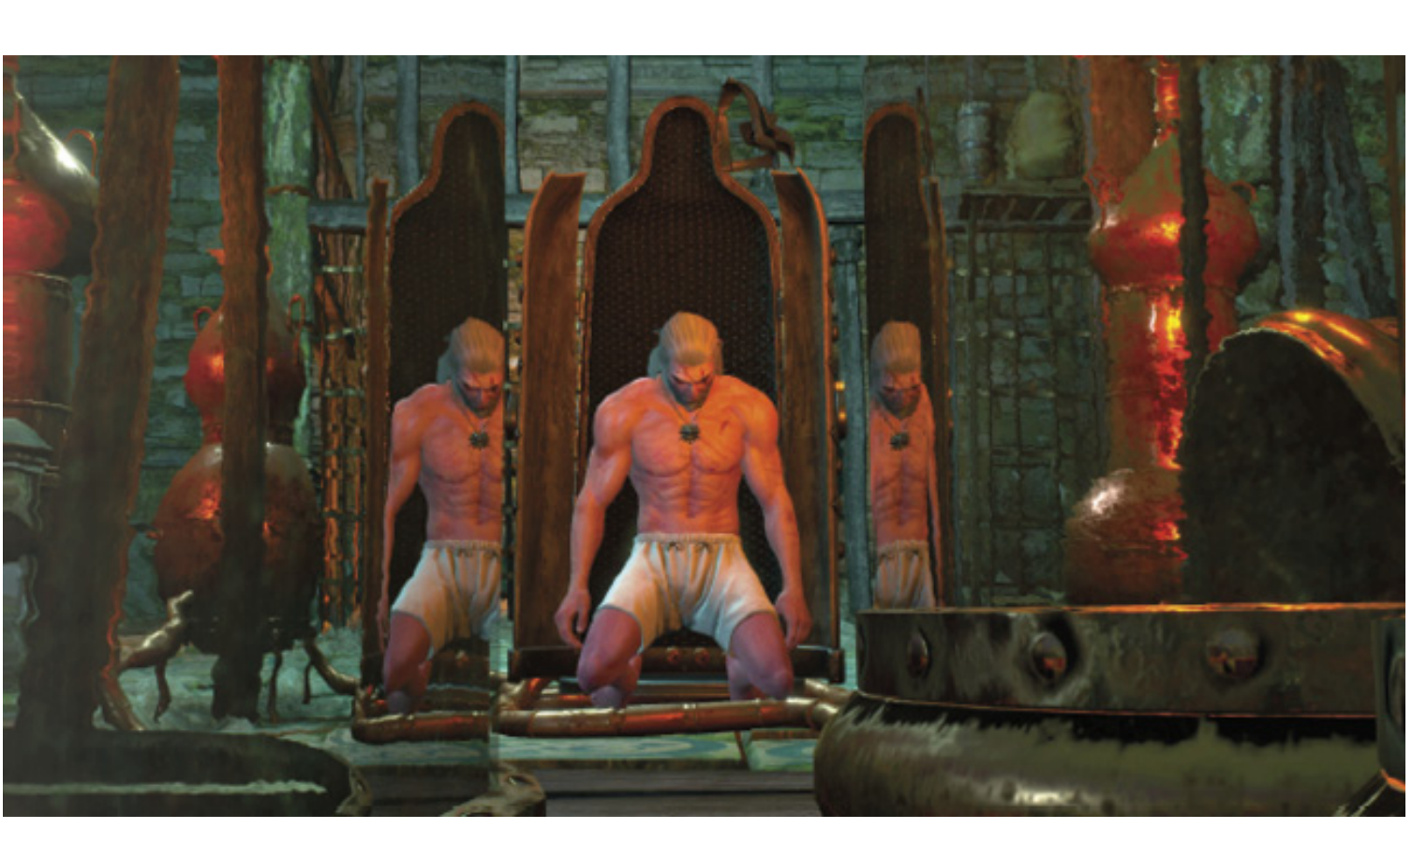
CONTRACT WORK FOR SPECIAL MUTAGENS

Certain beasts that become the target of Witcher Contracts carry unique Mutagens with increased potency over those found on lesser monsters.

MUTAGENS FOR MUTATIONS

If you are adventuring in Toussaint, be sure to complete Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: Turn and Face the Strange. Finding Professor Moreau's mutation laboratory allows you to unlock the Mutations menu. Now, Mutagens are "spent" like Ability points to unlock the most potent mutations of all!

Now Mutagens are able to be created (and their color changed) by locating (or purchasing) diagram recipes scattered throughout this realm. Use the Alchemy > Alchemy Substances menu, and begin to create Mutagens yourself instead of relying on finding them on the corpses of monsters. You are also encouraged to improve the Corvo Bianco Vineyard, as part of Blood and Wine: No Place Like Home, as an improved greenhouse allows herbs to be grown that are essential ingredients to creating mutagens.



In a hidden elven labyrinth deep below the waters of the Sansretour River in Toussaint, lies the laboratory of Professor Moreau. Step into this contraption to trigger the most potent Mutations of all!

ALCOHOL

Alchohest

Dwarven Spirit

White Gull

Alcoholic beverages can be found in every tavern, inn, and watering hole across the Northern Realms, and purchased from Innkeeps there. Visit the Duchy of Toussaint for a masterclass in wine-making. Some of the alcohol you can drink is simply for sustenance. Most allows you to recover from combat during a Meditation (so keep a plentiful supply). But brew Alcohol for alchemic purposes primarily when you require an ingredient for another Alchemic substance, as the following example illustrates:

EXAMPLE: DWARVEN SPIRTS AND BLIZZARD

You want to swig down a Blizzard potion to improve your reflexes and prolong your reaction time, the next occasion you're in combat. You have some of the necessary ingredients to craft Blizzard (White Myrtle Petals (5) and Golem's Heart (1)), but you're missing the Dwarven Spirit (1). Fortunately, you've found the Recipe for Dwarven Spirit, meaning you don't need to visit a merchant to buy some.

Instead, you scour the land for the following: Empty Bottle (1); there's a Merchant in Novigrad specializing in them. Mahakaman Spirit (2), and White Myrtle Petals (1). Combine them together, and you can crank out as many Dwarven Spirits as you need; particularly helpful as this is the base for a large number of Potions.

HARD ALCOHOL: POTION REPLENISHING

It is difficult to overstate how important carrying a large amount of hard alcohol is to your well-being, as this automatically replenishes any potions you may have used when you Meditate. Therefore, it is wise to keep a large collection of the alcohol you can craft (in the Alchemy menu) for just such occasions.

BOMBS

One of the key tools of the Witcher trade is the arsenal of bombs they can craft to suit their needs. Various materials go into making a bomb, and they have a wide range of possible effects that can be used to further stack a battle in their favor. You can option a battle from afar by lobbing a bomb at an unsuspecting foe, or quickly flick one out at a targeted opponent during a heated melee.

Monster nests encountered in the world require specific bombs to completely destroy them. So, if you intend to make a particular area safe to travel through or harvest materials within, make sure you always carry a supply of these explosives. You can set two bomb types in your Inventory menu as "Quick Access" items in the "Bombs" section. If necessary, you can switch out what bombs you have quick access to in the middle of combat as well. As with potions and oils, bombs can be upgraded beyond their initial crafted level to enhanced and superior versions.

A USEFUL BRACE OF BOMBS

Bombs are highly specialized weapons that can cause a variety of effects in battle. It helps to craft bombs as soon as possible, especially the higher ranking versions (Enhanced and Superior), so you are prepared for any situation that requires an explosive solution.

Dancing Star: If you're looking for a bomb with a spectacular explosion resulting in impressive damage to any foes within the blast radius, and additional burning to the already-wounded enemy, choose to craft this bomb. Though it doesn't supersede your more ferocious Igni attacks, this is excellent for long-range blazes.

Devil's Puffball: Though the cloud of toxic vapor that this bomb emits when it explodes can poison you (unless you've taken a potion to negate the effects), it is meant for long-range damage infliction: lob this at a cluster of bandits in areas where you can easily move around the poison cloud. Or, choose to lob one into confined areas you won't immediately venture down, but areas with foes who can choke to death on the fumes.

Dimeritium: If you're facing monsters that are known as "Elementals" in the Glossary (and this guide's Bestiary), this is an excellent choice as it halts any of these monsters' ranged attacks (such as a Gargoyle's flying ability). Stopping the magical abilities of Elementals isn't something you're likely to attempt frequently, so break out this bomb on these special occasions. However, when you're in Dimeritium's cloud, you cannot cast Signs, so use with caution!

Dragon's Dream: This bomb releases a cloud of highly flammable, poisonous gas into the air. But when ignited by Igni, another bomb, a torch, or even a burning enemy, the resulting detonation can set foes on fire! An upgraded Dragon's Dream can cause enemies it kills to explode, as well! Just beware that the blast can damage you, too.

Grapeshot: This is one of the most useful explosives in a Witcher's arsenal. You can destroy monster nests and deal powerful shrapnel damage to enemies, while also causing some fire damage that can harm enemies weak to it. Though it doesn't harm enemies over time (just in one large explosion), it is incredibly potent. Upgraded Grapeshot bombs can make enemy armor completely irrelevant.

Moon Dust: Monsters that are known to transform, such as Foglets, Specters, and Vampires, cannot use this ability when struck by the silver splinters of a Moon Dust bomb. Monsters that can regenerate can find that ability temporarily disabled. The Superior version of this bomb can stop a foe's regeneration permanently!

Northern Wind: A dangerous piece of alchemy, the Northern Wind bomb freezes enemies within its blast radius, and keeps them in place. If a Witcher improves this bomb, the area of effect grows larger, lasts longer, and enemies struck while frozen suffer greater damage.

Samum: A basic but useful bomb, Samum does not just destroy monster nests; it blinds enemies caught in its explosive radius, giving a Witcher a chance to flank them, and attempt an easy sword strike. Upgraded Samum bombs guarantee a critical strike on a blinded and stunned opponent. Just be careful you don't blind yourself with your own Samum bomb.

DECOCTIONS

These Relic-type potions offer incredible combat benefits that are long-lasting, but come at the expense of high toxicity. Assuming you are crafting White Honey Potions (that clear toxicity) in conjunction with Decoctions, these can make you extremely potent in combat. Remember you can use more than one Decoction at a time. For experienced Witchers, the high toxicity of a decoction, and all the risks that come with it, are outweighed by the benefits.

TOP FIVE DECOCTIONS

Troll Decoction: Constant Vitality regeneration in and out of combat. For Witchers who are expecting multiple grueling battles against many foes.

Ekimmara Decoction: With this decoction, a Witcher restores Vitality with every successful strike against the enemy.

Succubus Decoction: The longer a battle lasts, the harder a Witcher strikes.

Alghoul Decoction: Adrenaline is generated more quickly by a Witcher in combat, but the effect is broken by the first successful enemy attack.

Werewolf Decoction: Running, sprinting, and jumping outside of combat doesn't use Stamina; a perfect brew for Witchers exploring large areas.

OILS

To increase the effectiveness of blades, a Witcher can coat them with special oils. These are tailored to damage specific types of foes. Oils that assist against humans should be applied to steel swords, while any monster-specific oils are applied to your silver swords. There are as many oils as there are families of monsters, and so it falls to a Witcher to be prepared for these eventualities. Crafting oils can be done only outside of combat.

Slather on a weapon-improving oil before every battle, after consulting the Bestiary to pick an oil especially formulated for weakening the foe you're about to face.

Similar to potions, once an oil is crafted, it remains in your inventory. You can find formulae for improved versions of oils, requiring the previous level of the oil and new ingredients. This again follows the standard, enhanced, and superior quality scheme used by potions, bombs, and most other items that can be improved.

Oils do not last indefinitely. Each successful strike on an enemy rubs some of the oil off the blade until eventually there is none left and the effect is no longer applied to the foe. You can reapply the oil by going to your Inventory once again, as long as you have not discarded the oil.

OILS FOR COMMON OR SERIOUS THREATS

With so many monsters plaguing the land, Witchers must be prepared with a wide variety of oils to counter any threat with expediency.

Hanged Man's Venom: Sadly, with war raging across the land, humans are as common a threat to a Witcher as any monster. It never hurts to have this oil ready at all times to quickly dispatch soldiers or roaming groups of bandits. This works against any human and nonhuman (but human-sized) foe, so use this on any Scoia'tael you might face, too!

Necrophage Oil: War leaves behind battlefields strewn with corpses, the perfect feeding grounds for necrophages such as Ghouls, Alghouls, and Rotfiends. This oil gets frequent use for most Witchers.

Specter Oil: Another side effect to war is the high number of victims who died with lingering regrets in this world, or died after terrible violence. These dark and powerful emotions have resulted in great numbers of wraiths haunting the living. Prevent them from haunting you by slapping on the Specter Oil!

Elementa Oil: While elementals are not particularly common, their sturdiness against a Witcher's silver sword makes them incredibly dangerous to fight. Every advantage helps.

Relict Oil: Relicts are as rare as the name suggests, but all creatures that fall under this classification can be considered threats of the highest order. If a hunt demands that you fight a Chort or a Fiend, relict oil is one of the few advantages any Witcher can claim over these monsters.

POTIONS

Highly toxic to most normal humans, potions brewed by Witchers provide a variety of effects that can improve combat, enhance even a Witcher's heightened senses, and restore critical energy before, during, or after a battle. However, even a Witcher is not immune to the dangerous nature of these brews. If Geralt's Toxicity meter reaches critical levels, he begins losing Vitality (a swig of White Honey soon cures this however). All potion effects last for only a short while (especially compared to the even more toxic Decoctions), though the efficacy and duration of potions can be enhanced by investing in the correct Character Abilities.

To brew potions, Geralt needs to know the formulae and have the materials they require. Most alchemy requires plants that can be found and harvested in the field. Other alchemic compounds, such as special powders, monster body parts, and minerals, can be found as loot in chests and bags strewn about the world, or from the corpses of your foes. You may also purchase some of the more rare ingredients from herbalists and alchemists found in or around villages.

Once you've brewed a potion, it remains in your inventory, even when it has been used up. Most potions can be upgraded over the course of the adventure, starting with the basic level formulae, Enhanced level, and finally reaching Superior quality.

You either find or purchase formulae for higher-potent versions of potions. These advanced formulae require already crafting the previous-level version of a particular potion, and a new set of ingredients. Upgrading your potions leaves you with the higher level product (which is always better than the basic level).

Always try to have potions readied that fit your current circumstances: Once a fight begins, you can't tell your enemies to wait a few minutes while you sit cross-legged to play with your herbs. Potions can be used before and during combat from the Inventory screen. You can also set them to be one of your four "Consumables" potions, allowing you to use them in battle. Each potion has a limited number of doses, but can be replenished if you enter Meditation and have enough hard alcohol to use for the replenishment. Geralt automatically does this if he has the necessary supplies, making it important to loot as many spirits as you can while out in the field.

USEFUL EARLY-ADVENTURE POTIONS

Although you start the adventure with little in the way of resources, you quickly expand your knowledge of potion formulae with exploration. Then you must ask yourself which potions you should focus on creating:

Swallow: Vitality naturally regenerates very slowly. Swallow grants high and constant Vitality regeneration. If you're hit, the effects of basic and enhanced Swallow are suspended for two seconds. Superior Swallow does not have this penalty, and its effects are never suspended.

White Raffard's Decoction: This potion immediately restores a portion of your Vitality upon use. Try to craft and maintain one of the three levels of this potion to keep a good stash of emergency healing on hand.

Cat: Witcher eyes see better in the dark naturally, compared to the average human, but even they need a boost. The Cat Potions allows a Witcher to see farther and more clearly in dark spaces. At Superior quality, it even delivers immunity to hypnosis and puts a red glow on enemies to make them easier to see.

Golden Oriole: A Witcher's body naturally resists disease and poison, which makes the poisons that can hurt or kill a Witcher deadly to humans. Golden Oriole grants Witchers temporary immunity to poisons while neutralizing all poisons currently in the bloodstream.

Thunderbolt: Most combat a Witcher faces ends by a Witcher's sword. Thunderbolt enhances Attack Power, and the effect only increases with each jump in potion quality. It's a good general use potion against any threat you can face.

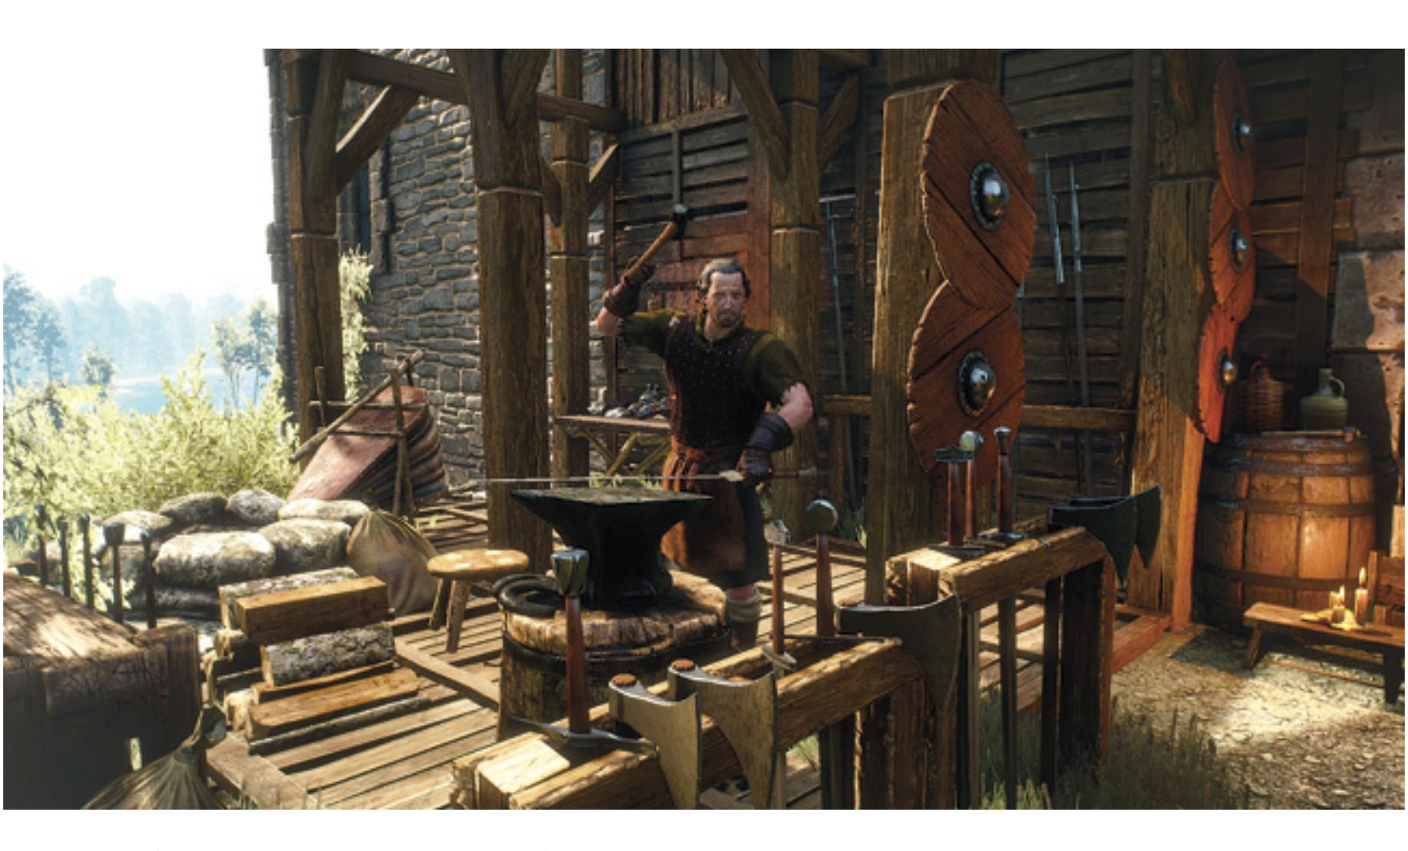
QUEST POTIONS

Also present in your Alchemy Menu are "Quests" potions that are only brewed during specific quests (which are detailed in their specific section of this guide). Don't worry about crafting these potions outside the confines of the quest itself.

Training

Armorers And Blacksmiths

It is important to understand that Geralt himself isn't skilled in the arts of armorsmithing or blacksmithing; he can only repair the equipment he wears or wields (or he can get others to repair equipment for him). For improvements and creating new combat items, he must rely on the numerous smiths scattered across the Northern Realms. There are two kinds of smith, and both offer specialized services. Armorers can craft, sell, and repair armor. Blacksmiths are focused on weapons. Remember though, that both smiths usually have both armor and weapons for sale, and can repair both armor and weaponry. But only Armorers can craft new armor, and only Blacksmiths can craft new weapons.



A swordsmith (known by the general title "Blacksmith") hammers away at an anvil in the second city of Oxenfurt. Visit any of these fine fellows to repair, dismantle, or upgrade your equipment.

Almost all Armorers and Blacksmiths have two levels of talent; either Amateur or Journeyman. Amateur smiths can craft the most basic of items. Journeyman smiths can craft more impressive equipment. In addition, a single Armorer and a single Blacksmith offer skilled services at the fabled Master level (these are listed below): Remember, not all Armorers and Blacksmiths are equal. Many can work on a specific quality of gear and diagrams, so you need to be mindful of a smith's competence level. If they don't have the necessary experience, they won't be able to work with a crafting diagram you found. Also note that if a village is missing a smith, it is likely they have been kidnapped, and are a Person in Distress, caged nearby and waiting to be rescued by you.

CRAFTING: ARMORERS AND BLACKSMITHS

FINDING CRAFTING DIAGRAMS

In order to craft new or improved equipment, you must have a specific Crafting Diagram in your possession. While certain Merchants have these for sale, the majority of the highest-quality diagrams are found during quests, especially the Witcher Gear Scavenger Hunt. Random Crafting Diagrams are also found on corpses and looted from chests. A full list of vendors who sell Crafting Diagrams, and their competence level (Amateur, Journeyman, or Master) can be found in the Merchants Appendix.

EXAMPLE: FELINE ARMOR (PART 1)

You recently undertook the Scavenger Hunt: Cat School Gear, and were lucky enough to discover a Crafting Diagram for Feline Armor. As you're currently over Level 17 (and thus able to wear this armor), and want the armor increase and stamina regeneration this light armor gives you, you decide to visit the armorer in the village of Mulbrydale. This chap was previously a Person in Distress whom you rescued from some riverside bandits southwest of the village. After waiting for him to return to his anvil, you ask him to craft something for you. Unfortunately, even though you rescued him, and he's giving you a good deal on purchases and crafting, he is only an Amateur Armorer. A Journeyman Armorer is needed to craft Feline Armor, and this chap isn't competent enough. Curses!

EXAMPLE: FELINE ARMOR (PART 2)

Leaving Mulbrydale and that low-quality anvil-hammering halfwit, you journey to the City of Novigrad, and visit the open-air fish market just south of Hierarch Square. Nestled in one corner is a Blacksmith's. Even though it's midday, the place is empty. Perhaps the smith has gone for lunch? After you Meditate for two hours, the smith opens back up for business. As you've checked his credentials on the Merchant Appendix of this guide, you know he's a Journeyman Blacksmith, so you ask him to craft you some Feline Armor. Alas, he can't—he's a Blacksmith and only forges weapons! Curses again!

EXAMPLE: FELINE ARMOR (PART 3)

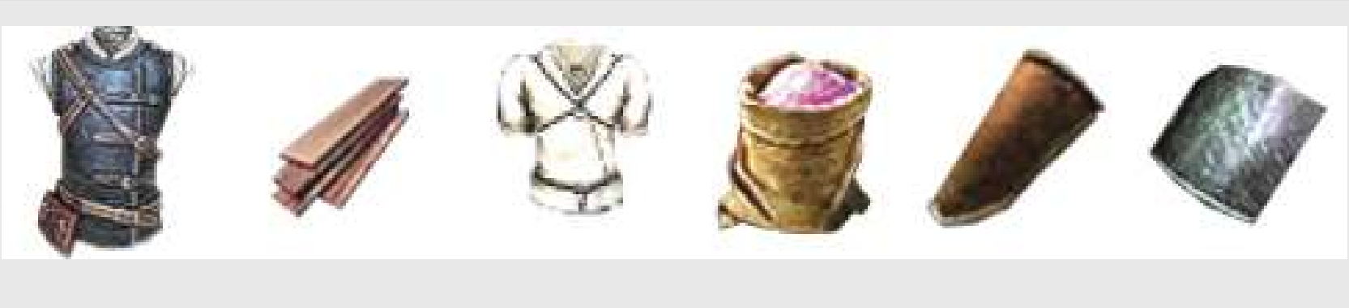
Let's find the correct smith this time! Up the covered walkway from the Vivaldi Bank in Hierarch Square (Novigrad City) is the Armorer you seek; a Journeyman with the correct requirements for crafting the Feline Armor from the diagram. The only problem now? You don't have all the crafting components! Triple curses!

FINDING CRAFTING MATERIALS

In addition to needing a Crafting Diagram to construct a new piece of armor or weapon, a smith also requires a number of material components to work together into the finished product. These materials are scattered throughout the Northern Realms, and are gathered in a number of ways.

- Crafting: Some materials you find are known as Crafting Components, and a smith can craft them into a new material you need for a more intricate item. For example, Assassin's Boots require Cured Leather (1) as one of the materials. Check your Inventory for Leather Scraps you may have acquired on your adventure; four units of Leather Scraps can be crafted into one Cured Leather component. Crafting Components are usually rough metal ores, string and thread, timber, or other base materials.
- Dismantling: One of the options each smith has is to dismantle items you are carrying in your inventory. Simply select the item, pay the smith, and reduce the item to its base components to be subsequently combined into new equipment. Before you do this, check the price you pay for dismantling compared to that of simply purchasing the base components, or simply selling the item instead; it might be a better investment.
- Loot: Pilfer from abandoned houses, dungeons, hostile locations, and even areas where friendly peasants live, as long as the receptacle isn't guarded.
- Purchase: If you have the funds, you can visit any Merchant (but primarily Armorers and Blacksmiths have what you need), look through their wares, and buy the necessary material. This is a much more expensive option.

EXAMPLE: FELINE ARMOR (PART 4)



Feline Armor has five different components to gather before crafting to begin. There's Hardened Timber (2), Shirt (1), Powdered Monster Tissue (1), Hardened Leather (2), and Dark Steel Plate (2).

Hardened Timber (2): You found three units of Timber while searching a lumber mill in the wilds of Velen. You had a spare crossbow, and had the Armorer disassemble it for the fourth Timber component. You purchased two units of Resin from the Armorer. This gives you: Timber (4) and Resin (2). You go to the Crafting Components section of the Armorer's Crafting Menu, and look up "Hardened Timber". Then you craft your components to make Hardened Timber (2).

Shirt (1): You took a shirt of a bandit in a past scuffle. Time to use it!

Powdered Monster Tissue (1): You received Specter Dust from a fight with a Noonwraith. The Armorer is happy to Dismantle it for you, transforming it into the Powdered Monster Tissue you need.

Hardened Leather (2): You've picked up some Horse Hide (2) on your travels. Though seen as Junk, the Armorer is happy to Dismantle it into Hardened Leather and Leather Scraps for you.

Dark Steel Plate (2): A rummage around various mines in Velen has yielded both Steel Ingots (4) and Dark Iron Ore (8). At the Armorer's Crafting menu, you can combine them in the Crafting Component section to craft Dark Steel Ingots (4). Two Dark Steel Ingots are needed to Craft into one Dark Steel Plate. When done twice, you have both the Dark Steel Plates you need.

Feline Armor: Finally! After paying your crowns, the Journeyman Armorer crafts this fancy piece of torso armor for you. Of course, now you start the search for the components to create the Feline Boots, Trousers, and Gloves to complete the set!

Using the Witcher's Tools onlne is most helpful in learning exactly what components to dismantle. In addition, the Merchant's Appendix enables you to see the "Type" of item every single Merchant sells (Junk, Upgrades, etc.), allowing you to peruse for specific items more easily.

MASTER CRAFTING DIAGRAMS AND GEAR

Under normal circumstances, the ultimate in armor and weaponry is available when you find Crafting Diagrams that require Master level smiths to craft. These are the very best armor sets and swords you can obtain. For this to happen, you must visit the shop of the previously-listed armorers and smiths who offer equipment of the highest quality. However, some have an involved quest to complete first:

Yoana (Master Armorer): Visit Yoana, over at Crow's Perch in Velen, and complete Secondary Quest: Master Armorers. Afterward, her shop and services become available.

Eibhear Hattori (Master Blacksmith): Visit Hattori over at his Dumpling Shop in Novigrad City, and complete Secondary Quest: Of Swords and Dumplings. Afterward, his shop and services become available.

Beauclair Master Armorer and Master Blacksmith: You are fortunate that the Master Armorer, and Trentin the Master Blacksmith, are both open for business in the city of Beauclair (Toussaint), south of The Gran'place Signpost. Their shops and services are immediately available.

Master Armorer and Blacksmith: Visit the Ofieri Runewright at Upper Mill (Gustfields), and complete Hearts of Stone: Secondary Quest: Enchanting (all three requests for money). For each amount of funding you give him, he can craft Amateur, Journeyman, and finally Master level armor and weapons, acting as both Armorer and Blacksmith.

Grandmaster Armorer and Blacksmith: Visit Lazare Lafargue at his Beauclair shop. It is immediately open and he can craft master-level armor and weapons immediately. For Grandmaster armor (which is only relevant to Witcher gear), the Witcher Gear Scavenger Hunts for Toussaint must be completed. Afterward, Grandmaster armor and weapons for Feline, Griffin, Ursine, Wolven, and Manticore School equipment can be crafted!

Yoana (Master Armorer): The real power behind the throne over at Fergus' armory in Crow's Perch, Yoana is the only Master Armorer in the Northern Realms.

Eibhear Hattori (Master Blacksmith): The elven master blacksmith makes a delicious dumpling as well as crafting Master-level weaponry.

Runewright: If you pay him everything he requests, the Ofieri Runewright, over at Upper Mill acts as a Master Armorer and Blacksmith!

Master Armorer: Seek out the armorer in the city of Beauclair, who can craft Master-level protection for you.

Trentin Master Blacksmith: The blacksmith of Beauclair is also able to craft Master-level weaponry for you.

Lazare Lafargue (Grandmaster Armorer and Blacksmith): Visit this fellow's shop in Beauclair, close to the armorer and blacksmith, and seek the very best armorer and blacksmith of all! He can craft master-level armor and weapons, as well as the fabled Grandmaster Witcher gear!

EXAMPLE: FELINE ARMOR (PART 5)

You seek the ultimate in Cat School armor outside of Toussaint; Mastercrafted Feline Armor! Much later into your adventure, you finish the entire Scavenger Hunt for Cat School Gear, and have all the necessary Crafting Diagrams. You assemble all the necessary materials, visit your Journeyman Armorer friend, and have him build both the Enhanced Feline Armor and the Superior Feline Armor. Then you visit Yoana the Master Armorer, having completed her quest. Alternatively, journey to the Duchy of Toussaint, visit the main city of Beauclair, and see either of the following: The Master Armorer, Lazare Lafargue or the Runewright and have one or more of them craft the Mastercrafted gear. Every Crafting Diagram with Master crafting requirements now opens up: Including the Mastercrafted Feline Armor. Excellent!

EXAMPLE: FELINE ARMOR (PART 6)

You're shocked to discover there is an ever-better selection of Feline armor! However, you must visit Lazare Lafargue in Toussaint, agree to start Scavenger Hunt: Grandmaster Feline Gear, and finish this quest.

Every Crafting Diagram with Grandmaster crafting requirements now opens up: Outstanding!

The Witcher's Tools section of the guide lists the Level of every piece of equipment that's available, so you can study exactly what materials each one needs. You can also compare statistics between different types of armor and weaponry, too.

CRAFTING > CRAFTING

This Armorer and Blacksmith menu allows you to craft the following diagrams: Boots, Chest Armor, Crafting Components, Crossbows, Gauntlets (Gloves), Junk, Silver Swords, Steel Swords, Trousers, and Upgrades.

CRAFTING > REPAIR

This Armorer and Blacksmith menu allows you to pay to have your equipment repaired. Single items, or every damaged item you own (at once), can be repaired, if you have the funds. This is also a quick way to see your damaged items in one place.

DAMAGED EQUIPMENT: HAMMER TIME

Note that any piece of equipment that is damaged has a small hammer icon attached to it.

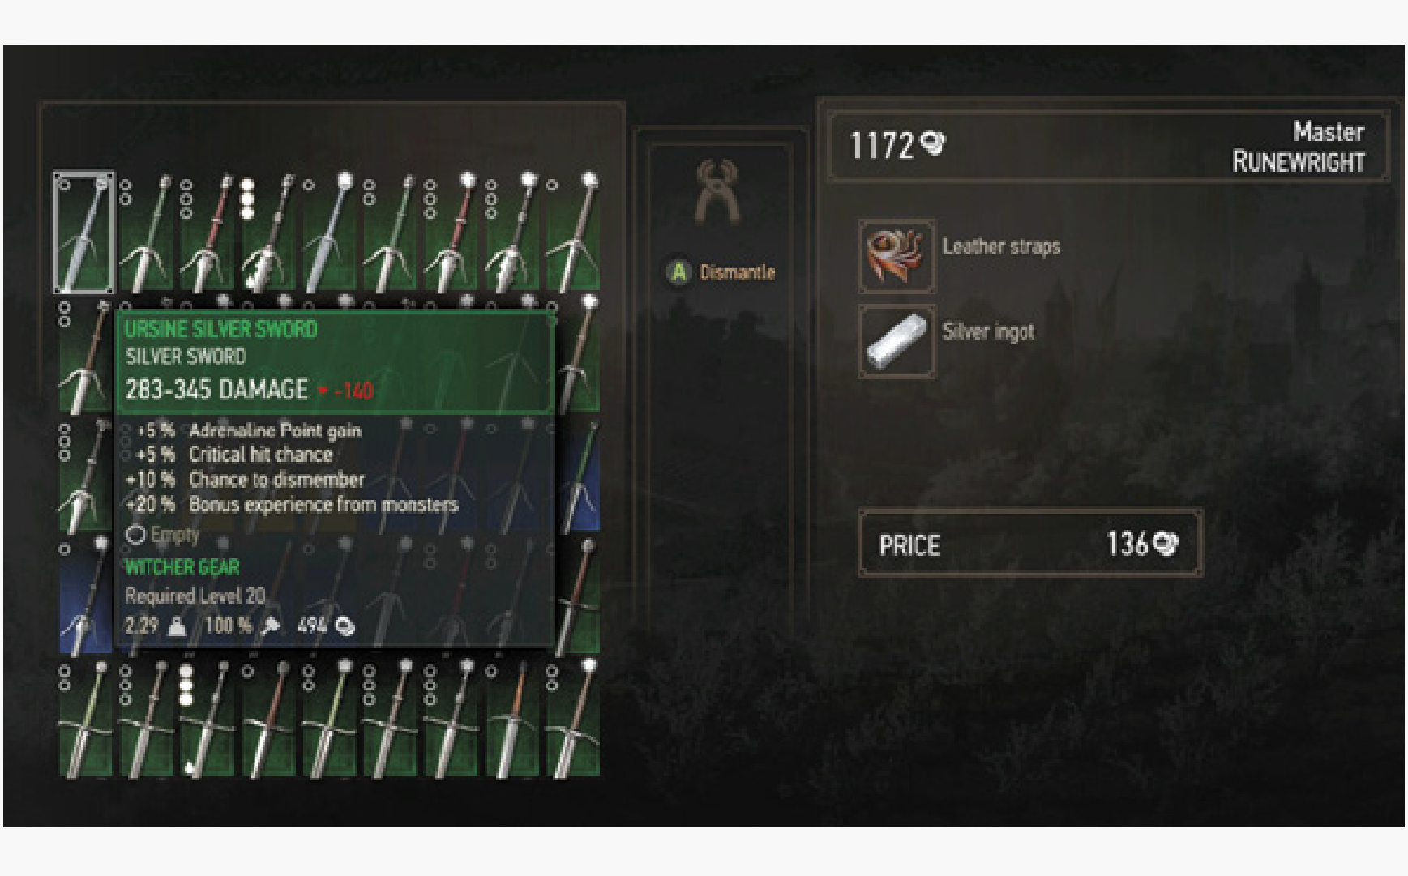
This Armorer and Blacksmith menu enables you to remove any upgrade (glyphs for armor and runestones for weapons) that you may have augmented a piece of equipment with. Check the section on Upgrades for a list of the different (and recommended) Glyphs and Runestones. Only you can add these augmentations to your equipment. Only a smith can remove them (and the glyphs and runestones are destroyed in the process). Do this when you wish to change the benefits of a glyph or runestone, or you find a better quality glyph or runestone.

CRAFTING > DISMANTLE



As previously discussed, an Armorer or Blacksmith can dismantle a number of your equipment types into base materials so you can recreate other (and hopefully better) equipment. Use this menu to see the components that are created, too. The following item types can be dismantled (at either smith): Witcher Gear, Armor, Swords, Upgrades, Tools, Junk, Crafting Components, Alchemy Ingredients, and Food and Drink.

Dismantling is an incredibly useful function of all smiths; you'll get nowhere with Crafting if you try to buy all the materials yourself. It is best to salvage what you can from equipment left behind by fallen foes, or from older weapons that are no longer of use to you, or from junk acquired during your travels.

If you visit the Duchy of Toussaint, and uncover a hidden Alchemy Laboratory under the Corvo Bianco Vineyard as part of Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: No Place Like Home, you can dismantle items for free!

REPAIRING ITEMS: DURABILITY

Swords dull, armor bends and breaks. As each item wears down, it loses value and becomes less effective. Hiring a properly skilled smith to repair the item can fully restore its durability. Remember that Armorers and Blacksmiths can repair every single damaged piece of armor and weaponry with one choice, if you have the funds: Simply ask to see their wares, back out of the Shop to the Crafting > Repair menu, and choose "Repair All". Additionally, armor and weapon repair kits can be purchased or crafted to help maintain gear in the field.

Some armorers and blacksmiths also have Armorer Tables and Grindstones that provide time-limited bonuses to armor and weapon damage respectively, when used.

The Importance Of Maintenance

Pay attention to the condition of your equipment! Deteriorated swords strike for considerably less damage, while low durability armor does not protect Geralt as well as maintained armor. A smith can fully restore a piece of equipment, and it is possible to use a repair kit to restore items in the field.

Armorers Tables And Grindstones

Armorers Tables (also known as Workbenches) and Grindstones (also known as Whetstones or Sharpening Stones) can be found next to some smiths or in villages. You can use these to provide temporary boosts to your equipment's effectiveness (armor is enhanced at a table, and weapons are enhanced at grindstones). Both are indicated on your maps once you pass near them. This is where to go to get a boost before a tough fight.

Do It Yourself: Armor And Weapon Repair Kits

A well-used sword gradually deteriorates and the damage inflicted lessens. Armor employed in battle gradually weakens and damage resistance lessens. This is your combat equipment's Durability rating, and is the most important statistic after its combat potential. By visiting an Amateur, Journeyman, or Master Armorer or Blacksmith, you can Repair any of your combat items. But why not do it yourself?

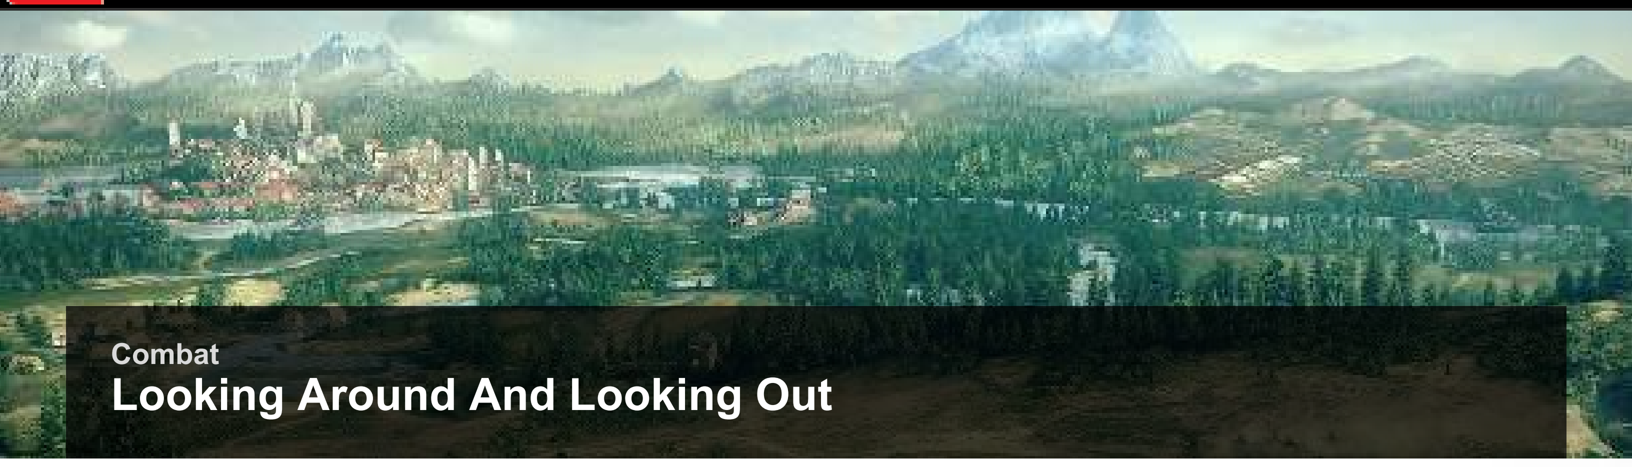
Repair Kits (Armor and Weapon varieties) are accessible at any time once you buy one, as it is part of your Inventory. It is weighty though, so you may wish to return to a Stash and keep your Repair Kits there (or on Roach). Simply highlight the Repair Kit you wish to use, then the armor or weapon you wish to repair, and repair it. The quality of the Repair Kit influences the percentage amount you can add to your Durability. Amateur (15%), Journeyman (40%), and Master (90%) repair kits are available.

REPAIR KIT EXAMPLE: MENDING SOME ARMOR

For example, Geralt's Verden archer's gambeson has seen better days, and is damaged with only 20% Durability left. He uses two Amateur Repair Kits, increasing the Durability to 50% (15% x 2). He then uses a Journeyman Repair Kit to increase the Durability to 90%. That should be fine for a few more battles! Note that if he used a single Master Repair Kit, the armor's durability would increase to 100%, but 10% of the Repair Kit's improvement would be "wasted". So Geralt would have waited until the Gambeson was at 10% Durability or seen the wasted amount as a worthwhile compromise.

KEEP WEAPON REPAIR KITS HANDY!

Avoid having to go to an armorer or blacksmith to repair your weapons and armor by keeping a supply of repair kits available. We recommend favoring a larger number of Weapon Repair Kits compared to Armor. Ideally, you shouldn't allow anything to hit your armor, while your sword should be making multiple contacts with the enemy.

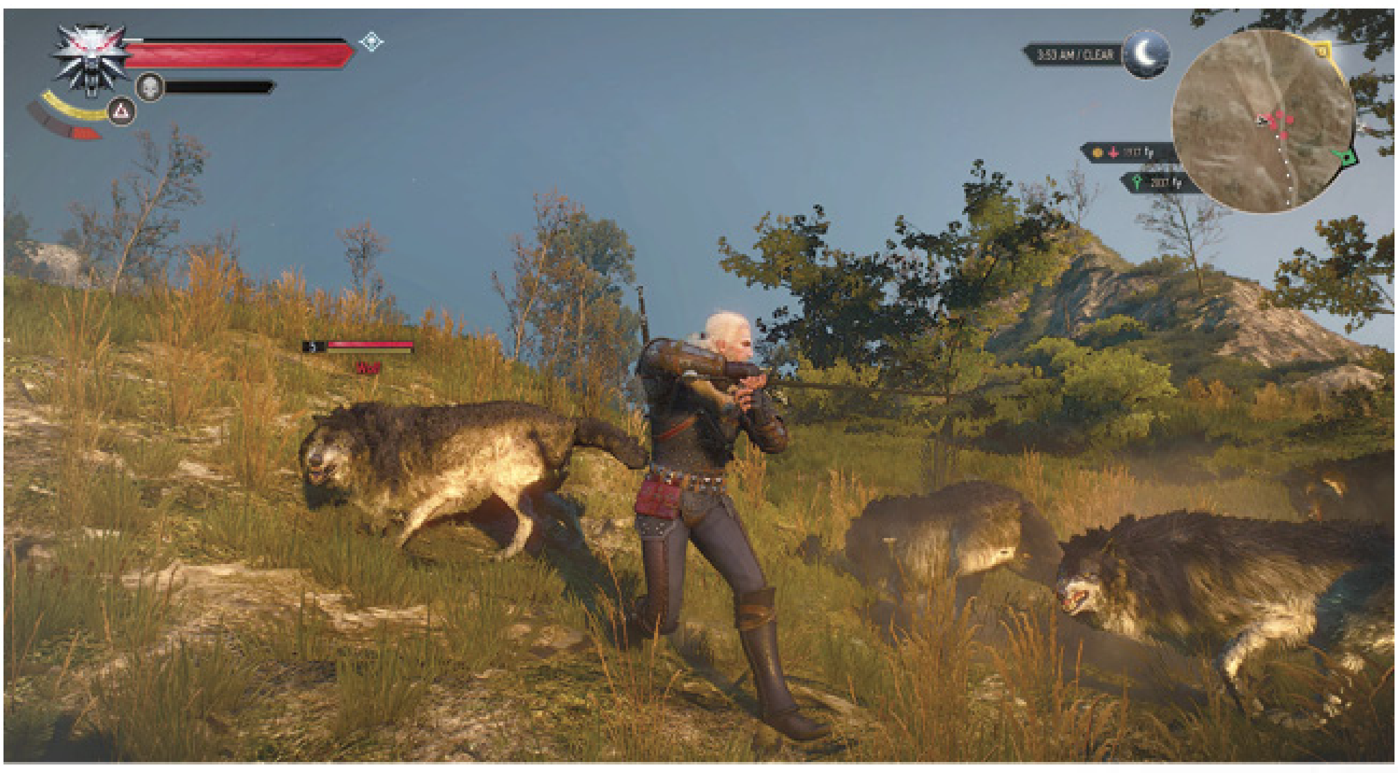


Combat

Looking Around And Looking Out

CONTROLLING YOUR VIEW

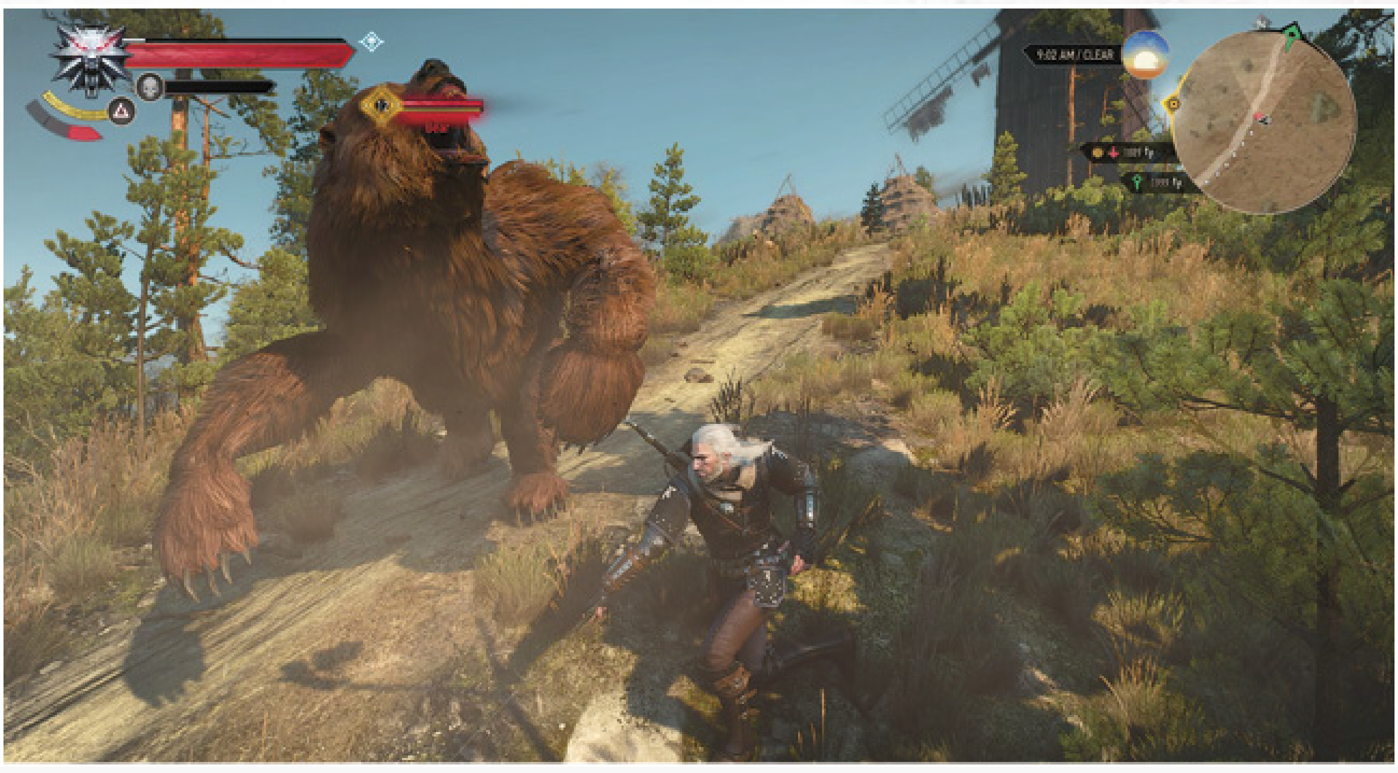
The first rule of combat is to know where your enemies are at all times. You can try relying on the mini-map to reveal the location of your foes during a fight, but it's best to have the camera facing them. That way, you can see what they're doing and react accordingly. Of course, if you're surrounded, this can be difficult. In those cases, try to keep the camera aimed at the most prominent threats.



A combination of good camera maneuvering, and tactical backstepping usually reduces flank or rear attacks when facing multiple threats.

LOCKING ON

While attacking with his swords or fists, Geralt automatically homes in on opponents within a certain range. You can also move him in the direction of an enemy while attacking in order to get him to change his facing. This leaves the camera free to move around as you see fit.



Lock your focus on a single foe when fighting airborne enemies, single threats, foes that move quickly (and are thus difficult to manually track), or leaders of a group you wish to slay before turning to slay their minions.

However, when fighting some opponents, it may be wise to lock the camera on to them. This changes Geralt's movement so that he is still always facing them if they're a good distance away—even while attacking, dodging, or running. A gold-colored diamond appears over a targeted enemy, so you can instantly tell whether you're locked onto them or not.

SEEING RED, JUST FOR A SECOND

Pay special attention to the Vitality bar over the head of your targeted enemy. If you see the area around it flash red, that's your cue to parry or dodge the enemy's attack!

SELECTING TARGETS

In battles with multiple opponents, you must know how to select the correct target of focus. If you're getting punctured with arrows while fighting melee-based foes, spot the position of the archer with your camera, then try to cut them down. Some fights in large groups are best handled by picking off the weaker opponents first. Lock the camera onto them in the middle of a melee.

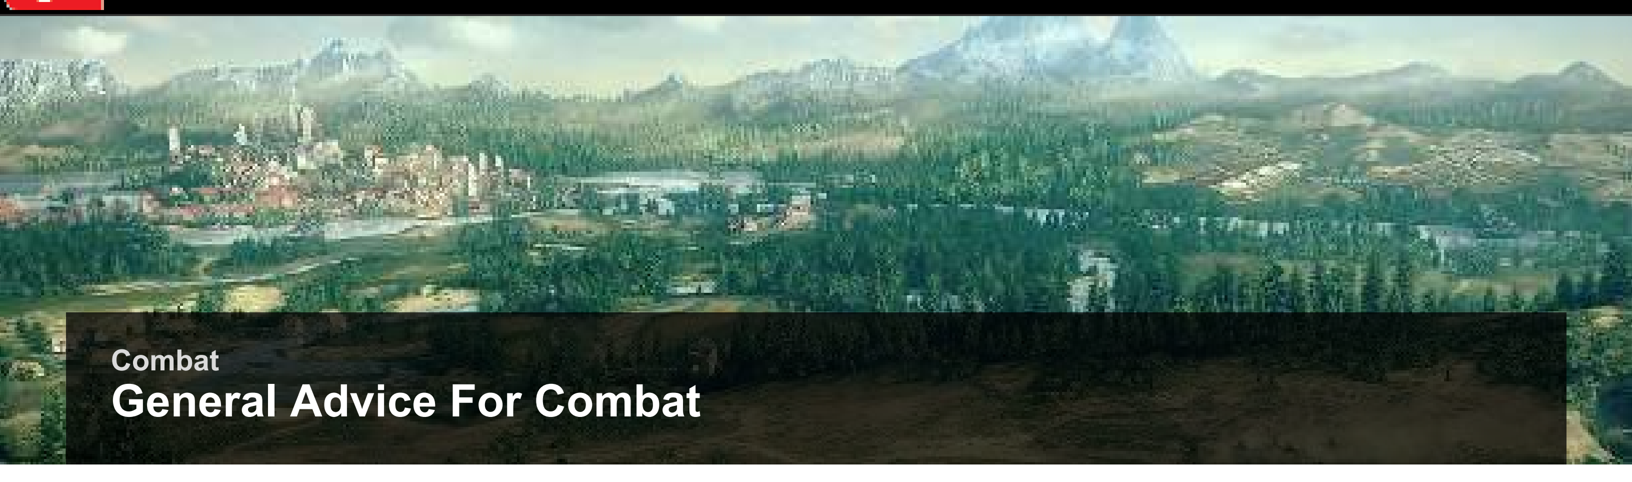
Combat

Overview

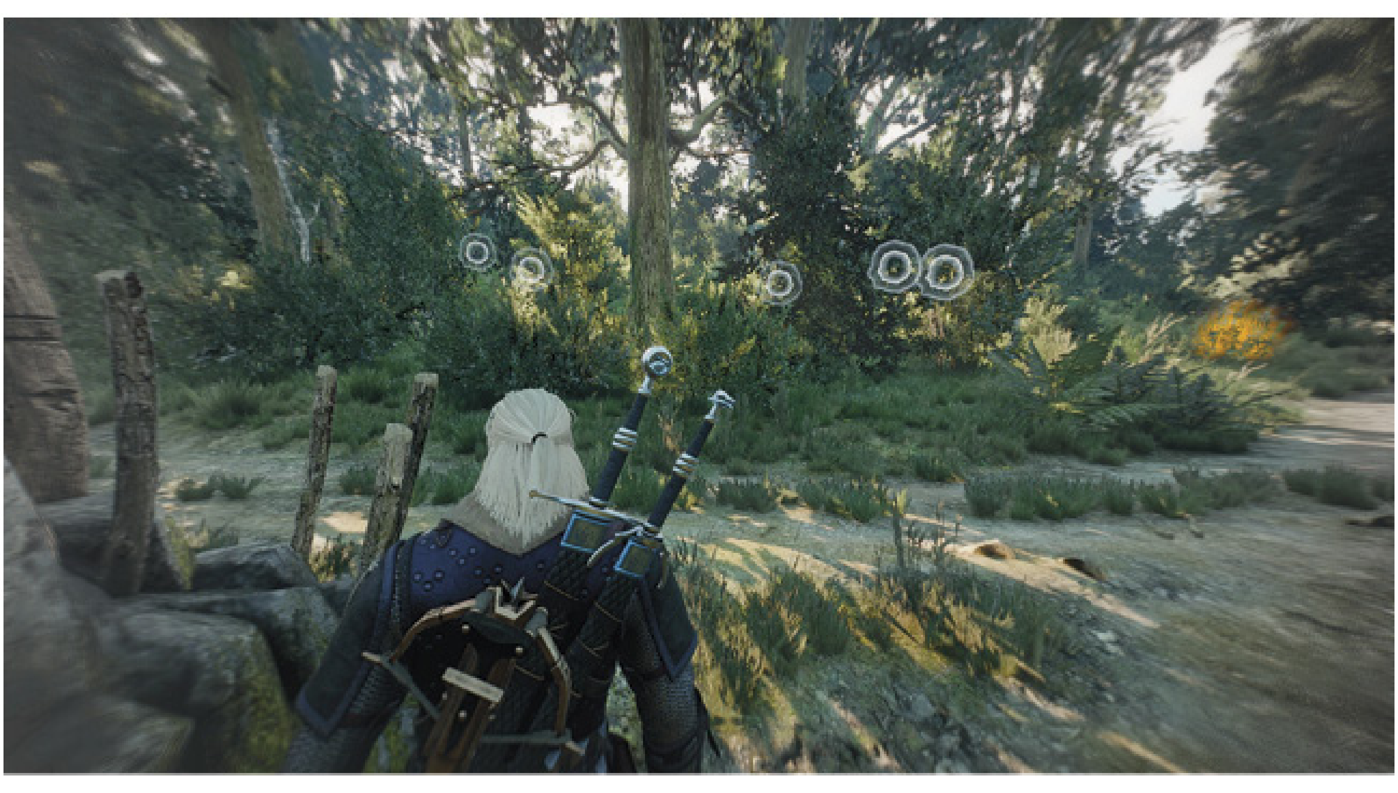
Witchers carry two swords with the knowledge that they will be used against man and beast. Words alone aren't always enough to dissuade everyone and everything from picking a fight with Geralt of Rivia, and so it becomes important to live up to his other name: the Butcher of Blaviken.

Combat in Witcher 3: Wild Hunt can be challenging, even on the Story and Sword! difficulty setting. Geralt has a vast array of options at his disposal, which can be daunting at first, especially during battles where the Witcher is greatly outnumbered. A fight can break out spontaneously: bandits stalking a frequented road could run you down on horseback, a pack of wolves or nekkers can suddenly charge from the underbrush, or you may be caught in an ambush in a forgotten alley somewhere in Novigrad. Part of winning combat is being prepared to fight at any time, against a wide variety of opponents.

You must also make good use of the tools available, hurting the enemy as much as possible while avoiding harm yourself. Geralt can fight with his swords, magic Signs, crossbow, or fists. He can augment his abilities with potions, mutagens, and decoctions. With alchemy, he can craft devastating bombs that can cripple man and monster with a variety of effects, or create sword oils that can help his blades inflict maximum harm on specific enemies. The trick is combining all of these tools effectively.



General Advice For Combat



Shh! Did you hear something in the woods? If you use your Witcher Senses, you can "see" the sounds (and the direction) too!

The following tactics are intended to remind you of some basic rules on preparing for and engaging the enemy under any circumstance.

Pay attention to your surroundings: The fights that go the worst are the ones that start when the enemy has surprised you. If you're on foot scouting for supplies, pay attention to your Witcher Senses, which indicate nearby sound or movement.

Meditate before and after a battle, if possible: If you're lucky enough to see a battle coming, meditation is useful before it happens. On Story and Sword! or Just the Story! difficulty settings, Geralt completely heals with a single in-game hour of meditation. More importantly, you can replenish potions, bombs, or oils that you've used if you have the materials on hand. After a battle, you can mediate for another hour to undo any damage.

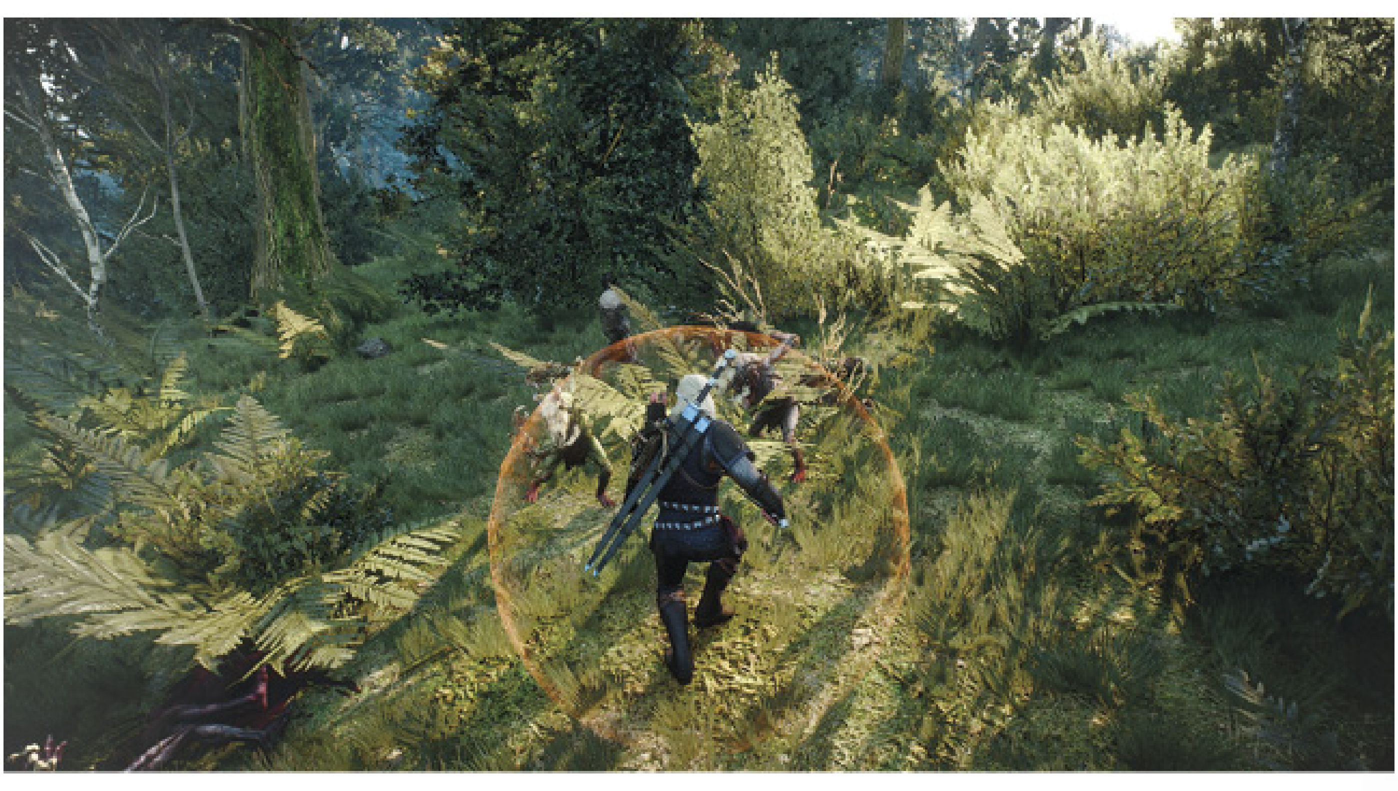
MEDITATION IS FOR THE OLD MAN

Ciri does not Meditate, and she does not have the ability to use potions or oils unless events force her to do so.

Drink potions, apply oils, and prepare your quick-use items: If you know what you're going to fight before the battle begins, use the appropriate oils on your weapons; you can't do so while in combat. If you have potions that are effective against your upcoming opponents, use them. If you're ambushed and don't have time to set up for a fight, it helps to have general quick-use items prepared in your shortcut slots. That way, you at least know what you have immediately available for use even when you're blindsided.

Use your Mutagens: Mutagens can be used to create decoctions that are supremely useful when taken alongside regular potions. However, you should definitely save some to enhance sets of Character Abilities you've chosen in the Character panel. Serious gains in Geralt's stats are possible, making the Witcher more durable and harder hitting with both sword and Sign.

Use Quen: It's usually a good idea to have Quen active before combat begins. It's too useful to be able to absorb a hit with no consequences, and if you've powered Quen up in your Character Ability trees, it can be even more effective as your last line of defense.



If you aren't sure what Signs affect a particular foe, just use Quen to bolster your own defenses while you figure out an attack plan.

Open the fight on your terms: Whether your plan is to simply charge into the crowd or snipe from afar with explosive crossbow bolts, you should always try to open battles with the initiative. Have buffs ready and oils applied, then strike first and strike hard. Once the fight is on, you have significantly less control over what your enemies do, so make those opening seconds count.

Strike the enemy from their flanks: If you can, attacking an enemy from the side or back can be devastating, even against well armored foes. Once combat begins, most enemies face you. However, well-timed dodges and evasive rolls can create opportunities to cause devastating wounds to your foe.

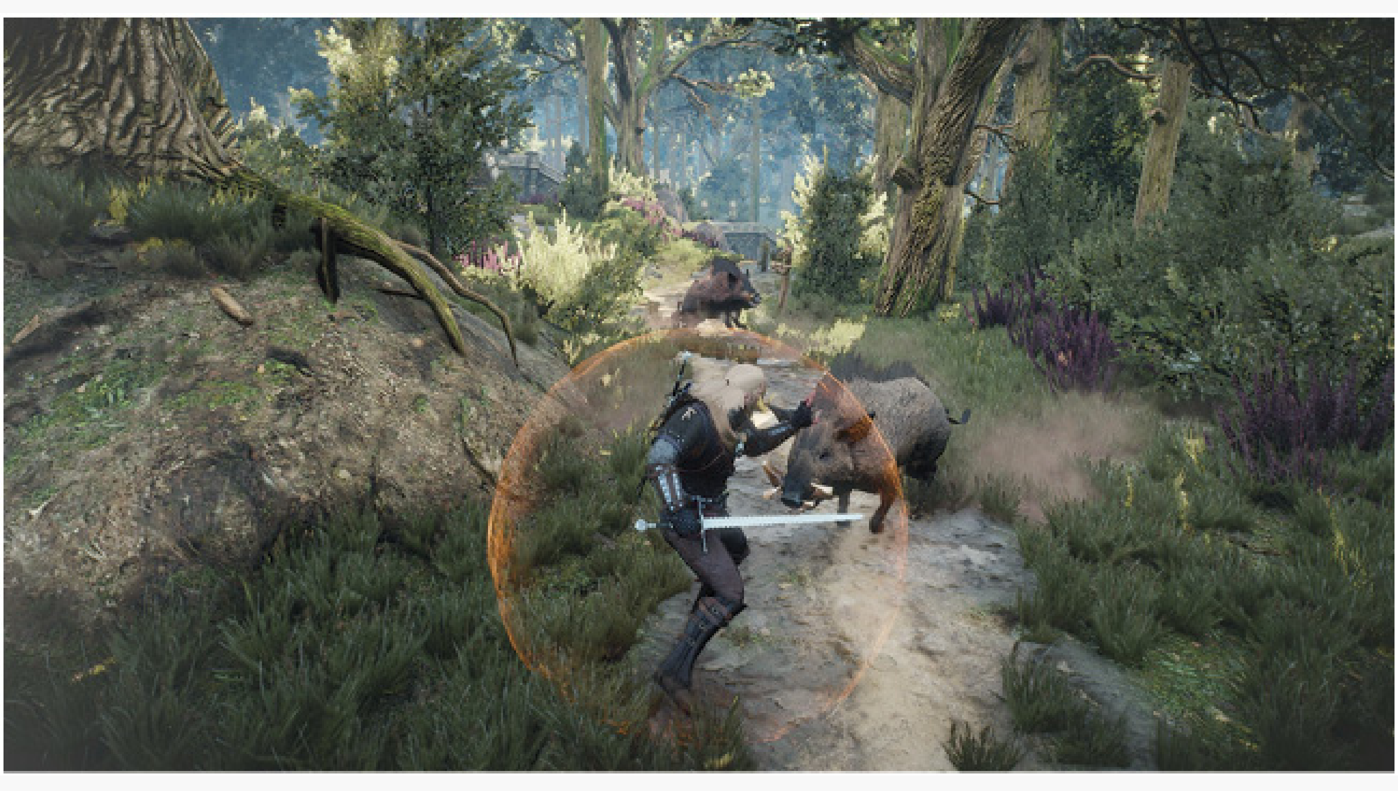
Do not allow yourself to remain surrounded: Geralt and Ciri are both quite maneuverable on their feet. Use this skill to avoid being encircled by the enemy. It's much harder to defend yourself if you're being attacked from all sides at once.

Destroy the ranged threats first: When dealing with many foes at once, it's often easy to get distracted by serious threats, especially if you're being assaulted from all sides. Bow- wielding humanoids can deal heavy damage while you're occupied with melee fighters. In these instances, run down and eliminate the ranged threats as soon as possible. Against humanoids, catching bowmen before they can switch to their own swords results in certain death for them, and affords you one less problem to worry about. When it comes to monsters, however, those with ranged abilities are never the weak foes of the group. If you mean to take them out first, they will make you work for it.

Manage your Stamina: You need Stamina to fight effectively with sword and Sign alike. Without Stamina, you cannot evade, dodge roll, parry, counter-attack, or cast Signs. You can use potions during combat to regenerate Stamina quicker, but the real essence of Stamina management is to make the correct moves at the appropriate time. One solution is to wear light armor, but this comes with its own set of problems.

Manage your Adrenaline: Adrenaline builds up with every blow you land on the enemy, and is lost for every blow you sustain. Each Adrenaline point earned improves weapon damage by 10%, maxing out at a 30% increase. Getting wounded is something you always want to avoid when it comes to managing Adrenaline, but there are certain abilities that require spending it. Save Adrenaline for crucial moments in a fight to maintain that bonus damage for as long as possible.

Use Signs wisely: Signs are one of your greatest combat advantages, but they can also get you killed just as easily. Casting a Sign takes all of Geralt's Stamina, and he cannot cast again until his Stamina is fully restored.



There's nothing quite as incompetent as wasting all your stamina on an ineffectual Sign attack. Instead, concentrate on well-timed, precise magical attacks or defensive techniques.

Maintain your equipment: Don't go into battle with damaged weapons and armor. Repair at a blacksmith or armorsmith (or use repair kits) on a regular basis to maintain your gear. It also helps to use grindstones and workbenches to further improve the effectiveness of your swords and armor, if only for a short time. Yrden is also effective at slowing opponents down enough to set up flanking opportunities.

Know your enemy's level: An enemy's health bar reveals everything you need to know; whether they are harmed by a silver sword (silver health) or steel sword (red health), whether they are an easy kill (shown by their level compared to yours); a worrisome challenge (shown by the skull instead of their level number); or a foe you've locked onto (shown by a gold diamond around their level number).

Items And Equipment

As you adventure throughout the Northern Realms, inspecting the items you have won, scavenged, looted, or stolen becomes increasingly important, especially as you run the risk of becoming over-encumbered if you're a hoarder. This section details the types of items you will find in your Inventory panel, and on your travels.

THE INVENTORY PANEL

1 Crafting and Alchemy: This houses all the Crafting Components and Alchemy Ingredients you have on your person, which are used to craft gear and items. The section on Crafting details how these are used.

2 Quest Items and Other Items: Quest items are, as you'd expect, gathered during any of the hundreds of quests. Once a Quest item has seen all the use required from it, it can be sold to a vendor, or dropped and forgotten. Some of the key quest items can be used while exploring the Northern Realms. Other Items take the form of monster trophies you can affix to Roach's saddle for a bonus. Currency (Crowns and Orens), any books and notes not related to quests, junk items, and "other" items are placed here.

3 Food and Drink, and Roach: This rather self-explanatory section houses all the consumables you can digest, or place in the "Consumables" inventory area. The Horse Items area houses all the items you can affix to Roach, from Trophies to Saddles, Saddle Bags, and Horse Blinders.

4 Oils, Potions, and Bombs: This lists every single Oil, Potion, and Bomb you have either bought or crafted, and these are placed in the Consumables or Bombs area of your Inventory for quick access (aside from Oil, which is combined with a weapon just before combat).

5 Weapons, Armor, and Upgrades: This menu gathers every single one of your Steel Swords, Silver Swords, other weapons (such as maces), Crossbows, Bolts, and Upgrades (Runestones) for your weapons. Weapon Repair Kits are also accessed from here, too. On the second part of the menu, all the sets of Armor, along with Gloves, Trousers, and Boots are catalogued, along with Upgrades (Glyphs) for your armor. Armor Repair Kits are also accessed from here, too.

6 Carried Weapons: These are the weapons you have strapped to your back, and use in combat. A Steel Sword, Silver Sword, Crossbow, and type of Crossbow Bolt are shown here, along with small circular icon slots to determine whether the weapon can be upgraded (empty circle) or has been upgraded (white circle). Swap between your Weapons menu and here if you wish to change weapons.

7 Consumables: These are the Potions, Decoctions, and Food you have placed in one of the four slots to allow easy access before, during, or after combat. Healing potions, food such as Dumplings, or combat-enhancing potions or decoctions should be placed here.

8 Bombs: You have two slots where the bombs you most frequently use can be placed for easy access. Try to tailor your bombs to favor those that can affect a wide variety of targets, switching out for more specialized explosives if you're hunting something that demands it.

9 Pockets: You have two slots where you can place other items you frequently use. One great example is a Torch to light your way during Dungeon explorations (if you aren't using Cat Potion), while another could be the Hornwall Horn (used to neutralize sirens).

10 Geralt of Rivia (Level and Experience): This handsome fellow shows off his current armor and weaponry. Above and right of his head is your current level, and the experience points needed to reach the next level.

11 Worn Armor or Outfits: These four slots show the armor or outfits you are wearing. Torso armor, Gloves, Trousers, and Boots each have a slot, along with small circular icon slots to determine whether the armor can be upgraded (empty circle) or has been upgraded (white circle). Swap between your Armor menu and here if you wish to change outfits.

12 Roach's Equipment: Your horse has a small inventory of her own, which features a slot for a Trophy (the head of a vanquished Contract monster), Saddlebags (increasing carry weight), Saddle (allowing Roach to canter further before tiring), and Horse Blinders (to reduce Roach's panic when enemies are near).

13 Vitality and Toxicity: This quickly allows you to note your current vitality (both as a percentage and a points total; the higher the better), and your Toxicity (whether you've been poisoned by enemies, environmental effects, or potions you have used).

THE PLAYER STATISTICS MENU

The Player Statistics Menu, sums up your various bonuses so you can see how all your different enhancements and other elements are helping Geralt, along with other pertinent data. This menu is influenced by your equipment, enchantments, and primarily by the Character Menu Abilities of the same color:

🟥 Red is Combat-related data.

🟩 Green is Alchemy-related data.

🟦 Blue is Signs-related data.

🟫 Yellow/Brown is general data.

1 Geralt of Rivia: You can rotate and examine Geralt, and unsheathe both his blades.

2 DPS – Silver Sword: This details the DPS (Damage-Per-Second) of your currently-equipped silver blade, along with current bonus/es.

3 DPS – Steel Sword: This details the DPS (Damage-Per-Second) of your currently-equipped steel blade, along with current bonus/es.

4 Armor: This details all the bonuses your torso armor, gloves, trousers, and boots are giving you (all together).

5 Crossbow: This indicates the impressiveness of your ranged weapon.

6 Vitality: This shows your current and maximum Vitality; which is your general health. In addition, it shows your Vitality regeneration in and out of combat.

7 Toxicity: This shows your current and maximum Toxicity levels. Current levels increase every time you drink a potion or decoction (and the amount is shown when you highlight the potion or decoction in question).

8 Sign Intensity: This reveals the statistical data for each of your five Signs. Compare your base levels before and after equipping items and abilities that increase this statistic, to discover your bonuses. Each Sign has its own information.

9 Stamina: This details your current and maximum Stamina (which governs how long you can sprint, and more importantly, how often you can cast Signs). It also shows your Stamina regeneration in and out of combat.

10 Additional: This gathers some general data, usually based on equipment from your Inventory screen (such as those given by Roach's Trophies) and abilities (such as the Deadly Precision ability, which influences the chance of an instant kill).

THE BURDEN OF ITEMS AND INVENTORY

A Witcher doesn't succeed simply by being a great fighter. It requires preparation and using everything in their inventory to craft an arsenal that ensures victory. Outside of the armor he wears and the swords he wields, Geralt's Inventory can be filled with items of various kinds, used for different circumstances before, during, and after combat. You can find items in the world, receive them as quest rewards, or buy them from merchants. Neglecting items makes the Witcher's life very hard, as weapons can fall into disrepair unless properly maintained.

Managing your inventory is important. You can't take absolutely everything you find with you everywhere you go. If you try, Geralt becomes overburdened, and unable to move beyond a slow walk while on foot, and his ability to fight is severely diminished. However, you do need to seek out a good supply of materials to keep your potion, oil, and bomb supplies well stocked.

Utilize Roach's saddlebags, and the Stash chests, to carry and hoard the items you really need.

Geralt can carry 60 units of weight on his person at any time, and more on his faithful steed Roach, if you purchase Saddle Bags from a merchant (or win them in a Horse Race). This increases the maximum to 160 units. Avoid problems by remembering to sell or disassemble any useless weapons and armor you loot from foes, as these tend to weigh the most.

Try not to carry items specified as "Junk" if they have a weight value, unless they sell for a decent price, or you know they can be broken down into useful crafting components. The golden rule here is to take only what you need or can use in some way. Attempting to collect every single item you find is a little like a dulled sword—pointless.

ITEMS: INGREDIENTS

Making things requires their material components, and the world provides these if a Witcher takes the time to hunt for them. Materials found within monsters and wild animals can be combined with various plants found growing throughout the world to make potions, bombs, and oils. Other materials you find, such as ores, planks of wood, or leather skinned from wild animals, can be used by armorers and blacksmiths to craft better armor and weapons.

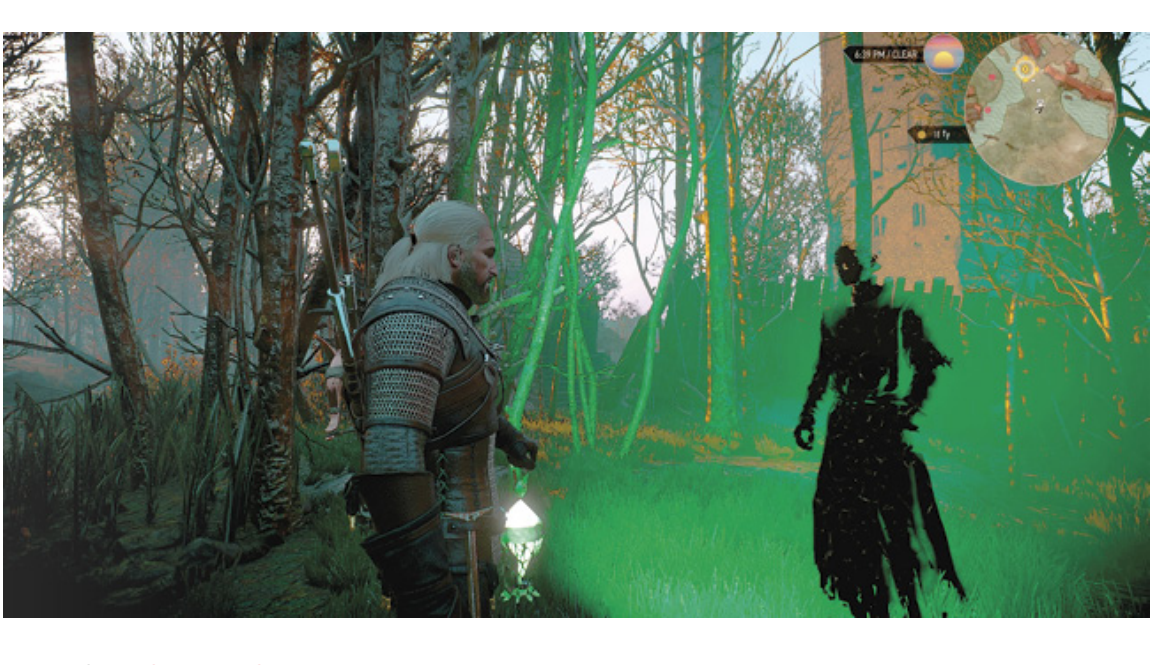
Weapons and equipment found in the field can be another source of ingredients. An armorer or blacksmith of the right skill level can break down equipment, as well as other items in your inventory, to help you receive extra crafting materials. This process does cost money though.

ITEMS: QUEST ITEMS

Geralt finds a variety of key items throughout his questing, and while some have monetary worth, it would be a mistake to get rid of them so easily. Quest items are marked as such when you inspect them in your Inventory Menu, and are always filed away in the Quest items area. They remain in your inventory and cannot be discarded until they are no longer needed. Once a Quest item has seen all the use required from it, it can be sold to a vendor, or dropped and forgotten. Some of the key items can be used while exploring the game world.

A quest item usually performs one of two functions: It allows additional areas to be explored, interactions to occur, or gives you an advantage in combat. Or, it is starts a quest, or is utilized as part of a quest objective. The following examples show a variety of quest items, but are by no means close to showing them all: Consult each individual Quest for items that are needed or found during the course of a quest.

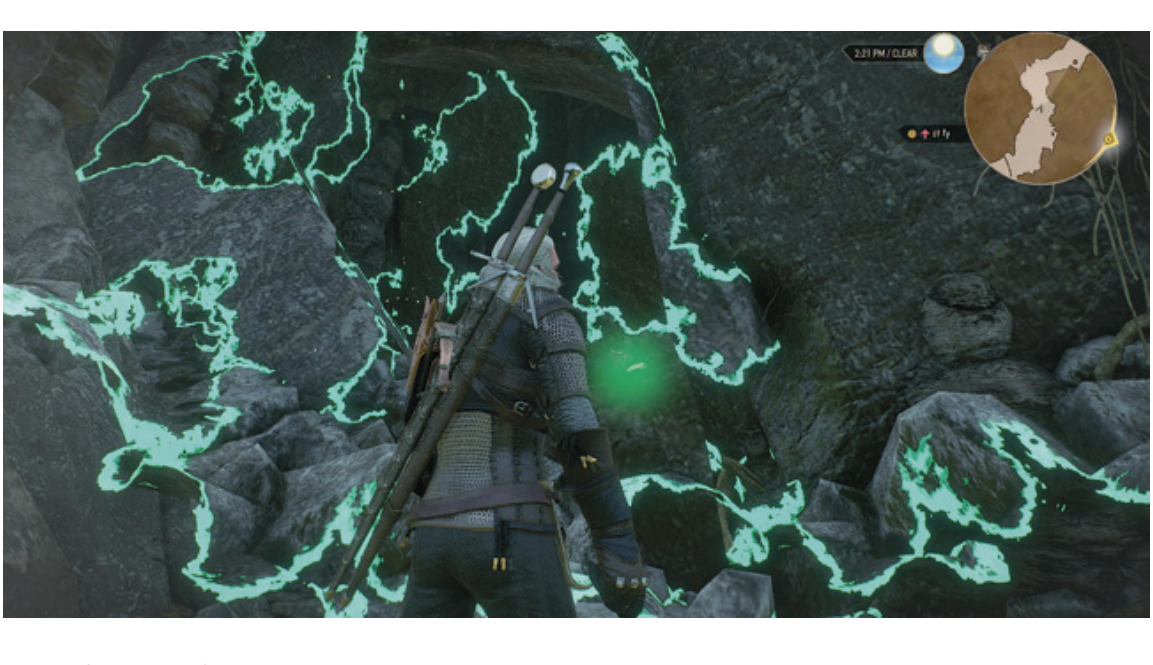
QUEST ITEM: THE MAGIC LAMP



Related Quest: Secondary Quest: Magic Lamp

The Magic Lamp allows you to watch the terrifying past communications of ghosts, a necessity for completing an early quest. When you approach one of these locations (which are tracked on your World Map and in the Atlas), they appear as green-tinged energy fields close to bones or corpses.

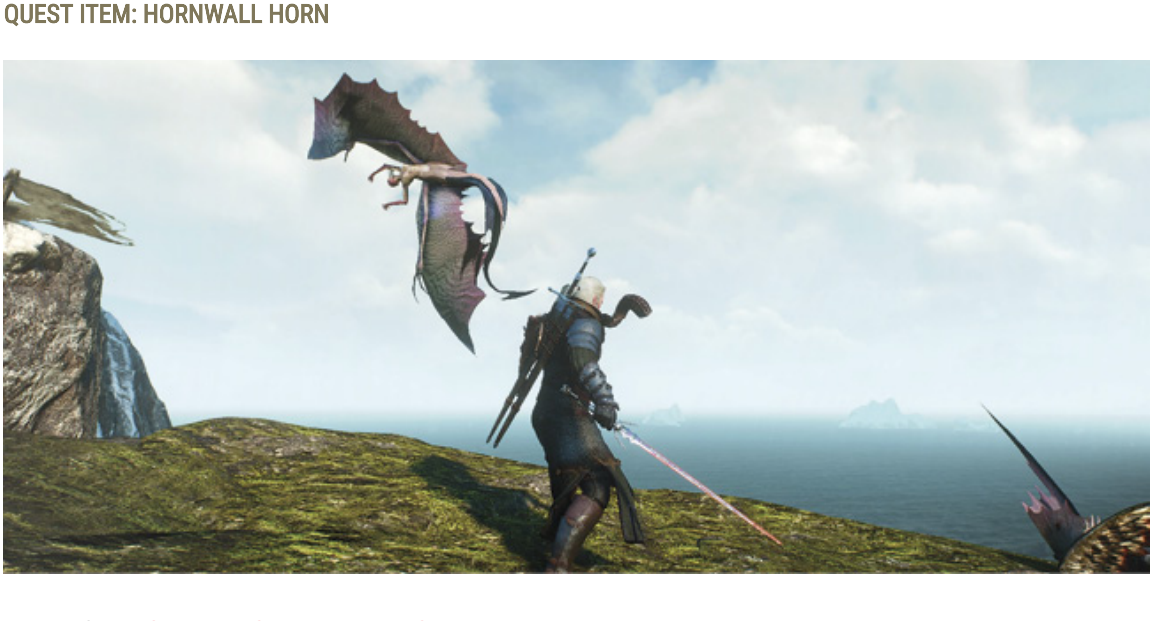
QUEST ITEM: THE EYE OF NEHALENI



Related Quest: Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark

This is used to dispel magic illusions that guard hidden passages throughout the world. When you approach an object that can be dispelled, Geralt actually points out that his medallion is indicating a strong magic presence. Once you have the Eye of Nehaleni, you can dispel the illusion.

QUEST ITEM: HORNWALL HORN



Related Quest: Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

If you care to complete this terrifying quest across the Skellige island of Undvik, one of the prizes is this horn, which can cause any Sirens (or related airborne enemies across this realm) to shriek and plummet to the ground. This is exceptionally helpful when boating across oceans!

QUEST ITEM: THE CURIOUS CASE OF VIRTUOUS VEGGA

Related Quest: Secondary Quest: Free Spirit

Though you may not know it when you purchase it from a merchant in the Gildorf district of Novigrad City, this book is a key to providing knowledge to a stranded Skellige, over on the extinct Skellige volcano known as Snidhall Isle. There are other books to collect, too.

QUEST ITEM: LIZARD FIGURINE

Related Quest: Secondary Quest: Of Dairy and Darkness

The fancy merchant in the Gildorf district of Novigrad City also has a variety of trinkets to examine and purchase. One of them (a small Lizard Figurine) enables you to discover the otherwise-inaccessible underground laboratory of a mad, cheese-obsessed mage!

ITEMS: LORE BOOKS, TORN NOTES, AND NOTICES

Lore books, torn notes, and notices collected during your adventures deserve a reading: not only do these items give information and history about the Northern Realms and the quests you are undertaking, they can also occasionally lead to knowledge about Points of Interest! Some lore books also add information to the Bestiary. A good place to start your rummaging through old books is the Scrolls and Books shop in Hierarch Square, Novigrad City. Tell that Hodgson fellow we sent you!

ITEMS: FOOD, JUNK AND OTHER MINOR ITEMS

Junk items and items that don't fall into other categories include currency that can be changed into crowns at the Bank of Novigrad, torn sheets from notebooks, lore books, food, Witcher Contract notes, and mutagens found on dead bodies. Don't forget to chow down on any Food you collect either; it allows you to regenerate health quickly (even during combat) without the need to Meditate. Mutagens can be used on the Character Abilities menu to provide significant boosts to your statistics.

Junk Items should be sold or stored in your Stash chest. Unless the description of the item tells you that it is an ingredient or can be dismantled (broken down) for base components, there's little reason to keep Junk in your inventory, as it just weighs you down.

EQUIPMENT: AN OVERVIEW

A sword is only as good as the Witcher using it, and his armor is only as good as the materials he was willing to invest in its creation. To survive this adventure, you must wield a multitude of swords both steel and silver. Should those fail you, only a durable set of armor is all that prevents the claws of your enemies from rending your flesh to shreds.

Equipment in Witcher 3: Wild Hunt requires Geralt to reach a requisite level of experience before he can use it. Any weapon not available to you is crossed out in your Inventory menu. Common weapons and armor can be found randomly with stats that reflect Geralt's current level. However, crafted items, relics, and unique pieces of armor (such as Witcher School Gear) have set level requirements and stats. While earning these pieces of gear takes supreme effort, they are often the best items one could equip.

EQUIPMENT: SWORDS

Geralt carries two types of sword; Steel and Silver. These blades are intended for two very different threats; Steel for humans and beasts, Silver for monsters. At lower difficulty levels, Geralt draws one of these blades automatically when combat begins, typically the sword meant for his nearest threat. Some battles require you to switch between both blades, so be prepared to adapt to those situations.

Swords deteriorate with use. With each blow landed, or shunted aside by sword, shield, armor, or claw, a blade continues to lose Durability until the weapon becomes unusable. Low Durability weapons strike for less damage. This is a serious liability in battle and can cost you life and limb.

Regular maintenance at an Armorer or Blacksmith will help keep your gear in shape at the cost of some coin. When venturing on to a difficult quest or facing extended battles that will test the durability of your equipment, make sure to purchase or craft Armor and Weapon Repair Kits to maintain your edge in the field.

In addition to acting as your primary offense, swords are your defense against any physical attack. You can block most melee attacks with either type of sword, though some attacks must be dodged rather than blocked. With sharp timing, you can also counterattack most melee attacks, placing your foe off balance while you remain on the offensive.

Every sword has a base attack rating representing the damage per second (DPS) it's capable of under ideal conditions. Additional values exist for fast and strong attacks, including damage and critical hit chance. Any enchantment, skill, or upgrade that increases a sword's damage applies a bonus to the weapon's base attack rating. An opponent's armor, resistances, and other modifiers will affect a sword's damage during combat.

IMPROVING WEAPONS

Enchanted swords have a chance to cause additional effects on their target with each strike. These enchantments can poison, bleed, burn, stun, freeze, or stagger a target. Lesser and Greater runestones can be placed in weapon upgrade slots to further increase a blade's effectiveness (see the Upgrades section). However, if a target's resistances are too great, these additional effects may be dispelled.

Another way to improve the effectiveness of your swords is to apply special oils to them before combat. Unlike runestones, this bonus is temporary and ends after repetitive attacks wipe the oil away. This is the most economical way to enhance your swords and allows for a great deal of flexibility when preparing for multiple types of targets. You cannot apply these oils in the middle of a fight, so pay attention to your surroundings and spot threats before you must engage them. Unfortunately, you don't always have this opportunity.

Finally, a very rare set of crafted weapons can be improved by finding diagrams for more powerful versions of the weapons. These diagrams and the materials to produce these weapons are rare, indeed, so you must be thorough in your exploration of the world.

ALTERNATE WEAPONS

While Geralt has no formal training with weapons beyond the swords of his profession, he is not helpless with the odd axe or bludgeon nicked from bandits foolish enough to cross his path. These weapons are not as lethal as a good sword, but you can still put down humans with them if a situation demands it.

If you're charging a group of bandits armed with a pickaxe, you're doing something terribly wrong. Or perhaps you fancy a challenge?

Equipping alternate weapons places them in the slot that would be occupied by your steel sword. You can also apply the appropriate blade oils to them. Realistically, though, you should stick with your swords if you have a choice.

EQUIPMENT: WITCHER'S CROSSBOWS AND BOLTS

Very early in Geralt's search for Ciri, he is gifted a crossbow, which comes with an unlimited number of standard bolts that Geralt can fire at enemies or wildlife. These bolts are typically quite weak, but they can stagger enemies in the middle of an attack, and even knock flying enemies out of the sky. The crossbow is also the only weapon Geralt can use underwater. Armed with this weapon, he is not without defenses when he must explore the depths of the ocean or an underground tributary.

Remember your training at Kaer Morhen; you can automatically or manually fire a crossbow. Use this weapon for ranged strikes or to knock foes out of the sky.

You can find more powerful crossbows over the course of the game. Some of the most deadly are crafted from secret Witcher School Gear diagrams, hidden in the world.

Don't scrimp on the more esoteric ammunition for your crossbow; it's very satisfying to hit a bandit in the neck with an explosive bolt!

Crossbows become more effective in two different ways. The first is through the use of specialized ammunition. You can loot them from caches in the world, and even craft special ammunition from diagrams. Specialized bolts not only hit harder, but can also cause additional effects. Explosive Bolts, for example, can knock enemies to the ground and are especially devastating against flying foes. Another type of bolt splits into three arrows, making it easier to shoot fast moving enemies. The statistics on bolts may not look impressive by themselves, but when you factor in the power of your chosen crossbow, you can easily see the bow overpowering lone monsters and humans before they even get close!

Another way crossbows see great improvement is through purchasing specific character abilities from the Combat and General branches. You can earn flat increases to the overall damage of each shot or slow the world down to take more time to carefully aim your shots.

EQUIPMENT: ARMOR

Geralt's armor consists of four separate pieces: Chest Armor, Gloves, Trousers, and Boots. Together, these provide protection against physical damage and persistent effects. Each piece of armor has an armor rating, along with a number of additional protection ratings against the different types of damage that Geralt can suffer in combat: slashing, piercing, bludgeoning, elemental, and rending damage.

There are three weight classes for all pieces of armor: Light, Medium, and Heavy. These classes determine how much protection an armor piece provides, but can also affect statistics like stamina regeneration. Each weight class caters to specific combat tactics, but you can mix and match your gear to fit your preferences.

Light armor provides a significant bonus to stamina regeneration, at the cost of sturdiness. This allows Geralt to control the pace of a fight by staying agile, engaging or evading enemies at will.

Medium armor provides no regenerative benefits or penalties, and is the weight class Geralt starts the game with.

Heavy armor provides the most protection, but slows down stamina regeneration. While movement is slowed, Geralt can wade into the melee and survive far more punishment.

IMPROVING ARMOR

Glyphs can be used to upgrade high-quality pieces of armor, providing bonuses to Sign abilities. As with weapons slots and runestones, some armors have slots that allow Glyphs to be placed. Glyphs can be found as loot in the field or on monsters, and there are diagrams that allow you to craft lesser and greater Glyphs, provided you can find them. Consult the Upgrades section for more details.

DYEING ARMOR

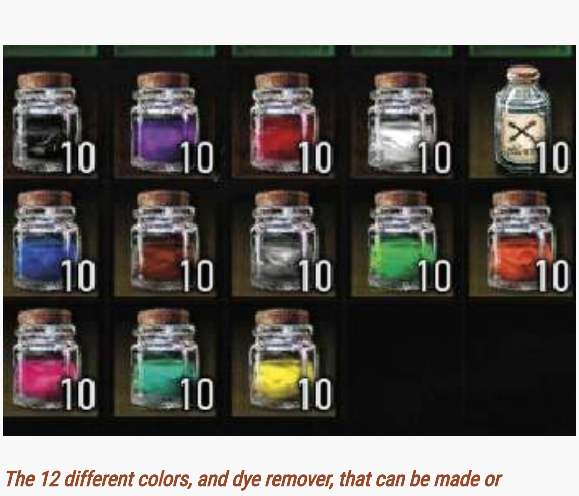
Should you find the color of your Witcher gear to be less than ideal, and you prefer to dye Witcher armor in a variety of colors, you can color each part (chest armor, gloves, trousers and boots) in aone of 12 colors. Examples are shown below.

Dyed Feline Armor: Green.

Dyed Feline Armor: Pink.

Dyed Feline Armor: Red, White, and Blue.

This is achieved by completing the following: Plan 1: Purchase Armor Dyes from merchants. Plan 2: Find or purchase special Alchemy recipes that dye Witcher armor. Then pick ingredients needed to mix the dye, and complete the dye in your Alchemy menu. If you own the Corvo Bianco Vineyard, and you've improved it as part of Blood and Wine: Secondary Quest: No Place Like Home, you can grow herbs in your orchard that are specifically for armor dyeing.



The 12 different colors, and dye remover, that can be made or purchased.

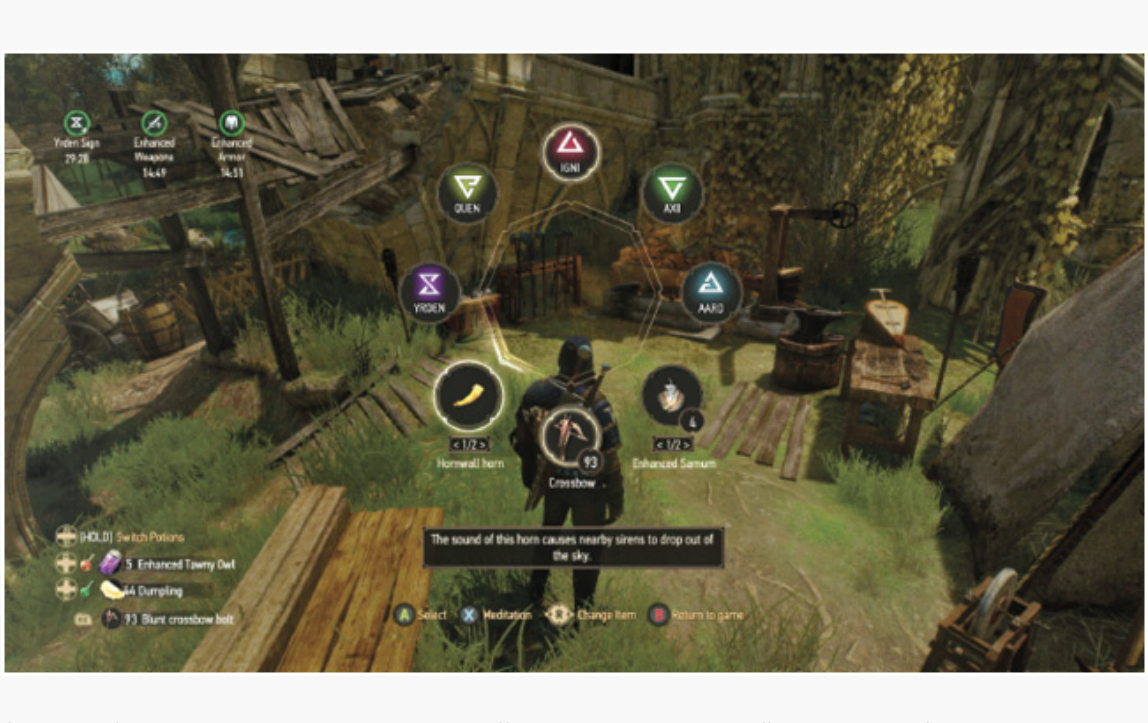
Then simply apply vials of dye to your piece of Witcher armor (and only Witcher armor). You require four amounts of a dye to fully cover all your armor. If you wish to change your color, use dye remover (made or purchased in the same manner).

CONSUMABLES, BOMBS, AND POCKETS: ADDITIONAL EQUIPMENT

It's possible to set consumables, bombs, and pocket items for quick use in the field. Consumables include food, or Witcher potions and decoctions. It's usually best to keep potions that have immediate beneficial effects in these slots, either focused on enhancing your combat effectiveness or survivability. Food, potions, and decoctions can be consumed from the Inventory menu too. Potions can determine whether or not you survive to even do that. With bombs, try to tailor your choices to favor bombs that can affect a wide variety of targets, switching out for more specialized explosives if you're hunting something that demands it. Your two pocket slots, however, will likely be occupied by key items that are required for specific purposes, generally for non-combat reasons.

PREPARATION: SETTING UP QUICK-USE ITEM SLOTS

Part of preparation is making sure you have the right items in your item slots. Wearing your best armor and using your best swords is obvious advice. Having the right consumables and bombs set up for quick use can mean the difference between life and death.



QUEN
IGNI
AXII
AARD
Hornwall Horn
Crossbow
Enhanced Samum
The sound of this horn causes nearby sirens to drop out of the sky.

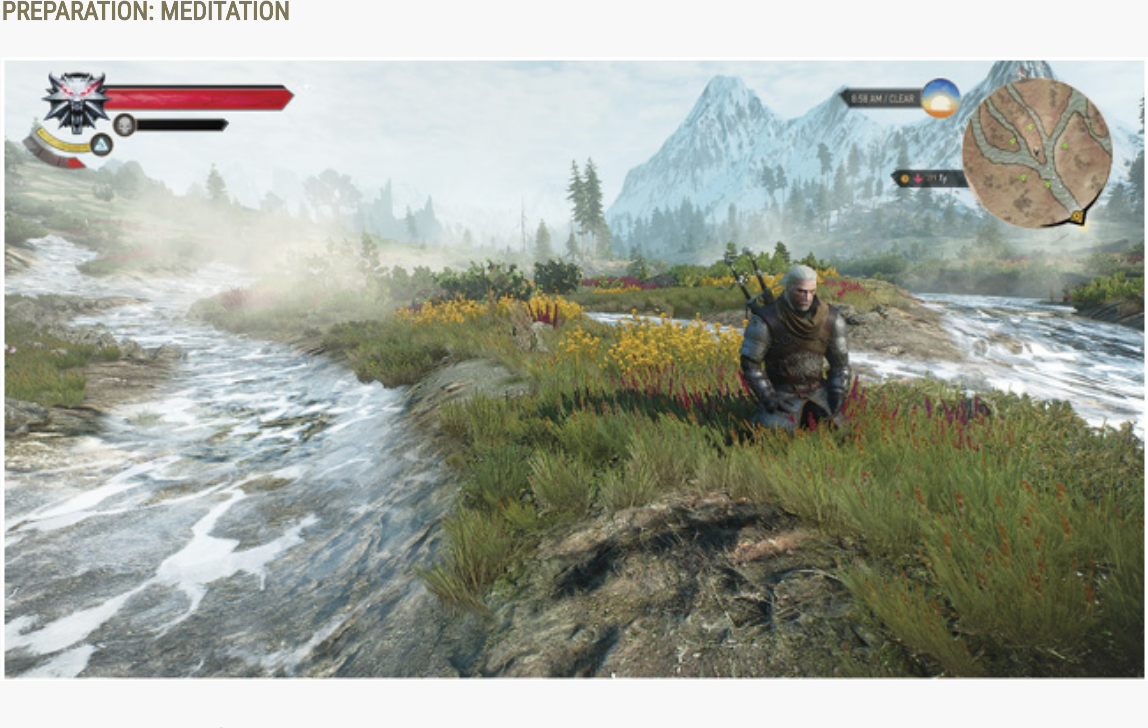
Quick-Use Consumables should have immediate effects: Potions like White Raffard's Decoction, for immediate burst healing, or Thunderbolt, for a short burst of increased attack power, are excellent for the quick use item slots. In place of White Raffard's Decoction, you can use any form of healing food to speed up health regeneration in combat. Potions like Cat, or decoctions, which have very long lasting effects compared to most other potions, are best accessed from the Inventory menu.

Tailor quick-use potions to your strategy and build: You can build Geralt to focus on his swordsmanship and crossbow skills; his Sign use; the bombs, potions, and enhancements gained through alchemy; or have a spread of skills throughout all of his ability trees. Likewise, there are potions that can greatly enhance the effectiveness of these aspects. If you want to have high-powered signs on demand, use Potions that power up their intensity. If you want your swords to hit harder, Thunderbolt is an obvious choice.

At least one bomb should be general use: There are many types of bombs, but you can have only two set up for on-demand use. Grapeshot is an excellent general purpose bomb that falters only against fire resistant foes. Samum is also good for its ability to blind or stun enemies caught in the blast radius.

Your second bomb slot should fit the situation: There's little reason to carry two bombs that accomplish similar tasks. If you know you're up against enemies weak to fire, switch in Dragon's Dream to set up a powerful combo with Igni. If you know you'll be battling large numbers of enemies, Northern Wind can literally bring the fight to a standstill, allowing Geralt to calmly pick out a priority target to bring down first.

PREPARATION: MEDITATION

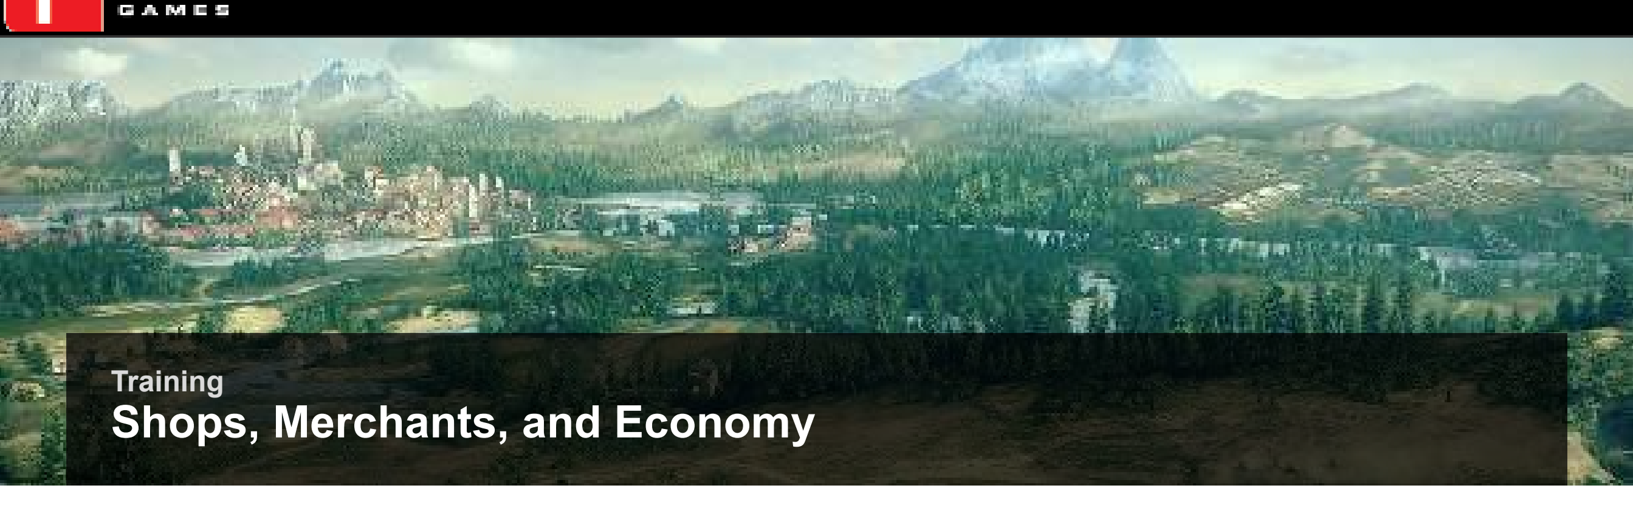


You need to prepare before you can start killing monsters. It's not just about throwing on the best equipment you've got and running in to battle. Geralt is a skilled alchemist if he's got the materials and formulae to work with, but more importantly, he can Meditate.

Meditation is one of Geralt's most important abilities. Doing this allows you to skip ahead a set amount of time, changing the time of day and, at lower difficulty levels, restoring any Vitality he has lost. While meditating, Geralt automatically replenishes any prepared potions and oils as long as he has base alcohol in his inventory.

WHEN NOT TO MEDITATE

On the Blood and Broken Bones! and Death March! difficulties, Meditation does not restore health. On these difficulty settings, you are forced to carefully manage your inventory of health recovery items.



Training

Shops, Merchants, and Economy

Merchants can be found in the various major settlements throughout White Orchard, Velen, Novigrad, Skellige, and Toussaint. They provide a number of different, and most necessary services. While Armorers and Blacksmiths sell you equipment, mend and craft your gear; and Herbalists and Alchemists sell crafting supplies (as discussed earlier in this chapter), there are other merchant types to talk to and barter with, as well.

VENDORS OF THE NORTHERN REALMS

Some merchants provide general goods and food, others deal in alchemic formulae and ingredients, while still others may be simple booksellers or innkeeps. As described earlier, vendors are marked on your map with specialized icons as you discover them. Some wandering merchants are constantly traveling the roads between towns, which places them in danger from the local wildlife. If they come under attack, you must rescue them or risk losing their services. Other merchants can be found as prisoners, known as "Persons in Distress," inside or close to Bandit Camps.

PROSTITUTES AND CARNAL KNOWLEDGE

A Witcher has certain needs, like any non-mutant, and these can be sated by ladies of the night or day, willing to spend time with the likes of him. If you're flush with coin and want to spend it on someone not named Triss or Yennefer, there are opportunities in the city of Novigrad.

Simply visit a Madame at a knocking shop in Novigrad, choose your lady, and engage in decidedly risqué form of unarmed wrestling.

Some Secondary Quests end with opportunities for Geralt to gain or pass on some carnal knowledge without needing to pay crowns in advance. We have also highlighted these opportunities when they present themselves throughout the quest walkthroughs, as well as in the Carnal Knowledge Appendix.

BARBERS

Geralt's beard grows over time, and time marches ever onward. Go unshaven long enough and Geralt starts to resemble a dangerous and murderous hobo. You can visit barbers in certain villages and cities for a shave and a new hair-style, if you choose.

THE LIVING ECONOMY: GERALT SELLS, BUT WHO'S BUYING?

Like Geralt, every shopkeeper has a finite amount of money and Inventory items available for trade. The amount of funds is indicated in the Merchants Appendix, while the items for sale is listed in the eGuide Inventory, A Witcher's Tools. If a Merchant's funds are depleted, they are temporarily unable to purchase additional items from you. While their funds and inventory replenish over time, this limitation may prevent you from selling everything in a single visit. If you cannot wait, consider purchasing goods to help quickly generate income. A better plan is to purchase and sell goods at more favorable prices, due to the many emergent properties the world's economy has.

ITEM TYPE

Not all items are created equally. Some are made of weaker components; some carry rare enchantments. Some are for dealing damage, others protect you from it. Some are consumable while others are used to craft and modify other items. Whatever it's use, each item is valued differently based on the type of merchant you are dealing with, the region you are in, and a variety of other price modifications and quest-based bonuses.

The following Economy sub-sections explain the various factors that affect the purchase and sale of items around the world.

TYPE OF MERCHANT

Every merchant has a specific type that determines their level of interest in a particular set of items. For instance, Innkeepers are only interested in acquiring foods and gear they to need to service their patrons while crafters like the Blacksmith and Armorer are focused on buying and selling weapons, armor and the materials used to craft them. Herbalists are focused on their connection to the land offering a variety of herbs, healing foods, and drink. The more scientific Alchemists are a fantastic source for books and upgrades you can use to enchant your equipment, learn new skills, and gain a deeper understanding of the living world. Both are a source of many natural herbs and alcohols you might need. Specialty merchants like the Barber and Book Dealer offer rare items you cannot find anywhere else.

Example: This Blacksmith is a merchant who purchases "Horse"-related items from you at 20% more than their base value. So sell any saddles to him rather than to an Innkeep, who only gives you a 6% bonus.

MERCHANT REGION

The world has been separated into distinct areas, each having a unique economy with its own rates and bonuses. Velen has been ravaged by war, meaning weapons and armor are common while food is a rare and expensive commodity. While travelling through Novigrad and Nilfgaard make sure to check out the many goods for sale. While more expensive, they offer a great selection of the items you'll need to heal, prepare, and maintain your gear. Skellige, while remote, has the best assortment of weapons and armor, crafting items and upgrades. Scattered across a series of islands, their resources are plentiful and offer many opportunities for entrepreneurs that would purchase goods for trade.

ITEM ORIGIN

Some items can be identified by the region in which they were designed and created. While merchants may be interested in trading for local goods, the exchange of rare items from distant lands can result in large profits based on your investment.

REGION BONUS

Each Region, i.e. White Orchard, No Man's Land, Novigrad, and Skellige, offers a quest that rewards you with a 10% discount toward all future purchases in that region. These are the Main Quests of your original adventure; finish these to secure this discount.

MERCHANT BONUS

Some of the merchants you will meet are in distress and have need of a hero. While their services and goods may be available immediately, successfully resolving their plight may result in a 10% discount for all future purchases. Additionally, this discount will stack with other bonuses. For example, if the Region Bonus has already been acquired, successfully completing this objective will result in a 20% discount on all purchases from this shop.

MERCHANT CHART NOTES

For Rarity, any items with a particular value are flagged in your Inventory, as well as the online eGuide charts of this guide.

Of all the Merchant Regions (over the page), these are self-explanatory, with the exception of "Nilfgaard", which indicate any merchant's origin who isn't in one of the other specified Regions of this table.

GET RICH QUICK: COLLECTING CROWNS

The previous information on the economy of the Northern Realms has all the statistical advantages you need for making the most of every trade you try. But what about other ways to gain crowns? Try some or all of the following:

KNOWING A MERCHANT'S WORTH

The Merchants Appendix lists a description of what to expect when you check the coffers of each merchant. This varies constantly, so only approximate values are stated. This is helpful so you can find merchants with more crowns and sell off more unwanted items at one time. The merchants with the deepest pockets are:

Master Armorer Yoana (Crow's Perch), the Journeyman Blacksmith (Fish Market, Novigrad City), Madame Serenity (Passiflora, Novigrad City), Master Blacksmith Eibhear Hattori (Novigrad City), Olivier the Innkeep (Kingfisher Tavern, Novigrad City), and the Kaer Trolde Blacksmith (Ard Skellig).

WAITING A WEEK

Make a note of a merchant you've sold items to, and avoid revisiting them for one entire week (seven 24-hour periods). As there's a wealth of areas (and other merchants) to investigate, this shouldn't be a difficult proposition. If you wish to wile away a bit of time, you can always Meditate and then return to a merchant as they start to replenish their coinage. This may not be the coin they had when you first sold to them, but it's a start.

THE BOVINE OFFENSE FORCE

Time was, if you were west of Woesong Bridge at the entrance to White Orchard, you could butcher the two cows grazing there, strip their bones for hide, Meditate a spell until two more cows appeared, and continue amassing hide to sell for good profit. That was, till the terrible "Bovine Defense Force" came—a fearsome level 27 Chort that could tear a man's gizzards from his goolies in the time it takes to sneeze! Now this is still a possible plan, but results in far less bounty, as well as a visit from the tax man.

Another option is to make a meager wage as a hunter, using your crossbow to drop deer or hares in the woods, and cut them open for meat or hides. You can also hit beehives with a shot of Igni to clear out the pesky bees, netting you a decent profit. Velen merchants pay good money for raw meat, but there are far better methods of gathering crowns.

COMPLETING YOUR CONTRACTS AND TROPHIES

The variety of Contracts you can undertake are purely optional, but always end with a reasonable sum of coins if you're successful, as well as a trophy you can sell. The first few contracts may not seem worth the trouble for the low payout, but as you continue into Velen, you start to see some that offer about 250 Crowns each. Most of these are in the level 10 range, so ensure that Geralt's level is equal or better. Such Contracts include Jenny 'o The Woods, Shrieker, Woodland Beast, The Merry Widow, and Swamp Thing. All of these should pay you a decent amount of Crowns, and each can be completed relatively quickly.

As well as selling the trophy, remember to affix the head of a vanquished Contract monster to Roach's saddle, as four of them grant you extra funds: The Doppler (Contract: An Elusive Thief), Ekhidna (Contract: Here Comes the Groom), Foglet (Contract: Swamp Thing), and Succubus (Contract: Deadly Delights) Trophies all grant you 5% bonus gold. The recommended trophy to find first is the Foglet Trophy.

EXPLORING THE NORTHERN REALMS

As legitimate as completing Contracts is, there is something natural about simply exploring the land and spending some time with the random events that pop up along the way. This is where the question marks on your map come into play, as they always indicate an item of interest, and in one way or another you will always find a way to put some Crowns in your pocket. Be careful of Points of Interest that are higher level than you are currently. If they are too dangerous, come back once you've gained more experience. Careful looting and ingredient-gathering is also a method of harvesting a great number of items, and with stops at your Stash to store materials for sale, before visiting a merchant you know will give you the best prices, is a good way to steadily accrue funds.

GWENT

The Gwent chapter of this guide details some truly exceptional methods of ensuring you win almost every game of Gwent you attempt. With a moderately powerful Northern Realms deck, start playing the Gwent Players of White Orchard, before challenging no-name players (almost always vendors) throughout Velen. Every time you play against an opponent, bet the full 10 Crowns. When you win you'll double that to 20 Crowns. While it may not seem like much, it adds up after awhile. It also helps you acquire better cards, too.

With a maximum of 20 crowns a match, a game of Gwent is not only a great way to pass the time, but it readies you for Gwent quests too.

FISTS OF FURY: VELEN

This secondary quest pits Geralt against four opponents in a fistfight. Save your progress before each match, then wager the maximum amount. If you win, you'll double that, which equates to several hundred Crowns once the quest is over. If you lose, reload and try again. You can bet up to 50 Crowns on the first fight, 70 on the second and third and 80 on the fourth. With a maximum bet you can earn 540 Crowns from this quest.

Knock folk about a bit for fun and profit!

All you have to do to make sure you win every fight is back away from your opponent and let him attempt the first swing. As soon as he does, counter with a strong attack and then a flurry of quick attacks until the opponent starts to block again. Once this happens, back away and repeat the process. If your timing is good you shouldn't take a single hit during these matches, giving you quick and easy cash.

RACES: CROW'S PERCH

This Secondary quest works in a similar manner to the Fists of Fury: Velen secondary quest. You race against three competitors, placing a bet on each race. If you win you double your wager, and when the quest is complete you'll get an additional 70 Crowns on top of whatever you won through wagers. You can wager 50 Crowns on each of the three races, which doubles if you win, giving you 370 Crowns for the entire quest. It's worth investing in a Racing Saddle so Roach doesn't tire as quickly.

Example: Gallop toward a tidy sum of winnings over at the Baron's fortress.

Once the race begins, follow the black line on your mini-map as it loops around in a circular pattern. Watch for explosive barrels, dips in the road that stop your horse from galloping, and even logs that may block your path. If one of these obstacles trips you up and your opponent takes the lead, don't remain directly behind him when you try to pass.

Your horse will slow if you get too close while you're directly behind an opponent. You need to move to the right or left to create plenty of space when you pass. Depending on the stamina level of your horse you can canter the entire race for an easy win.

THE HEROES' PURSUITS

Remember these bouts of fisticuffs and racing opportunities in Velen aren't the only times you're able to acquire cash with your fists or equine competence. Consult The Heroes' Pursuits quests to find many more Fists of Fury and Race-related quests to undertake.

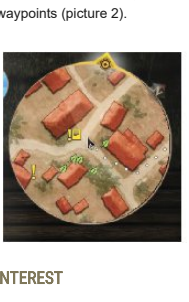
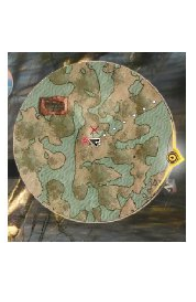
Mapping And Points Of Interest

As you explore the world, locations are revealed and marked on your map. As you pass by, your mini-map identifies the locations of herbs as you pass them. Enemy positions (picture 1) are also marked (including the positions where they fell—an "x" mark—to allow for finding and looting the corpses), as well as stairwells and important cave entrances, merchant locations, and quest objective waypoints (picture 2).





DISCOVERING A POINT OF INTEREST

Points of Interest cover a wide variety of locations (and types of locations) in the world, including special events, battles, or hidden treasures that can help increase Geralt's strength, line his coffers with crowns to use to better equip himself, or contain diagrams and formulae for better armor, weapons, potions, or sword oils. Most Points of Interest appear on the World Map as a large "?" question mark after Geralt overhears interesting information from townsfolk, or reads about a location on a Notice Board, flyer posted to a wall, or obtains special maps from a vendor (when adventuring across the isles of Skellige). It is then up to you to decide whether or not to travel to those locations and discover what's there. It's also possible to stumble upon a Point of Interest with no prior knowledge of its existence.

Exploring Points of Interest can not only fatten Geralt's coin purse and inventory, but he also gains experience once a POI is explored and any problems at the location are solved, and/or treasure is looted. It's in your best interest to take the time and explore the world, and visit all these Points of Interest.

POINTS OF INTEREST: TYPES (WORLD MAP)

This section details all the different Points of Interest you can discover on your travels. These all appear on your World Map, and can be toggled "on" or "off." Most important are Signposts, after which all other POIs are presented in alphabetical order. They are also tracked throughout the Atlas section of this guide. Interactive versions appear on the free digital guide Atlas maps that accompany this tome.

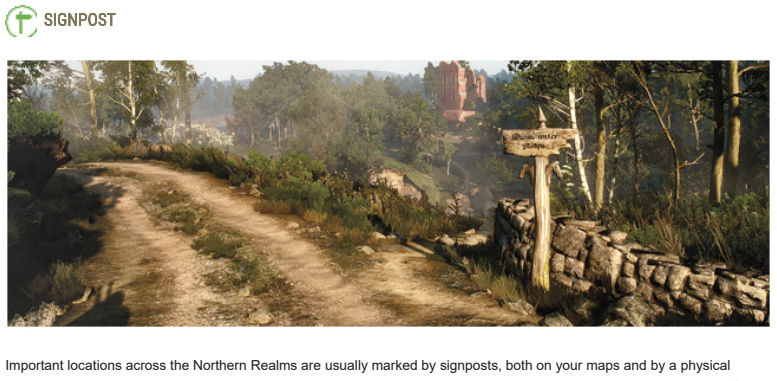
FADE TO GREY: CLEARING OUT AND VISITING LOCATIONS

As you progress throughout Velen and beyond, and wish to visit and clear out as many locations as possible as you go, be sure to check your World Map once you are about to leave a location. When you have killed all the enemies, and looted all the chests of note at a particular location, the marker usually turns grey. This doesn't occur for icons such as boats (obviously), but for locations such as Places of Power, Monster Dens and Nests, and Guarded Treasure; you can easily keep track of what you've visited by making sure everything is grey when you finally step away!

LEARN THE CUSTOMS: MAKE YOUR MARK ON THE MAP!

It is extremely useful, when navigating the World Map, to employ the Custom Marker tool. This allows you to place a marker (shown) anywhere you like. As this icon shows up on your mini-map, it can be utilized as a waypoint to an unexplored area to more easily reach it. Simply look at a location you haven't found using this guide's Atlas, plot a Custom Marker at the approximate location, and go exploring! Hold the Custom Waypoint Button and pop-up containing additional custom waypoints appears. You can place a total of 10 of these icons on the map. This is particularly helpful for finding all the Places of Power, but can be used any time you like!

SIGNPOST



Important locations across the Northern Realms are usually marked by signposts, both on your maps and by a physical signpost placed somewhere in that location. These signposts act as a Fast Travel network that you can use to more swiftly move from one location to another. This can significantly cut down on travel times, particularly during quests that span entire regions. However, you can only fast-travel to signposts you have already discovered (either by visiting them already, or by reading a map you've bought or found). Think of Signposts as anchor points across the Northern Realms; explore around each of them to discover other Points of Interest, and then find more signposts so you can perfect your fast-travel network.

OCEANS APART: FAST-TRAVEL ACROSS WATER

One example where fast-travel proves invaluable is when you're navigating the seas around Skellige. Instead of braving an ocean each time you navigate to another island, open your World Map and pick an already-known harbor as your destination. While you have to travel by ocean to each of the islands once, you don't need to do it again and again! The only downside is when you wish to set sail to one of the many tinier islands that have no signpost; then you're at the mercy of the seas and your boating skills!

ABANDONED SITE

Also known as "Abandoned Settlements," these are locations where the usual peasantry are nowhere to be seen. Shrines left abandoned after monsters took interest; logging mills overrun by bandits; villages plundered by soldiers—all of these are examples of settlements or landmarks that have been left to rot in the hands (or claws) of those who usurped them from the innocent. If you can clear these locations of all danger, the people will return, rewarding you for your efforts. Reclaiming (also known as "liberating") abandoned sites can open up new merchants, blacksmiths, or armorers to purchase goods and services from. Additionally, each reclaimed settlement awards an experience point bonus, as well as a fistful of crowns. For a definite enemy fight, followed by a possible vendor appearance and money reward, seek these settlements out.

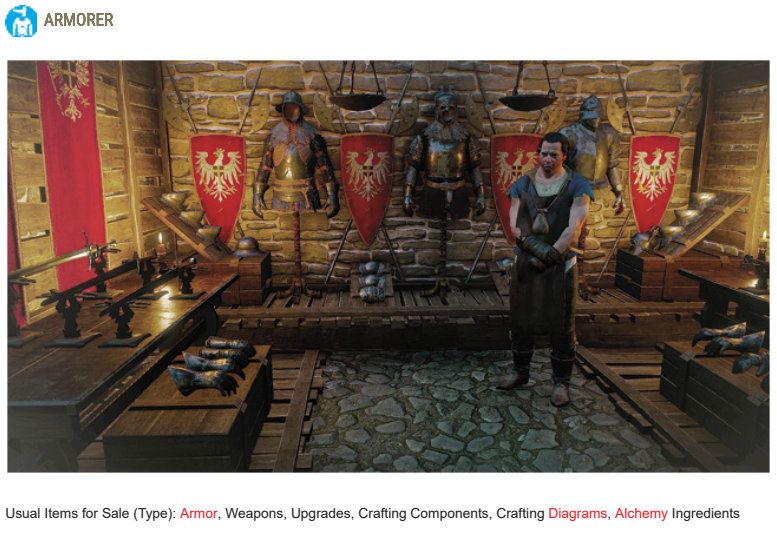
ALCHEMISTS AND ALCHEMY SUPPLIES

Usual Items for Sale (Type): Upgrades, Junk, Crafting Components, Alchemy Formulae, Alchemy Ingredients

Crafting Opportunities: Alchemy Substances (Mutagens), Alcohol, Bombs, Oils, Potions

This location, usually a building within a hamlet or village, has a supplier of alchemy ingredients for you to use in your crafting. As the current political situation has forced many of these vendors to flee or ply their trade underground, don't expect a large number of these merchant types. This trader almost certainly is a Gwent player too. For a complete list of Alchemists, and the type of wares they sell, consult the Merchants Appendix.

ARMORER



Usual Items for Sale (Type): Armor, Weapons, Upgrades, Crafting Components, Crafting Diagrams, Alchemy Ingredients

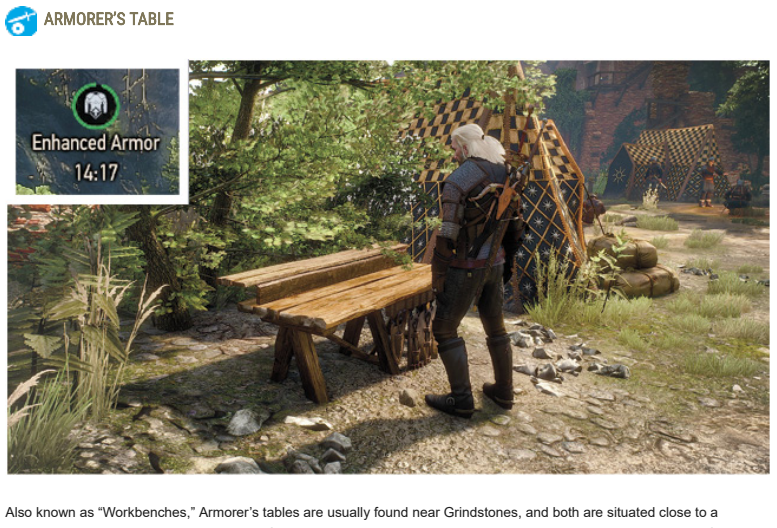
Crafting Opportunities: Chest Armor, Crafting Components, Junk

Repair Opportunities: Weapons and Armor

Remove Upgrade and Dismantle Opportunities: Available

Here, you can craft armor, repair damaged equipment (armor and weapons), dismantle equipment for parts, or remove upgrades from sockets. Be certain you know the experience of any Armorer you wish to utilize the talents of: Amateur, Journeyman, Master, and Grandmaster Armorers craft increasingly better quality equipment. Their skill elvel also increases the number of components they are able to recycle when disassembling items. This trader almost certainly is a Gwent player too. For a complete list of Armorers, and the type of wares they sell, consult the Merchants Appendix.

ARMORER'S TABLE



Also known as "Workbenches," Armorer's tables are usually found near Grindstones, and both are situated close to a Blacksmith or Armorer within a settlement. Simply walk up to a table, and use it to grant your gear increased Armor for a limited duration. This is where to go to get a boost before a tough fight.

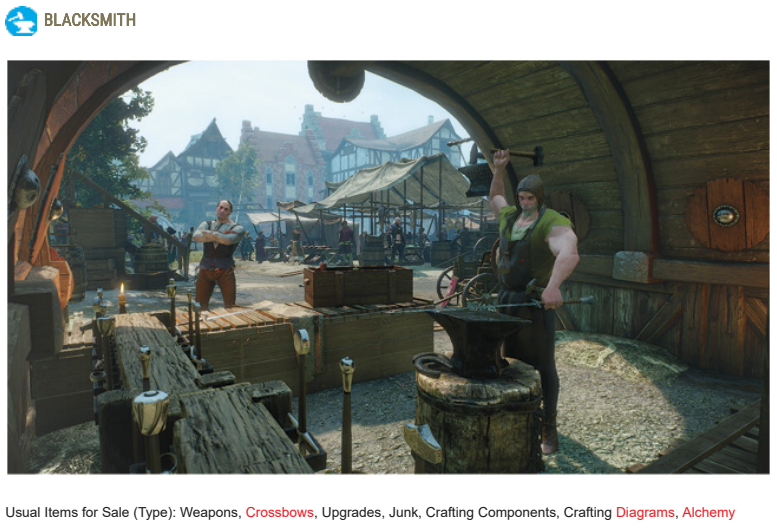
BANDIT CAMP

As the war between Redania and Nilfgaard drives on, deserters or common thugs have seen an increase in numbers, forming roaming gangs that attack travelers, usually on the roads between villages. Some of these gangs are organized enough to have set up camps to rest, recuperate, and divide the loot of the day. Entering these camps unprepared can be a fatal mistake, even for a Witcher, as you must face off with large numbers of bandits who wish to keep their camp a secret for as long as possible. Of course, dead men tell no tales! You are encouraged to remove this threat, as the spoils that can be gained from killing all the bandits and looting the camp are potentially quite lucrative, and can occasionally lead to the discovery of a quest.

BARBER

Visit a barber for a shave (usually costing five crowns) or a new haircut (usually costing 10 crowns). Look for the large scissors both on your World Map, but also hanging as a sign above a Barbershop door. Unlike most traders, Barbers don't concern themselves with Gwent playing.

BLACKSMITH



Usual Items for Sale (Type): Weapons, Crossbows, Upgrades, Junk, Crafting Components, Crafting Diagrams, Alchemy Formulae, Alchemy Ingredients

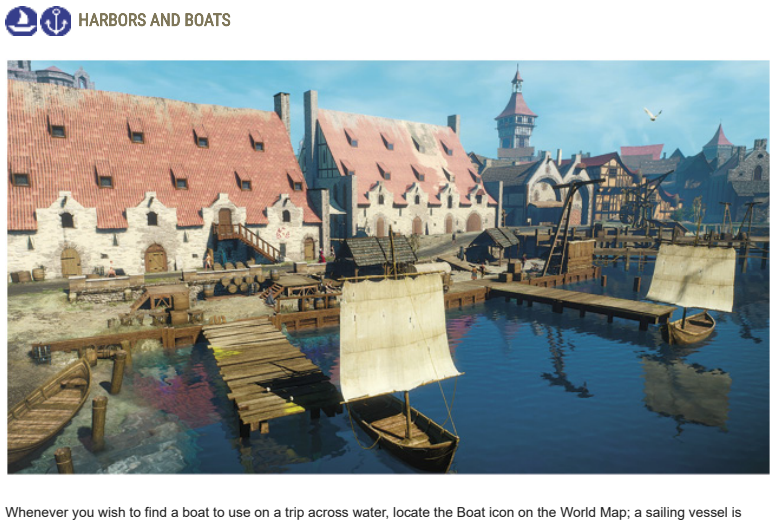
Crafting Opportunities: Chest Armor, Crafting Components, Junk

Repair Opportunities: Weapons and Armor

Remove Upgrade and Dismantle Opportunities: Available

Here, you can craft weapons, repair damaged equipment (armor and weapons), dismantle equipment for parts, or remove upgrades from sockets. Be certain you know the experience of any Blacksmith you wish to utilize the talents of: Amateur, Journeyman, and Master, and Grandmaster Blacksmith craft better quality equipment. Their skill elvel also increases the number of components they are able to recycle when disassembling items. This trader almost certainly is a Gwent player too. For a complete list of Blacksmiths, and the type of wares they sell, consult the Merchants Appendix.

HARBORS AND BOATS



Whenever you wish to find a boat to use on a trip across water, locate the Boat icon on the World Map; a sailing vessel is always at the indicated location.

BROTHEL

Usual Items for Sale (Type): Prostitutes

Should the mood take you, and you wish to spend a night of naughtiness among the brothels of Novigrad City, visit the madame indicated with this symbol. You can choose the lady you visit to enjoy relations with beforehand. This trader almost certainly is a Gwent player too. For a complete list of Brothels, consult the Merchants Appendix. For a complete list of ladies to invite to a bed chamber, consult the Carnal Knowledge Appendix.

DUNGEON

This signifies an interior or underground area, either a location that is primarily man-made (signified in the guide with a Temple icon) or naturally-occurring (signified in the guide with a Cave icon). Dungeons have their own cartography appearing on your mini-map, and are sometimes labyrinthine in nature. If you come across a Dungeon on your travels, be sure to consult the Atlas so you know how deep and intricate the area is. Some Dungeons are part of Signposted areas, while others have their own unique names.

GRINDSTONE

Enhanced Weapons
13:41

Also known as "Sharpening Stones", Grindstones are usually found near to Armorer's Tables, and both are situated close to a Blacksmith or Armorer, within a settlement. Simply walk up to a Grindstone, and use it to grant your weapons an increase in its sharpness (allowing for more damage to be dealt for a short while). This is where to go to get a boost before a tough fight.

GUARDED TREASURE

Sometimes shipments of goods or treasures are lost between villages. The reasons for this are numerous, but bandits or monsters have become the distressingly common cause. You may hear about such loot as you pass through the villages of the Northern Realms, and may even feel inclined to investigate this personally. The bandits or monsters can be found surrounding the item of interest (usually a chest or corpse with treasure of reasonable value); and it stands to reason that they must be forcibly removed before you can claim the goods for yourself.

HERBALIST

Usual Items for Sale (Type): Upgrades, Junk, Crafting Components, Alchemy Formulae, Alchemy Ingredients

Crafting Opportunities: Alchemy Substances (Mutagens), Alcohol, Bombs, Oils, Potions

A high proportion of Herbalists are halflings, and may have gardens surrounding their place of operations where further ingredients can be harvested. Such Herbalists are vital for their knowledge of formulae, and for mixing Alchemy ingredients. This trader almost certainly is a Gwent player too. For a complete list of Herbalists, and the type of wares they sell, consult the Merchants Appendix.

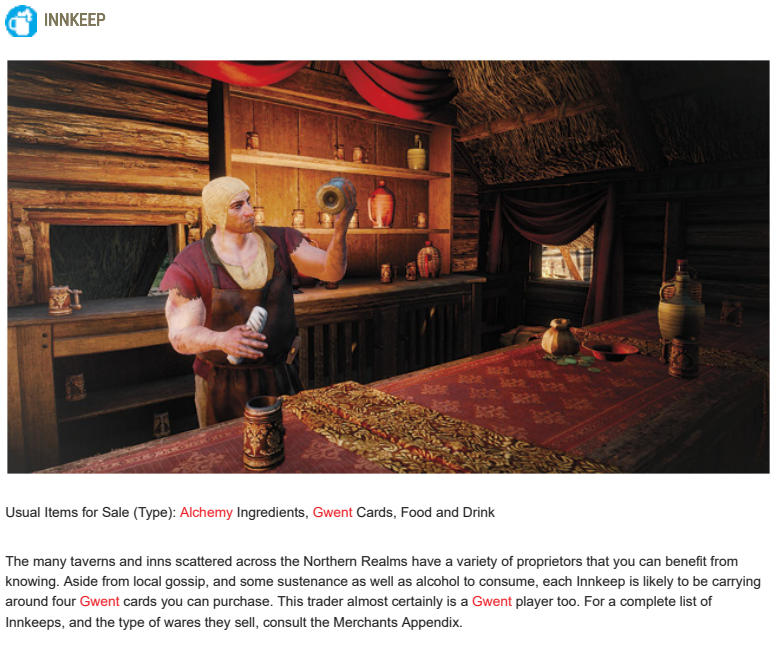
HIDDEN TREASURE

You also come across information about treasures hidden in various parts of the wilderness, left forgotten to the world. In these instances, it is simply a matter of finding the treasure and claiming it to resolve these Points of Interest. Usually, the place where hidden treasure is indicated on the map has a small area of investigation. This leads to a clue (and sometimes a key) to the whereabouts of the actual treasure, and a small quest begins until the treasure is found. There are well over 40 of these secret Treasure Hunts, and all with a related quest are revealed in the Treasure Hunt chapter of this guide.

In addition, some Hidden Treasures start much more involved Scavenger Hunts, which always uncover a wealth of written materials, clues, and other information regarding a different Witcher School, and its associated gear. These more involved Scavenger Hunts are detailed later in this guide.

Finally, there may be occasional Hidden Treasure that doesn't start either a Treasure Hunt or Scavenger Hunt quest. Simply find the icon on the map, and the treasure will be nearby.

INNKEEP



Usual Items for Sale (Type): Alchemy Ingredients, Gwent Cards, Food and Drink

The many taverns and inns scattered across the Northern Realms have a variety of proprietors that you can benefit from knowing. Aside from local gossip, and some sustenance as well as alcohol to consume, each Innkeep is likely to be carrying around four Gwent cards you can purchase. This trader almost certainly is a Gwent player too. For a complete list of Innkeeps, and the type of wares they sell, consult the Merchants Appendix.

MONSTER DEN

This location is infested by monsters and a constant worry for those living nearby. Hopefully some white-haired cat-eyed mutant warrior with a penchant for Signs might deem the location interesting enough to visit? If you do, expect to battle one or more monsters, before gathering any treasure afterward. This location only turns grey once the quality loot, and the unpleasant entities, are both removed. Clearing Dens provides experience, treasure, and monster materials used for crafting and alchemy.

MONSTER NEST

Drowner Nest

Endrega Nest

Ghoul Nest

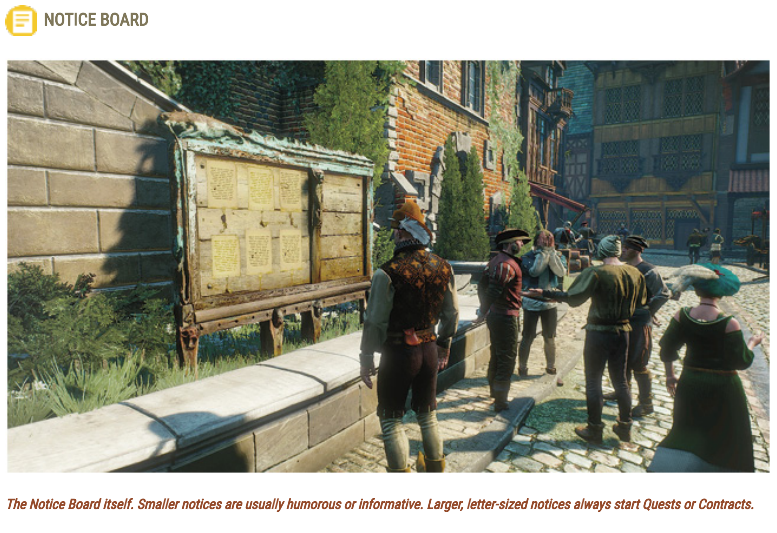
Nekkers, Ghouls and Alghouls, Rotfiends, Drowners, Harpies, and Endrega are some of the most common threats that plague the land, and they tend to be the most aggressive at colonizing new regions to build nests. While every nest encountered may not be part of a Contract, it benefits you to destroy Nests as you encounter them to make a region safer. As one might expect, monsters guard their nests ferociously. However, once the defenders of a Nest are slain, you can destroy the Nest using one of the many bombs you can craft. Destroying nests provides experience and monster materials used for crafting and alchemy.

Harpy Nest

Nekker Nest

Rotfiend Nest

NOTICE BOARD



The Notice Board itself. Smaller notices are usually humorous or informative. Larger, letter-sized notices always start Quests or Contracts.

Many villages and city districts have a Notice Board (the city of Novigrad contains more than one) where citizens post news. Informative and sometimes humorous notes can be found on Notice Boards, revealing Points of Interest on your World Map. More often than not, Secondary Quests and Contracts are pinned to notes left on a Board. Contracts send you after a dangerous mark at the request of a village or local lord.

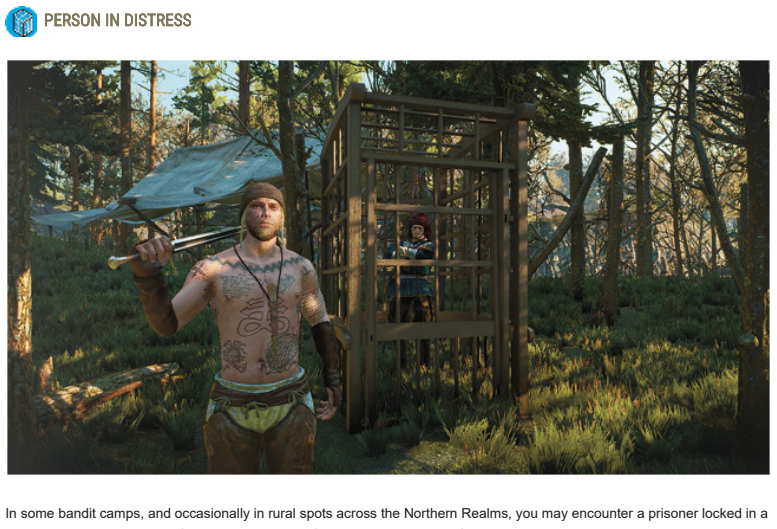
ALL ABOVE BOARD: WHEN TO CHECK FOR NOTICES

If a Notice Board icon on your World Map is white, no quests are available. If a Notice

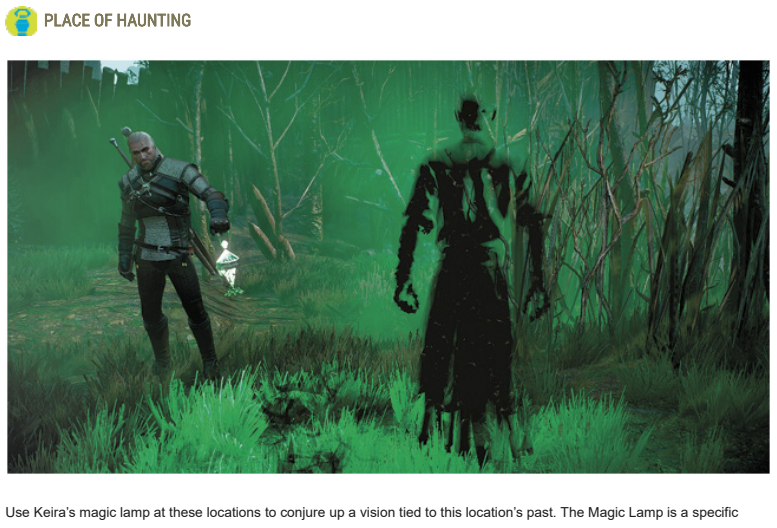
Board icon on your World map is yellow, with a "!" sign near it, expect to find at least one Quest at this location.

PERSON IN DISTRESS



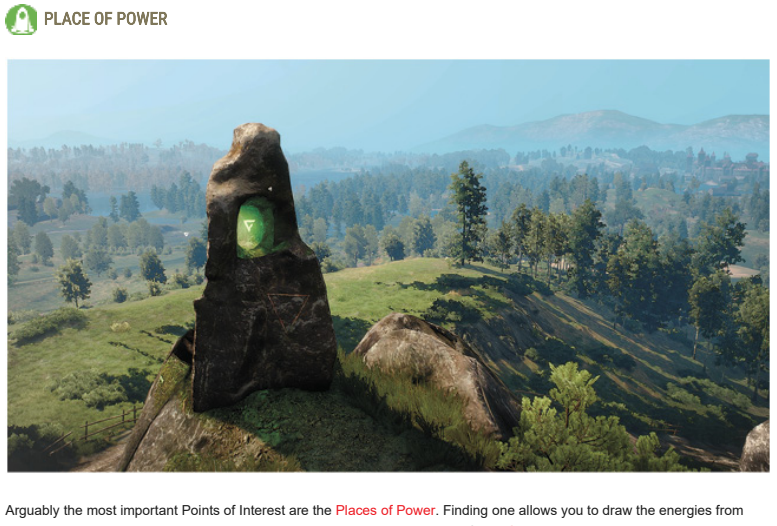
In some bandit camps, and occasionally in rural spots across the Northern Realms, you may encounter a prisoner locked in a holding cage. Freeing these folk—almost always after delivering a series of killing blows to their captors and looting the cage key from the captor leader—may result in rewards. In some cases, the prisoners are actually merchants, armorers, or blacksmiths, who then return to their home villages and offer you their services at a reduced rate, as thanks for the rescue.

PLACE OF HAUNTING



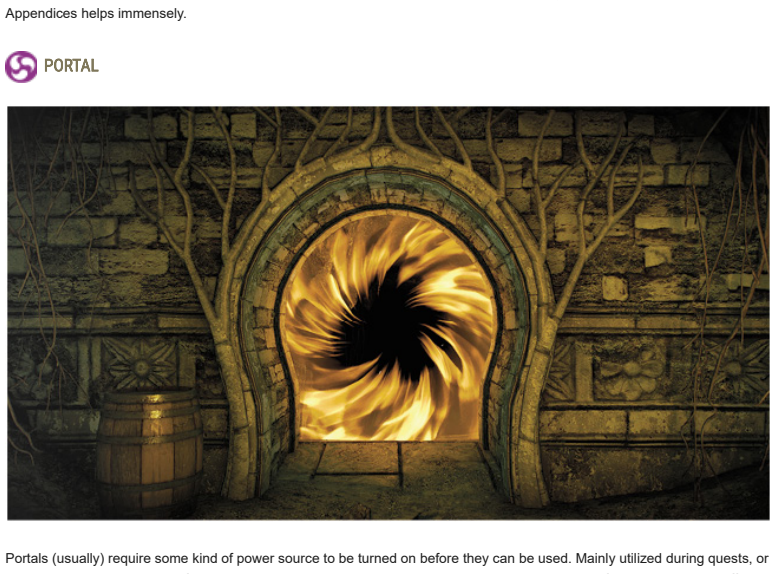
Use Keira's magic lamp at these locations to conjure up a vision tied to this location's past. The Magic Lamp is a specific quest item, and allows you to watch a ghostly past happening occur on the cursed land on which you stand. Most are related to quests.

PLACE OF POWER



Arguably the most important Points of Interest are the Places of Power. Finding one allows you to draw the energies from these stone monoliths, providing a temporary magical enchantment to one of your Signs. They also reward you with an Ability Point which you can use to purchase upgrades from your Character Ability trees. For this reason, it is worth knowing where every Place of Power monument is, and if any are guarded by foes or only accessed during a quest. The Places of Power Appendices helps immensely.

PORTAL



Portals (usually) require some kind of power source to be turned on before they can be used. Mainly utilized during quests, or by sorceresses as a means of rapid travel, expect to walk through these rips in time and space, before emerging in a different location—and sometimes even a different world! These icons aren't shown in the guide's Atlas, as they are always related to a particular quest, and the quest information reveals exact routes to take where portals are concerned.

QUEST AVAILABLE

A new quest is available at this location. Sometimes, the conversations (or lamentations) of a person at a location reveal a quest. Other times it is a Notice Board missive. Or simply walking near to a person enables this icon on your World Map. Move to the location of the quest when you wish to start it. Your World Map does not differentiate between quest types (aside from Hearts of Stone quests (blue) and Blood and Wine quests (red). However, this guide's Atlas does further subdivide quests; so check the Atlas maps for the type of quest, and where the quest walkthrough is in this guide.

ROACH, FAITHFUL STEED

Your loyal, if somewhat finicky mount is never more than a whistle away. Even if you've dismounted in Velen and fast-traveled to Ard Skellig, Roach always appears when you whistle, except when you're underground. Remember Roach can be given items that improve her usefulness:

Contract Trophies

A gruesome severed head hanging from your steed proves your prowess!

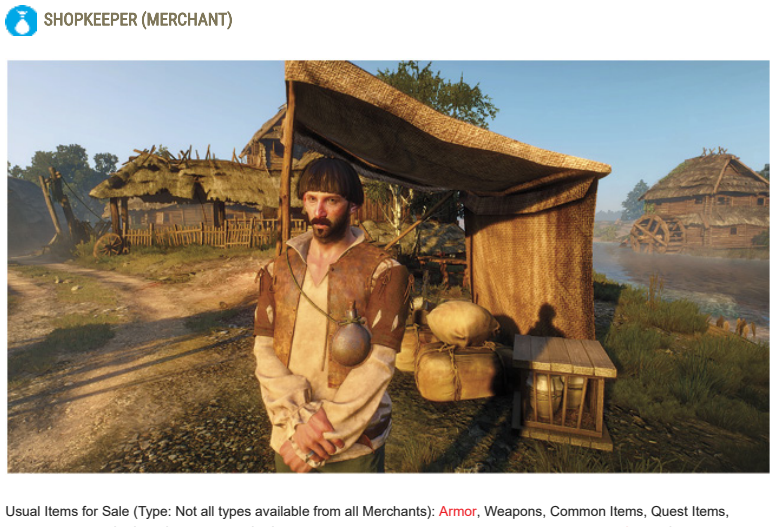
Trophies from successful Contracts can be mounted on a hook hanging from the side of the horse to provide special bonuses. For example, if you slay a Cockatrice during Contract: Shrieker, and fix it to Roach's hook, you receive a +10% chance to dismember enemies! Trophies can be swapped depending on the bonus you want, or sold for crowns if you wish to give up the bonus. Look for Trophies in your Food and Drink menu, and place the desired trophy in Roach's Inventory space (on the right side of the Inventory Menu screen).

Horse Blinders, Saddles, And Saddle Bags

Saddles can be purchased from certain vendors (see the Merchants Appendix) or won during Horse Races, or found as loot. Saddles allow you to gallop for longer distances before Roach tires herself out.

Saddle Bags are earned in the same way, and allow Roach to take some of the burden off your back. You can even find Horse Blinders that help Roach remain calmer for longer when enemies are closing in.

SHOPKEEPER (MERCHANT)



Usual Items for Sale (Type: Not all types available from all Merchants): Armor, Weapons, Common Items, Quest Items, Upgrades, Junk, Crafting Components, Crafting Diagrams, Alchemy Formulae, Alchemy Ingredients, Gwent Cards, Food and Drink, Books, Money-lending.

Merchants are by far the most ubiquitous trader you find in your travels. Some Merchants provide food, others deal in formulae and ingredients, and others sell books. Merchants are marked with a special icon. Some merchants are constantly traveling the highways and byways (usually between two settlements), which places them in danger from the local wildlife. If they come under attack, you must rescue them or else risk losing their services. Other merchants can be found as prisoners (Persons in Distress). All have good to trade, and coin to gather as you sell off items you don't need. Merchants almost certainly are Gwent players too. For a complete list of Merchants and Wandering Merchants, and the type of wares they sell, consult the Merchants Appendix.

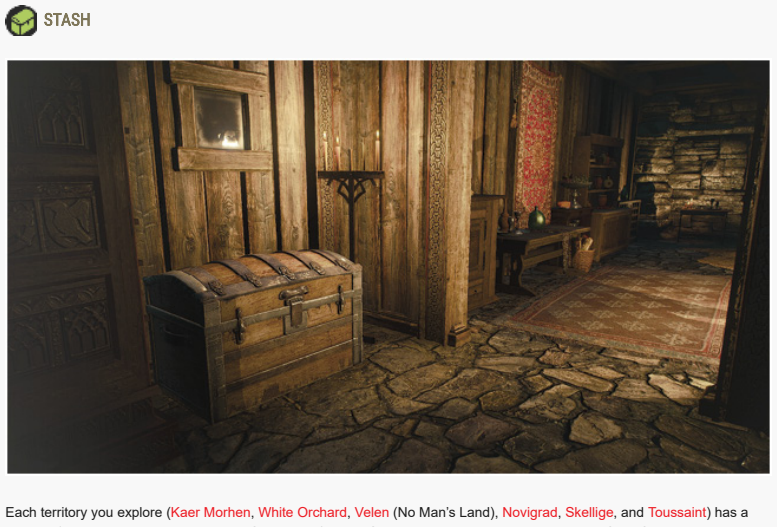
SMUGGLERS' CACHE

Similar to hidden treasure, Smugglers' Caches are locations where clandestine peasants hid a variety of goods with the intent that only they would ever find them. The caches themselves tend to be well camouflaged to the unpracticed eye, and Witcher Senses are recommended to find them. A cache could be found hidden under a bridge, or could be a series of treasure chests dangling from barrels floating in water. Search the area where you see this icon to find the cache you crave.

SPOILS OF WAR

Battles between Redanian and Nilfgaardian factions have left fields littered with corpses. Squabbles in Skellige have led to the spilling of blood. Ships have been sunk at sea and in rivers. You can often find valuable supplies left behind by the victors and the defeated, if you search these areas.

STASH



Each territory you explore (Kaer Morhen, White Orchard, Velen (No Man's Land), Novigrad, Skellige, and Toussaint) has a location (usually the largest settlement of the region) with a Stash crate where you can store items for safekeeping. As you constantly risk the penalties for being over-encumbered (slow movement, ineffectual combat techniques), and even with Saddle Bags, Roach may not carry enough for those adventurers with hoarding tendencies, you may wish to utilize this large chest. It keeps any items you don't wish to carry or sell. Simply return here if you want to take an item (if you want to sell it or break it down for parts, for example). Stashes are also perfect for:

Starting a collection of items, such as swords you find on your journeys through Skellige, and displaying them in a Stash.

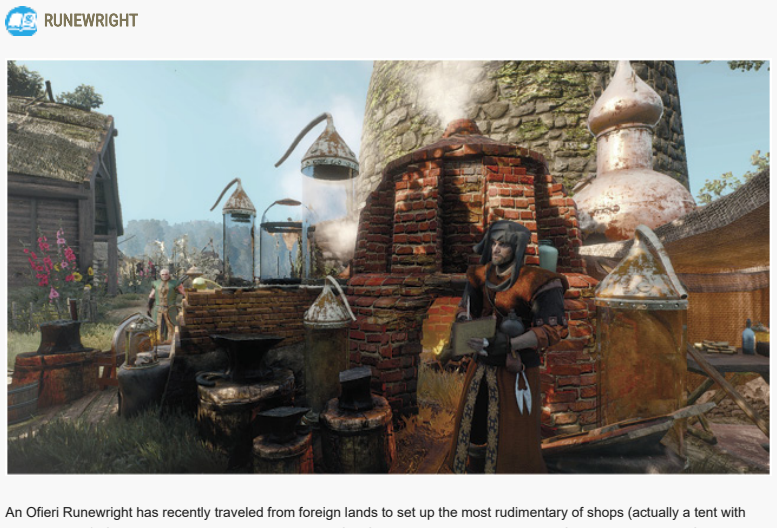
Placing an item at one Stash, and then finding it at a Stash in a different location (all Stashes are linked to each other).

But remember that Stashes can get full too. If you're finding you and Roach are weighted down, and your Stash is full, you really need to find a Merchant and start selling some of your hoard!

POINTS OF INTEREST: ADDITIONAL

The Hearts of Stone Expansion gives you another mapping point of interest to discover, along with more points of interest you should already be familiar with:

RUNEWRIGHT

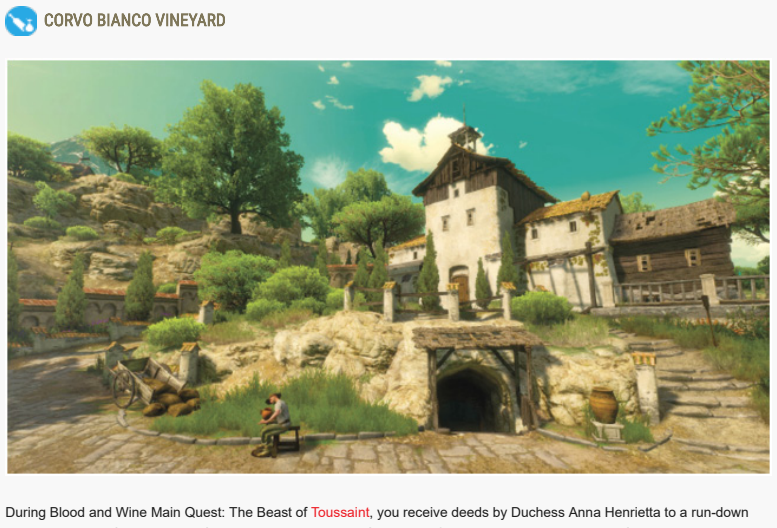


An Ofieri Runewright has recently traveled from foreign lands to set up the most rudimentary of shops (actually a tent with nothing to sell). Once you visit him at the Upper Mill in Gustfields, and complete his series of quests, agreeing to finance his operations (and giving him close to 30,000 crowns in the process), he is able to imbue your weapons and armor with a specific runic word. This is an alternative enchantment to runes and glyphs. To find out more about the Runewright.

POINTS OF INTEREST: ADDITIONAL

The Blood and Wine Expansion allows exploration into a brand new realm; the Duchy of Toussaint. Here, along with the usual points of interest to find, are some brand new exploration areas to familiarize yourself with:

CORVO BIANCO VINEYARD



During Blood and Wine Main Quest: The Beast of Toussaint, you receive deeds by Duchess Anna Henrietta to a run-down winery known as Corvo Bianco. Complete Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: No Place Like Home to fully upgrade this location, allowing the growing of greenhouse herbs create and change the colors of mutagens for your Mutations, an orchard where you can grow plants to create dyes to change the color of your Witcher gear, as well as the following:

Corvo Bianco Master Bedroom: Bed

Inside Corvo Bianco is a master bedroom, which should be upgraded. There is a bed to sleep on, which can also be upgraded (to Level 3) during the quest. Rest (Meditate by accessing the bed) for at least one hour to receive the following bonuses:

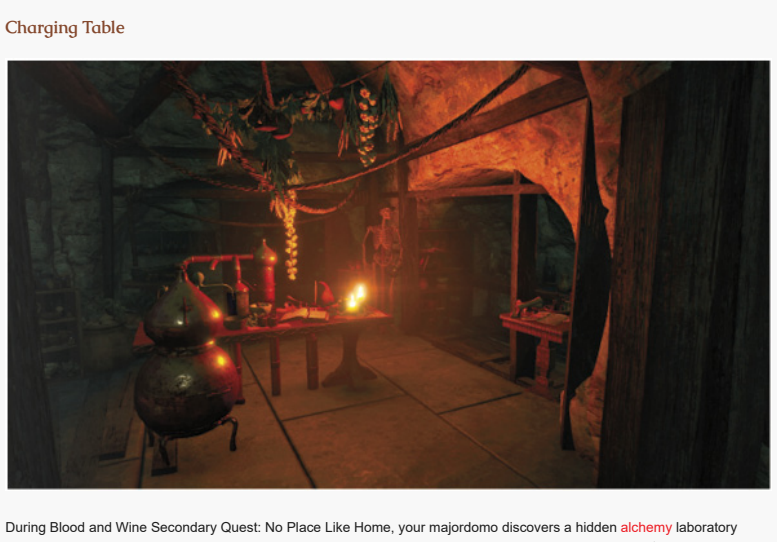
- Initial Bed: No bonuses.
- Bed Level 1: Heals you.
- Bed Level 2: +500 Maximum Health.
- Bed Level 3: +1000 Maximum Health.

Corvo Bianco Stables

Rest in your bed for at least one hour, once you've improved the stables at Corvo Bianco, and Roach receives +100 Stamina.

Alchemy Laboratory: Dismantling Table

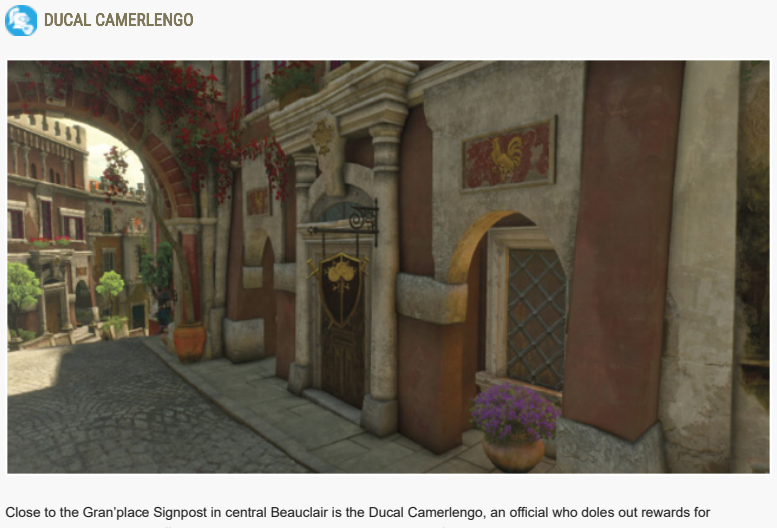
Charging Table



During Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: No Place Like Home, your majordomo discovers a hidden alchemy laboratory under your manor, in the wine cellar. Further exploration uncovers a table where you can Dismantle items (without having to bring them to a merchant and pay them for this).

Rest in your bed for at least one hour, then visit your Alchemy Laboratory under the manor house, and access the Charging Table, which grants you one additional charge for each set of bombs and potions every time you use it.

DUCAL CAMERLENGO



Close to the Gran'place Signpost in central Beauclair is the Ducal Camerlengo, an official who doles out rewards for unmarked contracts. He offers 100 crowns each time you complete the following:

- Save a Knight Errant in Distress.
- Save a Person in Distress.
- Remove all threats in most (but not all) Abandoned Sites.
- Remove all threats at an Outlaw Hanse.

Simply visit him and request your reward. Note he only pays for successful clearings of areas (if a Knight Errant in Distress dies, no reward is given for example), and he's only interested in contracts completed in Toussaint: So saving a Person in Distress in Velen makes no difference to him!

KNIGHT ERRANT IN DISTRESS

At this location, which is ostensibly a Bandit Camp, a group of bandits are engaged in combat with a Knight Errant of the Duchy. You are encouraged to save the knight before he is killed, after which you can claim a reward (100 crowns) from the Duchy Camerlengo. Fail, and this is simply a bandit camp and place where a Knight Errant met his match.

OUTLAW HANSE

Three large-scale fortifications (Tulasens Caves, Arthach Palace Ruins, and Mont Crane Castle) have been overrun by an outlaw gang of bandits, who have Bandit Camps (and sometimes Knight Errants in Distress and Abandoned Sites) surrounding this central stronghold. They are armed-to-the-teeth, number in the dozens, and can call upon reinforcements if you let a torch-carrying bandit light a signal fire at this location. Clear the Hanse of all foes (Bandits, Hanse Dogs, and the bandit leader), and expect the Knights Errant to arrive to secure the area (and an armorer or blacksmith to offer deep discounts depending on the location). You can also claim a reward (100 crowns) from the Duchy Camerlengo for each Outlaw Hanse you wipe out.

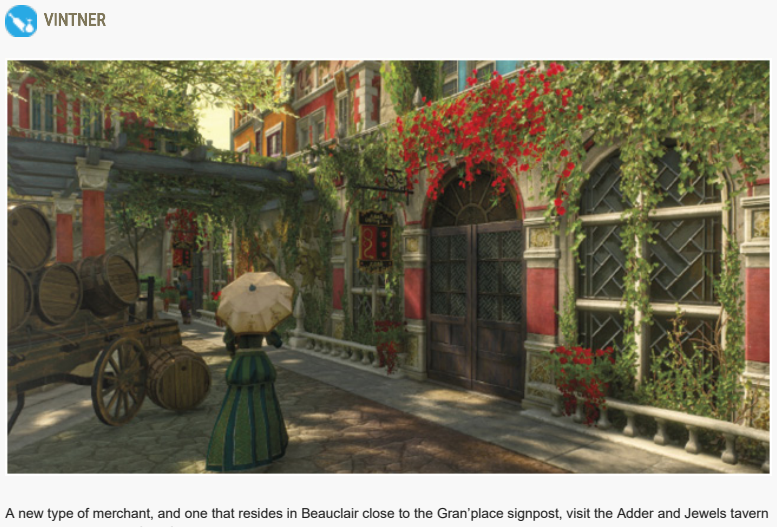
GRANDMASTER ARMORER AND BLACKSMITH

Northwest of the Metinna Gate in Beauclair is the residence and shop of Lazare Lafargue, an enthusiastic armorer and blacksmith who studied under the fabled Thrahaearn's side, a legendary elven master armorer. Should you complete the Blood and Wine Scavenger Hunts of Toussaint, he can craft fabled Grandmaster Witcher gear, as well as Master gear, and both armor and blacksmith items. He's a must-visit fellow!

THE PROPHET LEBIODA'S FOOTSTEPS

The foreman at the Ardaiso Quarry in eastern Toussaint is currently managing the transportation of workers and tools to a building site in northwest Toussaint where a massive statue of the Prophet Lebioda is being erected. However, there are five locations where the foreman's wagons have run into problems, indicated by this icon. All are part of Secondary Quest: Big Feet to Fill.

VINTNER



A new type of merchant, and one that resides in Beauclair close to the Gran'place signpost, visit the Adder and Jewels tavern and purchase some of the finest wines known to humanity. In all other aspects, the vintner acts as an Innkeep.

VINTNER'S CONTRACT

Here you can help a vintner clear a cave of monsters. The vintner is a merchant who offers you discounts on his goods once you succeed in ridding his nearby cave (used for wine storage) of a particular pack of monsters.

VINEYARD INFESTATION

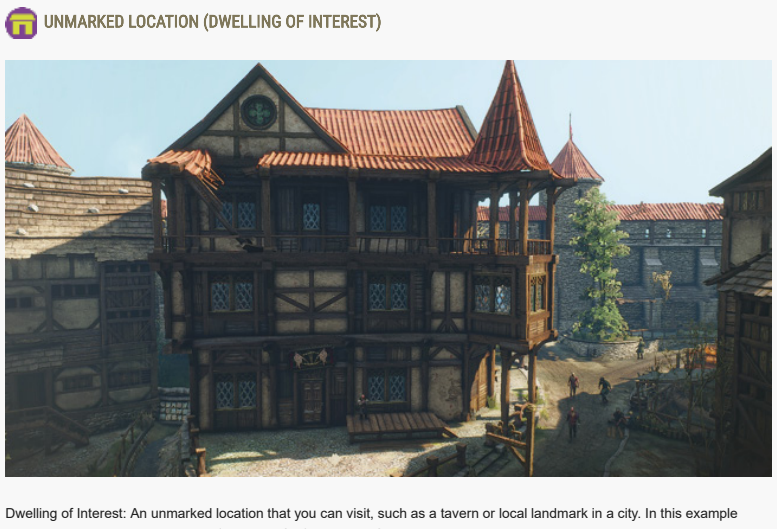
Giant Centipede Nest

Monster Nest threats that plague the Duchy of Toussaint's vineyards, and have built nests at these locations. Treat these like Monster Nests you've encountered before; destroy these infestations to make the region safer. Once the creatures at an infestation are slain, destroy the nest using one of the many bombs you can craft. Destroying nests provides experience and monster materials used for crafting and alchemy.

POINTS OF INTEREST: ADDITIONAL (GUIDE ONLY)

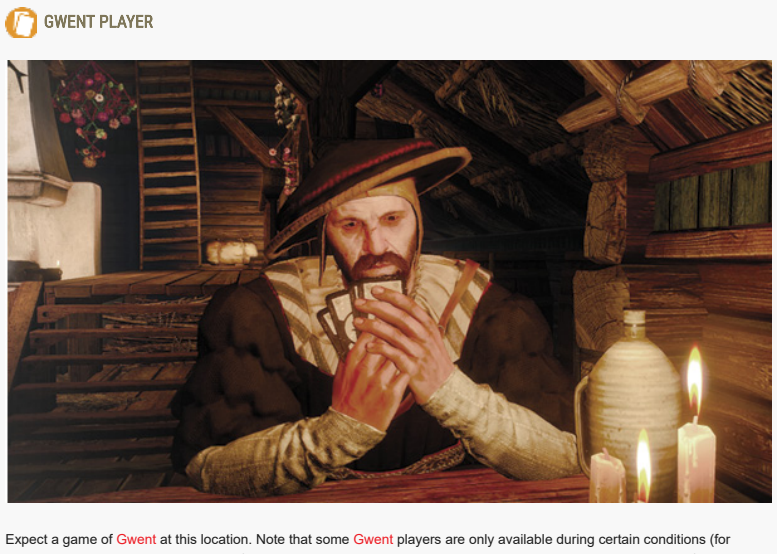
This guide also gives you more information than even a fully-traversed World Map! In addition to all the previously-listed Points of Interest, this guide tracks the following additional Points of Interest:

UNMARKED LOCATION (DWELLING OF INTEREST)



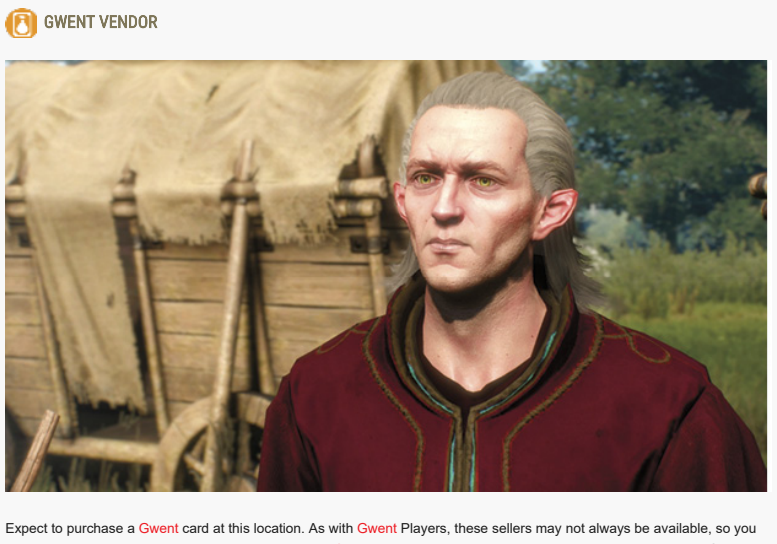
Dwelling of Interest: An unmarked location that you can visit, such as a tavern or local landmark in a city. In this example picture, the Rosemary and Thyme (Novigrad City) is shown. Occasionally when you are journeying into a new area that doesn't have a Signpost, you may notice the name of the area appear on-screen for a few moments. Where appropriate, such locations are flagged and described in the Atlas.

GWENT PLAYER



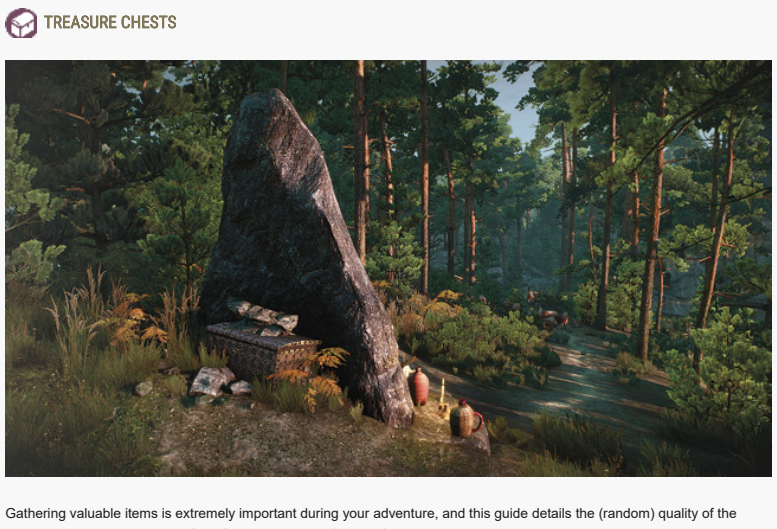
Expect a game of Gwent at this location. Note that some Gwent players are only available during certain conditions (for example, they might die during a quest), so don't expect them to be available consistently. They are also usually (but not always) a Trader already at the location shown in the Atlas.

GWENT VENDOR



Expect to purchase a Gwent card at this location. As with Gwent Players, these sellers may not always be available, so you may wish to buy what they have as soon as possible. Gwent Vendors are usually Merchants or Innkeeps, and have four cards (and occasionally more) for sale. Buy these as early as you can to bolster your deck. For a complete list of Gwent Vendors.

TREASURE CHESTS



Gathering valuable items is extremely important during your adventure, and this guide details the (random) quality of the treasure you should expect to find. Consult the Atlas Chapter for all chest locations dotted throughout the Northern Realms.

Good chest: Expect reasonably valuable (random) items in this type of chest.

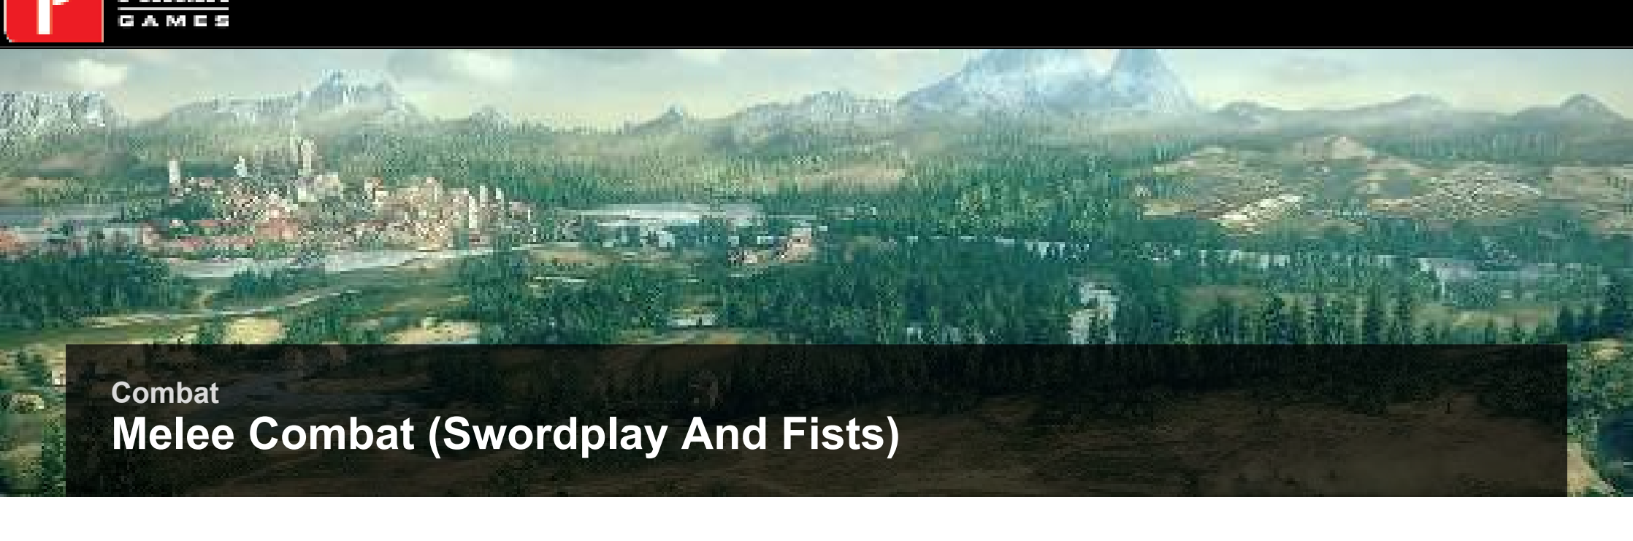
Better Chest: Expect better, more valuable (random) loot

Relic Chest: An extremely valuable relic is found in this chest.

Scavenger Hunt Chest: Loot from the Witcher School is found here.

Quest Chest: This chest is utilized in a specific quest. The loot itself is not required to complete the quest. Such quests may also be accessible when this quest isn't active, but it's usually advisable to find them during a quest that takes you to this location. Check the quest you are on to see if the location is mentioned.

Hidden Treasure Key and Chest: Some chests require a key to unlock. This may be hidden somewhere, on the corpse of a fallen fellow with clues to read, or in an area to loot. Almost all of them are related to named Treasure Hunts. Check the area where they key is shown carefully.



Combat

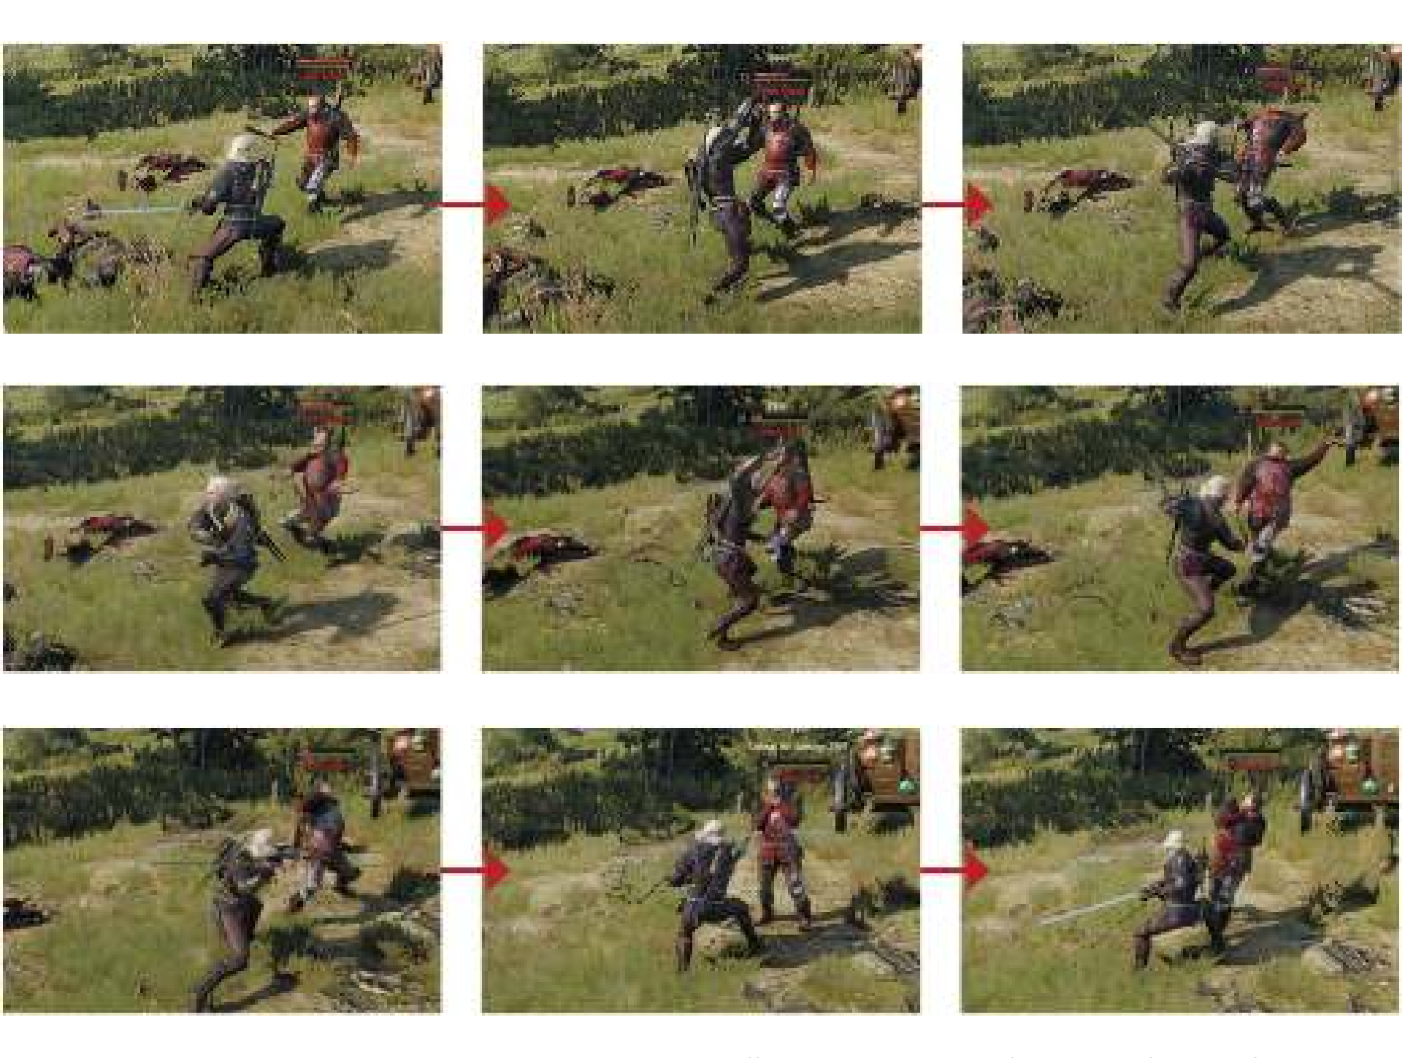
Melee Combat (Swordplay And Fists)

This section introduces you to the main combat techniques you need to master so that your adventures across the Northern Realms are both bloody and satisfying, rather than a series of panicked sprints away from overwhelming enemies.

FAST ATTACKS

The basic offensive technique at Geralt’s disposal, fast attacks are light, rapid blows that can be chained together quickly. Against opponents whose guard has been lowered, you can string together three quick strikes before they even have chance to block. Against average humans, a flurry of fast attacks can keep them firmly on the defensive, while more trained opponents can parry or even count a fast attack.

Fast attacks can be alternated with strong attacks, and vice versa. This allows you to string together a series of strikes that not only keeps the enemy on the defensive, but will also be a costly Stamina drain (to them) as they try to block and parry. Watch the small yellow bar beneath enemy Vitality gauges to determine how much Stamina they have.

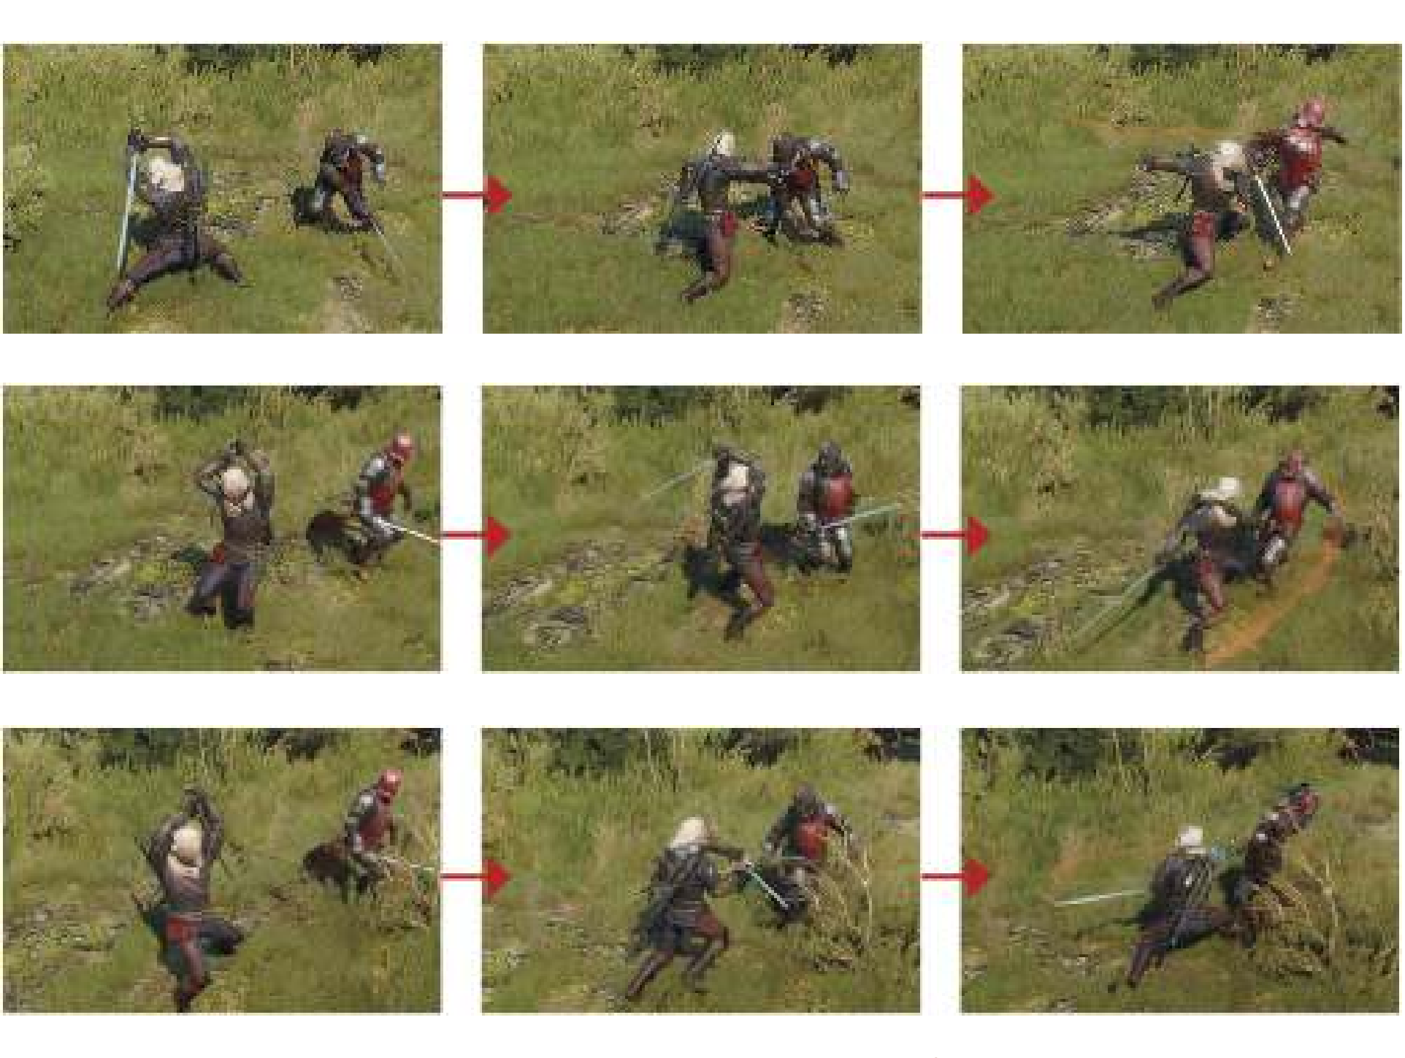


Fast attacks are easily chained together into a three-hit combination that offers quick, light strikes before a regular foe can defend.

STRONG ATTACKS

Strong attacks ignore the enemy’s armor and, even if they manage to block the attack, the drain on their Stamina may be more than they can handle. However, as each strike has a wind-up time (a short delay) before Geralt’s sword or fists finally lash out, swift enemies can actually interrupt a strong attack with a fast attack of their own.

All sword or hand-to-hand attacks can be chained into lengthy combination of both fast and strong strikes. Practice in the grounds of Kaer Morhen until you perfect your striking. You can even suddenly switch the direction Geralt is attacking in in mid-combo. This is especially useful when surrounded by enemies. Either quickly shift focus with fast attacks to interrupt enemies striking at your flanks, or surprise them by whirling on them with a heavy attack to knock their defenses aside.



Strong attacks can really hammer the point home, though you need to time the slight delay before the attack strikes, so you aren’t interrupted.

ADRENALINE

Every attack you land builds Adrenaline Points. You can have a maximum of three Adrenaline Points. Each point counts as a 10% attack power increase, which makes it exceedingly valuable to Geralt in combat. However, taking damage can cause you to lose Adrenaline, and some Abilities require the use of Adrenaline.

There are Character Abilities that can prevent this, and there are other abilities that increase how much Adrenaline you generate! See the various character abilities later in this chapter to see how you can improve your Adrenaline generation, or even use it to power your Stamina!

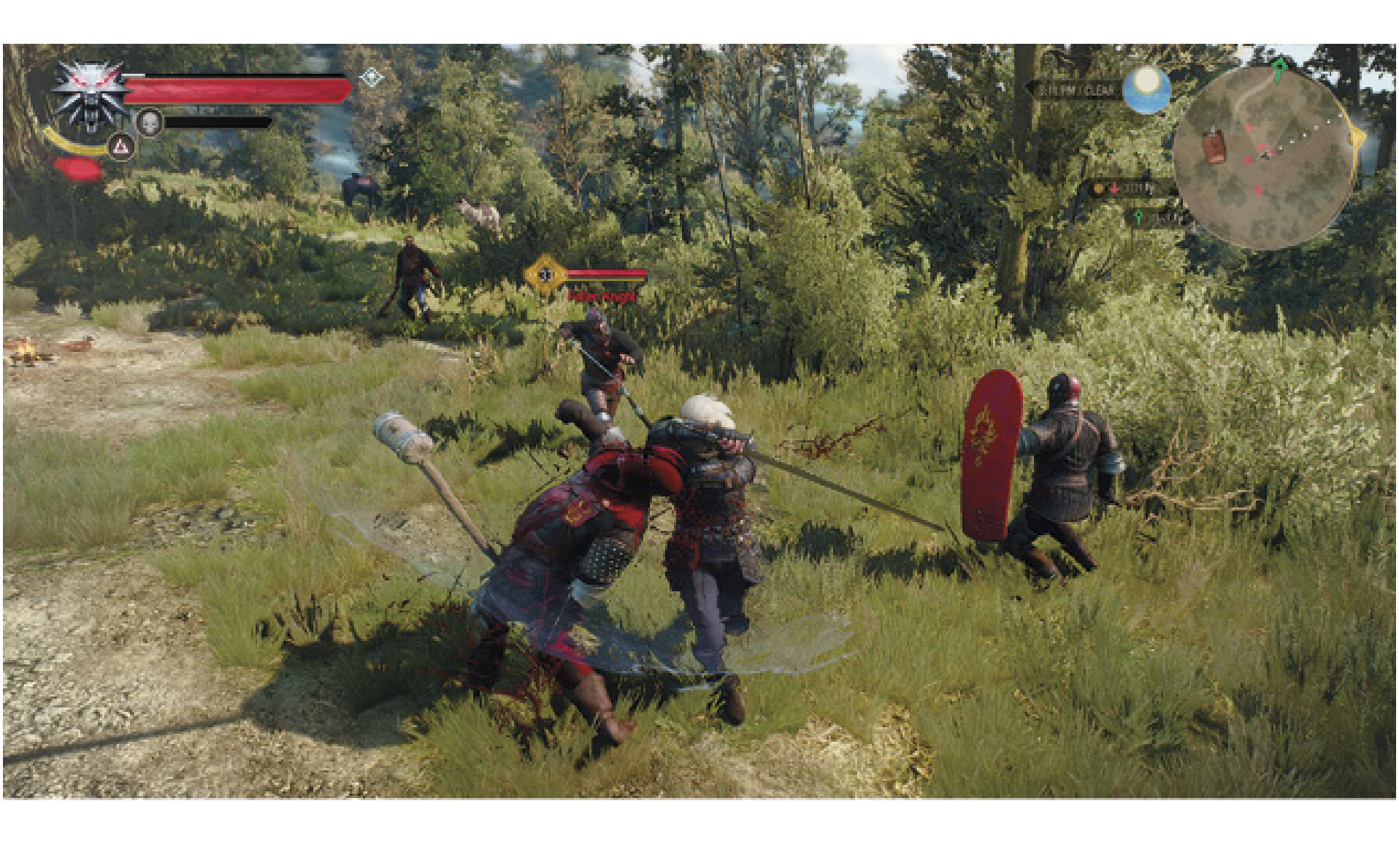
SPECIAL ATTACKS

Activating certain abilities in the Character Ability branches unlocks special attacks that use Stamina and Adrenaline Points, which are earned by landing successful attacks on enemies. Adrenaline is lost by sustaining damage, but certain Character Abilities can limit this loss.

There are two special attacks for swords: Whirl and Rend. Whirl is earned by purchasing the ability in the Fast Attack section of the Combat Ability Branch (remember you need to place it in an empty slot in your Character menu!). Rend is found in the Strong Attack section. See the information on the Combat Ability Tree later in this chapter for more details on these abilities. To use them, you must invest Ability Points and then activate either by setting it in an Ability Slot.

SPECIAL ATTACK: WHIRL

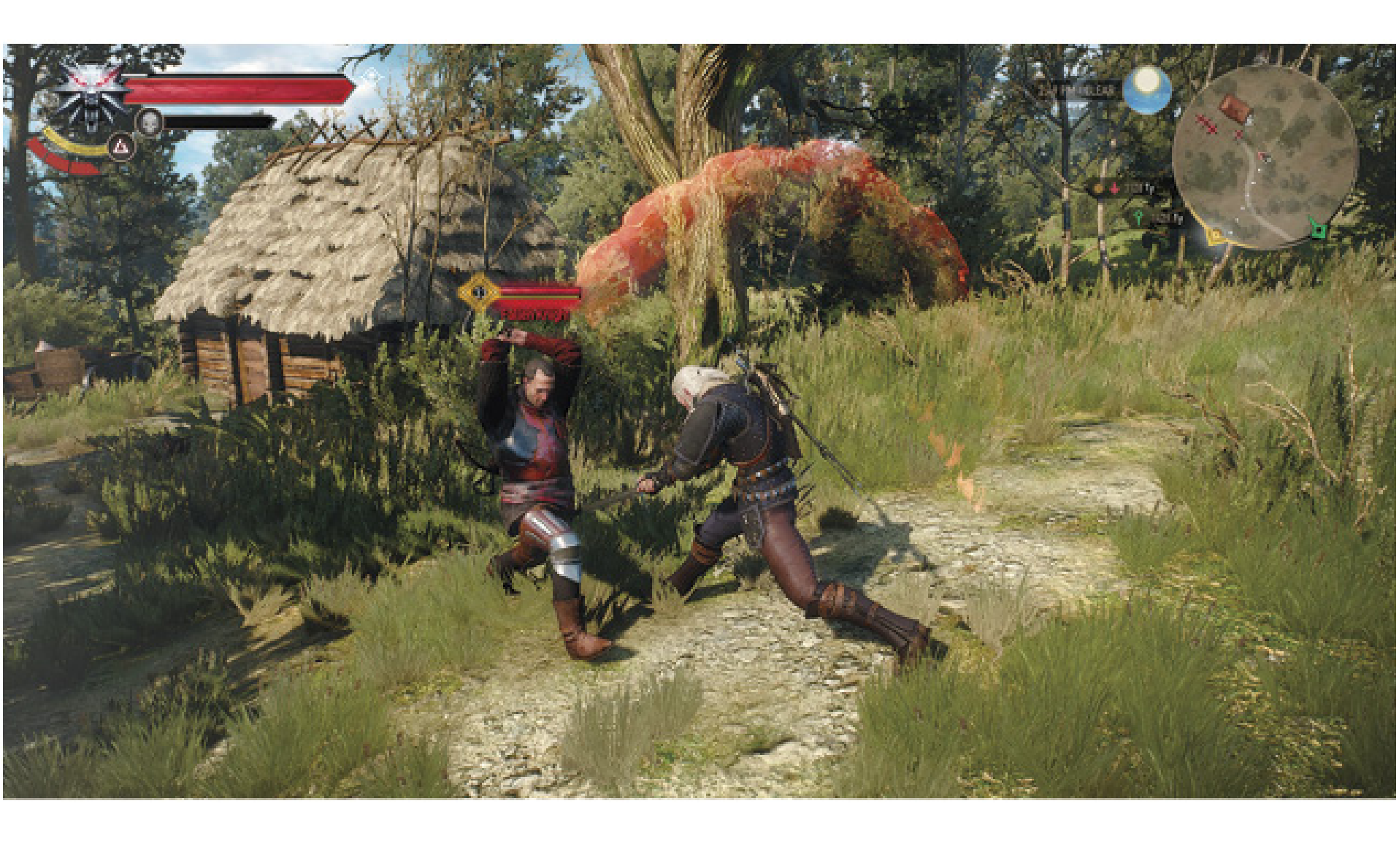
After ensuring that Whirl is set up as an active Character Ability, you can use it in combat. As long as you have Stamina to spare, hold down your fast attack button to become a dervish of death! This attack cuts anyone that gets close to Geralt as he spins and pirouettes forward, sword lashing out in all directions. The attack drains Stamina and then Adrenaline, so you do not need Adrenaline to start the attack. You only need Stamina to start.



Note that Geralt is still vulnerable to attacks while using Whirl. So be wary of ranged attackers and enemies trying to flank you. Large enemies can also fight through the barrage of attacks to still score an interrupting strike!

SPECIAL ATTACK: REND

You can use Rend in combat once it’s set up as an active Character Ability. Hold down the strong attack button to begin storing Stamina and Adrenaline for a single, powerful strike. This attack can be upgraded to increase your chances of scoring a critical hit. The more Adrenaline you have while charging the strike, the greater the damage you cause.



Are you fighting a slow, lumbering behemoth? Rend it into more sizable chunks with this special attack: Ensure you’ve targeted your victim to make certain this vertical chop hits home!

To get maximum effect out of Rend, you must spend significant time charging up the strike. This process can be interrupted out of the attack by damage you sustain, so be mindful of the situation and use the attack wisely.

IT’S ALL IN THE WRIST: USING REND WISELY

Try to hold the Strong Attack button just long enough for you to attack with Rend, then let go. The shorter the time you hold before the attack, the less Stamina you use; this allows you to try multiple Rend strikes while keeping your Stamina up.

FINISHERS (EXECUTIONS)

Mortally wounded human-sized enemies may fall to the ground slowly, gasping out their final breaths. If an indicator appears next to them, prompting you to press your fast attack button to finish them off, Geralt performs a brutal finishing strike to foes still on their feet. For those lying on the ground thanks to a bomb or a blast of Aard, he simply runs them through with his blade. You can also enable or disable Geralt automatically using executions on dying foes in the Gameplay > Options menu.

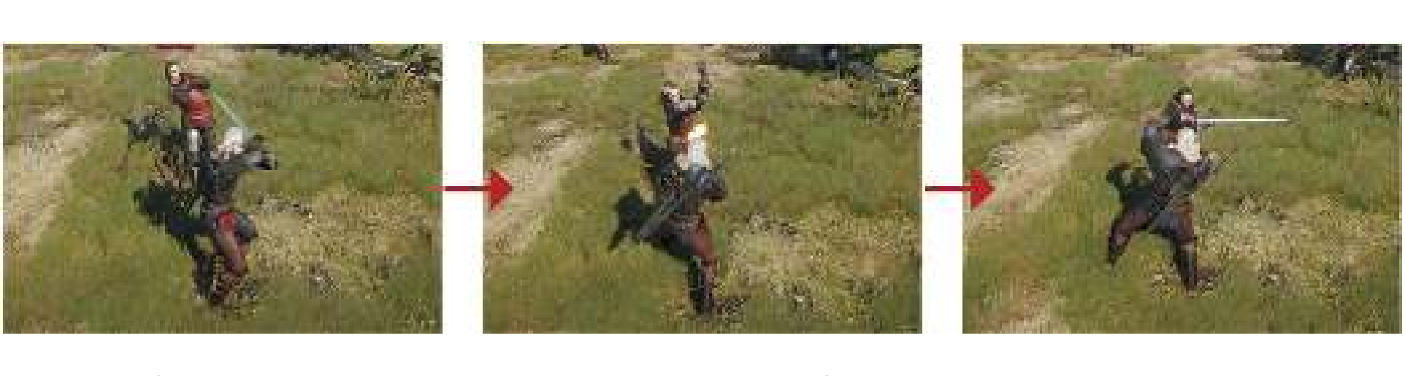
FIGHTING ON HORSEBACK

Geralt can use his swords (and crossbow) while on horseback to a limited degree. It’s generally not the best option to fight on horseback unless you absolutely must. Your mount can throw you off the saddle if it gets too frightened. Watch the Horse Fear meter to avoid this, which stuns Geralt for quite some time and leaves him vulnerable to the enemy. You can calm your mount by using Axii. Certain upgrades for Roach (Horse Blinders) can also assuage the horse during combat.

PARRYING

Geralt can stop fists with his hands, or deflect weapon strikes (and the claws—and even the tongues—of some beasts) with his swords. By holding down the Parry button, Geralt prepares to guard against any strike coming at him. Geralt can parry anything from any direction, but repeated blows can break through his defenses, and some blows cannot be parried at all. Arrows can be parried if you spend points on the Arrow Deflection Character Ability, and you can eventually reflect them back at the shooter!

You cannot parry every physical attack. Humans with massive two-handed weapons easily overwhelm your parry attempts, and some beasts strike with such power and ferocity that they break your guard and land punishing blows regardless of your Stamina level. Damage is reduced trying to parry some of these attacks, but Geralt staggers from the force of the attack. In these cases, it’s best to either evade or dodge roll the attack, or attempt a counter-attack.



An attack by a foe who is easily parried allows you to guard against his strike, nullifying damage.

COUNTERATTACKS

Mastering this skill can be a great help for many of the battles that Geralt faces. If you press the Parry button just before an attack hits Geralt, he blocks the attack, then performs a special counterattack that can either cause damage to foes or knock them off balance, allowing you to unleash your full fury upon them. You cannot counterattack any foe wielding a two-handed weapon, or attacks from larger foes such as giants.

SPECIAL ATTACK: REND

You can use Rend in combat once it’s set up as an active Character Ability. Hold down the strong attack button to begin storing Stamina and Adrenaline for a single, powerful strike. This attack can be upgraded to increase your chances of scoring a critical hit. The more Adrenaline you have while charging the strike, the greater the damage you cause.

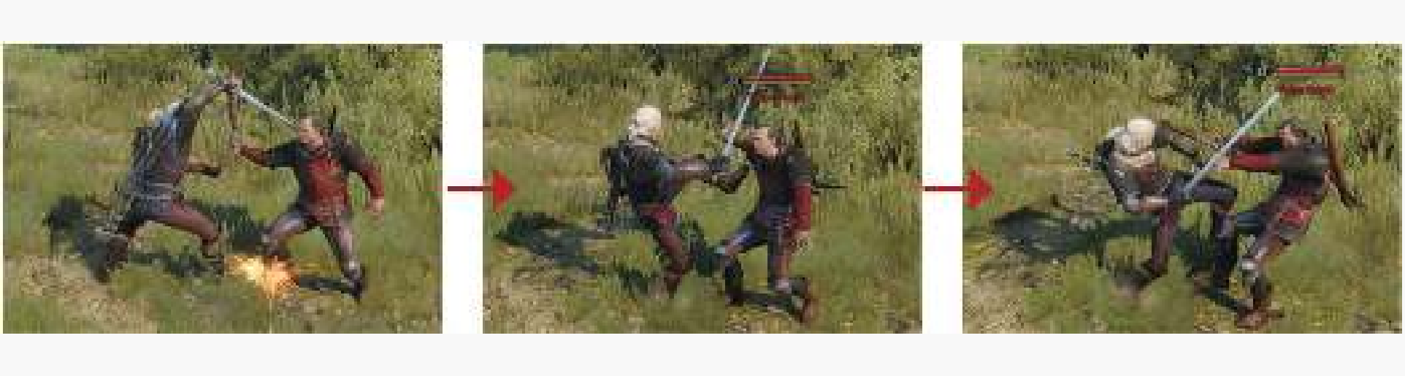
You cannot counterattack any foe wielding a two-handed weapon, or attacks from larger foes such as giants.

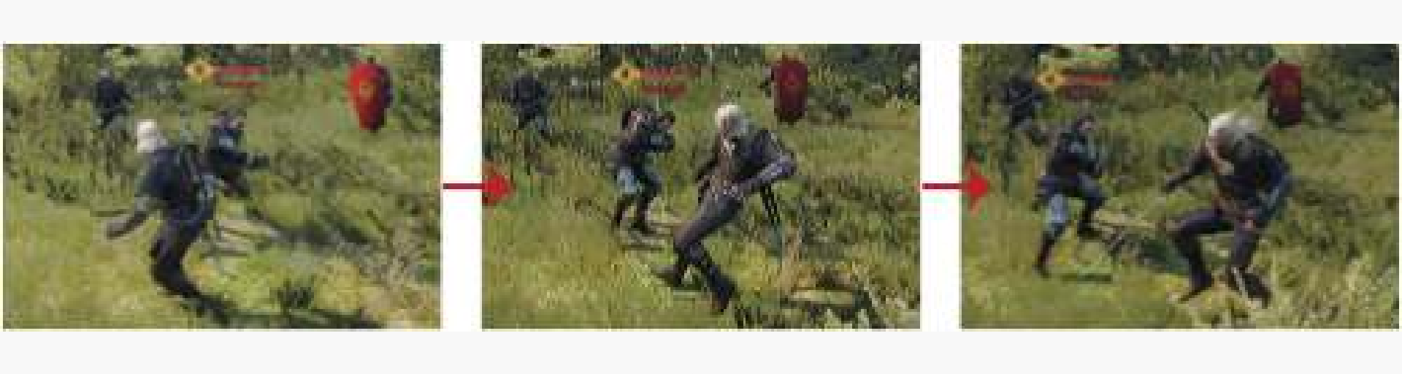
You can either eyeball when to counterattack by watching the incoming attacks closely, or by paying attention to the health and Stamina bars floating over the heads of enemies fighting you. If you see the area around this target information flash red, that’s your cue to parry and perform a counterattack! As with parrying, not every attack can be countered, such as the melee strikes from powerful beasts or two-handed weapons from humans.



A more expertly-timed block continues with a counterattack designed to knock your foe off-balance, after which you can launch an offensive flurry.

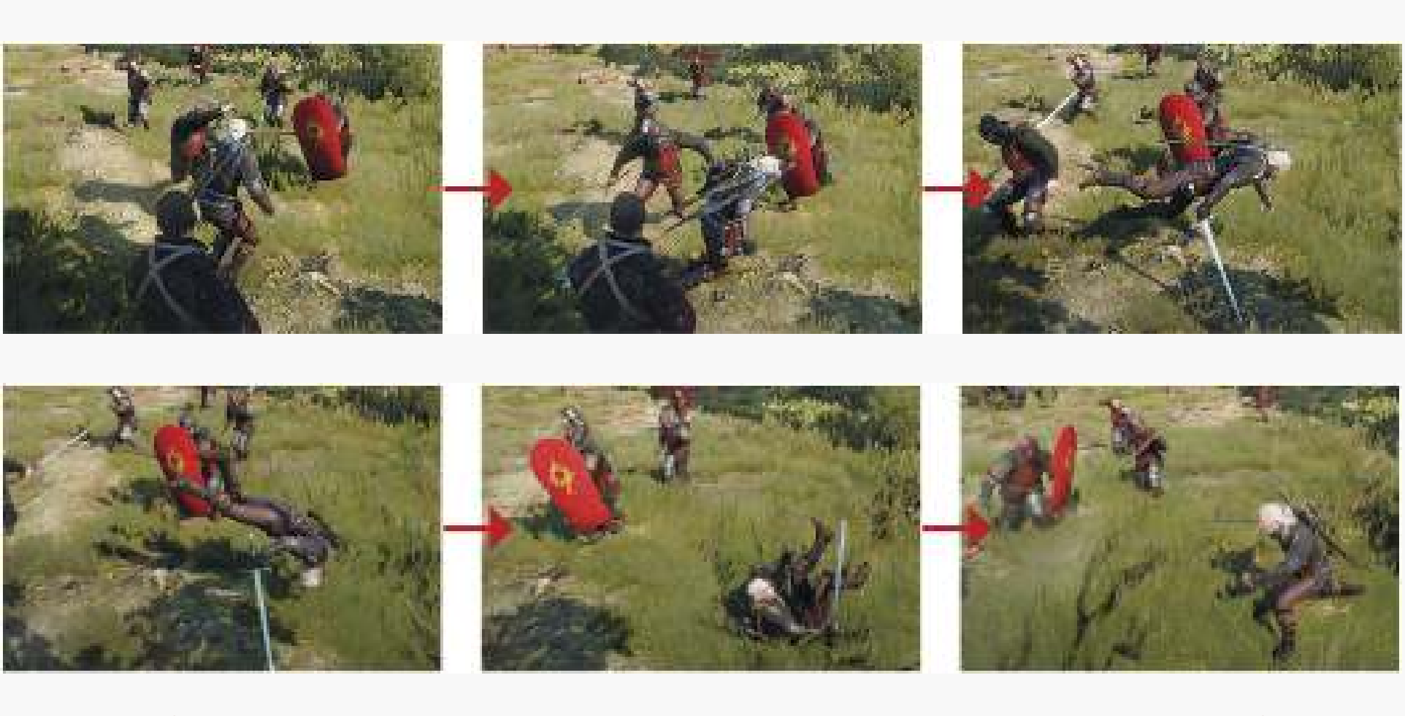
DODGING AND ROLLING

Geralt can dodge away from most melee and ranged attacks. This is ideal for avoiding attacks that Geralt cannot parry or counter, while still keeping him within light or strong attack range.



Dodge: Use a dodge to avoid ranged or melee attacks, or to start the flanking of an enemy.

Some attacks have so much reach that a simple hop backward isn’t enough to keep you safe. In these instances, tap the Roll button while moving him away from the attack to roll to safety. This costs Stamina, and places Geralt well out of range for an immediate counter strike, but it can help ‘reset’ the fight in a one-on-one situation, or get him safely away from opponents that have him surrounded. However, it does temporarily stop Stamina regeneration, so you can’t roll constantly if you want to also make use of his Signs.



Roll: With larger foes, or those that cover ground quickly or have an attack with a wide arc, you’ll cover more distance with a defensive roll.

MANAGING STAMINA

Managing Stamina is one of the most important aspects of combat. For example, a full bar of Stamina is required to cast any Signs in battle. Stamina is needed for special melee attacks and Signs. Any time you use an ability that requires Stamina its regeneration is temporarily halted. You can boost Stamina regeneration with Potions, and there are Character Abilities that can improve your Stamina recovery.

CROSSBOW ATTACKS

The crossbow is a useful tool that can be used before combat begins, or in the middle of a melee. If you take the time to aim the crossbow manually before firing, time dilates, letting you aim with greater accuracy. This effect can be increased through Character Abilities such as Marksmanship.

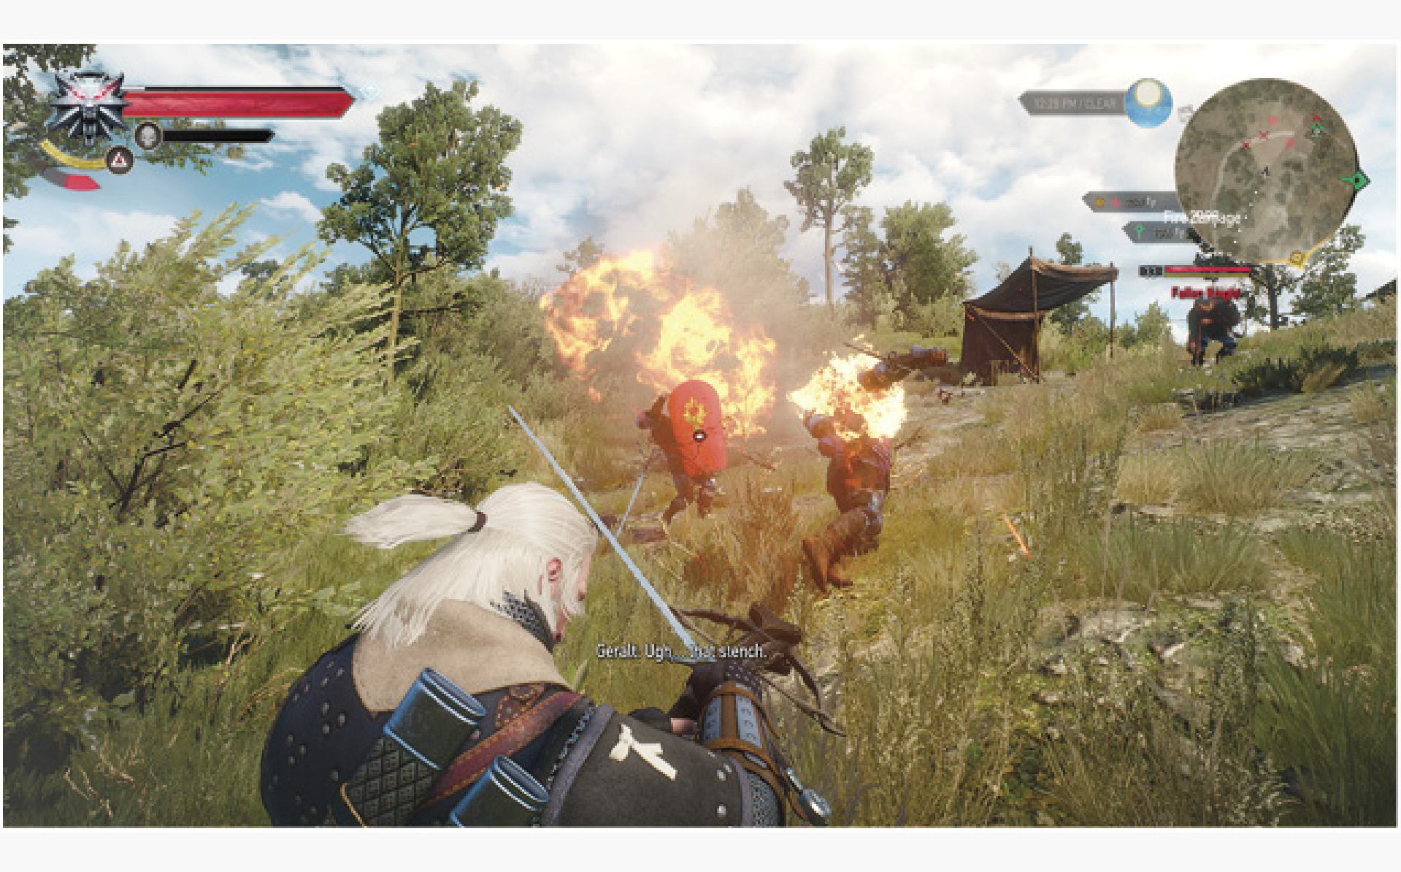
You can also quick-fire the crossbow. Tapping the Crossbow button once causes Geralt to draw and fire the weapon at the locked-on target. You can also influence where he fires by moving him in the direction of a potential target. This works well for interrupting flanking enemies; just avoid quick-firing explosive bolts at enemies right next to you!

With special ammo loaded or with the standard bolts, the starting crossbow can be fired three times before Geralt must reload.

Crossbows work as amplifiers to the damage ratings of the bolts loaded into them. Always keep an eye out for stronger crossbows to maximize the potential of your chosen bolts, and you absolutely should consider hunting down the recipes for the most powerful crossbows in the game.

SPECIAL BOLTS

Special bolts can be looted from caches in the field or crafted at a blacksmith. These bolts are what make even the starting crossbow a vicious weapon in any fight.



Though your normal crossbow ammunition is infinite, special bolts are limited in number—but their effects can be explosively entertaining!

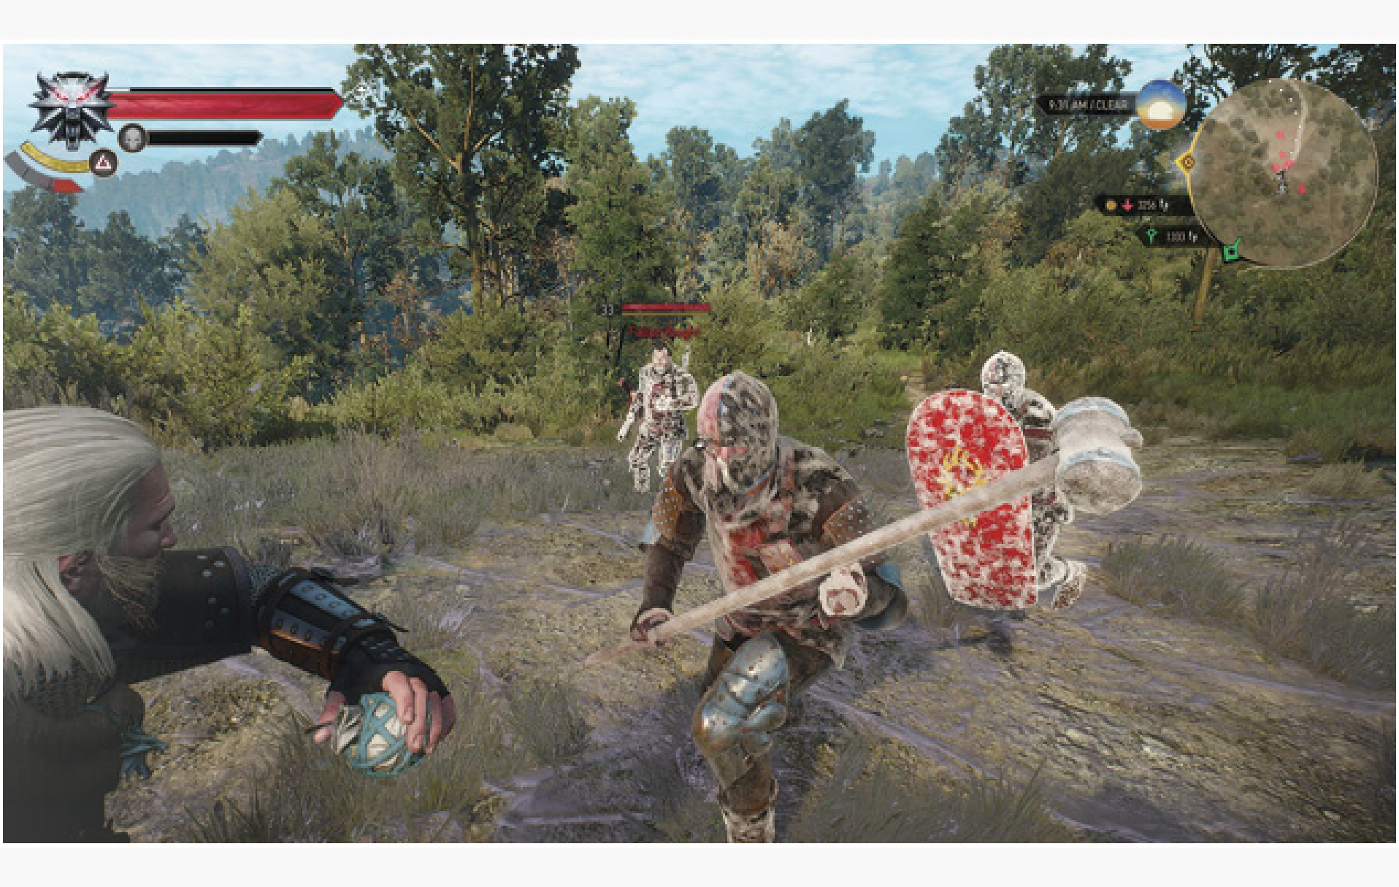
Special bolts can have a variety of effects. Some cause bleeding damage, others split into multiple shots. One type of bolt can attract wild animals to the victim, another acts as a high-powered bomb! Unfortunately, special bolts are limited in number. Check your Quick Access menu to see which bolts you’ve loaded in the crossbow to avoid wasting good ammunition on petty targets.

RUNNING LOW ON AMMO

If you run out of special bolts in the middle of a fight, you can select a different type directly from the radial menu during combat.

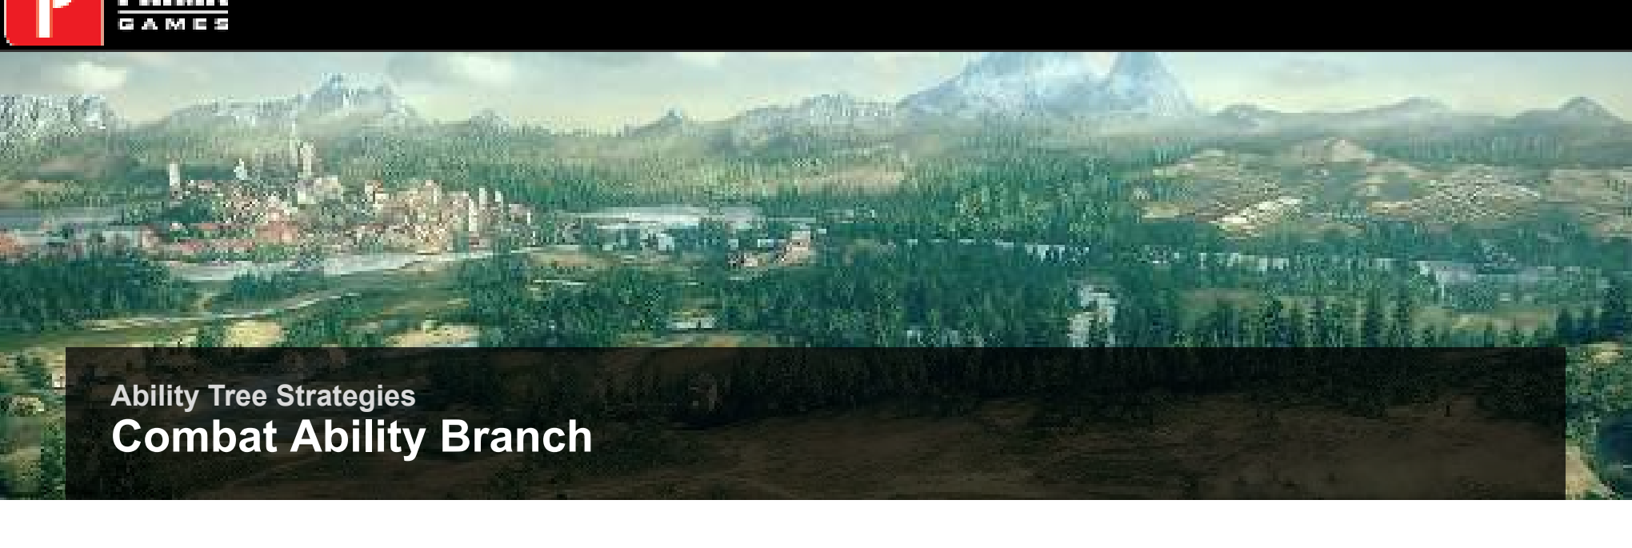
BOMBS

Similar to the crossbow, you can quick-throw a prepared bomb by first selecting it in your Quick-access menu, then tapping the button to throw it. This quick lob is especially effective against single opponents. If you want to affect multiple targets more reliably, aim where you place your bombs by holding down the Throw button. When you’re dealing with multiple foes that are affected by the same type of bomb, this is a great way to start to any encounter.



Don’t forget to soften up your enemy by lobbing some well-aimed projectiles into them first!

Bombs have a wide variety of effects that can be useful for specific foes. Dimeritium Bombs can weaken magic users, Moon Dust bombs can prevent transformations, and the powerful Northern Wind bombs can freeze huge swaths of a battlefield, allowing a Witcher to quickly flank foes.



Ability Tree Strategies

Combat Ability Branch

COMBAT (ABILITY BRANCH: 91 TOTAL POINTS)

The Combat Ability branch builds upon Geralt's skills in battle, with a heavy focus on how Geralt fights and defends with his swords.

From special sword strikes (such as this Whirl attack) to increased adrenaline points, the Combat branch of abilities is for those who crave better ways to shed blood.

RECOMMENDED ABILITIES

★

If an ability has this icon next to it, you should seriously consider purchasing it above non-recommended abilities, unless you're building a specific character archetype. Non-recommended abilities are still fine to use, but are usually not employed as often, have special conditions, don't stack with as many enchantments and equipment, or have shortfalls to worry about.

FAST ATTACK ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 20 POINTS)

Perform fast melee attacks with either sword.

★ Muscle Memory (5 Levels)

Fast attack damage is increased by the following:

Level	Increase (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you have a redisposition to utilize fast attacks, and want each strike to inflict more pain, then use this ability. It is one of the first recommended abilities to purchase, forms the base of most Combat archetypes, and enables you to cut down foes in fewer strikes (as more damage is awarded). Thoroughly recommended, as this damage stacks with other abilities.

★ Precise Blows (5 Levels)

Increases the chance of landing a fast attack critical hit and fast attack critical hit damage by the following:

Level	Increased Chance (%)	Damage (%)
1	2%	15%
2	4%	30%
3	6%	45%
4	8%	60%
5	10%	75%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: An amazing ability for those wishing to perfect the unsubtle art of slicing up foes with swords. Though the Critical Hit chance may seem small (and you are encouraged to increase the Level to 5), the sheer number of times you employ fast attacks, and the fact this ability stacks with other abilities and equipment that increases your Critical Hit chance (such as the Ursine Swords for example), means you're never more than a few sword swings from a massive influx of damage. Think about partnering this Ability with Whirl, and think about how many opportunities for Critical carnage you have!

★ Whirl (5 Levels)

A spinning attack that strikes all foes in the surrounding area. Maintaining the attack consumes Stamina and Adrenaline. Higher Levels of this ability lessen the Stamina and Adrenaline needed as follows:

Level	Stamina and Adrenaline Needed (%)
1	Normal
2	-20%
3	-30%
4	-40%
5	-50%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: This allows Geralt to spend Adrenaline and Stamina, executing a spinning frenzy that strikes all targets around him. If you favor an aggressive melee style to your combat, and need additional methods to resolve violence, this can be a worthy talent to spend points on. In fact, some utilize this for every fight, especially against human-sized foes where you can "mow down" foes quickly. This is especially true if you have enchantements, armor, weapons, or other abilities that help negate the extra Adrenaline and Stamina needed. Don't forget this doesn't work with fists, and is an "alternate attack"; place this ability into a slot, and hold down the fast attack button to execute it!

Crippling Strikes (5 Levels)

Fast attacks now also apply a Bleeding effect. Affected enemies lose a number of Vitality or Essence points per second as follows. Duration is five seconds for all Levels.

Level	Vitality/Essence lost
1	25
2	50
3	75
4	100
5	150
Points in branch needed to unlock: 30

Notes: Anyone skilled in quick strikes enjoys bleeding their enemies out in addition to all the other damage they can cause. Crippling Strikes, especially at high Levels, deliver guaranteed number of health points for each successful strike. So, at level 4, expect to inflict 400 more points of damage on a foe, assuming they aren't resistant to bleeding. However, you may find your three Greater Dervana Runestones imbued into your Feline Mastercrafted Sword grants you much more damage potential, leaving you up to five Points to spend on combat skills in the Strong Attack branch.

STRONG ATTACK ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 20 POINTS)

Allows you to perform strong melee attacks which ignore enemy armor.

★ Strength Training (5 Levels)

Strong attack damage is increased by the following:

Level	Increase (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Just as Muscle Memory was the go-to Ability for Fast Attacks, so Strength Training is for Strong Attacks; especially as increasing both to Level 4 allows you to "unlock" the second tier of Combat abilities (as you've spent 8 points). Before you spend wildly on this, compared to Fast Attack abilities, gauge how many Strong Attacks you inflict in normal combat; if you find you aren't using this attack type as often, you may wish to come back to this attack later. But make no mistake; for Combat-driven archetypes, this is a must-have purchase!

★ Crushing Blows (5 Levels)

Increases the chance of landing a strong attack critical hit and strong attack critical hit damage by the following:

Level	Increased Chance (%)	Damage (%)
1	2%	15%
2	4%	30%
3	6%	45%
4	8%	60%
5	10%	75%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: Once again, this is the equivalent of a Fast Attack ability (Precise Blows), and it ups your chances of a successful Critical Hit, inflicts a huge amount of extra damage, and stacks with the other abilities, weapons, and enchantments that also raise the chances of inflicting some truly horrific damage. The only slight downside is that you don't strike as often with Strong Attacks compared to Fast ones. The up side is that partnering this with abilities like Rend almost guarantees a single, devastating blow that will make you wince with pain and pleasure!

★ Rend (5 Levels)

Deals additional damage in proportion to the Stamina consumed. Ignores enemy Defense and increases critical hit chance by the following amounts. Adrenaline Points increase total damage by 100%, per point spent of every level of this Ability.

Level	Critical Chance (%)
2	20%
3	30%
4	40%
5	50%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: This is another excellent choice for those looking to augment a combat-heavy archetype. This ability ignores defense with a charged-up strong attack, and works extremely well for those to know how to take advantage of openings the enemy provides. As long as you execute the attack (and time the release of the Strong button so you're not using as much Stamina), you can attempt this again and again. The Critical Hit chance stacks with other abilities and bonuses, making this a truly grotesquely-powerful alternate strike in the right hands! Remember to equip this ability in a slot, and hold down the button to execute.

★ Sunder Armor (5 Level)

Reduces enemy damage resistance by the following amounts:

Level	Reduction (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 30

Notes: Though the ability name mentions "armor," this affects foes with or without protective shielding, including monsters. It simply reduces the damage resistance of a foe by an (increasingly impressive) amount, essentially allowing you to strike with more damage. The best news is that once you use this Strong attack successfully, you can can switch and slice away using faster attacks, and enjoy the reduction in enemy damage resistance whether you're employing Fast or Strong attacks.

DEFENSE ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 13 POINTS)

Wolf School defensive techniques.

Arrow Deflection (3 Levels)

Perfectly timed parries reflect back arrows with the following bonuses:

Level	Bonus
1	No Bonus
2	Arrows reflected back at attacker
3	Arrows reflected back, double damage
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: While highly situational, this can prove to be a life saver, particularly against large groups of human bandits or other foes with archers. Arrows are often slung at Geralt throughout the adventure, and it helps to be able to negate the damage they cause. However, there are other abilities, such as Yrden Magic Trap (Signs Branch of Ability Tree), that have a similar effect with a great deal of additional help to your combat. Think about how many times you've been struck by an arrow—usually in Bandit Camps—making this ability more redundant (as you can always dodge or deflect an arrow and focus on an archer first).

Fleet Footed (5 Levels)

Damage from hits received while dodging is reduced by the following:

Level	Reduction (%)
1	20%
2	40%
3	60%
4	80%
5	100%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: This takes some practice (as does normal dodging), but with the correct amount of room (don't hit any scenery while dodging), you can withstand enemy strikes during a dodge. Try moving toward and around a foe rather than to the side, and learn the special attacks the larger enemies attempt, such as the stomp of a Golem or the pound of a Cyclops. Though this helps with damage, there is still the threat of being hit, so don't expect invulnerability! Similarly, with practice, you may be able to dodge any foe's attack without this ability, leaving you free to insert more sword-based carnage-causing abilities instead.

Counterattack (3 Levels)

After a successful counterattack, the next attack deals the following extra damage per skill level, and is a critical hit with a chance for knockdown based on the number of Adrenaline Points.

Level	Extra Damage
1	30%
2	30% (60% total)
3	30% (90% total)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: If your enemy is the type that uses swords, such as humanoid opponents, members of the Wild Hunt, and other unsavory types (but not monsters), and you find you're attempting a normal counterattack anyway, this can be an excellent choice. Practice the timing of normal counterattacks, or this ability is useless. If you're already inflicting a large amount of damage with critical hits, this can really help finish off a foe, and at Level 3, the chances of a knockdown are almost assured (after which you can kill them with a stab to their corpse on the ground). The only potential problem this the relatively few times enemies can be countered, compared to abilities that are helpful in almost every combat situation (such as Whirl).

Deadly Precision (2 Levels)

Each Adrenaline Point adds the following to the chance of killing an opponent instantly:

Level	Chance of Kill
1	1%
2	2%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 30

Notes: Though it takes a while to unlock, and is usually for Combat-centric archetypes that wish to place an ability in the four new "revealed" slots after Blood and Wine Mutations are unlocked, this is well worth adding. Initially, the chance of an instant kill seems small. But at Level 2, with helpful abilities like Razor Focus (giving you an Ability Point when entering combat and better Ability Point gains), and the Superior Maribor Forest (giving you another AP and gains), this percentage leaps to 6 percent; that's a chance of one in just over 16 hits! Now think how many strikes you connect with using Whirl or Fast attacks, and you can see the benefits!

MARKSMANSHIP ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

Allows you to wield a light hand-held crossbow.

Lightning Reflexes (3 Levels)

Time slowed by additional amount while aiming the crossbow, as follows:

Notes: As you use the Crossbow far less often than your swords, these abilities may not get the respect that Fast and Strong Attacks have, but Lightning Reflexes still has its uses. Perhaps you're trying to shoot heads to complete the Master Marksman Achievement/Trophy? Or you want to more easily tag Drowners underwater, the flying Harpies of Velen, or swooping Sirens across the isles of Skellige? Then this gives you the extra time you may need. Of course, with practice you may find you don't need this extra slowdown.

Cold Blood (5 Levels)

Each bolt that hits its target adds the following Adrenaline Points:

Level	Adrenaline Points
1	0.04
2	0.08
3	0.12
4	0.16
5	0.2
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: This helps you continuously fire your crossbow for longer, and build up your Adrenaline Points before switching to melee combat weaponry. As the crossbow isn't a particularly damaging weapon, and Signs and Combat abilities are far less situational, pick this if you're intending on foraging for wild animals, and are purely focused on a ranged archetype, perhaps with the Relic Crossbow Death from Above (which has an AP gain as well).

Anatomical Knowledge (5 Levels)

Increases crossbow critical hit chance by the following amount:

Level	Chance (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: It can be extremely satisfying to whittle down the health of a foe by a more measurable degree before charging in to finish with swords, and this ability helps provide the chance at really inflicting some nasty ranged damage. It is also helpful when used with Crippling Shot (see below). Seek out a quality Crossbow, such as the Ursine Crossbow which has its own Critical Hit chance bonus, to further augment this ability.

Crippling Shot (5 Levels)

Critical hits dealt with the crossbow disable monster special abilities for the following time:

Level	Time (Seconds)
1	5 (Seconds)
2	10 (Seconds)
3	15 (Seconds)
4	20 (Seconds)
5	25 (Seconds)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 30

Notes: Even if you just spend a single point on this ability, you've negated any special ability a monster may attempt to use on you; that alone could save you from some otherwise highly dangerous attacks, such as Hypnosis from a Fiend's third eye. Partner this with Anatomical Knowledge and a good quality Crossbow with built-in critical hit chance bonuses, and you can effectively cripple the most fearsome of foes before launching bombs or melee strikes.

BATTLE TRANCE ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 20 POINTS)

Blows landed during combat generate Adrenaline Points. Each Adrenaline Point increases weapon damage by 10%.

Resolve (5 Levels)

Adrenaline Point loss upon taking damage is lowered by the following amount:

Level	Lowered by (%)
1	20%
2	40%
3	60%
4	80%
5	100%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Though it is always better to learn how to effectively dodge, roll, and parry (as well as counterattack) instead of getting hit, sometimes your combat techniques fail you. When starting your adventure, especially on higher difficulty settings, it may behoove you to purchase this, simply so you can function in battle. You may find partnering this with other abilities that influence Adrenaline (such as Rage Management, or equipment with added Adrenaline bonuses) also helps. This is also a good ability to partner with Undying.

Undying (5 Levels)

When Vitality reaches 0, Adrenaline Points (if available) will be consumed to restore Vitality. The amount restored is based on the number of Adrenaline Points used, plus an additional amount, as follows:

Level	Amount (%)
1	0
2	25%
3	50%
4	75%
5	100%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: This effectively keeps you from dying in combat, which is a fantastic idea if you haven't grasped the concept of training with a large number of cohesive abilities that work well in tandem with one another. Eventually, you need to change the way you view battles, and utilize swordplay and Signs, Alchemy and defensive magic, to thwart an enemy. The problem with Undying (aside from the fact you need a good reserve of Adrenaline Points) is that you'll still be alive, but weakened by a lack of available Adrenaline Points. Quickly use Potions or Food to raise Vitality; or better yet, do this just before you die, and negate the need for this ability completely!

★ Razor Focus (5 Levels)

Instantly gain one Adrenaline Point when entering combat. The Adrenaline Points generated by sword blows are increased by the following amount:

Level	Increase (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: There are many abilities that work from Adrenaline Points, so having a free point at the start of any fight really synergizes well with other combat abilities, especially those from the Fast and Strong Attack branches. If fighting with swords is your primary plan, this is essential. If Rage Management is helping you syphon Adrenaline to use in place of Stamina to cast Signs, this is excellent. This is one of the best abilities to continuously top up your Adrenaline, as you're likely to be inflicting sword damage most often. This helps with Whirl and Rend too, and stacks with Adrenaline bonuses from equipment, such as the Ursine Armor. Amazing!

Flood Of Anger (5 Levels)

When casting a Sign, 3 Adrenaline Points (if available) will be consumed to upgrade the Sign to the highest level (unlocking all bonuses) and increase Sign intensity by the following amount:

Level	Increase (%)
1	25%
2	50%
3	75%
4	100%
5	125%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 30

Notes: Unless you have other abilities (or potions) working to increase your Adrenaline Points quickly, by the time you're ready to cast this, the fight may well be over! However, it is always an option to try at the very start of a fight, if you want to begin with a hugely-powerful Sign attack (using Igni, Aard, or Axii for example, or want to enjoy the most powerful defenses of Yrden and Quen) and you're using a Combat-centric archetype. This is helpful if you aren't already enjoying these benefits having unlocked these Sign abilities beforehand. It also works with equipment and abilities that increase your Adrenaline.

Ability Tree Strategies

Signs Ability Branch

SIGNS (ABILITY BRANCH: 79 POINTS)

Geralt can utilize magic from five magic signs, all of which have important uses in and out of combat. The Signs Ability branch dedicates one upgrade path for each sign, and within each path there are alternate Sign modes that change how a Sign is used (and are utilized by holding instead of tapping your Sign button).

Spending points on new Signs abilities turns you from a simple conjurer to a master of magic in all its forms; both offensive and defensive.

AARD SIGN ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 16 POINTS)

A directed blast of telekinetic energy that staggers opponents, leaving them open for a subsequent attack.

Far-Reaching Aard (3 Levels)

Increases Aard's range by the following yards:

Level	Range (Yards)
1	+1 (Yard)
2	+2 (Yards)
3	+3 (Yards)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Remember that an unimproved Aard attack causes foes to stumble; you're just increasing the range of the attack. Choose this if you wish to focus on the Aard Sign, either as a Signs build, or usually with Combat abilities, as keeping a foe off-balance allows you to quickly follow up with a sword strike. At higher levels, you can cast Aard earlier, which is more beneficial (quicker Stamina regeneration, for example).

Aard Sweep (3 Levels)

Alternate Sign Mode: Aard strikes all opponents in a certain radius. However, the Knock-down chance is lowered (until Level 3):

Level	Knock-down Chance (%)
1	21 (% lower)
2	17 (% lower)
3	0 (As normal Aard strike)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 6

Notes: When fully upgraded, this can be an excellent ability that synergizes well with Combat-centric archetypes. Enemies all around Geralt can be pushed back or knocked over instead of a single one; which is well worth it in terms of crowd control. Also explore the Blood and Wine Mutations, as the infamous Piercing Cold shatters foes that fall over into fragments, instead of causing them to fall, and freeze others that are still standing!

Aard Intensity (5 Levels)

Increases Aard Sign intensity by the following amounts:

Level	Increase (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 18

Level	Time Slowed by (%)
1	15%
2	30%
3	45%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This is always handy to have in archetypes where Aard is your primary focus, and can stack with equipment or other abilities that increase your Aard, such as Glyphs and Order of the Flaming Rose armor. If you enjoy knocking foes over or staggering them, this increases that potency. Almost every foe on horseback falls at your Aard strikes, and knocked over foes are easily executed with your swords as they lie prone.

Shock Wave (5 Levels)

Increases the damage dealt by Aard to the following amounts:

Level	Damage Dealt (points)
1	40 (points)
2	80 (points)
3	120 (points)
4	160 (points)
5	200 (points)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: Though this requires a lot of points to even unlock, and is used by those mainly focused on this Sign, it is worthwhile if you wish to augment damage inflicted by your swords, bombs, crossbow, or other stacked bonuses. If you've made the proper advancements in the Signs Branch of the Ability tree, as well as utilizing Rage Management and can consistently cast Aard, you're easily able to keep multiple foes at bay while whittling down their health. However, at higher levels, there are quicker ways to damage foes.

IGNI SIGN ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

A directed fiery blast that damages enemies. Damage scales with Sign intensity.

Melt Armor (5 Levels)

Damage dealt by Igni also permanently weakens enemy Armor. Effect scales with Sign intensity up to a maximum percentage, as follows:

Level	Maximum (%)
1	15%
2	30%
3	45%
4	60%
5	75%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This improvement to Igni is a great asset to offensive adventurers; and fully upgrading it removes three-quarters of a foe's armor, improving Geralt's damage-dealing capacity in any fight. It can also be partnered with other Igni abilities, such as Firestream, for a more targeted removal. This also tends to remove shields more quickly than other techniques. However, it is less useful against foes that are tough enough without armor.

Firestream (3 Levels)

Alternate Sign Mode: Emits a continuous stream of fire that damages enemies. Stamina cost is reduced by the following amount:

Level	Stamina Cost Reduction (%)
1	0%
2	25%
3	50%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 6

Notes: Hugely entertaining, this alternate Sign mode requires you to "equip" this ability in a slot, before holding down the Signs button and launching your stream of fire at a foe. Instead of regular Igni, which hits in an arc, this is for individual immolation, and keeps the victim in a reasonably stationary position, too. Remember to invest in Rage Management if you find yourself running out of Stamina. Unless you're fully invested in Igni, don't expect this to cause any creature to topple over in a great gout of fire; use Firestream to weaken more powerful foes, before stepping in with swords.

Igni Intensity (5 Levels)

Increases Igni Sign intensity by the following amount:

Level	Intensity Increase (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 18

Notes: If you're finding that Firestream or your normal Igni offensive attacks aren't getting the job done, and need more flaming damage in your repertoire, spend some points on Igni Intensity. Also look for enchantments and equipment that help increase Sign intensity too, as these bonuses stack. Simply find a couple of Bandit Camps, and compare the damage you cause before and after Igni Intensity is equipped; at Level 5 this can really roast foes, even the larger monsters!

Pyromaniac (5 Levels)

Increases the chance to apply Burning by the following amount:

Level	Burning Chance (%)
1	20%
2	40%
3	60%
4	80%
5	100%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: An often-overlooked effect of Igni is the continuous burning damage, which is simply extra damage over time, for a few seconds until the foe either dies (which happens occasionally with weaker foes, depending on the intensity) or you attack an enemy (or use Aard), and the fire goes out. As you likely want to slay foes quickly, rather than watch them stagger around on fire, this isn't a necessary ability to crave. But it does allow you to easily deal with crowds, lighting folks on fire before turning and concentrating on other enemies. It is also helpful when targeting airborne enemies like the Griffin.

YRDEN SIGN ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 15 POINTS)

Magic trap that slows enemies who enter its area of effect.

Sustained Glyphs (2 Levels)

Increases Sign duration by the following time (in seconds). Number of alternative mode charges changes. Number of standard mode traps changes; all to the following amounts:

Level	Time Increase (Seconds)	Mode Charges	Mode Traps
1	5 (Seconds)	7	1
2	10 (Seconds)	9	2
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Allow for more tactical battlefield herding of foes through the quagmire of a magical circle. Sustained Glyphs adds a number of helpful improvements, designed with other Yrden abilities in mind. The increase in time is most helpful, as it slows enemies down for longer, allowing you to strike them more leisurely. Mode Charges increases the potency of Magic Trap, so it's recommended you equip both abilities to make full use of this. At Level 2, this grants you a second trap, effectively doubling the space or enabling you to cast Yrden more frequently, or overlapping with previous circles. All are designed to slow down and damage foes.

Magic Trap (3 Levels)

Alternate Sign Mode: Damages and slows all enemies within a specific yard radius. Destroys projectiles passing through this area. Damage increases by the following amount:

Level	Radius (Yards)	Damage Increase (%)
1	10 (Yards)	0 (%)
2	12 (Yards)	25 (%)
3	14 (Yards)	50 (%)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 6

Notes: A useful alternate mode as foes are wounded as well as slowed down, and projectiles are removed. It's a great way to defend yourself without lifting a sword, and an excellent method of nullifying a ranged attacker. The increase in the affected area over the normal version of Yrden enables you to slow down larger groups or foes. Partner this with Sustained Glyphs for multiple mode charges.

Yrden Intensity (5 Levels)

Increases Yrden Sign intensity by the following amount:

Level	Increase (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 18

Notes: If you're thinking Yrden isn't powerful enough, and enemies can quickly escape the sluggishness of the traps you're laying for them, then make a concerted effort to increase your Signs and Yrden Intensity using the Glyph of Yrden, Griffin armor, Griffin School Techniques, Mutagen slots, and this ability. As your Yrden sign increases, you inflict more damage, slow foes down dramatically to the point they are almost frozen, and you may never need to take damage again!

Supercharged Glyphs (5 Levels)

Enemies under the influence of Yrden lose a set number of Vitality or Essence points per second, as follows:

Level	Points Loss (/Second)
1	10 (/Second)
2	20 (/Second)
3	30 (/Second)
4	40 (/Second)
5	50 (/Second)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: By the time you reach this ability, you may have enough Yrden Intensity to remove foes by using Magic Trap alone, making this ability a little less useful. But having foes stagger through your trap while dropping more Vitality or Essence is always recommended, and if you can keep Yrden functioning, you can watch foes fall before even reaching you! The drawback? Your sword's damage-per-second is likely to be a lot higher than this, especially if you've invested points in combat abilities.

QUEN SIGN ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 16 POINTS)

Protective shield that lasts until it has absorbed damage totaling 4% of maximum Vitality.

Exploding Shield (3 Levels)

Quen shield pushes opponents back and deals damage when it breaks, with the following additional benefits:

Level	Benefit
1	None
2	Deals damage when it breaks
3	Deals damage when it breaks, chance for knock-down
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're feeling aggressive, you can be a little more reckless with this ability active: As the shield breaks, foes are knocked back and a knock-down chance occurs, allowing you to easily counter or press attacks against lightweight opponents. The space the explosion gives you between yourself and the foe allows you to time an attack. This also makes it easier to know when Quen has run out!

Active Shield (3 Levels)

Alternate Sign Mode: Maintaining an active shield. Blocking attacks drains Stamina. Damage absorbed by the shield restores player Vitality. Additional Shortfall or Benefit:

Level	Shortfall/Benefit
1	Maintaining it drains Stamina (Shortfall)
2	Maintaining it drains 50% less Stamina (Benefit).
3	Maintaining it does not drain Stamina (Benefit).
Points in branch needed to unlock: 6

Notes: As long as you have the Stamina to maintain this alternate mode, this ability works: If you eat food or take a healing potion, then begin channeling this, Geralt can regenerate his Vitality in relative safety even amongst his enemies. Take this ability as soon as you can, and press the Signs button down to activate it (once the ability is equipped in the Character Menu, of course!). When your Signs Intensity increases, or if you're using Rage Management that uses Adrenaline if Stamina runs out, you have an exceptional shield and healing spell in one!

Quen Intensity (5 Levels)

Increases Quen Sign intensity by the following amount:

Level	Intensity (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 18

Notes: Are you finding your Quen shield only holds up to one enemy strike? Are you constantly trying to recast Quen? Then make some decent headway into increasing your general Signs Intensity (using Mutagens in your Character Menu, employing the Quen Glyph, and using armor with Sign Intensity, like Griffin armor). Choose Griffin School Techniques: All this increases your Quen Intensity, toughening your shield in the process. Then expect it to last longer during battles, usually an exceptional help to your longevity!

Quen Discharge (5 Levels)

Reflects an amount of absorbed damage back to the attacker, as follows:

Level	Reflected damage (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: Though this forces you to "take a hit" and weaken your Quen shielding, it also reflects up to a quarter of a foe's strike back at them, which is particularly satisfying if the enemy's attacks are hard-hitting! Obviously, you can't rely on this to finish a foe, but it is handy to have Quen cause damage as well as your offensive combat techniques, whether they are Sign or sword-based in nature.

AXII SIGN ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 14 POINTS)

Charms an opponent's mind, temporarily eliminating him from combat. Effect Duration: 7 seconds.

Delusion (3 Levels)

Target does not move toward Geralt while he is casting Axii. Increases the effectiveness of Axii in dialogues. Additional effects are as follows:

Level	Additional Effects
1	None
2	Reduces Axii casting time
3	Reduces Axii casting time. Failed Axii attempts stagger target (combat).
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Do you want to seek alternate solutions to problems when verbally sparring (rather than physically sparring) with characters? Three points spent here guarantees that any dialogue choice that can be influenced by Axii always goes in Geralt's favor. Outside of conversations, this serves to stall foes, or stagger them at Level 3. Also use this to slow a foe enough to attack from the side or behind (where you can deal additional damage with a Doppler decoction, for example); try this on a bear before challenging something more monstrous! It is also used to tame horses, calm Roach, and bewilder peasants.

Puppet (3 Levels)

Alternate Sign Mode. Targeted enemy briefly becomes an ally and deals more damage, as follows:

Level	Enemy Damage (%)
1	20% more Damage
2	40% more Damage
3	60% more Damage
Points in branch needed to unlock: 6

Notes: Remember you need to hold down the Signs button in order to attempt this amusingly potent ability: with a glow of Axii behind the eyes, your chosen foe starts to attack his previous brethren (and their name turns from red to orange), causing no end of chaos, and helping you in the process! This helps immensely, allowing you to turn troublesome foes (such as Bandit leaders, or those with two-handed weapons or shields, or archers) into allies. Another fine trick is to cast it twice on airborne foes; the second time it stuns them out of the sky, allowing you to skewer them easily. This also nullifies large foes for a few seconds (depending on your Level and that of the opponent); so try it on a Cyclops for example; effectively stunning it before trying a hard-hitting attack.

Axii Intensity (5 Levels)

Increases Axii Sign intensity by the following amount:

Level	Intensity (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 18

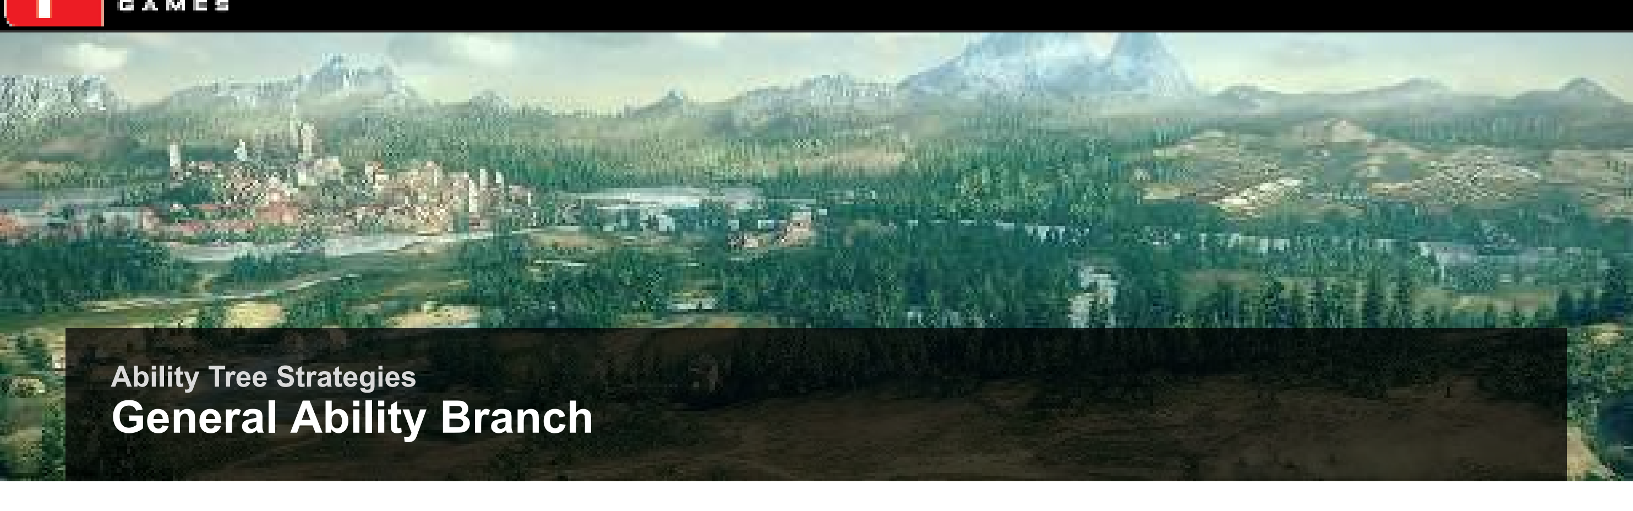
Notes: Just like the other Intensity abilities for other Signs, this enhances your already-impressive offense techniques when it comes to Axii. If you enjoy flummoxing foes with Delusion or Puppet, for example, and you wish the Cyclops you're controlling wouldn't shake off the effects of Puppet quite so quickly, then select this. Usually, Signs such as Yrden and Quen are utilized more often, so this ability is more for archetypes with Axii as their main focus. Don't forget your Axii Glyph and equipment that raises the general Intensity of all your Signs, which stacks with this.

Domination (3 Levels)

Two opponents can be influenced by Axii at the same time, though the effect is weaker by the following amount:

Level	Weakness (%)
1	50%
2	25%
3	0%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: Unless you're insisting on murdering city guards just for fun, by the time you get to unlock Domination, you may not need to influence two opponents rather than one, as a single foe acting confused or fighting on your behalf (or casting Delusion or Puppet twice) is almost as effective as Domination. But for additional crowd control, and true mastery of Axii in all its forms, this is a good addition.



Ability Tree Strategies

General Ability Branch

GENERAL (ABILITY BRANCH: 20 POINTS)

The General Abilities branch does not focus on any given aspect of a Witcher's skills. However, the abilities found here can influence your overall archetype. You can purchase any of the 20 abilities here at any time you like (none need to be "unlocked"), and each one costs only a single point (none of them have "Levels"). However, unlike groups of Combat, Signs, or Alchemy abilities, these do not "stack" together with Mutagens, lessening their usefulness. As you progress, you may find no more than three of these abilities are needed when perfecting a character build.

General Abilities are color-coded yellow, and offer a variety of effects. Some of the best are the Techniques, granting amazing armor bonuses for only one ability point (such as Griffin School Techniques, offering excellent bonuses to your Sign Intensity and Stamina for each piece of medium armor you wear)! Use them to gain statistical bonuses depending on the armor you wear. Pictured is an example of Aard at its maximum intensity; look at those bandits fly!

Metabolism Boosts

If available, Adrenaline Points will be consumed to reduce the Toxicity cost of drinking potions by 33% per point. Does not affect mutagen decoctions.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This can be helpful if you haven't bothered to place many points into Alchemy to build up your tolerance, or you want to drink more Potions as combat progresses. The Adrenaline Point deduction can be worrying if you're using other abilities (like sword attacks!) that require Adrenaline too, so check the benefits of swigging multiple potions outweigh your AP drain. Beware of using this with certain abilities (such as Endure Pain) that actually require a Toxicity level, as this makes acquiring a high Toxicity more difficult!

Trick Shot

You can shoot one additional bolt before you must reload.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're finding it troublesome to fiddle with your crossbow string every so often, and you're focusing on an archetype that is mainly planning on dropping every foe using a crossbow from a distance, then this is marginally useful. But there are many more helpful abilities. Think about how often you're reloading a crossbow in fights compared to, say, using a sword and requiring an Adrenaline boost. If the answer is "not as often," then this ability may not be for you.

Advanced Pyrotechnics

Damage dealt by a bomb's explosion generates 0.1 Adrenaline Points.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: You're usually employing bombs at only limited points during your adventure. But if you're lobbing explosives at foes more often than slaying with swords, give this ability a chance; the Adrenaline Points it helps generate (through damage; you must hurt a foe with a bomb!) helps you continue the fight. Note that bombs which explode into fragments, and therefore inflict more damage (and to multiple targets) generate more APs. However, it is usually better to utilize Combat abilities (as each gives an AP gain) instead.

★ Battle Frenzy

Instead of its previous effect, Battle Trance now increases critical hit chance by 8% per Adrenaline Point.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Battle Trance is a branch of your Combat abilities, and each time you land a blow in combat, Adrenaline Points are generated. Each AP increases weapon damage by 10 percent. But with Battle Frenzy, each AP increases your critical hit chance by eight percent instead. This is helpful for character archetypes where your critical damage is large, but your chance of scoring a critical hit is low. Of course, you can also use it with characters that already have a higher chance to score critical hits, and almost guarantee a critical hit for each attack! Simply check to see how impressive your critical damage is first, so you're maximizing this ability.

Strong Back

Maximum inventory weight is increased by 60.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This is a helpful "spare" ability to purchase and utilize when you're foraging, rather than preparing for a difficult battle. Before you choose it, think about the weight bonuses that adding Saddlebags to Roach gives you, and the items you can store in your Stash chests. If you still need more carry weight, pick this.

Gorged On Power

The bonus from a chosen Place of Power lasts indefinitely – but one such bonus can be active at a given time.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Though this isn't as useful as one of the three "Techniques" General abilities or Rage Management, having a permanent bonus from one of the Places of Power (which increases the intensity of one of your five Signs) is moderately beneficial. But remember you still have to equip this ability into a slot, so this takes away a bonus that may stack, or offer larger bonuses when partnered with a Mutagen (such as linking three Signs abilities together in your Character Menu). Also, with Fast-Travel you're always less than 30 minutes away from a Place of Power to redraw the power from (30 minutes being the time the power normally lasts for).

Balanced Diet

Vitality Regeneration after eating lasts 20 minutes.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This affects any "Food" items only, such as dumplings and other goods found sold primarily by Innkeeps. Though helpful, there are much more potent potions to use during combat, and the simple act of Meditation restores Vitality once combat is over. However, if you lack potions and decoctions, and primarily use food during fights to increase your health, this is most helpful.

In Combat's Fires

You ignore bomb and special bolt effects.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: One of the biggest drawbacks when using bombs or special bolts at close range, is being struck by shrapnel, or the after-effects of an explosion. This nullifies that completely, and is a reasonable choice for those wishing to engage foes (particularly crowds of bandits) in more brazen combat while juggling projectiles. The only negative of this ability, is the lack of obvious times when it helps you immeasurably (you can heal, or be more careful with your area-effect weapons instead), but it does help fighting using bombs in confined spaces, like dungeons.

Heavy Artillery

Bomb damage is increased by 200% – but the number of bombs in slots is decreased by 50%. This does not apply to bombs which deal no damage.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: For any bomb causing pain on your foe, the number you carry is halved, but the damage is doubled. This allows you to drop a well-aimed bomb on a large enemy or group of foes, and really decimate them with a single strike. The downside is if you miss! In addition, as this takes up an Ability slot, you may find that lobbing two bombs of regular damage is just as effective (and doesn't require you to purchase this skill). However, if you're wishing to clear a battlefields of enemies with a single bomb, or wish your bombs did greater damage (and you end up having some left over after each combat), pick this skill, then augment it by working at your Corvo Bianco Alchemy Lab (when unlocked, which adds one to each bomb count), as well as Efficiency and Cluster Bombs from the Alchemy Tree that help increase your bomb number and potency, too.

Relentless Attack

Each defensive action generates Adrenaline Points: Parries 0.1 points, Counterattacks 0.4 points, Dodges 0.3 points, Leaps 0.2 points. Cannot be activated more than once every 5 seconds.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're the type of Witcher who tends to try a more defensive strategy when facing bandits and monsters, and find you're running out of Adrenaline Points, then give this ability a try. Though its biggest downside is its activation delay (once every five seconds), having a quicker regeneration of Adrenaline Points is always helpful. This allows you to use the enemy's attacks against them; Countering and claiming almost half an AP at the same time! Obviously, Counters and Dodges are the best way to increase your AP with this Ability as they have the highest partial-point number, so focus on those instead of Parrying. This forces you to perfect Counters, and therefore keeps you effective in combat for longer. However, you may have other ways to keep your APs up, making this Ability unnecessary.

Sun And Stars

During the day, Vitality regenerates by an additional 10 points per second when not in combat. At night, Stamina regenerates by an additional 1 point per second during combat.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This is useful to start with, and especially so when attempting the Blood and Broken Bones! Or Death March! difficulty modes. The additional boosts to health and Stamina regeneration can be the difference between success and failure. However, your Vitality can regenerate fully when you Meditate, and the time of day means this isn't a constant regeneration of Stamina. A better plan is a fool-proof plan of purchasing abilities for a particular character archetype, and using Potions.

★ Adrenaline Burst

Increases Adrenaline generation by 5%. Using Signs now generates Adrenaline Points.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Useful earlier rather than later into your adventure, this is mainly utilized by those investing heavily in Signs, in conjunction with the Rage Management General ability (which allows you to cast Signs using Adrenaline Points). Combat/Sign hybrids, who wish to use Ursine gear (with Adrenaline bonuses) but also employ Signs may also find this helpful. In the field, this simply allows you to cast Signs more frequently in combat. As you gain experience however, this becomes less helpful as your later Sign abilities tend to allow Stamina regeneration without the need for waiting, which is what this ability circumvents.

★ Focus

Adrenaline Points increase both weapon damage and Sign intensity.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Adrenaline, under ideal circumstances, only gets used up when you make use of an ability that requires it. Focus allows Adrenaline that isn't being used to increase your weapon damage and Sign intensity, effectively giving you free additional combat potential. It can also be combined with Battle Frenzy (a General ability listed previously) so that the Battle Trance passive bonuses are applied, along with the ones for Battle Frenzy. Though there are ways to increase weapons damage and Sign intensity by other means (the Sign Branches' "Intensity" abilities that can increase Sign Intensity by far more than Focus), this is worth considering.

Metabolic Control

Increases maximum Toxicity by 30 points.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're drinking your own brews heavily and often, the extra points of Toxicity can mean the difference between using a White Raffard's Decoction in a heated battle, or not. However, the Alchemy ability Acquired Tolerance is a better bet; in the long run this adds much more to your Toxicity level, and there are other benefits for having an almost maxed-out Toxicity sooner, such as Delayed Recovery.

Survival Instinct

Increases maximum Vitality by 500.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Though helpful in the early days of your adventuring, you should be focusing on abilities that stack with each other, and offer a constant regeneration of Adrenaline, Vitality, or Stamina. Simply adding to your health keeps you in fighting shape for longer, but think about investing your point into better sword skills or Sign abilities. Why not invest in Quen's Exploding Shield instead? Improve your combat prowess so foes find it harder to whittle down your Vitality!

★ Bear School Techniques

Each piece of heavy armor increases the maximum Vitality by 5% and strong attack damage by5%.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you are focusing on a character that uses the Strong Attacks from the Combat Branch of the Ability Tree, and also require a higher Vitality (which you can add more to using Green Mutagens), this is a key ability and utilized time and time again for those wanting to wear (and gain the added benefits of) Heavy Armor. This bonus can get extremely high, as there are four pieces of armor to wear (torso, gloves, trousers, and boots). Remember that the Runewright's Glyphword "Heft" causes any armor to be treated as Heavy Armor, if you want to mix and match equipment but still use this bonus.

★ Rage Management

If your current Stamina level is too low, Signs can be cast using Adrenaline Points.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: This forms the foundation of many different archetypes, and should be seriously considered in almost every adventure. Partner this ability with other elements that increase your Adrenaline Points, such as Razor Focus or Ursine Witcher gear. Or Whirl, which actually generates Adrenaline Points! Then simply let rip with any and all Signs, and continue to cast (using Adrenaline) when your Stamina is depleted! With a number of methods of maintaining a reservoir of Adrenaline, you may never run out of Sign power again! Feel free to continuously light foes on fire with Igni, or cause damage while defending yourself with Quen Active Shield, with fewer worries about lacking Sign-casting capabilities. This is tremendous help for hybrid or Signs archetypes, and even pure Combat builds benefit (as you should have a healthy Adrenaline Point regeneration, allowing both swordplay and Signs without rest!).

★ Griffin School Techniques

Each piece of medium armor increases Sign intensity by 5% and Stamina regeneration by 5%.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Are you wearing Medium armor (or using the Glyphword "Balance" that allows any armor to be treated as Medium armor)? Does your character specialize primarily in magic that requires an impressive Sign intensity and Stamina regeneration? Then this is a must-have ability! Choose this as soon as possible, then find four pieces of medium armor (torso, gloves, trousers, and boots) to wear. This offers large and easy to obtain bonuses and should be the cornerstone of a mage-style archetype.

★ Cat School Techniques

Each piece of light armor increases critical hit damage by 25% and fast attack damage by 5%.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

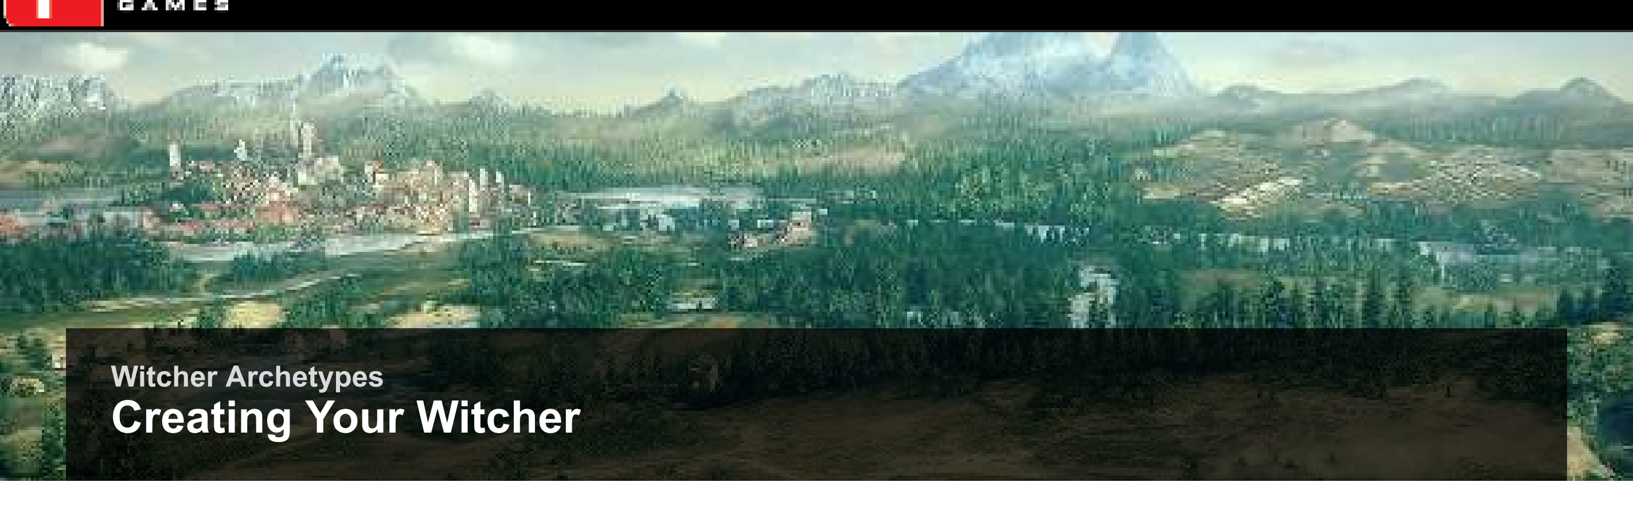
Notes: If you're utilizing a Combat-centric archetype and paying particular attention to Fast attacks, as well as scoring critical hits, then this is an exceptional ability, and the cornerstone of a build. It offers immediate and multiple bonuses (with only one ability point expended!), as long as you're clad in Light Armor, such as the Feline torso, gloves, trousers, and boots. Alternatively, have the Runewright enchant the Levity Glyphword, turning any armor you're wearing into Light Armor, which also enables this ability.

Steady Shot

Crossbow bolts deal 25% more damage.

Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: You may find partnering the Marksmanship Combat Abilities, which also augment your crossbow, more helpful as you can place them with Combat Abilities for Mutagen bonuses, whereas this is a stand-alone ability. While it's helpful to tag a foe at range in fewer hits, especially when using bolts that you only have a finite supply of, the fact that there's an infinite supply of bolts means shots may not need to count in most situations. If you want to be the ultimate huntsman though, this is a good ability to add.



Witcher Archetypes

Creating Your Witcher

The key to creating an entertaining, flexible, and powerful Archetype is to focus on the type of ways you like to survive and fight.

OVERALL ARCHETYPE

If you're purely interested in using swords (and to a lesser extent, the crossbow), look primarily at Combat Archetypes with a couple of General Abilities. If you enjoy using magic against foes, Signs are the way to go. Should you feel the need to concoct potions, bombs, decoctions, and oils, focus on an Alchemy build. If you're intending on adventuring at a higher difficulty, pick a Hybrid build where two (or more) Ability branches are chosen.

STATISTICAL PROWESS AND COMPLEMENTARY ELEMENTS

The key to becoming a legend across the Northern Realms is to be very, very good at one particular aspect of fighting. Initially, that's usually focusing on Fast Attack Abilities to out-perform enemies you fight against. But that is only the beginning! You should read about all the different abilities, and research how they affect each other, and how the vast array of items you gather can also bolster your statistics.

EXAMPLE: THE HARD-HITTING COMBAT MACHINE

The Archetype examples are geared to improving a variety of different sets of statistics that are imperative to bolster, but just one of these would be Adrenaline Point gains (which allows for harder-hitting attacks and other combat benefits); at the most basic level, you may decide having as many Adrenaline Points as possible would be beneficial (and it is!).

The first step is looking through all the Ability branches to see which abilities add to your Adrenaline: Each Combat Ability gives you a 1% gain no matter what ability it is. Blows landed during combat generate Adrenaline Points and each one increases weapon damage by 10%. Strong Attacks and Battle Trance Abilities are particularly focused on Adrenaline Point (AP) management, and some effects work well with other abilities:

- Rend (Combat) has other effects, but it also enables APs to increase total damage by 33-100%.
- Deadly Precision(Combat) allows every AP to add 1% to the chance of instantly killing a foe.
- Resolve (Combat)lowers AP loss upon taking damage by 20-100%.
- Undying (Combat) uses APs to restore Vitality instead of death.
- Razor Focus(Combat) gives you an AP for just entering combat, and increases APs generated by sword attacks by 5-25%.
- Flood of Anger(Combat) allows you to consume APs to upgrade a Sign to its highest level and increase its intensity

So Rend and Razor Focus seem to be must-haves (and once you spend 20 points on other Abilities in order to unlock it, you should level it up to 5). In the mean-time, you are finding Combat Abilities that complement Adrenaline, or use Adrenaline effectively; such as the Fast Attack and Strong Attack branches. Don't forget to look over the other Ability branches too. Here are some initial picks (which don't need to be "unlocked" by purchasing other Abilities first):

- Hunter Instinct (Alchemy) allows blades coated with oil (used against an enemy susceptible to the oil) to inflict 20% more critical hit damage, if your APs are at their maximum.
- Rage Management (General) allows you to cast Signs using APs if your Stamina levels are too low.
- Adrenaline Burst (General) increases AP generation by 5% and using Signs generates APs.
- Focus (General) allows APs to increase weapon damage and Sign intensity.
- Mutagens (General) allows you to link Abilities from the same branch for extra bonuses.

The next plan is to check A Witcher's Tools, the comprehensive inventory available in the free eGuide, and find items that also help bolster your Adrenaline, before locating them in your adventuring! The following examples are particularly related to Adrenaline:

- Potion: Maribor Forest accelerates the generation of Adrenaline Points by 0.15 with extending durations depending on the quality of the Potion.
- Swords: Ursine Steel and Silver Swords both grant you a +5-20% gain in APs, depending on the quality of the weapon.
- Armor: Wolven Armor Torso armor grants you +5-20% AP gain, while Boots, Trousers, and Gloves increase Attack power.
- Perun Runestones are imbued on your weapons, and give between 2-5% AP gain, so three Greater Perun Runestones grants a single sword with three sockets +15% APs!
- Replenisment Runewords allow you to consume an AP after casting a Sign, to charge your sword attack with the power of that Sign.
- Elation Runewords give you up to 0.25 Adrenaline Points every time a fatal blow is delivered by the sword this is imbued to.
- Placation Runestones cause your APs to decline once they reach maximum level, in return for increased Stamina and Vitality regeneration, and Toxicity decline.

As you can see, learning the items or enchantments to "stack" and utilize together on your character is the key to turning them into a combat or Sign-conjuring machine! Now learn which elements work in conjunction with one another, and you'll eventually perfect an Archetype that can handle any battle, in any mode of difficulty! Or just build one of the Archetypes built for Death March! Difficulty instead!

LEVELLING UP

The following Archetypes give you a general selection of armor, weapons, and abilities you should be finding and unlocking by the time you reach certain levels, in order to keep your Archetype on the right path. There's no need to follow these guidelines exactly; these are just pointers so you understand what you should be gathering, or the general order of ability points spending on during your adventure.

ABILITY POINTS

As mentioned earlier, outside of two quests, there are only two ways to acquire Ability Points; by leveling up and by visiting Places of Power. There are 30 Places of Power to locate (though three are only available during the Main Quest, and are therefore important to find during the quests or afterward, and one is in another world, and cannot be returned to!). It is important to read the Places of Power Appendix so you know where all of these monoliths are. Then you should follow the Archetype guidelines and collect these additional points as early as possible, "front-loading" the Abilities you can unlock.

BUDGET CONSTRAINTS FOR ABILITY POINTS

It's important not to waste Ability Points, as you only receive one per level (or for each Place of Power you visit). Therefore, when you're choosing the initial 12 Abilities to place into each of the four "slots" in the middle of your Character Menu, you should initially focus on 12 Abilities that complement each other (and can be linked by Greater Mutagens for additional bonuses).

Then, you can spend additional points unlocking Mutations, so you can add another four Ability slots bringing the total to 16, as well as unlock a special Mutation effect (from a choice of 12). This takes considerable time, so expect to perform this during a New Game + adventure, during your second visit to each Place of Power, and after completing the Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: Turn and Face the Strange..

However, you are free to purchase more Abilities than you have slots to use. For example, you may wish to keep Axii Delusion off your slots during combat, but place it into a slot when conversing with characters. Or you may have a set of three Aard abilities you use sometimes, and swap between them depending on the enemy. If you tailor your fighting against human-sized foes and monsters differently, you may wish to swap out a few Abilities accordingly.

If all else fails, use a Potion of Clearing and purchase Abilities again, all at once, without making mistakes this time!

ARMOR MAKES THE MUTANT

Using a particular type of armor (and weaponry) is usually critical to help augment the abilities, glyphs (and runestones), and other enchantments you need to add to maximize the effectiveness of your archetype. For this, the best available armor (and weapons) has been recommended. If you can't find this equipment, or lack the Level to wear it, find some with a similar weight, or statistics before you graduate to the optimal outfit and armaments. When in doubt, use Witcher gear!

AN OUTFIT FOR EVERY OCCASION

As you progress, you should think about setting up various outfits that coordinate—not with fabrics but with similar elements or effects. For example, you should try an outfit for Fast Attacks, Strong Attacks, Sign Intensity, or a mixture of different elements, as you decide which one you prefer using in combat, and what is most suitable to your style of play.

Example: You wish to increase your Sign intensity. To get the best bonuses, you should choose Griffin School armor (as they have an innate Intensity bonus). In addition, you should partner the armor with the General Ability: Griffin School Techniques, which adds more bonuses to Sign Intensity.

SPENDING YOUR CROWNS WISELY

It is worth making money in order to unlock advantages such as the Ofieri Runewright, Armorers and Blacksmiths to craft your most impressive gear, and other accouterments the influence an archetype. It costs crowns and time to craft a set of Mastercrafted armor, and Witcher Gear is even more time-consuming to find and build. But the results are well worth it!

UPPER LEVELS AND NG+

Once you reach upper Levels (50+), or you're starting a New Game +, you should have built your Archetype to the state where it is optimal, and started to unlock Mutations. At this point you can continue to add abilities so you become more and more focused, or change and opt for a different Archetype completely. Starting New Game + is usually a great idea, as you're able to access all the Places of Power again, adding a potential 30 extra points, as well as slowly gaining experience points and Character Levels.

LAST ON YOUR LIST: MUTATIONS

Remember that the final abilities you crave are the mysterious Mutations; accessed only after completing Blood and Wine: Secondary Quest: Turn and Face the Strange. This eventually increases your total Abilities from 12 to 16, and adds a specific, immensely powerful Mutation you can employ. Each archetype lists 16 Abilities, so you can choose which order the first 12 of them are placed, before the final four are unlocked after Mutations are complete. Fair warning; it takes 55 points (each from raising a level or finding a Place of Power) to unlock all four Ability Slots (so you can activate all 16) as well as researching any of the 12 available Mutations, so expect to start a New Game + and revisit all 30 Places of Power again to bolster your points.

POTION OF CLEARANCE

Remember this potion, available at select Merchants (as detailed in the Merchant Appendix) allows you to wipe away all Abilities, and redistribute all the points, in case you wish to change Archetypes at any time.

I WANT A SECOND OPINION!

The following Archetypes represent opinions from multiple adventures with Witchers from various Schools, and advice from the elder Witcher Vesemir himself. Though highly recommended, such advice may not sit well with your particular style of play, and you are free to use, augment, or ignore every one of these Archetypes. They are meant to be a peek into the countless possibilities of creating the ultimate Witcher, not a set of rules to abide by.

ARCHETYPE SPECIFICS: BUILDING A BETTER ARCHETYPE

The following archetypes offer you a great range of possible ways to augment Geralt as your adventure continues. All are primarily focused on the Character Menu, where your abilities are unlocked. Archetypes are divided into four main groups:

Combat Related: Emphasis on the (red) Combat Branch of Ability Tree.

Signs Related: Emphasis on the (blue) Signs Branch of Ability Tree.

Alchemy Related: Emphasis on the (green) Alchemy Branch of Ability Tree.

Hybrids: Elements from all four main branches of the Ability Tree, including the (yellow) General Branch of Ability Tree.

AN ARTIST'S IMPRESSION OF EACH ARCHETYPE

The Archetype information begins with a picture of Geralt as the archetype in question, clad in archetype-specific armor and carrying specific weaponry. Hairstyles, masks, or eyewear are just for show. The statistical data next to the screen includes some permanent buffs (from Glyphs for example), but not temporary buffs (from potions, for example), and no bonuses from the Runewright. Each character's statistics are based on the ultimate versions of items (Greater Runestones, Greater Mutagens, Grand Master armor, and Grand Master weapons, for example), and Geralt's Level is set at 50. Blood and Wine is also included in the statistics. This is to give you some idea of the bonuses you should be aiming for.

(DM!) DEATH MARCH! AND {NG+) NEW GAME +

If an Archetype has "(DM!)" after its name, it is recommended for Death March! difficulty level. If an Archetype has "(NG+)" after its name, it is recommended for New Game +.

THE RECOMMENDED ABILITIES CHART

Each Archetype has a chart showing the following information:

- Ability Tree: The number of recommended abilities for each of the four Branches of the Ability Tree.
- Points to Unlock: How many ability points must have been spent to unlock the ability. These range from 0-30.
- Levels: How many levels the recommended ability has. These range from 0-5. The chart always recommends the maximum ability, but you can purchase the ability levels in any order you like.
- Branch and Ability Name: Which of the five sections of a particular branch the ability is from, and its name. These are listed as they appear left to right on your Character Menu.
- Total Ability Points Needed: This number shows how many ability points are needed to reach the maximum level in all 12 of the recommended abilities (essentially, how many Levels you need to raise your character, minus any Places of Power you interact with). A second, asterisked number indicates the four additional abilities you may wish to unlock after the first 12, once Blood and Wine Mutations are active. If a third number appears, these indicate abilities that should be unlocked in order to reach a more important, recommended Ability.

UNIMPROVED COMBAT OFFENSE: STILL USEFUL!

Just because an aspect of Geralt's combat offense hasn't been advanced through expenditure in abilities, doesn't mean it should ignored in ctombat. For example, Igni is helpful for setting enemies ablaze, whether you've spent points in this Sign's branch or not.

THE RECOMMENDED EQUIPMENT AND ENHANCEMENTS

After the ability chart is a list of important equipment and enhancements, along with the recommended specific item to further improve the Archetype. These are elements that increase the potency of the Archetype and offer incredible "stacking" bonuses (that are added on top of other bonuses) to turn Geralt into an almost unstoppable killing machine. Every element is battle-tested and approved, from the types of Bombs to lob to the Runewords your swords should be inscribed with.

URSINE ARMOR? BUT I'M ONLY LEVEL 3!

The recommended equipment represents the final and most potent items and enhancements to obtain. It will take considerable time to reach this demi-god like status, so if you see an item you can't use, such as Ursine Witcher armor you can't wear because you aren't a high enough level, consult the Inventory In A Witcher's Tools section of the eGuide online, and look at the statistics for the element in question. Then compare it to a lower level substitute; such as Heavy Armor in place of Ursine Armor.

NO OILS? UNMENTIONED ITEMS? STILL USEFUL!

There are no recommended oils for archetypes as each is specific to a type of enemy, and thus situational. You are also encouraged to utilize elements that aren't necessarily mentioned but are still worthwhile, such as Swallow potion for your Vitality, or bombs that may not have been mentioned. The listed elements are simply the items and enhancements best suited to the build in question.

GENERAL ADVICE

After the list is some general advice regarding why specific elements were chosen for the archetype. An explanation of what this archetype's main reason for existing is (to have the best damage per second, for example), and how the various items and enhancements work together, are explained.

WHAT'S THE POINT OF IT ALL?

Just how many Ability Points is it possible to acquire? The answer may surprise you!

Points for Leveling Up: 99 (you receive 1 point each time you reach a new level, starting at Level 2, and ending at Level 100).

Points for visiting Places of Power: 30 (you receive 1 point for each Place of Power you examine).

Points for visiting Places of Power in New Game +: 30 (when you begin New Game +, you can revisit all 30 Places of Power once again).

Points for completing quests: 3 (You receive 2 skill points for eating the acorn lying under the tree during Main Quest: Bald Mountain. You receive 1 point obtaining the golden egg, laid by the Golden Goose, during Blood and Wine: Secondary Quest: Duck, Duck, Goosed!).

Points for completing quests in New Game +: 3 (you can complete both the quests again in New Game + and claim the three ability points a second time).

Total Points available: 164 (assuming you complete all tasks listed previously).

Points needed to unlock all Combat Branch Abilities: 91.

Points needed to unlock all Signs Branch Abilities: 79.

Points needed to unlock all Alchemy Branch Abilities: 90.

Points needed to unlock all General Branch Abilities: 20.

Total Points (known as Research Points) needed to unlock all 12 Blood and Wine Mutations: 55

Total Points to unlock everything: 335.

As you cannot ever hope to unlock every single Ability and Blood and Wine Mutations, simply focus on those abilities of particular interest to you that work in conjunction with other abilities, with specializations that benefit you the most.

Finally, remember that some Ability points are easier to come by than others. For example, there are six Places of Power in White Orchard alone, so it is helpful that you locate these monoliths as early as possible, as long as you aren't placing yourself in too much danger. Need to know where all the Places of Power are? Consult the appendix.

Character Abilities And Mutations

Character Development

A Witcher possesses a wide variety of skills needed to survive the tasks their profession demands of them. In Witcher 3: Wild Hunt, you have the chance to customize Geralt the way you want, and maximize his effectiveness based around how you want to tackle the challenges you face.

Properly managing and accessing every aspect of the knowledge Geralt gains as he progresses through the adventure is the key to unlocking the very best from him.

EXPERIENCE AND LEVELING

Geralt earns experience by slaying foes, completing quests, accomplishing special tasks, or by making certain conversational choices. Additionally, visiting Points of Interest on your map and resolving the tasks that await you there, can earn you additional experience. If you want to level up quickly, jump at the chance to take on any tasks presented to Geralt, regardless of their level of importance. Quests with a suggested level that is five or more levels lower than Geralt's level receive an experience reward penalty, so if you want to maximize the awards you earn from a quest, make sure you attempt it when you are close to its recommended level.

Look to your Inventory, to furnish you with the exact Level you need to be in order to enjoy the benefits of rare armor, such as this set from the Order of the Flaming Rose!

After earning enough experience, Geralt gains a level, which gives him stat increases, and one ability point (also known sometimes as a skill point) that he can spend in one of the Ability Branches. The obvious benefit to gaining levels is the boost in strength and survivability, allowing Geralt to take on increasingly tougher opponents and quests. The other major benefit is that many pieces of equipment require you to be a certain level before you can use them.

LEVEL UP, VITALITY UP

Leveling up fully restores Geralt's Vitality and Stamina, even while in combat. This can be used to your advantage if you are close to leveling and take on an enemy or a group of foes that are slightly stronger than you.

DIMINISHING RETURNS

Killing monsters rewards the most experience if the enemy is five levels over Geralt's current level. The closer to, or farther below his level, the less experience that enemy is worth. If you want to reach level 100 (the highest available level), questing provides a large chunk of the experience points needed.

Experience gained from fighting changes depending on the level of the foe relative to Geralt's. If the foe's level is white, you gain reduced experience, as they are significantly weaker than Geralt. Green level indicators mean the enemy is close to Geralt's level, and you gain the standard amount of experience. A red level foe is much tougher than Geralt, but defeating them provides increased experience. If their level is indicated by a skull rather than a number, you gain much more experience if you can win. However, you are more likely to earn a swift death should you try.

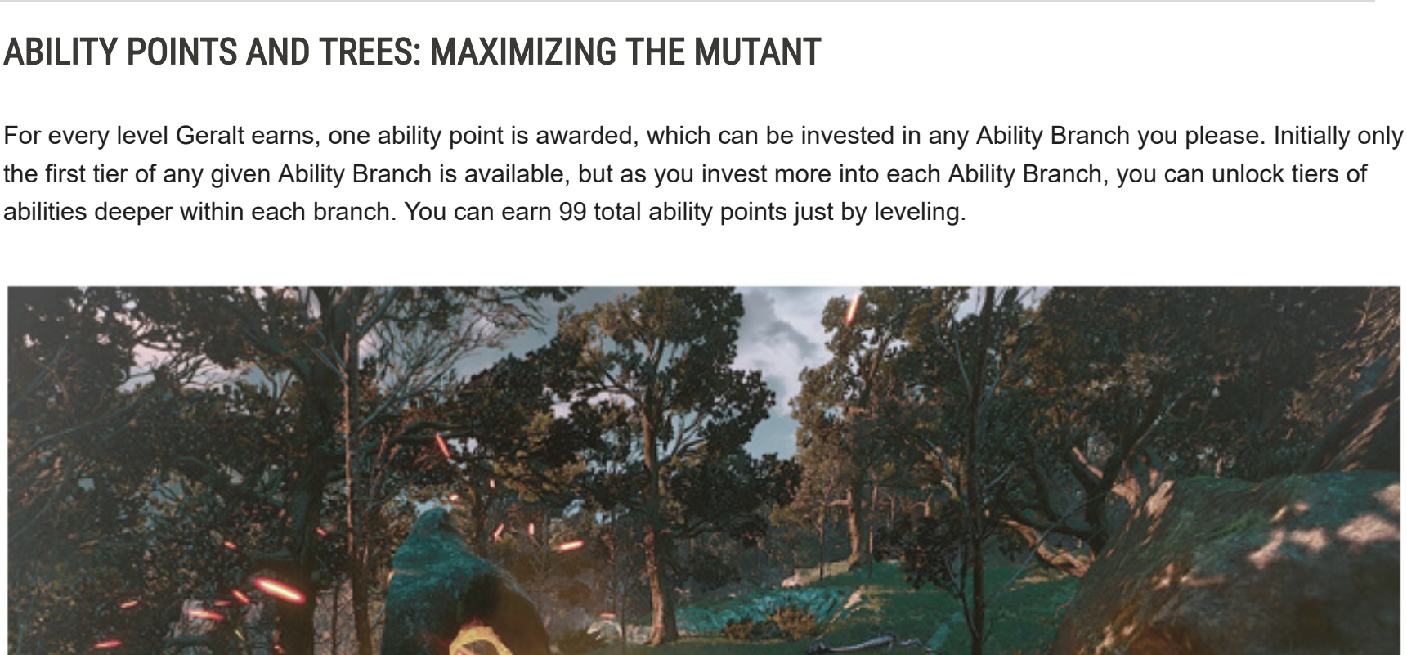
ABILITY POINTS AND TREES: MAXIMIZING THE MUTANT

For every level Geralt earns, one ability point is awarded, which can be invested in any Ability Branch you please. Initially only the first tier of any given Ability Branch is available, but as you invest more into each Ability Branch, you can unlock tiers of abilities deeper within each branch. You can earn 99 total ability points just by leveling.



Ability points are the key to creating a particular character archetype. Gain one every time you level up, or the first time you draw energy from each Place of Power (as shown). An arrow symbol to the right of your Vitality bar shows you've leveled up, and have one (or more) Ability Points to spend.

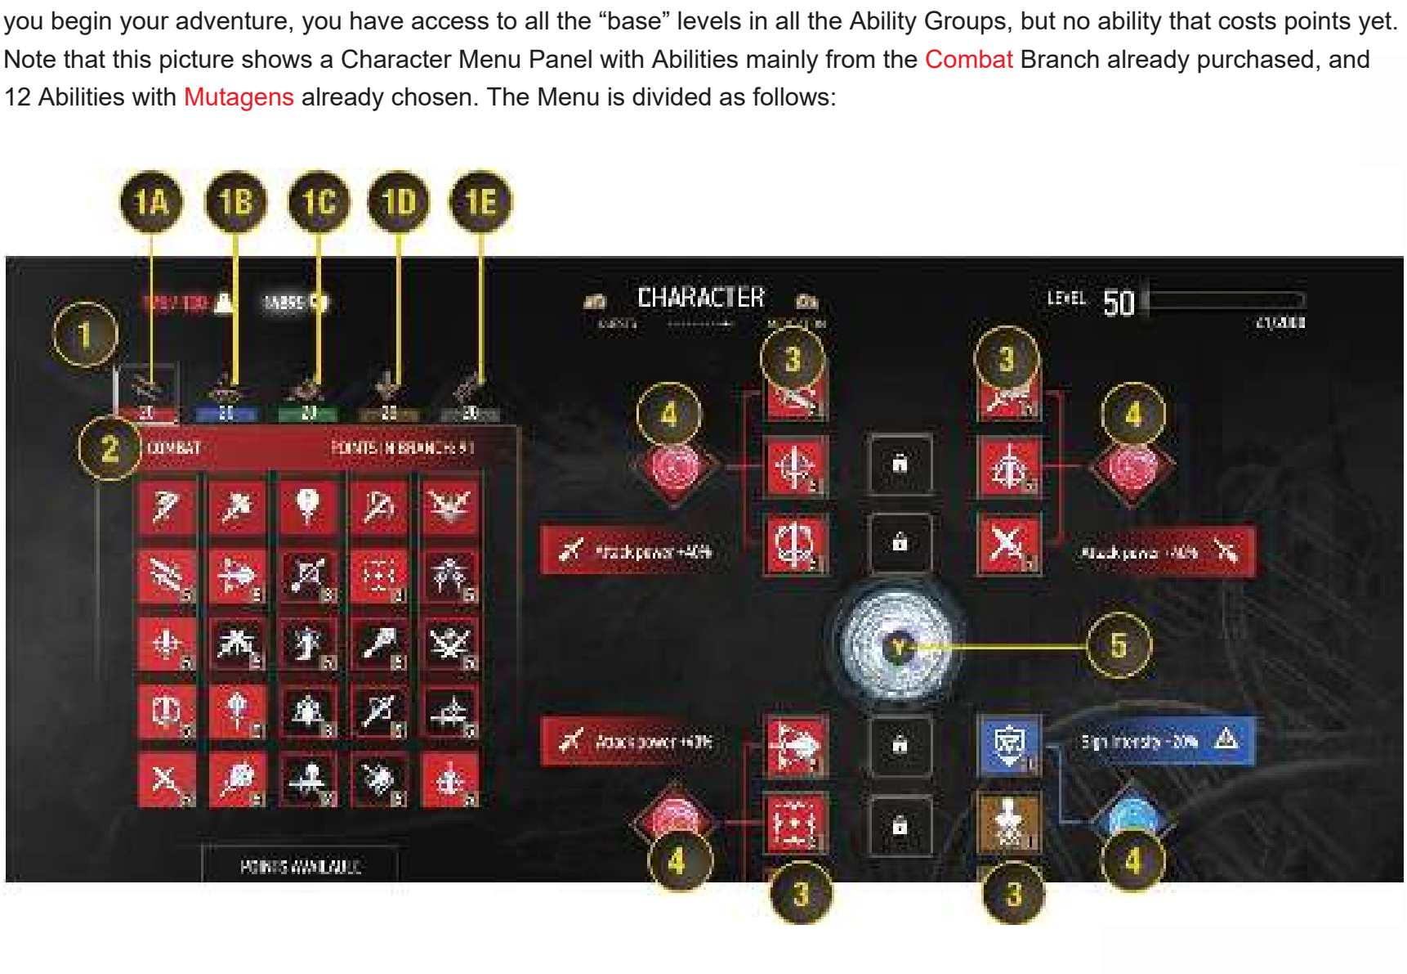
You can earn extra skill points by drawing them from Places of Power hidden throughout the world. However, even if you find every Place of Power, and achieve maximum level, you cannot max every skill in the game. Because of the limited total number of ability points, it helps to consider in advance the sort of Witcher you want to play. There are a total of 30 Places of Power in the world (and therefore additional Ability points to gain by visiting all of them). Their locations are described in our Atlas.

THE POTION OF CLEARANCE

Are you unhappy with the abilities you have chosen? Then you can simply purchase a Potion of Clearance, and refund all of Geralt's invested Ability points, allowing you to redistribute them all again. The potion is available from certain vendors (consult the Merchants Appendix for each one), and when bought, the potion is found in your Inventory > Food and Drink menu.

THE CHARACTER MENU: ABILITY TREES AND ABILITY GROUPING

This shows the Character Menu Panel, where all allotted abilities are both purchased and slotted into play. Note that when you begin your adventure, you have access to all the "base" levels in all the Ability Groups, but no ability that costs points yet. Note that this picture shows a Character Menu Panel with Abilities mainly from the Combat Branch already purchased, and 12 Abilities with Mutagens already chosen. The Menu is divided as follows:



1 Ability Tree: Five Branches are available (and the Combat Branch is currently shown):

1A Combat Branch (20 Abilities, 91 Points in Branch): Five Ability Groups are available:

Fast Attack (4 Abilities, 20 Points): Perform fast melee attacks with either sword: Abilities related to your Fast Attacks (with swords and fists).

Strong Attack (4 Abilities, 20 Points): Allows you to perform strong melee attacks which ignore enemy armor: Abilities related to your Strong Attack (with swords and fists).

Defense (4 Abilities, 13 Points): Wolf School defensive techniques: Allows you to bolster your defensive combat capabilities.

Marksmanship (4 Abilities, 18 Points): Allows you to wield a light hand-held crossbow: Enables you to add more potent methods of using this weapon.

Battle Trance (4 Abilities, 20 Points): Blows landed during combat generate Adrenaline Points. Each Adrenaline Point increases weapon damage by 10%: This allows more numerous and hard-hitting weapon combat.

1B Signs Branch (20 Abilities, 79 Points in Branch): Five Ability Groups are available:

Aard Sign (4 Abilities, 16 Points): A directed blast of telekinetic energy that staggers opponents, leaving them open for a subsequent attack.

Igni Sign (4 Abilities, 18 Points): A directed fiery blast that damages enemies. Damage scales with Sign intensity.

Yrden Sign (4 Abilities, 15 Points): Magic trap that slows enemies who enter its area of effect.

Quen Sign (4 Abilities, 16 Points): Protective shield that lasts until it has absorbed damage totaling 4% of maximum Vitality.

Axii Sign (4 Abilities, 14 Points): Charms an opponent's mind, temporarily eliminating him from combat.

1C Alchemy Branch (20 Abilities, 90 Points in Branch): Five Ability Groups are available:

Brewing (4 Abilities, 18 Points): Enables the brewing and drinking of Witcher potions.

Oil Preparation (4 Abilities, 18 Points): Enables the creation of oils that can be applied to swords.

Bomb Creation (4 Abilities, 18 Points): Enables the creation of handheld bombs that can be thrown at enemies.

Mutation (4 Abilities, 18 Points): Enables the extraction of mutagens from the corpses of powerful monsters. Witchers use these to grant their bodies new abilities.

Trial of the Grasses (4 Abilities, 18 Points): Mutation that lets Witchers withstand the toxicity of potions that would kill normal people.

1D General Branch (20 Abilities, 20 Points in Branch): This is a series of 20 one-point Abilities that aren't related to one another, except that they are all contained here. These run the gamut from Vitality and Stamina regeneration to increasing your carry weight.

1E Mutagens: These are all the Mutagens (Lesser, Regular, and Greater) that you have collected, of all three colors (Red for Combat, Blue for Signs, and Green for Alchemy); up to four are inserted into the Mutagen Slots.

2 Ability Branch (Combat Branch Shown): This is where each individual Ability from a particular branch is unlocked, and placed in an Ability Slot.

3 Ability Slots: This is where an Ability you wish to use is placed. There are 12 available slots initially, arranged into groups of three. You are encouraged to place abilities of the same type (and color) together. When you unlock the full power of your Mutation Menu, you can unlock a further four Ability Slots for a total of 16 Abilities you can use simultaneously. This example is from a Combat-heavy archetype.

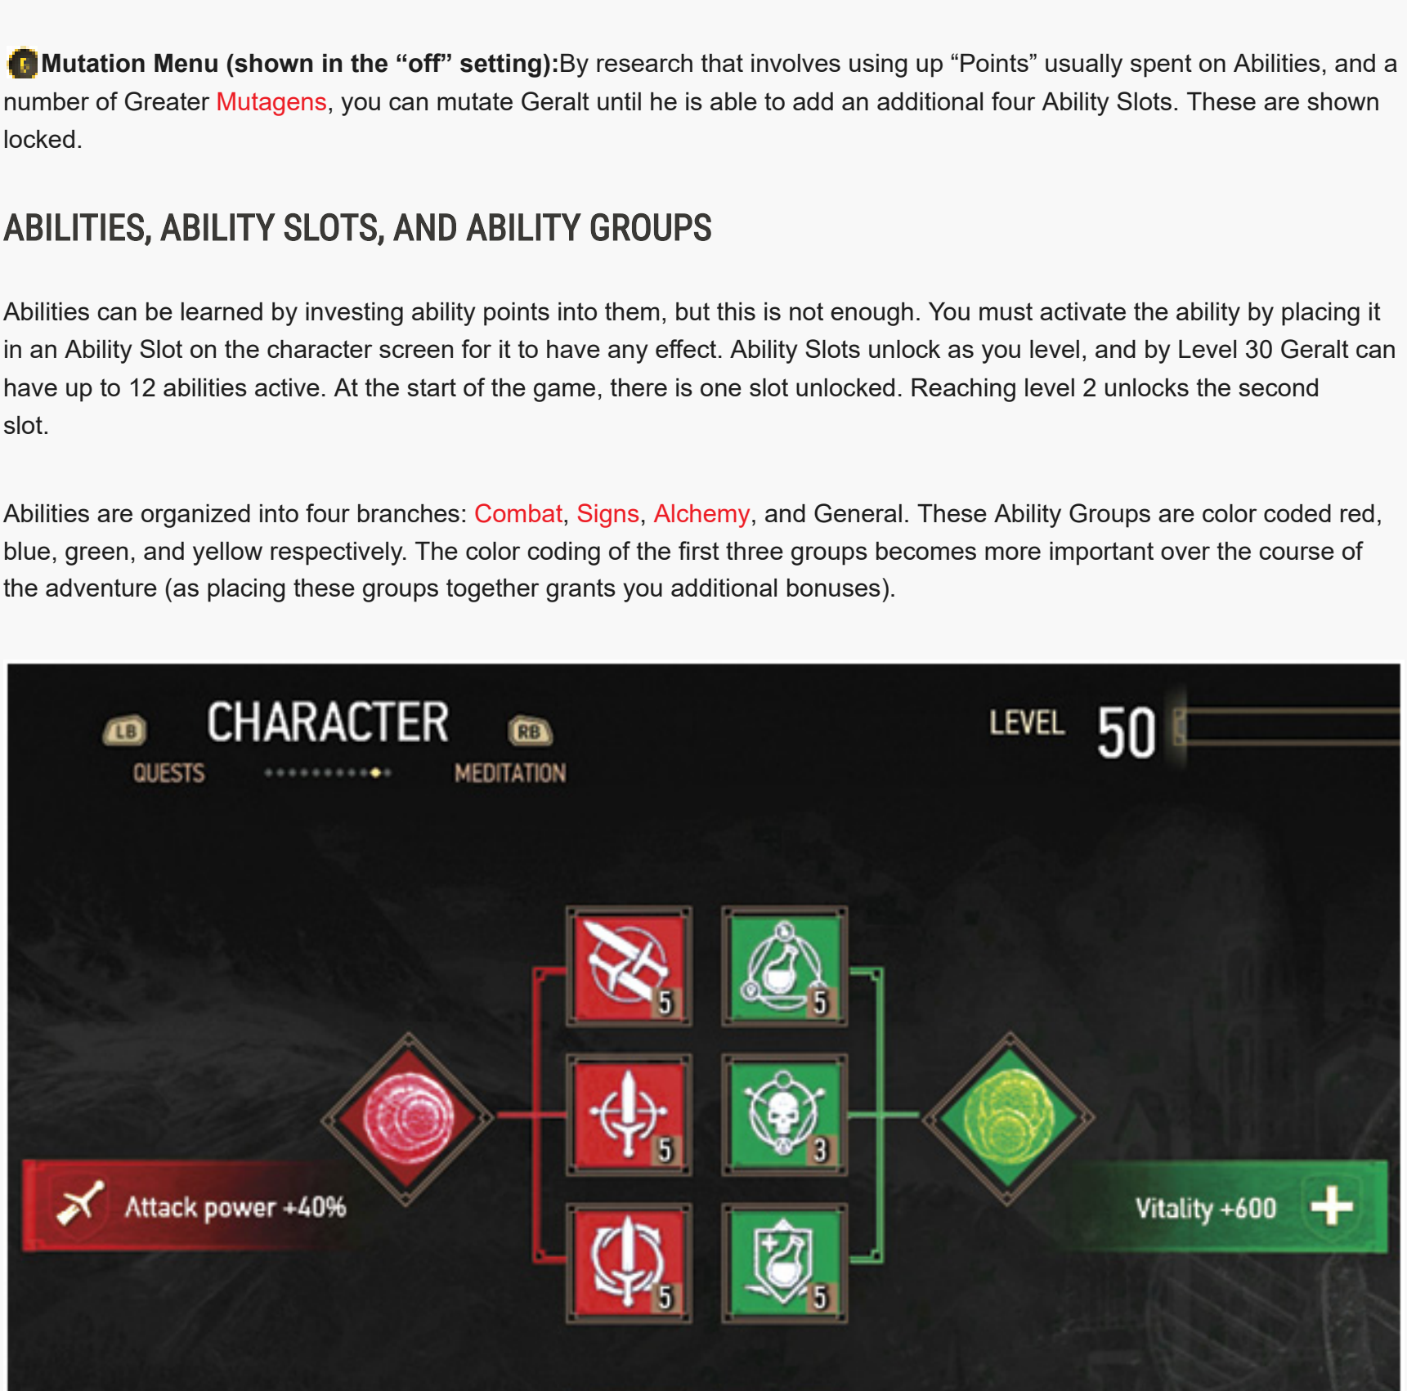
4 Mutagen Slots: This is where a Mutagen you wish to link to a Ability Slot is placed. There are four available slots, each related to a group of three Abilities. Linking these allows for additional bonuses for each linked ability, so you are encouraged to link groups as soon as you can. Mutagen Slots are eventually replaced by a brand new Ability Slot (an additional one for each of the four groups).

5 Mutation Menu (shown in the "off" setting): By research that involves using up "Points" usually spent on Abilities, and a number of Greater Mutagens, you can mutate Geralt until he is able to add an additional four Ability Slots. These are shown locked.

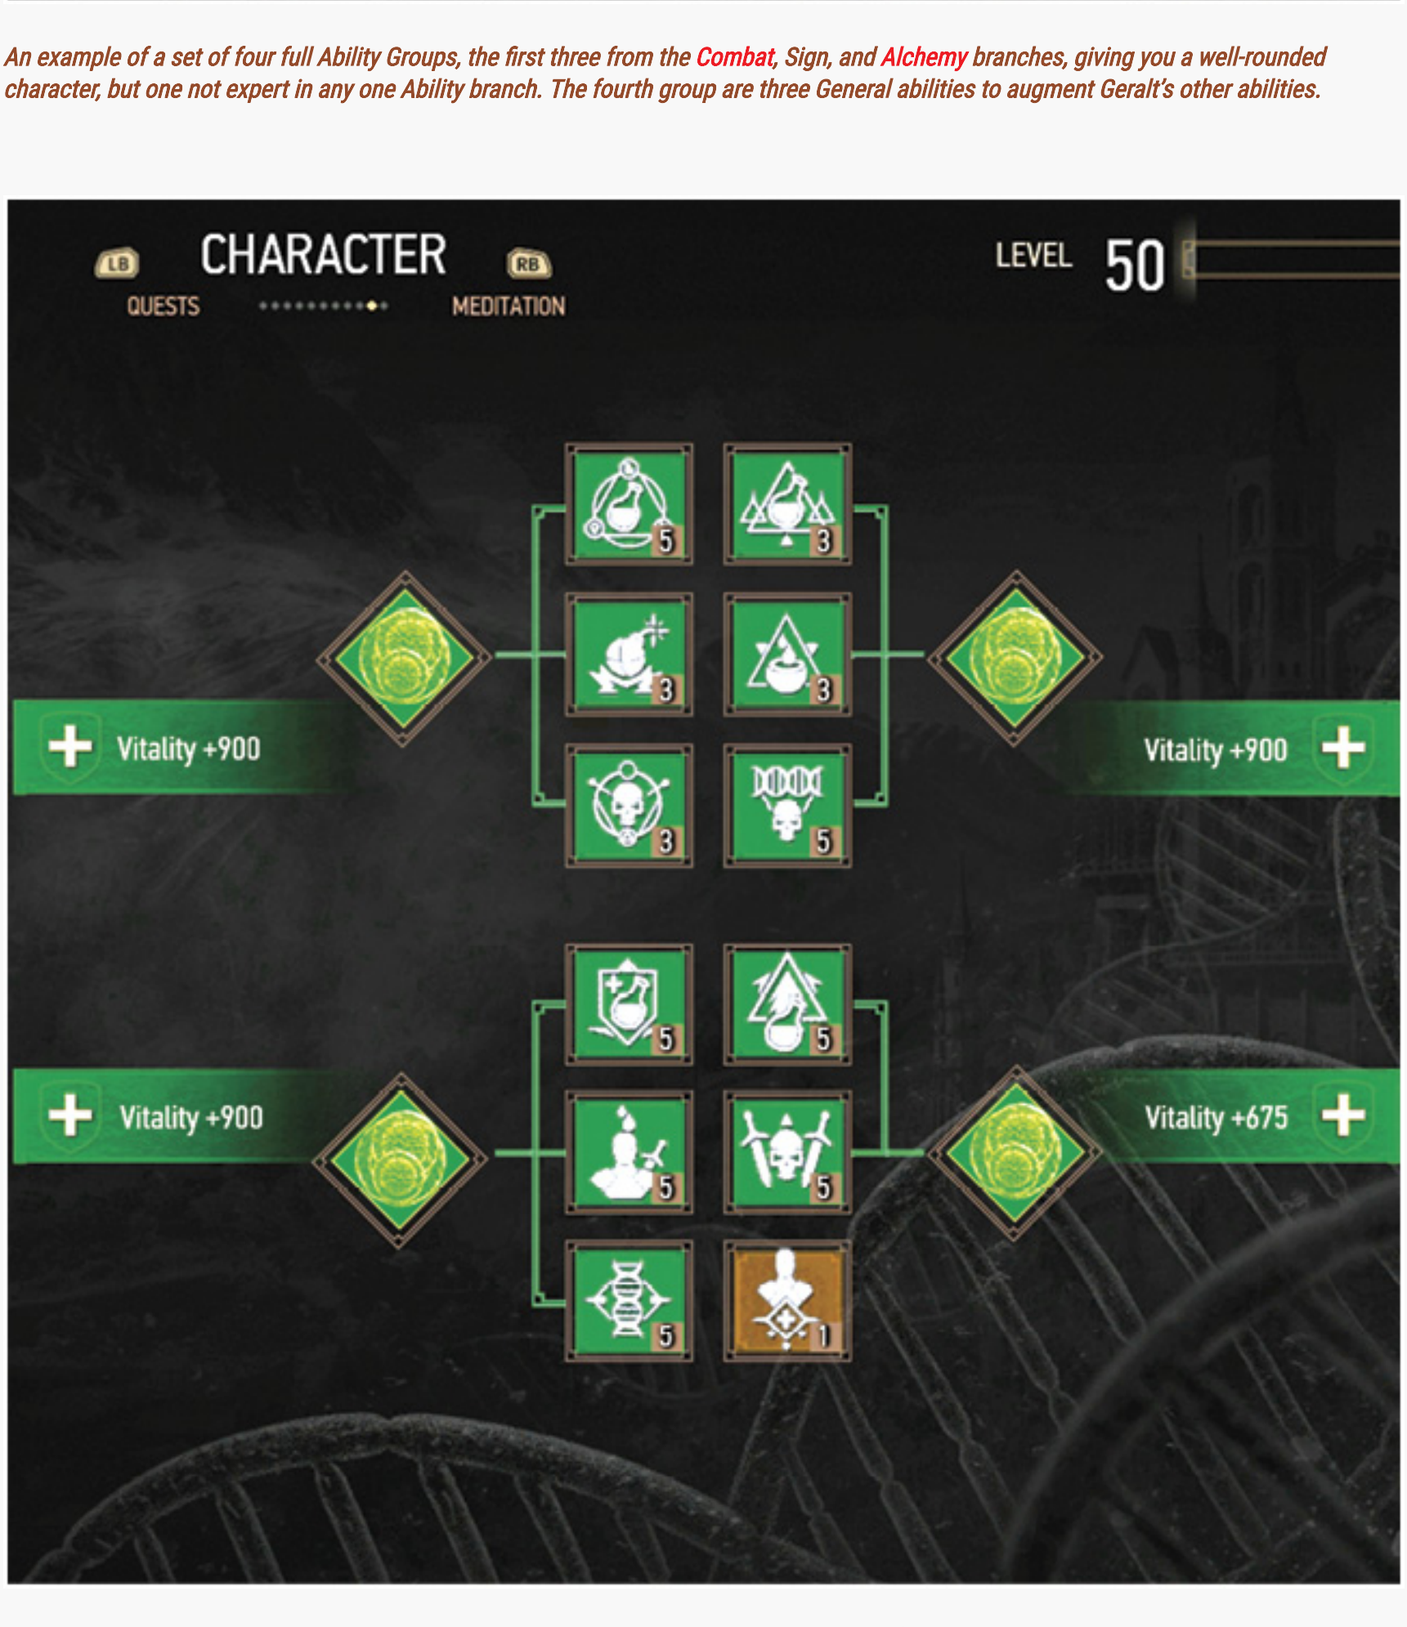
ABILITIES, ABILITY SLOTS, AND ABILITY GROUPS

Abilities can be learned by investing ability points into them, but this is not enough. You must activate the ability by placing it in an Ability Slot on the character screen for it to have any effect. Ability Slots unlock as you level, and by Level 30 Geralt can have up to 12 abilities active. At the start of the game, there is one slot unlocked. Reaching level 2 unlocks the second slot.

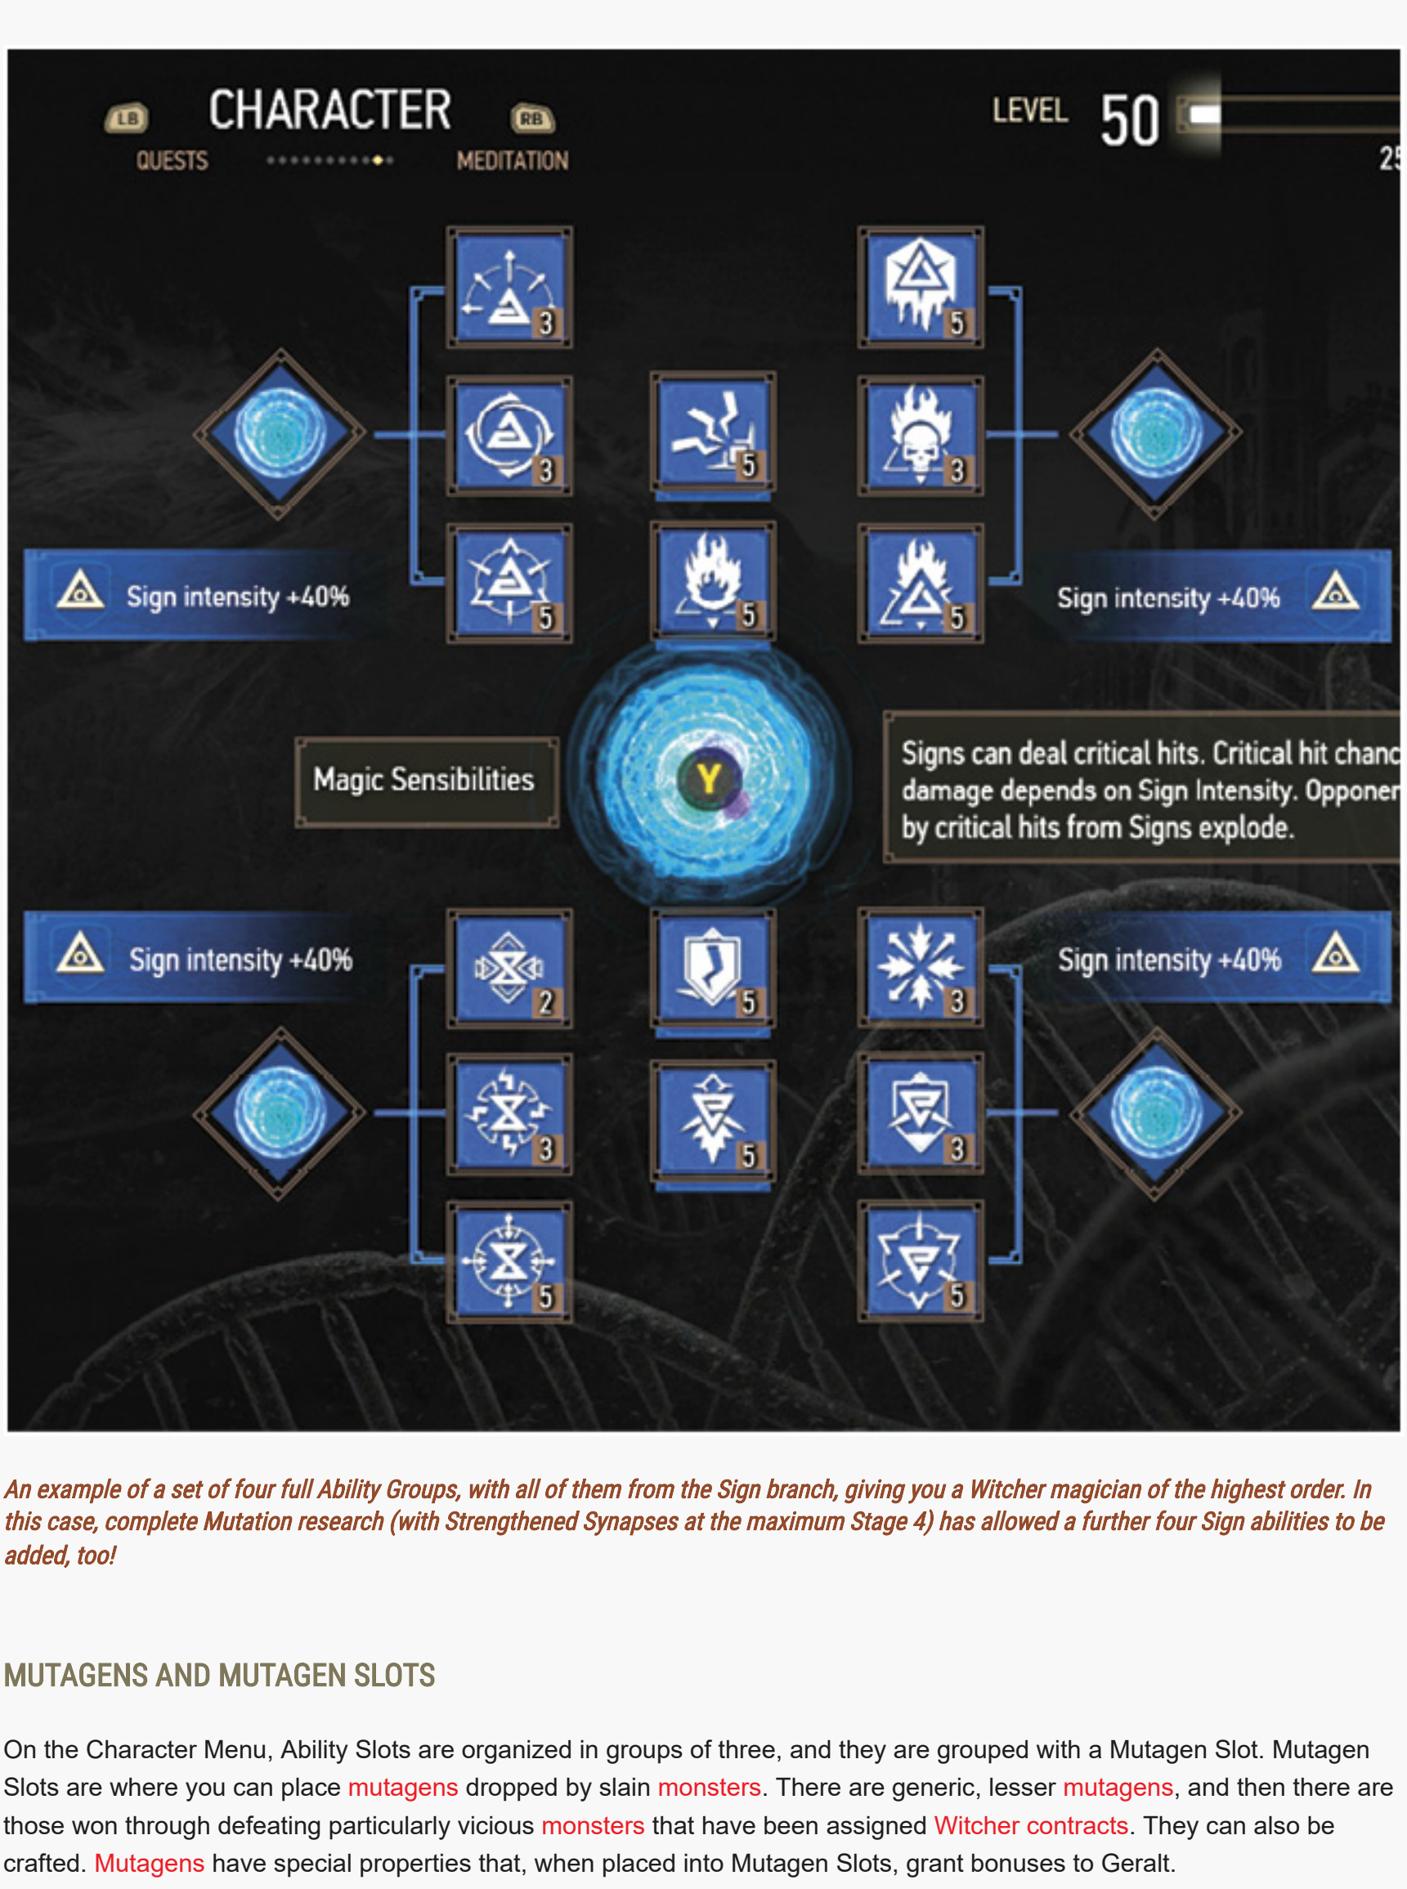
Abilities are organized into four branches: Combat, Signs, Alchemy, and General. These Ability Groups are color coded red, blue, green, and yellow respectively. The color coding of the first three groups becomes more important over the course of the adventure (as placing these groups together grants you additional bonuses).



An example of a set of four full Ability Groups, the first three from the Combat, Sign, and Alchemy branches, giving you a well-rounded character, but one not expert in any one Ability branch. The fourth group are three General abilities to augment Geralt's other abilities.



An example of a set of three full Ability Groups, with all of them from the Alchemy branch (plus a fourth grouping with a helpful General Ability), giving you a character fully committed to augmenting combat with crafting. Greater Green Mutagens are added to give the character even more potency!



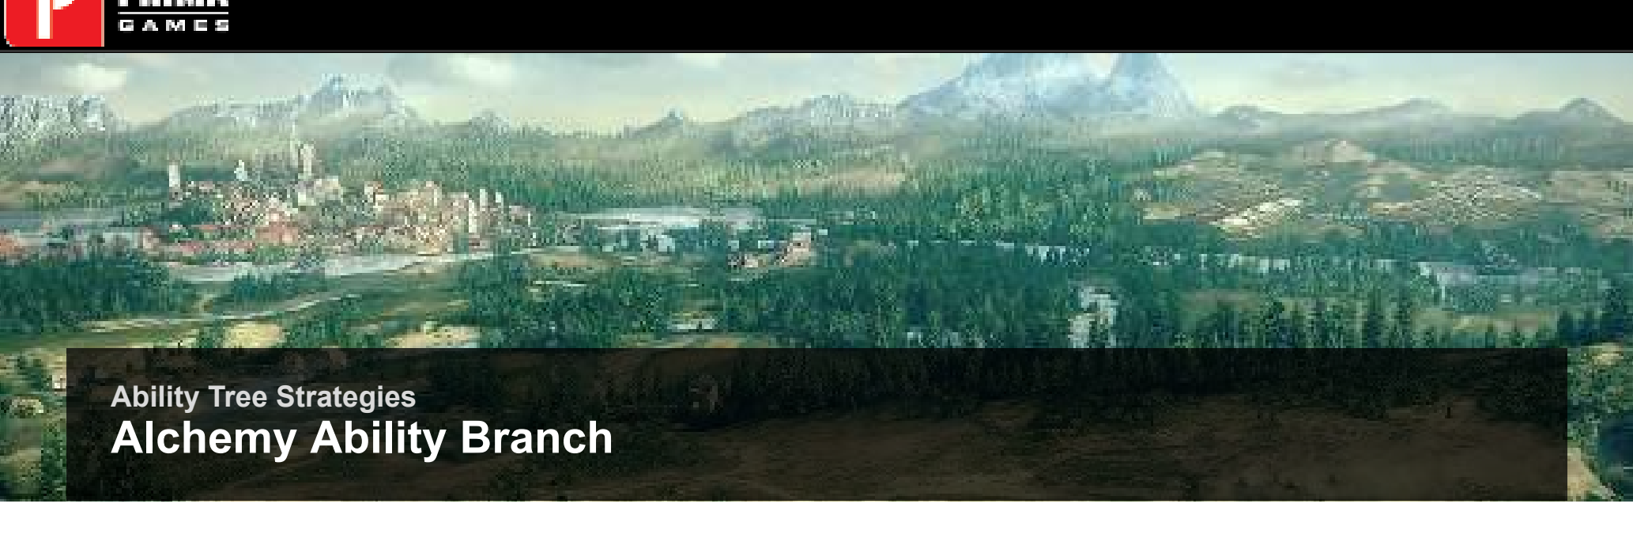
An example of a set of four full Ability Groups, with all of them from the Sign branch, giving you a Witcher magician of the highest order. In this case, complete Mutation research (with Strengthened Synapses at the maximum Stage 4) has allowed a further four Sign abilities to be added, too!

MUTAGENS AND MUTAGEN SLOTS

On the Character Menu, Ability Slots are organized in groups of three, and they are grouped with a Mutagen Slot. Mutagen Slots are where you can place mutagens dropped by slain monsters. There are generic, lesser mutagens, and then there are those won through defeating particularly vicious monsters that have been assigned Witcher contracts. They can also be crafted. Mutagens have special properties that, when placed into Mutagen Slots, grant bonuses to Geralt.

You begin the game with no Mutagen Slots unlocked. However, by level 28, you unlock the fourth and final slot. There are three colors of mutagen: red, blue, or green, coinciding with the Combat, Signs, and Alchemy ability groups.

If you have activated abilities that match the color of the mutagen in-slot, the bonus of that mutagen is increased. You can use this in many ways depending on how you've built Geralt. For example, if you have focused on his Combat abilities, activating 12 combat abilities with four red mutagens makes his sword strikes utterly devastating. The ultimate Witcher warrior is one that has researched all Mutations, and increased the combat abilities total from 12 to 16!



Ability Tree Strategies

Alchemy Ability Branch

ALCHEMY (ABILITY BRANCH: 90 POINTS)

Alchemy is the source of a Witcher's fearsome crafting power. As training begins, Witcher candidates are mutated with lesser mutagens that enhance speed, endurance, strength, and grant the tremendous regenerative abilities required to imbibe the toxic decoctions they consume. This ancient knowledge is also used to brew potions, create bombs that can be thrown at targets with a large area of effect, and prepare sword oils that augment damage to specific breeds of monster. Don't overlook a few of these abilities if you think you're more comfortable creating a Combat or Signs-focused build, as certain Alchemy abilities (such as Synergy) offer incredible bonuses to any part of your Character Tree.

Whether you're crafting oil to coat on blades, turning an alarming facial color after too many poisonous potions and decoctions, or wanting to dismember everyone with bombs, there's something here for you.

BREWING ABILITIES (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

Enables the brewing and drinking of Witcher potions.

★ Heightened Tolerance (5 Levels)

Increases potion overdose threshold by the following additional amount:

Level	Threshold (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Before choosing this ability, and the Acquired Tolerance in the Mutations branch, every potion and decoction you take adds to your Toxicity percentage. Reach over 80% Toxicity, and you lose Vitality; the "potion overdose threshold." Hit 100% Toxicity, and you can't drink any more potions and decoctions. Heightened Tolerance solves this problem (thus allowing more potions to be supped) by increasing the level at which you start losing Vitality due to Toxicity. However, your total Toxicity level does not change; making Acquired Tolerance more helpful as a first ability. Choose both in time, allowing you to easily drink four potions without poisoning yourself.

★ Refreshment (5 Levels)

Each potion dose imbibed heals a percentage amount of maximum Vitality.

Level	Amount (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: Normally, to heal during combat, you would attempt to scarf down food, swig a Swallow potion, or use Quen Active Shield. For those well-versed in alchemy, having any potion grant you additional Vitality recovery is a fantastic way to gain a second use out of all your potions. You are also encouraged to raise your total Vitality (via green Mutagens or abilities) as the percentage increase is for your total health. The only problem is reaching a Toxicity level faster, so employ Heightened and Acquired Tolerance to help with this.

★ Delayed Recovery (3 Levels)

Potion effects don't wear off until potion Toxicity falls to a certain percentage amount of the maximum level.

Level	Amount (%)
1	90%
2	80%
3	70%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: If you are investing into an Alchemist archetype, this ability is excellent for getting the most use out of your potions. For long fights, and if you're willing to manage your toxicity with careful imbibing of potions, you can ensure you have multiple potions effects going for significantly longer than usual. Also employ other Abilities to ensure your Toxicity stays high without detrimental side effects, such as Acquired Tolerance.

Side Effects (5 Levels)

Imbibing a potion gives a percentage chance of activating the effects of another randomly-selected potion, without additional Toxicity cost.

Notes: This is another ability that is perfect for an alchemist archetype that is focusing on potion and decoction drinking to win battles, but isn't usually taken by hybrid build characters. As the random nature of this ability means the secondary effects of potion may not be helpful (such as Killer Whale being activated in a fight on land), this means you need to know what the effect is, and what bonuses it gives you to get the most out of it. Other times, you receive a fantastic bonus that turns the tide in battle. Entertaining, rather than optimal.

OIL PREPARATION (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

Enables the creation of oils that can be applied to swords.

★ Poisoned Blades (5 Levels)

Oil applied to blades gives a percentage chance of poisoning the target on each hit. The chance is greater the higher the level of oil used.

Level	Chance (%)
1	3%
2	6%
3	9%
4	12%
5	15%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're using oils, you need to be using this! As long as you have the correct oil on a given enemy, there's a chance you may poison your foe. This is especially useful against monsters that are the target of a Witcher contract, or foes that regenerate health. Don't forget to further augment your chances by selecting blades with a poison chance (such as the Viper Venomous Swords) and the Morana Runestones.

★ Protective Coating (5 Levels)

Adds additional protection against attacks from the monster type the oil targets, as a percentage:

Level	Added Protection (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: Let's assume you are diligent at learning how to craft all the available oils, and have a bestiary full of information regarding what oils to coat your blade with before each fight. Now you have the ability to shrug off up to a quarter of any damage a foe might inflict on you. Conjure Quen to further your cause, and you soon find a combination of defenses proves highly effective. Only refrain from this ability if you feel your dexterity at dodging and general avoidance of enemy strikes makes it moot.

★ Fixative (3 Levels)

Blade oils last an additional amount of time, as a percentage of the usual time:

Level	Time (%)
1	33% longer
2	67% longer
3	Blade oils do not wear off
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: This is a straightforward ability to understand, and should be taken only if you're finding that your oil is wearing off too soon during a fight. Level 3 of this ability may not be needed at all (especially as oils are relatively easy to craft); you don't need to coat a weapon in oil once the foes you used it on are lying dead at your feet!

★ Hunter Instinct (5 Levels)

When Adrenaline Points are at their maximum, critical hit damage against the targeted enemy type is increased by the following amount:

Level	Increase (%)
1	20%
2	40%
3	60%
4	80%
5	100%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: Remember to coat oil on your chosen blade for this to be effective! Assuming you have maximum Adrenaline Points, or helpful abilities that quickly increase your APs (Combat abilities, Resolve, Razor Focus), then this can cause a huge amount of damage with a single strike. This favors a well-timed strong attack on a foe to ruin their chances of survival.

BOMB CREATION (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

Enables the creation of handheld bombs that can be thrown at enemies, or dropped down Monster Nests.

Steady Aim (3 Levels)

Time is slowed a further percentage amount while aiming bombs, as follows:

Level	Amount (%)
1	15%
2	30%
3	45%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're trying to manually aim bombs in a fight, and you're finding yourself overwhelmed, especially against fast and aggressive enemy types, use Steady Aim: It allows you to take a little more time to perfect a throw, and score a maximum effect for every bomb you use. If, however, you're finding you only use bombs occasionally, or you have quick enough manual dexterity, there are other, more important abilities to spend a hard-earned point on.

Pyrotechnics (5 Levels)

All bombs, even those that usually do not inflict damage, now deal additional damage in addition to their normal effects, as follows:

Level	Damage (Points)
1	+30 (Points)
2	+60 (Points)
3	+90 (Points)
4	+120 (Points)
5	+150 (Points)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: While it's always helpful to increase the damage every time something explodes next to an adversary, the amount of damage caused doesn't scale as you increase in experience levels, meaning you could use other abilities to cause much greater damage compared to this. However, early on in your adventure, this is much more of a help.

Efficiency (5 Levels)

Increases the maximum number of bombs in each slot by the following:

Level	Number (Bombs)
1	+1
2	+2
3	+3
4	+4
5	+5
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: You're usually able to carry up to four bombs of the same type in each quick menu slot, ready to be lobbed at enemies. Efficiency ups this total, so at Level 5 you're able to carry nine bombs in either slot instead. That's 18 bomb-throwing opportunities before you need to delve into your Inventory Menu to find more explosives! If you're using bombs frequently, this is great, though it doesn't increase potency or other effects at all, only what you can carry. If it's taking more than eight bombs (four in each slot) to take down foes in a fight, choose this. If you can manage without a large amount of explosives in your breeches, ignore this (especially if you don't have nine bombs to place in a slot!).

★ Cluster Bombs (5 Levels)

Upon detonation, bombs separate into explosive fragments:

Level	Fragments
1	2
2	3
3	4
4	5
5	6
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Level	Chance (%)
1	20%
2	40%
3	60%
4	80%
5	100%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: If you're really pushing the plan to destroy foes purely by explosive warfare, this is the ultimate in dismemberment! Though you take damage if struck by your own bombs, it is usually worth it for the entertainment value alone. Interior locations with multiple foes become horrific dismemberment abattoirs! It essentially turns any bomb into up to six fragments that detonate with the same force as the main bomb. Remember that Grapeshot already separates before exploding, so the effects aren't quite as severe. But for everything else, expect carnage!

MUTATION (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

Enables the extraction of mutagens from the corpses of powerful monsters. Witchers use these to grant their bodies new abilities. Note these are distinct and different from the Mutations Menu.

Acquired Tolerance (3 Levels)

Every known particular level of an alchemy formula increases maximum Toxicity by 1.

Level	Formula Level
1	1
2	1 or 2
3	1, 2, or 3
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: Before choosing this ability, and the Heightened Tolerance in the Brewing branch, every potion and decoction you take adds to your Toxicity percentage. Reach over 80% Toxicity, and you lose Vitality; the "potion overdose threshold." Hit 100% Toxicity, and you can't drink any more potions and decoctions. Acquired Tolerance solves this problem by raising your total Toxicity level. Even though you still lose Vitality when you reach 80% of your total Toxicity, that Toxicity is bigger (effectively doubled), and is therefore more helpful than Heightened Tolerance. Choose both in time, allowing you to easily drink four potions without poisoning yourself.

★ Tissue Transformation (5 Levels)

When consumed, mutagen decoction increases maximum Vitality by a set number of points for decoction's effective duration:

Level	Increased Vitality (Points)
1	200 (Points)
2	400 (Points)
3	600 (Points)
4	800 (Points)
5	1000 (Points)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: If you're experimenting with Decoctions, including drinking two at once to gain multiple bonuses during battle, and don't want to worry too much about the Vitality drain from becoming to "toxic," invest in this ability. If you've invested in the two "Tolerance" Alchemy abilities, this can up the number of decoctions, and grant you a huge bonus to your health (without it reducing due to you being poisoned by decoctions, as your threshold for tolerance is raised). Do you need more Vitality in a fight, and enjoy the taste of a decoction (or four)? Then pick this ability!

★ Synergy (5 Levels)

Increases bonus for mutagen placed in mutagen slot by an additional amount, as follows:

Level	Amount (%)
1	10%
2	20%
3	30%
4	40%
5	50%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: Want a potentially massive boost in mutagen effectiveness? Then access this ability. If you've spent points evenly between the Combat and Alchemy branches just to unlock this, then maximize this ability's effectiveness. Geralt is a formidable monster in melee combat with the right mutagens! For example, let's say you have a Greater Green Mutagen (+150 Vitality) in one of your four character slot areas, along with three Alchemy abilities (raising your Vitality to +600). Add a Level 5 Synergy, and you gain an additional 300 Vitality (+900). Are all four character slots using Greater Green Mutagens (with an all-Alchemy archetype)? Then your Vitality shoots up to +3,600! Remember this only applies to Green Mutagens.

Adaptation (5 Levels)

Extends effective duration of all mutagen decoctions by the following amount:

Level	Amount (%)
1	10%
2	20%
3	30%
4	40%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: Remember this only affects decoctions, rather than potions. If you're Alchemy-based in your abilities, this is a superb skill to acquire, though you are encouraged to check whether decoctions are running out during combat first. If you need the extra time, or wish to move from combat to combat with decoctions working continuously (and have the Toxicity tolerance to help cope with the Vitality drains), this is a great idea. Otherwise, you may wish to ignore this for other abilities (especially if you find decoctions easy to craft).

TRIAL OF THE GRASSES (4 ABILITIES, 18 POINTS)

Mutation that lets Witchers withstand the toxicity of potions that would kill normal people. Note these are distinct and different from the Mutations Menu.

Frenzy (3 Levels)

If potion Toxicity is above 0, time automatically slows when an enemy is about to perform a counterattack. The slowing effect and duration increase as follows:

Level	Slowing Effect and Duration
1	Does not increase
2	Greater than level 1
3	Greater than level 2
Points in branch needed to unlock: 0

Notes: If you're known to partake in copious potion-chugging, this is amazingly useful; the ability to read when an enemy is about to counter-attack, and have the time to properly react to it, can be game-changing. So long as you have potions to use, you can receive something positive out of the Toxicity that is building up inside Geralt. However, later into your adventure, when you've correctly timed your parrying, this becomes less useful, as it is highly situational.

Endure Pain (5 Levels)

Increases maximum Vitality by the following amount, when Toxicity exceeds the safe threshold:

Level	Amount (%)
1	10%
2	20%
3	30%
4	40%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 8

Notes: This ability remains dormant at all times until the decoctions and potions you've taken cause your Toxicity tolerance levels to be reached. Instead of a large Vitality loss and a slow reduction in your health, your Vitality increases instead. There are other ways to stop Vitality loss (the "Tolerance" abilities for example), making this less effective, especially if you don't take multiple potions and decoctions in every fight. But if you do, and don't have the Vitality to finish a fight while being poisoned by your own drinking habits, choose this ability.

Fast Metabolism (5 Levels)

Toxicity drops by a set number of points per second faster than normal.

Level	Points per Second
1	1 (Point per Second)
2	2 (Points per Second)
3	3 (Points per Second)
4	4 (Points per Second)
5	5 (Points per Second)
Points in branch needed to unlock: 20

Notes: This ostensibly allows you to swig down more potions and decoctions so your Vitality losses once you reach unsafe Toxicity levels are minimized.

While this sounds great in theory, and is a good choice if you aren't building a character that is utilizing linked alchemy abilities to flirt with keeping Toxicity high, it usually isn't necessary if you've purchased Acquired Tolerance, or simply don't drink multiple decoctions in a fight (to reach unsafe levels). It is also one of the few abilities that shouldn't be partnered with another ability; Delayed Reaction is far less effective if your Toxicity reduction is sped up.

Killing Spree (5 Levels)

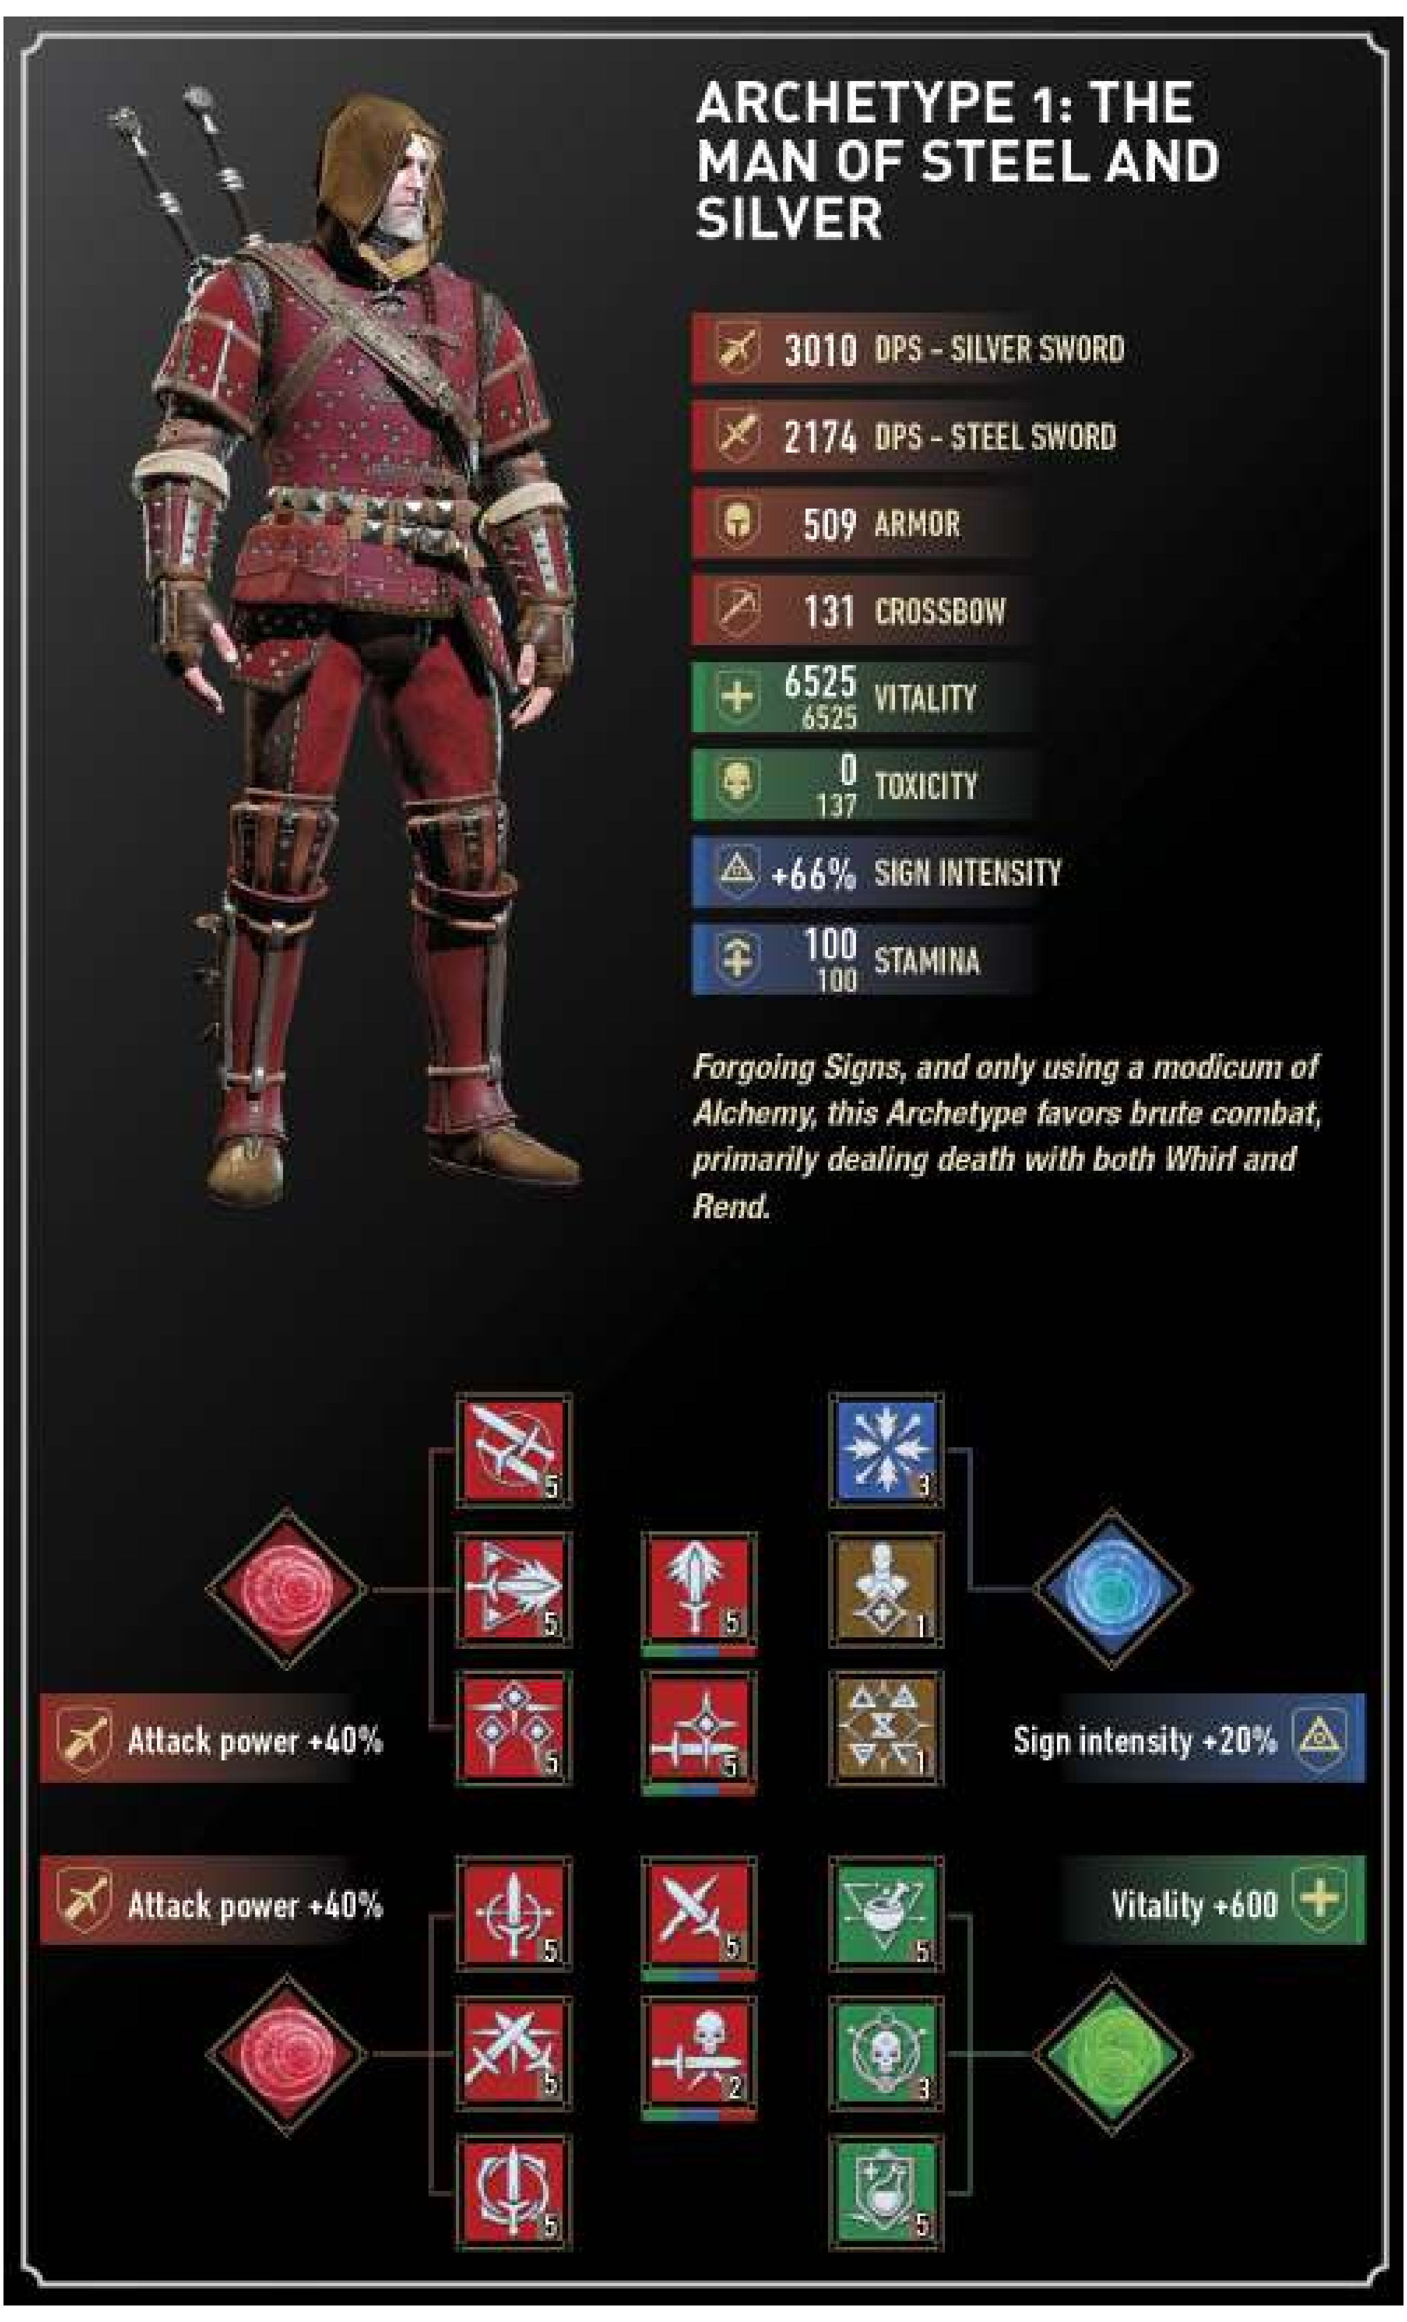
If potion Toxicity is above 0, each opponent killed increases the chance for a critical hit by an additional amount, as follows:

Level	Amount (%)
1	5%
2	10%
3	15%
4	20%
5	25%
Points in branch needed to unlock: 28

Notes: This works with potions rather than decoctions, and basically allows you a greater chance of scoring a critical hit for bonus damage. This is highly situational (you need to have used potions so your Toxicity is over zero, and you need to have a good Critical Damage bonus once the hit actually wounds a foe), but it does stack with your other attacks that have a critical hit chance. The biggest problem is the large number of points needed to access Killing Spree. After 28 ability points are spent, you may well be defeating foes without the need for this extra critical hit chance, and there are much more potent Alchemy abilities to spend your points on (like Synergy).

Combat-focused Archetypes

Archetype 1: The Man Of Steel And Silver



Forgoing Signs, and only using a modicum of Alchemy, this Archetype favors brute combat, primarily dealing death with both Whirl and Rend.

Points to Unlock	Levels	Branch and Ability Name
0	5	Fast Attack: Muscle Memory
0	5	Strong Attack: Strength Training
0	5	Battle Trance: Resolve
8	5	Fast Attack: Precise Blows
8	5	Strong Attack: Crushing Blows
20	5	Fast Attack: Whirl
20	5	Strong Attack: Rend
20	5	Battle Trance: Razor Focus
30	5	Fast Attack: Crippling Strikes*
30	2	Defense: Deadly Precision*
0	3	Quen Sign: Exploding Shield*
0	5	Oil Preparation: Poison Blades
0	3	Mutation: Acquired Tolerance
8	5	Brewing: Refreshment
0	1	Cat School Techniques
0	1	Rage Management*
Total Ability Points Needed
12/16* Abilities	54/65* Points

(Additional Abilities to swap in, or insert as 16 Slots are unlocked through Mutations)*

Armor: Feline Armor

Swords: Ursine Steel Sword, Ursine Silver Sword

Crossbow: Any

Bombs: Samum, Northern Wind

Potions: Blizzard, Swallow, Maribor Forest, Thunderbolt

Decoctions: Archgriffin, Doppler, Katakan, Succubus

Glyphs: Quen, Mending, Reinforcement

Runestones: Devana, Perun, Stribog

Glyphwords: Protection, Retribution

Runewords: Rejuvenation, Elation, Severance

Mutations: Deadly Counter (2 Research Points), Bloodbath (5 Research Points)

If you enjoy using swords over Signs (and the building up of Stamina and Adrenaline), and this is one of your first times adventuring, use this basic archetype that focuses most on swordplay abilities. Choose light armor before you secure Feline gear. The Cat School Techniques are recommended for use with light armor, due to the large critical hit damage bonus the ability confers for each piece of light armor you wear. Rage Management allows you to opt for Quen protection using your bounty of Adrenaline Points, when your Stamina level is low.

The Fast Attack and Strong Attack Combat branches further enhance your ability to score critical hits, while making each critical hit that much more devastating to an enemy. Your additional Adrenaline (from Abilities such Razor Focus) enables you to utilize both Whirl and Rend for longer, and this allows for attack flexibility: Whirl primarily for groups of human-sized opponents, and well-timed Rends for larger, stronger foes when you really need additional critical hit chances (as long as you time the strike correctly!). Deadly Precision gives you a 2 percent chance of an instant kill, which is an amusing and random event.

Signs are mostly ignored, which isn't usually recommended (but this is a combat-centric build). Quen helps with a modicum of protection, but your agility, rolling and dodging (that is, not being hit) is your protection plan here! Instead, a light focus on Alchemy gives you a chance at poisoning your foes, a better tolerance for Toxicity, but the main ability is Refreshment, enabling you to use any potion you like to increase your Vitality, so you don't need to depend on Swallow quite as often.

Though crossbows aren't the main focus of this build by any means, always choose the best quality one you can find.

Potions like Blizzard are helpful for maintaining your Stamina. Thunderbolt offers an increase in attack power to further demolish your foes. Maribor Forest is extremely helpful as it accelerates the generation of Adrenaline Points; the cornerstone of what makes this Archetype so successful. Swallow is obviously to help with your Vitality.

Samum and Northern Wind bombs allow you to soften up foes, but also to either blind or freeze them; couple this with the Doppler decoction and attacks from behind to thoroughly savage your chosen enemy.

Archgriffin Decoctions are imperative for dealing additional damage to a particularly tough foe. Katakan Decoctions increase your critical hit chance, and Doppler does the same with attacks from behind; as you're wearing light armor and are nimble, this is an excellent ploy, especially after bomb-lobbing. Succubus Decoctions grow your attack power, and should be imbibed at the start of a fight that you know will take a little longer than usual.

Glyphs should primarily be Quen-related, to bolster your less-than impressive Sign ability. Play around with Mending and Reinforcement depending on whether you need the additional Vitality regeneration or toughened armor. Runestones can be fashioned depending on where you need additional bonuses; Perun's Adrenaline Point gain is fantastic, though you may wish to use Stribog to stagger (as you aren't using Aard offensively). Devana is another choice to add additional bleeding damage, but not quite as effective as the stacked bonuses of Perun.

Glyphwords like Protection give you a stamina-free Quen at the start of combat, which allows you to wade in without delay. Or try Retribution in case you're hit and wish to return damage automatically (30 percent of the time). Runewords are for you to ensure even more combat potency; Stamina or Adrenaline point restoration every time you kill with Rejuvenation or Elation, and Severance is a must to increase both Whirl and Rend; the true focus of this archetype!

Bloodbath or Deadly Counter are the Mutations of choice for this archetype. The former results in a finisher for each kill, which is amusing, but each critical hit generates more adrenaline, filling you up with fewer need for defense or down-time in combat. The latter allows you to counterattack wounded foes with a finisher, which quickens combat against groups. For larger monster foes, you'll need the increased damage when fighting at higher levels. Feel free to unlock more potent Mutations as you progress still further in your adventure.

Mutagen Branch

MUTAGEN BRANCH

This branch simply lists all the Mutagens you have successfully collected, or created into Mutagens of a different size or color. The following chart lists all available Mutagens that can be used in conjunction with Activated Abilities (that are in your "slots") to provide statistic bonuses for Geralt, as well as the type of creatures that may possess them. The chart concludes with a list of Lesser, Regular, and Greater Mutagens, and their effects.

MUTATIONS PANEL MENU

Your adventures through the Duchy of Toussaint net you more than some fine wines and a series of gruesome murder-mysteries to solve. It is here, after completing Blood and Wine: Secondary Quest: Turn and Face the Strange, that you are able to finally unlock the full potential of your Mutations!

THE MUTATIONS MENU

The Character Menu screen now has an additional area of interest: the Mutations menu, where you can invest ability points and mutagens in order to develop brand new mutations. This eventually leads to four "Levels" of mutation research. Furthermore, you have one of 12 exceptional mutations you can pick from, which influences your various Combat, Signs, Alchemy, or a combination of abilities.

NEW PLANS AND OLD WAYS

This is a brand new menu, and not directly related to the Mutations branch in the Alchemy Menu. If you decide that the expenditure of Ability points and Mutagens should be delayed until you've purchased a greater number of Abilities instead (or ranks of an ability), you can do that instead.

THE FOUR MUTATION ABILITIES SLOTS

As your Mutation research continues, it is important to note that the newly-unlocked Ability Slots are more related to the active Mutation than you may realize:

- Firstly, the mutations don't receive a linked bonus from any active Mutagens that are linked to the four groups of three "normal" Abilities in slots that you have chosen.

- Secondly, only Abilities directly related to the active Mutation can be placed in these new slots. For example, if the active Mutation is "Bloodbath", a Pure Combat Mutation, only combat-related ("red") abilities can be placed in these slots. For example, if the active Mutation is "Second Life", a Combat/Signs/Alchemy Hybrid Mutation, then any of those three abilities ("red", "blue", or "green") can be placed.

- Thirdly, General abilities cannot be placed on Ability Slots unlocked by Mutation research. This means you should pre-plan exactly how to place all your favorite Abilities to gain the maximum bonuses from the linked Mutagens!

RESEARCHING MUTATIONS: THE MUTATIONS TREE MENU

Researching Mutations requires a great deal of Ability Points and Greater Mutagens (as the chart below indicates). The former are obtained every time you level up, each time you visit a Place of Power, and during a couple of quests. This means you need to put your usual ability selecting on hold while you research mutations. For this reason, Mutation research is recommended once you already have filled your Character Menu slots with 12 abilities and four Mutagens; certainly after you reach Level 40, and usually during a New Game + (so you can collect all the Places of Power ability points again).

The Mutations Menu Tree reveals a total of 12 different Mutations that are available for research, all centered around a central mutation known as Strengthened Synapses: This thirteenth mutation improves automatically when you develop other mutations (the unlocking process is known as "Stages"). As it does, it unlocks additional Ability slots. To begin with, here's a look at a fully-unlocked Mutation Panel Menu:

① Deadly Counter: An initial pure Combat mutation.

② Bloodbath: An unlockable pure Combat mutation.

③ Magic Sensibilities: An initial pure Signs mutation.

④ Piercing Cold: An unlockable pure Signs mutation.

⑤ Toxic Blood: An initial pure Alchemy mutation.

⑥ Euphoria: An unlockable pure Alchemy mutation.

⑦ Adrenaline Rush: An unlockable hybrid mutation (Combat and Signs).

⑧ Second Life: An unlockable hybrid mutation (Combat, Signs, and Alchemy).

⑨ Conductors of Magic: An unlockable hybrid mutation (Combat and Signs).

⑩ Cat Eyes: An unlockable hybrid mutation (Combat and Alchemy).

⑪ Metamorphosis: An unlockable hybrid mutation (Combat, Signs, and Alchemy).

⑫ Mutated Skin: An unlockable hybrid mutation (Combat and Alchemy).

⑬ Strengthened Synapses: The so-called "13th Mutation", which doesn't directly require Ability Points or Mutagens to improve, but instead increases in "Stages" as you unlock the other 12 Mutations.

RESEARCHING MUTATIONS: UNLOCKING YOUR FULL POTENTIAL

The way the Mutation research menu unlocks allows you to research specific types (i.e. "colors") of mutations, or work your way out from the center of the Mutations menu. For each Mutation you're interested in researching, highlight it, examine the mutation in the menu, and discover what it will take (in terms of Research Points, Greater Mutagens, and the unlocking of other Mutations) to unlock. For every three Mutations you fully unlock, your Strengthened Synapses mutation bar fills up one quarter and advances one Stage, as follows:

Number of Mutations Unlocked	Strengthened Synapses Stage (and new Ability Slots)
2-3	1
4-7	2
8-11	3
12	4

As you can see from the labeled picture previously, the color of the lines show how you access the mutations on the outer edges of your Mutations menu, and the type ("color") of the mutations you need to unlock first. The following chart gives a complete run-down of what it costs to fully unlock the power of all 12 mutations, and reach Stage 4 of "Strengthened Synapses". Remember you don't have to unlock Deadly Counter first; any of the first three available Mutations can be yours once you pay for them!

MUTATION RESEARCH EXAMPLE: DEADLY COUNTER

You want to unlock the combat mayhem contained within the Deadly Counter Mutation. And why not? Simply select the Mutation itself, and spend two Research Points, along with a Greater Red Mutagen to research the Mutation (collectively, a total of five), and it is yours! As an added bonus, you can now access the Bloodbath Mutation, which was previously locked!

MUTATION RESEARCH EXAMPLE: SECOND LIFE

You want to unlock the immense resurrection capabilities contained within the Second Life Mutation. Nice! For this, you need to have first unlocked Adrenaline Rush (which itself required other Mutations to be unlocked; a total of 15 collective Research Points). Assuming all previous mutations were researched, spend another 10 Research Points (collectively, a whopping total of 25), along with 1 Red, 1 Blue, and 1 Green Greater Mutagen, and it is yours! As this is one of the more "pricy" Mutations to unlock, no further Mutations are available on this branch; so unlock other parts of the Mutations tree afterwards.

MUTATION RESEARCH: MUTAGEN MADNESS!

Aside from Research Points (gained by leveling up, completing two different quests, or finding a Place of Power for the first time), Greater Mutagens are gathered in the following ways:

- By collecting them from slain monsters (usually at the end of a Witcher Contract).

- By finding mutagen diagram recipes in (random) loot, or purchased from vendors across Toussaint.

- By crafting Lesser Mutagens into Mutagens, and Mutagens into Greater Mutagens. Use the Alchemy Menu > Alchemy Substances section when crafting.

- Be sure to visit your Corvo Bianco greenhouse (once you improve the property) to secure herbs you can use to create Mutagens.

MUTATIONS TREE (55 ABILITY POINTS, 10 GREATER RED, BLUE, AND GREEN MUTAGENS)

The ultimate deviation from the norm, researching these mutations may cost a lot of blood, time, and sweat, but the results are worthwhile! Not only do you unlock up to 12 mutations, one of which you can use at any time (and which you can swap freely between the mutations you've researched), but at each Stage in your Strengthened Synapses research, another Ability slot opens up, allowing you more room to place abilities and toughen Geralt up even more than before! The following information details tactics related to each Mutation. After this, the Archetypes section flags additional recommended abilities to place in the newly-opened ability slots, and includes the recommended greater mutation, too.

DEADLY COUNTER (PURE COMBAT)

Sword attacks deal 25% more damage to human opponents immune to counterattacks and monsters. In all other cases, if the attacker's Vitality is less than 25%, a counterattack immediately triggers a finisher.

Research needed to unlock: 2 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen

Notes: This severely curtails combat against multiple humanoid foes, allowing you to automatically slay badly-wounded enemies quickly and with a flourish, assuming you've mastered the art of counterattacking by now! This helps when facing a whole horde of foes, such as the clearing of outlaw Hanses in Toussaint. It also means you needn't worry about timing a finisher if you're manually slaying the enemy. For foes that you can't kill with a "finisher" (monsters, for example), any sword attack grants you 25% of extra damage. Not 25 percent though! If your weapons are currently delivering huge damage anyway, a bonus of 25 points may not be exceptional, but remember this is for every successful hit (so Whirl attacks become much more potent, for example).

BLOODBATH (PURE COMBAT)

Each fatal blow dealt by a sword dismembers the enemy or activates a finisher. Each blow dealt by a weapon in melee combat increases Attack Power by 5% until combat ends (to a maximum of 250%). The bonus is lost if you take damage (not including damage from Toxicity).

Research needed to unlock: Deadly Counter Mutation, 3 Research Points, 3 Greater Red Mutagens

Notes: The dismemberment or finisher part of this Mutation are more or less for show, and essentially add a huge dollop of gore and flying appendages to every combat, and the finisher means manually timing an enemy execution is a thing of the past. But the real boon to your combat prowess comes with the percentage increase of Adrenaline Points every time you successfully land a Critical hit. This allows Abilities (and Character Archetypes) that are purposefully chosen for high critical chances become even more deadly, and combat can be lengthened as your APs are prolonged before becoming depleted. Consult Abilities and weapons that increase your Critical Hit chances to really make this mutation shine, and the blood flow!

MAGIC SENSIBILITIES (PURE SIGNS)

Signs can deal critical hits. Critical hit chance and damage depends on Sign intensity. Opponents killed by critical hits from Signs explode. Based on your current statistics, additional information is shown regarding the exact bonus.

Research needed to unlock: 2 Research Points, 1 Greater Blue Mutagen

Notes: This is a superb bit of "extra offense" those with a majority of Signs abilities should seriously consider using. Any Sign that already damages an enemy (including as the alternate sign modes of Yrden or Quen, as well as Aard and Igni) has a change to inflict a critical hit. To really unlock this Mutation's full potential, however, you must purchase and use as many Signs as possible, including the third "tier" of Sign abilities (the "Intensity") and employ them with Greater Blue Mutagens to heighten the chances of a critical still further; you want the highest "Sign Intensity" rating in your Inventory menu that you can muster. That way you can see your foes writhe in agony before you, then detonate in a disgusting explosion of fleshy chunks!

PIERCING COLD (PURE SIGNS)

When the Aard Sign is cast, it additionally has a 25% chance of freezing opponents. Opponents knocked down and frozen simultaneously die immediately. Opponents who are not frozen are dealt an additional amount of damage which scales with Aard sign intensity.

Research needed to unlock: Magic Sensibilities Mutation, 3 Research Points, 3 Greater Blue Mutagens

Notes: If you rely on this Sign more than most, then this Mutation is incredibly useful. When attacking groups of human-sized opponents (including airborne monsters like harpies), this can stop hordes dead in their tracks, and allow you to mow through crowds of humans in seconds, selecting only the toughest foes (that are still standing) to finish off while they attempt to free themselves from the freezing effects of your Sign. Obviously, focus all your Ability points on Aard to make the most of this Mutation, and remember that larger monsters (like Cyclopses for example) aren't immobile when frozen, but simply slowed down by a great amount. For others, the benefits of having mutations with less specific uses (Piercing Cold is only useful in conjunction with Aard) is of greater interest.

TOXIC BLOOD (PURE ALCHEMY)

Each time you are injured in melee combat, the attacking opponent receives damage in the amount of 1.5% of damage dealt for every point of your Toxicity level (to a maximum of 150%).

Research needed to unlock: 2 Research Points, 1 Greater Green Mutagen

Notes: Though this is situationally dependent, and requires a thorough use of potions and decoctions (and perhaps Abilities that allow you to shrug of the effects of being poisoned), as well as being struck by an enemy's blow, it allows you to dish out damage by means other than your swords and Signs. Many Witchers may not wish to be struck, in which case this Mutation is not for you; but those that have fallen by being overwhelmed or attacked from the flanks or behind, and use potions and decoctions almost exclusively, will find the extra "safety" afforded by this Mutation to be well worth the damage foes inflict on you. Just ensure your Toxicity level is the highest it can be, so the wounding is worth absorbing, and obviously use healing tactics (potions, Quen, etc.) to ensure no wounds are fatal to you!

EUPHORIA (PURE ALCHEMY)

"Each point of Toxicity increases damage dealt by swords and Sign Intensity by 0.75% (to a maximum of 75%).

Research needed to unlock: Toxic Blood Mutation, 3 Research Points, 3 Greater Green Mutagens

Notes: If you're a well-rounded character who employs all types of offense in combat, or you're focusing on Alchemy and your swords and Sign strikes are normally a little weaker than you'd like them to be, this Mutation solves that problem! As long as you maintain your Toxicity levels and keep them "artificially" high through Attributes designed for Alchemy-related archetypes, you can have the added flexibility of additional sword damage and Sign intensity. This added benefits can mean you're swigging down potions and decoctions you don't usually need, just to get the extra benefits of your swords and sorcery: Just don't poison yourself without knowing how to keep your Toxicity levels high, and yourself alive!

ADRENALINE RUSH (COMBAT/SIGNS)

At start of combat, sword Attack Power and Sign Intensity increase for 30s by 30% for each foe (after first). So, when fighting 11 foes, the bonus is 300%. Once it wears off, sword Attack Power and Sign Intensity drop by 10% for each participating foe after first (modifier cannot exceed 70%). Duration: 30 seconds.

Research needed to unlock: Bloodbath and Piercing Cold Mutations, 5 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen, 2 Greater Blue Mutagens

Notes: Useful for characters employing both Signs and swords in combat, and those hoping combat will last no longer than 30 seconds (after which the 15 percent decrease kicks in, meaning elongated battles don't favor this Mutation). While a "pure" archetype, relying on just combat, signs, or alchemy, has mutations with more focus in its advantages, this is a spectacular mutation to try, simply because it rewards you the higher your attack power or intensity is; 30 percent better Attack Power from a sword and bonuses that inflicts 1,000 damage is obviously better than one inflicting only 100 damage. If you're confident in a quick victory, this offers sizable gains in attack power and Sign intensity. But if you're more focused on a single style of combat (only using Signs, for example), other Mutations with a more specific benefit might be more to your liking.

SECOND LIFE (COMBAT/SIGNS/ALCHEMY)

When Vitality reaches 0, you become temporarily invulnerable and regenerate 100% vitality. This effect can only be triggered once every 180 seconds (three minutes).

Research needed to unlock: Adrenaline Rush Mutation, 10 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen, 1 Greater Blue Mutagen, 1 Greater Green Mutagen

Notes: Quite simply, this makes you immortal, providing you can survive for three minutes after a regeneration. For those attempting New Game + on the most difficult setting, this is incredibly helpful. However, by the point you reach in your adventuring where this Mutation is accessible, you may have trained sufficiently to ensure you're never killed in combat, making this Mutation moot. Though there's nothing more powerful than returning from the dead, perfecting your potion intake, Sign use, swordplay, and projectile combat to ensure you're ready for any type of combat without worrying about death, and choosing a different Mutation, is another option to consider. Or reloading your game.

CONDUCTORS OF MAGIC (COMBAT/SIGNS)

When drawn, magic, unique, and Witcher swords increase Sign damage dealt by 50% of their own damage dealt.

Research needed to unlock: Piercing Cold Mutation, 5 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen, 2 Greater Blue Mutagens

Notes: For those that care for the quality of the blades they are carrying, and also employ Signs during combat, this is an interesting Mutation to consider. Choosing the very best blades involves seeking out and having Witcher gear crafted for you; Grandmaster Griffin, Feline, Ursine, Wolven, or Manticore swords are the very best around, and coupling a steel and silver sword of a Witcher School (chosen based on your style of archetype) enables you to increase your Sign Intensity to even more potent levels. Assuming Sign Intensity is something you lack, but wish to increase, this is an excellent choice.

CAT EYES (COMBAT/ALCHEMY)

Crossbow damage is now increased, and crossbow critical hit chance is increased by 50%. Crossbow bolts pierce and knock down or stun opponents. Opponents struck when they have full Vitality lose 15% of Vitality.

Research needed to unlock: Bloodbath and Euphoria Mutations, 5 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen, 2 Greater Green Mutagens

Notes: For those seeking the ultimate huntsman, partner this Mutation with the very best quality crossbow you can find, as well as bolts that are either normal or have a specific enhancement to them. The damage each bolt inflicts is technically tripled, aiming the weapon becomes even easier, and you can line up multiple targets to skewer them with a single shot!

METAMORPHOSIS (COMBAT/SIGNS/ALCHEMY)

Applying critical effects to opponents activates a random decoction for 120 seconds with no Toxicity cost. The maximum number of decoctions that can be activated simultaneously by the mutation is three. Witcher Senses help you see better in dark places.

Research needed to unlock: Cat Eyes Mutation, 10 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen, 1 Greater Blue Mutagen, 1 Greater Green Mutagen

Notes: There's a reason this requires 10 Ability Points to unlock, as well as a Greater Mutagen of each color; it's an incredibly potent Mutation that benefits those with offensive capabilities that cause critical effects to opponents. Now, for each critical you inflict, a random decoction also occurs. Can you stack normal decoctions on top of these "free" ones? Yes (as long as you don't have more than three active at once). Having a decoction without Toxicity penalties is incredibly useful, as you can hope the benefits of the random decoction augment your attacks without worrying about after-effects, or managing potions or other decoctions[md]which is also great if you haven't bothered with Alchemy at all. But for true Alchemists, or those that want to pick specific bonuses for each fight, the random nature of this Mutation may put you off. Remember the non-combat effect this also has; put out your torch or ignore the Cat potions in favor of using Witcher Senses to see in the dark!

MUTATED SKIN (COMBAT/ALCHEMY)

Each Adrenaline Point decreases damage received by 15% (to a maximum of 45%).

Research needed to unlock: Euphoria Mutation, 5 Research Points, 1 Greater Red Mutagen, 2 Greater Green Mutagens

Notes: If you require extra protection due to the Archetype you have created, over the armor you've crafted and the combat tactics you employ, then toughen up with this Mutation. Just like Toxic Blood, this presupposes you're letting the enemy successfully strike you in order to apply the benefits of this mutation, which isn't usually how to win fights, though this is great for maneuvering through environmental hazards like ground spikes, or shrugging off enemy hits before retaliation. Obviously, choose abilities that raise your Adrenaline Points as quickly as possible so you can keep your damage reduction up; so you end up ignoring almost half of the attack inflicted.

Mutations: Deadly Counter (2 Research Points), Bloodbath (5 Research Points)

If you enjoy using swords over Signs (and the building up of Stamina and Adrenaline), and this is one of your first times adventuring, use this basic archetype that focuses most on swordplay abilities. Choose light armor before you secure Feline gear. The Cat School Techniques are recommended for use with light armor, due to the large critical hit damage bonus the ability confers for each piece of light armor you wear. Rage Management allows you to opt for Quen protection using your bounty of Adrenaline Points, when your Stamina level is low.

The Fast Attack and Strong Attack Combat branches further enhance your ability to score critical hits, while making each critical hit that much more devastating to an enemy. Your additional Adrenaline (from Abilities such Razor Focus) enables you to utilize both Whirl and Rend for longer, and this allows for attack flexibility: Whirl primarily for groups of human-sized opponents, and well-timed Rends for larger, stronger foes when you really need additional critical hit chances (as long as you time the strike correctly!). Deadly Precision gives you a 2 percent chance of an instant kill, which is an amusing and random event.

Signs are mostly ignored, which isn't usually recommended (but this is a combat-centric build). Quen helps with a modicum of protection, but your agility, rolling and dodging (that is, not being hit) is your protection plan here! Instead, a light focus on Alchemy gives you a chance at poisoning your foes, a better tolerance for Toxicity, but the main ability is Refreshment, enabling you to use any potion you like to increase your Vitality, so you don't need to depend on Swallow quite as often.

Though crossbows aren't the main focus of this build by any means, always choose the best quality one you can find.

Potions like Blizzard are helpful for maintaining your Stamina. Thunderbolt offers an increase in attack power to further demolish your foes. Maribor Forest is extremely helpful as it accelerates the generation of Adrenaline Points; the cornerstone of what makes this Archetype so successful. Swallow is obviously to help with your Vitality.

Samum and Northern Wind bombs allow you to soften up foes, but also to either blind or freeze them; couple this with the Doppler decoction and attacks from behind to thoroughly savage your chosen enemy.

Archgriffin Decoctions are imperative for dealing additional damage to a particularly tough foe. Katakan Decoctions increase your critical hit chance, and Doppler does the same with attacks from behind; as you're wearing light armor and are nimble, this is an excellent ploy, especially after bomb-lobbing. Succubus Decoctions grow your attack power, and should be imbibed at the start of a fight that you know will take a little longer than usual.

Glyphs should primarily be Quen-related, to bolster your less-than impressive Sign ability. Play around with Mending and Reinforcement depending on whether you need the additional Vitality regeneration or toughened armor. Runestones can be fashioned depending on where you need additional bonuses; Perun's Adrenaline Point gain is fantastic, though you may wish to use Stribog to stagger (as you aren't using Aard offensively). Devana is another choice to add additional bleeding damage, but not quite as effective as the stacked bonuses of Perun.

Glyphwords like Protection give you a stamina-free Quen at the start of combat, which allows you to wade in without delay. Or try Retribution in case you're hit and wish to return damage automatically (30 percent of the time). Runewords are for you to ensure even more combat potency; Stamina or Adrenaline point restoration every time you kill with Rejuvenation or Elation, and Severance is a must to increase both Whirl and Rend; the true focus of this archetype!

Bloodbath or Deadly Counter are the Mutations of choice for this archetype. The former results in a finisher for each kill, which is amusing, but each critical hit generates more adrenaline, filling you up with fewer need for defense or down-time in combat. The latter allows you to counterattack wounded foes with a finisher, which quickens combat against groups. For larger monster foes, you'll need the increased damage when fighting at higher levels. Feel free to unlock more potent Mutations as you progress still further in your adventure.

Rage Management is the lynchpin ability at the start of this Archetype's adventure, allowing you to spend Adrenaline in place of Stamina to cast Signs (though magic isn't the focus of this Archetype). Adrenaline burst allows signs you've cast to generate Adrenaline; creating a constant feedback loop of Adrenaline use and regeneration that seems contradictory at first, but its usefulness soon becomes more obvious. Maximum Razor Focus makes sword strikes generate massive amounts of Adrenaline, while Resolve allows you to take hits in melee, and lose less Adrenaline in the process. A high Adrenaline allows you to inflict much more damage in combat.

After choosing these abilities, pick from the Combat Branch (as each point also increases your Adrenaline Point gain no matter what the ability); leveling up Muscle Memory, Precise Blows, Strength Training, and Crushing Blows. As you suffer from Stamina regeneration penalties due to your heavy armor, it helps to have the ability to use Signs—regardless of your Stamina level thanks to Rage Management—at all times. Focusing on Igni and Quen when Signs are needed allows you to shrug off further enemy hits, and weaken them in the process.

Bear School Techniques provides a significant boost to your Strong Attack damage (which stacks with your other boosts), and the Bear School Witcher Armor has Adrenaline Bonuses that also stack. Your chosen swords are the finest for pure combat, and it's always pleasant to complete a Witcher School look!

Though crossbows aren't the main focus of this build by any means, always choose the best quality one you can find or purchase.

As Adrenaline is needed for this Archetype to really shine in combat, your primary brewing plan is Maribor Forest, which accelerates the generation of Adrenaline Points, and works well with the various abilities. Thunderbolt is a valuable potion for this melee-heavy Archetype, as greater critical hit chances are always welcome. Blizzard is helpful for maintaining your Stamina.

Samum and Northern Wind bombs allow you to soften up foes, but also to either blind or freeze them; and stalling enemies so you can pick a foe you need to tackle, or disable them before you wade in, is always helpful.

Archgriffin Decoctions are imperative for dealing additional damage to a particularly tough foe. Katakan Decoctions increase your critical hit chance. Succubus Decoctions grow your attack power, and should be imbibed at the start of a fight that you know will take a little longer than usual. Alghoul Decoctions give you increased Adrenaline generation until you suffer an enemy attack. Though it's high-risk, if you're competent at countering, the effects can be devastating!

Glyphs should primarily be Quen-related, to bolster the Sign ability you are primarily focused on. Runestones can be fashioned depending on where you need additional bonuses; Perun's Adrenaline Point gain is fantastic, though you may wish to use Chernobog for the Attack power bonus, or Svarog for cutting through armor like butter.

Glyphwords like Protection give you a stamina-free Quen at the start of combat, which allows you to wade in without delay. Or try Retribution in case you're hit and wish to return damage automatically (30 percent of the time). Rotation or other Igni-related Glyphwords are also to be considered, but only as a last-ditch effort when you're relying on Signs after a combat flurry. Runewords are for you to ensure even more Adrenaline-related combat potency; Adrenaline point restoration every time you kill Elation!

While the base Combat Mutation Deadly Counter is a good possible Mutation choice, the Adrenaline generation for each critical hit makes Bloodbath a more potent choice for the professional slaughterer. Don't overlook Mutated Skin as a possibility either; Adrenaline points can decrease incoming damage, which is helpful if you have a large number of them that this Archetype creates.

If you're a crack shot with the crossbow, and wish to soften enemies up with this weapon (perhaps using explosive bolts occasionally on more troublesome creatures). Use the crossbow to distract, wound, or stun a foe, or to counter ranged enemies (such as Sirens) and those underwater (such as Drowners), as well as increasing your own Adrenaline. Then, providing you and your foes are on firm ground, finish the job using a flurry of fast attacks. The balance with this Archetype is the crossbow at range, and fast attacks for the majority of the time.

This Archetype begins with Cat School Techniques serving to augment your Light Armor by an incredible amount (critical hits increase by 100 percent, and fast attack damage by 20 percent with four Light Armor pieces worn). Remember that critical hits with your crossbow are also affected! Fast Attacks were chosen over Strong ones, as the Light Armor and focus on the Crossbow means you need to be nimble; and Abilities such as Rend (Strong Attack) are more difficult to pull off when harried by foes. Instead, use the Whirl attack as the mainstay of your offensive capabilities, increasing your Adrenaline in the process.

Note that Lightning Reflexes is the only one of the Marksmanship abilities not chosen, as you should be able to aim and fire a crossbow without the additional time slowdown, especially after practice, and this wastes points that could be otherwise spent on more potent skills. Another option not listed in the Abilities list is using Deadly Precision, as this also allows any Crossbow or Whirl strikes the chance to instantly kill an opponent (imagine taking down a Royal Griffin with a single shot!); though the chances of this happening is relatively small.

Steady Shot is another helpful and easily purchased General Ability, giving you 25 percent more damage each time you fire a bolt. However, it is best to choose this after Rage Management, so you have the option to utilize Quen (or other Signs) using Adrenaline Points if you need to defend and retreat. Signs are the shortfall of this Archetype; you usually ignore them completely. Only consider Quen for defensive purposes.

For Alchemy, only a glance at three Abilities is necessary: Refreshment, along with the standard Swallow potion, allows flexibility with your healing, and is the main reason for investing six points into Alchemy (you can always ignore this, and choose Lightning Reflexes or Deadly Precision as alternatives). However, it is always an excellent idea to use Poisoned Blades, especially during Whirl attacks.

The Crossbow is your main ranged weapon (compared to bombs, for example), so you need the best; the Ursine Crossbow. The Feline Crossbow, and to a lesser extent the Elven Crossbow are also good choices (the latter is available at lower levels). When you visit the Tourney Grounds and win a marksmanship competition, you're awarded a Crossbow with your crest on it; this is another great option. Feel free to craft any of the different crossbow bolt types as you can, though Exploding and Precision Bolts are most effective in almost every combat situation.

Potions brewed are mainly Maribor Forest (for generating Adrenaline Points quickly), Thunderbolt (for increasing critical hits can melee or range), and Tawny Oil for regenerating Stamina. Add Swallow if you're finding combat tough-going, but focus instead on the Quen armor and Rage Management to aid you over potion healing.

Once again, Samum and Northern Wind bombs allow you to soften up foes, but also to either blind or freeze them; leaving them sitting ducks for your crossbow attacks, especially those with explosive tips!

Katakan Decoctions increase your critical hit chance. Succubus Decoctions grow your attack power, and should be imbibed at the start of a fight that you know will take a little longer than usual. Try other Decoctions associated with the previous Combat builds as you wish. Doppler Decoctions is another option if you've frozen or stopped your foes using bombs, and want extra critical damage when attacking from behind.

As with most combat Archetypes, Quen-related Glyph words augment what little Sign power you have in your protective defenses. Runestones should focus on Adrenaline Point gain, so use Perun. Triglav or Zoria are other options, allowing you to stun or freeze a foe, before finishing them with bolts. Otherwise, Chernobog and Svarog are choices to try, too.

Glyphwords like Protection give you a stamina-free Quen at the start of combat, which allows you to wade in without delay. As your primary melee combat attack is Whirl, imbuing Severance (which increases the range of this attack) is an exceptional choice, though Rejuvenation (fatal blows restore some Stamina) or Elation (fatal blows restore some Adrenaline) are also good options.

Bloodbath (generating Adrenaline for each critical hit) is a good Mutation for combat-heavy Whirling strikes. Also worth considering is Second Life (for times you're overwhelmed and need that instant resurrection, especially if you're caught aiming a crossbow when attacked), and Cat Eyes, which upgrades your Crossbow process to previously unimaginable levels, and lets you see in the dark!

Begin with lessons from the Griffin School Techniques, allowing each piece of medium armor to increase your Sign intensity by five percent and Stamina regeneration by five percent. Then find some medium armor to wear before choosing either Griffin or Wolf School gear (the latter is useful if you intend on augmenting your Signs with a few combat abilities much later into your adventure, but the Griffin increases your Sign intensity instead of Adrenaline, making this the go-to armor for Sign-specialists). To start with though, spend your points within the Sign branches, focusing on the boosting of Stamina regeneration in combat.

Notice the heavy emphasis on Yrden and Quen in this archetype. Advancements in Yrden turn this trap from a quagmire (Sustained Glyphs, which increases the duration and allows for alternate mode charges and more traps) to a highly-damaging circle, allowing you to coax enemies into this ring of purple death! Magic Trap starts this nasty damage, and allows you to stop worrying about projectiles heading your way. Yrden Intensity bolsters this Sign by up to 25 percent. But the real damage is caused with Supercharged Glyphs, which can drop groups of lesser foes in seconds without your lifting a sword!

For additional protection you have the full gamut of Quen Abilities, giving you some of the best protection from physical damage outside of armor. Quen Discharge can deliver a punishing shock to attacking opponents, so long as you have the Stamina to hold up Quen in Active Shield Mode. When you need to take a more offensive posture, Igni is powered up a great deal through the Intensity boosts (the 'innate' skill of each Signs branch Ability), as well as through Melt Armor, which maintains effectiveness throughout your adventure. Firestream allows you to weaken entire groups of enemies before setting upon them with your blades or bombs.

The one drawback to this Archetype is the time it takes to build up the most effective defensive capabilities. You don't reach Quen Discharge until you've spent 28 points in the Signs Branch of the Ability Tree. This leads to a more deliberate and defensive plan in combat, focusing the maximizing of Quen and Yrden to stay alive. Griffin School Techniques, combined with the bugs for wearing medium armor, can help make this Archetype shine. Once you've purchased all 12 initial abilities, you can choose what you like, though maximizing your Igni skills, and perhaps choosing Gorged on Power (which allows a bonus from one Place of Power to last indefinitely and applying that to your favorite Sign) are good options.

When picking a Crossbow, the best for your level is fine to choose, as this isn't the focus of this archetype. For Bombs, Dragon's Dream needs Igni to reach maximum effectiveness, and coupled with Igni attacks, this can be devastating. Northern Wind freezes foes, which is helpful if Yrden isn't slowing all of your enemies, or you need a stationary target to immolate with Igni.

Petri's Philter makes your Signs more powerful, an obvious bonus to such a focused build. Tawny Owl is your other key potion, as Geralt needs to have as much Stamina regeneration as possible if you want to survive. When consuming Decoctions, Foglet decoction has a strange requirement to be effective, but if it is cloudy in the world, you receive a significant Sign Intensity boost. The Ekhidna decoction is another fine bet for increasing your survivability, restoring Vitality whenever you use Stamina. The Ancient Leshen decoction increases Stamina regeneration for every Sign cast for the duration of a given fight. Since you will be using Signs often in this Archetype, you can work Geralt into many repeated uses of a Sign over the course of a long fight. Finally, Ekimmara decoction is another good choice for survivability; 10% of the damage he deals to an enemy goes toward his Vitality.

Glyphs are straightforward. You are imbuing those with a Sign intensity you utilize most often: Igni, Yrden, and Quen. Feel free to focus on multiple Glyphs of a single Sign, if you require extra Intensity at the expense of your secondary Signs. Runestones are also easily picked; Veles grants you extra Sign intensity, and is your main focus. Also think about Stribog and Zoria; causes a chance to stagger or freeze respectively, helping you prevent an enemy charge so you can attack back with magic.

There are many Glyphwords to help your progress: Eruption, Ignition, and Rotation all augment your Igni Sign attacks in different ways. Protection enables a "free" Quen shield when entering combat, and Entanglement sets another Yrden trap when Yrden first hits them. You're spoilt for choice here! However, Runewords don't have the same help to your Signs Intensity, but Replenishment (which consumes an Adrenaline Point after you cast a Sign, before imbuing your sword with the power of that Sign on your next sword attack) is a great idea; the flaming sword of Igni is always a favorite!

When you finally think about an active Mutation, Conductors of Magic increases your Signs damage with the level and quality of your swords (and your blades should be by this time in your adventure!). Or, try Magic Sensibilities, for Signs that have a critical hit chance which scales with the power of the Sign, and have the wonderful added effect of exploding enemies upon death! Fortunately, you're likely to be thriving instead of simply surviving long before this point.

Once you’ve chosen your only General Ability, Griffin School Techniques which immediately adds to your Sign Intensity, and you’ve procured some Medium armor so this ability is useful (look for the Ofieri armor by visiting the merchant at Upper Mill to start your search), it is time to build up your Sign Intensity (just as with any Sign-based Archetype), but with special attention paid to every single section of the Signs branches of the Ability Tree. Though you’re not going to be able to fully level up all five Signs branches, you can increase the potency of all five magical abilities to such a potent level that foes won’t be able to withstand your power! Swords are a secondary thought; choose Griffin blades when you can, or any blade that improves your Signs Intensity (such as the Ofieri Sabre).

Other Signs Archetypes may falter when facing a foe who is impervious to their main focused Sign (Archetype 6: Incendiary Sorcerer, for example, has great difficulty with Fire Elementals). Not so with this Archetype; the flexibility of choosing any of the five Signs to deal with adversaries most troublesome is the key to success here:

Far-Reaching Aard and Aard Sweep are generally used for humans and crowd-control, before finishing with swords or Igni. Firestream is your main roasting attack (it is used on every foe that you can damage with fire), and Melt Armor was ignored in favor of unlocking more potent abilities in other Signs branches. The Yrden branch was fully unlocked (with 16 Abilities), limiting the maneuverability of foes (particularly fast-moving ones); Magic Trap is used to prevent ranged attacks from striking you, as well as damaging already sluggish enemies. Quen allows you to withstand damage while healing yourself (with Active Shield employed), and Quen Discharge reflects damage back should a foe strike you. Finally, Axii Puppet enables foes to fight your battles for you, and causes general confusion. This Archetype’s strength is in the full range of Signs Abilities (both regular and alternate), backed up with the defensive posturing of Quen and a full complement of Yrden abilities.

For other complementary elements, pick a Crossbow most potent for your level. When using bombs, partner Dragon’s Dream with Igni for even more devastation, and to a lesser extent, pick Northern Wind to slow foes down; a help in almost every combat situation.

With all this powering up of your Signs, both the Combat and Alchemy branches are neglected completely, forcing you to use only a few Potions and especially Decoctions, as your Toxicity constitution is low. Petri’s Philter makes your Signs more powerful, an obvious bonus to such a focused build. Tawny Owl is your other key potion, as Geralt needs to have as much Stamina regeneration as possible if you want to survive (though you may find adventuring at night, when Superior Tawny Owl never expires, is a favored activity). Decoctions are troublesome as you’re very susceptible to toxicity, but for that extra boost, the Ekhidna decoction is a good choice in more desperate situations, restoring Vitality whenever you use Stamina. At other times, the Ancient Leshen decoction is an almost automatic Stamina regenerating buff. Another one to think about choosing is Basilisk decoction, though the Sign intensity given is random: However, as you’re using all Signs, this has less of a drawback!

You have a wealth of Glyph choices; the five Signs Glyphs (Aard, Igni, Yrden, Quen, and Axii) are all optimal picks; focus on the Signs you need extra Intensity power for, or those you use more often. As with other Signs Archetypes, Runestones are also easily picked; Veles grants you extra Sign intensity, and is your main focus. Secondary choices are Stribog (which can stagger) or Zoria (which can freeze); both crippling the movements of foes.

You’re spoiled for choice with Glyphwords: If you enjoy roasting foes with Igni, Eruption (foes set alight explode and ignite others), Ignition (struck foes have a 25% chance to ignite others within two yards), and Rotation (Igni basic attacks strike 360 degrees but don’t burn) are great options. Protection enables a “free” Quen shield when entering combat and Entanglement sets another Yrden trap when Yrden first hits them. As you’re using all five Signs, Beguilement (enemies affected by Axii are affected twice as long for each blow they land), Possession and Usurpation (when an Axii-affected opponent dies, the effect transfers to a nearby target, with duration increase for each enemy blow landed for Possession), are all great choices when employing Axii. Depletion (striking foes with Aard reduces their Stamina) is the only Aard choice, so you may wish to imbue multiple Igni or Axii effects instead.

Runewords are easier to choose from; Replenishment (which consumes an Adrenaline Point after you cast a Sign, before imbuing your sword with the power of that Sign on your next sword attack) is a favorite, but Dumplings (food regenerates more Vitality) is a good way to make the most out of your non-Quen healing, and Placation (using Adrenaline Points to regenerate Vitality and Stamina) are also good, if situational, picks.

As with other Signs archetypes, you’re likely to enjoy both the following pure-Signs Mutations: Conductors of Magic (increasing your Signs intensity of your blades are of high quality) and Magic Sensibilities (Signs have a critical hit chance which scales with the power of the Sign, exploding the enemy upon death). As long as you correctly predict and prepare for each battle, and know the Sign your foe is weak against, you are assured victory!

The purpose of this Archetype is to buffet and burn enemies into submission from range, and using a combination of Aard and Igni attacks, along with Yrden to slow them down, and Quen to damage them even if they manage to reach you. As Igni damages foes continuously once they are set on fire, but sword strikes put out the flames, you are encouraged to stay at range, continuously utilizing Igni until the protesting enemies are flailing on the ground in a raging blaze.

To begin with, Griffin School Techniques are learned to make the most out of your Medium Armor, which in this case is Wolven. Griffin is the obvious choice, but as you're being more offensive in your combat, the other bonuses granted by Wolven gear and blades, the fact your Sign Intensity is likely to be good enough without adding even more potency, and the fact you should choose Rage Management (which allows Signs to be cast using Adrenaline Points, which Wolven armor increases), gives you a little more flexibility in combat. Don't like this plan? Then switch to Griffin gear instead.

Your focus is more offensive attacks before Yrden and Quen, though slowing your foes and protecting yourself is almost as important. Pick Far-Reaching Aard and Aard Intensity to really knock a foe around, and should they fall to the ground you can finish them with an easy sword skewering. However, your main plan is lighting anything you're battling on fire, after slowing them with Yrden first (so they are easier to hit, and using Magic Trap and eventually Supercharged Glyphs to damage foes even before Aard or Igni are utilized). Melt Armor, Firestream, and Igni Intensity, along with your other Sign Intensity bonuses, can really roast your foes, no matter what their protective clothing. Then leave them to burn while attending other adversaries.

Should anything get through this Aard-blasting, Yrden-slowing, Igni-igniting dance of death, you have Quen to protect you, using Active Shield along with Rage Management to help you use Adrenaline Points to maintain it, if your Stamina is low. Though it's better to spend points unlocking Mutations, you may also wish to purchase superfluous Signs Abilities just to add to your Stamina regeneration in combat.

In most other respects, the type of secondary gear and augmentations you choose to adorn this Archetype with follow the similar plans as the previous Signs-related builds. Any Crossbow you choose is fine. When lobbing Bombs, Dragon's Dream (after you slow foes with Yrden) is excellent to deploy just before a roasting with Igni.

Your lack of Toxicity resistance is an issue, forcing you to choose carefully when supping on potions and decoctions. Petri's Philter (increasing Sign intensity) is a must-use potion, and Tawny Owl keeps your Stamina from sapping (though Rage Management helps this problem). If it's cloudy out, take a swig of the Foglet decoction (Sign intensity increases in overcast conditions). Otherwise, the Ancient Leshen decoction is an almost automatic Stamina regenerating buff.

When it comes to Glyphs, Aard, Igni, and Yrden are great picks, as well as Quen if you're finding foes are getting too close for comfort. Runestones are usually straightforward; Veles gives you extra Sign intensity, while Perun gives an Adrenaline Point gain; useful as you're employing Rage Management.

Glyphwords should focus on your Igni ability. Eruption is a Level 3 enchantment that causes foes to explode when they die, igniting others, if you set them on fire. The other Igni-related Glyphwords (Rotation and Ignition) are good choices. Don't overlook Depletion (enemies struck by Aard have their Stamina halved) and Entanglement (augmenting your Yrden Sign). Or you could utilize Protection (automatically get a Quen shield at the start of combat). Using the Runeword Placation (Adrenaline Points drain, giving you Vitality and Stamina) helps maintain Sign availability, though Rage Management does this for you. Otherwise, try Dumplings (for extra nourishment) or Replenishment (which consumes an Adrenaline Point after you cast a Sign, before imbuing your sword with the power of that Sign on your next sword attack).

When looking at Mutations, other Signs archetypes tend to use Conductors of Magic (increasing your Signs intensity if the weapons you wield are of high quality) and Magic Sensibilities (Signs have a critical hit chance which scales with the power of the Sign, exploding the enemy upon death). However, don't overlook Euphoria if you're constantly using Potions and Decoctions; as your Toxicity level rises quickly, the increased Attack Power and Sign Intensity can be incredible (though you'll have difficulty placing all 16 Abilities as the Euphoria slots are Alchemy-only). Another option? Piercing Cold, to really take advantage of Aard!

Sometimes you wish you had more bombs. This archetype provides for that very specific need. It takes a lot of work to hunt down the ingredients for this archetype to really work, but the results are worthwhile. You end up with more than enough bombs, and each bomb is significantly more effective. Most encounters in the field should end decisively in your favor after many, many explosions.

Any spare Ability Points can go into branches that fit your preferences. If you want a bit more bite out of your swords, the early parts of the Combat Branch of the Ability Tree are a safe bet. If you're trying to push your survivability, investing in Sign improvements for Yrden and Quen is not a bad call (and this archetype abilities list reflects a small selection of Signs to use, too). Yrden is of particular interest; you might find yourself utilizing the Magic Trap to slow down fast foes so your bombs hit their intended targets more easily. Or, you may wish to continue your Brewing, especially as your Toxicity is toughened.

Bombs are the centerpiece of this archetype. Steady Aim gives you more time to aim bombs. Pyrotechnics increases your damage capacity with Dragon's Dream and Devil's Puffball; projectiles that normally inflict no immediate damage by themselves. Efficiency increases the maximum number of bombs you can have in slot. However, the real star of the show is Cluster Bomb. Maxed out, Cluster Bomb causes your bombs to scatter additional explosive fragments (up to six at the highest level). A Superior Grapeshot and Dancing Star, already powerful, become pocket-portable battlefield devastators, and with maxed out Efficiency, you'll have a lot more of them to throw around.

The other talents suggested in the Alchemy Branches of the Ability Tree aren't just so you can reach Cluster Bomb: Tissue Transmutation to greatly boost your survivability when maxed out while consuming a decoction (likely the cockatrice decoction). Heightened Tolerance gives you a little more room to work with in terms of your toxicity levels, and Synergy allows your Mutagen Slots to be even more effective at stat boosts.

In terms of armor, the Undvik gear of Skellige (bolstered by sockets created by the Runewright) helps you withstand punishment while you try lobbing bombs (and Bear School Techniques keep your Vitality and Strong Attacks up), while the extra protection of Ursine gear does more than shield you from your own mis-thrown projectiles; the Adrenaline Point gains, coupled with Rage Management (Signs are cast using Adrenaline Points if your Stamina level is too low), enables you to utilize Yrden and Quen for longer than you're normally capable of; allowing a "Signs first, Bombs second" approach to combat. Add more Adrenaline Points with both the Ursine blades.

With this archetype, there aren't particular potions you need to use. In most situations, a focus on survival potions, like White Raffard's Decoction and Swallow, is the best plan. Whereas, with bombs you have the pick of the crop: This build gives you a ridiculous amount of bombs to work with. Use your heavy hitters: Grapeshot, Dancing Star, Dragon's Dream for especially now-vulnerable monsters, and Devil's Puffball for those weakened by poison.

When choosing decoctions, Cockatrice decoctions allow all alchemy creations to be used one additional time. ALL of them. This is hands down the most useful decoction for this archetype. On the off-chance you're not chugging down Cockatrice decoctions, choose ones that benefit elements such as your Attack Power (Succubus), Critical Hits (Katakan), or Vitality (Ekimmara).

With Glyphs and Glyphwords from the Runewright, the usual plan of adding Intensity to your Quen sign helps your defenses as you fiddle with more bombs to throw. Runestones should be chosen if they help you strike foes with your projectiles. Dazhbog (chance to cause burning), Zoria (freezing), and Triglav (stunning), and Stribog (staggering) all have a chance of immobilizing an enemy to a certain degree, after which more bombing can occur. A similar plan is in effect with Runewords; Rejuvenation restores your Stamina for each fatal blow you inflict (these don't need to be sword strikes, which is key). Also for your consideration is Invigoration. If you're keeping away from foes, your Vitality is likely to be at maximum for longer, so Vitality regeneration increases damage on your next attack. Or, choose Prolongation to increase your potion effects.

Mutations related to Alchemy (and to a lesser extent, Signs) are most beneficial here. With potions and decoctions upping your Toxicity, Toxic Blood is worthwhile; if you're struck, the enemy receives damage that scales with your Toxicity. Euphoria (Potion Toxicity increases sword and Sign power) isn't a wise choice as it doesn't affect bomb damage.

This Archetype chooses the very best parts of the Alchemy Branches and uses it to incredible effect, though the first Ability to pick is Bear School Techniques (General Branch); as this increases your Vitality and Strong Attacks for each piece of Heavy armor you wear. As your Vitality increases are going to be astronomical in this build, this is well worth taking. A mixture of impressive resistances and Adrenaline increases using the Ursine Armor and bladed weaponry, this is useful for helping your bladed attacks, which don't utilize Combat abilities, but rather the deadly oils you've coated your blade with. Another option is to don the Undvik armor (as shown), as this has incredible protection against all manner of attacks.

Begin with Brewing; Heightened Tolerance allows many more potions to be taken. Refreshment is also a very important choice, as it heals your Vitality each time you take a potion. Poisoned Blades enhances your blades, and although you don't have the Combat Abilities to muster, continuously damaging the enemy with poison, even after your attack has finished, more than makes up for this deficit. Protective Coating adds further protection to enemies you're facing provided you've coated your blade in the oil they are vulnerable to; don't forget this important point! This allows you to wade into combat with fewer worries about being savaged. Complete the devastation by adding Fixative; at Level 3 this keeps oil on your blade for the entire fight, which is a sensational buff, and allows you to take fewer risks (as you have more time to kill; literally!).

Ignoring the first two Bomb Creation abilities (which aren't imperative to purchase), pick Efficiency (which increases the bombs in each slot) and Cluster Bombs (which separates bombs into explosive fragments). If you've higher quality bombs (especially Grapeshot, which itself separates into fragments), you have the best parts of the Bombadier of Blaviken archetype, but with additional combat flexibility!

In the Mutations branch, Acquired Tolerance is the foundation of this archetype, as it allows a much greater number of potions and decoctions to be consumed; almost always at once! You aren't using this Archetype properly if you don't have three or four potion or decoction effects occurring (at higher levels)! Add more free Vitality by purchasing Tissue Transmutation. As you're using large amounts of Decoctions throughout a fight, keeping Vitality up without thinking about it is always helpful. Synergy increases the bonus for mutagens placed in the slots linking your chosen abilities, essentially giving you even more Vitality (with green mutagens). Lastly, Adaptation grants you additional Decoction duration, all helping your decoction buffs last almost as long as your oil!

Also, as each Alchemy ability increases your potion duration time, slotting in as many as possible (11 of the 12, with the last being Bear School Techniques, before the Blood and Wine Mutations bolster this to 16) is a possibility. Otherwise, make three of your slots Combat-based.

While a good crossbow is of secondary importance, find the best one you can. Concentrate on learning and mixing Oils before fights, and consuming multiple potions and decoctions as your Toxicity toughness is so high. All the listed potions and decoctions are there to aid in almost every fight, but choose others too for specific uses. Remember Cockatrice decoctions (allowing you to use all your alchemic creations one additional time) grant you a host of additional bonuses, essentially for free!

As you're hardly the most proficient swordsman in the land, focus your Glyph imbuing on Quen. For Runestones, pick those that can cause foes to falter (such as Stribog) or better yet, receive a possible poisoning (Morana). With Glyphwords, Protection helps your meager Sign defenses. For Runewords, Prolongation (increasing your potion duration time for each unblocked blow you strike) seems exceptional, unless your potions are already lasting throughout most fights. In that case, think about Elation or Rejuvenation (fatal blows with your sword give you Adrenaline Points or Stamina respectively).

When the time comes to choose Mutations, Toxic Blood is one option that turns a foe's successful strikes on you into death for them (especially as your Toxicity is likely to be high, killing them quickly). However, you may find it difficult to slot in your combat abilities as this is a pure Alchemy Mutation. But arguably the best Mutation is Metamorphosis; allowing you to swig down a decoction for free, along with increased sword Attack Power, Sign Intensity, and Vitality!

Glyphwords: Depletion, Protection, Rotation

Runewords: Preservation, Replenishment, Severance

Mutations: Toxic Blood (2 Research Points), Piercing Cold (5 Research Points)

This Archetype focuses on the knowledge of correct oils to coat already-potent blades, to ensure every foe you face is poisoned and comes to a most unpleasant end on the battlefield. Though it doesn't damage as significantly as other builds, this is a true hybrid of the three main ability branches, and is more subtle, forcing you to take more time and tactical forethought before committing to combat. With this in mind, any improvements and abilities are focused on poison and attack damage.

The fabled Viper Armor, which offers substantial resistance to every type of enemy attack, is an excellent choice (though New Moon is another favorite). Viper Armor is Medium weight, allowing your Griffin School Techniques (Sign intensity and Stamina regeneration bonuses) to stack to an impressive degree. But the real potential are the two Viper Venomous Swords, both offering large Aard Intensity bonuses (which is why this Sign is your main focus outside of swordplay), as well as increased critical hit opportunities, and a 15 percent chance to poison. Take this sword into combat, but not before coating your weapon with an oil the enemy you are about to face is susceptible to, and the true power of this archetype is revealed.

Beginning with Alchemy, your focus is augmenting the poison potential of your blades still further. Poisoned Blades offers immense potential of inflicting poison damage for each oil-coated sword strike (up the level of oil used for almost certain poison damage). Protective Coating grants you damage resistance against the monster the oil is targeting, and Fixative gives you almost limitless oil. When partnered with a group of three Fast Attacks (including Whirl), the opportunity for poison damage is constant and mostly assured. Then think about adding Refreshment and Acquired Tolerance to up the potions and decoctions you're taking. But this is only half the battle.

The bolstering of your Aard abilities, plus the buffs of Focus, Griffin School Techniques, and your Viper blades, mean you can keep multiple foes off-balance, on their back, or away from the main enemies in crowded battles. Slay foes on the ground easily, and for foes that Aard isn't as helpful to use against, switch to Igni, along with an active shield. If you're having trouble losing Adrenaline, employ Resolve (AP loss when struck by a foe is lowered) and use the General Focus Ability for extra weapon damage and Sign intensity when you have more Adrenaline Points.

Choose any crossbow you wish; compare statistics and pick the one most potent. Oils are all dependent on the combat situation, so read up on the beasts you're about to face (using the guide Bestiary) and prepare your Oils accordingly. Bombs are more important than you'd think; with an assassin-style, the Devil's Puffball (with its poison cloud) fits the style of combat, and Northern Wind freezes foes, which is helpful if you're employing flank or rear attacks.

As your potions are extra-potent, and you have extra tolerance, multiple buffs are possible. Maribor Forest helps to keep your Adrenaline up. Petri's Philter increases your Sign Intensity; good for augmenting both Aard to nullify even more foes, or to bolster the Signs you haven't placed many points into (such as Yrden). Tawny Owl and Thunderbolt potions are obvious help to Stamina and Attack power respectively.

Swig down a couple of decoctions, too: Help your criticals with Katakan. Regenerate your Vitality each time you damage a foe with Ekimmara (which is amazingly helpful during Whirl attacks!). Ekhidna also helps restore Vitality, any time you use Stamina. Doppler decoctions increase your critical hits when attacking from behind; roll and dodge around a foe you've already staggered with Aard and slay them!

When you're imbuing armor with Glyphs, the tendency is toward Quen. While this is recommended, also test out Aard, and see how this affects your Sign attacks in combat. Regarding Runestones, Veles is always helpful at improving your Sign intensity, but for true assassin professionals, adding Morana (increasing the chance to poison) stacks well with your swords and Alchemy abilities. Otherwise, choose Runestones from combat builds.

When the Runewright has been financed, Protection (automatic Quen) is the obvious choice. But consider Rotation. Igni strikes everyone in 360 degrees, but without burning, which is exceptional for crowd control and your fast attacks put out the flames of the foe you're striking anyway. Depletion is also a worthy choice; halving a foe's Stamina with any Aard attack is incredibly potent as you've invested heavily in this Sign. For Runewords, Replenishment is amazing, as this effectively echoes any Sign attack you might make. Preservation (giving you permanent Armorer's Table and Grindstone bonuses) keeps you and your blades looking sharp, and Severance is worth a look if you're always using Whirl and need the extra range.

When choosing a Mutation, the seldom-used Piercing Cold suddenly becomes both amusingly entertaining and imperative to try! Any foes knocked down are shattered into pieces (and die), while those not knocked down are frozen in place, and ripe for a poisoning or rear strike! A less potent, but more measured mutation is Toxic Blood. If you're struck, the foe is damaged, and due to your expected high Toxicity, and the fact the foe's damage scales with it, you can drop foes after they strike you, though you risk huge damage loss on higher difficulty levels.

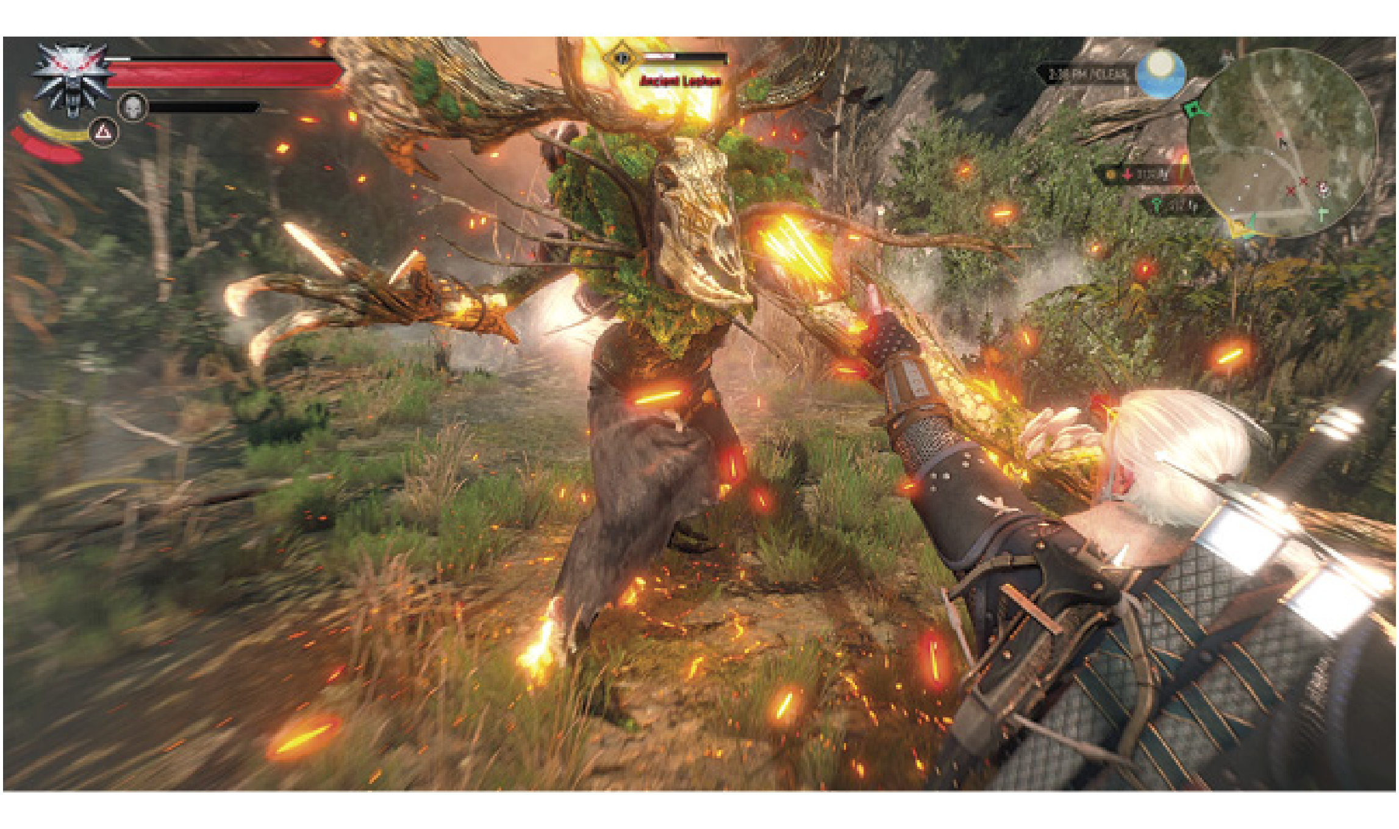
Combat

Signs

Geralt can cast five different magic signs: Yrden, Quen, Igni, Axii, and Aard (as listed from left to right on your quick access menu). Each has specific uses before and during combat. Casting a Sign requires a full bar of Stamina, so it's important to know when to cast a Sign and why.



Learn to swiftly access the Quick Access menu to quickly switch between Selected Signs and Items, so combat is more fluid. Or keep the screen up to slow time down between maneuvers, so you can plan an effective strike, such as this alternate attack display of Igni fire; the firestream.

All Signs can be upgraded in the Character Ability trees. These not only provide enhanced effectiveness, but even offer alternate Sign modes that change how they work in battle.

SWIFT SIGN SWITCHING

You don't have to access the Selected Signs and Items screen each time you wish to switch a Sign. Instead, during combat, hold the block button, and cycle through your Signs using left and right on the d-pad, if you're using a controller.

YRDEN: A MAGIC TRAP

Cast this Sign and a circle of Yrden symbols appears around Geralt. Most foes that wander into that ring are significantly slowed, though some monsters are unaffected by it. This circle is one of the best tools at your disposal to control multiple enemies in melee range. Yrden is invaluable against noonwraiths and nightwraiths, who remain incorporeal most of the time unless caught within an Yrden circle. Yrden's ability to slow opponents increases with Sign Intensity.

QUEN: PROTECTIVE SHIELD

This Sign can be the difference between life and death. Quen's basic ability is to cover Geralt in a protective shield that absorbs a limited amount of damage. Usually, this means a single hit against most equal level foes, but that doesn't mean Quen isn't useful. If you're using Light Armor, your Stamina regeneration can be so swift that you can cast Quen multiple times in a fight, keeping you safe from damage. Investing in Quen can make it capable of sustaining several hits before breaking. This scales with Sign Intensity.

IGNI: DEALS FIRE DAMAGE

The fiery Igni Sign allows Geralt to spread a wave of embers at his foes. It can also be used for something more subtle, such as lighting a torch or campfire. Igni is incredibly effective against foes that are weak to fire. It can light enemies on fire and do damage over time. In some cases, this effect causes the enemy to panic. Additionally, any flammable gasses in the air, or barrels on the ground, can be ignited to cause powerful explosions that can hurt and stun your enemies. Enemies with shields are also exposed when doused with Igni fire, and airborne foes swooping in to attack you can be damaged and dropped out of the air with a well-timed Igni blast. Damage for Igni scales with Sign Intensity.

IGNI STARTS FIRES AND FIGHTS

If you use Igni to light torches or braziers, nearby enemies will notice Geralt and begin to attack. You can approach torches, candles, and braziers to interact with them instead; in a less obvious manner, should you wish to illuminate the darkness.

AXII: INFLUENCES OPPONENTS' MINDS

This Sign muddles the mind of an opponent, making it possible to take them out of the fight temporarily. It's most effective against humans, but can also work on certain monsters. Target an enemy that looks to be especially troublesome, then cast Axii to keep them out of the fight until you're ready to deal with them.

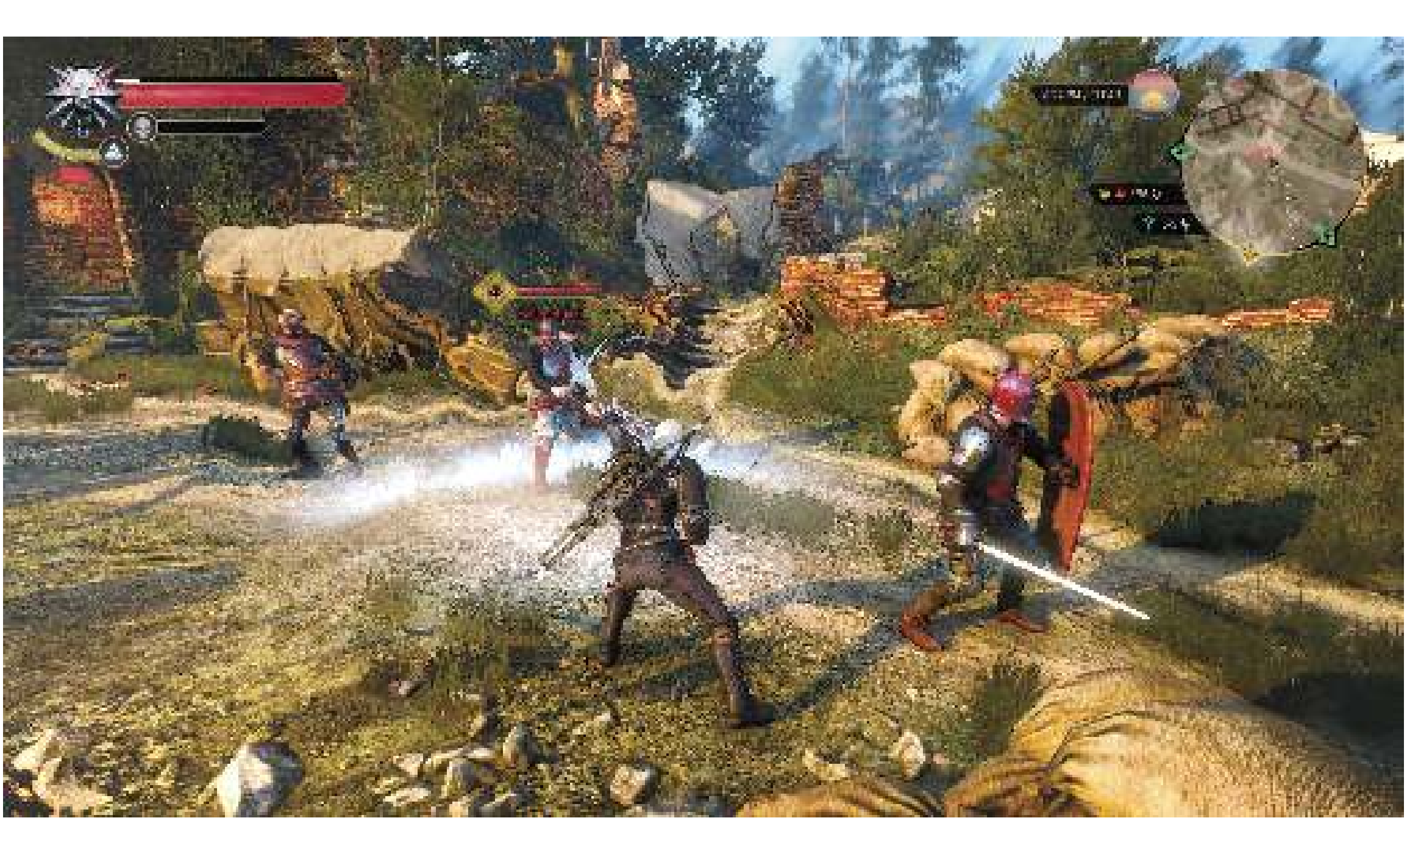
Axii can also be used in conversations with other characters in some cases, though some people are strong willed and can resist it. Avoid this by investing Ability Points in the Delusion ability.

This opens new options and possibly resolves a matter more peacefully, if not just making the ensuing fight easier with one threat temporarily removed.

Axii can even be used to calm Roach or tame wild horses for transportation. Axii's ability to confuse enemies increases in power and duration with greater Sign Intensity.

AARD: TELEKINETIC BLAST

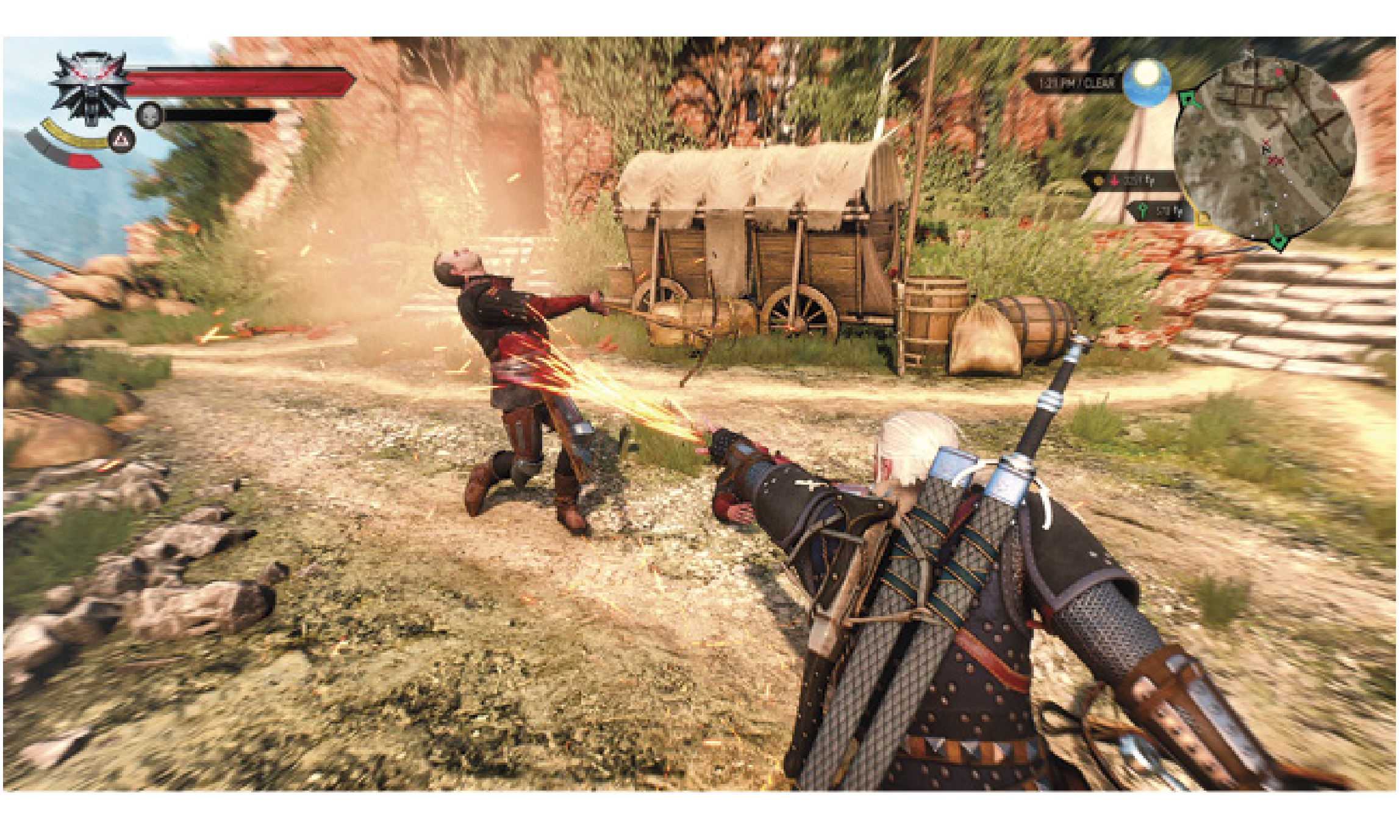
This Sign casts a directed wave of telekinetic energy that can stagger or knock down opponents, leaving them open for attack. Aard can also blow out any existing fires, blast open poorly secured doors, or punch through cracked or damaged walls.



Do not underestimate how useful this skill can be. Some enemies that are knocked over can even be finished off with an immediate execution technique. Foes that are normally adept at blocking (such as those carrying shields or two-handed weapons) may be exposed as they are staggered. Flying enemies may also be blasted out of the sky and brought down within reach of your blades. Aard's chances to knock enemies down increases with higher Sign intensity.

ALTERNATE SIGN MODES

Invest in the Signs Character Abilities tree to unlock alternate Sign modes that change how a Sign operates. To use these modes, you must first Activate the Ability by placing it in an Ability Slot (later in this chapter). Then, instead of just a brief press of the Sign button, hold it down to unleash the Alternate Sign. You can read about these alternate signmodes in our Character Abilities section.



Firestream and Igni: If you're after a different effect with a Sign, look for its alternate mode as an Ability you can purchase and Level up.

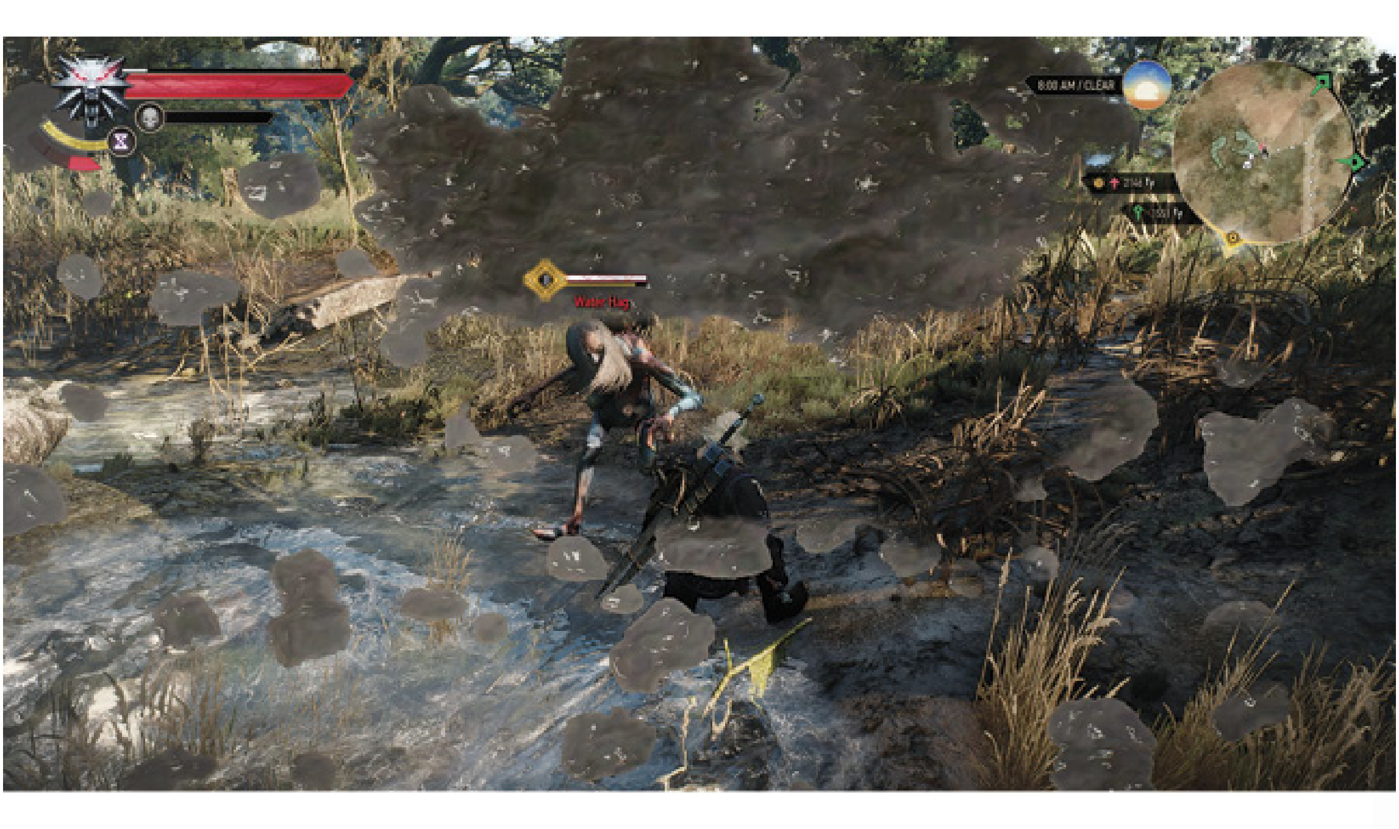
EXAMPLE: FIRESTREAM

You're a big fan of Igni, and you wish to employ an alternate offensive attack using fire. You purchase and choose Firestream from the Igni Signs in your Character menu. Now, when you hold down the Signs button, you cast a focused river of fire that burns with ferocity and focus!

TEMPORARY EFFECTS (FROM YOU OR YOUR FOES)

Combat may often cause unpleasant temporary debuffs on Geralt: sword strikes and the claws of monsters can cause bleeding, or inject poisons. Fires in the environment or used by enemies can cause burning damage over time. Water Hags can throw projectiles that temporarily stun Geralt. Sometimes, the environment itself is filled with noxious or flammable gasses that choke Geralt, unless he burns them away with Igni or clears the air with Aard. Extreme temperatures in the world can still hurt a Witcher.

Armor and armor enhancements can help mitigate some of these temporary effects. Every piece of armor has individual defense ratings for elemental damage, poisoning, bleeding, burning, and damage from monsters. Some armor might have special effects that can further enhance Geralt's resistances to dwebuffs. For things that stun or knock Geralt to the ground, Quen is your chief defense.



When you're fighting something as disgusting as a Hag, watch for attacks that can obscure your vision as well as damage you physically.

FISTFIGHTS (FOR FUN AND PROFIT)

As you travel the land, there are numerous opportunities to challenge opponents to fistfights. Some of these brawls are actually sanctioned; bet upon by those with the coin to do so, and represent an opportunity to make a lot of coin yourself. But sometimes, the fistfights come to Geralt: belligerent or drunken thugs who are looking for a scrap. Geralt foregoes the use of his swords and Signs to pound some sense into them. Fistfighting plays out very similarly to standard armed combat:

Combat with your fists involves the same timing and controls as you would have with a sword. If you're choosing to go bare-knuckle out in the field (outside a bout you're betting on), you can even use your Signs, bombs, crossbow, potions, or anything else you need to win.

The Fists of Fury quests reveal all the enemies you can win coin from by displaying your pugilistic prowess!

However, if it's an official fistfighting match as part of a regional tournament, Geralt cannot use any magic or weapons. In these brawls, he climbs into the ring shirtless, relying entirely on his strength and agility to pound his foes. Fistfighting tournaments and the opponents you face are covered in the Fists of Fury quests.

PLAYING AS CIRILLA FIONA ELEN RIANNON

At select points in the Main Quest, the perspective switches from Geralt to Cirilla. His adopted daughter is central to the plot, and Geralt's efforts to find and safeguard her are his ultimate goals. However, Ciri is no mere damsel. She's a sword fighter, trained by Geralt and his fellow Witchers at Kaer Morhen. She has seen more than her fair share of struggles in her lifetime and has fought through them all. You gain control of Ciri to experience certain events and battles from her perspective.

The Lion Cub of Cintra, as Cirilla is also known, is a most formidable fighter, with more magical prowess than even the Butcher of Blaviken!

Ciri is a different combatant from Geralt. She's lighter on her feet. Her aggressive (almost reckless) fighting style relies on a single sword as opposed to the Witcher's two. She cannot brew potions the way Geralt can, nor can she improve her stats by leveling or with mutagens and decoctions. Despite this, she's a capable Witcher in her own right, and possesses unique abilities that become more apparent during the course of the story.

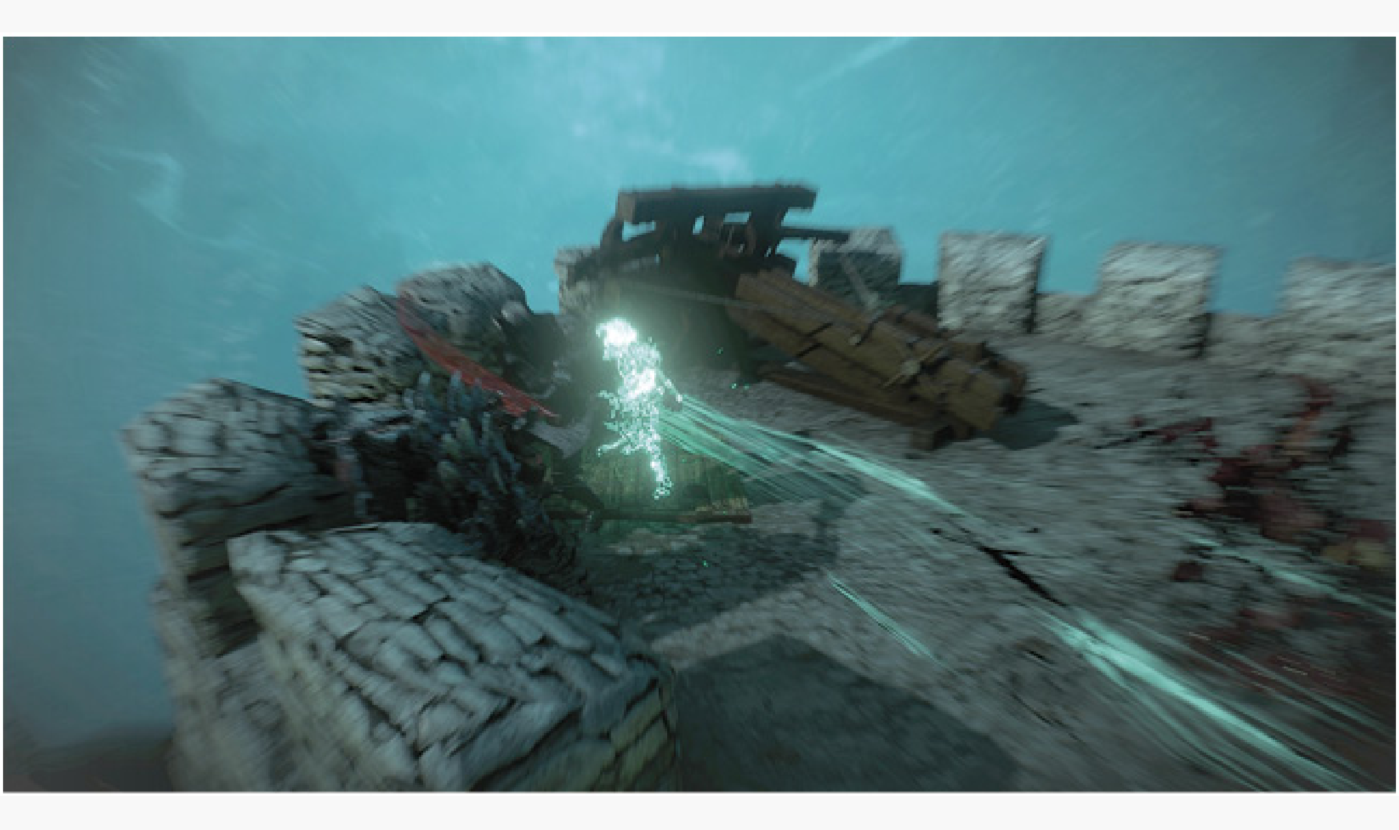
CIRI'S SWORDFIGHTING AND COUNTERING

Ciri is an accomplished swordswoman, despite her impetuousness. She can use Fast and Strong Attacks as Geralt would. Her combinations come out faster than Geralt's. However, unlike Geralt, she carries only one sword—but what a blade it is!

Like Geralt, Ciri can parry, turning aside some blows with her sword, and even counterattack if she times her defense just right.

CIRI'S TELEPORTATION AND MAGIC

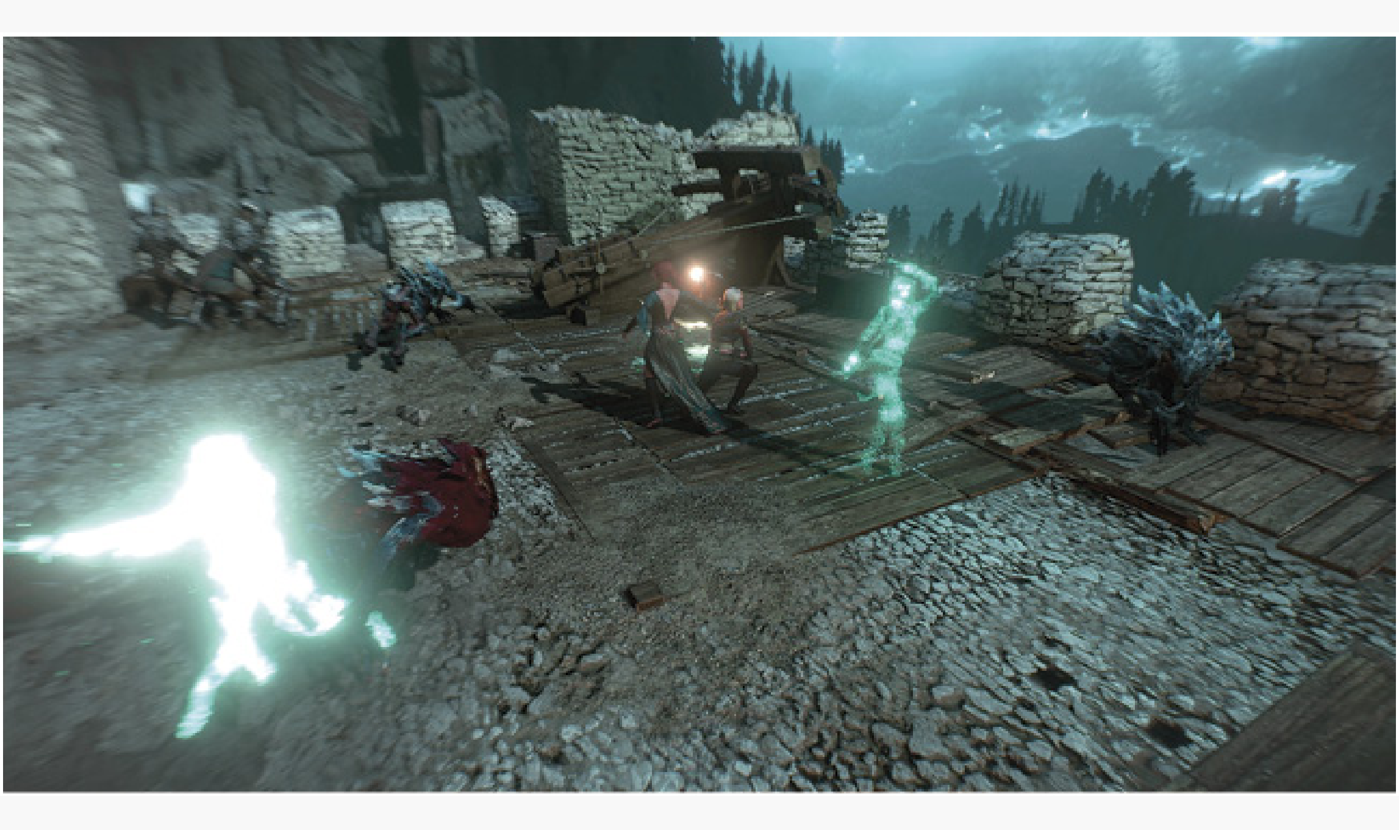
CHARGE



A very strong and fast attack that can knock down foes.

In due time, Ciri gains immense power that she uses to enhance her combat ability. Once she gains those powers, you can execute a short range charged sword strike. Ciri focuses power into her sword, then dashes at the closest target and delivers a devastating blow.

BLINK

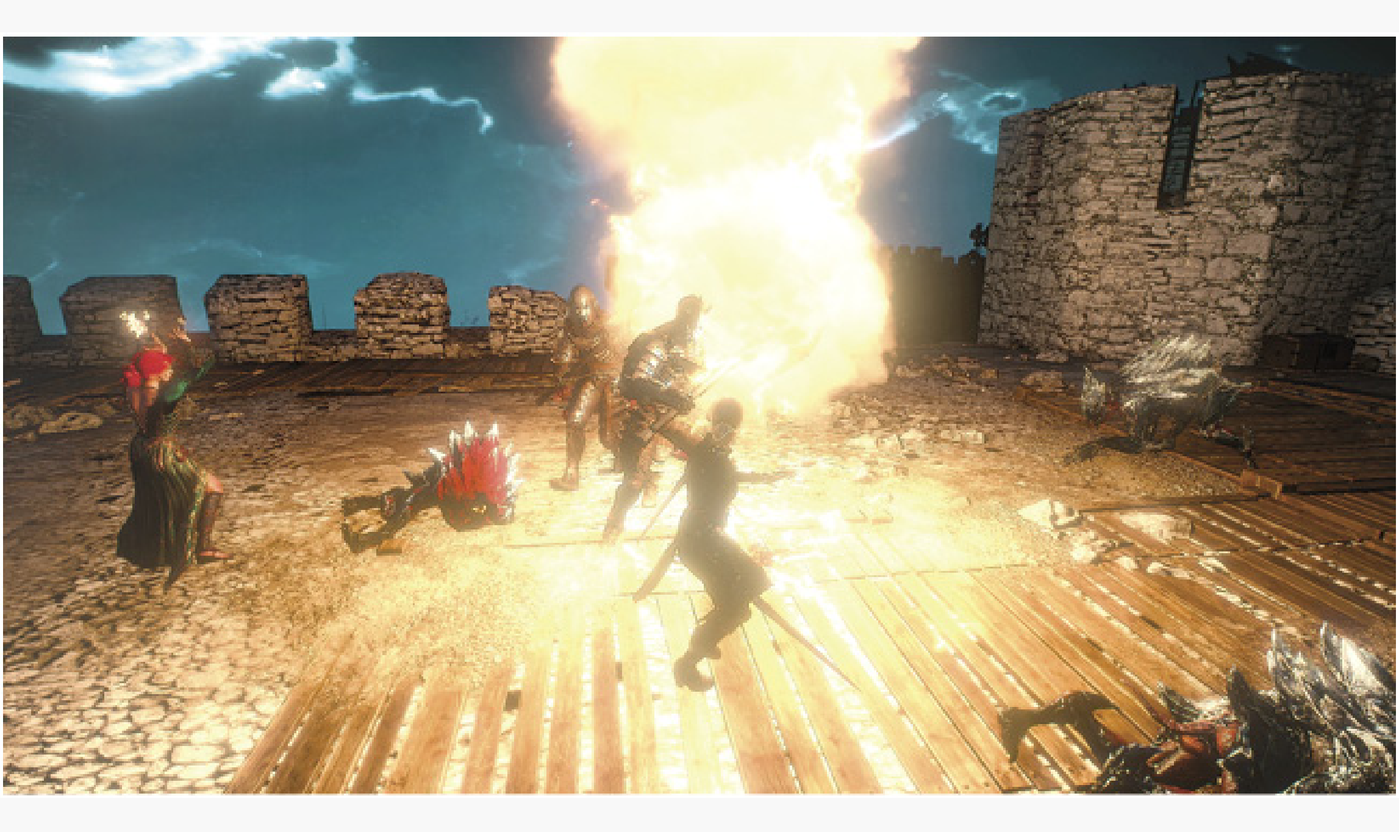


Teleport during combat to get behind your foes.

Ciri's ability to teleport acts as her dodge technique, dashing forward in a blur of light. Later into the adventure, she can charge up her strong attacks, and then teleport straight at the closest foe, cutting them down before they even have a chance to consider a defense! This attack has short range, but little can stand up to it.

As her ability grows, she can create a magical field that expands over a vast swath of the battlefield. This allows Ciri to teleport to each enemy caught in the field to deliver brutal slashes from her sword. These immediately slay any standard opponent.

MAGIC AMULET



Calls down a fireball to pulverize a given area.

Should you wish to immolate a foe (or close group of enemies) with a column of fire from the heavens, utilize the Magic Amulet attack; ensuring you remove yourself from the area of effect after casting this powerful spell, which heavily damages foes. This is great for finishing foes you've staggered, or those just completing a sprint towards you, as there's about a second delay before the maelstrom of fire arrives. You receive this amulet later in the adventure.

Mutations: Conductors of Magic (10 Research Points), Adrenaline Rush (15 Research Points)

Combining the finest abilities of the Combat, Signs, and Alchemy Branches of the Ability Tree, this focuses on surviving the frightening combat of Death March! difficulty, and is also suitable for using during New Game +. Arms and armor have been tailored to ensure critical hits occur frequently. Both the Manticore Steel and Silver Swords (or alternatively, the Viper Steel and Silver Swords) are utilized in this archetype, giving Armor Piercing (with Manticore) or Aard (with Viper) a healthy bonus, as well as great damage potential and bonuses to critical hits and damage (not to mention poison). Partner these tremendously powerful blades with your favored Combat abilities; pick either the first three Fast or Strong attacks, along with Sunder Armor. Ensure you have both Whirl and Rend at your disposal (as you should enchant both weapons with the Severance Runeword).

Manticore or New Moon Armor is chosen for its impressive critical damage resistance and good attack boosting, along with Griffin School Techniques enabling you to boost your Sign Intensity and Stamina regeneration for each piece of armor worn. Begin by adding Quen protective abilities; Active Shield is a go-to defense on higher difficulties, and Aard attacks (such as Aard Sweep) are critical for situations where you need to buffet foes back (the intensity of Aard has a bonus from your weapons). Switch to Igni, choosing Igni Intensity to roast foes for higher damage than normal, and slow them down with Magic Trap. Round off this battle-tested behemoth with Mutation abilities from the Alchemy branch; Acquired Tolerance raises your Toxicity to allow more Potions and Decoctions for a longer time, and Synergy provides exception Mutagen slot bonuses.

When you're choosing a crossbow, it matters little to your overall tactics, but the finest ranged weapon is always the best choice. Similarly, bombs aren't primarily utilized in this build, so choose ones that can stagger or slow foes (like Dancing Star or Northern Wind), or simply damage (like Samum); the only bombs you don't want to use are those that explode at later points, as you'll be in the thick of battle by then.

The Potions you take vary depending on your situation, but Thunderbolt is a key effect to add to your Attack Power, while Tawny Owl helps Stamina regeneration. Petri's Philter is a great way to increase the power of your Signs (and ensure their special effects occur); swig this if foes aren't succumbing to your Aard or Igni attacks. Decoctions range from Ekimmara (damage to foes regenerates Vitality), to Katakan, which increases your critical hit chance.

The Quen glyph is a great choice when barging into combat, though Aard or Igni is also an excellent plan, as enhancing your magical offense shouldn't be overlooked. Further augment your Signs with Veles Runestones, adding more Sign Intensity, Chernobog for Attack Power, or Perun for Adrenaline Points, depending on which you're lacking.

The Levity Glyphword (which turns any armor you own into Medium armor) enables you to take advantage of the Griffin School Techniques if you haven't located the New Moon Armor yet. Once this armor is in your possession, switch to the Quen-related qualities of Protection, or the Igni-enhancing Eruption. Your focus on Whirl and Rend means the focus of your Runewords should be on enchanting both blades with Severance. The increased range of Whirl and Rend allows you to more safely split foes open.

The world of end-game Mutations is wide open, as you can pick from any type you like. It depends purely on the attack style you end up utilizing the most. Combat is usually the primary way to slaughter, so Adrenaline Rush (granting bonuses to Adrenaline and Stamina that increase depending on enemies, though watch the lack of healing afterward). Conductors of Magic is another great choice, increasing Sign damage if the sword you wield is of high quality, but there are 12 choices and most provide a variety of incredible enhancements to pick from.

Armor: New Moon Armor

Swords: Ursine Steel Sword, Ursine Silver Sword

Crossbow: Any

Bombs: Samum, Northern Wind

Potions: Maribor Forest, Tawny Owl, Thunderbolt

Decoctions: Ancient Leshen, Archgriffin, Katakan

Glyphs: Quen, Axii

Runestones: Chernobog, Perun, Veles

Glyphwords: Levity

Runewords: Preservation, Severance

Mutations: Deadly Counter (2 Research Points), Bloodbath (5 Research Points), Second Life (25 Research Points)

Should you attempt your adventure on the most difficult of settings (Death March!), and want to ensure your fights aren't plagued by ineptitude, or a lack of abilities for any situation, while inflicting the most damage in the shortest possible time, this Archetype is a worthy choice. It primarily relies on your blades to inflict damage at close range, but has enough elements from other Ability Trees to augment your melee bloodletting. Early on, build up your Combat branch (Fast and Strong Attacks), and unlock both Whirl and Rend, before finally utilizing Sunder Armor along with Rend to cut through the largest of foes, providing your attack-timing is spot-on. Add potions and you begin to see the benefits of this build.

You want quick and highly-damaging attacks, so your Attack Power, and Criticals should be as impressive as possible based on the equipment you have foraged. At the highest levels, the Witcher school blades are good choices, but utilizing the Ursine swords has the edge, due to the Adrenaline Point gain. Until the Mastercrafted School gear is available, New Moon Armor is an excellent choice, though it is Medium weight and therefore you're unable to utilize the Critical Damage bonuses from Cat School Techniques (General Branch)—that is, of course, until you unlock the Runewright's Levity Glyphword, meaning all equipped armor is treated as Light Armor. This means you can wear whatever you like and get those Cat School Techniques bonuses!

Signs are tempered to favor Combat Branches, but two of the available Abilities are critically important to augment your swordplay. Exploding Shield is obviously to gain protection in case of overwhelming odds, and Puppet (essentially turning some foes into allies) is useful when needing to control crowds of enemies. For monstrous entities, it's simply your swords against their attacks, so prepare poisoned blades accordingly, and ensure Synergy in the Alchemy branch is chosen, so your Mutagen slots grant you spectacular bonuses. Rage Management is key here too, giving you flexibility to cast Signs using Adrenaline rather than Stamina.

Other equipment is up to your preferences, including the crossbow you employ. Bombs are mainly situational, though it's always a good idea to lob a Samum from time-to-time; higher quality Samums cause criticals, too.

Potions are taken to increase your Adrenaline (Maribor Forest), Attack Power (Thunderbolt), and provide Stamina (Tawny Owl), while the Acquired Tolerance Ability helps mitigate any Toxicity problems (and used optionally). Similarly, Decoctions should influence the damage you are inflicting, with Archgriffin (strong attacks consume Stamina for extra damage to your foe), Ancient Leshen (Signs cast increase Stamina regeneration), and Katakan (increases your critical hit chance) all augmenting your already-impressive combat strengths.

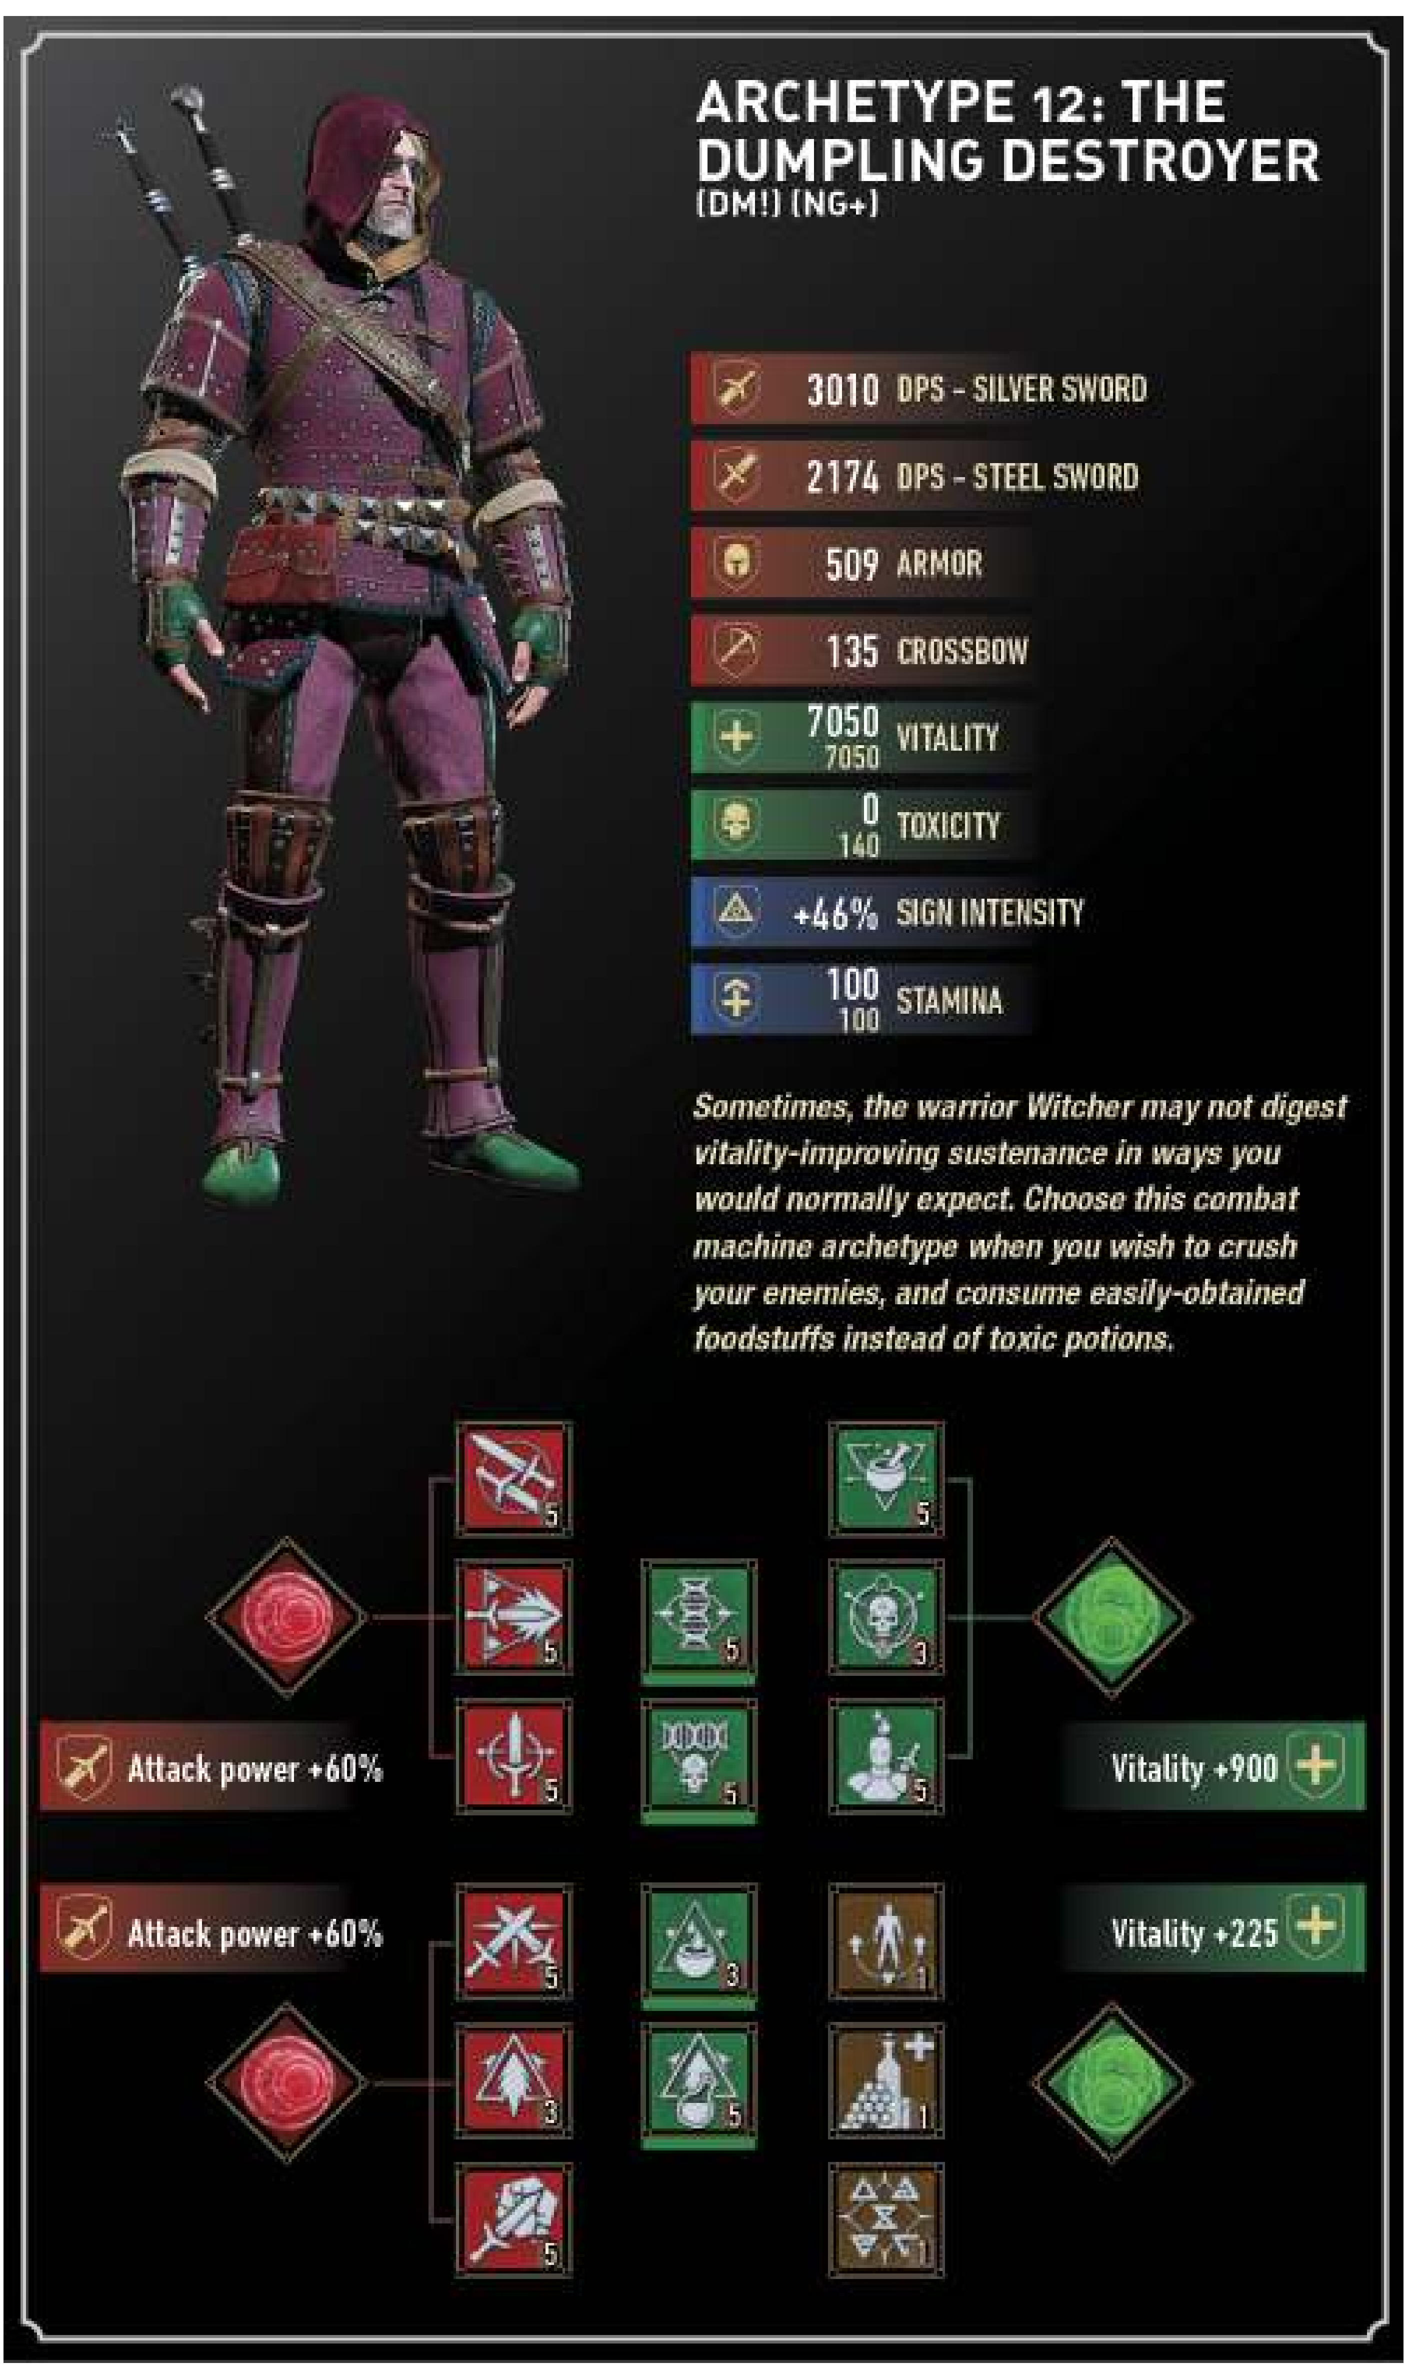
Glyphs are chosen to bolster defenses, though your use of Axii means this glyph is an option. Runestones are to your preference, though it's great to increase your Adrenaline Points with Perun, or Attack Power with Chernobog.

As mentioned previously, your Glyphword choice is straightforward; Levity allows any armor you wear to be treated as Light (and thus, your Cat School Techniques bonuses are awarded). For Runewords, Preservation never causes your Armorer's Table or Grindstone bonuses to expire, which is helpful for increasing your damage as much as possible. Once you start using Whirl and Rend, Severance (which increases the range of both attacks) is your key enchantment.

Finally, for Mutations, look for ones with a Combat component to them. In particular, you may find Bloodbath a superb help, as critical hits generate adrenaline. Deadly Counter allows you to counter human-sized foes that are wounded with a finisher, and all damage against monstrous foes is increased by a huge amount. Second Life is also optional, if you're having problems staying alive on higher difficulty levels, though by the time you access Mutations, you should never have to worry about combat conditions favoring the enemy!

Hybrid Archetypes

Archetype 12: The Dumpling Destroyer



ARCHETYPE 12: THE DUMPLING DESTROYER

(DM!) (NG+)

Sometimes, the warrior Witcher may not digest vitality-improving sustenance in ways you would normally expect. Choose this combat machine archetype when you wish to crush your enemies, and consume easily-obtained foodstuffs instead of toxic potions.

Armor: Grandmaster Feline Armor

Swords: Grandmaster Feline Steel Sword, Grandmaster Feline Silver Sword

Crossbow: Any

Bombs: Northern Wind, Samum

Potions: Thunderbolt, Maribor Forest, White Raffard's Decoction, Blizzard

Decoctions: Archgriffin

Glyphs: None

Runestones: None

Glyphwords: Deflection

Runewords: Dumpling (x2, one for each sword)

Mutations: Euphoria (5 Research Points)

With only 59 Points required to fully commit to both the first 12 Abilities and the Euphoria Mutation, this archetype is easily accessible, and extremely proficient at combat, certain aspects of Alchemy, and the consumption of dumplings for reasons that will soon be clear. To begin with, obtain the Grandmaster Feline armor and equipment, along with both blades; though Cat School Techniques (the General Ability) isn't chosen, the listed Combat Abilities are all available with one overall goal in mind: The mastering of a combination of fast and strong attacks (strong attacks enhancing the fast ones) that cut deep with extra damage, especially when stabbing foes in the flanks or from the rear, into their backs.

Secondarily, Alchemic Abilities are focused on improved tolerance to potion and decoction consumption that allows even more damage to be inflicted, as well as the Attack Power bonuses given by oils; critical when wearing light Cat Armor. The General Abilities include Rage Management and Metabolism Boosts; a pair of skills that are fantastic and useful for managing the extra Adrenaline Points that are easily generated with your variety of Combat abilities. They solve the otherwise-weak aspects of this build; susceptibility to toxicity (Metabolism Boosts use Adrenaline Points to reduce toxicity costs of drinking potions, though this doesn't affect decoctions), and low stamina regeneration (Rage Management, allow Signs to be cast using Adrenaline Points if you're low on Stamina).

The bombs useful when employing this build, Northern Wind and Samum, are the best choices to make (though any offensive projectile is good to lob); their extra ability to freeze or blind multiple enemies gives you the flexibility of crowd control necessary to perform assassinations (attacks from behind) where the combat-heavy nature of this archetype shines.

When it comes to chugging down Potions and decoctions, the ones chosen simply bolster all the benefits of this archetype. Blizzard slows time down when you slay a foe, allowing you to quickly switch to your next assassination target and position yourself properly. Maribor Forest and Thunderbolt accelerate the generation of Adrenaline Points and Attack Power respectively, which is what the combat abilities utilize. White Raffard's Decoction immediately restores a chunk of your Vitality, when nibbling on dumplings won't get you the health boost you need quickly. Finally, the Archgriffin Decoction (which steals your Stamina and inflicts 5% extra damage for each Strong attack you land) focuses your combat abilities to the fullest.

When you're assaulting an outlaw Hanse in the Duchy of Toussaint, and you've multiple bandits to contend with, the only downfall of this archetype is his weakness to being struck by enemy arrows. In such conditions, it sometimes isn't feasible to wade through other foes to reach archers, so the Grandmaster Feline Armor was imbued with Deflection Glyphword; with deflects all arrows, effectively immunizing you from all human-sized projectiles.

Due to the novel way in which this ultimate warrior regains lost vitality, Runestones are ignored in favor of the Dumpling Runeword (one on each weapon). Though this is easily overlooked, Dumpling regenerates 100 percent more Vitality each time you consume food. Combine this with the Gourmet General Ability (Vitality Regeneration after eating lasts 20 minutes), and you have extremely potent healing from food. As you'll soon be the proud owner of the Corvo Bianco Vineyard, and have an old lady named Marlene Trastamara to rescue (Secondary Quest: The Hunger Game) who bakes you free food daily, and a bounty of easy-to-find food to loot or hunt, this technique of Vitality regeneration is well worth employing.

Finally, research the Euphoria Mutation, as it boosts the damage-per-second (and Sign Intensity) for every Toxicity point that affects you. When you correctly manage your toxicity so you aren't becoming poisoned too quickly, this adds even more to your combat potential.

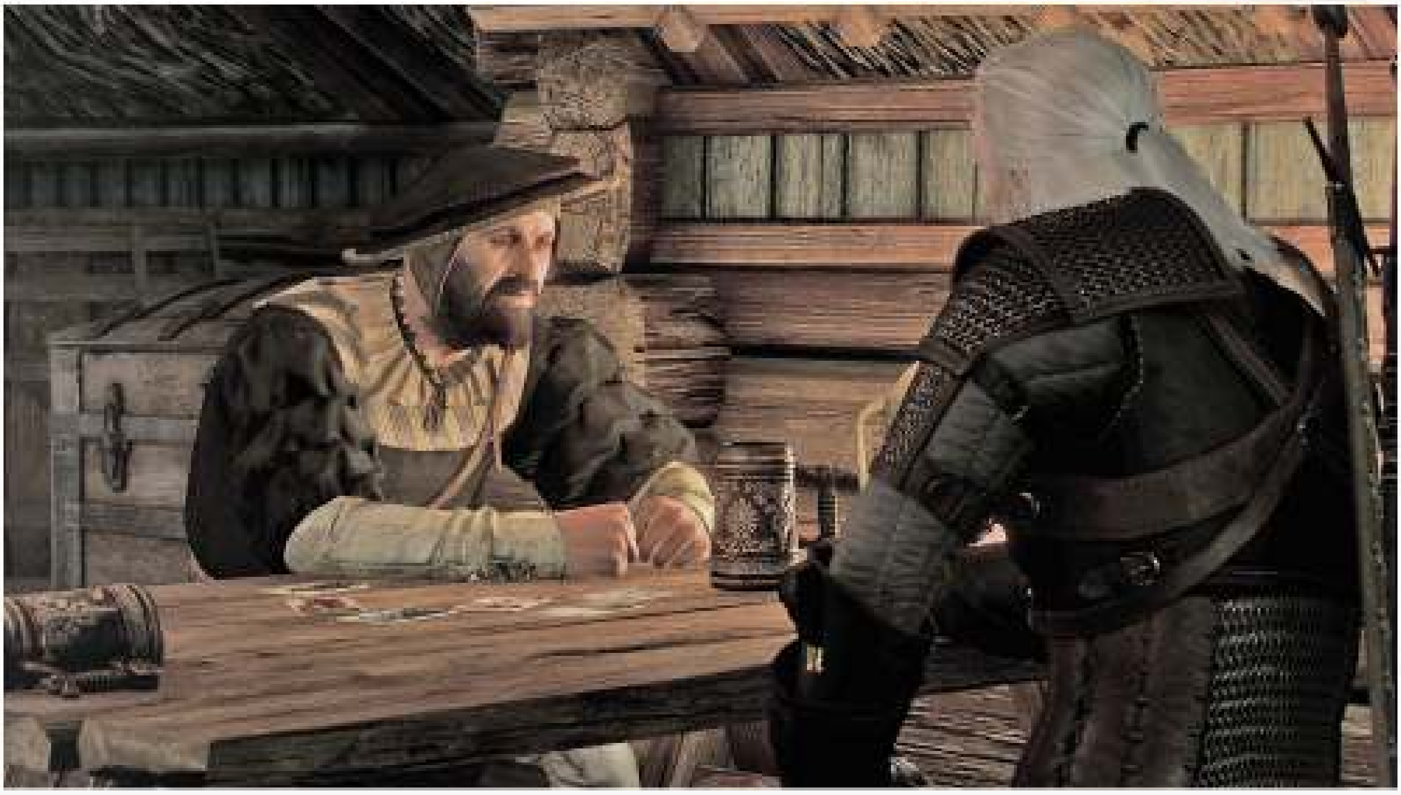
Introduction To The Game

Gwent is a dwarven card game that simulates battle between two opposing armies. Your first opportunity to play it is in the small village of White Orchard, which you visit at the beginning of your adventure. A scholar, named Aldert Geert, inside the White Orchard tavern, is willing to teach you the ropes with a tutorial, and this opens you up to the world of Gwent, as well as an extensive series of Secondary Gwent quests that pit you against the best players across the known world!



Learn the rudiments of this fine pastime by chatting with the Scholar at White Orchard tavern.

Gwent

Overview

At the very basic level, a game of Gwent consists of the following:

1. A conversation with a Gwent player, and a small bet by you on the likelihood of your victory.

2. The Gwent battlefield appears. The starting player is chosen via a coin toss.

3. Each player draws 10 random cards from their current deck of no fewer than 22 cards, and no more than 35 cards, then chooses up to two cards from this hand to discard, which are redrawn in the hopes of replacing them with better cards. The discard is optional. The 10 cards you end up with after any redrawing become your hand for the duration of the match (although special card abilities can affect your draw).

4. The match begins! When you start the first of (up to) three rounds, players remove a unit card from their hand, and place it on the battlefield in the appropriate combat rows, one card per turn (unless special abilities of the card deck dictate otherwise). Additionally, Weather cards can be put into play to further influence unit card strength points. Each unit card is worth a certain number of strength points, which are added to your overall total. The ultimate goal in a round is to have more points than your opponent.

5. Play continues until cards are exhausted, or a player passes their turn, which allows their opponent to continue to play until their cards are exhausted, or they pass. The player with the highest total points wins that round.

6. The next round starts with the remaining cards in hand still in play. The first player to win two rounds is the winner of the match (or bout).

THE GWENT BATTLEFIELD: A PICTURE

The following image shows a sample Gwent battlefield, or board, where each Gwent match takes place.

①The Players: This shows the opponent (at the upper half) and you (at the lower half of the battlefield). The shield and deck type under the name of the opponent is helpful, as it shows which Faction you are going up against (and which you are using yourself). Adjust your strategies accordingly.

③Round Gems: You each have two red gems indicating how many rounds each of you has won. Lose a round, and a gem is shattered. Lose two rounds, and the match is lost.

④Leader Ability: In the top left (opponent) or bottom left (you) corner of the battlefield, your Leader sits. He or she has a specific ability, which you can choose before the match starts. Note in this picture, the opponent has already used his Leader Ability (which is why the Leader card is darkened). Remember to hit the "use leader card" button when you wish to unleash this ability (which is used once per game). It is extremely important you know what both you and your opponent's Leader abilities are, so you can prepare for them! Remember to zoom in on your opponent's Leader card to learn more about their ability. Forewarned is forearmed!

⑤Your Hand: The opponent's hand isn't visible (that would be cheating), but here you can see all the cards you still have left to play.

⑥Discard pile (also known as Graveyard): This shows the cards you and your opponent have played, and have been discarded in previous rounds, or in this round if a card has been scorched. You can look through this pile (especially as Medic cards allow you to return non-Hero cards from this pile).

⑦Remaining Deck Cards: These cards are the remaining ones that you didn't draw at the start of the match, and aren't used.

⑩Weather Effect: If a Weather card is placed, it affects both you and your opponent's rows, and the type of Weather is shown on the row. Any Weather cards in play are placed here, between both players. In this example, a Biting Frost card is in play, reducing the effectiveness of the Close Combat Rows for both sides.

⑪Row points totals. The totals for all of the strength points for each card you and your opponent have played in each row are shown here.

⑫Total Points Value: This shows total points value of the cards on each of your three rows, as well as those of your opponent. The highest total wins the round.

DECK FACTIONS

There are five types of deck in Gwent, each related to a particular faction. Each faction has its own perk, which is important to learn, and their own Leader with a number of unique Leader abilities you can choose from. They are listed in your Gwent menu in the following order:

MONSTERS

A close-combat heavy army of frightening beasts that favor Muster abilities.

- Leader: Eredin
- Faction Perk: One randomly-chosen card stays on the battlefield after each round.

NILFGAARDIAN EMPIRE

The army of the Emhyr, with Tight Bond units, Spies, and Medics).

- Leader: Emhyr var Emreis
- Faction Perk: Win whenever there is a draw.

NORTHERN REALMS

The army of King Foltest, with close combat and siege weaponry, sprinkled with Spies and Tight Bond units.

- Leader: Foltest
- Faction Perk: Draw a card from your deck whenever you win a round.

SCOIA'TAEL

Elves and dwarves combine to offer units with Muster, Medic, and a whole lot of agility.

- Leader: Francesca Findabair
- Faction Perk: You decide who goes first at the start of a battle.

SKELLIGE CLANS

The Clans of Skellige combine to form a hard-hitting marauding band of Muster, Tight Bond; and Beserker troops with bear-faced ferocity.

- Leader: King Bran or Crach an Craite
- Faction Perk: Two random cards from the graveyard (discard pile) come to play on the board at the start of round three.

Gwent

Who Plays Gwent?

A multitude of merchants and innkeepers, as well as some more infamous players and friends of yours, have been known to partake in this pastime. You may also stumble across professionals in a regional competition or encounter an ongoing tournament at a larger social event. There are also a few Gwent players that you have only one opportunity to challenge while tackling another quest. Almost all of these players reward you with a new Gwent card the first time you beat them.

WHO REALLY PLAYS GWENT, THOUGH?

A CARD-COLLECTING: AN OVERVIEW

Obtaining cards for your increasingly-large Gwent collection (the complete card collection numbers 255 cards) involves winning a multitude of games (also known as rounds or bouts), the successful completion of certain quests, or purchasing cards from particular vendors, and other general tomfoolery. These can be segmented into the following categories:

Collection Plan #1A: In Your Base Deck (32 Cards)

Congratulations! You already have 32 Cards (mainly from the Northern Realms Deck), meaning you can start playing Gwent immediately (find your cards in the "Gwent Deck" part of the Main Menu (the left column menu, not your inventory menu). Obviously, there's (much more) room for improvement in terms of creating better decks, but this leaves only 223 left to find!

Collection Plan #1B: In Your Blood and Wine Base Deck (24 Cards)

Great news! When you embark on your adventures into the realm of Toussaint, by Starting the Gwent Quest: To Everything Turn, Turn, Tournament!, you receive an additional 24 Cards, all related to the fifth Faction: The Skellige Clans deck. As you'd expect, there are additional cards to bolster this faction (another 19, in fact) as you explore this new territory.

Collection plan #2: purchased from traders (87 Cards)

Over one hundred of the Gwent cards you're after are found at the shops of various traders across the Northern Realms. These are always one of the following:

- Merchants (most, but not all)
- Innkeeps (most, but not all)
- Named characters you know (such as Marquise Serenity of the Passiflora brothel in Novigrad City).

Simply hand over your hard-earned crowns in return for the card you want. Each vendor has a specific collection of (usually four or five) cards to buy, so always buy from them if you have the funds. Each card costs between 10 and 70 crowns, and for all of them, expect to pay no more than 26,000 crowns! This may sound like a lot, but have you seen how much that Ofieri Runewright needs to start his business?

If you don't want to meticulously gather only a few cards from traders in the Northern Realms, there's good news. The Duchy of Toussaint's Innkeeps sell a large number of random cards from a specific list. This is a very quick way to bolster your decks without the more involved hunting for cards, though you can't find the most potent cards by simply purchasing them from Toussaint Innkeeps.

GWENT TRADERS: HOW TO FIND THEM

Traders that offer Gwent cards are marked with this icon throughout the guide's Atlas section (this icon doesn't appear on your World Map). For a complete list of traders you can buy from, consult the Merchant Appendix.

Collection Plan #3: Won From A (Non-Quest) Gwent Player (53 Cards)

Over 50 of your cards are won by challenging a no-name Gwent fan scattered through towns and countryside. Most offer a random card if you better them, though some give you specific cards. There are a variety of Gwent types that would love to play you:

- Armorers, Blacksmiths, Brothel Madames*, Herbalists, Innkeeps*, a Loneshark, Merchants*, Quartermasters*, Scholars, and Traders.*

Some—but not all—of this type of Gwent Player may also have cards to sell, too.*

PLAYERS WITH SPECIFIC CARDS TO WIN (6 PLAYERS AND CARDS)

There are 6 Gwent players (Aldert Geert the Gwent tutor in the White Orchard Tavern, the Nilfgaardian Nobleman inside the Royal Palace in Vizima, The Elven Merchant of the Traveling Circus Camp outside Carsten, Shani, Olgierd von Everec, and Hilbert at the Borsodi Auction House during Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Open Sesame who don't have an associated quest, but hand over a specific Gwent card if you beat them. Over in Toussaint, there are 19 Gwent players (almost all merchants of some kind) that have a specific Skellige Clans card you must win from them. .

PLAYERS WITH RANDOM CARDS TO WIN (83 PLAYERS, 67 CARDS)

There are 83 Gwent players (across White Orchard, Velen, Novigrad, and Skellige) that hand over a random Gwent card if you beat them. The rest of the Gwent cards are won by challenging them. The first time you beat a Gwent player, you receive the (random) card. Each subsequent time, you simply win any money you bet before the bout. This means you must visit a minimum of 52 of the 65 Gwent players to obtain all the randomly-given cards.

GWENT PLAYERS: HOW TO FIND THEM

Though you can look on your World Map to find merchants, armorers, blacksmiths, and other folks who are likely to be Gwent players, those that you can win cards from are marked with the first (blue) icon throughout the guide's Atlas section (this doesn't appear on your World Map). If you're talking to someone who is up for a Gwent game, the second (orange) icon appears as a conversation choice. At this point, it would be really great to have a complete list of who and where these people are; which is why that has been provided (see the Gwentfolk of the Northern Realms.

Collection Plan #4: Found Or Won During A Gwent Quest (23 Cards)

There are 23 cards you need to win from a specific individuals as part of one of the five available Gwent Quests (Playing Innkeeps, Velen Players, Big City Players, Old Pals, and Skellige Style). Opponents always give you a specific card, and you must face each one in a particular order (subsequent players in a quest won't play until you've beaten previous ones first). The last (and most difficult) opponent in each Gwent Quest gives you two specific cards (one from their deck, and one for completing the quest. Consult these quests first, and follow the objectives mentioned within each quest.

NOVIGRAD
VIVALDI BANK

OFF THE CARDS: KNOW WHEN TO HOLD 'EM!

It is vitally important that you check the Gwent: Complete Card Checklist section before embarking on Gwent and Secondary Quests if you want every single card. Certain players, such as those you find at the Vegelbud Residence during Secondary Quest: A Matter of Life and Death, won't be seen again. The same goes for characters that might die during your adventure. If they're dead, they can't be challenged to a game of Gwent now, can they? However, in certain circumstances, they may leave their card behind. If this occurs, it is mentioned in the appendices, but don't count on this as a way to gather all cards!

CARD TOTALS

The numbered totals aren't necessary to worry about, as some cards can be gathered from multiple sources. Instead, concentrate on finding the cards you need, as quickly as possible. A visit to Toussaint helps, as certain Innkeeps sell a good (random) variety of cards to quickly bolster your decks.

Collection Plan #5: Found Or Won During A Secondary Quest (15 Cards)

There are 15 cards that are only acquired during a Secondary Quest (excluding Toussaint). Some are won during tournaments with the very best players around, and some are found during a quest. Take great care not to miss these cards, as they can't be gathered after the quest concludes!

HIGH STAKES
Win your match against Bernard Tulle.

Collection Plan #6: Loose Cards: Found On The Ground (1 Card)

Someone left a card lying around in a barn in Brunwich. It's the fabled Cow card, with hidden depths to its statistics. Don't forget that prized heifer! Also, some cards you can't win from an opponent (due to them dying, for example). These are placed loose for you to pick up, though this isn't the optimal way to find these cards.

OFF THE CARDS: KNOW WHEN TO FOLD 'EM!

Pay special attention to cards that appear on the lists only once; there's only one available! Check the Gwent: Complete Card Checklist Chart before you start any related quests, so you don't finish a quest or kill off a character and finish the quest without a card. Are you coming up to a tournament bout of Gwent? Then save your game before each bout in case you fail. As there are multiple times you might accidentally lose a card forever, some scholars have deemed Gwent Quest: Collect 'em All to be the most difficult quest of Geralt's life!

HEARTS OF STONE: GWENT CARDS APLENTY!

HoS

Included in these totals are the 25 additional cards (some are duplicates, and some are brand new cards) that are available in the Hearts of Stone Expansion. Be sure to find these, too!

BLOOD AND WINE: A FINAL BOUT OF CARD COLLECTING!

BAW

Included in these totals are the 43 additional cards (making up the Skellige Clans deck, along with two new types of Weather cards) that are available in the Blood and Wine Expansion. Make sure you gather all these, too!

GWENT DIFFICULTY LEVEL: A REAL CHALLENGE

Are you finding your Gwent bouts too easy? Need more of a challenge? Or are you about to start a quest involving a Gwewnt tournament, and want to increase your odds of victory? Then fiddle with the Gwent difficulty level! There are three levels of difficulty: Easy, Normal, and Hard. Increase your difficulty if you require a more competitive opponent who is more likely to play stronger cards against you. This has no impact on the cards you receive from winning, however.

Show me what you got
Master witchers... food and drink on the house. What can I get you?

Gwent

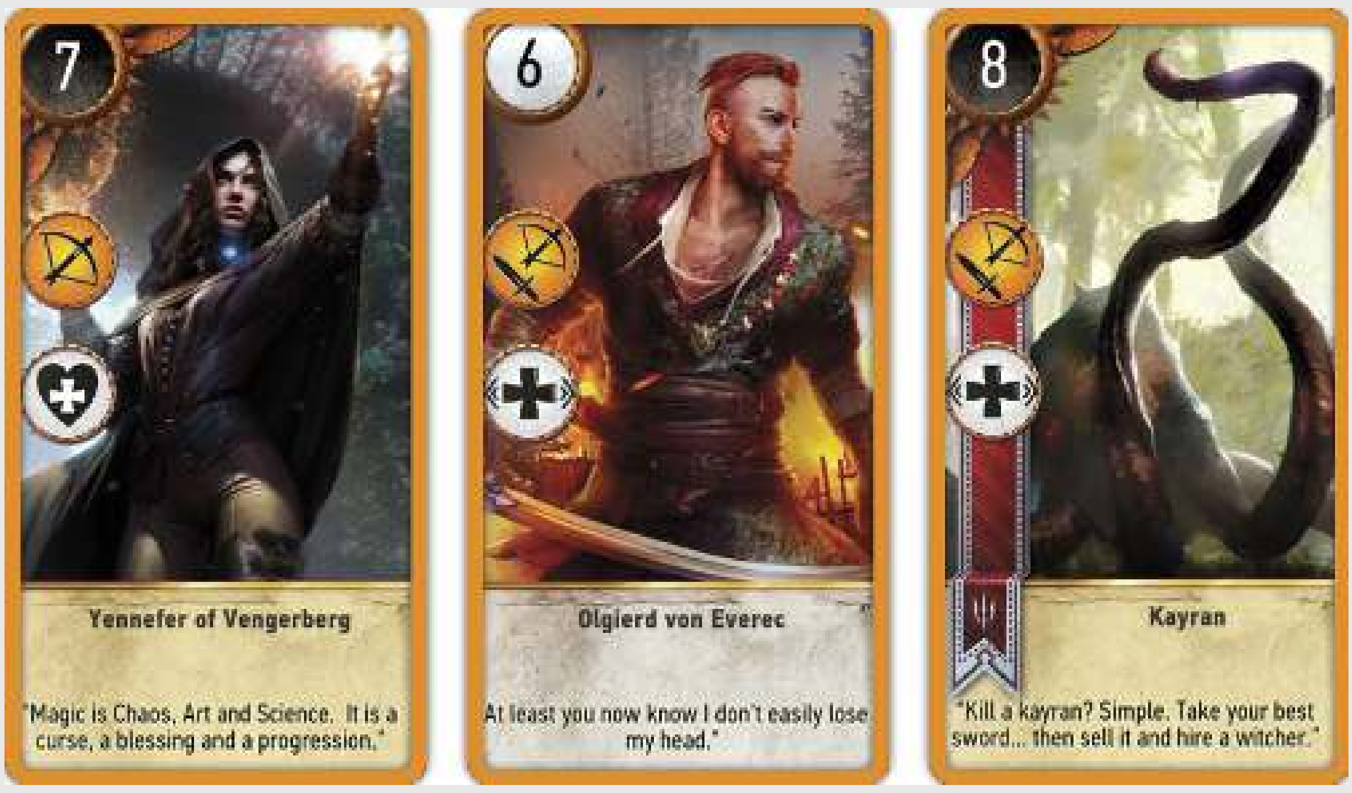
Deck Building

Amassing a huge collection of Gwent cards means nothing if you can't effectively trounce your opponents during a game itself! With this in mind, the following section exhaustively details all the available Gwent cards and their abilities, and delivers individual tactics for specific cards (or sets of cards), as well as general and advanced tactics for each Faction Deck you are building. This proves invaluable before you face any opponent, and particularly the ones mentioned in the tables that are related to Secondary and Gwent quests.

CARD UNIT AND ABILITY TYPES: AN OVERVIEW

By now, you should understand the variety of symbols that adorn each Gwent card you collect. The next step is learning and understanding just how many of each type of card is available (to both you and your opponent), which in turn can dramatically help you to plan your own decks and bouts. This section focuses on Unit Type, and also Unit abilities.

GWENT PLAN OF ATTACK: MUTIPLE ABILITY CARDS



7
Yennefer of Vengerberg
"Magic is Chaos, Art and Science. It is a curse, a blessing and a progression."
6
Olgierd von Everec
At least you now know I don't easily lose my head."
8
Kayran
"Kill a kayran? Simple. Take your best sword... then sell it and hire a witcher."

Remember that certain cards may have more than one ability, such as Yennefer of Vengerberg, who is both a Hero and a Medic. That rapscallion Olgierd von Everec isn't only Agile, but he offers a morale boost too. and the disgusting Kayran from the Monster Deck is the only card with three abilities: Hero, Agile, and Morale Boost.

UNIT TYPES AND ABILITIES: A TABLE

Study the following table carefully; it breaks down the number of cards of each a particular type and the number of cards with a particular ability (excluding weather). This is helpful in determining which Faction relies on a type of card more heavily than another. After this table, more specific advice is imparted. If you wish to see a complete breakdown of abilities for all cards, consult the table at the very end of this chapter.

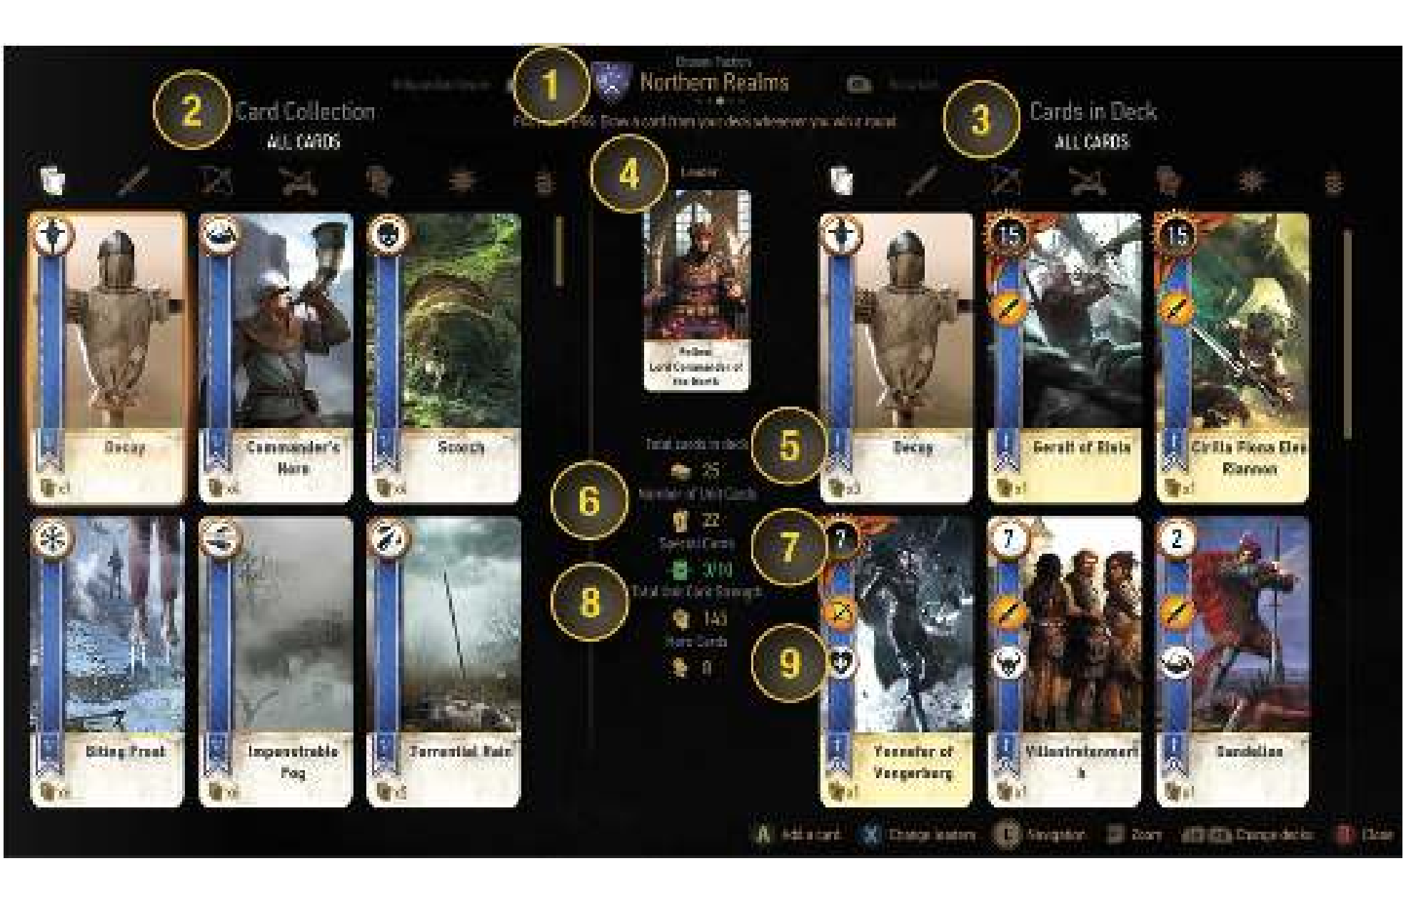
Gwent

Basics Of Gwent

You begin your adventure with a meager collection of mainly Northern Realms Gwent cards (and a small, but reasonable, Skellige Clans deck if you're starting the Blood and Wine Expansion). To excel at this game, you must collect many more cards, so you can build a deck suitable to challenge every player in the realm. Access your Gwent Deck from the Main (left vertical) Menu. It is here that you can inspect all five Faction decks, individual cards, and prepare decks before a match. This deck-building is also possible just before a match starts, after your wager. Here, you can inspect the following:

THE BASICS OF THE GWENT MENU



① Deck faction. Scroll through the five Factions and choose the one you wish to build a deck with. When you commence your adventure, you only have enough cards for a Northern Realms deck (and Skellige Clans deck if Blood and Wine Expansion is active). The ultimate goal is to create a variety of strong decks for each faction.

② Card Collection: Look through all of your cards in the deck faction you have highlighted. You can sort them by Unit type (Close Combat, Ranged, and Siege), as well as by Hero, Weather, and Special type.

③ Cards in Deck: You have the same sorting ability when you place cards from your collection into a deck you are building. This area showcases the cards you have access to during a match, so place all the ones you want to use, and none of the ones you don't!

④ Leader: Press "Change Leaders" to swap between the Leader cards you have for this Faction. You can collect up to five, except for Skellige Clans, which has two.. Base the deck you are creating around the Leader's ability.

⑦ Special cards: This counts the number of Weather and special cards you place in your deck. There is no minimum (you don't have to use any of these cards), but you can't have more than ten special cards in a deck. Usually, professional players tend to limit these cards to only 1-6, depending on tactics.

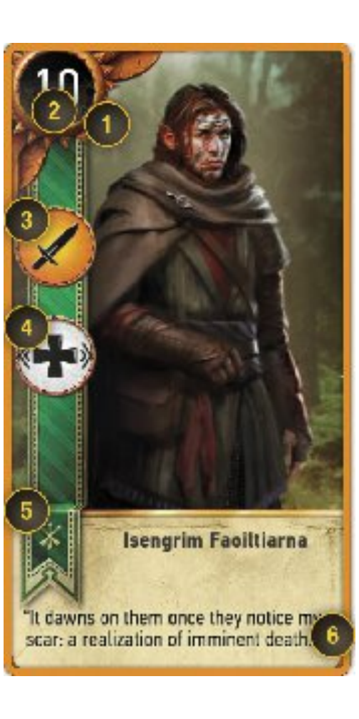
⑨ Hero Cards: This shows how many Neutral and Faction Heroes exist within your deck. Heroes aren't affected by Special cards (whether the effects are good or bad), so they are a little more "stable" to employ.

THE BASICS OF A GWENT CARD

When you're examining a Gwent card, it's worth learning what different aspects of the card mean. Here, the Scoia'Tael Hero Isengrim Faoiltiarna shows his mettle. Here's how the information is imparted:



10
1
2
3
4
5
6
Isengrim Faoiltiarna
"It dawns on them once they notice my scar: a realization of imminent death."

① Hero Sunburst: If the card is a Hero (and Isengrim Faoiltiarna is), an extra orange sunburst and flourish appears in the top left corner. A regular unit card does not have this.

③ Unit Row: This weapon indicates which row the unit fights in. Isengrim, and all Close Combat units, have a sword icon. Ranged units have a bow. Agile units have a sword and a bow. Siege units have a catapult icon.

⑥ Notes: The name of the unit is shown (which is important as some units increase their power when placed with units of the same name), along with a quote to delight you.

CARD ABILITITES: A QUICK LOOK

Each ability a card might possess receives a thorough tactical inspection later in this chapter. But to begin with, here's a list of all possible card abilities:

Combat: Close Combat: This unit fights on the Close Combat row.

Combat: Ranged: This unit fights on the Ranged row.

Combat: Siege: This unit fights on the Siege row.

Agile: This unit has the flexibility to be placed on either the Close Combat or Ranged rows.

Berserker: This unit changes into a much stronger version of itself if a Mardroeme is played before or after it.

Commander's Horn: This appears as a non-unit Neutral card (place on any row), or as a character's ability (affects only the row the character is played on). It doubles the strength of all unit cards in that row. Limit to 1 per row.

Decoy: This non-unit Neutral card allows you to swap it with a card on the battlefield to return it to your hand.

Hero: This unit is immune to any special effects or abilities.

Medic: After playing this card, choose one card from the discard pile and play it instantly (no Heroes or Special cards).

Morale Boost: Adds +1 to all units in the row (excluding itself).

Mardroeme: This appears as a non-unit Skellige card (place on any row), or as a character's ability (affects only the row the character is played on). It triggers transformation of all Berserker Cards on the same row.

Muster: Find any cards with the same name in your deck and play them instantly.

Scorch (Specific Row or All Rows): Destroy enemy's strongest unit in a specific row, if the combined strength of all his or her units is 10 or more. "Scorch" and "Clan Dimom Pirate" cards affect the whole battlefield. "Scorch (Specific Row)" cards (which are all "character" cards, beside the Clan Dimom Pirate) affect only one row.

Spy: Place on your opponent's battlefield and draw 2 cards from your deck.

Tight Bond: Placing this unit next to a card with the same name will double the strength of both cards.

Weather: Biting Frost: This appears as a non-unit Neutral card. It sets the strength of all Close Combat cards to 1 for both players.

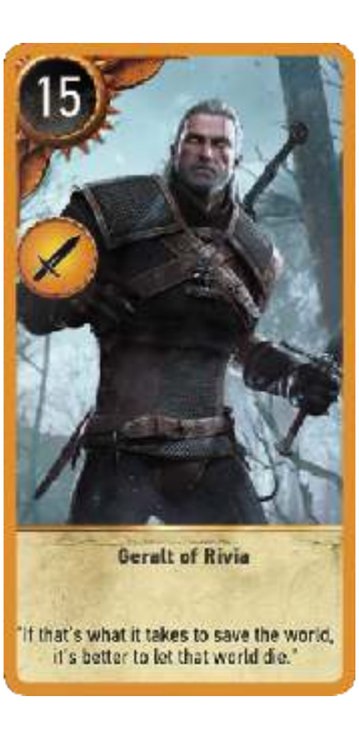
Weather: Impenetrable Fog: This appears as a non-unit Neutral card. It sets the strength of all Ranged cards to 1 for both players.

Weather: Torrential Rain: This appears as a non-unit Neutral card. It sets the strength of all Siege cards to 1 for both players.

Weather: Skellige Storm: This appears as a non-unit Skellige card. It sets the strength of all Ranged and Siege cards to 1 for both players.

Weather: Clear Weather: This appears as a non-unit Neutral card. It removes any current weather effects across the entire battlefield.

NEUTRAL CARDS



15
Geralt of Rivia
"If that's what it takes to save the world, it's better to let that world die."

There are a number of cards that feature both Hero and non-Hero unit cards that do not belong to a specific faction. These Neutral cards include Geralt of Rivia, Cirilla, Yennefer of Vengerberg, and even Gaunter O'Dimm. They fill the roles of various Unit types and some have special abilities to further improve other cards on the battlefield. They do not care which faction they are used by, and are sometimes added so a deck without a particular ability can utilize one held by a neutral card.

For example, a Gwent player is creating a Monster deck, but has no medic (as all Monster faction cards don't have this ability). However, Yennefer of Vengerberg does have a Medic ability, so she is added to the deck.

> THE BALLAD OF HEROES
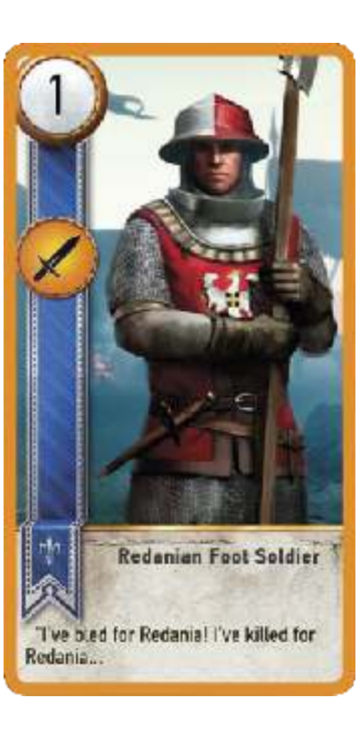
>
> The Ballad of Heroes DLC adds new card art to some of these Neutral Cards.

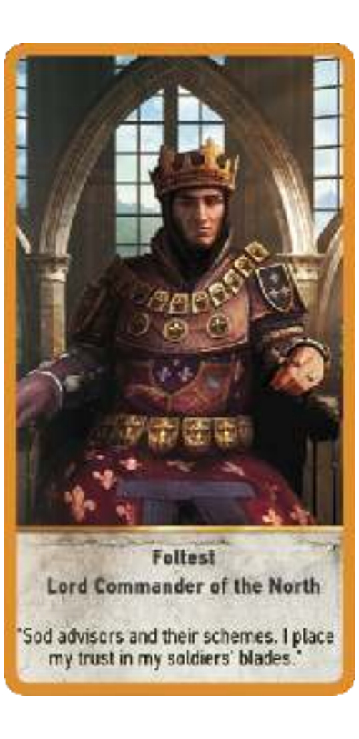
UNIT CARDS



1
Redanian Foot Soldier
"I've bled for Redania! I've killed for Redania..."

Unit Cards constitute your primary means of earning strength points in a Gwent game. There are three types of Unit Cards to place on the combat rows of your battlefield: Close Combat (shown), Ranged, and Siege. Some of these cards possess special abilities that enhance the Strength of other cards on the battlefield, and can allow for dramatic reversals in the middle of a bout. Just what all these abilities are, and how to use them, is explained later into this chapter.

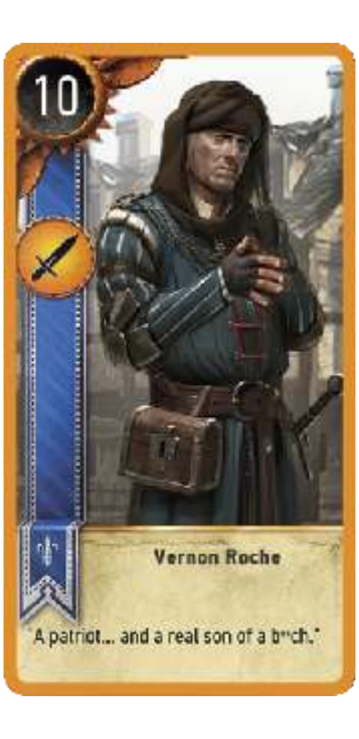
LEADER CARDS



Foltest
Lord Commander of the North
"Sod advisors and their schemes. I place my trust in my soldiers' blades."

Each of the five deck types in Gwent has a Leader Card (selected before a bout), the commander of the forces represented by that deck. These special cards have abilities that can be invoked during a player's turn, once per match. Used correctly, a Leader Card can cause dramatic comebacks, so it is important to understand what your Leader Card can do and then use that ability accordingly. There are a variety of Leader Cards for each Faction; all aspects of the Leader or Leaders in question. These variants (that are separate cards collected throughout your adventure) can be earned, found, or purchased, and each has a unique special ability. Consult the in-depth section next for more pertinent information on Leader Cards.

HERO CARDS



10
Vernon Roche
"A patriot... and a real son of a bch."

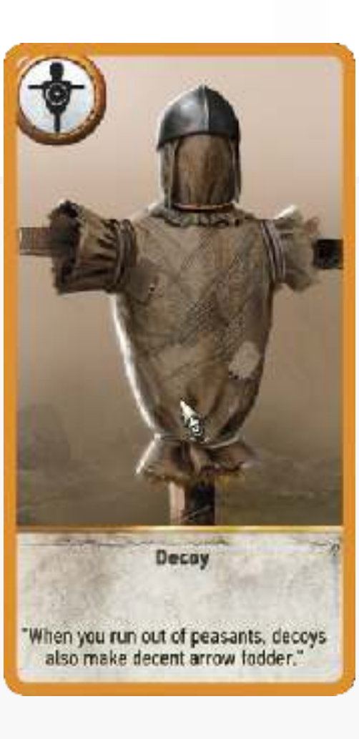
Heroes are unique to each deck. These special individuals are related to the factions represented by the five Gwent deck types. Heroes are immune to abilities, which makes them very useful in situations where the rest of your card draw is being stymied in some way by Special or Weather cards. In general, Hero Cards are far more powerful than standard unit cards. However, they have a drawback; any abilities your other cards may have which could be deemed positive, such as the Medic's ability to bring a discard card back to battle, do not work on Heroes.

SPECIAL CARDS



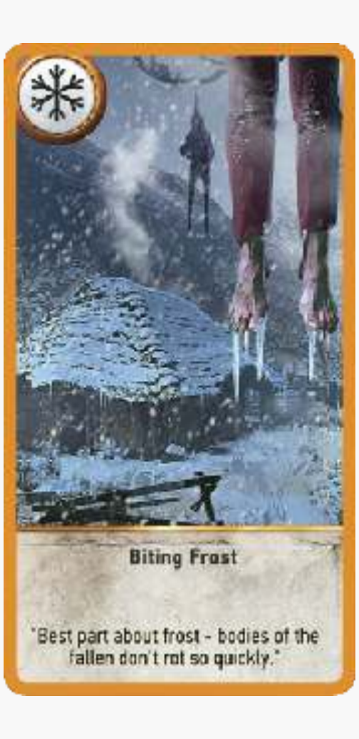
Decoy
"When you run out of peasants, decoys also make decent arrow fodder."

Special Cards are different. They offer no strength point amount. They offer a single, specific advantage when played, and are designed to be utilized when the abilities of your unit cards. There are four non-Weather special cards to learn to use:

- Decoy: These swap with a card on your battlefield, returning it to your hand, enabling you to retrieve a card you don't wish to utilize, but wish to keep.
- Commander's Horn: This doubles the strength of all unit cards in a row. They are placed in the "horn section", on the left side of the battlefield. Only one Horn can be placed in a row, so a maximum of three Horns can be used (one in each of your three rows). The fancy fop Dandelion and the Skellige bard Draig Bon-Dhu also have this ability.
- Scorch: This slays the strongest card(s) on the battlefield, whether it is your card or your opponent's card. Careful strategy is needed here as Scorch seeks out the highest non-Hero card value, and torches it into the discard pile and then follows it there. Three unit (or "character") cards have a variation of this Scorch ability too (Villentretenmerth, Toad, and Schirru).
- Mardroeme: This triggers transformation of all Young Berserker, and Berserker Cards on the same row; changing into ravenous Vildkaarls with a much higher strength value. As Berserker cards are specific to the Skellige Clans deck, the Mardroeme only becomes useful when utilized with this faction. The Skelliger Druid Ermion also has this ability.

Remember that Hero cards are not affected by Decoy, Commander's Horn, Scorch, or Mardroeme cards.

WEATHER CARDS



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost - bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

Weather cards are a subset of Special cards. Each deck type has access to Weather cards, which give you additional ways to respond to plays made by an opponent. Four inclement Weather Cards can cripple the strength points of all cards in a given row or rows on the battlefield, reducing all the strength in both your and your opponent's row to 1 (excluding Hero cards). Playing them requires some forethought, as this can wildly affect the Strength totals for both sides. There's also a fifth Weather Card, Clear Weather, that clears all other Weather Cards in play. This can completely negate a stratagem relying on Weather cards.

- Biting Frost affects Close Combat cards.
- Impenetrable Fog affects Ranged cards.
- Torrential Rain affects Siege cards.
- Skellige Storm affects Ranged and Siege cards.

All Weather cards should be played with care, as they can ruin your own strategy, as well as your opponent's! Remember that just as you can play a Weather-clearing card, so too can your opponent.

BECOMING A TRUE GWENTLEMAN: GENERAL GWENT TIPS

Before this chapter expands on the tactics of a Gwent game to mind-bending proportions, it is worth learning a few general tips to aid you in your initial competitions:

- Play Cautiously: You draw only 10 cards from your customized deck at the start of a match. Outside of any special abilities that allow you to draw more cards from the deck, that's it! Don't blow all of your best cards too early in a match; you must win two rounds with those 10 cards!
- Pass if you must, and pass wisely: You can choose to pass a turn for any number of reasons. If your opponent's cards feel too overwhelming for that round, if you feel that they might be over extending their cards and playing too strong in an early round, if you're confident they cannot counter your hand, etc. Just remember that passing a turn is not automatically forfeiting a match! It is just as much a part of your strategy as playing a card at the right time. Again, remember that you have only 10 cards to work with across potentially three rounds of Gwent, but so does your opponent!
- Weather Cards are a double-edged sword: Weather Cards can dampen the effects of cards for both players. Knowing this, if you intend to use a Weather Card, wait until it looks like your opponent is favoring a row that your Weather can affect, then try to strengthen combat rows that aren't going to suffer the Weather effect.
- Acquire new Gwent cards at your earliest convenience: The deck you begin with might be capable of beating your earliest competition, but if you want to defeat all comers, including the special opponents holding onto the rarest cards in the world, you must form a much better deck. You can buy new cards as early as the Inn at White Orchard during the prologue, where you first learn how to play Gwent.
- Integrate powerful new cards into your deck as soon as you get them: Decks do not make themselves. You need to add the cards to your deck for them to be of any use.
- Minimize your deck size: The more cards you have in a deck, the less chance you have of drawing the specific ones you want. Craft your decks to be as lean as possible, ensuring a good spread of Unit, Special, Neutral, and Hero Cards to cover your bases. It's just as important to cull weaker cards or those that don't fit the strategy to which you're tailoring the deck.
- Challenge Gwent players met during quests: Some quests involve larger events where Geralt may encounter Gwent players while he takes on other important tasks. If you have an interest in collecting all the cards, challenge them as soon as possible. You may not get another chance, and this can cost you some rare and powerful cards! This guide has identified quests where Geralt encounters Gwent opponents in the Quest section of this guide.

> GWENT CARDS: COLLECT 'EM ALL!
>
> With over 250 Gwent cards out there to find, gathering all these cards can become overwhelming, so remember the following:
>
> You can win (random) cards by beating merchants, crafters, traders, and innkeepers you meet. All are stationary and linked to a settlement. You only receive one card from them when you beat them for the first time; if you want a second (random) card, you must find another player.
>
> You can win unique cards by playing different individuals as part of Gwent-related quests, or during specific events and on-Gwent related quests. Watch out! It's possible to miss out on some of these cards entirely, so be sure to play any important tournament players or acquaintances you encounter over the course of your adventure.
>
> You're able to purchase Gwent cards from vendors. These are usually in taverns or inns throughout the realm. Various curio merchants in Novigrad may also offer a selection of cards; usually between four and five.
>
> Need to know where all these potential players are? Then look for the Gwent Player icon in the Atlas, and consult the Gwentfolk of the Northern Realms section in this guide's Appendix.
>
> Need to know where every single Gwent card is located, including those from Hearts of Stone and Blood and Wine? Then consult the Gwent Cards section in this guide's Appendix.

> BARNABAS-BASIL: YOU CAN'T 'FOULT' HIS GWENT PLAY!
>
> Need a player who isn't going to sap your funds, who you can practice Gwent against for free? Then visit the Corvo Bianco Vineyard in Toussaint. As part of Blood and Wine Secondary Quest: No Place Like Home, your majordomo Barnabas-Basil Foulty, offers to play Gwent with you:
>
> Should you challenge him, you can request he play as any of the five factions (or "surprise" you and play as a random faction), and then request he uses a strong, middle, or weak deck depending on the challenge you require. This is an excellent way to train for the Gwent tournaments both in Toussaint, and across the Northern Realms!

Deck Building and Factions: Advanced Tactics

This Gwent masterclass concludes by revealing a general location of where each Faction's cards are spread out, so you know how far through the adventure you're likely to need to get to before you gather all of a Faction's cards. This is followed by some deck-building strategies (both generally and for each Faction). Finally, a sample Gwent bout is undertaken, with the overriding tactics you should attempt.

A GWENTLEMAN NEVER INSISTS ON STRATEGEMS

Remember that you may not agree with the optimal tactics present in these sections. If you have discovered other strategies that work well for you, feel free to use them. However, the tactics employed here usually give you an advantage over any opponent you might meet (and obviously, a greater advantage if your collection of Gwent cards is more complete.

EXPANSION CARDS	NUMBER (2)

As you can see, the vast majority of Monster cards are found by randomly beating Gwent players, or challenging specific players across Skellige. This means you won't be able to amass a very strong Monster deck until well into your adventure. Expect to perfect your Monster deck (collecting and strategies) after NIlfgaardian and Northern Realms decks, unless you really focus on finding these cards ahead of others.

MONSTER DECK STRATEGIES

- The Monster deck focuses mainly on overwhelming an opponent using Close Combat troops. Ensure victory by using the Eredin: Commander of the Red Riders ability, which acts like a Commander's Horn for your Close Combat units. It's another good option as it is always available, and doesn't add to your deck "bloat".
- Eredin: Destroyer of Worlds (discard two cards, and draw one card of your choice from your deck) may seem counter-intuitive to those planning to out-draw their opponents. But if you require a specific card to win a late round (such as a Clear Weather, Muster unit, or Hero), it can win a bout!
- A better bet is usually Eredin: Bringer of Death, which acts in the same way as a Medic (drawing a card from your discard pile); helpful because Monster decks are devoid of Medics. Augment that by adding Yennefer of Vengerberg (a seven-point Hero Medic).
- Your overarching tactics is to tactically play Muster groups, beginning with the least-threatening, and stopping your foe from Scorching higher-value Muster groups (such as the Crones). Use your Vampires and Arachas Muster groups as one of their group has a higher strength-point, and can take the brunt of a Scorch while leaving the rest of the units intact. If you haven't collected all the Muster cards in a group, and all Muster groups in general, Monster decks are far less effective. Remember to add yet another Muster group with Gaunter O'Dimm's group (Neutral).
- Remember you have a few Ranged units too, including the Toad (a seven-point non-Hero unit) which has the ability to Scorch an opponent's Siege row if the total value of units present is greater than or equal to 15. It's spectacular when playing against Scoia'Tael decks! Partner Toad with Villentretenmerth (Neutral) to bring devastation to an opposing Close Combat row too.
- As you perfect your Gwent card collecting, your mid-strength cards (such as the Frightener or Ice Giant) should be removed and replaced with High-value Heroes and Neutral cards, to avoid deck "bloat".
- Use the Mysterious Elf to enable one Spy ability; otherwise your lack of Spies and Medics is a shortfall. Only use your Mysterious Elf once your Muster units are in play; you don't want to waste your Elf on gathering a duplicate Muster.

NILFGAARDIAN EMPIRE FACTION

The Black Ones, a collection of troops for most types of combat, supplemented by Medics, Spies and Tight Bond units, led by Emhyr var Emreis.

EXPANSION CARDS*	NUMBER (2)
Hearts of Stone	2
Blood and Wine	0

* Expansion Cards are included in the main total of 42This total includes one card you have an additional chance to purchase.

This deck is usually the second you end up securing all your cards for, after the Northern Realms. The majority (26) of the cards can be purchased at various traders, and only a few (nine) are randomly found. Of the rest, seven are secured during quests, and one is with you in your base deck (the first Leader card). If you have the funds, gather most of this deck quickly, and strengthen your deck without too much hope for a random outcome.

NILFGAARDIAN EMPIRE DECK STRATEGIES

- The Nilfgaard's faction perk isn't especially helpful, but if you see an opportunity for a draw (without expending more cards), take it.
- Though not available until you complete Secondary Quest: High Stakes, the Emhyr var Emreis: The Relentless Leader card (draw a card from your opponent's discard pile) is a critically-helpful card; allowing you to use a powerful non-Hero from your opponent's pile, or a Spy card you may have played earlier.
- A good complement of Spy cards (three, plus the Neutral Mysterious Elf); additional help (though giving your opponent more strength points than the Northern Realms Spies) to out-draw your opponent.
- Offers three Medics that can be placed in two different rows; vital to use throughout your Gwent gaming with this deck when gathering previously-discarded non-Hero cards. Be sure to complement them with Decoy cards so you can reuse Medics as often as you need to.
- A focus on both the Close Combat and Ranged row (but with a few Siege row cards to help spread out your forces, minimizing the effects of Weather Cards).
- The largest number of ten-point non-Heroes (two Black Infantry Archers and the Heavy Zerrikanian Fire Scorpion) of any Faction; augment these with Commander's Horn, Morale Boost, and Medic them back into play. Or use Decoys on these, or other high-value non-Heroes.
- Your Tight Bond cards (Young Emissary, Impera Brigade Guards, and Nausicaa Cavalry Riders) are invaluable during early Gwent bouts, and are less likely to be Scorched due to their low individual strength. But remove them as you gain higher-value units (especially Heroes and Neutral Heroes) so you don't "bloat" your deck.
- Always play Villentretenmerth; even over Special Scorch cards, to obliterate the highest non-Hero from your enemy's Close Combat row.

NORTHERN REALMS FACTION

A mixture of units from all three rows (with a slight favoring of close combat and siege troops), along with many Tight Bond cards, a few Spies and Morale Boosts, and a single Medic, led by King Foltest.

This total includes one card you have an additional chance to purchase.

This is likely to be the deck you utilize for your first few dozen Gwent bouts, simply because you start your adventure with the majority of this deck (22 cards). Of the rest, 13 can be had through purchasing at vendors across the lands, one is secured by beating the Nilfgaardian Nobleman in Vizima, only five are found during quests, and only two cards are randomly rewarded. This makes the Northern Realms deck easy to collect, learn, and augment.

NORTHERN REALMS DECK STRATEGIES

- The Faction Perk (draw a card from your deck whenever you win a round) allows you to outdraw your opponent more easily. Combine this with Spies and Medics to keep your card hand full until you're ready to unleash hell!
- Visit the Inn at White Orchard and purchase the Foltest: Lord Commander of the North Leader card. The ability this gives you (to clear all Weather effects) enables you to reduce Clear Weather cards in your deck, and ignore any Weather effects in later rounds that your opponent attempts.
- A good complement of Spy cards (three, plus the Neutral Mysterious Elf) offer additional help to out-draw your opponent.
- A focus on both the Close Combat and Siege row. The latter is especially useful, as this row isn't utilized as often in other factions. It forces an opponent to carry a larger variety of Weather cards, which lessens their chances of drawing a high-point card.
- Though you only have one Medic (Dun Banner Medic), she is worth her weight in gold! Use her in the second and third rounds to resurrect an important non-Hero (like Villentretenmerth). Add Yennefer of Vengerberg for her Medic powers too.
- Tight Bond cards offer excellent points potential, if you can dissuade a foe from Scorching them. The two Tight Bond Catapults offer exceptional strength from just two cards (32).
- Employ all your Hero cards, plus any you've collected from your Neutral deck, to provide some hard-hitting strength unaffected by Scorch and Weather.
- Your Poor F--king Infantry cards are initially seen as pathetic, until you realize you can place them to coax a foe into action, or use up this Infantry to eke out a victory (usually after an opponent passes).

SCOIA'TAEL FACTION

Led by the charismatic Francesca Findabair, this collection of non-humans uses the first two rows of combat almost exclusively, with many Agile cards to add flexibility, and Muster groups plus a quartet of Medics to round out this deck.

EXPANSION CARDS*	NUMBER (11)
Hearts of Stone	11**
Blood and Wine	0

*Expansion Cards are included in the main total of 43

This total includes nine cards you have an additional chance to purchase.

Only the first Leader card is found in your deck. The rest can be purchased (18), won randomly (15), or won from the Elven Merchant near Carsten (1). Add to this deck during quests by securing eight more cards, though four of them are during Secondary quests; ensure you save your progress before each bout! You're likely to use this deck later in your adventure.

SCOIA'TAEL DECK STRATEGIES

- The Faction Perk allows you to automatically choose who goes first. As you usually want your opponent to go first (so you can see what they are planning and counter them), always choose to go second.
- Scoia'Tael units have the largest number of troops that are Agile and can be placed in either Close Combat or Ranged rows. Use this to circumvent Weather cards, and in conjunction with the Francesca Findabair: Hope of the Sen Seidhe (Leader ability) that can shift Agile units to your most optimal row; a tactic your foe won't likely be expecting!
- Francesca Findabair: Daisy of the Valley allows you to draw an extra card at the beginning of battle; an obvious advantage when trying to out-draw your opponent. Use it! Francesca Findabair: The Beautiful acts like a Commander's Horn for your Ranged units; another good option (as it is always available, and doesn't add to your deck "bloat").
- Of the four Factions, the Scoia'Tael have the most impressive Ranged row troops, so focus on this and, to a slightly lesser extent, your Close Combat row.
- With only one Siege row card, don't expect to place a card at the back of your battlefield. But remember that Schirru (an eight-point non-Hero Siege unit) has the ability to Scorch an opponent's Siege row; spectacular when playing against Northern Realms and Nilfgaard decks! Add Villentretenmerth (which does the same Scorching to your foe's Close Combat row), and Francesca Findabair: Queen of Dol Blathanna (Leader ability; Scorches your foe's Close Combat row as well), and you have three enemy-Scorching possibilities per game!
- Augment your lack of Spies with the Mysterious Hero (Neutral). Play all your Medics (combining them with Decoys so you can use them again and again), and ensure your Muster forces (lower strength to begin with, and Havekar Smuggler units at later stages) are fully ready to fight; the three Smugglers can add 15 points to your Close Combat row in one placement!
- All your Medics aren't combat-ready (they have a zero strength), but if you add a Morale Boost to the Ranged row (with Milva, for example), they add three points; don't forget this benefit!
- You have a 10-point non-Hero named Isengrim Faoiltiarna. Use this mighty troop to give your Ranged units a Morale Boost, then bring Isengrim back using a Medic time and time again.

SKELLIGE CLANS FACTION

Offering one of two legendary Skelligers to lead the assembled clansfolk, the Skellige Clans deck favors ill winds and weather, unique Berserker troops, a couple of powerful characters, and a few unique abilities to overcome and overwhelm, as well as Tight Bond and Muster groups.

GENERAL LOCATIONS OF SKELLIGE CLANS DECK CARDS

EXPANSION CARDS	NUMBER (37)
Hearts of Stone	0
Blood and Wine	37

EXPANSION CARDS	NUMBER (2)
Geralt of Rivia (You: Blood and Wire Adventure)	23
Toussaint	14

Expansion Cards are included in the main total of 37. Remember the Weather Cards are counted as Neutral, though they are specifically used by this deck faction.

You have a base deck of this faction when you begin Blood and Wine Gwent Quest: To Everything - Turn, Turn, Tournament!. Find the remaining cards by challenging 19 different merchant types across this realm. This is likely to be the last deck you perfect. Remember the Gwent players of Toussaint use any of the five decks; not just this one!

SKELLIGE CLANS DECK STRATEGIES

- You only have a choice of two Leaders, so build your deck tactics around either King Bran (employ additional Weather Cards including Skellige Storm) or Crach an Craite (a more aggressive plan going for a two-round win; using up high-value cards as early as possible so you can gather them back and reuse them in the second round).
- Remember your Faction ability allows you to return two random discarded cards to your hand at the start of round three only. Employ this with Crach an Craite's ability if you wish (though your aggressive style of play should mean you never reach the third round as you're going for round wins as early as possible).
- With your Faction ability, it's possible to use two Heroes up to three times in a game: once each in the first round and once each again in the second round, using Crach an Craite's ability. You can use them once again in the third round, if they were randomly picked from your discard pile. For this reason, keep your discard pile small (using Medics) to maximize your chances of gathering high-value discarded cards.
- Olaf is a mighty unit, offering Morale Boost, the Agile ability, and a massive points. He's also Scorch-bait, so employ him tactically and Medic him back into play.
- Cerys is a godsend as she summons the Clan Drummond Shieldmaidens who instantly use their Tight Bond ability to grant you 46 Close Combat points. Have her in your hand at the start of a match rather than a Shieldmaiden, if you can. Then use Crach an Craite's Leader ability and use her again!
- Use your Berserkers not only to eke out a win (in the case of the Young Berserkers individually, or in groups), but also as Scorch-bait. Stack your deck with Mardroemes (and Ermion) to ensure there's a high chance of a Berserker transformation.
- You only have three active Heroes; your fourth is Hemdall, who only appears once the Kambi card is played and discarded. So use your Kambi as soon as you can, and prepare for Hemdall to arrive in the second round, as a Close Combat killing machine.
- Light Longship units have Muster, so you only need one in your hand.
- War Longships have Tight Bond, and Draig Bon-Dhu has Commander's Horn; combine them both to maximize your Siege row (along with Gaunter O'Dimm).
- Use Birna Bran (and Yennefer) to bring back Olaf (powerful card), the Clan Dimun Pirate (Scorch), or one of the Light Longship (Muster) units.
- The Clan Dimun Pirate and Villentretenmerth both have Scorch and are great to employ one after another for constant devastating demoralization!

Neutral cards are all over the place! Seven of them are picked up during quests (all but one are Gwent-specific). Two are won randomly (including Villentretenmerth unfortunately, so keep playing merchants until you secure this much sought-after card!). Four are purchased (most of the Gaunter O'Dimm units), one is won from Aldert Greet during the Tutorial back in White Orchard Tavern (Zoltan Chivay is the card), or it can be found at Hanged Man's Tree in Velen if you miss Aldert, and finally, one card is loose (the Cow). Use these to augment your faction decks, and fill in gaps with higher-point cards or those with abilities you lack.

Most Weather cards (12) are either found in your deck to start with (seven) or won randomly (five). It isn't usually a huge benefit to have three of each card type (especially Torrential Rain; who plays this three times in a match?), so don't worry too much about finding these. The three Skellige Storm cards are either looted (2) or won (1) from a character during your Blood and Wine adventuring in Toussaint.

Most Special cards (10) are purchased from traders; find them at the earliest point you can, as most are useful no matter what tactical plans you're trying. The three Mardroeme cards are gathered during your Blood and Wine adventure; one you start with, and two are won from characters in Toussaint.

GWENT: BUILDING A BETTER DECK

Your first deck-building plans occur with the Northern Realms deck. It is advisable to perfect your Gwent deck build with this Faction first, before turning to the Nilfgaard, and finally to the Monsters and Scoia'Tael. Use the Skellige Clans deck as soon as you wish, when playing the Blood and Wine Expansion.

The following advice applies to all five factions:

As you build up the quality of cards in your deck, refrain from adding Weather cards (or at the very least, add a single Biting Frost); you want a slim deck (so your best cards are drawn more often), and ability cards (and Decoys) are usually a lot more helpful, especially in early matches.

Decoys should be placed into a deck as often as possible. Even if you use one to remove a card you don't really need, this card keeps your card count up. Utilize Decoys to return a high-value card back into your hand (after it is affected by Weather, for example).

The Commander's Horn is usually played at the end of a round (or the opponent focuses on this bonus and usually attempts to thwart this card with Weather). It is another card to "burn." But a better plan is to place it on a row the opponent isn't expecting. Or use on an empty row to make your foe think you'll be amassing cards there, and watch your foe's tactics before countering them. But in the grand scheme of things, the Horn isn't used as often as you'd think. So keep it (or multiples of this card) away from your deck. Or use Dandelion.

During your initial Gwent bouts, always pick the units with abilities over your "normal" cards. Spies, Medics, Tight Bond, and Muster cards are all favored over a lower-level cards like Sabrina Glevissig (Northern Realms four-point ranged non-Hero). This is because ability cards give you more flexibility, plus Spies and Medics add to your card hand total; the key to winning.

At low to mid-level Gwent games (when you're still collecting, but don't have all the cards of a Faction), use troops with five or six strength points or higher. As you receive more 7 or 10 point cards (whether they are Heroes, non-Heroes, or Neutral cards), replace your lower-value non-ability cards with the higher-point cards.

Your aim is to create a Faction deck with the smallest number of high-value cards. Use only the highest-point cards available to you, and ditch the rest, unless they have an ability you use constantly.

You can place between zero and ten Special cards in your deck. Don't feel obliged to utilize Special cards if you never find yourself using them (though Decoys offer an important deck-maintaining strategy). At a maximum, keep Decoys, one Commander's Horn (unless you have a number of Heroes which aren't affected by the Horn), one Scorch, and one Clear Weather until you develop your own strategies.

If you see three Torrential Rain decks in your deck as you're about to face off in a match with a Scoia'Tael player, you're doing something very wrong. If you don't know why this is wrong, please re-read this chapter!

Beware of deck "bloat"; keep your card deck lean and mean (if your total deck size gets over 26, you may start losing because you aren't drawing your better cards). Your aim is to bring a 22-24 card Gwent deck to a bout with a total strength count of between 150-165+ points.

If you have a deck that permits this, spread your troops out over all three rows to minimize the effectiveness of Weather cards your opponent plays.

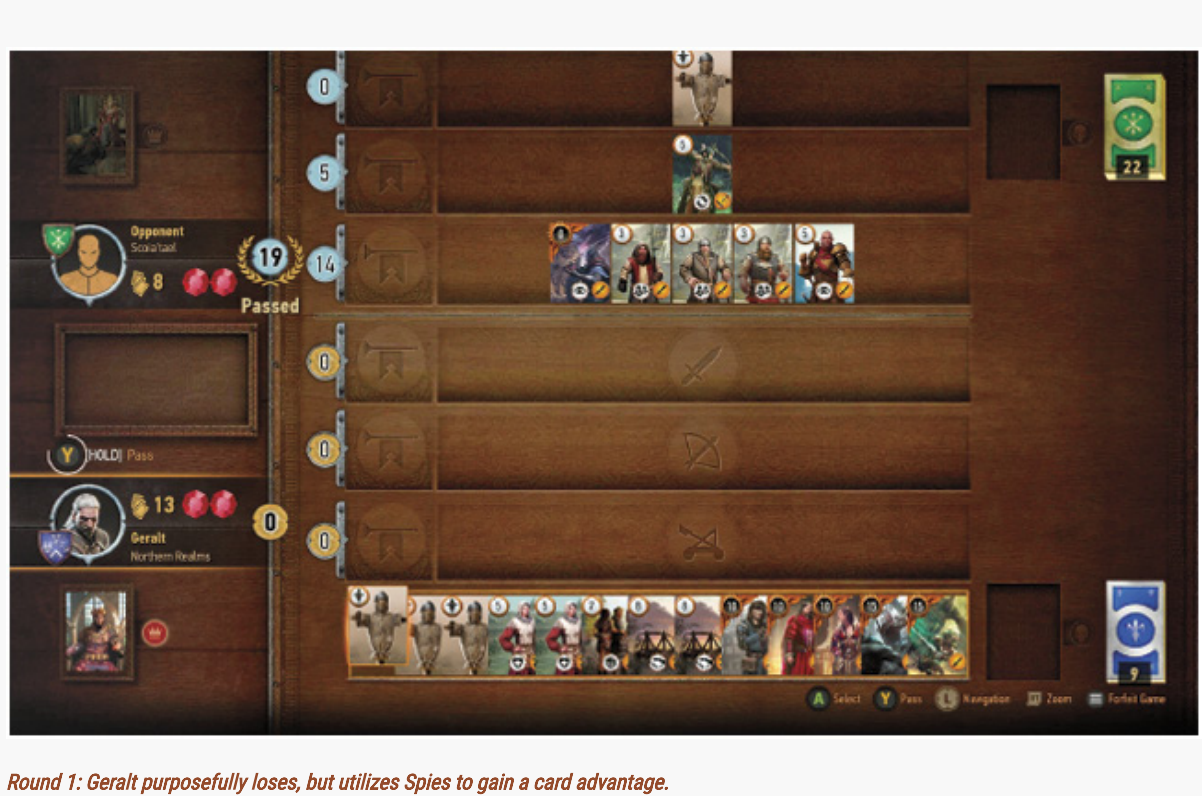
Remember your opponent doesn't change decks between games, so if you lose, retry the bout with a tweaked deck (perhaps with a different Leader ability) more suitable to take them down.

Use Villentretenmerth (Neutral), Toad (Monster), Schirru (Scoia'Tael), and Clan Dimun Pirate (Skellige Clans) wherever possible: A Scorch is devastating.

GWENT: A SAMPLE CARD GAME

ROUND 1 TACTICS

Before the round starts, swap up to two of your least-impressive, weakest, and usually lowest-point cards (with the exception of Spies) to maximize the potential of your hand in the game to come. If you have too many duplicates of Special cards or other ability cards you don't use, think about removing them from your deck before your next match. Then play the first round with one of the following two tactics in mind:



Round 1: Geralt purposefully loses, but utilizes Spies to gain a card advantage.

Play To Win:

Depending on your opponent's actions (they may pass early, or not take advantage of their position), you can try to win the round. A massive combat presence is usually not advisable, as you need your best forces for the second or third round. But you can try to win in two rounds if you wish. The trick is to win without expending all your best cards. So place lower-value cards on the board. A one-point advantage at the end of this round is still a win!

Play To Lose (But With A Card Advantage):

Usually after you see what your opponent is doing, you should attempt to maintain a card advantage in your available deck (to the right of your portrait, on the left side of the battlefield). Remember that the remaining cards in the deck (bottom right corner of the battlefield) aren't normally used; you only have the cards in your hand! So you want to keep the majority of the best cards for the rounds you are assured victory in. This means conserving cards. Why? Because a player with more cards left to play has more options. Use the following tactics:

Add to your deck with a Spy (and to a much lesser extent, a Medic). This keeps your remaining cards from being depleted. If your foe uses Spies, Decoy them into your hand and use them against your foe. No matter what your plans, use up all your Spies in this round (to gain the card advantage).

"Burn" your less important cards, judging whether their abilities are worth ignoring. For example, you may have a Poor F--king Infantry card, and take a turn using it instead of wasting a much higher card. The Infantry has a Tight Bond ability, but it's sometimes worth ignoring that ability in order to finish a round with a stronger set of cards to play later.

Bring some inclement Weather onto the battlefield. Though this can be seen as wasteful, it is better than dropping a large-point card you wish to keep until a future round. Weather cards also usually push an opponent into their card reserves (to counter with Clear Weather, commit further units, or pass).

Remember you can always pass, which leaves your strength total as-is, and allows the opponent to keep playing. Do this when you've set up a good and devastating series of cards you want to place in the next round. Passing is usually done early, as you can't lose more than one round!

Finish a round without committing your more potent cards into the battlefield. A massive first-round victory isn't tactically advantageous (as you have fewer options for future rounds); save your best troops for rounds two or three. On the other hand, Medic heavy decks can push harder in the first round.

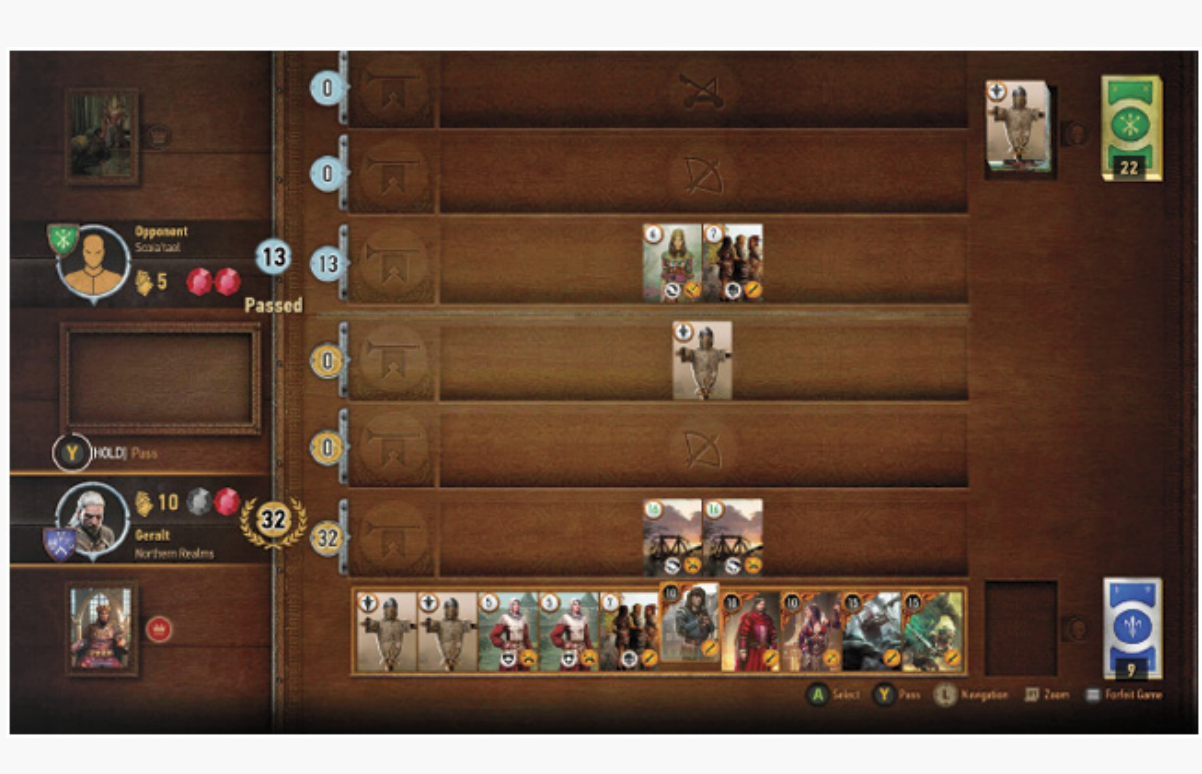
Delay Your Play: Fear Of Commitment

You should exercise caution when committing a card to the battlefield. A Hero can never be brought back into your hand. A non-Hero can only be brought back into your hand by using up a Decoy, and a Medic (after discarding). But keeping a group of high-value cards in your hand as long as possible is much more advantageous. Why? Because:

- It forces your opponent to start playing their cards, so you can react to their tactics.
- It forces your opponent to play Weather and Scorch cards early, so you can play cards that might have succumbed to these Special cards if you played them too early.
- It enables you to watch for openings in the battlefield. Has your foe played a Biting Frost? Then refrain from playing a Clear Weather in case your opponent has a second Weather card, or the round tactics change and you don't need to use it. Then employ Clear Weather at the last possible moment.
- It sometimes causes your opponent to think you are weak, and pass. Then you can eke out a win with the lowest possible cards that guarantee a win.

ROUND 2 TACTICS

You should have ended the first round by eking out a win (and maintaining either an equal number, or slight card advantage compared to your opponent), or a loss but with at least two or three additional cards compared to your opponent. The tactics for this round are different depending on how the first round went:



Round 2: With this round to win, Geralt starts to use Decoys and Medics, winning decisively, but keeping most of his best units for the final round.

Round 1 Won? Let Battle Commence!

If you won the first round, you're usually more evenly matched with your opponent, making this round a little tougher. At this point, you can:

Immediately pass: If you wish to play a purely strategic game, you can pass immediately (or after expending one or two low-point cards in the hope your opponent drops some higher-point cards). If your opponent uses a card (or two) to claim victory, all the better; this plan gives you the advantage in the third round; a similar tactic to "losing" in Round 1. This plan is more advantageous if you're placing cards first in this round, as your foe will go first in the final round; which allows you to see what your opponent is planning, and counter it.

Make this the Final Round: If you reckon your deck is strong enough, and your foe's deck is weak enough to claim victory after two rounds, then go for it! Remember your opponent is likely to have more high-point cards than in the final round, especially if you didn't "sucker" your foe into dropping their best troops earlier. Use the Final Round tactics from this point.

Coax more cards out: Though you'll probably need to commit some of your higher-quality cards, you can "pretend" that you've fully committed to winning this round, watch your opponent play some of his or her best troops, and then wave the white flag and pass (after Decoying any high-point cards, of course!). As long as the units your foe is committing are more powerful than yours, you put yourself in a good position to win the last round. A worthy sacrifice to your own deck!

Round 1 Lost? Let Carnage Commence!

If you lost the first round, you should have a significant card advantage over your opponent, in terms of quality (high-value units) and quantity (you should be able to out-draw your opponent by at least 2-3 cards). You must win, employing Final Round tactics, but with the knowledge that you should be keeping a number of high-value cards in reserve for the final round. Medics and Decoys come into play here (use the tactics described earlier in this chapter). Commit one or two of your "group" ability cards (Muster or Tight Bond groups). Drop in a powerful non-Hero, and Decoy it back. If your opponent passes (and never pass first!), Decoy cards you need for the final round, swapping them for lower-point cards if you can still maintain a victory.

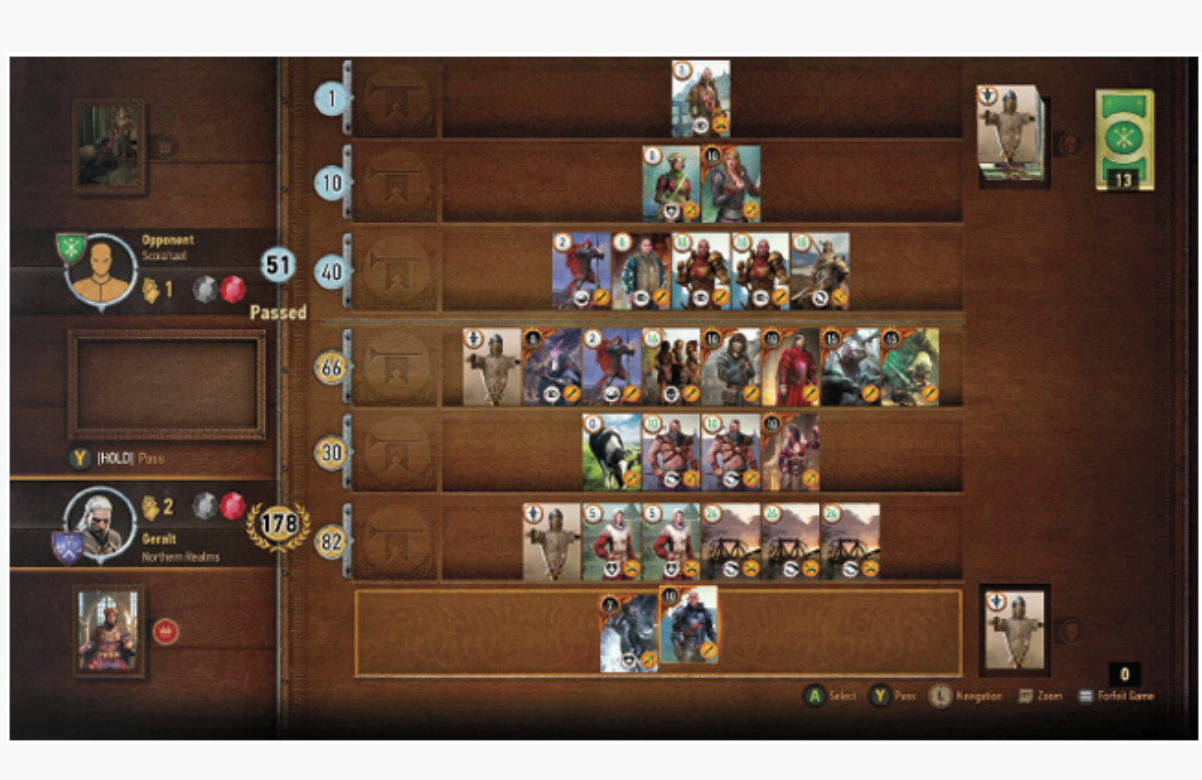
You should be keeping your best cards for the last round, but during critical moments in this round, feel free to use up some of your strength. Place your Heroes first (as they add a good amount of value without being Scorched or crippled by Weather). Then see what your opponent does before committing high-value non-Hero units.

Cards that give you additional bonuses, such as Morale Boost, Olgierd von Everec, Commander's Horn, and Dandelion, are most useful during this round to ensure victory. Then use Medics to resurrect Olgierd and Dandelion for use in the final round.

Use Scorch, but judge the board and place it when it is at its most destructive; taking out multiple five-point targets is better than one eight-point target. But play it before your own non-Heroes enter the battlefield, or you'll only end up Scorching yourself! Use Villentretenmerth in this round too, with a Medic to return him for the final round.

ROUND 3 (FINAL ROUND) TACTICS

If the Gwent bout reaches this point, there's no need to worry about committing Hero troops into the fray—give your foe everything you've got! You should have a small card advantage, which helps you counter any plans your foe might have for winning. The trick here is when to place all your cards. As your foe doesn't know what you have, and your deck should be stacked with your best quality troops, only the order you play your cards in is important: Place them with enemy Weather and Scorch cards in mind.



Round 3: Geralt baits out his opponent's Scorch, then uses his own Scorch card, along with Heroes and Clear Weather to secure victory!

The Baiting Game To The Bitter End

Nothing can cramp your style like a foe who decimates your key non-Hero troops with a well-timed Scorch or Weather card.

- Firstly, ensure you have a Clear Weather card to hand (either via a card or a Leader ability, if possible). Then your enemy's Weather cards don't matter at all. After only concerning yourself with Scorch, place everything you've got (even after Weather cards are played by yourself or your foe). At the very end of the round, check the totals. If you still need points, play the Clear Weather.
- Secondly, ensure that your enemy's Scorch attacks are minimized, by employing the multitude of Scorch tactics listed in that section of this chapter. But generally, try placing a single high-value non-Hero so the opponent plays Scorch, then bring it back (if you need it) using a Medic. Afterwards, commit your higher-point group cards (Tight Bond units, for example).

Decoy cards should already have been used in earlier rounds, but if you still have any, use them to retrieve a Medic so you can play it again (and to a lesser extent, an enemy Spy to play yourself and gain a card).

AFTER THE BOUT

Battle to the bitter end, hopefully claim victory, and strengthen your deck by adjusting it after every Gwent game. Remove cards you only use rarely. Look to find complete "sets" of cards (such as a group of Muster or Tight Bond cards of the same name) on your travels. Start to use new decks as you receive enough cards of that Faction, bolstering them with Neutral cards and become the finest Gwent player in the land!

The Gwentlefolk Of The Northern Realms

Gwent Vendors And Players: Overview

As you embark on your adventure, and in particular, Gwent Quest: Collect 'em All, it is well worth pinpointing every single card you can obtain in a detailed manner, from every single vendor and player (all 159 of them!) This section details where to find the following:

GWENT VENDORS

Gwent cards you purchase from Traders are listed. Look for traders (who are marked throughout the Atlas and in this section) with the icon by their name. These traders are responsible for selling (or giving) you 122 of the total number of Gwent cards (excluding the Innkeeps in Toussaint selling you random cards, which cannot be tracked). There are 29 different Vendors to find:

Two are available in White Orchard.

Six are available in Velen (No Man's Land).

Eight are available in Novigrad (City and territories).

Five are available across the Isles of Skellige.

There is one "vendor" of sorts in the Duchy of Toussaint (Blood and Wine Expansion); Count Monnier who hands you the base Skellige Clans deck (24 cards!).

All of the seven Innkeeps throughout the Duchy of Toussaint have a supply of over 20 random cards from the four initial decks. The exact cards vary throughout your adventure, and the pool of cards you could find at these vendors is listed on the previous pages. For the purposes of this guide, these random cards do not count toward your card totals. You can carry, but not use, multiples of the same card over and above the number available in the preceding chart.

GWENT PLAYERS (SPECIFIC CARDS)

Specific Gwent cards you win by challenging (usually named) Gwent players (who are marked throughout the Atlas and in this section) with the icon by their name are also listed. There are 55 different players with specific cards to hand over:

- One is in the Royal Palace in Vizima.
- Five are available in Velen (No Man's Land), with a total of six cards to hand over.
- Ten are available within the walls of Novigrad City, with a total of 13 cards to hand over.
- Twelve are available outside Novigrad City, in the countryside and in Oxenfurt, with a total of 13 cards to hand over. Included is the "loose" card in Brunwich.
- Six are available across the Isles of Skellige, with a total of seven cards to hand over. There's also a Skelliger you need to kill for one card, too.

20 are available throughout the Duchy of Toussaint (Blood and Wine Expansion). All grant you cards from the Skellige Clans deck (though King Bran is only awarded once, and two possible players have him).

These traders are responsible for you gathering 60 of the total number of Gwent cards.

IT'S ON THE CARDS: WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

As some players may travel to different parts of the Northern Realm (for example, Lambert the Witcher could be found in Kaer Morhen), and other cards may appear during Secondary Quests, the optimal location for each player is listed.

GWENT PLAYERS (RANDOM OR NO CARDS)

Random Gwent cards you win by challenging a Gwent player (usually a vendor, and marked throughout the Atlas and in this section) with the icon by their name are also listed. There are 66 different players with a random card to hand you:

- One is in White Orchard.
- Fifteen are in Velen (No Man's Land).
- Seventeen are in Novigrad City.
- Seven are outside Novigrad City, in the countryside and in Oxenfurt.
- Twenty-six are available across the Isles of Skellige.
- Four are available throughout the duchy of Toussaint (Blood and Wine Expansion), but they don't have a (random) card to give you; play them for practice or after betting money. One of the four Toussaint players, Barnabas-Basil Foulty, is the majordomo at the winery you can own, and acts as a practice player. You can choose the exact deck faction, and strength of his hand, without having to outlay (or win) any funds. He's great for practicing against! Another three Toussaint players are found during the Gwent Tournament in Toussaint; these seven folk are only interested in either passing the time or betting for money.

With the exception of the Toussaint players, each player offers you one card only when you beat them for the first time. This means you must visit (and beat) a minimum of 52 of the 66 Gwent players (outside Toussaint) to obtain all the randomly-given cards. Also included are two "loose" cards found in a garden chest in Beauclair (Toussaint), at the end of a Secondary Quest.

GWENT VENDORS AND PLAYERS:

The remainder of this section is devoted to precisely pinpointing each Gwent trader or player across the Northern Realms.

Quest Walkthrough: Prologue

Overview

This lengthy chapter details all of the Main Quests you undertake throughout your adventure, both in your original adventure, and across both expansions (Hearts of Stone and Blood and Wine). Remember you are able to leave a Main Quest under most circumstances) at any time and complete other (optional) quests, uncover points of interest, prepare or meditate, or simply explore. The way each quest is presented is discussed here.

ORIGINAL ADVENTURE: MAIN QUESTS

Your original adventure is divided into five separate sections (three Acts with a Prologue and an Epilogue):

1: PROLOGUE (6 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 5. Secondary Quests: 1.

After a vivid dream of your past times at Kaer Morhen with a young Ciri, you begin an introductory romp through the lands of White Orchard, where a Griffin must be killed prior to a meeting with Emperor Emreis in Vizima.

2: ACT I: SEARCH FOR THE CHILD OF THE ELDER BLOOD (54 QUESTS)

ACT I: VELEN (NO MAN'S LAND) (21 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 12. Secondary Quests: 9,.

ACT I: NOVIGRAD (21 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 10. Secondary Quests: 11,.

ACT I: SKELLIGE (12 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 6. Secondary Quests: 6,.

This is a large-scale search across three immense areas, in order to find out what happened to Geralt's adopted daughter Ciri. The adventures take place in war-torn Velen (also known as No Man's Land), the sprawling city of Novigrad, and the windswept archipelago of Skellige. Quests within these areas can be completed in any order you like. For example, you can finish some (or all) of the Main Quests in Novigrad, then sail to Skellige, and then return to Velen. The way the quests are presented in this guide (Velen, then Novigrad, then Skellige) represent the optimal paths.

In addition to the mandatory Main Quests that must be completed during Act I, there are a number of optional Secondary Quests, which always involve a special character. These are included here (and presented by territory), as the choices you make during these quests (including not completing them at all) always have an influence on the later Acts of the Main Quest. You are advised to check these, and complete them.

3: ACT II: THE GREAT BATTLE (13 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 9. Secondary Quests: 4,.

This offers advice based on your previous exploits, as you muster additional forces for the forthcoming battle in Kaer Morhen with the forces of the Wild Hunt. Though there are some Secondary Quests, they all relate to bolstering your allies for the battle to come. The aftermath of the attack is also presented, too.

4: ACT III: THE FINAL AGE (16 QUESTS)

ACT III (PART 1 OF 2): TYING UP LOOSE ENDS (9 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 6. Secondary Quests: 3,.

The locating and battling of those who launched the attack on Kaer Morhen is undertaken. As the leaders of the Wild Hunt are themselves tracked and battled, it becomes clear a war in Skellige is looming.

ACT III (PART 2 OF 2): TEDD DEIREADH (7 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 6. Secondary Quests: 1,.

The final set of Main Quests are shown, as Geralt's path comes to a close, and the decisions you made throughout the adventure come back to help (or haunt) you.

5: EPILOGUES AND ENDINGS (3 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 3,.

Placed after all other quest content, as the information is extremely spoiler heavy, are the three epilogues that can occur in the aftermath of your main adventure. Instructions on accessing every possible ending are also included in this section.

HEARTS OF STONE: CRITICAL PATH QUESTS

6: CRITICAL PATH QUESTS (6 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 5. Secondary Quests: 1,.

A chance encounter with Master Mirror, and a meeting with the rapscallion Olgierd von Everec, unravel a mystery of intrigue and horror. This self-contained adventure, which takes place mainly in the Novigrad territory of Gustfields, is revealed in this section.

BLOOD AND WINE: CRITICAL PATH QUESTS

7: CRITICAL PATH QUESTS (19 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 16. Secondary Quests: 2. Contracts: 1,.

A contract from Duchess Anna Henrietta herself, and offered to you by her two most trusted Knights, sparks interest in returning to the Duchy of Toussaint. While there, a series of terrifying murders requires a deft investigation, and displays of swordplay worthy of a venerable Witcher. This takes place almost entirely in the Duchy of Toussaint.

TOTAL CRITICAL PATH QUESTS (117 QUESTS)

- Main Quests: 78. Secondary Quests: 38. Contracts: 1.

The total number of quests you can undertake as part of the Critical Path is 117.

Main Quest: Kaer Morhen

Running the Walls

OBJECTIVE:

- Join Ciri in a run along the ramparts down to the Lower Courtyard.

KAER MORHEN
Join Ciri in a race along the ramparts down to the lower courtyard.

Learn the fundamentals of movement en route to meeting with Vesemir in the lower courtyard below.

MOVEMENT FUNDAMENTALS

At the end of this run, you should know how to:

- Climb a ladder (remember you can drop from a ladder too for a quicker—but potentially more dangerous descent).
- Climb an obstacle (remember to press and hold the button, and be close to the obstacle first).
- Fall without killing yourself (if you're plummeting more than about 20 feet, expect to sustain heavy damage, and after 30 feet, expect to reload the game).
- Running and Jumping (exceptionally important when used to retreat from combat, or leaping gaps; spend some time letting Ciri win the race, and ensure you can accurately leap gaps along the route).
- Jumping and grabbing (try holding the "climb" button after a jump to automatically grab a ledge and pull yourself up. Practice this!)

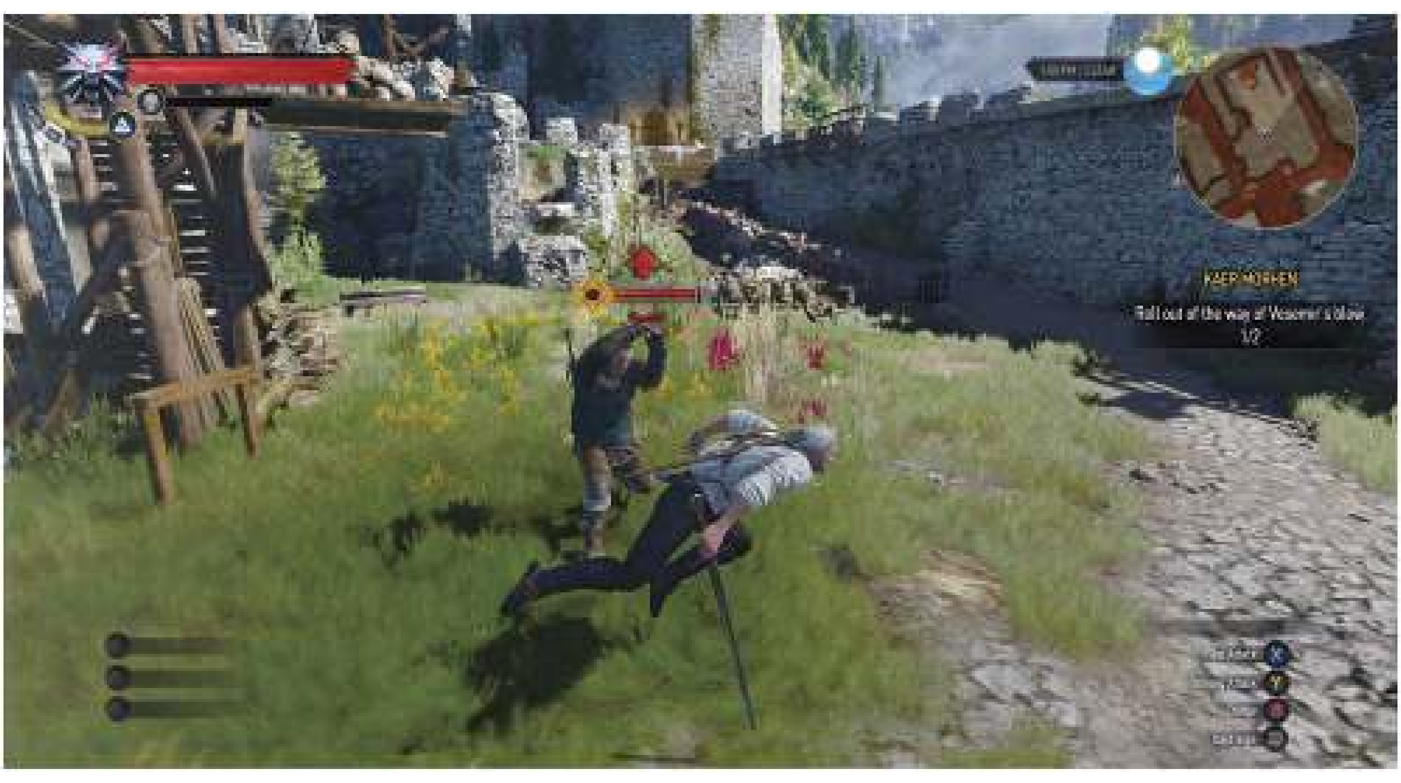
Follow the crenelations until you reach the wooden platform overlooking the lower courtyard. Speak with Ciri (who has something to say depending on whether you finished the race before or after her), then speak with Vesemir again. Answer how you wish, before choosing the following:

- Agreeing to test combat fundamentals (recommended).
- Choosing to start free training.

Main Quest: Kaer Morhen

Steel, Silver, and Signs

While Ciri practices on a dummy, you're able to test your mettle (and your metal) against Vesemir. Follow the on-screen instructions, and concentrate on learning as much as you can during this tutorial, since these fundamentals of combat are key to the unforgiving world outside the walls of this keep.



OBJECTIVES:

- Draw your sword. Aim at Vesemir and mark him as your target.
- Perform a series of fast attacks (3).
- Perform a series of strong attacks (3).
- Perform a series of dodges (3).
- Roll out of the way of Vesemir's blow (2).
- Perform a series of parries (3).
- Perform a series of counterattacks (3).

SWORDPLAY FUNDAMENTALS

At the conclusion of this duel, you should know how to:

- Draw and sheathe your steel sword (though you automatically draw your preferred weapon when enemies are near. Remember that your steel sword is for fighting human or "natural" enemies (like wolves), while your silver sword—which isn't used during these fights—sinks into the flesh of monsters.
- Execute Fast and Strong Strikes (the former hits quickly but lightly, while the latter inflicts more damage but is more easily blocked).
- Perform Dodges (these are key to avoiding incoming attacks; quickly dodge as soon as you see an enemy's attack start, and you avoid it, and follow it up with violent retribution!).
- Parry and Counterattack (also known as blocking and riposte; a slightly more advanced method of remaining locked in combat with a foe you want to focus on killing, parrying them to start a defensive posture whenever you wish—though you obviously can't attack during this time—and then executing a counterattack as soon after your blocked sword is struck as possible. The counterattack is incredibly useful as it pushes a foe back, and usually off-balance).

VESEMIR'S HEALTH

Notice Vesemir's Health bar? It is the color red (indicating the steel sword should be used; monsters have a silver health bar). It also has a diamond icon to the left of it, with a "skull" inside. This shows Vesemir's level compared to your own, and spotting this while fighting later into your questing is the key to understanding the strength of a foe you're facing. Consult the Training section of this strategy guide for further information.

OBJECTIVES:

- Cast the Quen Sign.
- Cast the Igni Sign.
- Cast the Aard Sign.
- Cast the Axii Sign.
- Cast the Yrden Sign.

Vesemir's training continues with the activation of your five different Witcher Signs. This magic is critical to augmenting your already-impressive sword skills.

SIGN-CASTING FUNDAMENTALS

Pay close attention so you know the basics of your five magical skills. Learn the following:

- Cast Quen (which defends you against damage and certain critical effects, and should be cast before you enter combat).
- Cast Igni (which deals fire damage and has a chance to apply an incineration effect on your opponents and is a great way to dish out extra damage, clip the wings of airborne opponents, and set fire to flammable objects such as exploding barrels. Expect to use this Sign often).
- Cast Aard (which stuns opponents or, in some cases, knocks them to the ground and is another highly-useful ability, especially when you want to clear an area of multiple foes, or want to destroy weak walls or certain blockages of debris).
- Cast Axii (which temporarily disorients your opponents, allowing you to focus on battering one foe at a time if multiple enemies are engaging you, or weakening a single enemy you're facing).
- Cast Yrden (which lays a magic trap that slows anyone walking over it, a perfect accouterment to your dexterous swordplay, and a great defensive way to quickly heal yourself, change signs, or otherwise tone down a ferocious battle you may find yourself in).

ACTIVATING SIGNS WITH EASE

Beware of low Stamina, as this stops you from casting Signs. Increase the dexterity in your fingers by learning to quickly bring up your Signs menu, select a Sign (after memorizing where each of them are), and use it effectively, as combat slows down—but critically, does not stop—while you choose your Sign. Floundering while not learning the layout of your Signs menu is a critical mistake!

OBJECTIVES:

- Throw a bomb.
- Stand in the highlighted spot.
- Throw a bomb at the training post.
- Sheathe your sword.

END: A FEVERED DREAM

Vesemir's training concludes with a spot of projectile-wrangling. Produce a Moon Dust bomb and learn to aim it both at near and far ranges. Follow the on-screen advice, and then finish your training by sheathing your sword. Afterwards, your mind becomes addled, as if in a fevered dream, and the second part of this quest (Lilac and Gooseberries) begins.

ITEM: Moon Dust (2)

BOMB-LOBBING FUNDAMENTALS

As this tutorial draws to a close, you should know how to access your Items menu (to select bombs, or another item you wish to lob), as well as how to throw bombs at close or long ranges (automatically or while aiming). The maximum distance is from the indicated spot to the training dummy, so use this knowledge when facing foes, and try to damage them with these projectiles before they close in.

Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries

A Fresh Trail, But a Fetid Air

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: LILAC AND GOOSEBERRIES

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Kaer Morhen; Main Quest: The Beast of White Orchard

LOCATIONS : Ransacked Village, Ford, Woesong Bridge, White Orchard, Nilfgaardian Garrison

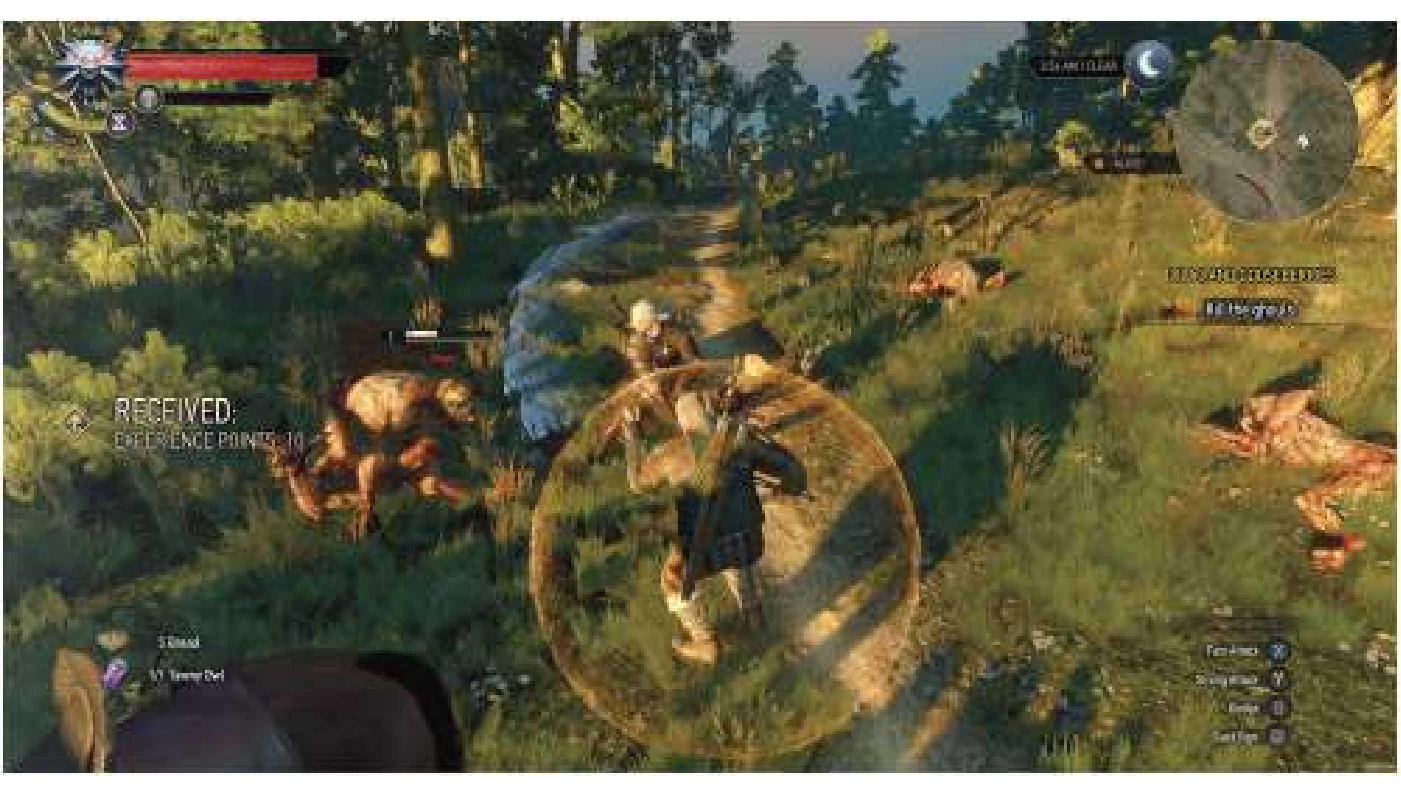
CHARACTERS : Vesemir, Gaunter O'Dim, Nilfgaardian Officer

ENEMIES : Ghouls, Griffin, Deserters, Peasants, Wolves, Drowners

OBJECTIVE:

- Kill the ghouls.

You wake from your nightmare on the road to Vizima, closing in on the settlement of White Orchard. Vesemir speaks with you. Choose your conversation as you wish. After re-reading a missive from Yennefer, your search for Ciri is interrupted by the foul stench of ghouls infiltrating this hillock. Wipe them out.



CHOOSE YELLOW: QUICKENING THE CONVERSATION

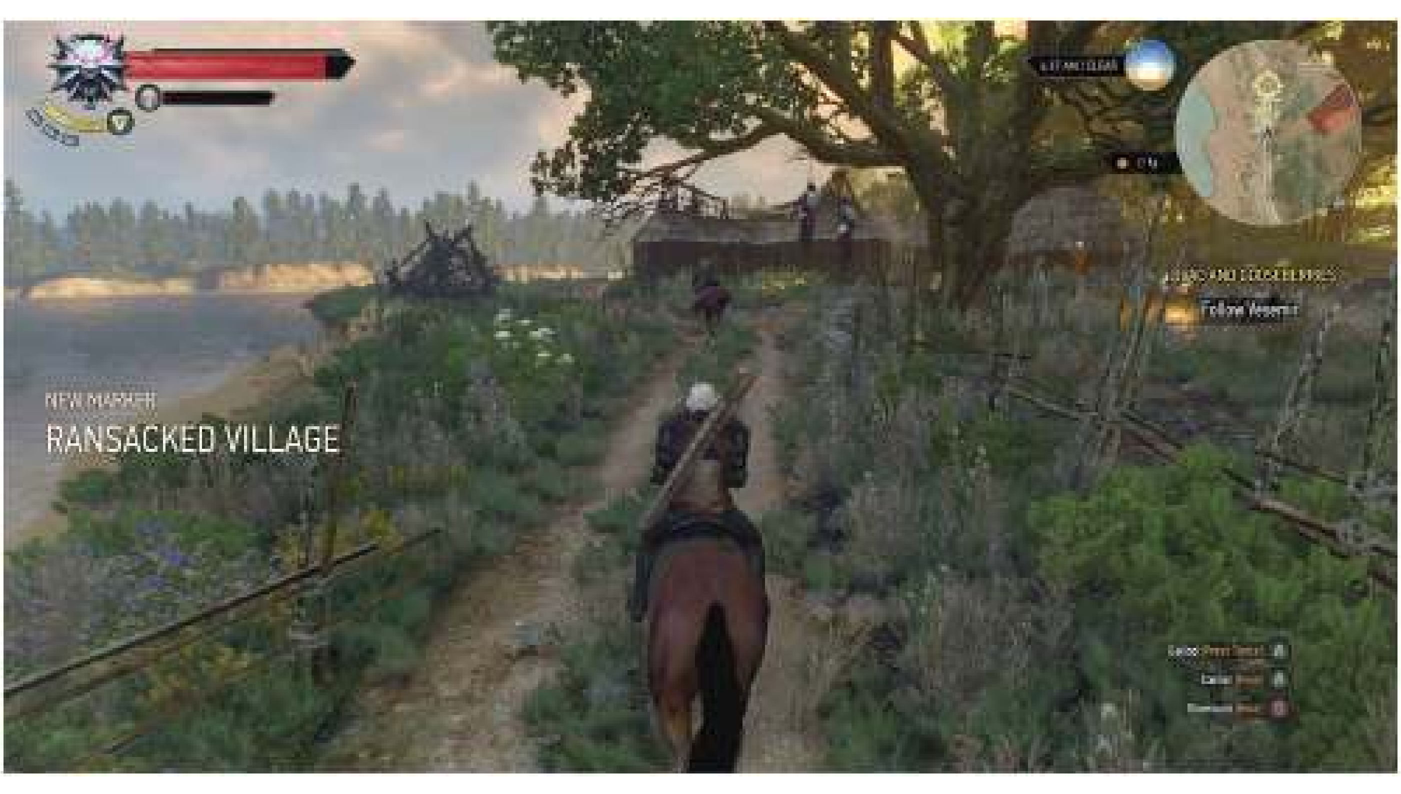
Notice the in-game conversation choices marked in yellow? These indicate an important choice if there are multiple yellow utterances to be made. But in the case of one yellow choice, and one or more other choices, the yellow choice moves the conversation along. Usually, the white choices are there simply for lore and flavor, but not all the time! Be sure to follow this guide so you don't overlook an important choice that isn't written in yellow!

NULLIFYING NECROPHAGES

The ghouls you're slaughtering should pose only a limited threat, as long as you remember to use your silver sword (look to their silver-color health bars as a clue), and push any foes back using Aard, while setting them alight with Igni. Once slain, check your Bestiary to learn more about the horrors you've fought, as well as their weaknesses. Or simply check the Bestiary section of this strategy guide.

OBJECTIVE:

- Follow Vesemir.



After the fracas with the ghouls, inspect the area close to the path that sparkles with a strange glittering light. Obtain the Crystal Skull (evidence of Yennefer you surmise) and mount your faithful steed Roach. Even though you can head off on your own, this isn't the best time to do so (attempt this shortly).

ITEM: Quest Item (Relic): Crystal Skull

MORE THAN VALUABLE BAUBLES: RELICS

Though the Crystal Skull isn't a hugely helpful item, some chests throughout the lands contain much more valuable relics; the most valuable of treasures. Be sure to check the Atlas to see where all these chests are!

PINNED TO A TREE: POSTERS

The tree you made camp at has a poster nailed to its trunk. Though easy to overlook, it's worth checking any posters you see on trees, or nailed to walls in settlements, since they provide helpful information, and possible indications of activities or quests.

CORPSE-LOOTING, GREEN LEAF: AND ALCHEMY

Scavenging those you slay yields crowns, weaponry, and alchemic ingredients, so be sure to inspect any corpse you come across. Also look to the minimap, as naturally-occuring ingredients (usually plant-life) also appears in the nearby vicinity, with a green leaf icon. Gather these too. Brewing a potion requires you harvesting from the lands you roam.

ALL THAT GLITTERS...

Important objects you should investigate are always bathed in faint glittering light. Such objects may start Secondary Quests, or be important to an ongoing mission. Many also appear in your Witcher Sense visions, too.

RIDING ROACH BEYOND REPROACH

Your faithful steed is always around to help you maneuver through the wilds at a faster speed. As you follow Vesemir, practice the following techniques (which are detailed in Training):

- Mounting and Dismounting (remember your speed and direction influence how you climb onto and off your horse).
- Cantering and Galloping (increase the speed of your horse to cover distances more quickly, at the expense of quick manuverabiliy and a steady loss of your horse's Stamina, except when you're galloping on a road or path).
- Horses and Roads (an often-overlooked method of following a path is to let your horse do the steering automatically).
- Calling for Roach (though you won't need to do this yet, remember you can whistle and Roach appears. This occurs most of the time, and allows you to swiftly mount and ride through more inhospitable locations instead of slogging through on foot).

Follow the winding path, speaking with Vesemir as you pass two new signposts. The latter of which is a Ransacked Village. Evidence of the recent war is everywhere. Follow Vesemir along the river bank, and jump across the ruins of a brick bridge.

A FOOTNOTE ON SIGNPOSTS AND FAST TRAVEL

Signposts are everywhere, and appear on both your minimap and World Map as you discover them. It is usually a good idea to explore the area around a signpost thoroughly for hidden chests, optional quests, ingredients, monsters, collectibles, and other interesting phenomena. Each discovered signpost allows you to Fast Travel from it to any other signpost you may have discovered. This becomes hugely helpful after you venture off the mainland to the Isles of Skellige, and don't wish to return via small boat in a stormy sea.

You venture across an upturned trader's cart, a mass of sinewy feathered limbs tearing away at a slain horse. After chasing away the griffin, you speak with the trader whose life you saved. He points you in the direction of White Orchard, and an inn where further information may be obtained.

At this point, you may wish to return to the Ransacked Village, and speak to the villager named Dune who shouts as you pass, pleading for your help. Temporarily leaving Vesemir in order to attempt the White Orchard Secondary Quest: Missing In Action, though optional, is a good idea.

AN EXCLAMATION PROCLAMATION!

Keep an eye open for exclamation marks appearing on your minimap (and World Map) as you explore new areas or return to old ones. These indicate a Secondary Quest is available, usually by speaking to someone.

BESTIARY: A MONSTROUS COMPENDIUM

For each entity you meet, whether you slay it or not, an entry to your Bestiary is added. If you slay a foe proficiently, the Bestiary updates, so you always have the most up-to-date hints on defeating foes you may not have faced in a while. Naturally, this guide's own Bestiary offers the best possible preparation plans and takedown methods, and is offered to you as a preferred solution.

AFORE YE GO: FREEFORM EXPLORATION

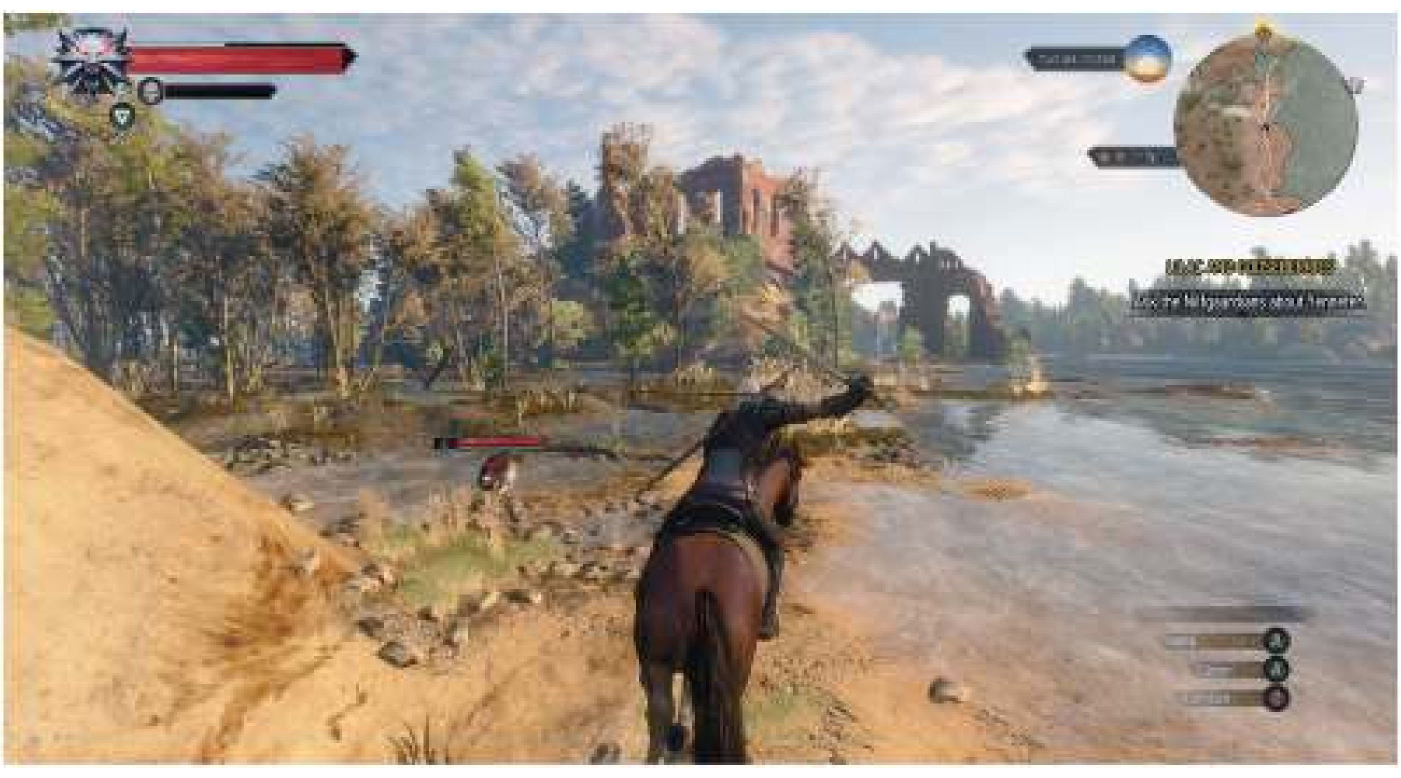
Once you've spoken to the trader the griffin terrorized, Vesemir rides to the tavern in White Orchard, and you are free to either follow him, or spend some time exploring this area more completely. Consult this guide's Atlas for some areas of interest. But before you go on with this Main Quest, be sure to attempt at least some of the following. You can:

- Collect more ingredients from the lakes, woods, and rolling countryside.
- Attack some deserters within the walls of the ruined brick keep adjacent to the Ransacked Village, uncover a chest inside the brick tower, and start the quest Scavenger Hunt: Viper School Gear to obtain impressive Viper School gear.
- Learn the ways of the World Map; including zooming in and out, and the placement of Waypoints at locations this guide's Atlas has referenced.
- Investigate the Monster Nests that infest this land; this is a good way to level up, providing you have the skills to survive waves of foes. The nests can only be destroyed with bombs (usually the Dancing Star or Grapeshot); another reason collecting ingredients (and Alchemy) is important!
- Investigate the Places of Power (there are five in this part of the world). Each is guarded by a nasty foe, so you may need to level up and return later, but as each stone grants you an Ability Point, they are exceptionally helpful and must be found!
- Complete as many Secondary Quests as you wish; there are five to initially find.
- Learn about more Secondary Quests by inspecting the Notice Board in White Orchard, as well as in other settlements.
- Inspect whetstones at nearby forges across the landscape, where you can repair items damaged by battle.
- And of course, learn the advantages of meditation; preparing for combat as well as concocting potions and bombs, waiting to certain times of the day, and obtaining certain bonuses. See Training for more information.

Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries

Ess Soond Jakkten (Good Hunting to You)

The Nilfgaardian garrison is to the northwest of White Orchard. The easiest route to reach it is by heading along the river bank in a westerly direction, following it northwest into a small swamp (watch for wolves and drowners). As the brick edifice looms at you from the hill ahead, pass under the archway of a broken bridge, past some exercising troops, and under a second archway. Dismount at the small jetty and climb the wooden steps. You're met by two brusers manning the gated entrance. A brief chat, and you're allowed through.



TREASURE ON THE BRIDGE

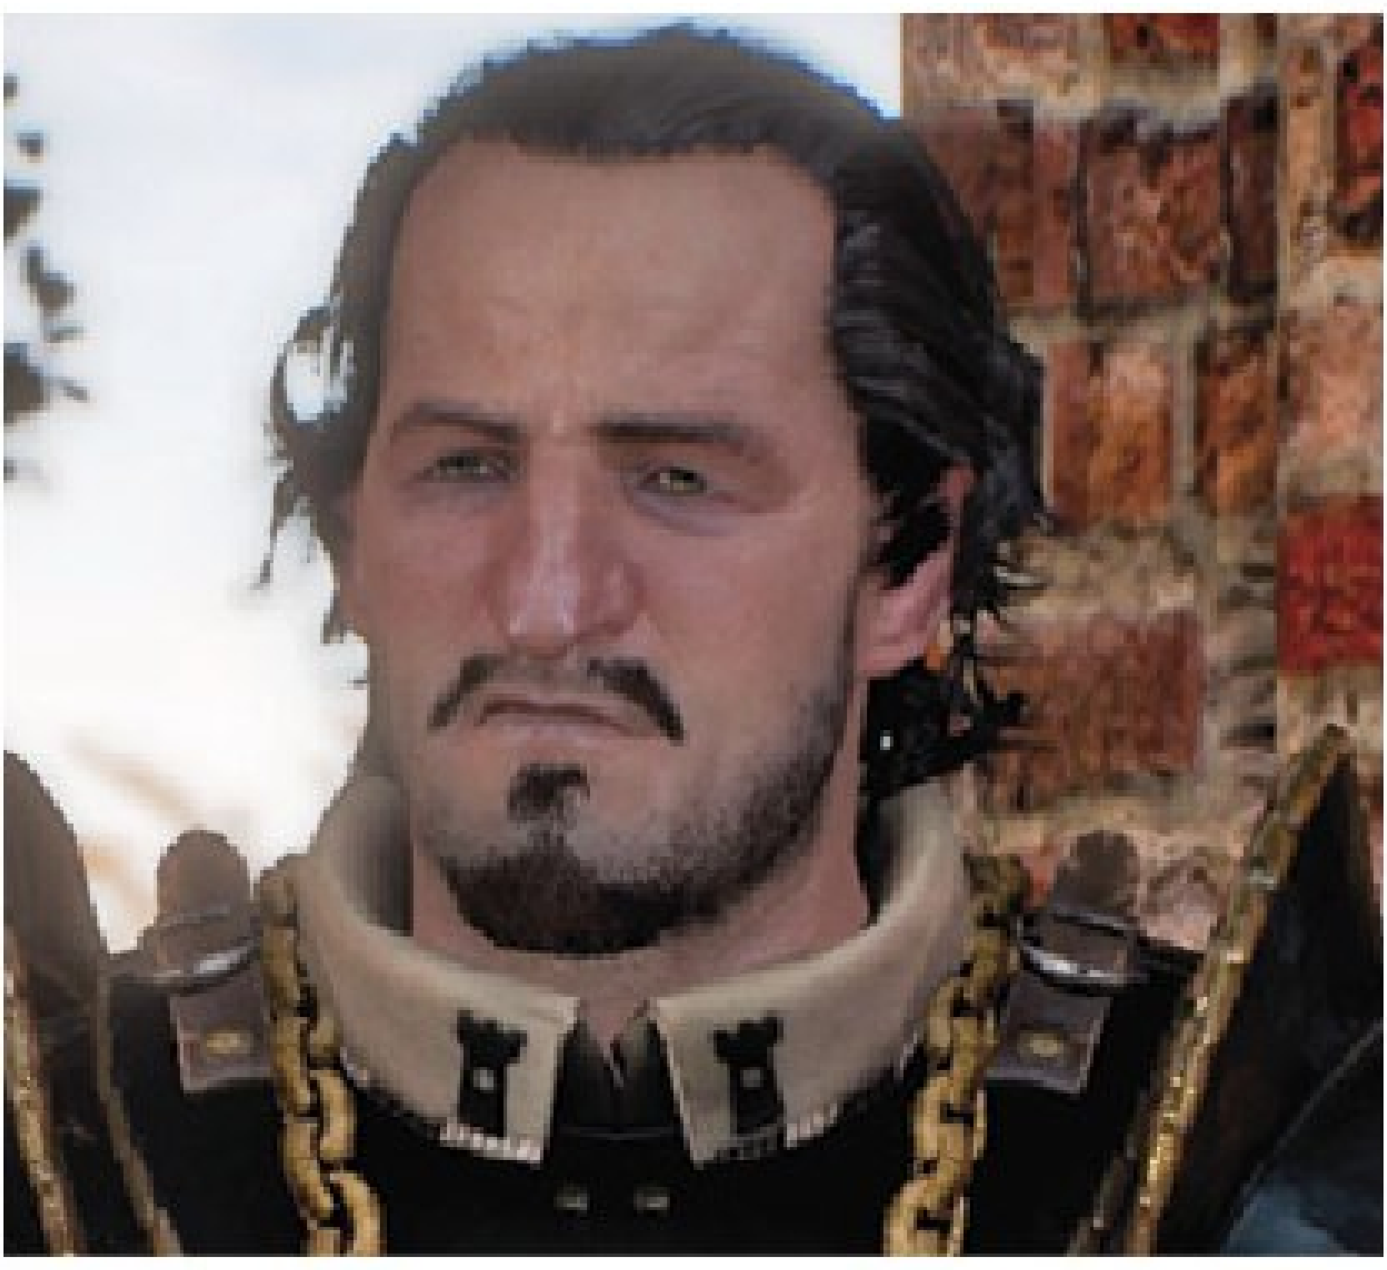
Did you check the edge of the broken bridge over the water. Even though the drop is deadly, there's some choice treasure in a chest here. Be sure to thoroughly explore each new area for such trinkets, and check the Atlas maps during each quest for all nearby chests and points of interest.

THE SIGNS ARE EVERYWHERE

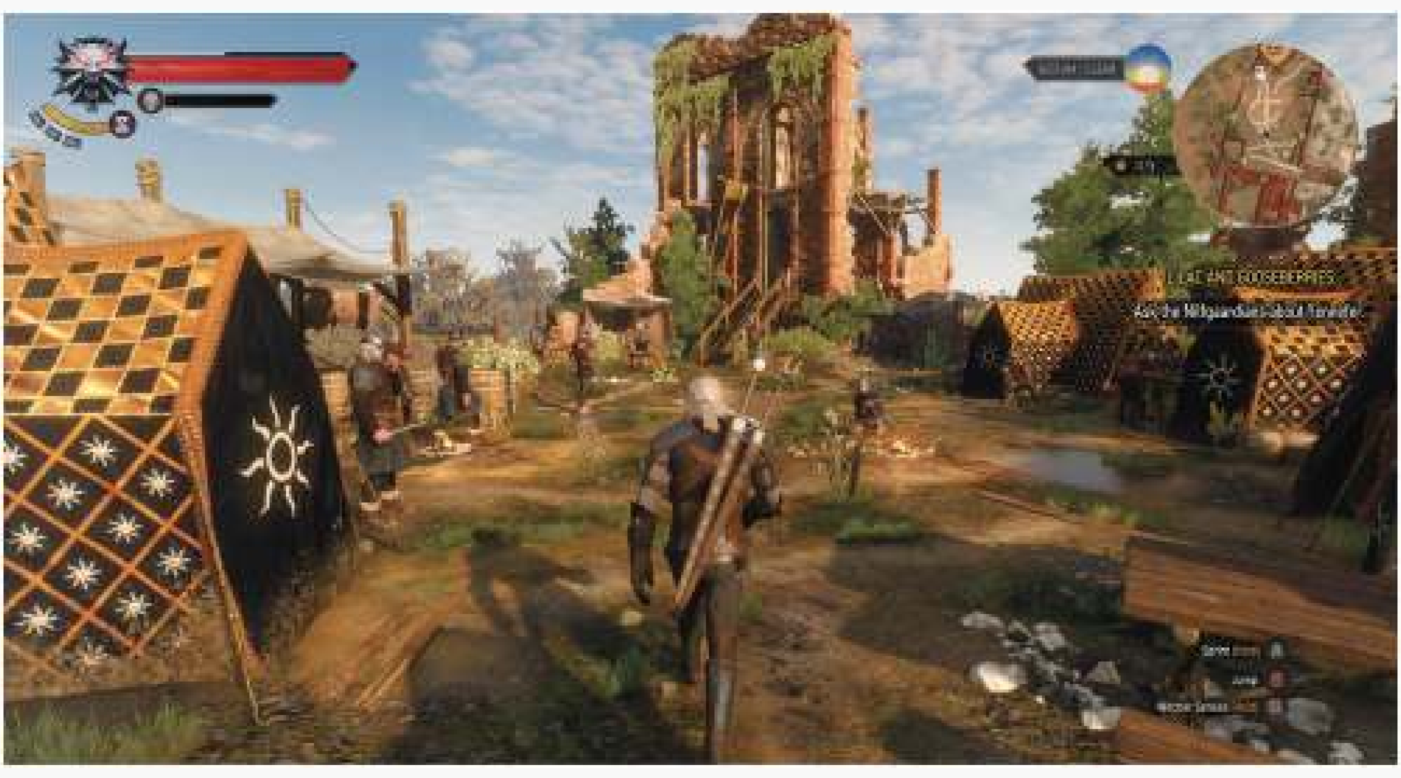
Be sure you access the signpost marker here, so you can Fast Travel back to the garrison when you wish to return here. You are finding all the signposts on the World Map as you go, aren't you?

SUBTLE SECRETS

Did you try returning to the exercising troops between the hours of midnight and one in the morning? They should be "resting" at this point!



Captain Peter Saar Gwynleve



Once inside the gates, head southeast toward the ruins of a brick tower, and speak to the garrison commander. It seems he may have some knowledge of Yennefer's whereabouts, but he'll only impart that information if you agree to rid the area of a troublesome griffin. Agree to this quid pro quo, and be sure you ask the following before you leave:

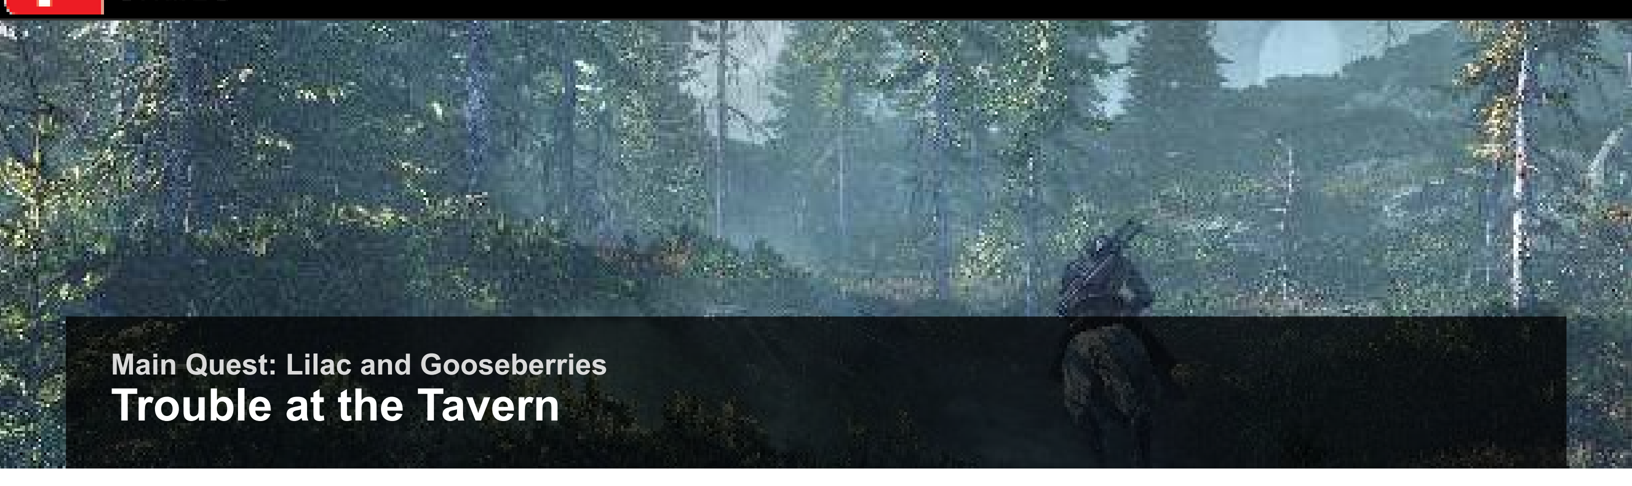
- About a specific herb in the hunt for the griffin.
- About more information regarding the griffin.

OBJECTIVE

- Complete the griffin contract.

MANAGING MULTIPLE OBJECTIVES

Right now, this quest (Lilac and Gooseberries) is still active, but has been superceded by Main Quest: The Beast of White Orchard. This is a linked quest that must be completed before the rest of this quest can be finished. For now, highlight "The Beast of White Orchard" in your Quest menu, and follow those objectives.



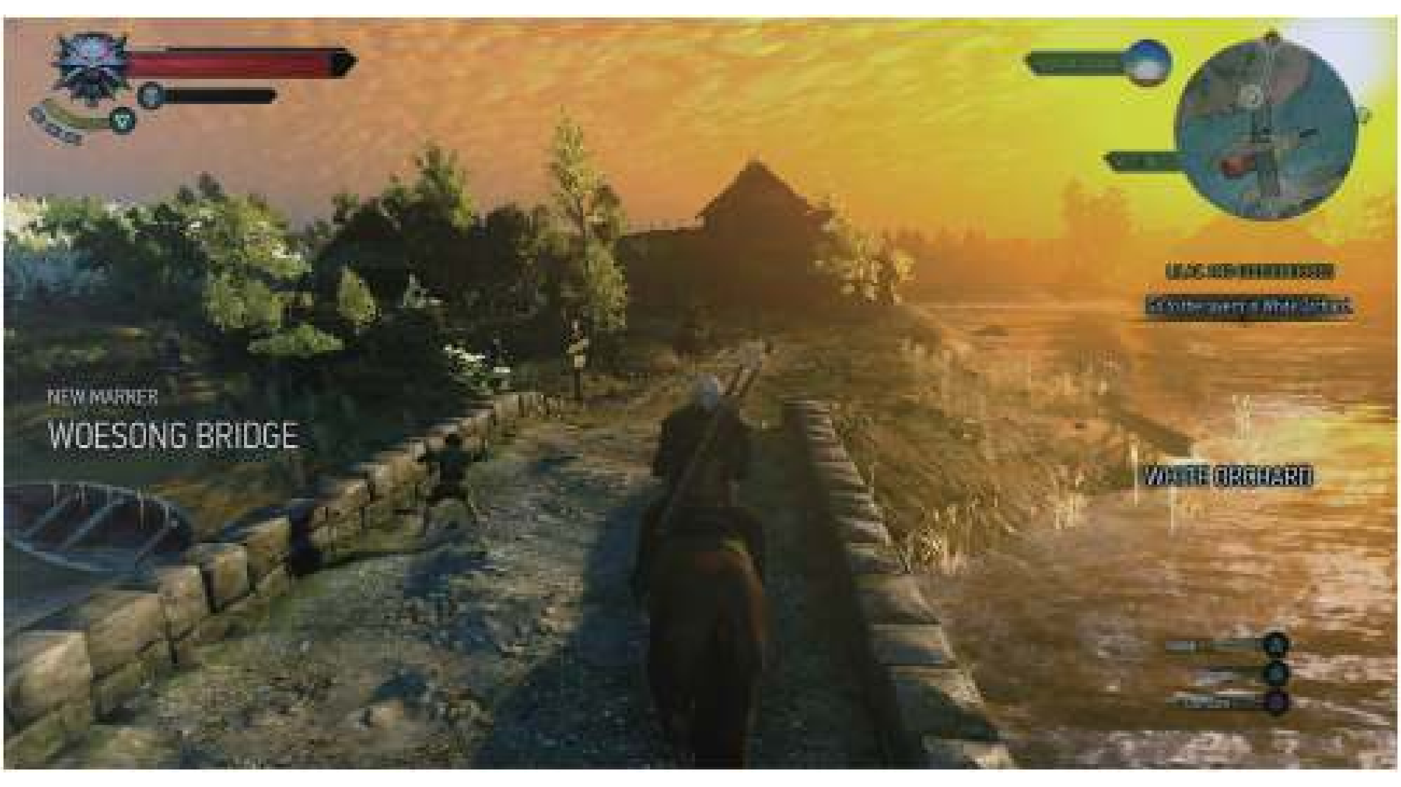
Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries

Trouble at the Tavern

OBJECTIVES:

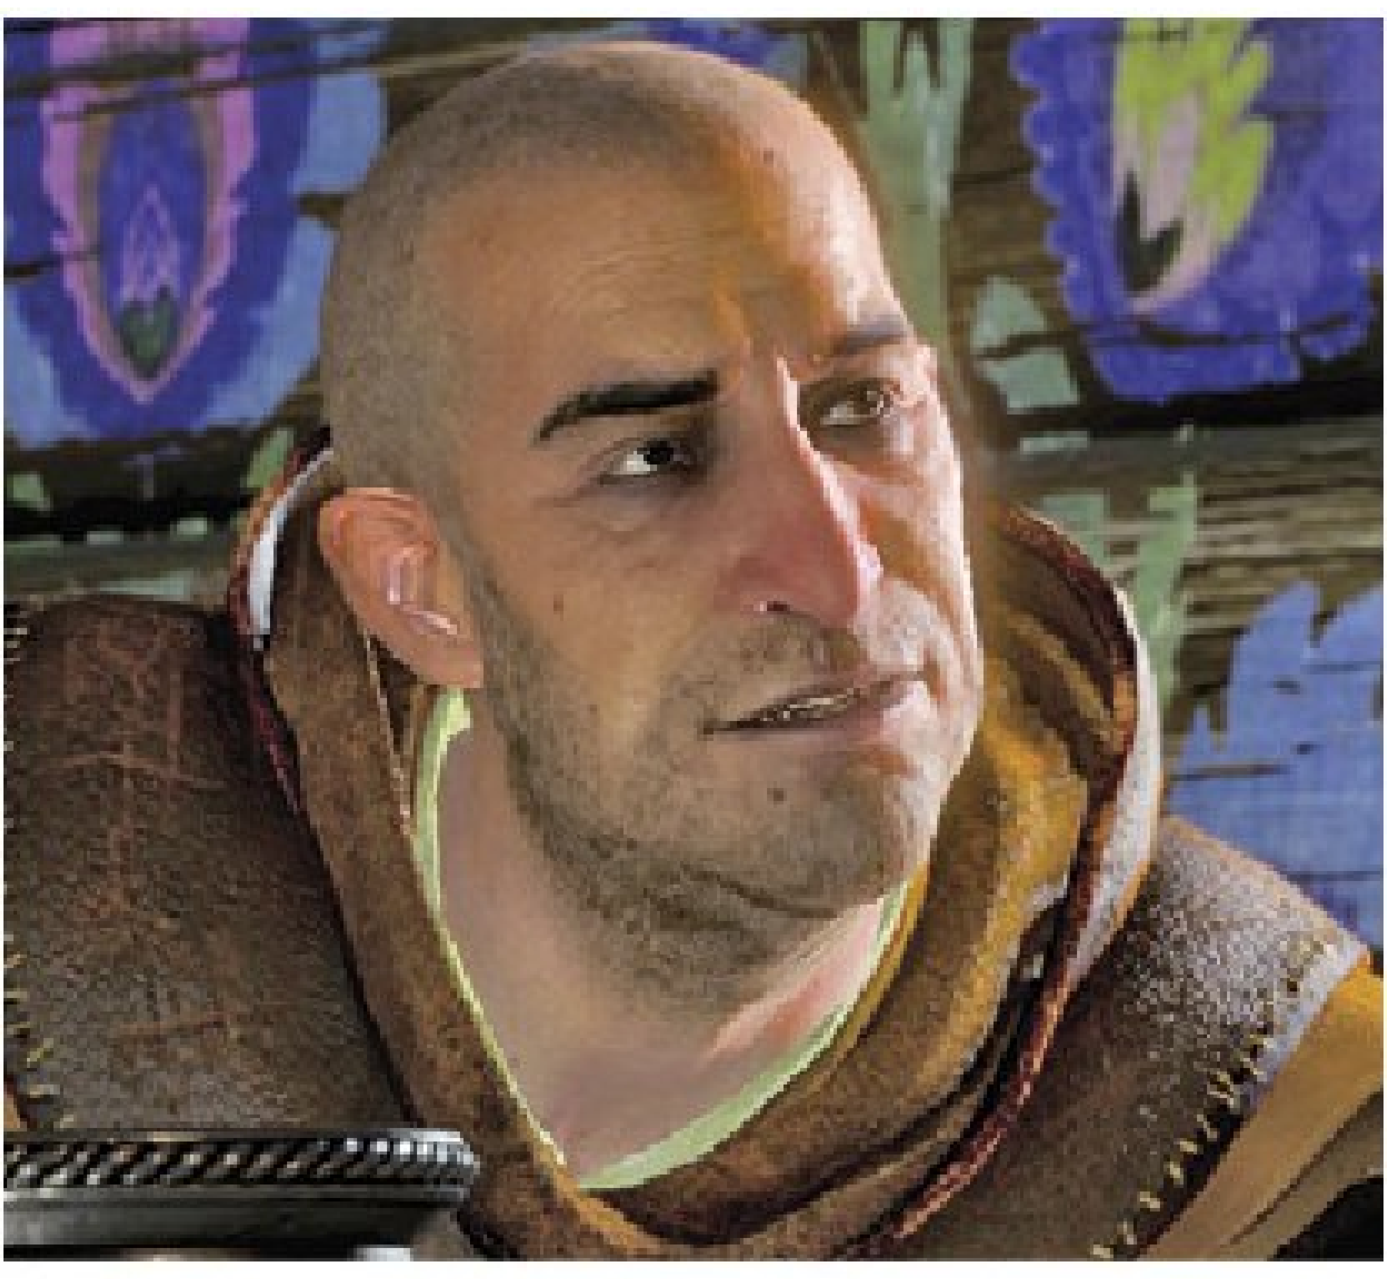
- Go to the taven in White Orchard. Ask travelers about Yennefer.
- Nearest Signpost: Woesong Bridge.

Canter into town, and dismount at the tavern. Once inside, the patrons could best be described as “jumpy”. Conversing with the bar-woman, who advises you to speak to the travelers drinking here if you want information on either of the women you’re trying to find.



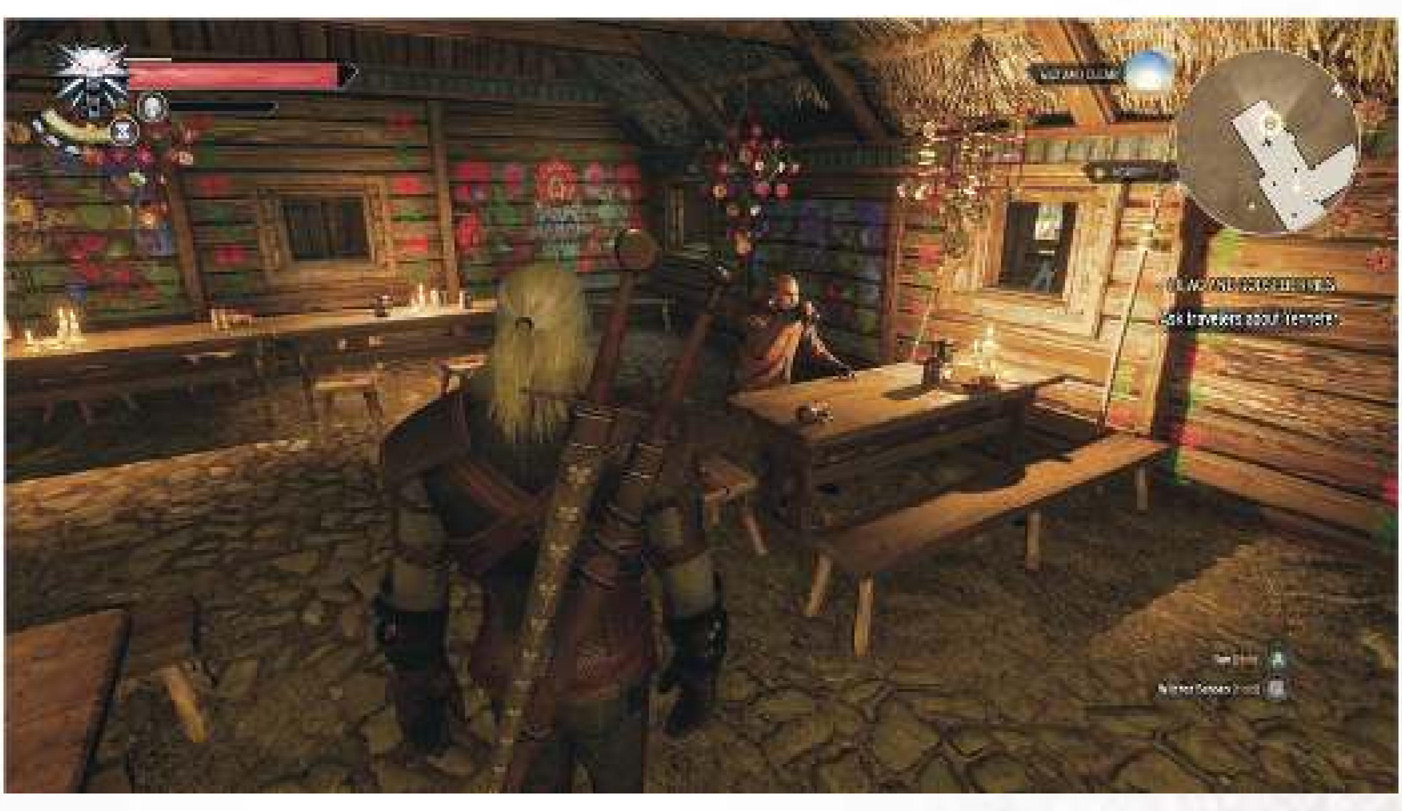
SHOP TILL YOU DROP: TRADING WARES

The bar-woman is one of many traders throughout the lands which you can trade with. Options marked with the “bag” icon show where a trader is, and conversations with this icon also bring up the items the trader has to offer. In this case, a variety of alcohol, Gwent cards, and edible foodstuffs.



Gaunter O’Dim

While Vesemir finishes his drink, speak to the two nearby peasants at a table. There are differing conversation options, including one that uses your Axii Sign, but none reveal any information of note (aside from the racism against those of your kind). A second pair of patrons offer you little more than an introduction to the card game Gwent, so focus your attention on the bald, shifty-looking customer sitting by the window. He knows of Yennefer by name, and reckons the Nilfgaardians may know more about her whereabouts.



A SPOT OF DWARVEN SPIRIT

While you’re here, it’s a good idea to purchase a single bottle of dwarven spirit (for around 47 Crowns), if you have the funds (and if you don’t, why not go exploring?). This is a critical ingredient for a potion you make during a Secondary Quest: On Death’s Bed, and having the potion to hand now makes brewing the potion easier once you start this optional quest.

THIS CHARMING MAN: AXII DURING DIALOGUE

The Axii Sign marked during dialogue allows you to charm stubborn individuals into answering your questions. Remember to add points to your Delusion ability (Character menu) to increase this for more intelligent people you try to befuddle to your will. And watch for other folks witnessing this witchcraft, and possibly acting aggressively. However, most of the time this allows you to receive information or succeed in a chat without forgoing crowns.

ON THE CARDS: GWENT

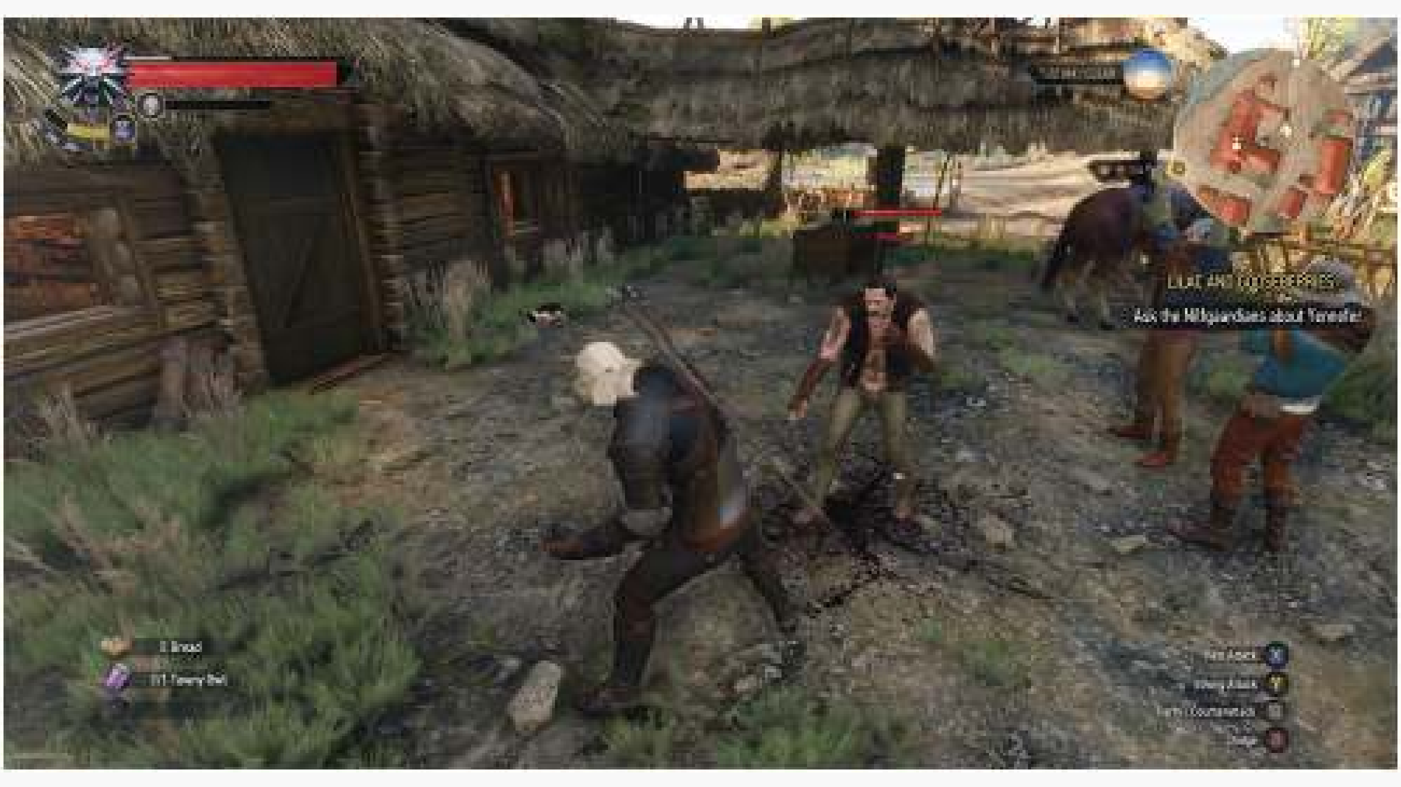
Learning the basics of the card game Gwent is imperative if you are to (optionally) search the lands for the best players, and collect a selection of rare cards with which to bolster your decks. For more information on Gwent, check the Training chapter.

OFF THE CARDS: GWENT CARD COLLECTING

It is advisable to learn this game now, and start collecting cards immediately (purchase as many as you can from the bar-woman). Innkeeps, your friends, and many other challenges offer you games, and winning them allows you to obtain rare cards to bolster your deck. Most importantly, some games are only available during certain periods of time. For example, the bar-woman’s cards aren’t able to be purchased once you leave for Vizima!

OBJECTIVE:

- Ask the Nilfgaardians about Yennefer



As you exit the tavern, two armored peasants and a thug decide to threaten you with a mixture of racism and unarmed combat. Even an Axii dialogue choice only ends in violence. Retaliate with the following:

- Quickly block the incoming strikes, and retaliate with a series of fast attacks and dodges from your fists, until all three are knocked out.
- Or draw your weapon, optionally use Signs, and slaughter these ne’er-do-wells where they stand.

PUTTING UP YOUR DUKES: FISTFIGHTS

You may be interested to know that unarmed combat utilizing a mixture of fast fist work, blocks, and dodging, can lead to you challenging a variety of hardened folks from here to Skellige. Learn more about the finer aspects of fistfights in the Training section. For all the Fistfight Quests, consult The Heroes' Pursuits.

This situation can only end in violence. At this point, you can begin to explore the town of White Orchard, optionally completing some Secondary Quests in the area.

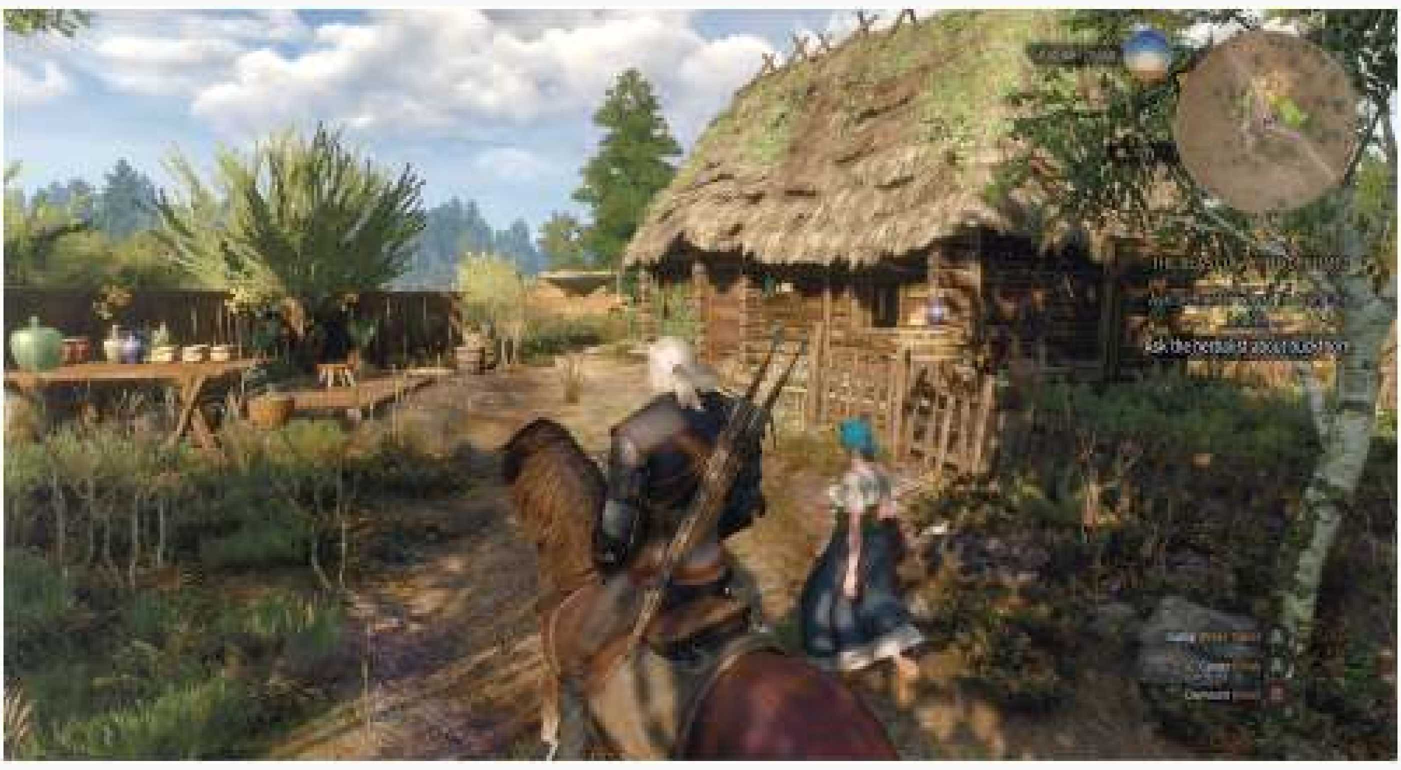
Main Quest: The Beast of White Orchard

Trawling for Buckthorn

OBJECTIVES:

- Ask the herbalist about buckthorn.
- Nearest signpost: East of Sawmill.

Tomira the Herbalist



Journey south, looking for the herbalist's cottage (where there are rich ingredients pickings), and enter the premises. Speak with the herbalist on matters regarding the war, her demeanor, and the peasant she hopes to save.

- While speaking about her patient, choose the conversation "Griffin do that?" when speaking with her, to begin Secondary Quest: On Death's Bed.
- While speaking about her patient, choose the conversation "Looking for buckthorn" to ignore this quest. This quest continues.

MAKING TIME FOR TOMIRA

Remember you can return to Tomira and purchase items and ingredients from her.

Main Quest: The Beast of White Orchard

Griffin Hunt Begins

DANGER ALERT SPOLER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE BEAST OF WHITE ORCHARD

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries; Main Quest: The Incident at White Orchard. Secondary Quest: On Death's Bed.

LOCATIONS : Nilfgaardian Garrison, Tomira's Cottage , Mislav's Hut , Velpine Woods, Mill

CHARACTERS : Nilfgaardian Officer, Tomira, Mislav

ENEMIES : Wild Dogs, Royal Griffin

TOMIRA AND MISLAV

This quest is available as part of Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries; once you agree to help the Nilfgaardian Officer rid the immediate area of its griffin problem.

Probe the officer for more information regarding the ingredients needed to hunt a griffin, as well as the name of a hunter who can explain the beast's recent activities, then leave the garrison. Gallop across the swamp (watching for drowners), passing a stranded merchant as you pick up the road (Secondary Quest: Precious Cargo), and then choose which citizen you wish to speak to first.

A CHOICE

These two Objectives can be done in any order. However, the herbalist is closer to your current location.

Secondary Quest: On Death's Bed

Swallow this Concoction

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: ON DEATH'S BED

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries; Main Quest: The Incident at White Orchard.

LOCATIONS : Tomira's Cottage, White Orchard Tavern

CHARACTERS : Tomira, Lena

ENEMIES : Drowners

OBJECTIVE:

- Brew a dose of the Swallow potion. Take the potion to the herbalist.

Tomira's patient (Lena) is extremely sick with blood on the brain. Mention that you "could try to help her," before selecting this quest from your Quests Mmenu.

Finish your chat with Tomira, then bring up your Alchemy menu, scroll down through your Potions menu recipes to the one called "Swallow", and inspect the ingredients you need.

ON DEATH'S BED
Brew a dose of the Swallow potion

You may not have gathered any of these ingredients yet, but it's worth doing so, if only to understand how to brew potions. Fortunately, all three ingredients are close by:

- Find the five celandine flower bushes in the fields east and southeast of Tomira's cottage.
- Then head to the Tavern in White Orchard, and purchase a bottle of dwarven spirit from the bar-woman for around 47 crowns. If you don't want to spend the crowns, brew your own (but this involves finding further ingredients).
- Finally, head to any river bank, such as the area southeast of Woesong Bridge, and look for a group of drowners by the water's edge. Slay four of them, looting their corpses for their brains.

ITEMS: Dwarven Spirit (1), Celandine (5), Drowner Brain (4), Quest Item: Swallow Potion

Conclude this quest by returning to Tomira's Cottage after brewing (combining) the dose of Swallow, letting Tomira know you have it, and receive the following for your troubles.

ITEM: Manuscript Pages (2), Book: Of Sweat and Blood

Main Quest: The Beast of White Orchard (continued)

Continue the Quest

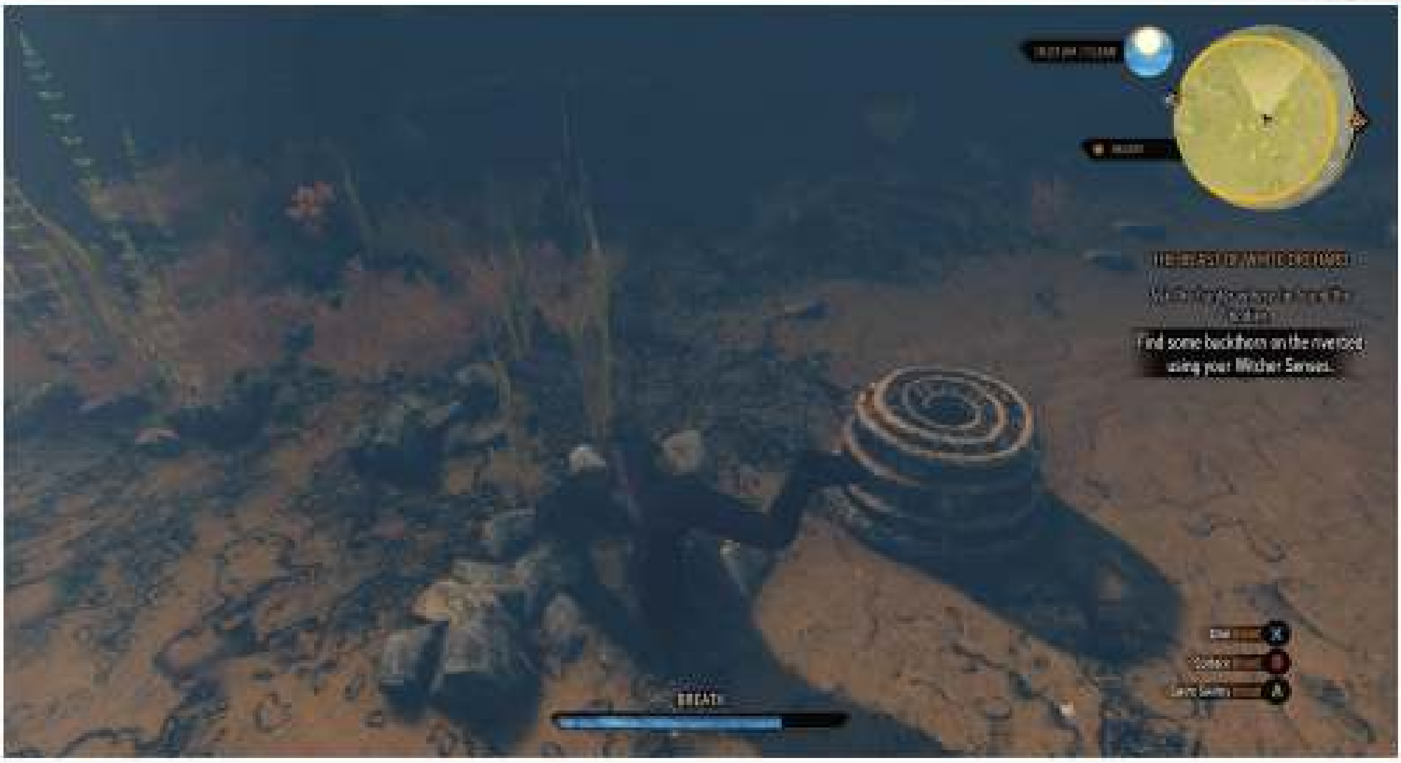
! MAIN QUEST: THE BEAST OF WHITE ORCHARD (CONTINUED)

When you finish Secondary Quest: On Death's Bed, steer the conversation with Tomira to the location of Buckthorn; a foul-smelling weed used to lure a griffin.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find some buckthorn on the riverbed using your Witcher Senses.



Find some buckthorn on the riverbed using your Witcher Senses.
BREATH

She points out the bottom of the river to the northwest. It is now a simple matter of riding there, dismounting, diving in past the fishing nets, and searching the bottom of the river for the orange-colored herb (optionally with your Witcher Senses to make the plant glow red). Gather multiple bunches of this plant if you're interested in its alchemical qualities outside of the scope of this quest.

ITEM: Ingredient: Buckthorn

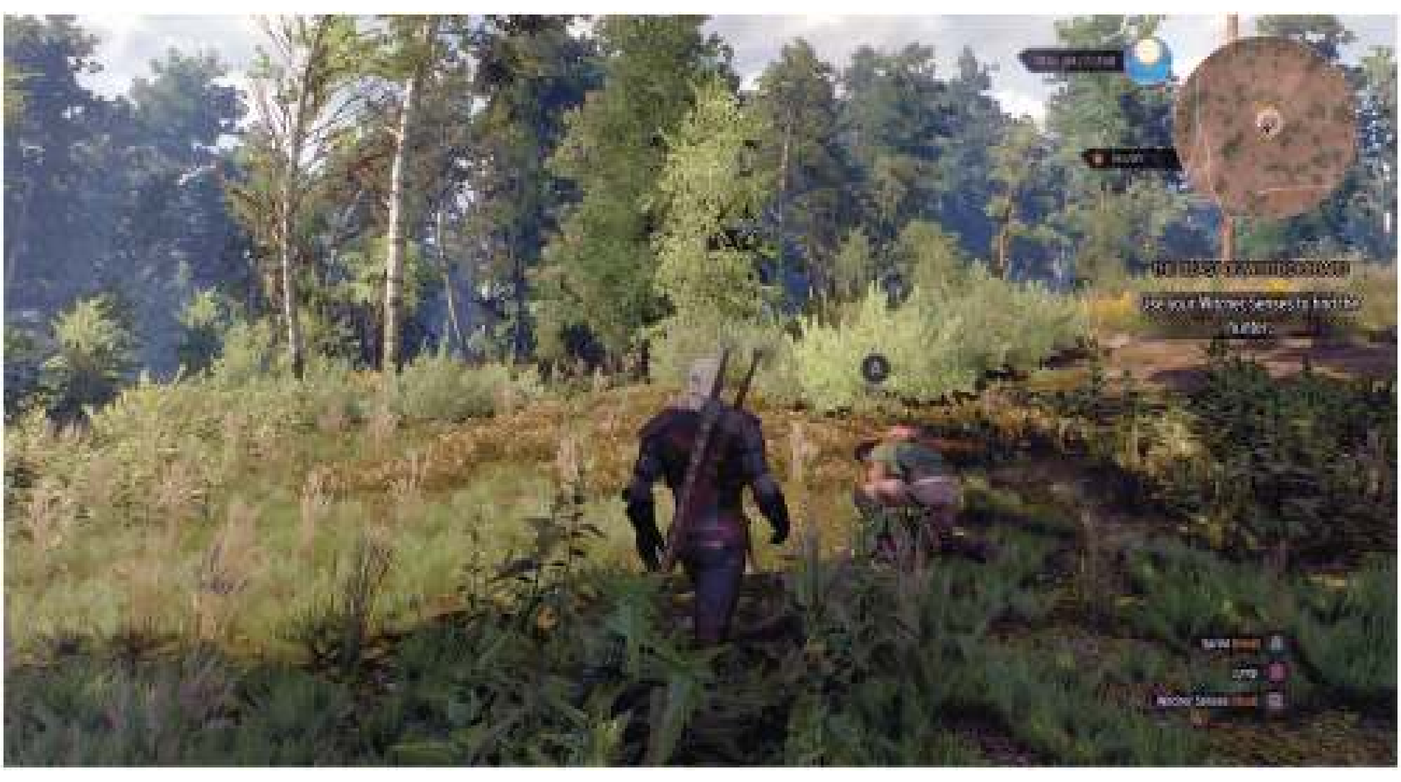
The Sorrowful Hunter, The Bloodied Ascent

OBJECTIVES:

- Ask the hunter where he found the bodies. Use your Witcher Senses to find the hunter.
- Nearest Signpost: Northeast of Broken Bridge.



The hunter's cottage is southwest of White Orchard, along a foot trail. When you reach the hut the hunter is nowhere to be seen. Use your Witcher Senses to find his fresh trail of red glowing footprints, and follow them southwards into the Vulpine Woods. Mislav is checking the ground for evidence of wild dogs, plans to divulge where the Nilfgaardian bodies the griffin attacked are, if you help him. You can:

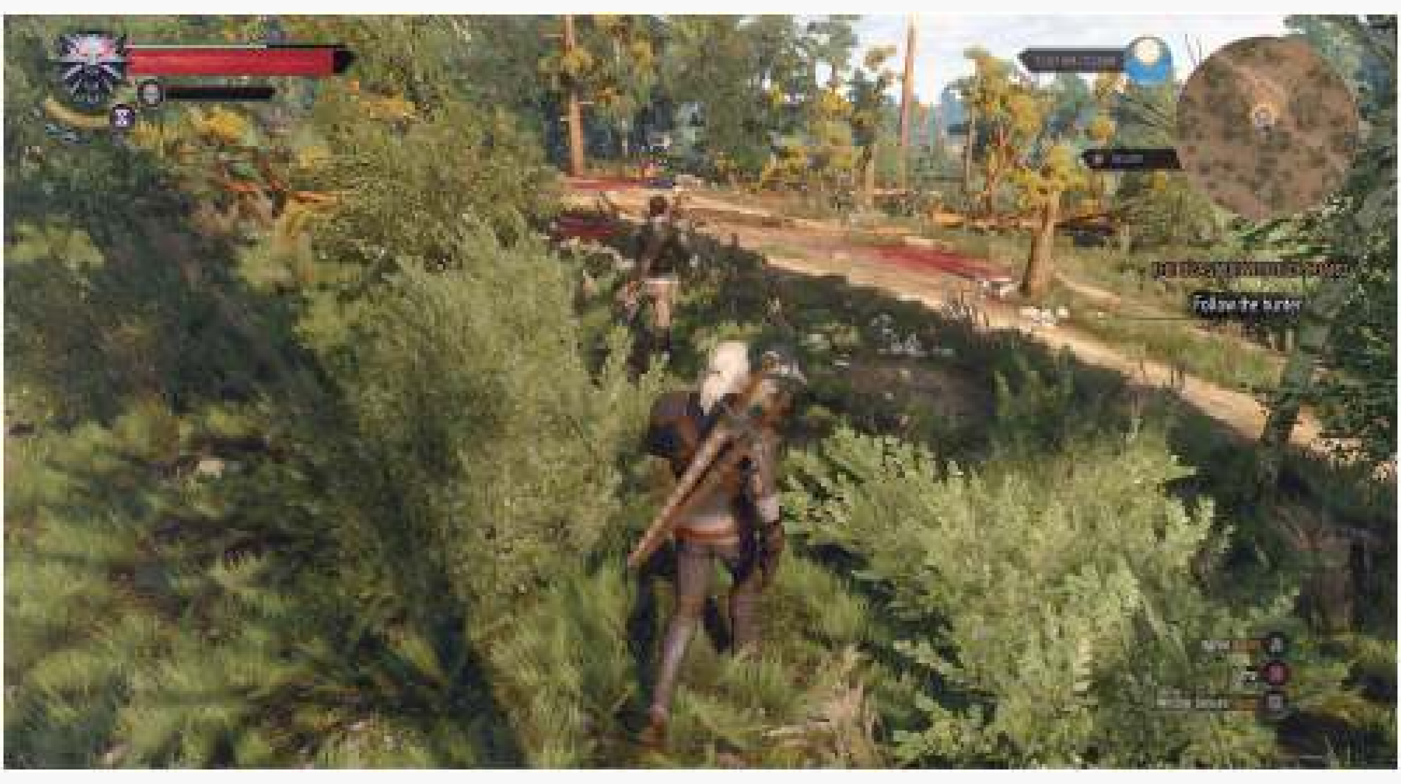
- Agree to help. Or,
- Refuse to help with the killing of wild dogs (Mislav still helps you find the Nilfgaardian bodies).

OBJECTIVES:

- Kill the wild dogs.
- Talk to the Hunter.
- Follow the Hunter.

Mislav the Hunter

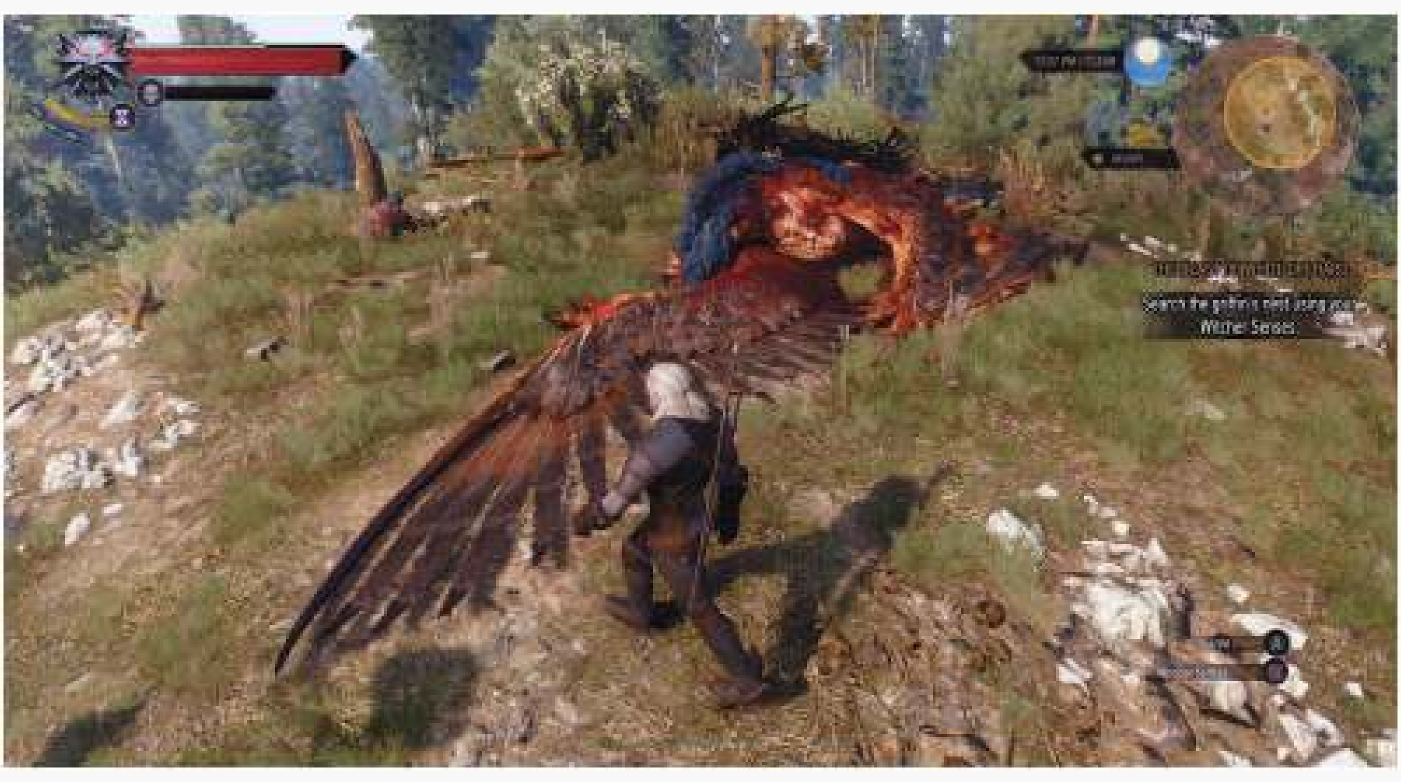
If you chose to help him, follow Mislav deeper (eastward) into the woods, and set upon a small pack of these savage beasts who are gnawing on the bloodied corpses of the townsfolk. After combat, talk to Mislav again. He agrees to lead you to the site of the battle with the griffin and heads off in a roughly westerly direction. It isn't long before you reach this scarred place. After speaking to Mislav again (and perhaps finding out more about his sorrowful nature), begin to inspect the area.



OBJECTIVES:

- Examine the site of the Nilfgaardian soldiers' death.
- Follow the Nilfgaardian soldiers' tracks using your Witcher Senses.
- Search the griffin's nest using your Witcher Senses.

With your Witcher Senses, inspect the blood-stained earth; the griffin interrupted a celebration. Check the saturated ground, and move roughly southward until you find some older footprints. These lead you towards the Broken Bridge (signpost). Leap (or climb up) to the other side and pick up the footprints trail again. It leads left (southeast) to a series of rocky outcrops to climb onto. Leap the gap between the rocky crags (or climb the steep rock slope) near the lone tree, and ascend to the griffin's nest.



Inspect the area, examining two corpses, a variety of bones, the nest, and the large feathered body of a griffin. Examine the wounds, determine the age and type before you step away; this royal griffin has beeen dead for at least a week. Its mate is the beast terrorizing the land with good reason. Now to find the enraged griffin, but not before returning to Vesemir.

Ruffling Some Feathers

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Vesemir.
- Prepare to fight the griffin.
- Meet Vesemir in the field where you plan to ambush the griffin.

Vesemir is where you left him; at the tavern in White Orchard. Inform him of the contract you undertook with the Nilfgaardians. When you are ready to set the trap for the griffin, tell Vesemir this. Then, head to his location on the other side of the stream in the fields just east of White Orchard. Vesemir is finishing the preparation of a sheep dummy. This is a lure to coax the griffin into combat.

CORRECT COMBAT PREPARATION

Before you reach Vesemir, it is a good idea to meditate and prepare before the battle to come. Brew the Thunderbolt potion first, which increases your attack power, and is helpful against most larger monsters. Also use the guide's Bestiary entry on griffins in this preparation. Once combat begins, refer to the tactics in that section to rid the land of the royal griffin.

ITEM: Potion: Thunderbolt

GRIFFIN VULNERABILITIES

The royal griffin is vulnerable against the following:

BOMB: GRAPESHOT

POTION: HYBRID OIL

SIGN: AARD

OBJECTIVE:

- Kill the griffin.

The screeching and heavy flapping of wings announces the beast's arrival. You stifle your conversation with Vesemir, who hands you a crossbow he won in a card game, just before the griffin swoops down to maul you with his talons.

ITEM: Weapon: Witcher Crossbow

THE CROSSBOW IN COMBAT

The witcher's crossbow (and other ranged weapons you may find during your adventure) offers helpful firing options for enemies you're too far from to affect with Signs or swords. In this case, fire at the griffin as he swoops down, just before dodging those talons: A direct hit sends the beast tumbling into the field where he's more easily struck.

CLIPPING THE WINGS OF THE ROYAL GRIFFIN

As well as judicious crossbow use, your Signs offer constant damage (if you fire Igni at the griffin before dodging those talons). Aard is another option for dropping the foe from the skies. Then follow up with dodges and retaliatory strikes using your silver (not steel) sword.

After losing around half its health, the royal griffin takes to the skies and flees to the northwest, heading to the higher pasture around the leaning Mill (signpost). Follow the foe to this location, and deliver your final killing blow.

OBJECTIVES:

- Take a trophy from the griffin's corpse.
- Collect your reward from the Nilfgaardians.

Vesemir has some constructive criticism regarding your battle style, after which you should inspect the griffin's corpse, and cut the head off as a trophy. This is all the evidence you need to present to the Nilfgaardians.

[Take the coin.]
[Turn down the coin.]
Time left to decide

We are not done. It's yours, this gold. I would not want you to say you were inadequately compensated.

ITEM: Quest Item (Relic): Griffin Trophy

Gallop (or Fast Travel) to the Nilfgaardian Garrison, and watch as the officer deals rather drastically with a villager who isn't providing the grain the officer is expecting. Tell the officer you've slain the beast, and he offers you information on Yennefer's whereabouts, as well as a bag of gold for your troubles. You can:

- Take the coin, reasoning it can be put to better use instead of being stored in Nilfgaardian coffers.
- Turn down the coin, reasoning you don't want the gold of a faction with so much innocent blood on its hands.

ITEM: Crowns

This quest now concludes.

CHARACTER DEVELOPMENT PLANS

By now you should have gained a level, so you you can (immediately) select the Abilities panel of your menu and learn a new skill. The exact type of skills you want to spend your points on are discussed in the Character Abilities section of this guide.

Main Quest: The Incident at White Orchard

An Emperor's Offer You Cannot Refuse

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE INCIDENT AT WHITE ORCHARD

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries; Main Quest: Imperial Audience

LOCATIONS : White Orchard (Tavern)

CHARACTERS : Vesemir, Yennefer

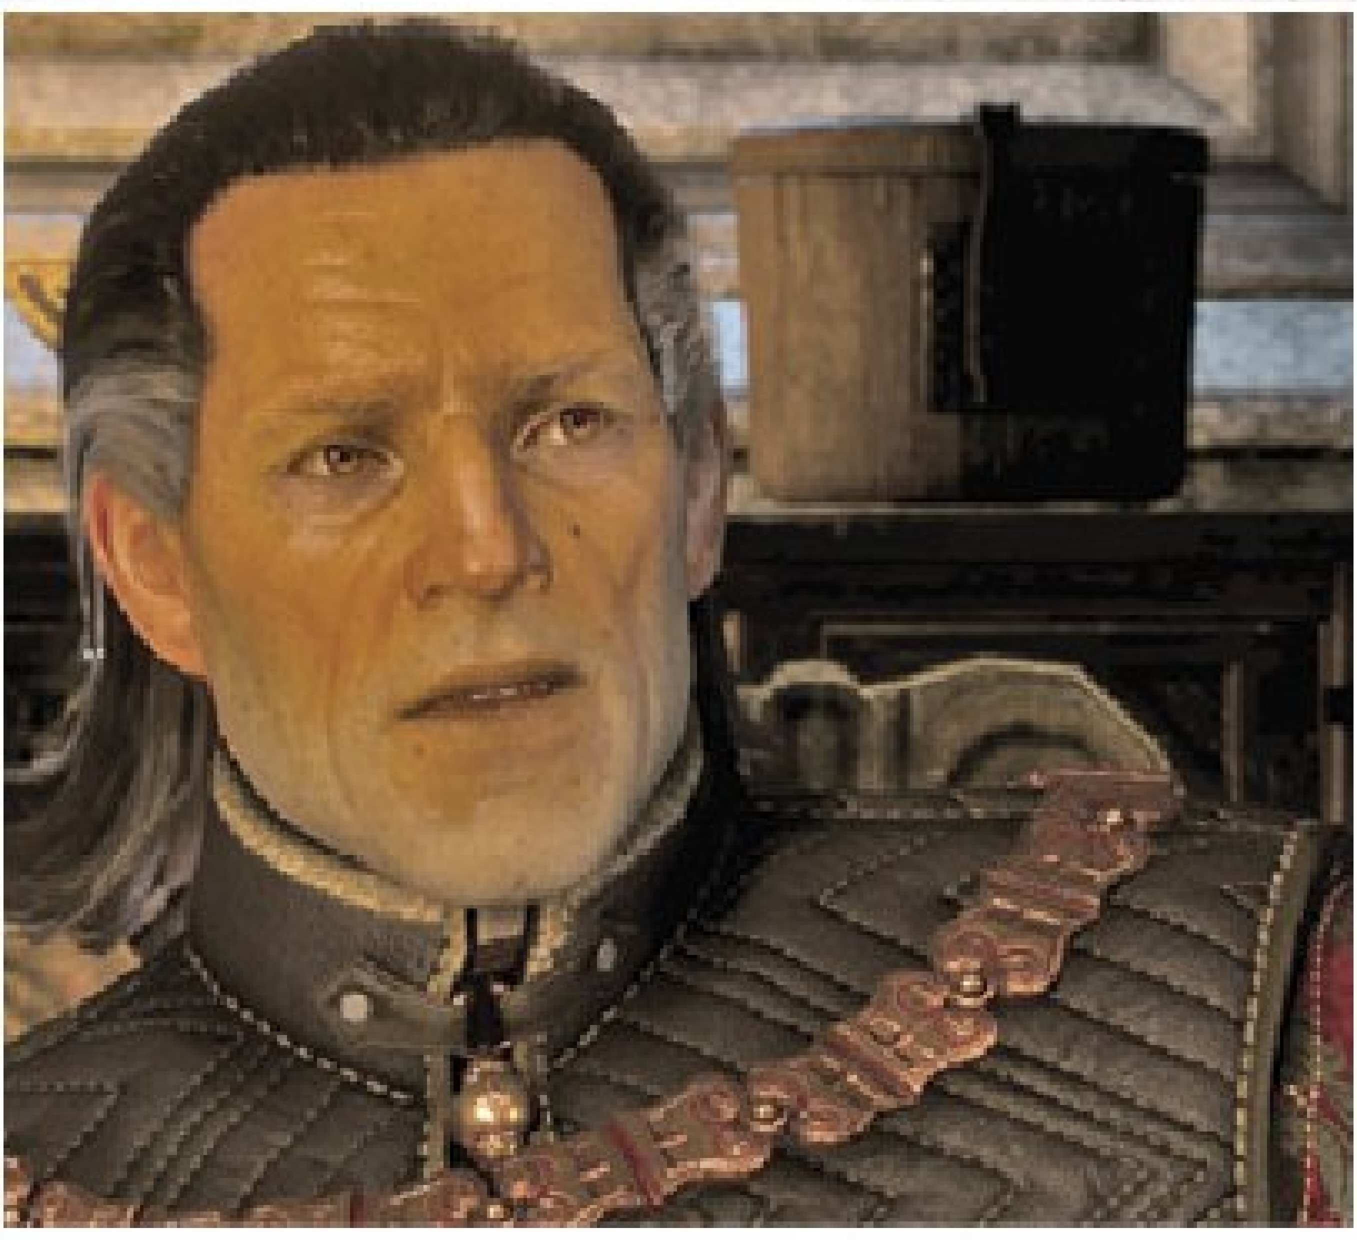
ENEMIES : Bandits, The Wild Hunt

OBJECTIVE:

- Kill the bandits.

Yennefer of Vengerberg

After arriving at the White Orchard tavern, the tension in the air is almost palpable. After speaking with Vesemir, your hand is forced to your steel sword, as a group of bandits are threatening you. Deal with their kind using your blade and Signs. Afterwards, you're forced into the open, where a squad of heavily-armored Nilfgaardian knights surround the tavern. Surprisingly, they are lead by Yennefer. You seek explanations. She agrees to provide them once you're both spirited away to Vizima.



Emperor Emhyr var Emrels

It seems the Emperor Emhyr var Emreis wishes to make you an offer. Vesemir won't be accompanying you. After bidding him farewell, the Nilfgaardian procession is ambushed and chased. It is only through Yennefer's use of powerful magic that your pursuers (the Wild Hunt) are stopped. Soon the palace of Vizima looms out in the misty distance.

Main Quest: Imperial Audience

Common Courtesy Before the Emperor

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: IMPERIAL AUDIENCE

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: The Incident in White Orchard.

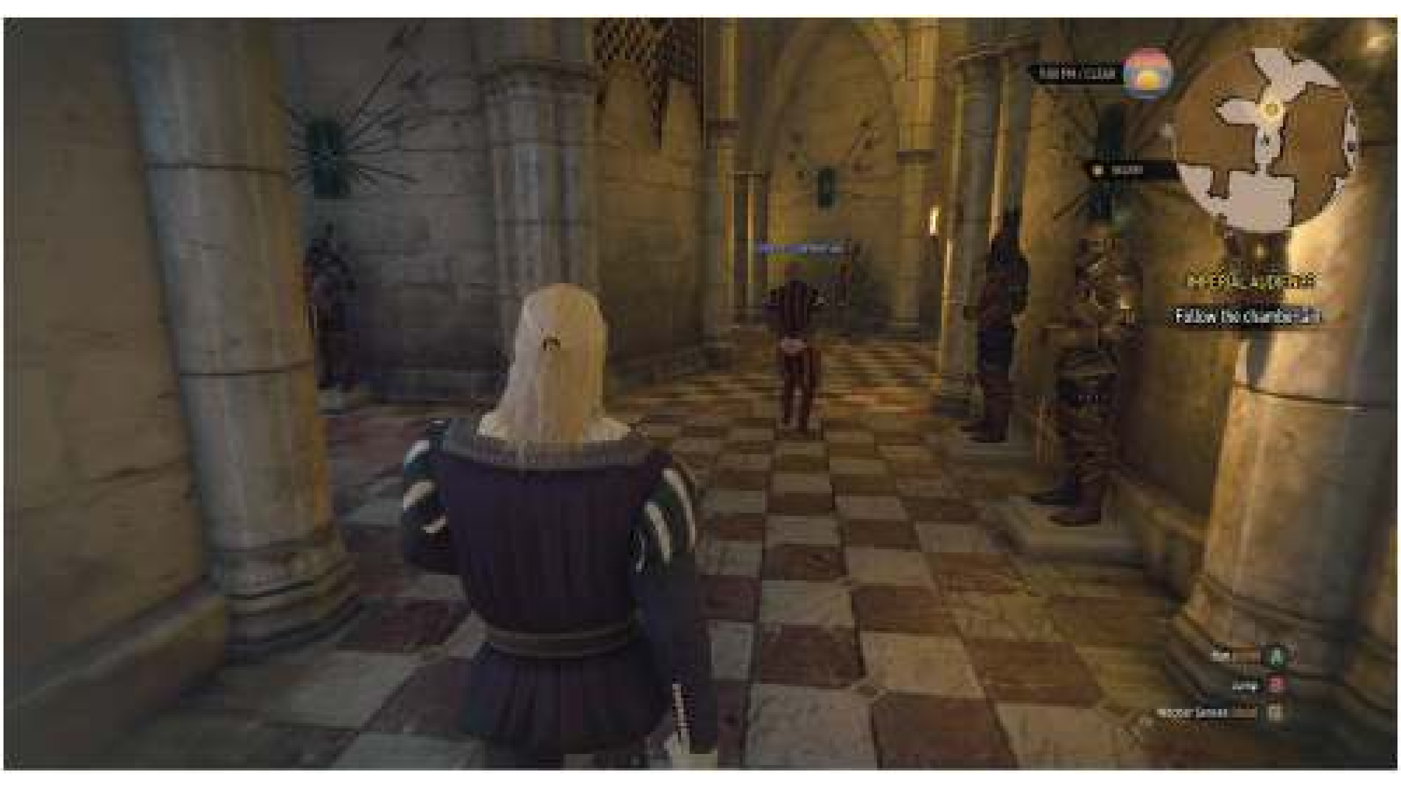
LOCATIONS : Vizima Royal Castle

CHARACTERS : Commander Morvran Voorhis, Emhyr's Chamberlain, Emperor Emhyr var Emreis, Yennefer, Ambassador var Attre

ENEMIES : None

OBJECTIVE:

- Get dressed and talk to the chamberlain.



After being bathed and carefully shaved, your initial tour of the Castle of Vizima commences with a talk from Morvran Voorhis about the altercation you had with the Wild Hunt. Then the Emhyr's Chamberlain—a pendant of a man with exacting standards and little time for facial hair—requests you choose an outfit for your forthcoming audience with the Nilfgaardian ruler.

Commander Morvran Voorhis

Emhyr's Chamberlain

Your talk with Morvran Voorhis can prove to be of major importance if you don't have a Witcher 2 save on your PC (though you can be playing on an Xbox One or PS4 to start this, too). The conversation turns to your following past exploits (the events of Witcher 2):

Arjan LaValette

- If you killed Arjan LaValette (PC save game), or tell Voorhis you did (PC, consoles without save game), your interactions with a woman named Molly are different during Main Quest: Broken Flowers.

The path of Roche or Iorveth

- This only effects a very small conversation choice during Main Quest: Get Junior, when you visit Roche's camp for the first time.

Sile de Tansarville

- If you allowed her to die (PC save game) or tell Voorhis this (PC, consoles without save game), she does not appear during Main Quest: The Great Escape.

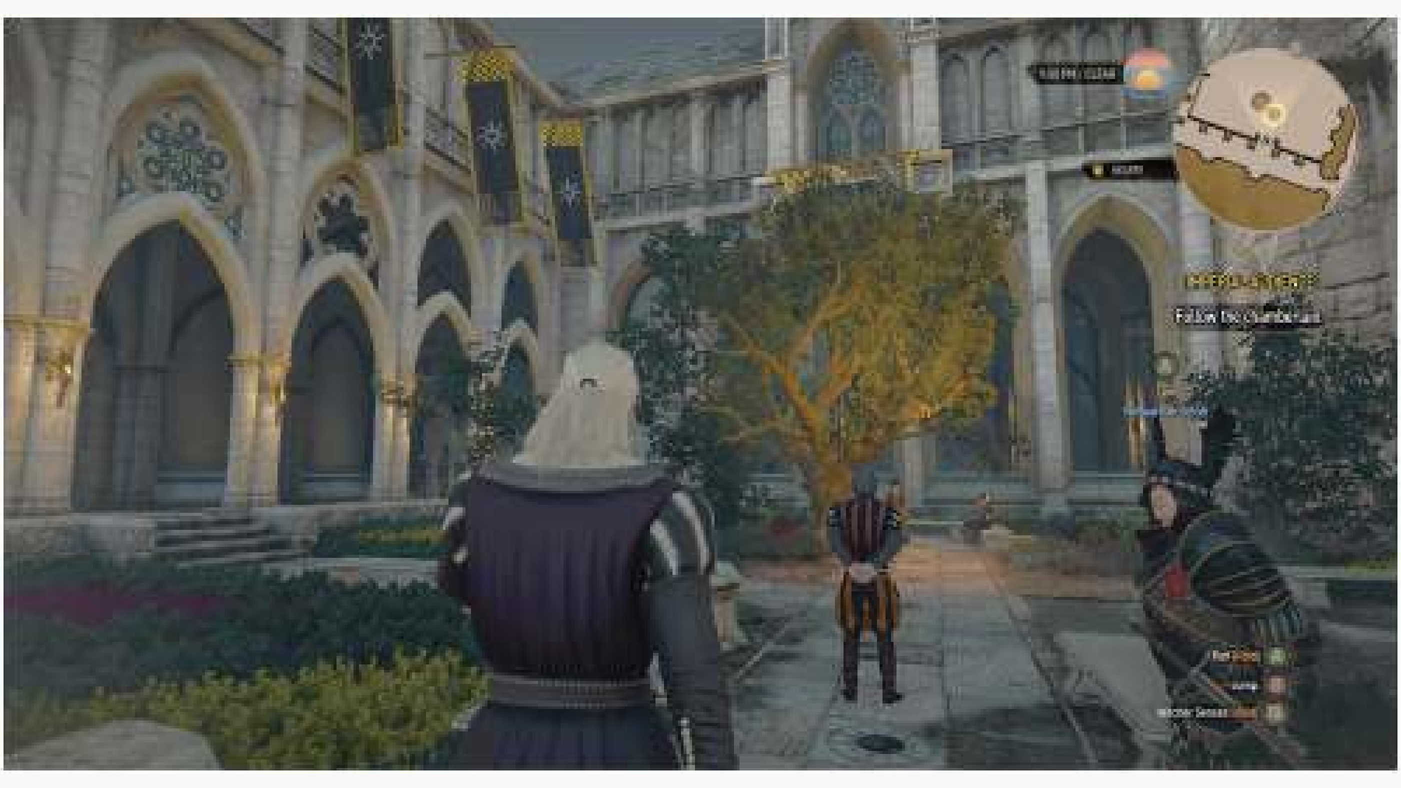
The Witcher Letho

- Answer any questions and mention Letho is still alive, and Secondary Quest: Ghosts of the Past, becomes active later.
- Mention that Letho is dead, or ignore the conversation, and Secondary Quest: Ghosts of the Past cannot be accessed.

OBJECTIVE:

- Follow the chamberlain.

To avoid a sassy response, choose any of the three outfits before you (pick your favorite), then enter your Inventory menu to wear it (since you won't be meeting the emperor wearing just a towel). Next, the chamberlain drones on about proper bowing etiquette. When it comes time to rehearse, choose "extend left leg forward, place right hand on chest" (the second option), or you'll be here a while. Then follow the chamberlain along the impressive castle hallway, up the stairs, to an audience with the emperor.



Your talk with the emperor is one-sided. He makes a different comment depending on whether you bow in front of him, then wishes that you search the lands for his daughter (Ciri) before the Wild Hunt catches her. Your agreement is unimportant. Then he waves you out of his chamber. Continue to follow the chamberlain into the great hall of the castle. Here, you have a chance to discuss politics and warfare with Morvran, or ignore these uptight Nilfgaardians. Then follow the chamberlain once more, through some formal gardens, to the entrance of Yennefer's room.

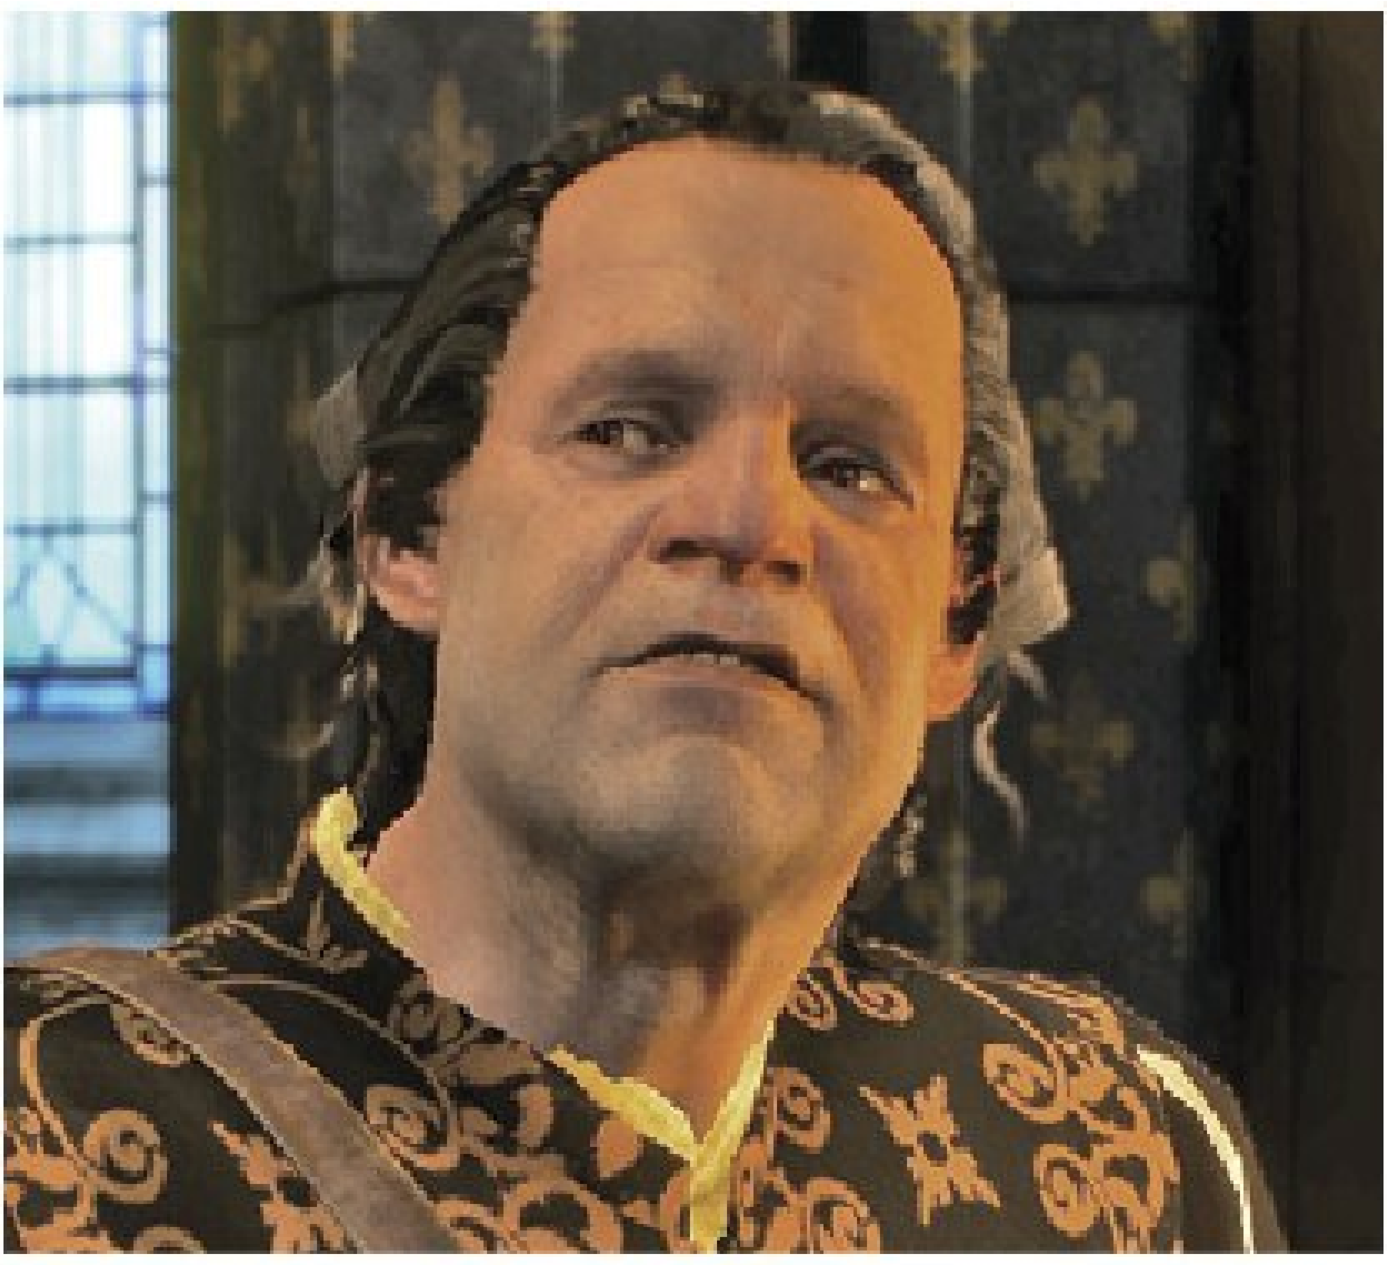
Main Quest: Imperial Audience

May the Great Sun Light Your Path

OBJECTIVE:

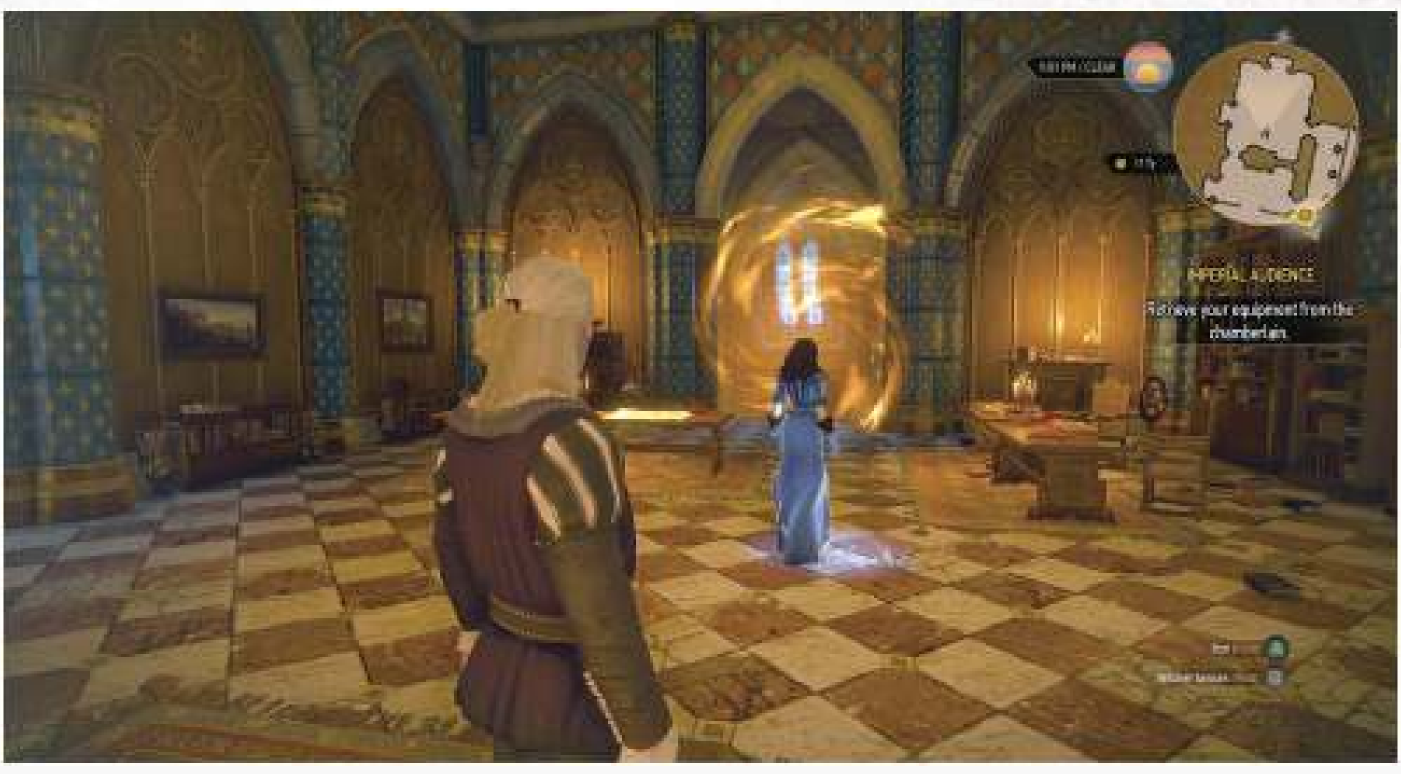
- Talk to Yennefer.

Pass the fireplace and enter Yennefer's bedchamber. It seems you and the emperor's goals are not too dissimilar. After seeing a recent etching of what Ciri looks like, ask Yennefer where she was last seen. The answers are two sprawling parts of the map—Velen and Novigrad.



Ambassador var Attre

Yennefer recommends the following:



- That the trail at Velen is most promising. Find a merchant named Hendrick at the Inn at the Crossroads to further your search.
- When you visit Novigrad, be on the look out for a “mutual acquaintance” named Triss Merigold to aid your progress.
- That you journey to Skellige after Yennefer, as she's set to head there to investigate a magic explosion that blew down half a forest. Meet her once you've learned something.
- That you speak to Ambassador var Attre (in the next room) to learn what happened in the world while you and Vesemir roamed the wilderness.

With that, she summons a portal and disappears into the ether.

OBJECTIVES:

- Retrieve your equipment from the chamberlain.
- Travel to Velen.

Feel free to check Yennefer's room for a personal letter, before optionally speaking to Attre about the war, the situation in Velen, Novigrad, and Skellige. Then exit the chambers, speaking to the chamberlain to gather your belongings (remember to equip everything!).

GWENT: ON THE CARDS

Optionally, locate the Nilfgaardian nobleman, and play Gwent with him, if you're interested in obtaining his card. He may not be here later, so it's worth pausing to play right now.

When you're ready, leave the castle via the large doors in the great hall to conclude this quest.

Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection

Bantering with the Baron's Boys

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE NILFGAARDIAN CONNECTION

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: The Bloody Baron; Main Quest: Witch Hunt
LOCATIONS : The Hanging Tree; Mulbrydale, Inn at the Crossroads, Heatherton
CHARACTERS : Hendrik
ENEMIES : Bandit, Rabid Dog

QUESTING DECISIONS

Though you are able to commence this Main Quest, which allows you to thoroughly explore No Man's Land (also known as Velen), you are free to start, stop, or go back to any other part of the Main Quest in any of the other major land masses of this realm. Your choices are as follows:

- Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection, and commence the Main Quests across Velen (No Man's Land) (this quest).
- Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad, and commence the Main Quests across Novigrad.
- Main Quest: Destination: Skellige, and commence the Main Quests across Skellige.

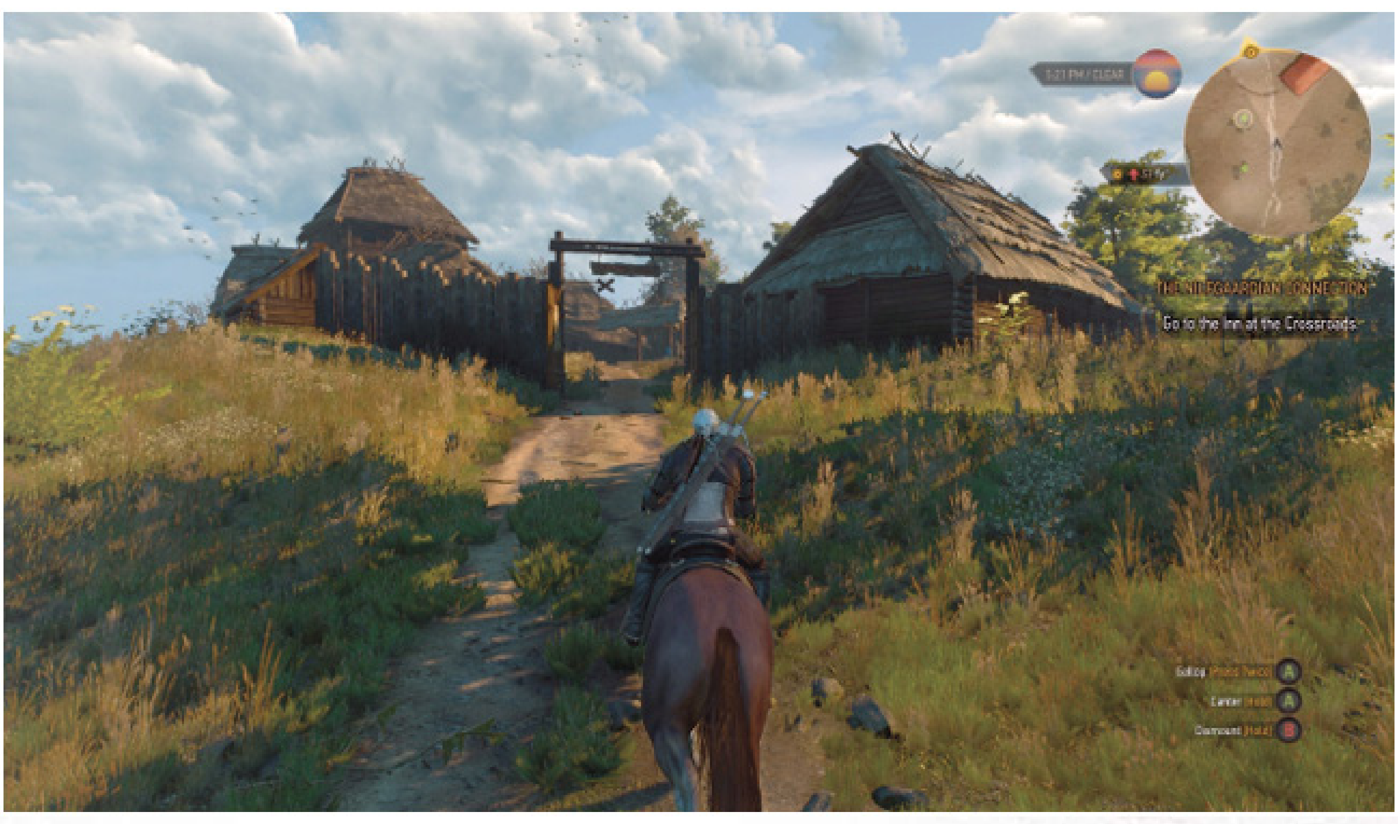
OBJECTIVE:

- Go to the Inn at the Crossroads.

Velen has been hardest hit in the recent wars, as is evidenced from the corpses swaying from the tree you pass, and the burned-out dwellings you witness as you follow the path through the hamlet of Mulbrydale. Continue on a roughly westerly direction to the river's edge, north to a ford, and across and up the hillock into the wooden-walled Inn at the Crossroads. Dismount at the inn's threshold, and enter.



OBJECTIVES:

- Finish talking to the innkeep about the agent called Hendrik.
- OR: Defeat the Baron's men.

You can have a natter at the two peasants sitting near the entrance, but you get little except a worried husband and scolding wife. Speak to the innkeep, ordering a drink until the peasants scarper, and some well-armored company saunters in, offering little but verbal offense against your kind. You can:

- Tell them to back off or die, and start a pitched battle with the Baron's men. Slay the three in the bar, then take the fight outside to a couple more henchmen near their horses.
- Tell them you're a witcher, offering some verbal put-downs, but ending the conversation without unsheathing your blade.
- Ask if the men would care for a drink, and pay for their alcohol. This civility is likely to pay dividends down the road.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS: DEALING WITH THE BARON'S MEN

These boisterous idiots are the guards of the Baron's fortification, and your actions with them affect how easy or difficult it is to gain entry into the Baron's fort at Crow's Perch during Main Quest: The Bloody Baron. The problems aren't insurmountable if you accidently kill everyone that offends you, but are considerably easier if you're a pleasant sort.

OBJECTIVE:

- Finish talking to the innkeep about Hendrik.

Conclude your chat with the innkeep, who explains where Hendrik is (Heatherton), what he's doing (shacked up with a widow) and his demeanor (he keeps to himself).

Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries (continued)

Continue the Quest

OBJECTIVE:

- Prepare to leave White Orchard with Vesemir.

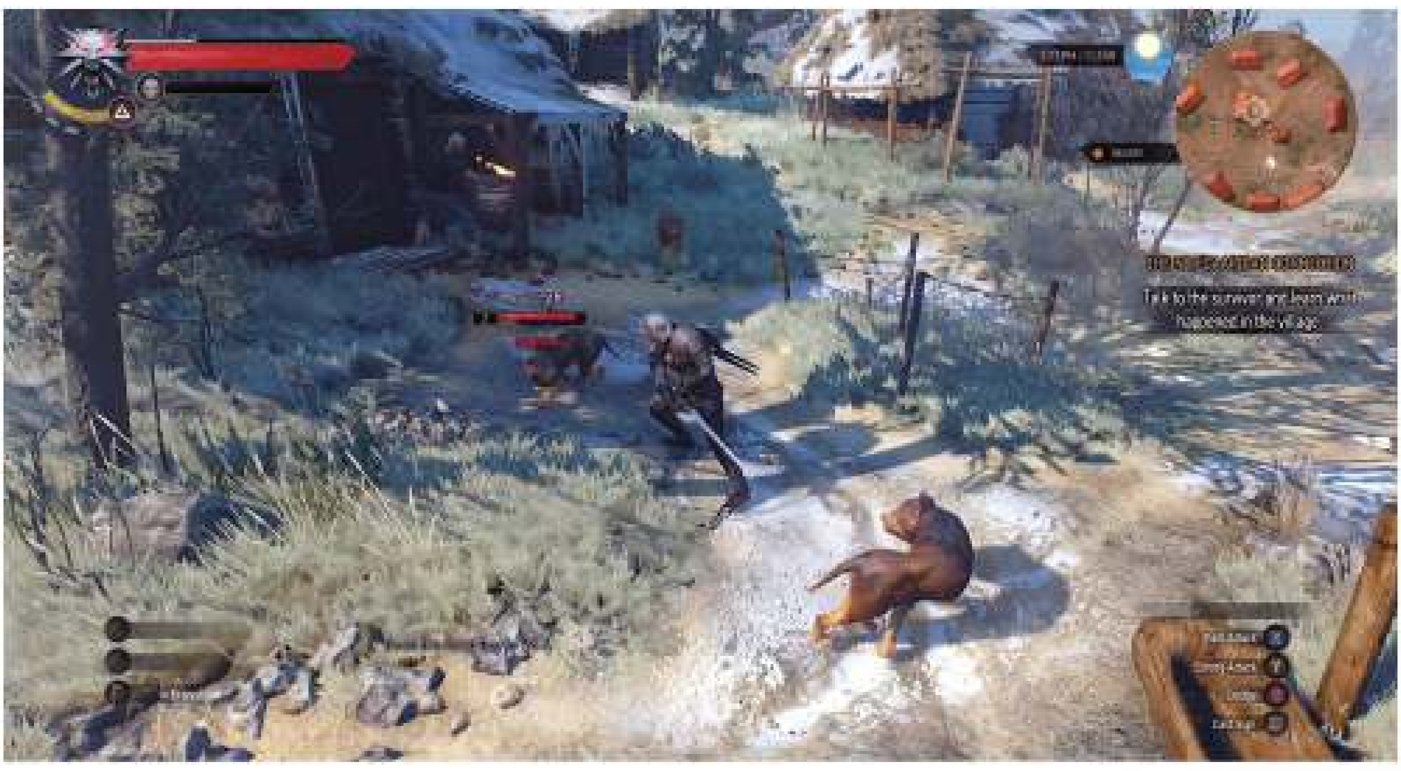
At this point, the quest concludes, and Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries starts up again. Travel back to White Orchard, and find Vesemir in the tavern you already frequented. This leads immediately to Main Quest: The Incident in White Orchard.

Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection

The Suffering of Heatherton

OBJECTIVES:

- Look for Hendrik in the village of Heatherton.
- Talk to the survivor and learn what happened in the village.



THE NILFGAARDIAN CONNECTION
Talk to the survivor and learn what happened in the village.

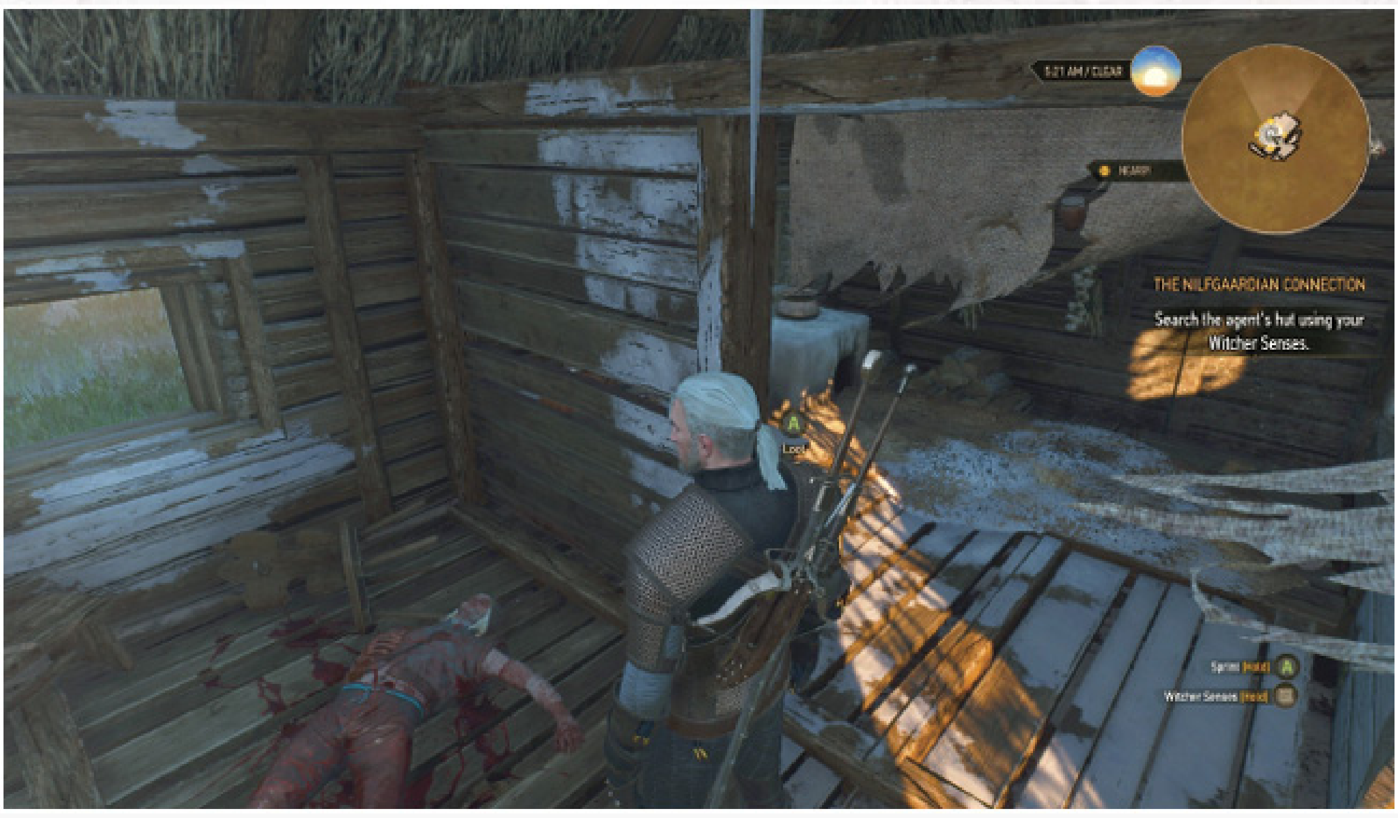
Depart from the Inn at the Crossroads, following the rough road eastward across fords and around forests. Avoid or engage any wild creatures, before descending a hill into the mist-laden Heatherton, seemingly cast in a strange frost. Wild dogs are picking the place clean; rid the only inhabitant of these scavengers before speaking with him.

The frightened villager must be calmed using Axii during conversation, after which he tells of the time the Wild Hunt razed this village, torturing poor Hendrik before casting a chill over the place.

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the agent called Hendrik.
- Search Hendrik's hut using your Witcher Senses.

Head to the cabin southwest of the addled villager. The bloodied corpse of Hendrik is easy to spot, hideous in his countenance. Rummage around in his clothing (specifically, his boots) to obtain a well-hidden key. Inspect the bear skin with your Witcher Senses; a draft reveals a trapdoor the key unlocks. Descend into the gloomy cellar.



THE NILFGAARDIAN CONNECTION
Search the agent's hut using your Witcher Senses.

With your Witcher Senses working, pass the poster offering a reward for the return of the Baron's daughter, and move into the adjacent room where Hendrik's merchant ledgers must be found. Investigate the candle holder mounted on a nearby wall between the two cellar rooms; use it and a secret compartment appears, revealing the ledgers.

- "Missing and Wanted": A report on someone matching Ciri's description appearing in Skellige.
- "Drunken Swine": That Ciri visited the Baron at his illegally-appropriated fort called Crow's Perch.
- "Clashed with a Witch": That Ciri landed in a swamp and there was conflict with a witch. Those in Midcopse may know more.v
- "Caution Advised": Hendrik remarks that he's being watched, his dog ran off, and there was a strange glow observed in the sky.

This quest concludes with the only two probable leads allowing you to begin two separate new Main Quests: The Bloody Baron and Witch Hunt.

Main Quest: Bloody Baron

Halt! Who Goes There?!

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: BLOODY BARON

CONVERGING QUESTS : Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection; Main Quest: The Bloody Baron; Main Quest: Witch Hunt

LOCATION : Crow's Perch

CHARACTERS : "Bloody" Baron Phillip Strenger, Sergeant Ardal, Old Peasant, Baron's Guard (you met at the Crossroads), Baron's Guard (Gatekeeper)

ENEMIES : Water Hag, Baron's Guards

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection concludes. However, your previous decisions affect this quest. Did you:

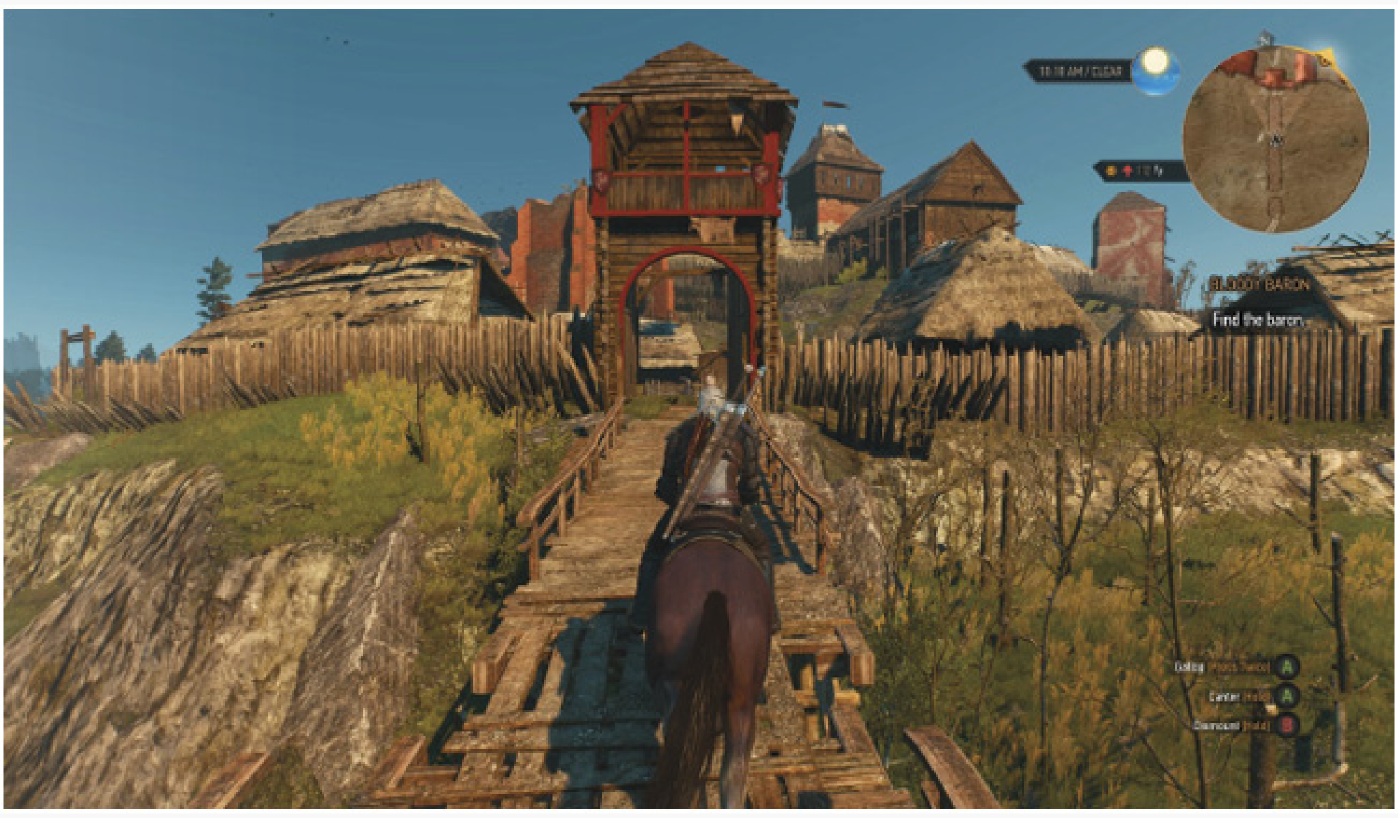
- Meet the Baron's men in the Inn at the Crossroads while completing The Nilfgaardian connection? If you did or didn't; you have minor conversation changes when attempting to enter Crow's Perch.
- Meet the Baron's men in the Inn at the Crossroads, and then buy them a drink? If you did, the soldiers aren't hostile, and you can enter Crow's Perch peacefully.
- Meet the Baron's men in the Inn at the Crossroads, and then kill them? If you did, the remaining soldiers are hostile, and you must find an alternate route into Crow's Perch.
- Avoid the Inn at the Crossroads entirely, and not run into the Baron's men? Then expect them not to trust you, leaving only crowns as payment for the method to gain entry (or the alternate way).

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to the Baron's castle.
- Find the Baron.

Locate the wooden fortification on a marshy tract of land known as Crow's Perch, and enter via the rickety bridge (or jump the gap of the adjacent, even more rickety bridge). Pass through into the small village behind the outer walls. Turn right (east), and head along the main thoroughfare to a large brick gate. Push open the doors, race up the hill and stop at the main gate and portcullis, where the signpost is. What follows is a conversation with the Baron's men:

- If you bought the Baron's men a drink, one of them is standing outside of this gate. Choose pleasant conversations, and you're let through into the inner courtyard, and you're told to follow the sergeant.
- If you weren't violent towards the Baron's men at the Inn at the Crossroads, or never met the Baron's men previously, four faces are guarding the outside of this gate. Choose pleasant conversations, and you're let through only after paying a bribe of 15 crowns. Then you're told to follow the sergeant.
- If you killed the Baron's men at the Inn at the Crossroads, two unfamiliar faces are guarding the portcullis from the inside. They know what you did, and aren't about to let you into this castle. You now need to find an alternate way to enter this place.



UNDERGROUND OR OVER GROUND

You can choose to find a different way into the castle even if the Baron's men aren't hostile.

Main Quest: Bloody Baron

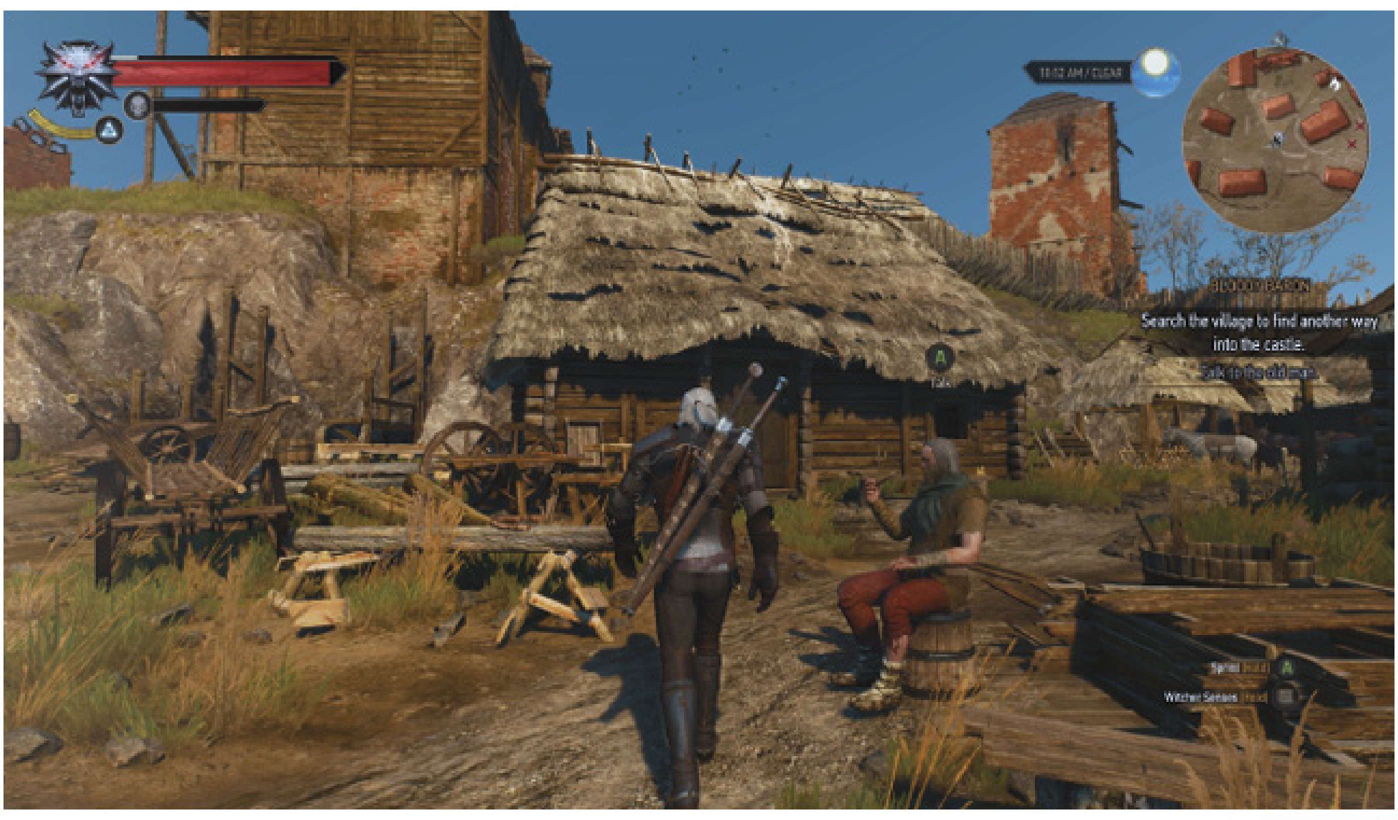
A Forceful Path: Investigations Lead to a Submerged Swim

OBJECTIVES:

- Search the village to find another way into the castle.
- Talk to the old man.

NONE SHALL PASS

If you try this path before completing Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection, the cave leading under Crow's Perch is blocked by fallen debris, with two of the Baron's men standing around arguing about who will clear it up. Arrive here during this quest, and the blockage has been removed.



Return to the village, and inspect this mostly deserted place—the villagers fled at the sight of you—for signs of someone who can help. An old geezer resting by the side of the thoroughfare is too old to move, but reckons he knows another way into the castle. For a humble offering, of course. You can:

- (15 Crowns) Agree to pay the man, who tells you a story of a boy, drowned by a well near a shrine. A well that the man is certain leads into the castle via a submerged passage. The location of where the boy's body is found now appears on your minimap.
- Refuse to pay the man, and simply search the surrounding area outside the castle (using this guide) to uncover the entrance.

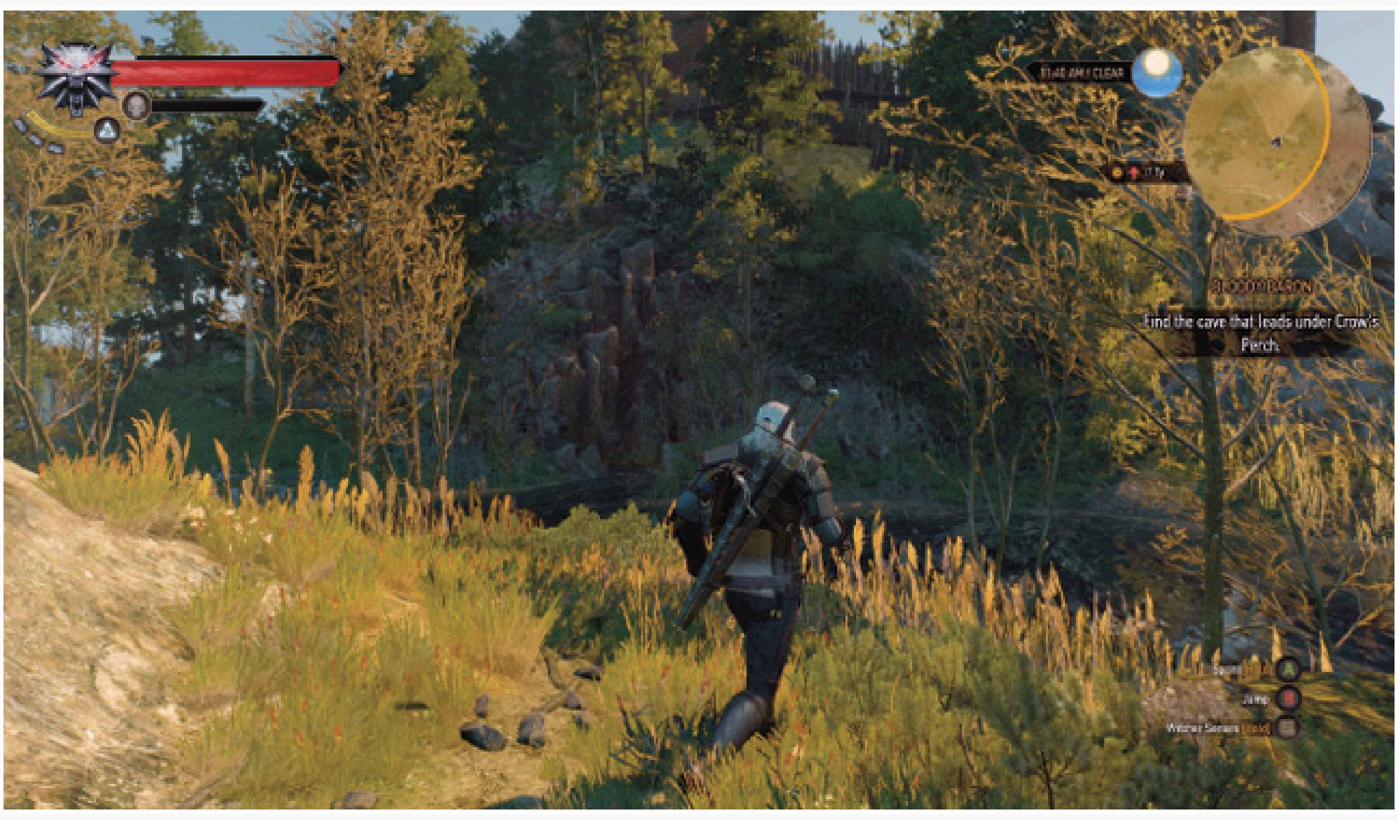
ANYBODY HOME?

You can visit the village at the foot of the main fort, and knock on every door to see if the inhabitants can help. Nobody answers, but you can hear them murmuring about your terrible reputation.

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the area where the boy's body was found.
- Find the cave that leads under Crow's Perch.
- Dive underwater to enter the cave.

Call Roach, gallop down the rickety bridge and swing right (west), following the trail to an area of grassy high ground northwest of Crow's Perch. Locate this shrine, then wade down into the moat. A few steps to the southeast is an opening. Dive underwater, and swim southeast, and then south before surfacing inside the cave.



OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the cave and find a way into the castle.
- Climb up through the old well to enter the castle.

Climb onto the dry ground, vault up and over the climbable rocks, and look around until you spot light above—and a warty old water hag in front of you. After dispatching her, find a rough slope of stalagmites to ascend between, leading to a lamp-lit well with a ladder. Climb the ladder, and extract yourself from the well, landing in the gardens where the Baron awaits.

Main Quest: Bloody Baron

A Peaceful Path: Strolling Through the Crow's Perch Bailey

Main Quest: Bloody Baron

End: One Tough C--ker

Baron Phillip Strenger

The Baron is meeting with a Nilfgaardian officer. He promptly leaves, and the Baron speaks with you in an almost jovial manner, asking you to join him in his chambers. Your conversation choices should be based on your personal preferences; you can refuse a tipple or choose vodka if you wish. After some further waffle, the Bloody Baron finally reveals some juicy information. It seems Ciri visited the Baron appearing exhausted, wounded, and stinking like a soaked hound after a hard hunt. This quest now concludes, and Ciri's Story: The King of the Wolves begins.

Main Quest: Ciri's Story: The King of the Wolves

Wolf Killer

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: CIRI'S STORY: THE KING OF THE WOLVES

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: The Bloody Baron, Main Quest: Family Matters

LOCATION : Riverbed near Lindenvale

CHARACTERS : Ciri, Gretka, Baron Phillip Stenger, Geralt

ENEMIES : Wolves, King of the Wolves

ARE YOU LOST?

This quest (which is the first of many to take the form of a flashback of Ciri's adventure before Geralt's) becomes available immediately after the conclusion of Main Quest: The Bloody Baron.

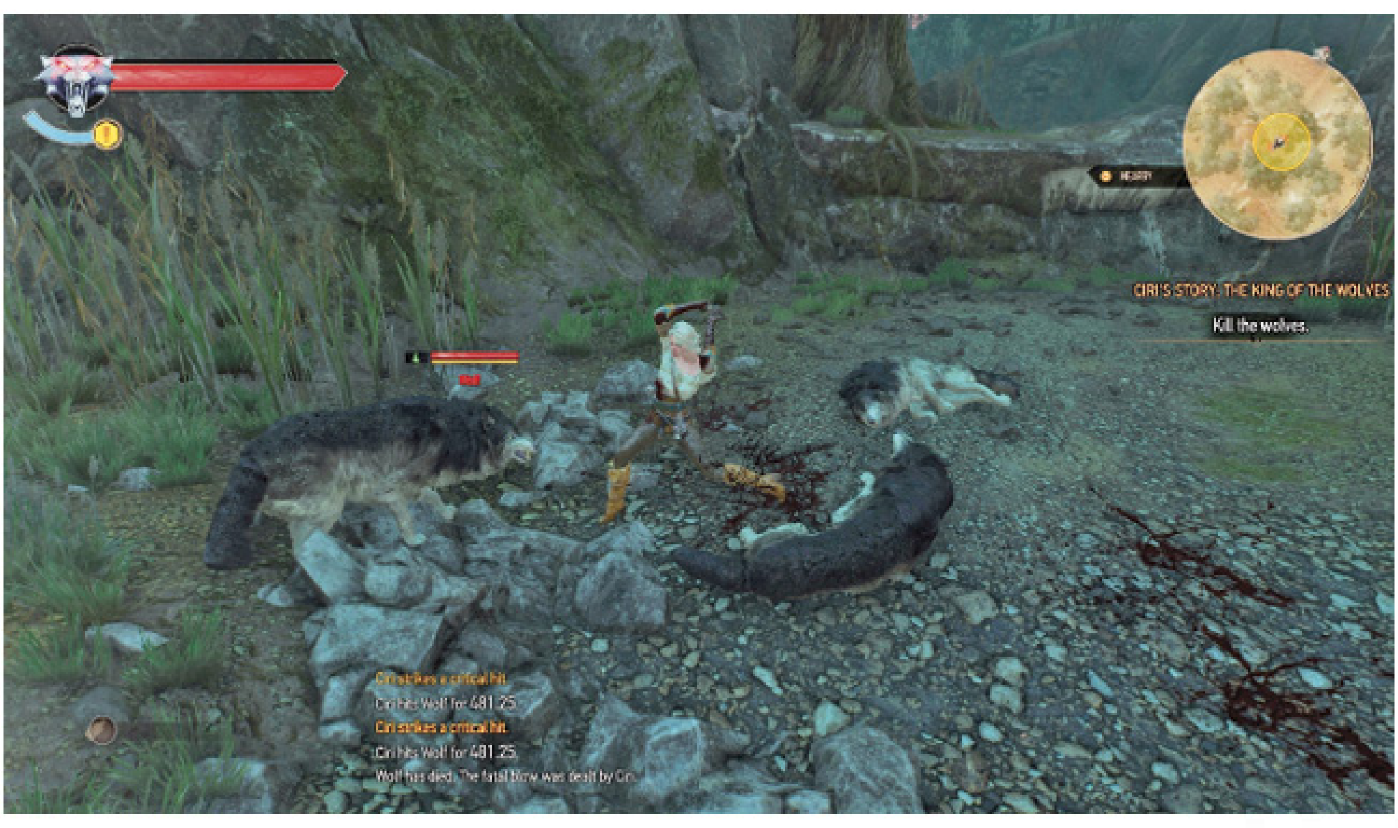
GRACE UNDER PRESSURE: CONTROLLING CIRILLA

Ciri is now the character that you control. She has the same maneuvering techniques as Geralt. In subsequent quests she develops some impressive magical capabilities. To further your knowledge of controlling her, see the Playing as Cirilla section.

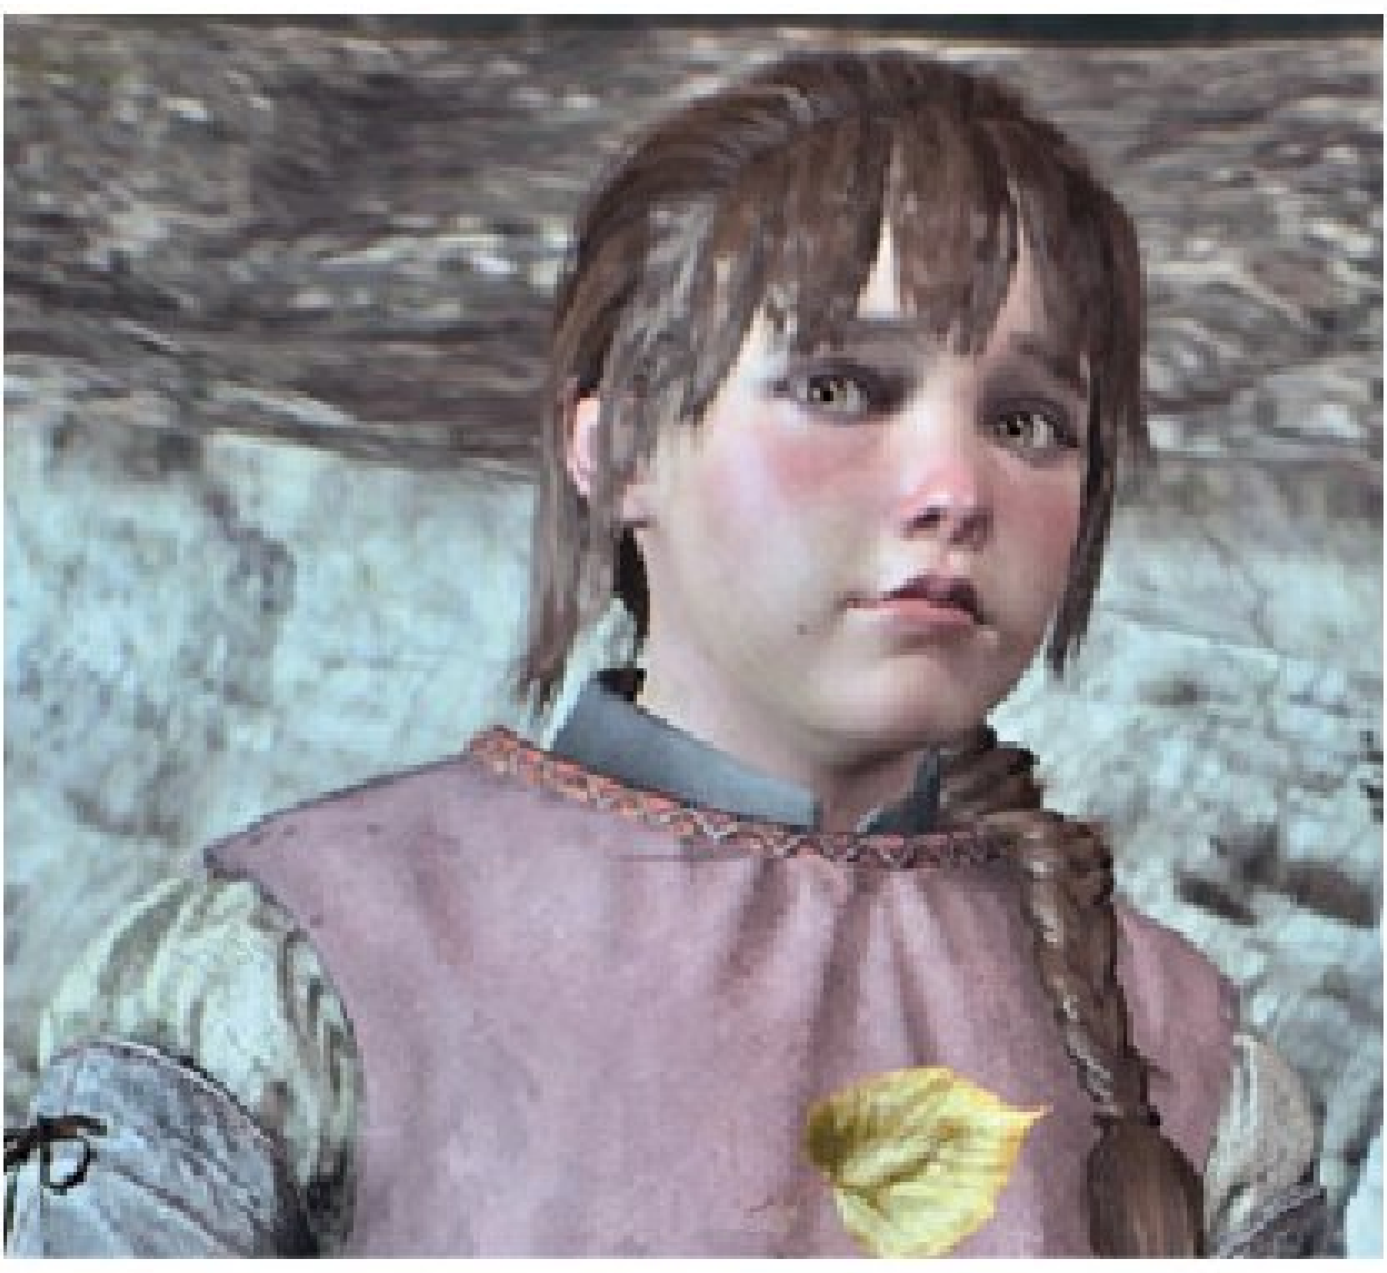
OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the riverbed and find help.
- Kill the wolves.

You land roughly with a thud. The river bank walls are too steep to climb. So you must venture forward, wading into the water and heading in a vaguely northerly direction along the pooled water of the low-running river.



Ciri strikes a critical hit.
Ciri hits Wolf for 481.25.
Ciri strikes a critical hit.
Ciri hits Wolf for 481.25.
Wolf has died. The fatal blow was dealt by Ciri.



Gretka

A quick look ahead and up reveals a trio of wolves prowling a tree. A girl sits petrified, up on a high branch. Defeat these wolves with gusto, and rescue the girl (Gretka) and agree to follow her to Lindenvale. She murmurs something about "The Wolf King," but reassure her that, despite your wounds, you're more than a match for any hairy beast.

HARVESTING

There are numerous plants to pick along the river bed, and wolf corpses to search. Do this now, as you're required to later.

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Gretka.
- Protect Gretka from the wolves.

A few yards farther, Gretka retreats in fright and leaves you to slay a pack of five wolves ripping at a cow's carcass. Continue down the river bed, to the remains of half a boat, and even less of a corpse, torn and mangled. With Gretka away from this horror, inspect the following:

- The eyes—bloodshot and moist; he died recently.
- The head—his lips are parted and bloated; he bit through his tongue.
- The chest—crushed, with ribs piercing the fellow's lungs.
- The leg—something gnawed off one of his legs.
- The belly—strewn intentines cover the boat like escaping sausage.

Summing up: a lycanthrope slaughtered this hapless peasant. This requires the mixing of some potent blade oil your uncle Vesemir taught you to brew, to help you when you face "The Wolf King."

NO FIENDS HERE

It is extremely important that you check the key wounds of this corpse (the chest, leg, and belly) to conclude these wounds were made by a werewolf. If you don't, your conclusion is that a fiend was responsible. This results in you preparing a different oil (that is effective against relics, and not lycanthropes). The recipe is similar (three mistletoe instead of three wolfsbane), but this oil is useless against the King of the Wolves, and combat becomes more difficult.

Main Quest: Ciri's Story: The King of the Wolves

You Afraid? Then I'm Not, Neither

OBJECTIVES:

- Acquire dog tallow (1).
- Acquire wolf's liver (1).
- Gather fool's parsley (2).
- Gather wolfsbane (3).

The first two items are found on the corpses of wolves. The second two items grow naturally along the river bed; so carefully continue down the river bed, picking plants as you go. Stop to defeat the three wolves, and search them for items. Don't venture further than the dead dog if you want to concoct your blade oil. With all ingredients found, you pause and grease your sword.

PATIENCE WITH YOUR POTIONS

If you ignore the acquisition of these ingredients, the forthcoming fight becomes much more of a dangerous slog.

If you mistakenly made oil that affects relics, when you strike the werewolf, it utilizes a skill called Full Moon, causing it to bulk up in size and transform into a stronger entity.

Now follow Gretka down the dry waterfall, and head right slightly into the foreboding cave, rather than towards Lindenvale itself.

OBJECTIVE:

- Kill the werewolf.

You need not meditate because you've already prepared for this battle. Take your greased-up silver sword and bound down to attack the King of the Wolves, a hefty werewolf that must be cut down. After the battle, you're taken to Crow's Perch, where the confused peasant isn't given any kind of reward for rescuing the Baron's daughters, as neither of them are apparently his kin, but Ciri is allowed to rest.

Now Geralt and the Baron are talking. Agree to help the Baron in the search for his missing daughter, and in the process learn more about Ciri's actions and whereabouts. This quest concludes, while the Main Quest: Family Matters and the Secondary Quest: Ciri's Room both begin.

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: FAMILY MATTERS

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Ciri's Story: The King of the Wolves, Secondary Quest: Ciri's Room, Main Quest: A Princess in Distress

LOCATIONS : Crow's Perch, Blackbough

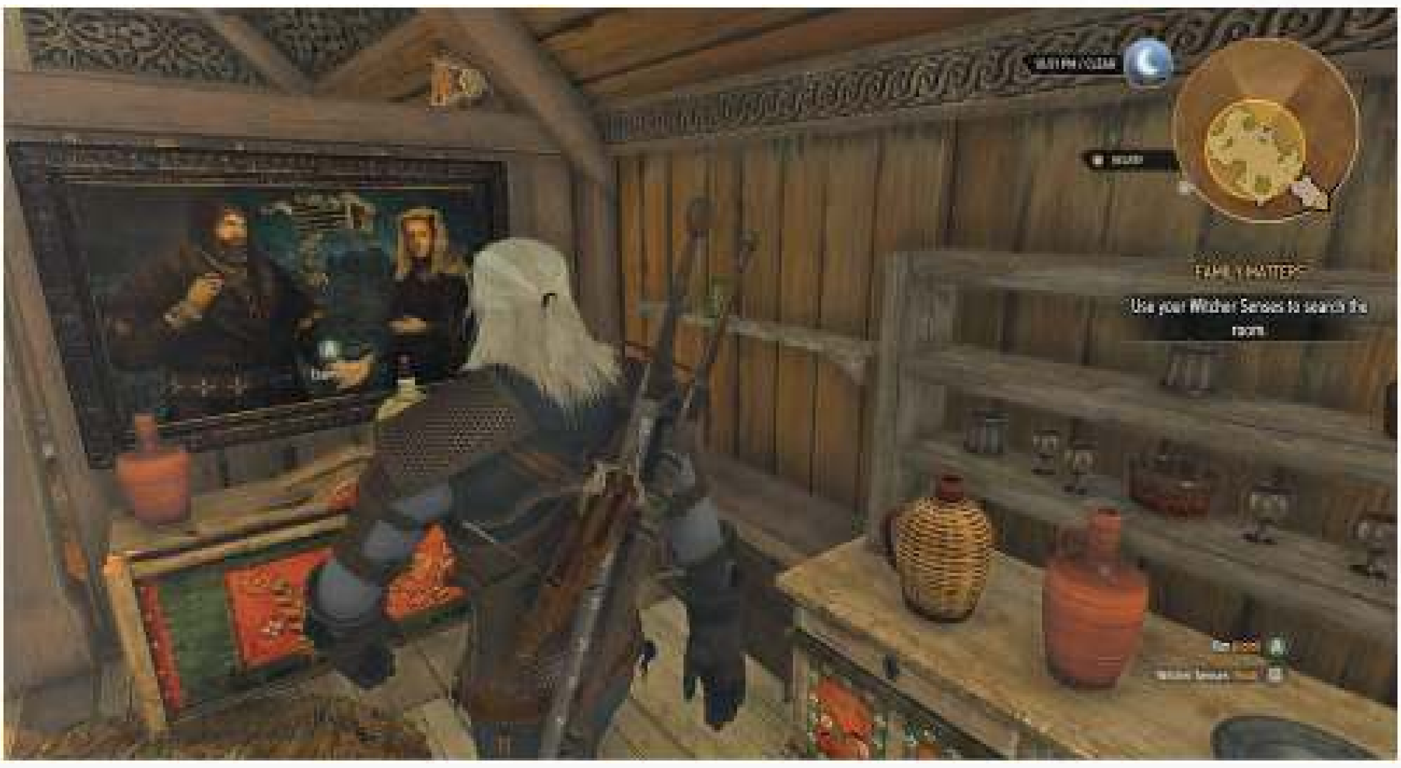
CHARACTERS : Baron Phillip Strenger, The Pellar

ENEMIES : Baron's Men

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the Baron.
- Use your Witcher Senses to search the room.

Follow the Baron up the stairs (listening to the anecdote about his daughter Tamara and a deer's arse), enter the Baron's bedchamber, and then Tamara's nearby room. You're here to make a thorough and complete sweep of all rooms on this floor of the castle, with your Witcher Senses picking out areas of particular interest. In the Baron's bedchamber, find the following:



- A wooden candlestick with a broken stem.
- Fresh flowers on a side table (the Baron hopes his kin will return soon).
- A differently-colored section of the right wall where a painting once hung.
- A picture of the Baron and his wife. They look happy enough until you examine this picture more closely—which was moved from the right wall—and discover a hole behind the painting.
- Head around to the wardrobe behind the painting. Inside is a piece of candlestick; someone smashed it against a wall, and it broke through into the wardrobe.
- Check the wooden pillar near the desk; there are deep nicks as if a heavy object struck it.
- Return to the table with the candlestick on it. You can now make out wine stains from a smashed bottle. The wine stains are still visible.

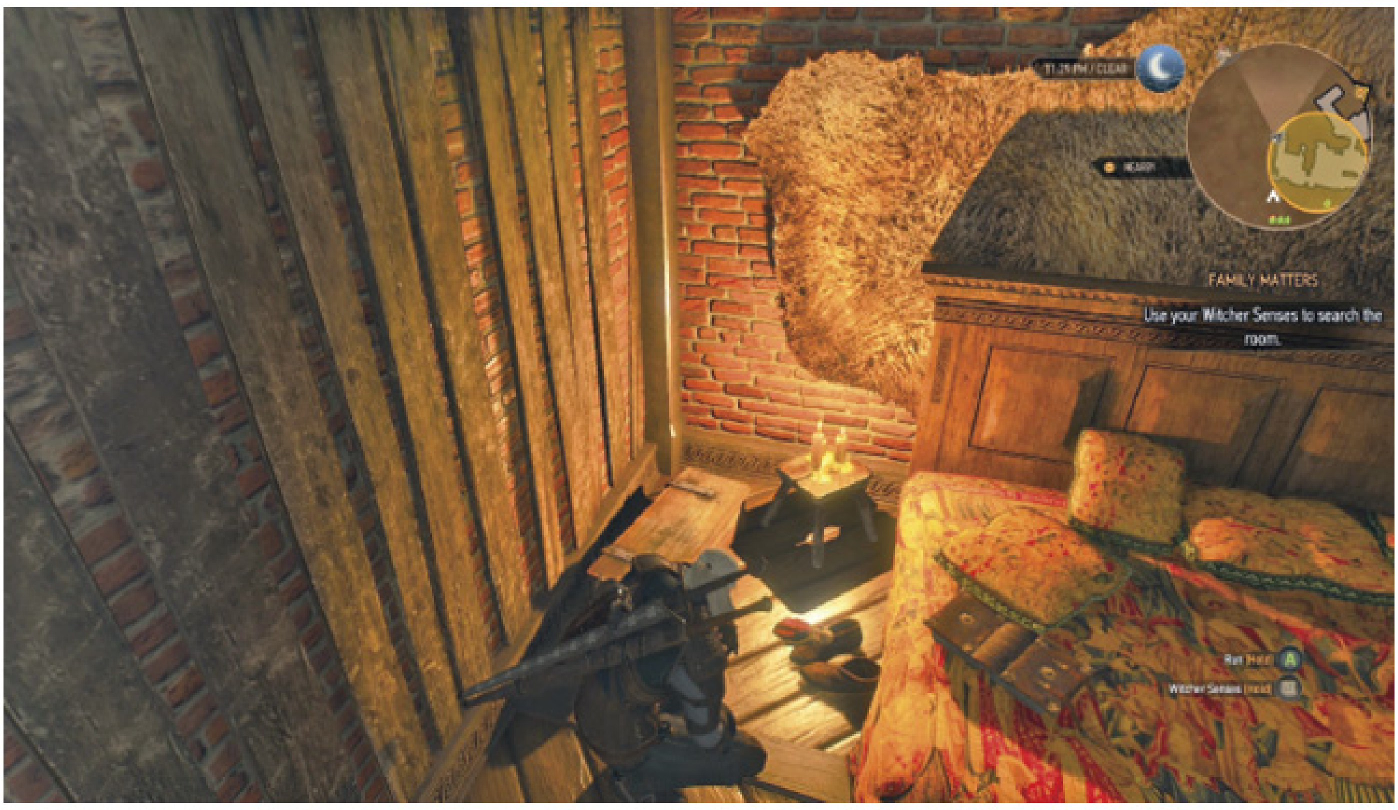
Follow the scent trail across the landing and down the steps you just walked up with the Baron. As the scent disperses on the small landing between floors, examine a loose floorboard, and remove a strange folk talisman hidden underneath.

ITEM: Quest Item: Talisman

Main Quest: Family Matters

Tamara's Hidden Tabernacle

The room to the right of the stairs (Tamara’s room) also yields some interesting information, even though this is purely an optional investigation:



- An ugly doll by the side of the bed.
- A letter to Tamara on a sideboard, which can be read to give you clues to her background and whereabouts.
- Incense and an old rusty key can be found in a wardrobe here, too.

ADDITIONAL LOOT

There are numerous chests and furniture to loot as well, though it’s best if you check no one is looking before rifling through the Baron’s belongings.

OBJECTIVE:

- Use your Witcher Senses to locate where the scent is coming from.

Find the incense and old rusty key in the wardrobe in Tamara’s chamber. When you wish to follow the scent of saffron, use your Witcher Senses to see the misty odor, and follow it down the stairs. This eventually leads down to a gloomy basement. You must maneuver between sacks of goods and grain to reveal a secretly-prepared shrine to the Eternal Fire, a religious sect famous for their hatred of mages. Examine the bowl with burning coal if you wish. There is also a prayer, seemingly written by Tamara.

There’s another optional area to explore too. Inside the dining room where you first spoke with the Baron is a letter revealing Nilfgaardian demands on the Baron, as well as a few guards exhibiting just the right amount of contempt for your kind.

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: CIRI'S ROOM

OBJECTIVES:

- Examine the room where Ciri stayed using your Witcher Senses.
- Go to the kitchen and talk to Gretka.

Yet more evidence awaits you in Ciri's room, which is across from the kitchens on this floor (last door on the right). Inside you discover:

- A spinning top, which looks to belong to Gretka, who was rescued from the King of the Wolves.
- A set of Ciri's clothing (it seems she might have escaped via a nearby window).
- A strange book on the desk (read the notes from this book, and you discover Ciri was researching curses for some reason).

ITEM: Quest Item: Spinning Top, Quest Item: The Natural Obscurity of Curses

Move to the the kitchen area, farther along this floor (last door on the left, past the barracks and the passage on the right leading outside). Here you find Gretka resting near the barrels in a storage area, taking a break from her hired chores. She tries to be helpful, especially after you give her the Spinning Top Ciri made for her, and mentions Ciri's recent activities. This Secondary Quest now concludes.

MAIN QUEST: FAMILY MATTERS (PART 2)

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: A Princess in Distress; Main Quest: Ciri's Story: The Great Race

LOCATIONS : Crow's Perch, Smokehouse, Pellar's Hut, Wolven Glade, Fisherman's Hut, Oxenfurt

CHARACTERS : Oswin the Stablehand, Baron Phillip Strenger, Botchling (Dea), Lubberkin, the Pellar, Voytek the Fisherman, Tamara Strenger, Graden, Uma

ENEMIES : Botchling, Drowner, Rotfiend, Wraiths, Endriaga, Wolves

OBJECTIVES:

- Read the bestiary to learn more about botchlings.
- Talk to the Baron.

A thorough read of your Bestiary entry on botchlings reveals the true horror of their creation. Now gallop back to Crow's Perch. As you arrive, you may notice one of the large structures within the castle's walls has been set ablaze! Race up to the inner bailey. It seems the Baron has set the stables alight, and has drunk himself into a violent stupor. One of the stablehands is trapped inside the burning stables, along with the horses. You can:

- Choose to save Oswin the stablehand, and his mares. Additional objectives are available before you meet the Baron. Attempt this, and you receive gratitude and a reward (in the form of crowns) from Oswin himself, once you leave Crow's Perch.
- Or more callously ignore the whinnying and screams, and focus on finding the Baron himself.

OBJECTIVES:

- Save the stable hand and the horses trapped in the burning stable.
- Open the main gate to stables.

Race to the stables (the larger of the two burning buildings) and climb the exterior ladder, with Aard ready to cast. Work your way through the collapsing structure. When you reach a blockage, remove it using Aard. Drop down to the pens where Oswin and the horses are, and open the gate. Scramble to the right, head to the main gate, open it, and free the whinnying steeds.

At the witching hour, follow the Baron down to the ruins of an old stone structure where the child's corpse was left, but not laid to rest. The botchling is on the prowl. You can:

- Bury a botchling under the family's threshold, so it turns into a lubberkin (a spirit that could lead you to his family).
- Kill the botchling, syphon its blood, and take it to the pellar.

The option you choose impacts the remainder of this quest, since there are two methods to pick from.

Main Quest: Family Matters (Part 2)

A Sobering Conversation with Baron Strenger

OBJECTIVE:

- Defeat the Baron in a fistfight.

Whether you saved the stablehand and horses or not, you must find the Baron close to the burning structure, and try talking to him. He is sotted, and can't be reasoned with; pummel him into submission with your fists and feet.

With knowledge of the Baron's violent behavior, tell the Baron he already knew his kin ran away, and choose any of the main conversation choices depending on how disgusted you are with the Baron (this only affects his verbal responses). He recalls the time Anna fled; a grim recollection of a bedchamber with blood everywhere. It was there on the bed—a stillborn. There was little else to do than take it outside and bury it. Now this child has turned. It is a botchling, with a blood bond still strong between it and the Baron's wife. This is the key to finding Anna and Tamara. For now, you wait until midnight, and dig the tiny corpse up.

Life for a Lubberkin: Keeping the Little One Calm

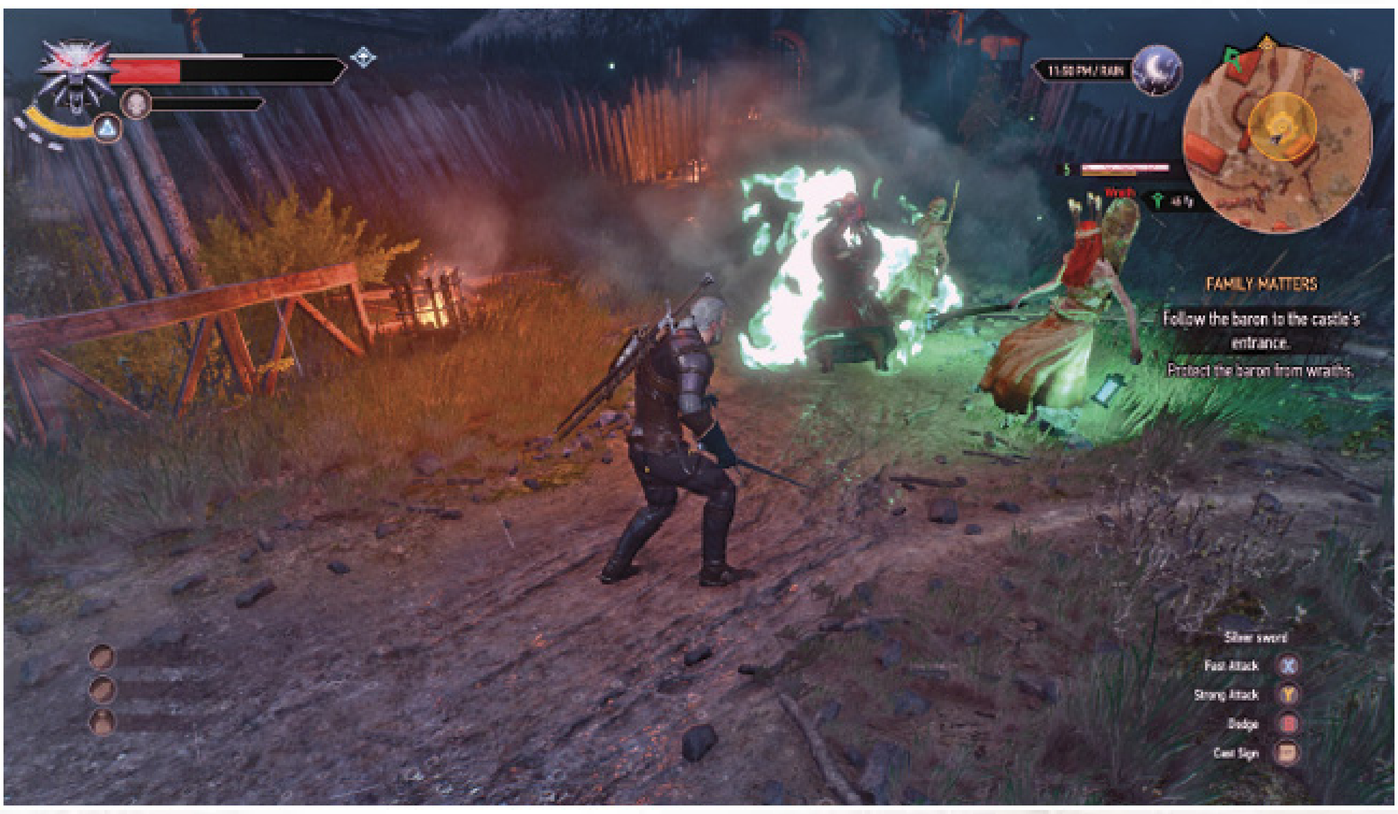
OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the Baron to the castle's entrance.
- Use the Axii Sign to calm the botchling.
- Protect the Baron from the wraiths.

If you spared the botchling's life, you order the Baron to gather the tiny terror into his arms, and head back up to the castle's threshold. Follow him as he goes, pausing only to deliver some killing blows on wraiths attracted to this abomination. Periodically, the botchling starts to squirm in the Baron's arms, and must be calmed. You can:

- Cast Axii close by the Baron, and keep the botchling placated.
- Ignore the Baron, or cast Axii too late, after which the botchling transforms into a much more dangerous form, which can't be reasoned with. It must be slain, and the second option (syphoning its blood) chosen.

Assuming you keep the botchling calm, you chaperone the Baron up through the castle's entrance, into the inner bailey, before tackling two more wraiths along the way. Finally at the threshold (by the main castle building), the Baron recites a chant, and the little one is consumed by the dirt. In one day's time, Dea should change into a lubberkin.



Follow the baron to the castle's entrance.
Protect the baron from wraiths.

OBJECTIVES:

- Wait a day to be able to call the lubberkin.
- Summon it where the botchling is buried.
- Follow the lubberkin.

Interact with the grave (you automatically wait until midnight while meditating), and after some incantations, a blue transparent ghost rises up; the lubberkin has been summoned! This transparent miscreant darts off, and must be followed (on foot or horseback). It leaves Crow's Perch, heads left (southeast) past some drowners you should dispatch, to a lone smokehouse with a strange smell, near the Burned Ruins marker.

- Head—Torn clean off by a powerful beast.

Death to the Botchling: A Ritual at Wolven Glade

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the pellar.
- Prepare for the ritual and light the fires (3).
- Relight the fires in the braziers if they go out during the ritual (3).

Set off to find the pellar, at his previously-visited hut near Blackbough. Speak to him and convince him to perform a small ritual, deep within the woods to the north. Follow the pellar through this forest, removing any threats of wolves along the way. You reach the ancient circle of rocks—known to the locals as Wolven Glade—after speaking with the pellar about Vserad, the old lord of these lands. You are instructed to prepare for the ritual by lighting three brazier fires. Before the last one is lit (use Igni), you should meditate and prepare for a fraught battle to come. Do not come to the Wolven Glade unprepared!

The pellar daubs his face with botchling blood, and begins prophesying. As the winds whip up, and a flock of crows appear at each brazier in turn, their beating wings snuff the fires out. This creates a breach in the light through which wraiths can enter the circle and attack you! Relight these fires immediately, keeping a constant watch on all three of them. When one fire goes out, the longer you take to relight it, the greater the chances there is of more crows appearing to snuff out the next light, summoning more wraiths.

RITUAL BURNINGS: KEEPING YOURSELF SAFE

There are some tactics to ensure the ritual doesn't become overrun with wraiths:

- Position yourself close to the braziers and wait, so you can quickly relight them with Igni, rather than wasting time sprinting across the glade to light one.
- Don't use Igni as a Sign, but rather as an interaction at the brazier; the latter doesn't consume your Stamina.
- Concentrate on lighting the braziers first, before dealing with any wraiths, so further crows and wraiths don't appear.

Every time the braziers are fully lit, the pellar continues his prophecy. Once his seering is complete, no more wraiths enter the circle, so finish any remaining ones off. Expect to light the braziers three times. Fortunately, at the end of the ritual, the pellar speaks about a fisherman named Voytek, who apparently knows the whereabouts of Tamara and Anna. Afterwards, you can decide on the following:

- Walk the pellar back through the woods to his hut, to acquire his gratitude and a small reward.

- Tell the old man to traipse back to his hut on his own.

With your new found knowledge about Voytek, you can simply ride to the fisherman's hut.

You can learn more about the Baron, the "thing" that grabbed Tamara's mum and disappeared into the woods, and the miscarriage. She won't see the Baron again, as she has new—and powerful—friends, the Church of the Eternal Fire: Redanian witch hunters. Graden, a witch hunter in the service of Roadovid of Redania saunters in to belittle you. But you leave Tamara to make her own decisions, and this objective ends.

- If, after talking to Voytek, you returned to the Baron instead, he asks you to find Tamara. Agree, and as you leave, the Baron stops and hands you a doll; the one you may have found earlier in Tamara's room. During your conversation with Tamara, you can hand her this doll, and the conversation is slightly different, and more emotional.

MAIN QUEST: CIRI'S STORY: THE RACE

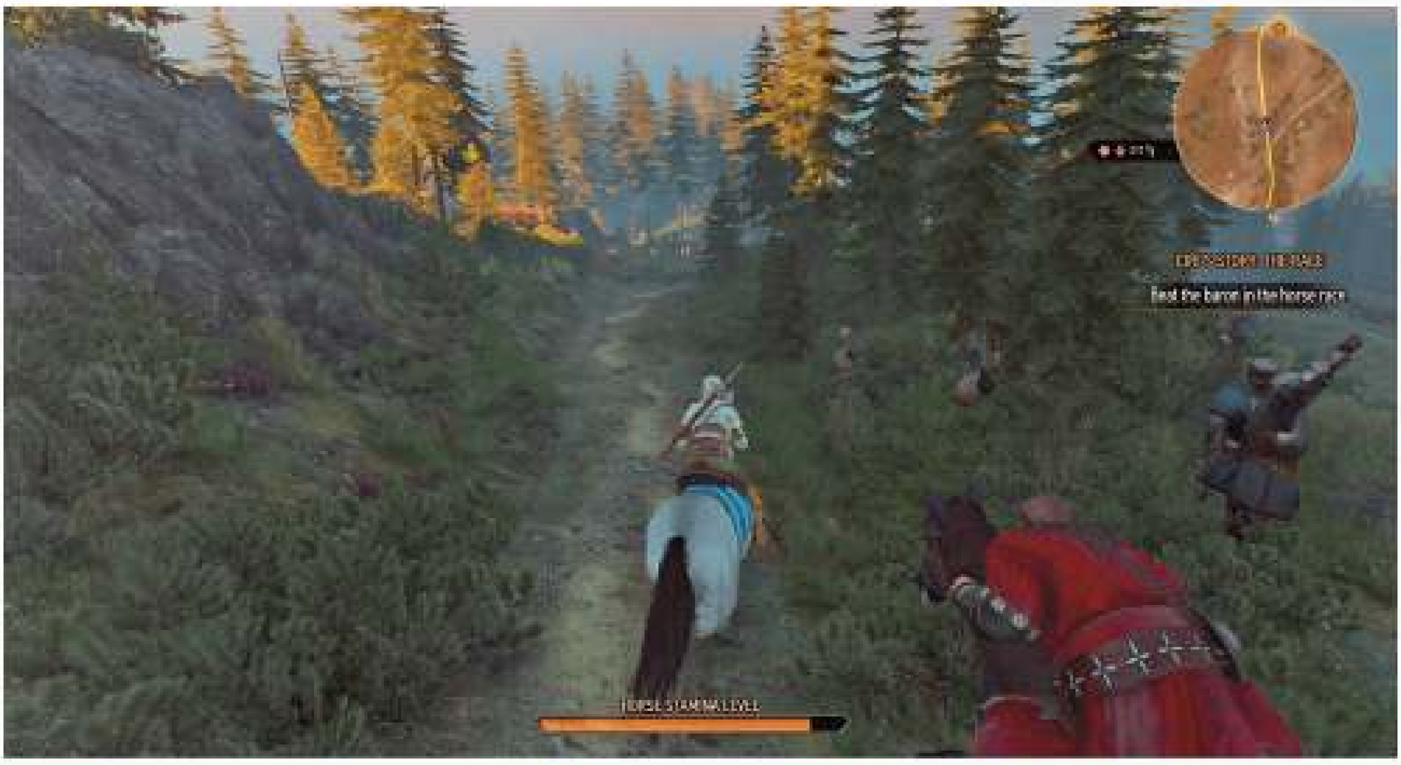
RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Family Matters, Main Quest: Return to Crookback Bog

CHARACTERS : Cirilla, Baron Phillip Strenger

OBJECTIVE:

- Beat the Baron in the horse race.

Ciri sits around a campfire, joshing with the Baron’s men about her skills with a sword and horse. Answer the men’s questions how you wish. After a challenge to race the Baron, start your race, galloping across the countryside (and following the path ahead of you, and on the minimap). Continue to gallop until you reach a lone tower, and the race is interrupted. The Baron recalls the whinnying horses as a huge flapping basilisk spooked the horses. But the story is interrupted as Baron stops the story under the following conditions:



OBJECTIVE (FAMILY MATTERS):

- Investigate all remaining leads in Velen and find the Baron’s wife.

- If you haven’t concluded Main Quest: Ladies of the Wood yet, you receive a new objective as part of Main Quest: Family Matters, requiring you to search for further evidence of Anna’s whereabouts. At the end of this quest, it is revealed that Anna bears a mark on her hands that matches the one drawn in chalk on Voytek’s table. This allows you to conclude that Anna and “Gran” are the same person.

- If you have already concluded Main Quest: Ladies of the Wood, you receive an objective to report back to the Baron. When he finds out about Anna, he is willing to finish his story about Ciri and the Basilisk, and Main Quest: Ciri’s Story: Out of the Shadows begins.

Gwent

Card Unit and Ability Types

Each unit type and ability is now detailed in more depth, so that you know what to expect from a rival who plays this type of card, how you should react to it, and how to play each type of card yourself.

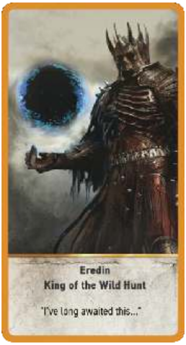
LEADER CARDS (22 CARDS)

Each Faction is led by a mighty leader. Though their cards never enter the battlefield itself, Leaders can play a pivotal role during a Gwent bout, as each one has a unique ability you can employ at any time, instead of playing a card from your hand. But this Leader is much more than a way to delay playing out cards (though you can use a Leader card like this if you're desperate to keep your card count up, or cards in your hand). A good Gwent player recognizes the strengths of their Leader's ability, and uses it when it is most beneficial to them.

Be sure to check your opponent's Gwent battlefield (top left corner) to see and inspect their Leader's ability, so you can proactively react to it instead of being surprised during a bout. Should you lose, rebuild or tweak your deck so your opponent's Leader ability is minimized, if you can.

The following Leader cards are available to each faction. All are aspects of the same Leader (so there are four Leaders—one per faction—with five cards to choose from). Spend time playing bouts with each Leader type until you're happy with the synergy between Leader and battlefield troops.

MONSTER FACTION LEADER: EREDIN (5 CARDS)



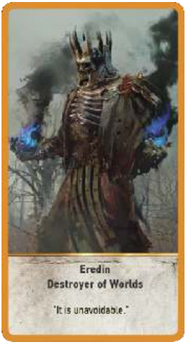
Eredin
King of the Wild Hunt
"I've long awaited this..."

Eredin: King of the Wild Hunt

Ability: Pick any Weather card from your deck and play it instantly.

Benefits: This enables you to hamstring your opponent's rows, so pick Weather cards depending on the type of rows your foe favors placing cards on. Remember you need the card in your deck, not your hand. This also works with Clear Weather cards, enabling you to remove the crippling effects of a foe's Weather cards on your forces without worrying about getting a Clear Weather card or not. Think of it as insurance to keep a row you're using at maximum strength, despite any Weather problems. Or, use it offensively to cripple a foe with rows you aren't strong in (like Ranged or Siege). As Monster Decks favor Close Combat and Muster troops, Biting Frost isn't usually a good idea if you use this ability.

Shortfalls: This ability may not even be played during a match, and is useless if you don't have a Weather card to play. It forces you to reduce your deck size, which can be a critical mistake in later rounds. For full flexibility (choosing Clear Weather, Biting Frost, Impenetrable Fog, or Torrential Rain), you need four additional cards in your deck, reducing the chances of obtaining more powerful cards you need.



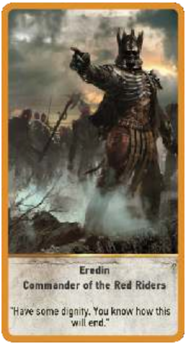
Eredin
Destroyer of Worlds
"It is unavoidable."

Eredin: Destroyer of Worlds

Ability: Discard 2 cards and draw 1 card of your choice from your deck.

Benefits: If you favor large decks, and find yourself looking at a couple of cards you can't play (such as Weather Cards), then this is a good choice of ability. You can also employ more advanced plans of discarding cards you don't need, but wish to Medic back into play in a subsequent round, giving you more flexibility. This is also helpful if you're searching for a specific card to thoroughly demoralize your opponent. Need Toad to lay waste to your opponent's Ranged Row? Don't have Toad in your hand? Then discard two cards, find him in your deck, and demolish an opponent! This ability is key to finding and using a powerful card (Villentretenmerth, Kayran, Toad, Mysterious Elf, Yennefer, or a Hero) exactly when you want to. It isn't advisable to use on Muster cards (as you're likely to have one of that group in your hand anyway, and all of the group are played when you place one on the battlefield).

Shortfalls: If you're exercising deck-building control, and are minimizing the "less important" cards you pick before a match, it becomes less necessary to employ this Leader ability (as you're likely to want to keep all the cards in your hand no matter what you draw). This reduces your card count by one (usually not a good idea if you're outdrawing an opponent). A better strategy is not to "bloat" your deck with cards you'll be discarding without playing in the first place!



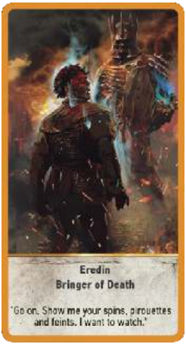
Eredin
Commander of the Red Riders
"Have some dignity. You know how this will end."

Eredin: Commander of the Red Riders

Ability: Double the strength of all your Close Combat units (unless a Commander's Horn is also present on that row).

Benefits: This is essentially a "free" Commander's Horn ability to use whenever you see fit. Need to win a round, but don't want to expend any high-point cards in doing so? Want to ensure victory and bolster your Close Combat row? Then employ this ability. This also means you can remove one (or more) Commander's Horn cards (and especially Dandelion, as this bonus doesn't stack), freeing you up to pick more powerful cards.

Shortfalls: You can't use this on Ranged or Siege rows (which isn't usually a problem for Monster Decks as they are primarily focused on Close Combat). It also causes your front line to be even more susceptible to Weather or Scorch from your foe. Play this card late, having already totaled the bonus it grants you in your head, and pull out a win late in the round!



Eredin
Bringer of Death
"Go on. Show me your spins, pirouettes and feints. I want to watch."

Eredin: Bringer of Death

Ability: Restore a card from your discard pile to your hand.

Benefits: If you have a high-value, non-Hero card you wish to reuse (like Villentretenmerth or Toad, for example), feel free to use this Ability. It also allows you to return an enemy Spy (if playing against the Nilfgaard or Northern Realms) back into play, against the foe that initially played it! This acts just like a Medic (but without a Medic card appearing on the battlefield), and as Monster Decks are devoid of Medics (except Yennefer), this enables you to utilize the many Medic strategies that are usually unavailable to you.

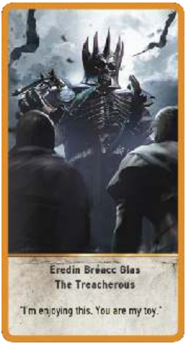
Shortfalls: This sounds initially excellent, but beware of some rules that lessen the impact of this ability: You can't restore a Hero. Unlike a Medic, you don't receive the Medic's points cost added to your battlefield. You shouldn't use it on Muster forces (as once discarded, Muster groups can't be placed back on the battlefield as a group) either. As an ability, if you don't have a discarded card you want, this ability is likely not to be utilized at all.



Eredin Bréacc Glas
The Treacherous
"I'm enjoying this. You are my toy."

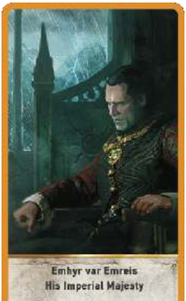
Eredin Bréacc Glas: The Treacherous

Ability: Passive. Doubles the strength of all spy cards (affects both players).

Benefits: This is beneficial to use against Northern Realms, and especially Nilfgaardian Empire decks, where Spy use is frequent. As the Spy's biggest drawback is that its strength is added to the opponent's total, and you don't use Spies, you're effectively doubling the strength of any enemy Spy placed on any of your rows. Did the Nilfgaard place Stefan Skellen on your Close Combat row? Well, with this Leader ability, his strength is now worth 18 to you, instead of 9!

Shortfalls: This is useless against Scoia'Tael and Monster decks, as they don't have Spies (and the Neutral Spy available, Mysterious Elf, has a strength point total of 0). Spies are often Decoyed back into your opponent's hand, so the bonus you receive from them is often fleeting. As even Spy-heavy enemy decks (such as the Nilfgaard and Northern Realms) only utilize three Spies with strength points, the bonuses you receive are usually very weak anyway (for example, Thaler only gives you 2 strength points instead of 1); not usually enough to turn the tide of battle!

NILFGAARDIAN EMPIRE FACTION LEADER: EMHYR VAR EMREIS (5 CARDS)



Emhyr var Emreis
His Imperial Majesty

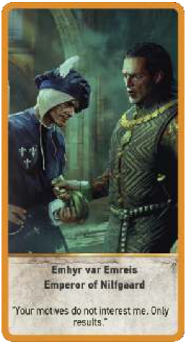
"The skies wept when my Pavetta died.
They will not weep for me."

Emhyr var Emreis: His Imperial Majesty

Ability: Pick a Torrential Rain card from your deck and play it instantly.

Benefits: Having the ability (assuming a Torrential Rain card is in your deck) to cripple an opponent's Siege row at any moment is a good power to have, at least during the initial bouts of Gwent. It's great to use against Northern Realms opponents, as this faction primarily relies on Siege units, and to a lesser extent, the Nilfgaard. Be sure to plan your own decks and attacks around this ability (so don't stack your own deck with Siege units if you hope to use it)!

Shortfalls: Firstly, this Ability only works if you have a Torrential Rain card in your deck (not your hand), meaning you must add one (or more) to your deck. Secondly, as Torrential Rain only affects Siege units, it is useless against any foe that only has a minimal Siege presence (such as Scoia'Tael and to a lesser extent, Monster Decks). Thirdly, there are more devastating Emhyr var Emreis abilities to pick. Fourthly, as your own forces are likely to be using Siege units, this can cripple your own Siege row too!



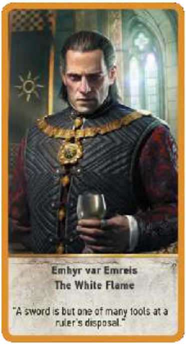
Emhyr var Emreis
Emperor of Nilfgaard
"Your motives do not interest me. Only results."

Emhyr var Emreis: Emperor of Nilfgaard

Ability: Look at 3 random cards from your opponent's hand.

Benefits: Often used during the final stages of a bout, as this becomes more useful the fewer cards your opponent has left. As you're likely to be trying to add high-value non-Heroes, or Tight Bond cards (such as the Impera Brigade Guards) to bolster your strength points, you want to be assured that your foe won't negate this influx of strength by using a Weather Card or Scorch. This ensures you know whether the likelihood of this happening will occur. It's also sometimes great to see what your foe has left, as well as Weather Cards and Scorch, so you can calculate whether you're able to win the round or pass.

Shortfalls: This Ability is much less powerful the more cards your opponent has (as you won't know, even after using it, exactly what your foe can attempt). The random nature of this ability is also suspect, as giving you some (but not all) information regarding your opponent is sometimes counter-productive. For example, if you're hoping a foe won't play a Weather Card, they still might if you didn't see the card while using this Ability. It also isn't helpful to use early on when your foe can still draw from his or her deck (as the deck can't be looked at).



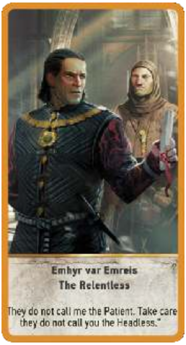
Emhyr var Emreis
The White Flame
"A sword is but one of many tools at a ruler's disposal."

Emhyr var Emreis: The White Flame

Ability: Cancel your opponent’s Leader Ability.

Benefits: This is pretty self-explanatory; if you’re constantly cursing an opponent’s Leader (such as Foltest’s Lord Commander of the North ability to bring Clear Weather to an opponent’s rain-soaked Siege row) which contributes to your demise, then utilize this card. Is your enemy Leader’s ability always seeming to turn the tide of battle in their favor? Then stop this entirely by nullifying their Leader! Check your opponent’s Leader ability first, before adjusting your strategy accordingly.

Shortfalls: This doesn’t offer any offensive or other bonuses to your own side outside of removing both Leaders from play. It forces you to play a Leaderless game of Gwent, which is fine if you don’t enjoy using any of Emhyr var Emreis’ other Leader abilities, but sometimes general units benefit from having a Leader, or the chaos a more random Leader ability brings.



Emhyr var Emreis
The Relentless
They do not call me the Patient. Take care they do not call you the Headless."

Emhyr var Emreis: The Relentless

Ability: Draw a card from your opponent’s discard pile.

Benefits: This essentially acts as a Medic ability, but brings back a (non-Hero) card from your foe which you can utilize yourself. Need two Villentretenmerths (one from your deck, and one from your opponent’s)? Then rummage around in your foe’s discard pile to find him! This allows you to take a vastly powerful card your opponent previously played, and “return the favor" back at them! Also use it to gather a card from your foe that might not be powerful, but is something that can really hamper your opponent's progress (such as taking a Tight Bond card and stopping a foe using a Medic to bring that back into play). This Ability is also unique (that is, you can't do this with any normal unit card), adding to your flexibility.

Shortfalls: This isn't useful during the first round, when your opponent has a small discard pile of cards you might not wish to use. If you play this ability and there isn't a suitable card to take, the ability is wasted.

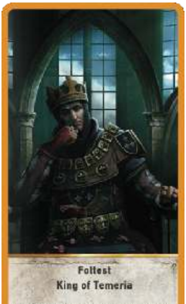
Emhyr var Emreis: Invader of the North

Ability: Abilities that restore a unit to the battlefield restore a randomly-chosen unit. Affects both players.

Benefits: This interferes with both players' Medics and any Leader abilities that restore cards from the discard pile, back into play. It causes chaos, and can really hamper an opponent's Medic strategies. Is your foe constantly returning Tight Bond or high-value non-Heroes back into play (such as Villentretenmerth)? Then minimize the chances of this happening using this ability; no one knows what cards are likely to return. As this affects you as well, you may wish to minimize Medics in your own hand, and play this Leader ability on a foe you know uses Medics all the time.

Shortfalls: If your foe only has a few discarded cards that can be restored, they still have a chance of getting the card they wanted, or at least something of use. This isn't usually completely detrimental to your foe (they will always draw something, even if it's not what they specifically wanted). This ability also affects you, so if you're heavily involved in utilizing Medic tactics that require the return of specific cards, this may not be the Leader ability for you.

NORTHERN REALMS FACTION LEADER: FOLTEST (5 CARDS)



Foltest
King of Temeria

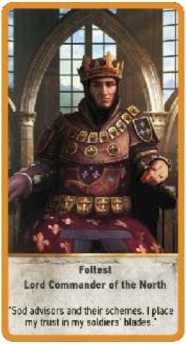
"It is natural and beautiful that a man should love his sister."

Foltest: King of Temeria

Ability: Pick an Impenetrable Fog card from your deck and play it instantly.

Benefits: Ideal for playing against opponents you know are likely to employ a large number of Ranged units (such as the Scoia'Tael), as this gives you a better chance at nullifying them (you can draw an Impenetrable Fog from your hand if you already have it, or use this Ability). Think of this as increasing the chances of hobbling a foe's ranged row (and also your own); with this in mind, refrain from choosing a majority of ranged troops for your own battlefield.

Shortfalls: You must have an Impenetrable Fog card in your deck (not in your hand), otherwise this ability is useless. This means the ability may not be used as often as other abilities, and isn't as flexible. It also means you must place at least one Impenetrable Fog in your deck, which can "bloat" your deck. Are opponents massing in their Close Combat or Siege rows? Then this ability isn't helpful. Finally, if you find yourself using Ranged units yourself (such as the Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunters), this negates all their bonuses.



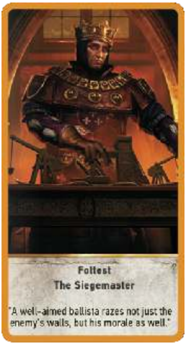
Foltest
Lord Commander of the North
"Sod advisors and their schemes. I place my trust in my soldiers' blades."

Foltest: Lord Commander of the North

Ability: Clear any Weather effects (resulting from Biting Frost, Torrential Rain, or Impenetrable Fog) in play.

Benefits: Incredibly useful both at the beginning of your Gwent career, and even during bouts with the land's most professional players. This is essentially a "free" Clear Weather card to use whenever you like! Unlike some other Leader abilities, you don't need a Clear Weather card in your deck, freeing you up to add a more potent offensive card instead while keeping your deck lean. It also favors players who aren't interested in using Weather cards themselves. Finally, it completely removes an enemy's biggest threat; so save this until late in a round you want to win; essentially ignoring the penalties your rows are suffering from. You can also "hide" your troop's abilities (and strength point totals) by placing them in a row suffering from Weather effects, before removing the effects at the last minute.

Shortfalls: This affects both you and your opponent, so this shortfall of Clear Weather also applies here. It stops you from using Weather cards as often, and is useless if your foe doesn't use Weather cards. But it's great insurance, nevertheless.



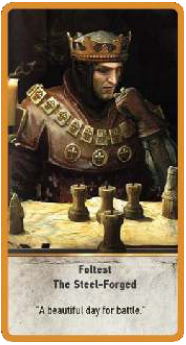
Foltest
The Siegemaster
"A well-aimed ballista razes not just the enemy's walls, but his morale as well."

Foltest: The Siegemaster

Ability: Doubles the strength of all your Siege units (unless a Commander's Horn is also present on that row).

Benefits: This is essentially a "free" Commander's Horn ability to use whenever you see fit (but only on a Siege row). Need to win a round, but don't want to expend any high-point cards in doing so? Want to ensure victory and bolster your Siege row? Then employ this ability. This also means you can remove one (or more) Commander's Horns, freeing you up to pick more powerful cards.

Shortfalls: You can't use this ability on Close Combat or Ranged rows (which is less of a problem for Northern Realms decks as they have a high proportion of units focused on the Siege row). It also causes your Siege row to be even more susceptible to Weather or Scorch cards from your foe; so play this card late, having already totaled the bonus it grants you in your head, and pull out a win late in the round!



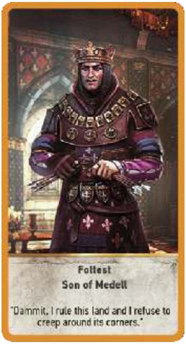
Foltest
The Steel-Forged
"A beautiful day for battle."

Foltest: The Steel-Forged

Ability: Destroy your enemy's strongest Siege unit(s) if the combined strength of all his or her Siege units is 10 or more.

Benefits: Think of this as a Scorch card to play on a hapless opponent's entire Siege line, wiping out one or more of their highest point units. This is particularly effective against Northern Realms, and (to a lesser extent) the Nilfgaardian Empire who employ a large proportion of Siege units. Remember that all "character Scorch" tactics (detailed in the "Scorch" section to come) work with this ability too. This has the same Scorch ability as the Scoia'Tael Schirru card; consult that for more tactical options (including the use of Torrential Rain to wipe out multiple cards at once).

Shortfalls: This doesn't affect Heroes. This is far less effective at factions that don't employ Siege units (Scoia'Tael only uses one, and Monster decks only have four possible units outside of Gaunter O'Dimm's Neutral cards). It is also inflexible; it can't help you lessen the strength of other rows at all.



Foltest
Son of Medell
"Dammit, I rule this land and I refuse to creep around its corners."

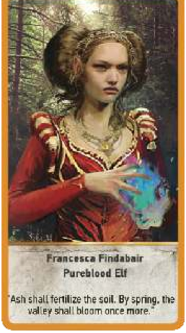
Foltest: Son of Medell

Ability: Destroy your enemy's strongest Ranged Combat unit(s) if the combined strength of all his or her Ranged Combat units is 10 or more.

Benefits: Think of this as a Scorch card to employ on a foe's entire Ranged row, removing one or more of their highest point units. Just like The Steel-Forged Leader Ability, this is particularly effective against opponents who primarily use Ranged units; particularly the Scoia'Tael, and to a lesser extent the other factions too. This offers a greater opportunity at carnage compared to The Steel-Forged (unless you're playing against Northern Realms), as generally an opponent plays more Ranged cards than Siege ones. Remember that all "character Scorch" tactics (detailed in the "Scorch" section to come) work with this ability too. This has the same Scorch ability as the Monster Toad card; consult that for more tactical options (including the use of Impenetrable Fog to wipe out multiple cards at once).

Shortfalls: This doesn't affect Heroes. This is less effective against Monster Decks, or opponents that spot this Ability and don't employ Ranged units in battle. As many Scoia'Tael troops are Agile, a cunning opponent is likely to move them into the Close Combat line so this ability won't get used. This ability is also inflexible; it can't help you lessen the strength of other rows at all (unless the foe puts all their Agile troops in the Close Combat line, and you react by subsequently using Villentretenmerth or a Special Scorch).

SCOIA'TAEL FACTION LEADER: FRANCESCA FINDABAIR (5 CARDS)



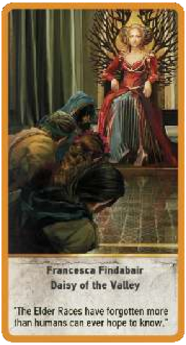
Francesca Findabair
Pureblood Elf
"Ash shall fertilize the soil. By spring, the valley shall bloom once more."

Francesca Findabair: Pureblood Elf

Ability: Pick a Biting Frost card from your deck and play it instantly.

Benefits: Exceptional for playing against opponents you know are likely to employ a large number of Close Combat units (such as Monster deck players), as this gives you a better chance at removing them as a threat (you can draw Biting Frost from your hand if you already have it, or use this Ability). Think of this as increasing the chances of crippling a foe's Close Combat row (and also your own). As your Close Combat row is also affected, utilize your troops' Agile abilities before using this Ability, so the majority of your army is in the Ranged Row. Finally, this ability is slightly more powerful than other similar Leader powers that allow Weather Cards from other rows to be played, as the highest proportion of unit cards are Close Combat-related.

Shortfalls: You must have a Biting Frost card in your deck (not in your hand), otherwise this ability is useless. This means the ability may not be used as often as other Leader abilities, as it isn't as flexible. It also means you have to place at least one Biting Frost in your deck, causing deck "bloating". Are opponents massing in their Ranged or Siege rows? Then this ability won't help you. Finally, if you find yourself using Close Combat units yourself (such as the Muster group of Havekar Smugglers), this negates all their bonuses.



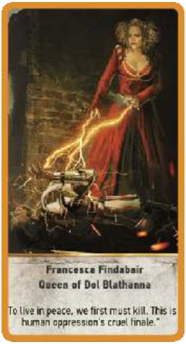
Francesca Findabair
Daisy of the Valley
"The Elder Races have forgotten more than humans can ever hope to know."

Francesca Findabair: Daisy of the Valley

Ability: Draw an extra card at the beginning of the battle.

Benefits: Unlike some other Leader abilities, this works in every battle (you won't forget to use it, or not have the right combination of cards or effects to make this useful). Though the card you retrieve is random, it's always helpful to have 11 cards in your hand at the start of a game compared to ten (as you obviously have more choice of what to play). This also helps to negate the shortfall of the Scoia'Tael deck in terms of not having any Spies (which offer a similar effect). But everyone loves having a bigger deck!

Shortfalls: This can't be played at your leisure (such as during the end stages of a round where you might need an extra card). The card you receive may be random, so you could end up with two Clear Weather cards that are of limited use (but that is more to do with your deck-building skills than a shortfall of this Ability). It essentially leaves you "leaderless" for the rest of the bout (that is, you can't rely on a Weather-related leader ability).



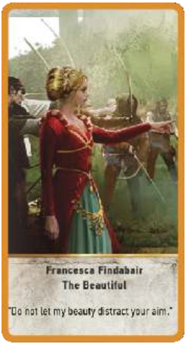
Francesca Findabair
Queen of Dol Blathanna
To live in peace, we first must kill. This is human oppression's cruel finale."

Francesca Findabair: Queen of Dol Blathanna

Ability: Destroy your enemy's strongest Close Combat unit(s) if the combined strength of all his or her Close Combat units is 10 or more.

Benefits: Think of this as a Scorch card to use on an opponent's entire Close Combat row, removing one or more of their highest point units. This is amazingly effective against opponents who primarily use Close Combat units; particularly Monster decks, and the other factions too. This offers a greater opportunity at mayhem as generally any opponent plays more Close Combat cards than those of other rows (though your tactics should change if you see an enemy with this Leader ability, and you have Agile troops). Remember that all "character Scorch" tactics (detailed in the "Scorch" section to come) work with this ability too. This has the same Scorch ability as the Villentretenmerth card; consult that for more tactical options (including the use of Biting Frost to wipe out multiple cards at once). Finally, partner this ability with Villentretenmerth (for Close Combat rows) and Schirru (for Siege rows), essentially giving you this ability three times!

Shortfalls: This doesn't affect Heroes. This is less effective at decks that recognize the threat and adjust where they place their units (away from the Close Combat row). As many Scoia'Tael troops are Agile, an opponent using this deck may move these troop types into the Ranged row so your ability is less effective. This ability is also inflexible; it won't lessen the strength of other rows at all (unless you employ Scirru at their Siege line).



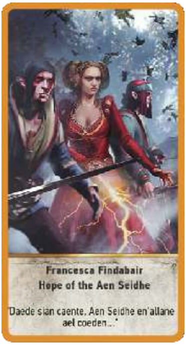
Francesca Findabair
The Beautiful
"Do not let my beauty distract your aim."

Francesca Findabair: The Beautiful

Ability: Doubles the strength of all your Ranged Combat units (unless a Commander's Horn is also present on that row).

Benefits: This is essentially a "free" Commander's Horn ability to use whenever you see fit (but only on a Ranged row). Do you crave the winning of a round, but don't want to expend any high-point cards in doing so? What to ensure victory and bolster your Ranged row? Then employ this ability. This also means you can remove one (or more) Commander's Horns, freeing you up to pick more powerful cards (or unit cards). Also look at the strengths of all your Scoia'Tael Ranged and Agile units; there's a vast number worth between four and six points. With this ability, they are now worth between eight and 12!

Shortfalls: You can't use this ability on Close Combat or Siege rows. The latter isn't a problem at all (only one Scoia'Tael card is a Siege unit), but this does mean you might want to drop more Agile units into your Ranged rows to bolster this ability. All this bolstering of the Ranged Row makes it very susceptible to Weather or Scorch cards from your opponent; so play this card late, having already totaled the bonus it may bring, and pull it out for a late win!



Francesca Findabair
Hope of the Aen Seidhe
"Daede sian caente. Aen Seidhe en'allane ael coeden..."

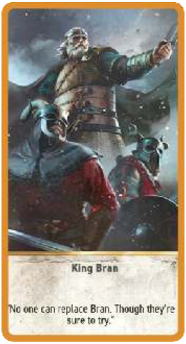
Francesca Findabair: Hope of the Aen Seidhe

Ability: Move Agile units to whichever valid row maximizes their strength (don't move units already in optimal row).

Benefits: This gives you ultimate flexibility in combat! It also doesn't affect the opponent, meaning you reap all of the benefits. It is great to use to feint a foe; drop all your Agile troops (you have nine to choose from) into Close Combat, and ignore any Weather effects. Then push them into the Ranged row late into the round to augment that row. Purposefully trick your foe. Keep the row you want to push Agile troops into low in strength. Don't drop a Morale Boost or Commander's Horn card in there, as that increases the row's points; but use Morale Boost or the Horn afterwards! Just be sure to plan out this strategy beforehand; and calculate the strength point totals for both rows (plus other bonuses) to ensure the move goes without a hitch.

Shortfalls: This puts all of your eggs in one basket, meaning a cunning opponent may wait until you mass your Ranged Agile forces into Close Combat, and then unleash a Biting Frost or Scorch (or both!). So use this late in a round to negate such possible problems. It also negates any bonuses you might have placed in the row your troops are moving from (such as a Dandelion's Commander's Horn if you move Close Combat Agile units into the Ranged row). Finally, watch your row totals; you can't move a load of Agile units into a row with an optimal strength point count.

SKELLIGE CLANS FACTION LEADERS: KING BRAN AND CRACH AN CRAITE (2 CARDS)



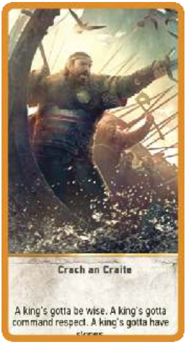
King Bran
"No one can replace Bran. Though they're sure to try."

King Bran

Ability: Units only lose half their values in bad weather conditions.

Benefits: This is an ability that is constantly available, and doesn't need to be played. It simply reduces any of your weather-effected units to half their value, instead of 1 (while your opponent's weather-effected units are crippled to 1 as usual). It doesn't take a tactical genius to figure out how helpful this is; it mitigates your opponent's best attempts to lessen your prowess by playing Weather cards against you. This opens up tactical options such as stacking Skellige Storm and Biting Frost cards in your deck, and using them to blanket the entire battlefield, keeping your foe crippled due to weather while you benefit from King Bran's bonuses. This also allows you to keep some of the bonuses certain units bring, such as the Tight Bond bonuses of your Clan An Craite Warriors, while lessening your foe's points total severely. Also be sure to use King Bran, your Weather Cards, and Scorch (from the Clan Dimun Pirate) to level the battlefield!

Shortfalls: This is far less effective if you or your opponent isn't using Weather cards or placing a number of Heroes that are unaffected by Weather. Playing against a foe with this Leader should be a clue to stack your deck with Clear Weather cards to nullify his bonus. Clear Weather is the bane of King Bran!



Crach an Craite
A king's gotta be wise. A king's gotta command respect. A king's gotta have

Crach an Craite

Ability: Shuffles all cards from each player's graveyards back into their decks.

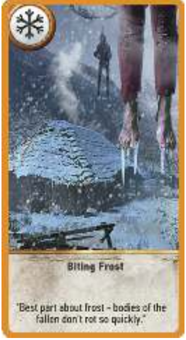
Benefits: This ability can be used once per match, and is obviously only available once you have a discard pile (or "graveyard") to utilize. Essentially acting as a much more powerful Medic, but granting all previously-used cards back into play for both sides, you can maximize your favorite tactics by using them twice in a match instead of once. For example, employ Cerys and her Shield Maidens in the first round to ensure victory; then utilize Crach an Craite at the start of the second round, and retrieve Cerys and her Shield Maidens to battle once again! This can reduce the effectiveness for Medics (who draw from your discard pile) and Muster cards (that summon from your discard pile) as well. It's also the only way to return Heroes back into battle (as well as Mardroemes to reuse with Berserkers), enables you to elongate any of the Ability plans contained in this chapter, and forces a much more aggressive style of game (for example; use a Scorch character card, use Crach an Craite, then Medic it back to use it three times in a game!).

Shortfalls: You reap all of the benefits, but so does your opponent, and he or she can employ exactly the same tactics (playing large-value cards early, and using them again). This almost forces you into a less-flexible tactical plan, as playing the waiting game isn't as beneficial (why use Crach an Craite if you've only a few discarded cards you won't use again?). The trick is to use this card to maximize the rewards you receive, while minimizing those of your opponent. It also forces you to remember what your foe has already played, and figure that any or all of those cards are likely to be played again.

SPECIAL WEATHER CARDS (15 CARDS)

The five Weather cards available to you cause a variety of Battlefield effects that severely reduce combat effectiveness in a particular row or rows, or restore the Battlefield back to normal. A total of 15 Weather cards are available to collect; three of each type. All of them can be played as part of your deck strategy, though it's better to figure out strategies based on the likelihood of Weather being effective, rather than dumping every Weather card into your deck.

Weather cards are less potent when you're using tactics that focus more on unit abilities, such as gathering up Tight Bond units. As Weather cards increase your deck size, you may receive a number of Weather cards at the start of a game when you really need strong units instead. So play a few games to balance out what you want to use Weather cards for.



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

Biting Frost Ability: Sets the strength of all Close Combat cards to 1 for both players.

Also look to Leader Abilities that enable you to draw a Weather card from the deck, so you have more control over when you can obtain such a card. Also look at Leader Abilities such as Foltest: Lord Commander of the North, which causes Clear Weather without the need for a card. That way, you can reduce your deck size (usually recommended).

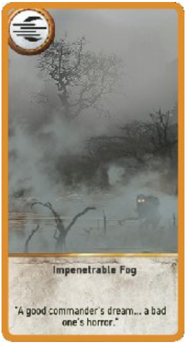
Weather Cards do not affect any Hero cards (from you or your opponent) on the battlefield, so if you see a foe using a majority of Heroes to bolster a row, your Weather Cards become far less effective. If however, you're using Heroes yourself, and a minimal number of non-Hero cards to bolster a row, Weather Cards are great to play on a foe: Your Heroes shrug off the inclement Weather and your strength points remain high.

Weather Cards are also able to be placed at any time, enabling you to "burn" (or waste) a Weather card from your hand, instead of placing a more potent card you're worried about being nullified by your opponent, or you're biding your time and hoping a foe will pass. But usually, Weather cards serve to "bloat" your deck, stopping you from grabbing a high-point card you need.

Are you ending a game with one or more Weather cards? Then it appears you don't need them! Invest in a smaller deck, and a greater chance of a card you need, or find better cards with points to use.

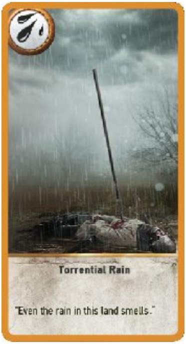
FIGHTING THROUGH FROST, FOG, OR RAIN

The Biting Frost, Impenetrable Fog, and Torrential Rain Weather cards each affect a separate row (Close Combat, Ranged, and Siege rows), while the Skellige Storm affects two rows (Ranged and Siege rows). They immediately reduce any non-Hero card's strength to 1. Up to the entire Battlefield can be affected by weather (assuming either you or your foe plays Weather cards that cover all three rows). As both you and your opponent's rows are affected, you must ascertain when a Weather card is better for you to play, to maximize the problems it will cause your foe, while minimizing the penalties to you.



Impenetrable Fog
"A good commander's dream... a bad one's horror."

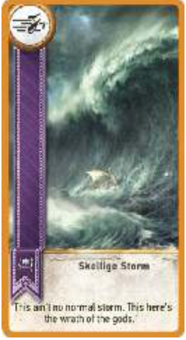
Impenetrable Fog Ability: Sets the strength of all Ranged cards to 1 for both players.



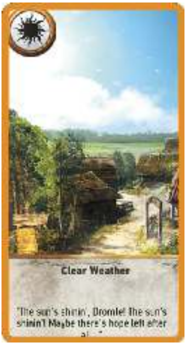
Torrential Rain
"Even the rain in this land smells."

Torrential Rain Ability: Sets the strength of all Siege cards to 1 for both players.

Such cards have an overriding function; to cripple an opponent's row, which in turn forces them to pass the round, use up a Clear Weather card, or commit further forces (thus reducing future combat effectiveness in subsequent rounds).



Skellige Storm
'This ain't no normal storm. This here's the wrath of the gods.'



Clear Weather
'The sun's shinin', Dromle! The sun's shinin'! Maybe there's hope left after al...'

Biting Frost (Close Combat) (3 Cards)

Biting Frost is usually utilized most often, as there are more Close Combat units in general, compared to all other unit types. Biting Frost is especially helpful in reducing the potency of players who use a majority of Close Combat cards, such as Monster Decks. They are less effective against Agile units (which can be played in either Close Combat or Ranged rows), and Northern Realms decks which can switch to Siege unit placement more easily.

Impenetrable Fog (Ranged) (3 Cards)

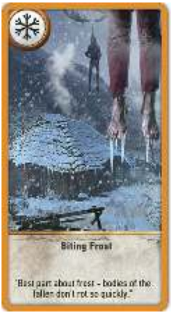
Impenetrable Fog is utilized less than Biting Frost, but is still a possible card to employ when you need to reduce the strength of a Ranged row. The Scoia'Tael, and to a lesser extent the other three factions, all make use of Ranged units, though not as often as Close Combat. As with Biting Frost, Agile units not yet placed can avoid an Impenetrable Fog by being placed in the Close Combat row. With this in mind, you may wish to carry both Biting Frost and Impenetrable Fog to negate an Agile unit's ability.

Torrential Rain (Siege) (3 Cards)

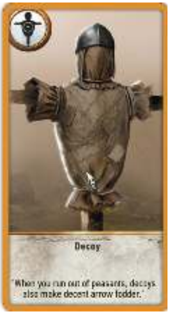
Torrential Rain is the least-used Weather card in almost every Gwent game, with the exception of playing against a Northern Realm deck (as this Faction uses Siege units more often than Ranged). As there are no Agile Siege units, you know you don't need to worry about cards with that ability. However, some decks (such as the Scoia'Tael) only have very few Siege cards—if any at all—making this card useless, and even counter-productive if you have Siege units yourself. Ditch this card first, if you're carrying too many cards in your deck.

Skellige Storm (Ranged and Siege) (3 Cards)

Skellige Storm offers the benefits and shortfalls of covering much more of the battlefield with a blanket of rain; reducing combat effectiveness in both Ranged and Siege rows. Remember that any Faction can utilize this card, so if you're playing enemies that utilize Ranged and Siege rows frequently (such as the Nilfgaardian Empire or Northern Realms), while you concentrate on bolster your Close Combat rows, this can be hugely beneficial. It can take the place of both Impenetrable Fog and Torrential Rain cards, reducing deck bloat. But there are disadvantages too; it cripples two of your own rows as well!

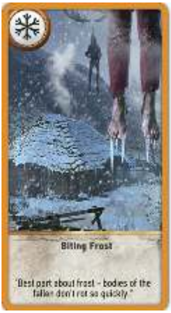


Biting Frost
"Best part about frost - bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."



Frost, Fog, Or Rain and Decoys

Weather Cards themselves cannot be brought back into your hand after you use them, so Decoy cards aren't used with Weather cards, but after Weather cards are played. If you or your foe has soaked the Siege row with Torrential Rain, and you have a Northern Realms Catapult sitting there (worth eight points usually, but now worth one), simply Decoy it back into your hand. Use this tactic to coax your opponent into playing a Weather card early.



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost - bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

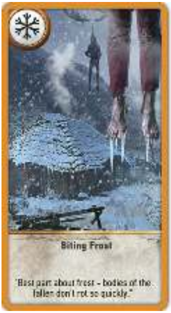
Filavandrel aén Fidháil
"Though we are now few and scattered, our hearts burn brighter than ever."

Frost, Fog, Or Rain and Agile Cards

The Scoia'Tael (and to a lesser extent, the Monster) decks have troops with the Agile ability, allowing placement in either Close Combat or Ranged rows. This is helpful when a Weather card is used (by either player). If a foe puts down Biting Frost, place all your Agile forces in the Ranged row. Such flexibility makes Weather cards less effective against Agile forces. Similarly, placing a couple of lower point-value forces into a row you're sure a foe will use Weather on (or one you're about to use Weather on), to try and coax an opponent into matching or increasing their forces on this row, enables you to then use a Weather card they weren't expecting.



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

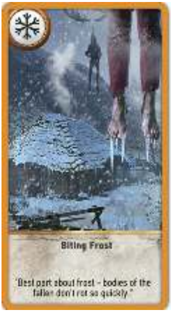
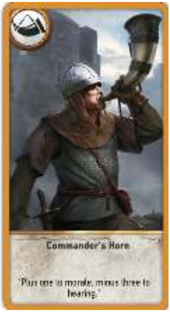
Havekar Healer
"Sure, I'll patch you up. Gonna cost you, though."

Frost, Fog, Or Rain and Medics

Medics cannot return a Weather card back into play, so Medics are utilized if the prospect of a Weather card is likely to cause problems with a row you're building. If a Catapult (non-Hero eight-point Siege card) was discarded previously, and your Close Combat or Ranged rows are both suffering from Weather effects, resurrect the Catapult so your Siege row is strong instead.



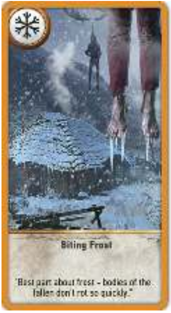
Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."



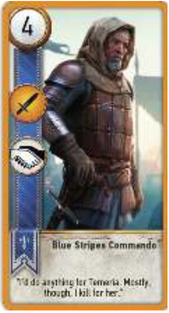
Commander's Horn
"Plus one to morale, minus three to hearing."

Frost, Fog, Or Rain and Commander's Horn (and Morale Boost)

Commander's Horn isn't affected by Weather, but all the cards it affects certainly are! As doubling a card's value can cause a huge influx in enemy points, dropping a Weather card on a row feeling the benefits of Commander's Horn can impede that ability severely. The same can't be said of Morale Boost; any row with +1 to each non-Hero card still has that same bonus, though the normal strength of the unit will have dropped to one as well, due to the Weather. This means you should think about playing a Morale Boost card if you have a load of non-Heroes feeling the effects of Weather. You still get the same bonus, which could be enough to take the round!



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

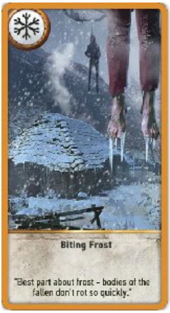


4
Blue Stripes Commando
"I'd do anything for Temeria. Mostly, though, I kill for her."

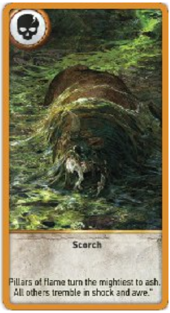
Frost, Fog, Or Rain and Berserker, Muster, Or Tight Bond Cards

Though Berserker, Muster, and Tight Bond units have different abilities, they are all much more susceptible to Weather cards, which seriously impede a Berserker, Muster, or Tight Bond group's main advantages (cards offering high strength values). Lie in wait as a foe puts down multiple Berserker, Muster, or Tight Bond cards, and just before the round is over, reduce that value dramatically.

For example, if an opponent places both Catapults in a row (each an eight-point, non-Hero, Siege card), the Tight Bond bonus enables them to be worth 16 points each (that's 32 points for both of them!). Bring the Torrential Rain, and that point advantage is almost completely nullified!



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

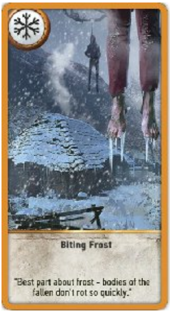


Scorch
"Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."

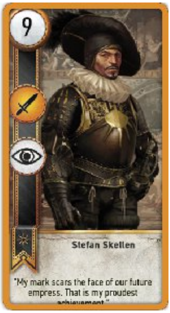
Frost, Fog, Or Rain and Scorch

Partnering a Scorch card with Weather can produce absolutely devastating outcomes for your opponent (and hopefully not you)! The usual "Special" Scorch torches the entire battlefield, so if a foe has all their non-Hero cards in one row, play a Weather card first, dropping all the non-Hero cards to a value of 1. Then use Scorch, and providing there are no non-Hero cards anywhere else on the board worth more than one, every one of the 1-point cards is Scorched! The character cards with Scorch ability (such as Villentretenmerth) offer focused Scorch on one of your opponent's rows, and combining these two cards can cause mass casualties to a foe who has over-committed to a single row.

Finally, don't forget the Clan Dimun Pirate of the Skellige Clans faction, who has a battlefield-wide Scorch (the only non-Special Card that does this). Though you need to blanket your entire battlefield in bad weather (use Skellige Storm and Biting Frost, along with King Bran's Leader ability), it's possible to decimate every non-hero on a foe's battlefield using this swashbuckling maniac!



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."



9
Stefan Skellen
"My mark scars the face of our future empress. That is my proudest achievement."

Frost, Rain, Or Fog and Spies

Are you using Spies in your deck? Then Biting Frost becomes much more helpful as you can use it, and your Spy's strength points (which are applied to the opposition) drop down to 1. That way you can draw two cards and only lose one point to your opponent. Also note that Impenetrable Fog is useless as there are no Ranged Spies, and Torrential Rain is also useless as only Thaler is a Siege Spy, and his strength is one anyway.

CLEAR WEATHER

The fourth of the Weather cards serves a different function: Clear Weather removes the effect of any and all Biting Frost, Impenetrable Fog, and/or Torrential Rain cards in play. This is a powerful defensive card, and one to keep at least one of in any deck you play. It allows you to remove the otherwise-crippling effects of Weather on any rows (but also your enemy's rows too). It can be "burned" if there are no other options (it is used up and wasted if no inclement Weather is on the board) in order to feint out your opponent, but its proper use is to turn the later stages of a round from calamity to triumph! The importance of Clear Weather cannot be underestimated!

Refrain from playing Clear Weather immediately; a card in your hand is worth more than on the battlefield, and you may see additional Weather effects occur. You can also disguise the true points value of your units if you place them in a row affected by Weather, before clearing that row at the end of a round for an instant increase in points. Either use Clear Weather at the end of a round to ensure victory, or keep a Clear Weather for later rounds to ensure complete victory.

Assuming you keep a Clear Weather card in your deck (which is recommended over Impenetrable Fog and Torrential Rain, and usually over Biting Frost and Skellige Storm too), you can build up any battlefield rows you wish, ignoring any inclement Weather (as you'll be getting rid of it soon with Clear Weather).

Without a Clear Weather card, you want your foe to use a Weather card sooner rather than later, so you can keep your more potent cards with group Abilities to play after Weather cards are removed.

OTHER SPECIAL CARDS:

Other Special cards (Decoy, Commander's Horn, Mardroeme, and Scorch) are detailed in the Unit and Special Cards section (below).

UNIT AND SPECIAL CARDS

UNIT TYPE: CLOSE COMBAT UNITS (115 CARDS)

The mainstay of your card collection, it is important to remember that you and your opponent are mostly like to use (or draw)

Close Combat units over any other card type. This means the front line is likely to be most crowded as cards are played, and therefore more susceptible to both Scorch and Biting Frost. Though there are other factors to consider, prepping your deck with a Biting Frost over other Weather cards is statistically better, as you'll be reducing your opponent's Close Combat effectiveness more often than other rows.

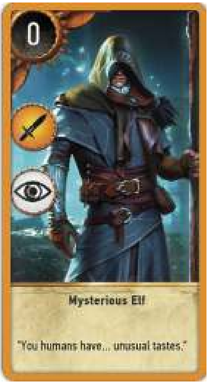
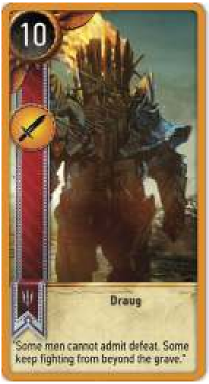
"Also calls himself Borkh Three Jackdaws... he's not the best at names."



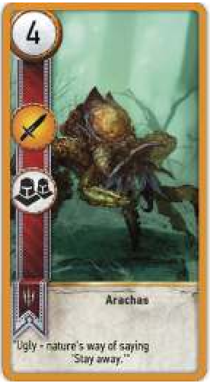
0
Mysterious Elf
"You humans have... unusual tastes."

Neutral Cards (Close Combat Units) (10 Cards)

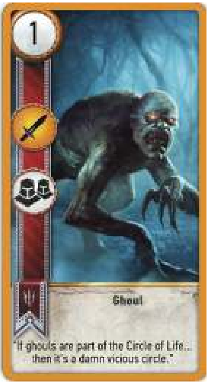
A mixture of high point value Hero cards (such as Geralt and Ciri) to use in every battle, some mid-point units (like Vesemir) to use before finding higher-point cards, and a couple of characters with additional abilities to keep in mind when playing (such as Villentretenmerth; the ultimate card to play against an enemy Close Combat row, and the Mysterious Elf, an amazing Spy who adds nothing to your opponent's points total).



10
Draug
"Some men cannot admit defeat. Some keep fighting from beyond the grave."



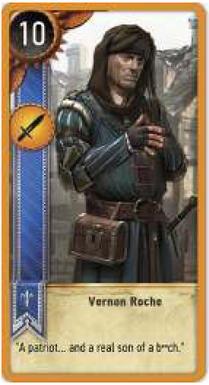
4
Arachas
"Ugly - nature's way of saying 'Stay away.'"



1
Ghoul
"If ghouls are part of the Circle of Life... then it's a damn vicious circle."

Monster Deck (Close Combat Units) (30 Cards)

With very few (3) Agile cards, Close Combat Units outnumber Ranged units around three-to-one. This means Monster players are always going to concentrate their attacks on their front line compared to other Factions. With a Monster Deck, bolster the effectiveness of these Units with Commander's Horn, use cards with the Muster ability strategically and judiciously, and a Leader ability like "Commander of the Red Riders" (doubling the strength of Close Combat units), while minimizing the chances of them being Scorched (by playing them after a Scorch card has appeared) or frozen (use Clear Weather). The opposite plan is in effect when playing against a Monster Deck; stack your deck with more Biting Frosts, think about using Ranged and Siege troops, and combine that effect with Scorch, or Villentretenmerth.



10
Vernon Roche
"A patriot... and a real son of a bch."

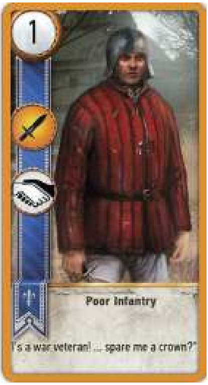
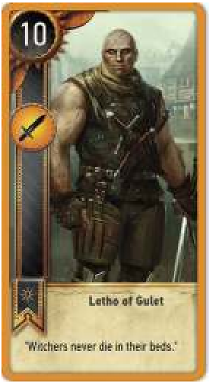
10
John Natalis
That square should bear the names of my soldiers, of the dead. Not mine."



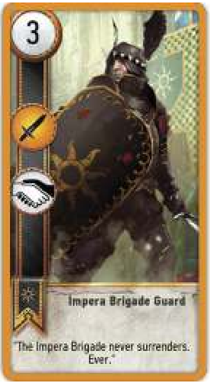
1
Poor Infantry
I's a war veteran! ... spare me a crown?"

Northern Realms (Close Combat Units) (17 Cards)

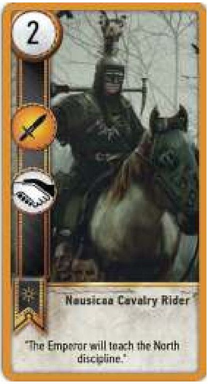
Though similar in set-up to the Nilfgaardian Empire (featuring a few Heroes, Tight Bond units, and Spies), the Northern Realms isn't quite as hard-hitting as their points value are lower. Naturally, you must bring your various Heroes (such as Vernon Roche, John Natalis, and Esterad Thyssen) into the fray. The fewer available cards doesn't need to be a disadvantage though; utilize your lower point cards (especially the Poor F--king Infantry) to lure an opponent into utilizing their own (usually better) cards so those are removed from their decks. Or employ your Infantry to eke out a victory on a foe who has passed. Also think about using your Leader: Lord Commander of the North (which clears all Weather effects) to ensure your front line stays effective. Play against a Northern Realms front line by Scorching and focusing on Tight Bond units.



10
Letho of Gulet
"Witchers never die in their beds."



3
Impera Brigade Guard
"The Impera Brigade never surrenders. Ever."

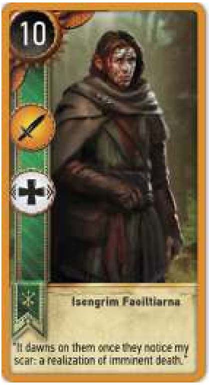


2
Nausicaa Cavalry Rider
"The Emperor will teach the North discipline."

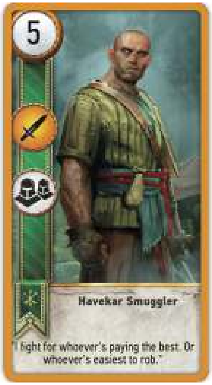
Nilfgaardian Empire (Close Combat Units) (18 Cards)

Though this faction doesn't have the sheer number of Close Combat cards compared to the Monsters and Scoia'Tael, it makes up for this fact with a trio of Tight Bond units (Young Emissary, Impera Brigade Guard, and Nausicaa Cavalry Rider).

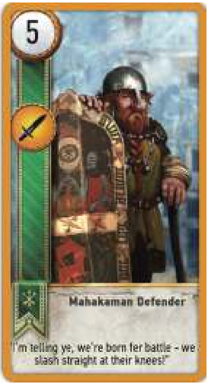
Combine these with Medics to resurrect your Tight Bond units if they are Scorched. This more even balance also means the Empire doesn't need to rely on its front line of Close Combat troops, allowing you to vary the rows where you place troops, forcing your foes into fewer opportunities to cripple you with Weather cards. Remember three of your Close Combat units are Spies too, so they technically move to your opponent's side. If you're playing against a Nilfgaardian Empire player, stack your deck with Scorch cards (especially Villentretenmerth) and concentrate on ridding yourself of any Tight Bond units.



10
Isengrim Faoiltiarna
"It dawns on them once they notice my scar: a realization of imminent death."



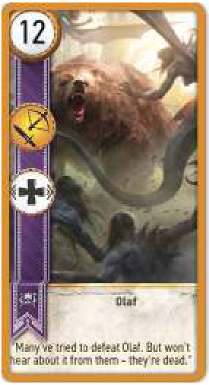
5
Havekar Smuggler
"I fight for whoever's paying the best. Or whoever's easiest to rob."



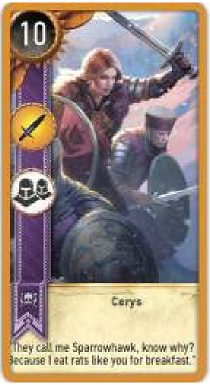
5
Mahakaman Defender
"I'm telling ye, we're born fer battle - we slash straight at their knees!"

Scoia'tael (Close Combat Units) (22 Cards)

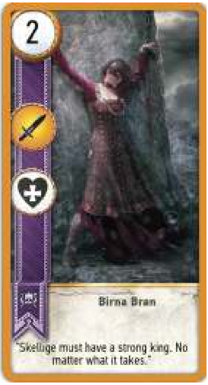
As this deck features the largest number of Agile cards (nine of your 22 Close Combat units can be placed in either Close Combat or Ranged rows), the Scoia'Tael have the most flexibility in bolstering either row. Use all your Close Combat and Agile cards, and this deck can be almost as strong as a Monster front-line. Add Isengrim Faoilitiama with his Morale Boost, the Havekar Smugglers and Dwarven Skirmishers (with Muster), and you can quickly divide your rows and conquer, or concentrate on one row and demolish your enemy! Also be aware of the high point value of even your general infantry units; up to eight Mahakaman Defenders can be played, and each is worth five points, so your Close Combat row can bulk up fast. With these point totals, it is even more critical you use Biting Frost to nullify and Villentretenmerth to scorch, while at the same time hedging your bets with more Impenetrable Fog cards to waylay Ranged Units.



12
Olaf
"Many've tried to defeat Olaf. But won't hear about it from them - they're dead."



10
Cerys
"They call me Sparrowhawk, know why? Because I eat rats like you for breakfast."



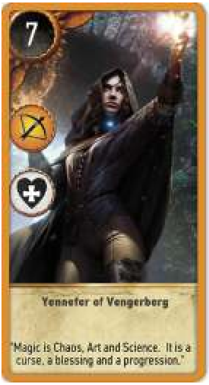
2
Birna Bran
"Skellige must have a strong king. No matter what it takes."

Skellige Clans (Close Combat Units) (18 Cards)

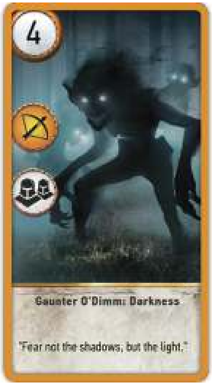
Those Skellige cards at the forefront of battle offer a great deal of variety, with Olaf being the only Agile card. However, he also offers a Morale Boost which can further influence a battle. Cerys is arguably your finest fighter, should you have collected her three Shield Maidens (which she instantly summons for a massive 46 point total to this row!). Clan an Craite Warriors, and the Shield Maidens each offer Tight Bond to bolster this row providing you have all three cards in your hand. Birna Bran offers a Medic ability, while the Kambi gives your opponent a nasty surprise (the Hero Hemdall) in a subsequent round. The Berserker, when powered by a Mardroeme, can quickly add 14 points to this row too: Flexibility with brute force is the advantage here.

UNIT TYPE: RANGED UNITS (75 CARDS)

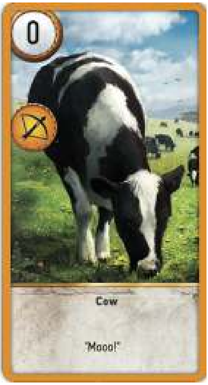
Featuring the second-highest number of available troops (unless you count Agile troops in the Scoia'Tael faction), ranged units play a secondary, and usually lesser role statistically. However, in practice, and depending on your Faction, troop build-ups on this row can be just as devastating, especially if you place any Agile troops (Monster and Scoia'Tael decks) to bolster this row. If you're having trouble tackling Ranged enemies, be sure to bring an Impenetrable Fog card or three.



7
Yennefer of Vengerberg
"Magic is Chaos, Art and Science. It is a curse, a blessing and a progression."

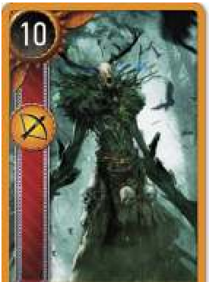


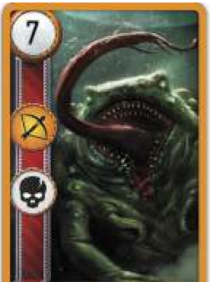
4
Gaunter O'Dimm: Darkness
"Fear not the shadows, but the light."

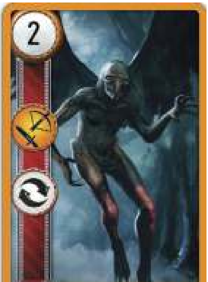


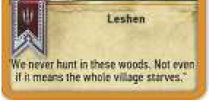
Neutral Cards (Ranged Units) (6 Cards)

There are only six Neutral units, but all of them are great choices. Yennefer is a High Point Hero Medic and extremely useful. Olgierd is Agile and comes with a Morale Boost. The three Gaunter O'Dimm: Darkness cards (used with the Gaunter O'Dimm Siege card) have Muster, and can bolster your total in Factions without access to this ability. The Cow is seemingly useless, used sacrificially so that the "Bovine Defense Force" (an eight-point Close Combat Chort) is employed.

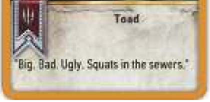




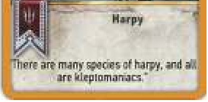




Leshen
"We never hunt in these woods. Not even if it means the whole village starves."



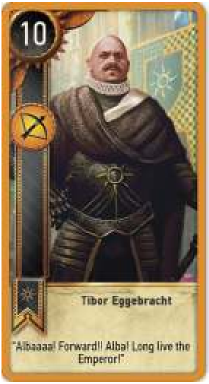
Toad
"Big. Bad. Ugly. Squats in the sewers."



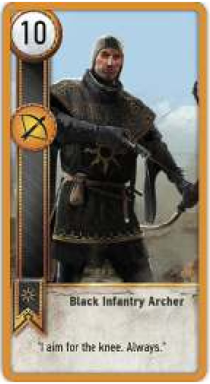
Harpy
"There are many species of harpy, and all are kleptomaniacs."

Monster Deck (Ranged Units) (10 Cards)

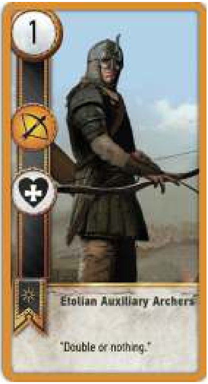
You only have around a third the number of Ranged cards compared to your Close Combat cards, so take more care and attention to picking the ones you must use. Both the Leshen (a 10 point Hero monster) and Kayran (a Hero, Agile, and Morale Boost card) are must-haves as they don't get scorched. The Toad is exceptional, as it's the only card in the game with a Ranged Scorch ability. Use it after Torrential Rain to decimate an opponent's Ranged row! Otherwise, your ranged units are run-of-the-mill; mid to low point cards with only two (the Harpy and Celaeno Harpy) being Agile for flexibility. For those playing against a Monster Deck, play your better Ranged cards after the Toad is out, and bring the Torrential Rain and Scorching!



10
Tibor Eggebracht
"Albaaaa! Forward!! Alba! Long live the Emperor!"



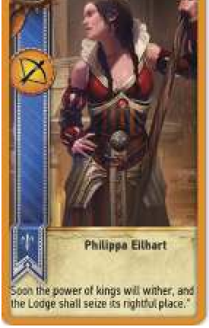
10
Black Infantry Archer
"I aim for the knee. Always."



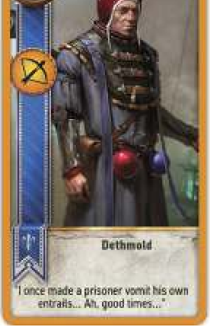
1
Etolian Auxiliary Archers
"Double or nothing."

Nilfgaardian Empire (Ranged Units) (13 Cards)

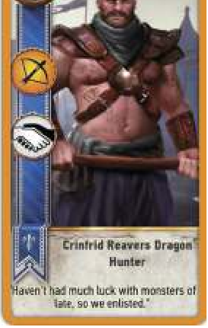
Outside of the Scoia'Tael, the Nilfgaardian Empire has the most flexible and highest percentage of Ranged cards compared to Close Combat ones (13 Ranged, and 18 Close Combat). This allows further flexibility in placement, and although your Black Infantry Archers are extremely susceptible to Scorch (a 10 point non-Hero), they can easily win a round if played after your foe's already Scorched the landscape. Tibor Eggebracht is your only ranged Hero (and therefore a must-have). The rest of your motley crew are mid to low-point troops used in earlier games before your more powerful cards are gathered. The exception are the Etolian Auxiliary Archers; used for their Medic ability as well as eking out a win by a single point. As usual, Torrential Rain and Scorch are key to removing a Nilfgaardian ranged threat; especially as there's only one Hero (Tibor) likely to be mooching around this row.



Philippa Eilhart
"Soon the power of kings will wither, and the Lodge shall seize its rightful place."



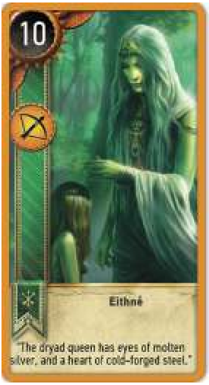
Dethmold
"I once made a prisoner vomit his own entrails... Ah, good times..."



Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunter
"Haven't had much luck with monsters of late, so we enlisted."

Northern Realms (Ranged Units) (9 Cards)

The Northern Realms have the least number of Ranged Units, both compared to other rows (nine compared to 16 Close Combat and 13 Siege) and other factions. There's only one Hero too (the almost indomitable Philippa Eilhart; play her when you expect to win the round). Dethmold is a reasonable fellow to employ (6 points non-Hero), but only before you gather better cards. However, what this row lacks in numbers, it makes up for with the Cinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunters; three cards with a Tight Bond to thoroughly bolster your points total, and cause an almost instant Scorch by any competent foe. So play these Hunters later rather than sooner, or try to bait a foe into playing Scorch first. If you're tackling a Northern Realms Ranged Row, be ever mindful of the Cinfred Reavers' Tight Bond, and nullify it as a matter of importance.



10
Eithné
"The dryad queen has eyes of molten silver, and a heart of cold-forged steel."

Milva

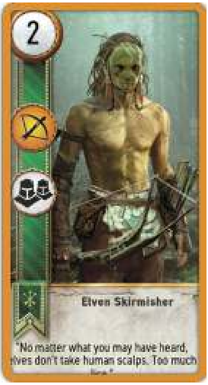
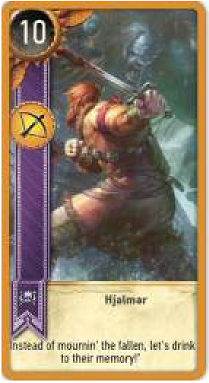
He'd be proud, I think."



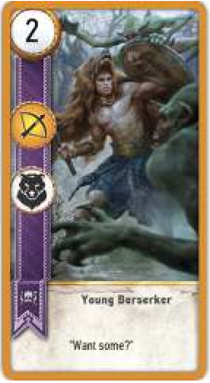
2
Elven Skirmisher
"No matter what you may have heard,
lves don't take human scalps. Too much

Scoia'tael (Ranged Units) (24 Cards)

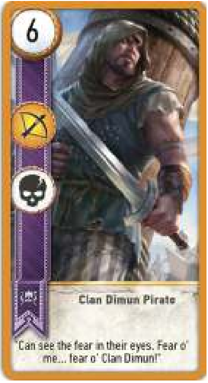
With a vast number of Agile units, the Scoia'tael can play even more total cards in this row compared to the Close Combat (22). However, 15 of this total are "true" Ranged cards that are only placed in this row. Aside from the flexibility this brings, you have three Heroes (Eithne, Saesenthessis, and Iorveth), and Milva with her Morale Boost (which can quickly add a huge bonus to this already-stacked row). Milva isn't a Hero though, so she's very susceptible to Scorch. Also present are three Elven Skirmishers (with Muster; useful to quickly sort out a win or add points immediately despite their low point value). Don't count out the three Havekar Healers either; though they have zero Points, their Medic ability allows you to return much higher point cards back into play. Going against a Scoia'Tael ranged row? Bring more Scorch and Torrential Rain than for any other deck, and focus on your other rows if you see a buildup of enemy cards here.



10
Hjalmar
Instead of mournin' the fallen, let's drink to their memory!"



2
Young Berserker
"Want some?"



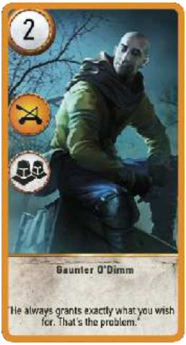
6
Clan Dimun Pirate
"Can see the fear in their eyes. Fear o' me... fear o' Clan Dimun!"

Skellige Clans (Ranged Units) (13 Cards)

Olaf offers his Agile ability to bolster this or the Close Combat row; and his Morale Boost can add further bonuses your opponent may not be expecting. Hjalmar is a good, old-fashioned mayhem machine; a Hero worth ten points. Ermion is more cunning; though his points value is good (eight), he should always be partnered with the three Young Berserkers, bolstering each of their attack strength from two to wight. Light Longships offer a great and quick 12-point addition due to their Muster, and the Clan Dimun Pirate is an incredible find; he has a Scorch ability that is applied to any row (including your own; he doesn't discriminate between friend or foe, just like a Special Scorch card)! Partner him with a Medic to devastate your enemy.

UNIT TYPE: SIEGE UNITS (29 CARDS)

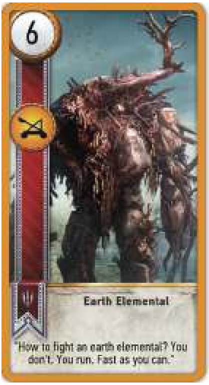
Of the three unit types, Siege units are by far the least in number. Aside from the Northern Realms, there is a distinct lack of Siege cards in Neutral and Faction lists (29 Siege cards in total, compared to 75 Ranged and 115 Close Combat). This means Siege cards aren't used as often. Tactically, this allows you to ignore Torrential Rain compared to other Weather cards, as the chances of these being effective are statistically less (unless you're playing against Northern Realms). However, this tactic is just what the enemy might want you to think; so always keep a few Siege cards handy to trounce a foe who is focusing elsewhere. This allows you to win much more often than you think!



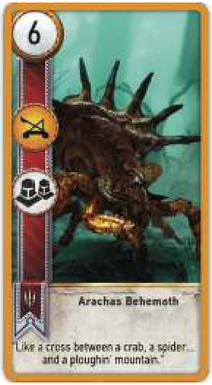
2
Gaunter O'Dimm
"He always grants exactly what you wish for. That's the problem."

Neutral Cards (Siege Units) (1 Card)

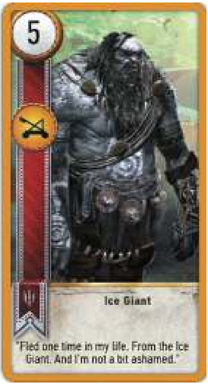
The Gaunter O'Dimm card offers your only neutral Siege card, and despite his low points total (2), he more than makes up for it with the Muster ability. He's very useful for bringing up to three Ranged cards (Gaunter O'Dimm: Darkness), adding totals to two rows at once and enabling players who don't normally play Monster or Scoia'Tael decks the advantage of using a card with Muster ability.



6
Earth Elemental
"How to fight an earth elemental? You don't. You run. Fast as you can."



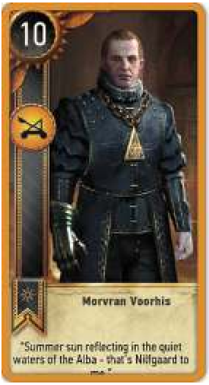
6
Arachas Behemoth
"Like a cross between a crab, a spider... and a ploughin' mountain."



5
Ice Giant
"Fled one time in my life. From the Ice Giant. And I'm not a bit ashamed."

Monster Deck (Siege Units) (4 Cards)

The Monster deck features only four Siege units; the Earth Elemental, Fire Elemental, Arachas Behemoth, and Ice Giant. Three of these are simply mid-point, hard-hitting cards, but the Arachas Behemoth is something of a treat; similar to Gaunter O'Dimm, it is a Siege unit with a Muster to bring in three units in a different row, all at once! In this case, up to three Close Combat Arachas units can be placed (and even Scorch won't strike the lower-point Arachas; the Behemoth takes the damage, leaving you with a good point total even after a Scorch). This also allows you to strength two rows at once, divide your opponent's attention, and provides a huge points influx. Expect a foe to play this to win, or later into a match, and react with Scorch, Torrential Rain, or Biting Frost to rid yourself of all Arachas units.



10
Morvran Voorhis
"Summer sun reflecting in the quiet waters of the Alba - that's Nilfgaard to 10

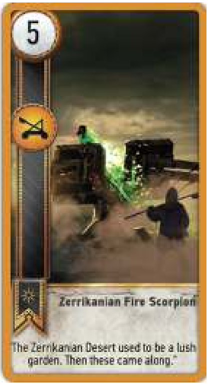
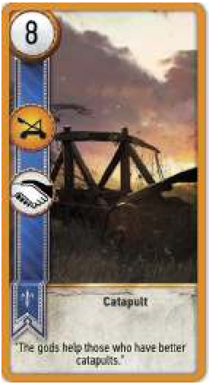
Heavy Zerrikanian Fire Scorpion
"Not the best for taking cities, but great for razing them to the ground."



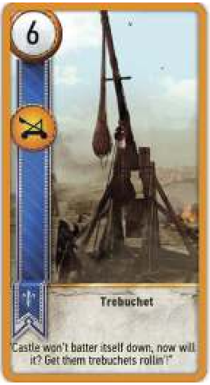
5
Zerrikanian Fire Scorpion
"The Zerrikanian Desert used to be a lush garden. Then these came along."

Nilfgaardian Empire (Siege Units) (6 Cards)

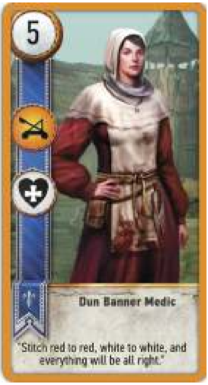
The Nilfgaard have a couple of interesting Siege units (and more than the Monster and Scoia'Tael decks combined). The first is Morvan Voorhis, who is the only Siege Hero in the game. The Heavy Zerrikanian Fire Scorpion offers tremendous points (10) but isn't a Hero card, and usually the first one to be lost to Scorch; so play it late. Otherwise, your card lists are mid to low-level in points total, though the regular Zerrikanian Fire Scorpion is handy in earlier Gwent bouts. Playing against the Nilfgaard? Then place more Torrential Rain cards than normal, due to the higher chances of a Siege card being played. and torch those Fire Scorpions with Scorch!



8
Catapult
"The gods help those who have better catapults."



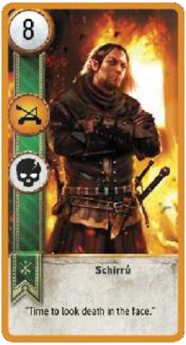
6
Trebuchet
"Castle won't batter itself down, now will it? Get them trebuchets rollin'!"



5
Dun Banner Medic
"Stitch red to red, white to white, and everything will be all right."

Northern Realms (Siege Units) (12 Cards)

By far the most effective at Siege-related tactics, the Northern Realms Faction has only four fewer Siege cards than Close Combat cards! Earlier into your Gwent matches (before higher-point cards become available), utilizing your mid-point level Trebuchets and Ballistas, with the Morale Boost of a Kaedweni Siege Expert (or three) is a great plan. The Dun Banner Medic is also a high-point Medic card useful to bolster and bring a card back. Both of the Catapults are vicious (8 Point), and feature Tight Bond, but they are susceptible to Torrential Rain, Scorch, and the tactics of using Spies offers slightly better results. When playing against Northern Realms, stack your deck with many more Torrential Rain cards, as you know your foe's Siege rows are going to be more packed than with any other Faction (and refrain from using too many Siege units yourself).



8
Schirrú
"Time to look death in the face."

Scoia'tael (Siege Units) (1 Card)

A single, solitary card (Schirru) is the only available siege unit. This means it should be employed (in case your main Close Combat and Ranged rows are nullified by Weather, for example), especially against opponents who favor Siege weaponry. Aside from the high points (8), Schirru has a Scorch ability against Siege rows. Therefore, he's very helpful to decimating the back row of a Northern Realms (and to a lesser extent a Nilfgaard) Faction player, especially if the attack occurs after a Torrential Rain! Opponents need to watch for this card, but after it is played, don't expect much else on this row. Think about bolstering your Siege rows with Gaunter O'Dimm; it's the only other option for a Scoia'Tael player!

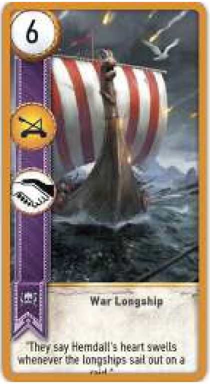
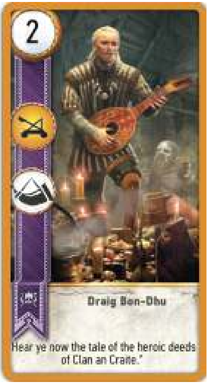
4
Holger Blackhand
Now let's drink to Emperor of Nilfgaard - may his prick forever stay limp!"



6
War Longship
"They say Hemdall's heart swells whenever the longships sail out on a raid."



2
Draig Bon-Dhu
Hear ye now the tale of the heroic deeds of Clan an Craite."

Skellige Clans (Siege Units) (5 Cards)

Of the five available Siege cards, Holger Blackhand offers minimal help to your cause, but the three War Longship cards and Draig Bon-Dhu are great to partner together. The War Drakkers (6 point) have a Tight Bond ability, while Draig brings the Commander's Horn to further augment the row. Think about adding some Neutral Siege units, perhaps with King Bran's Leader ability, to further bolster this row, adding flexibility to your game.

UNIT ABILITY: HERO (25 CARDS)

There are 25 Hero cards available (five Neutral, and four for each Faction). Hero cards are not affected by any Special Cards or abilities. This is both good and bad news for the Gwent player. It means (for example) that even if Geralt of Rivia (Neutral), Imlerith (Monster), Morvran Voorhis (Nilfgaard), Vernon Roche (Northern Realms), or Saesenthessis (Scoia'Tael) are Scorched, or subjected to Weather effects (Biting Frost, Impenetrable Fog, or Torrential Rain), they remain in place with no diminishment of their points total. However, it also means that Heroes don't receive the benefits of the Decoy, Commander's Horn, Morale Boost, or Medic. Be wise to the opportunities (and shortfalls) this creates.

- Decoy-Proof: You cannot swap a Hero with a card in your hand, and therefore, you are unable to plan the more advanced tactics (Decoy with Medic for example) using Hero cards.
- Commander's Horn Proof: They receive no bonus from the Commander's Horn boost, meaning this card is less helpful in Hero-heavy decks (and so you may wish to refrain from adding it to those deck builds).
- Scorch-Proof: Heroes are unaffected by Scorch, meaning you can play them without fear of them being removed.
- Weather Proof: Heroes ignore Biting Frost (Close Combat), Impenetrable Fog (Ranged), and Torrential Rain (Siege). As some Leader cards have a variation on this ability, this lessens the power of those cards, too; so check what Leader your adversary is using and react accordingly.

HEROES: KNOW WHEN TO HOLD THEM; KNOW WHEN TO FOLD THEM

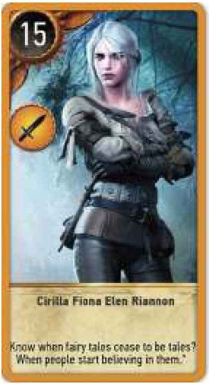
The biggest plus is that Hero cards are dependable: Play Hero cards to maintain a points total on the battlefield that you know won't be diminished by Weather or Scorch. They remain on the battlefield for the entire round, and will always add to your points total no matter what your opponent throws at you!

Don't play Hero cards if you're thinking of using them in a later round, as they can't be reused in a match. Instead, you may want to "bulk up" your total by passing the first round, and sending out your Heroes to guarantee a second and third round win, once your foe's best cards (or their own Heroes) are used up in the initial round.

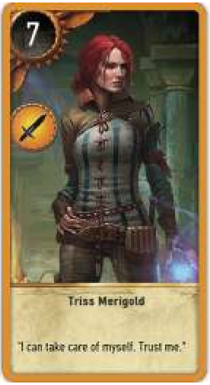
Don't waste Heroes securing a win after an opponent has passed; always use a card (or cards) that has a lesser value, or one you can more easily Medic back into play.

Heroes can be less effective compared to certain combinations of cards with other abilities. For example, in the Northern Realms deck, you can take up three spaces in your deck by picking Vernon Roche, John Natalis, and Esterad Thyssen for your Close Combat deck (a total of 30 points). But you could also pick three Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunters (each is a 5 points card). But when all three are placed with Tight Bond, their total becomes 45; 15 points higher than the Heroes (and on the Ranged row, which is sometimes less frequented by other cards, and therefore less susceptible to a foe's Weather attack). Weigh the chances of picking these cards when you make your deck.

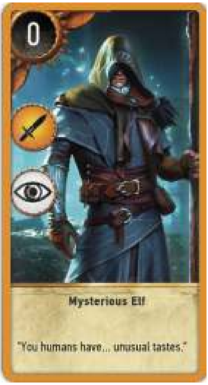
Bolster your Faction deck by adding Neutral Heroes into your deck. But don't overdo it (if you have a complete Gwent collection) as you may find Medics, Spies, and Decoy cards more helpful if you employ tactics related to these abilities, and those card types won't appear as often if you stack your deck with Heroes.



15
Cirilla Fiona Elen Riannon
"Know when fairy tales cease to be tales? When people start believing in them."



7
Triss Merigold
"I can take care of myself. Trust me."

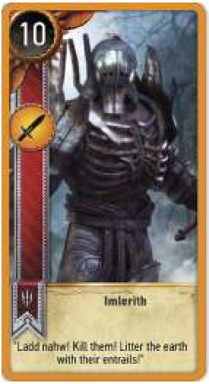


0
Mysterious Elf
"You humans have... unusual tastes."

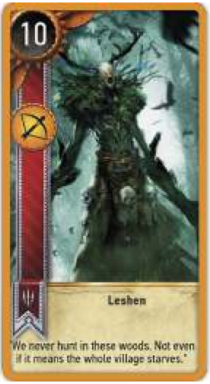
Neutral Cards (Hero Ability) (5 Cards)

Of the five available Neutral Heroes, Geralt of Rivia, Cirilla Fiona Elen Rianno, and Triss Merigold have no other abilities; they are here to simply add points totals to your round. As Geralt and Ciri both add a whopping 15 points each, they are incredibly useful and dangerous, and should be in your hand at all times. Triss, with her 7 points, is much less effective, works well in beginning and mid-level decks, but is usually ignored when you have a complete collection and need to reduce your deck size; as there are many other more potent cards to pick.

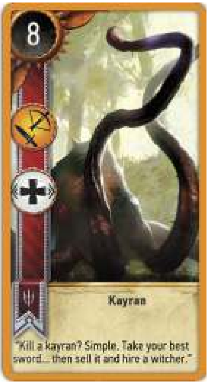
Yennefer is one of seven ranged Heroes but the only neutral ranged Hero, meaning she's useful to bolster decks needing help in this row (such as the Monster deck), as well as adding to an already-potent row in a Nilfgaard or Northern Realms deck. She is also only one of two Hero Medics, so has this flexibility of use. This is especially helpful to decks that normally cannot utilize a Medic, such as Monster decks. The Mysterious Elf is another amazing card, as the zero points total means your opponent won't receive a points addition, but will have the detrimental antics of your Spy to deal with!



10
Imlerith
"Ladd nahw! Kill them! Litter the earth with their entrails!"



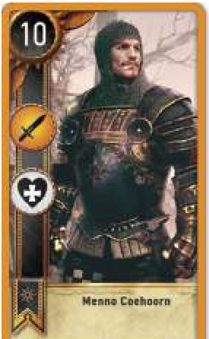
10
Leshen
"We never hunt in these woods. Not even if it means the whole village starves."



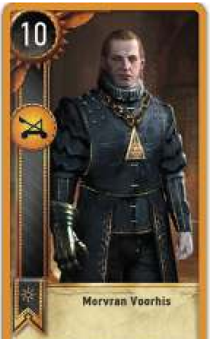
8
Kayran
"Kill a kayran? Simple. Take your best sword... then sell it and hire a witcher."

Monster Deck (Hero Ability) (4 Cards)

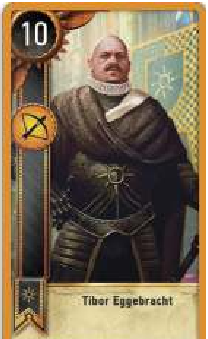
Draug and Imlerith are both giant monstrosities of pain with 10 points each to bring to a close combat row. Leshen offers the same points, but is ranged (and should be the centerpiece of a ranged row, which won't be facing the same kind of attention as your close combat troops will). Kayran offers something no other card can; three abilities! Aside from a Hero, it is Agile (and therefore more flexible in its placement), and gives the row you place it in a Morale Boost, though it only is worth eight points. All four Heroes should be chosen no matter what bout you're attempting.



10
Menno Coehoorn



10
Morvran Voorhis



10
Tibor Eggebracht

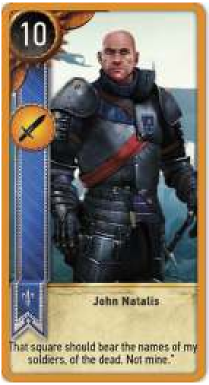
"I'll take an attentive reconnaissance unit over a fine cavalry brigade any day."

"Summer sun reflecting in the quiet waters of the Alba - that's Nilfgaard to

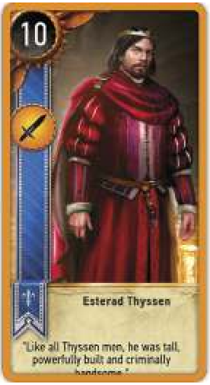
"Albaaaa! Forward!! Alba! Long live the Emperor!"

Nilfgaardian Empire (Hero Ability) (4 Cards)

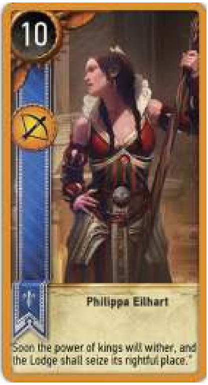
Three of the Nilfgaardian Heroes offer no other ability, but each is positioned on a different row (Letho of Gulet is Close Combat, Tiber Eggebracht is Ranged, and Morvran Voohris is the only Siege unit Hero in the game). This makes your Nilfgaard Heroes versatile, and your Siege row more potent than most. Menno Coehoorn is close combat, but also a Medic, giving you additional flexibility to use this ability. All Nilfgaard Heroes have 10 points.



10
John Natalis
"That square should bear the names of my soldiers, of the dead. Not mine."



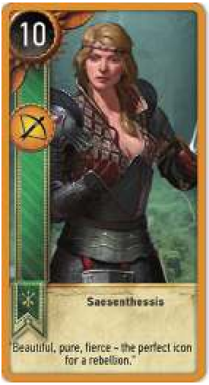
10
Esterad Thyssen
"Like all Thyssen men, he was tall, powerfully built and criminally handsome."



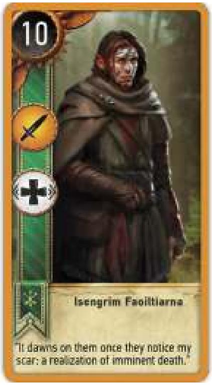
10
Philippa Eilhart
"Soon the power of kings will wither, and the Lodge shall seize its rightful place."

Northern Realms (Hero Ability) (4 Cards)

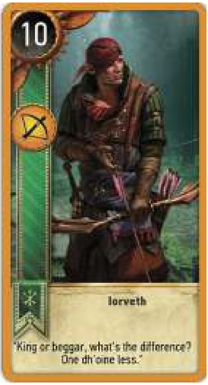
The four Northern Realm Heroes offer tremendous points totals (10 each), and three of them (Vernon Roche, John Natalis, and Esterad Thyssen) are close combat cards. Only Philippa Eilhart is a ranged Hero. This means you're more likely to bolster your close combat row than any other; this knowledge means enemies should attempt to focus on neutralizing the other cards surrounding these Heroes to minimize your total points.



10
Saesenthessis
"Beautiful, pure, fierce - the perfect icon for a rebellion."



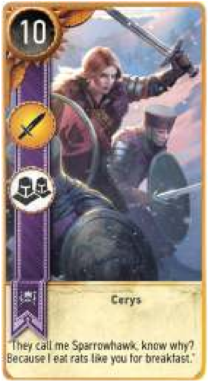
10
Isengrim Faoiltiarna
"It dawns on them once they notice my scar: a realization of imminent death."



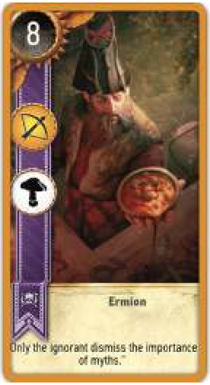
10
Iorveth
"King or beggar, what's the difference? One dh'oine less."

Scoia'tael (Hero Ability) (4 Cards)

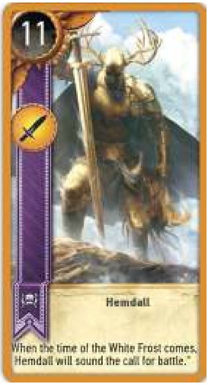
Of the four Scoia'Tael Heroes, three of them offer a large points total (10) at the Ranged level; Eithne, Saesenthessis, and Iorveth. Only Isengrim Faolitiama offers a close combat row increase and a ten point total, with a Morale Boost to boot. This allows you to increase both your front rows with different types of Hero, though swapping out two of your ranged Heroes with Geralt and Ciri (if you're minimizing your deck bloat) is a good idea.



10
Cerys
"They call me Sparrowhawk, know why? Because I eat rats like you for breakfast."



8
Ermion
"Only the ignorant dismiss the importance of myths."



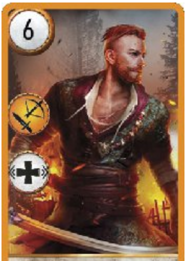
11
Hemdall
"When the time of the White Frost comes, Hemdall will sound the call for battle."

Skellige Clans (Hero Ability) (4 Cards)

Cerys should be the main striking force of your Skellige deck as her prowess cannot be understated; she immediately summons your three Shield Maiden units using a special Muster ability. Note that the Shield Maidens can't summon Cerys! As each Shield Maiden (4 points) has a Tight Bond, this is an instant 46 point total with all four cards played! Hjalmar is a great Ranged Hero (10 points), and Ermion is also splendid to play, either without, but ideally with, the Young Berserkers (2 points each), as his Mardroeme ability turns all three of them into Transformed Young Vildkaarls (8 points each). Finally, Hemdall is also available; an 11-point killing machine that only appears once you play Kambi (0 points) and it is discarded. Hemdall can turn the tide of battle in the later rounds with the appropriate pre-planning.

UNIT ABILITY: AGILE (14 CARDS)

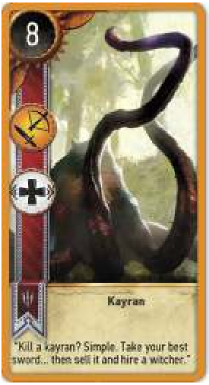
Agile units simply allow you to position them on either your Close Combat or Ranged rows of the battlefield (once placed, they cannot be moved to a different row unless discarded and brought back with a Medic). This simple ability can turn the tides of matches simply because you have the flexibility to avoid placing cards on rows you know a foe is likely to be targeting with Weather cards, or to bolster a row in need of help. Is a Biting Frost covering your close combat units? Without Clear Weather, place Agile cards on your Ranged row instead. Only Monster and Scoia'Tael decks have such cards; the Nilfgaard and Northern Realms have no troops with this ability (unless Olgierd is added to your deck).



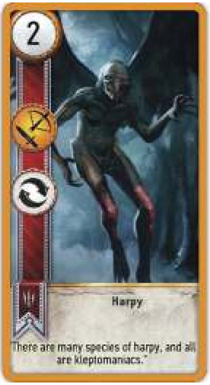
Olgierd von Everec
"At least you now know I don't easily lose my head."

Neutral Cards (Agile Ability) (1 Card)

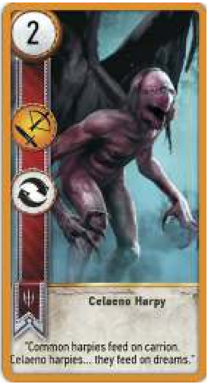
Only Olgierd von Everec has the agile ability among the Neutral cards, and although his points total is only above average (6), and he isn't a Hero, he does provide a Morale Boost too. This can be useful for decks without Agile cards (like a Monster deck) allowing you to spread your cards over more than one row. But there are better ways to combat your one-row approach (Clear Weather to remove Biting Frost, and watching for Scorches before piling on the pressure).



8
Kayran
"Kill a kayran? Simple. Take your best sword... then sell it and hire a witcher."



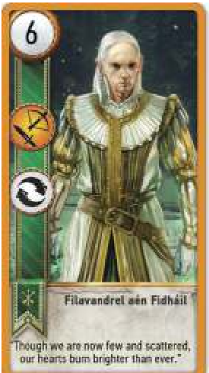
2
Harpy
here are many species of harpy, and all are kleptomaniacs."



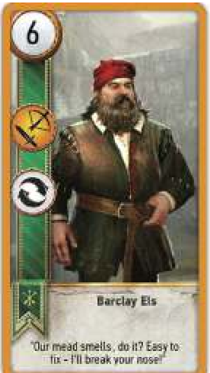
2
Celaeno Harpy
"Common harpies feed on carrion. Celaeno harpies... they feed on dreams."

Monster Deck (Agile Ability) (3 Cards)

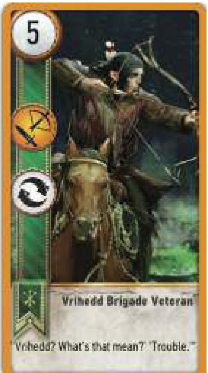
Only three Monster deck cards have this ability, and two of them are very low point cards (Harpy and Celaeno Harpy with 2 points each); use those to steal a win from a passing opponent, and remove them at higher levels of Gwent playing. The stand-out card is the Kayran; it is a Hero and immune to special attacks, and offers a Morale Boost to either row; fantastic if you're building up a Ranged Row (if your close combat row has problems you can't overcome), or adding to an already-stellar close combat row.



6
Filavandrel aén Fidháil
"Though we are now few and scattered, our hearts burn brighter than ever."



6
Barclay Els
"Our mead smells, do it? Easy to fix – I'll break your nose!"



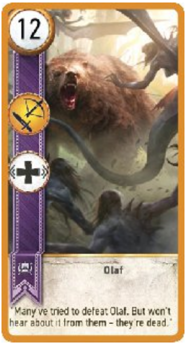
5
Vrihedd Brigade Veteran
"Vrihedd? What's that mean?" "Trouble."

Scoia'tael (Agile Ability) (9 Cards)

The supreme flexibility of the Scoia'Tael is demonstrated by their large number of Agile cards (9), though only cards with a point value of 6 should be considered as the mainstay of your deck in later matches. All Agile cards here have no other abilities; simply pick the row you want them in. Once all the Scoia'tael cards are found, it is better to remove all these cards from your deck, replacing them with Heroes and higher-point value Neutral cards (as these are more effective).

Skellige Clan (Agile Ability) (1 Card)

The mighty Olaf is a 12-point non-hero with Agility and Morale Boost, making him a tremendous asset in battle, but also one that is highly susceptible to Scorch. Use him to bolster either row, and use his lack of Hero status as a bonus; you can Medic him back into play to cause another round of problems for the enemy. Simply look to which row needs Olaf's help before placing him. For example, he can bolster your Berserker (Close Combat) or Young Berserkers (Ranged), adding more points to already-augmented troops. For this reason, you may find playing him later in a round is most helpful.



12
Olaf
"Many've tried to defeat Olaf. But won't hear about it from them – they're dead."

UNIT ABILITY: BERSERKER (4 CARDS) AND MARDROEME (4 CARDS)

The Berserker ability is only available to two particular units in the Skellige Clans faction, and is only accessible when used in conjunction with the Mardroeme card (or Ermion's Mardroeme ability). This transforms a normally mediocre unit into a rampaging Vildkaarl with a much greater points value. There is a single Berserker/Transformed Vildkaarl (4/14 points) available for the Close Combat row, which can only be transformed using the Special Mardroeme card. The Transformed Vildkaarl also has the Morale Boost ability, but only when transformed. There are also up to three Young Berserker/Transformed Young Vildkaarls (2/8 points, with a maximum of 6/24 points when all three are played) available for the Ranged row. These are transformed using either the Mardroeme or Ermion's Mardroeme ability (as Ermion can only be placed on the Ranged row). The Transformed Young Vildkaarls also have the Tight Bond ability, but only when transformed.

BERSERKER CARDS: KNOW WHEN TO HOLD THEM

Don't forget the three Special Mardroeme cards to obtain, as these should be employed on either your Berserker or Young Berserker. However, don't use up a Mardroeme on your Young Berserkers if Ermion can be played; at the expense of not transforming your Close Combat Berserker (who can't be influenced by Ermion). Remember never to place a Mardroeme on your Siege row, as there are no Berserker cards that are placed there!

Berserkers are an option when you need a quick additional points increase, and you've already committed these cards into play. Berserkers aren't anywhere near as useful without the Mardroeme cards, so ensure you have both in your hand at the start of a game. Remember there's a chance you might not draw either; a shortfall of this ability. Also remember you can use your Young Berserkers in groups of one, two, or three, depending on how the bout is going (though as Transformed Young Vildkaarls, they have a Tight Bond ability, increasing your points value when more of them are together).

The three available Mardroeme cards are also great to stack in your Skellige Clans deck, as you can use them even if all Berserkers have been played (to "burn" a card in the hopes your foe plays something or you're drawing down your foe).

Berserkers are good troops to sacrifice as Scorch-bait. For example, the Berserker (4 points), transforming him into a Transformed Vildkaarl (now worth 14 points) if you're subsequently planning on placing Clan an Craite Warriors (Close Combat Tight Bond cards) or Olaf (a 12 point non-hero) and want to shield these other cards from your foe's scorching wrath.

BERSERKER CARDS, COMMANDER'S HORN, AND MORALE BOOST

The Berserker / Vildkaarl, when transformed, has the Morale Boost ability included, making it another option to play if you wish to further bolster your Close Combat row. It can also utilize the Commander's Horn ability.

Young Berserkers / Young Vildkaarls utilize the bonuses of both the Commander's Horn and Morale Boost from other cards, further augmenting their ability, though it doesn't matter if the Young Berserkers have transformed or not.

Berserkers don't have the multiple points totals of a Tight Bond or Muster group. Young Berserkers do have the Tight Bond bonus, but as they must be individually drawn and placed (along with a Mardroeme employed), the chances of further augmentation is smaller than other ability types.

2
Birna Bran

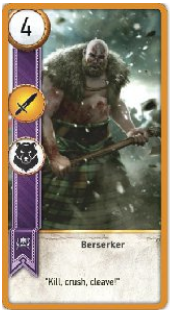
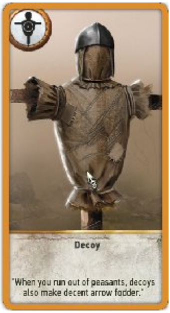
BERSERKER CARDS AND MEDICS

Berserkers are a good choice to employ with Medics, but only if you're confident you can play a Mardroeme with them. As Mardroeme cards can't be returned to play (except using Crach an Craite's Leader ability), only use a Medic to bring back a Berserker if you're holding a Mardroeme card.



4
Berserker
"Kill, crush, cleave!"



BERSERKER CARDS AND DECOYS

Decoys can be helpful if you have no other option but to play a Berserker card, and then wish to bring it back and save it for a more cohesive strategy in a later round. Remember that Mardroeme (and Ermion) can't be brought back with Decoys, so choose which of these two types (Berserker or Mardroeme) to "waste" if you can't play them in unison. It's usually a good idea to use Decoy with Berserkers only if you know you have a Mardroeme waiting to play later.

6

"Can see the fear in their eyes. Fear o' me... fear o' Clan Dimun!"

BERSERKER CARDS, SCORCH, AND THE WEATHER

Berserkers are easily scorched, especially when transformed into Vildkaarls; it is wise to wait your opponent out until they play a Scorch card, and then play your Mardroeme. Berserkers are less susceptible to Scorch before they transform, so should be played earlier in a bout or game, so they can sit in a row for a while until your foe has exhausted their Scorch cards. Only then should they be transformed.

SKELLIGE CLANS (BERSERKER AND MARDROEME ABILITIES) (5 CARDS)

Your Close Combat row only benefits from a single Berserker/Transformed Vildkaarl. Your Ranged row benefits from up to three Transformed Young Vildkaarls, which can provide single, double, or triple benefits with a single Mardroeme, especially as a Young Vildkaarl's value increases with the Tight Bond ability (only accessible once they are transformed). Ermion is always partnered with the Young Berserkers, so make a mental note these two card types go together (as Ermion is a Ranged unit only, and his ability is only useful with them). There's no need to overuse multiple Berserkers if you have additional Mardroeme waiting to play. Overkill isn't necessary if you can eke out a win, before using your other Mardroeme and Berserkers (and using Medics to bring back Berserkers) in subsequent rounds.

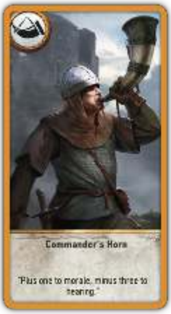
UNIT ABILITY: COMMANDER'S HORN (6 CARDS)

The Commander's Horn doubles the strength of all non-Hero unit cards in that row. Only one Horn can be placed per row. There are only six cards (four Special cards, Dandelion the two-point Neutral Close Combat non-hero, and Draig Bon-Dhu the two-point Skellige Clan Siege non-hero) with this ability.



Commander's Horn
"Plus one to morale, minus three to hearing."

COMMANDER'S HORN: TOOTING YOUR OWN HORN WITH TIGHT BOND UNITS

Commander's Horn
"Plus one to morale, minus three to hearing."

The Commander's Horn is a boon when placed with high-value, non-hero cards, such as the 10 point Black Infantry Archers of the Nilfgaard, or the 8-point Catapults of the Northern Realms. The latter is especially devastating, as doubling the strength of a unit with a stacked ability can make them even more powerful (and unfortunately, subject to Scorch attacks).

For example, if you were to use the available Catapults in your deck, they have Tight Bond ability which doubles their strength:

- One catapult is worth eight points. With a Horn, it is worth 16 total points.
- Both catapults are worth 16 points each (32 total). With a Horn, they are worth 64 total points!

COMMANDER'S HORN: KNOW WHEN TO FOLD THEM

If you're playing with a number of Hero cards in your deck, lessen the number of Commander's Horns you use, as the Horn has no effect on them.

The trick to building a deck with a Commander's Horn or three, is to determine how risky a proposition it is to build a deck with fewer Heroes, and more high-point non-hero cards. Such cards can easily be Scorched, but are also able to be Decoyed and can have Medics used on them time and time again—a slightly riskier but more flexible option.

Also use Commander's Horns on rows you know you are going to bolster or focus on, such as the Close Combat row of a Monster Deck, where the more cards you have on a row, the more helpful Commander's Horn becomes.

It usually isn't wise to stack your deck with Commander's Horns. Having three or four in your hand (due to a bad draw) limits your ability to add high-point cards on the battlefield; think of Horns more as an afterthought, rather than the mainstay of your deck.

Though occasionally you can place a Commander's Horn without having any other cards on that row, in order to feint your opponent, see how they react, or simply burn a Commander's Horn card in the hopes of getting one more suited to your current tactical plan, this can be seen as a waste.

Usually, it's wise to save a Horn in case you want to lull an opponent into thinking they are just beating you in a points total, before dropping a Horn to clinch a round.

8
Catapult

DANDELION AND DRAIGS' HORNS: THE ONLY HORNS YOU CAN REUSE (2 CARDS)

Dandelion is a unique individual in many ways, and his card is too. It is a non-hero (one of only two Commander's Horns you can "reuse"), the card is Neutral (thus allowing him to be used in any deck), and offer the Horn ability only to the Close Combat row. Therefore, it's great to partner Dandelion with a Close-Combat heavy deck build (such as Monster or Scoia'Tael decks).

Draig Bon-Dhu of the Skellige Clans is the only other character with a Commander's Horn ability, though the fact he is a Siege unit severely impedes his usefulness. Play him only if you're bringing in other Skellige Clans Siege units (or Neutral Siege units) into play.

ABILITY: DECOY

Decoy cards swap with any card on your side of the battlefield and returns that card to your hand. Remember they don't work on Hero cards. There are only three of these Neutral cards available, and in almost every circumstances, they form part of the very best tactical advantages you can attempt in a game of Gwent. Stack your deck with them in almost every circumstance.

Simply put, Decoy cards have two huge advantages:

1. Decoys allow you to reuse other cards with abilities that you crave.

2. Decoys enable you to keep the total number of cards in your hand at the same number (as the swapped card returned to your deck replaces the Decoy card), and gain a card advantage (so you can out-draw your opponent and usually win).

Try the following tactics depending on your situation, and remember that with three Decoy cards, each tactic can be attempted up to three times:

Decoys and Biding Time

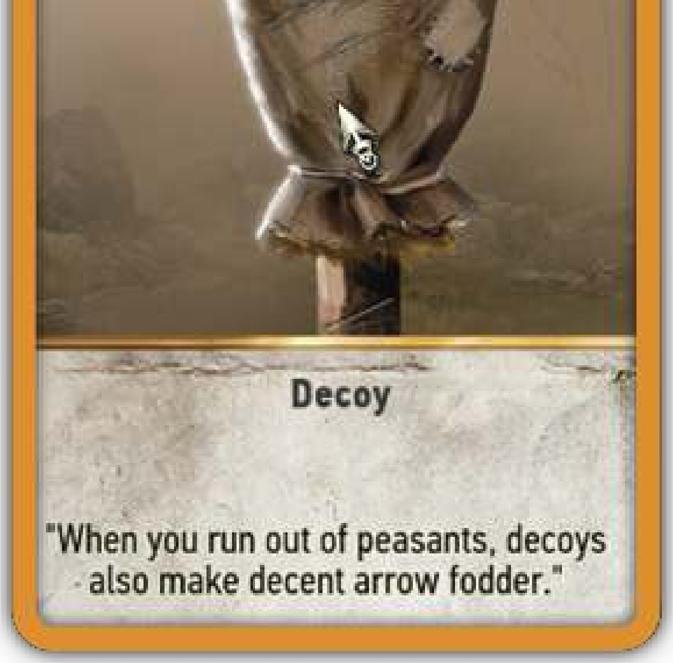
Use the Decoy on any card already in play (including other Decoys) as a simple delaying tactic. As the player with the most cards usually wins, and Decoy cards don't reduce your count (as a card on the battlefield is returned to your hand), you can wait your opponent out.

Decoys and Feinting

Use the Decoy on any card already in play. Use this when you have few cards left, you've played a card you want back, or you want your opponent to think you've played your best cards. For example, if you play Geralt (a Hero card) early in the first round (which isn't usually wise, as Heroes are better played in later rounds), you can take this back with a Decoy after your foe tries to match you and save Geralt for later.

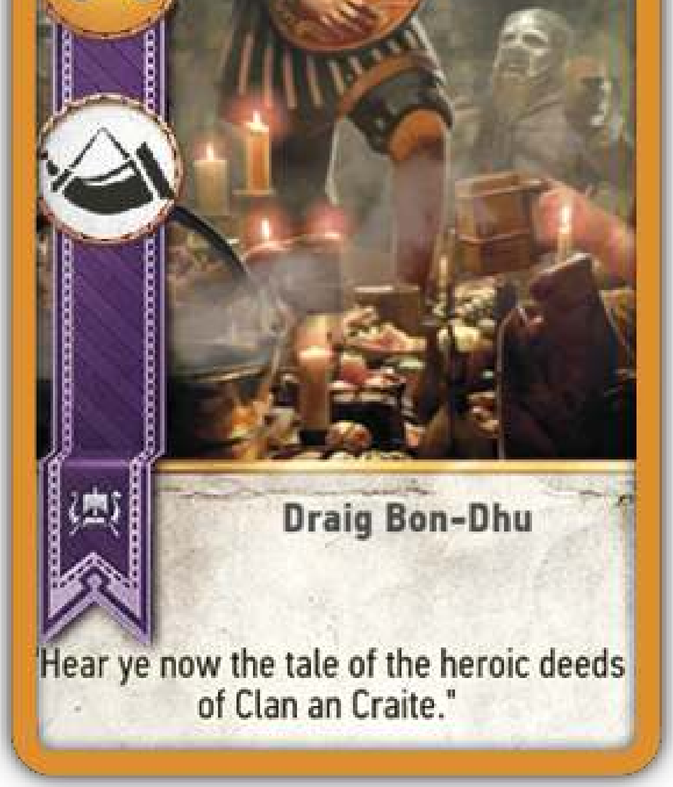
Dandelion

"Dandelion, you're a cynic, a lecher, a liar - and my best friend."



Decoy

"When you run out of peasants, decoys also make decent arrow fodder."

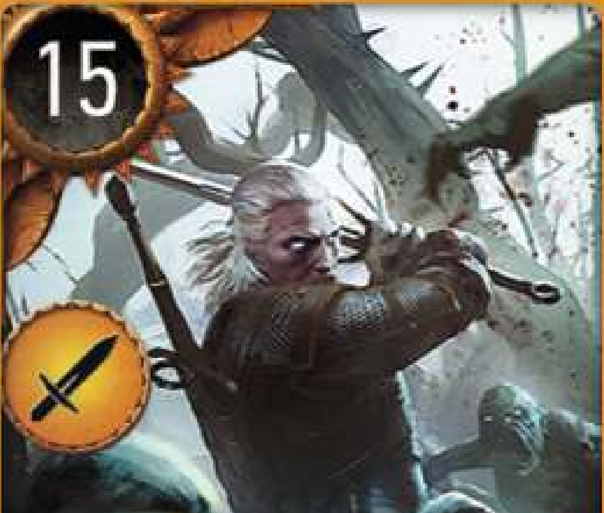


Draig Bon-Dhu

"Hear ye now the tale of the heroic deeds of Clan an Craite."

Decoy

"When you run out of peasants, decoys also make decent arrow fodder."



Geralt of Rivia

"If that's what it takes to save the world, it's better to let that world die."

DECOYS AND BERSERKERS

Decoys can be used with the Skellige Clans faction's Berserker cards, but make this a lower priority over cards with other abilities, simply because Berserkers require a Mardroeme in order to transform into Vildkaarls. As Mardroeme cards can't be Decoyed (they are Special and Ermion is a Hero), you may not have the opportunity to employ the Berserker ability again. However, if you're carrying Mardroeme cards, feel free to employ a Decoy card immediately!

Decoys and Commander's Horn

Who says you can't reuse a Commander's Horn? Normally, these rules apply unless you're utilizing Dandelion (or Draig Bon-Dhu). Though you'd usually want to keep Dandelion or Draig Bon-Dhu to bolster their respective rows, there are times when it makes sense to retrieve either of these characters using Decoy, for example, if the row is affected with Weather Cards that you cannot counter, or you have enough points to beat your foe without the character's bonus and you want to gather either card up for a subsequent round.

Decoys and Morale Boosts

Aside from the Kayran and Isengrim Faoltiama (who are Heroes and can't be Decoyed), there are five units with this ability; which shouldn't be overlooked. As Morale adds +1 to all units in a row, the tactics for Decoying such cards work in a similar way to Dandelion; gather up your Morale Boost card if your row is either too weak to make a difference (affected by Weather cards or completely outclassed by your opponent), or too strong to make a difference (and your Morale Boost bonus won't affect you winning the round). Then play the Morale Boost again when it matters.

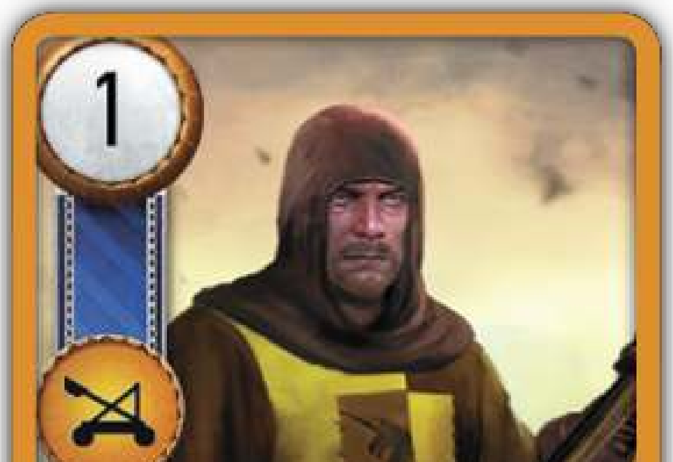
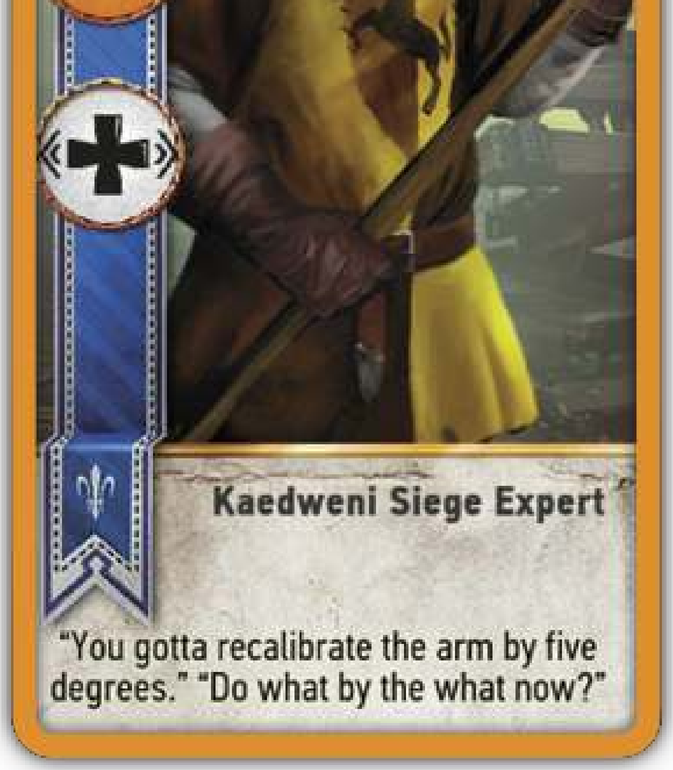
Dandelion

"Dandelion, you're a cynic, a lecher, a liar - and my best friend."





Kaedweni Siege Expert

Decoys and Medics

Use in conjunction with a Medic: As the Medic ability allows you to revive a card from your discard pile and play it immediately, you can Decoy the Medic to revive an additional card. If you then use the Medic in one of a variety of ways (see the Medic section for more information) you can thoroughly stall your card attrition, and bring back some fantastic cards from the discard pile of doom!

Decoys and Scorch Character Cards

If you have Villentretenmerth, Toad, or Schirru (all with the Scorch ability), you may have a hankering to use them more than once in a bout. So play your Scorch character card (for example, Toad against a Ranged row), demolishing that row. Then use a Decoy to grab the Toad, return it to your deck, and use it again (and again)! Don't forget to use a Weather card before the Scorch attack to completely decimate a row, and use this with a Medic card so your Scorch character can return from the dead (discard pile)!

Decoys and Muster Cards

Though not often used (as Muster cards are most effective when summoned at once and grouped together), it is still possible to mount an effective play with a Decoy; but only to retrieve a card your opponent has scorched. For example, if Villentretenmerth has torched all your four-point Arachas cards, but you still have the Arachas Behemoth (which wasn't affected by the flames as it is a Siege card), you can retrieve the Arachas Behemoth with Decoy, then play it again (and return all three front-line Arachases into combat).

Decoys and Spies

If an opponent places a Spy card, use the Decoy to remove the card, and return it to your own deck. Then play this enemy Spy back at your foe! Unfortunately, he or she can do the same to you, and you can't Decoy one of your own Spies once they've been played into enemy territory. But this can effectively increase the Spies you can play by up to three; gathering two cards from your unused pile each time (increasing your card total by one), and buying you time against a foe who isn't concerned about maintaining a large number of remaining cards (to his or her detriment).

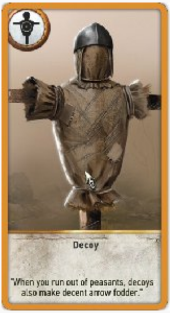
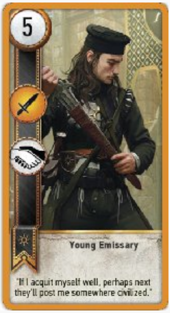
Sigismund Dijkstra

"Gwent's like politics, just more honest."

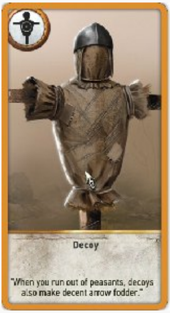


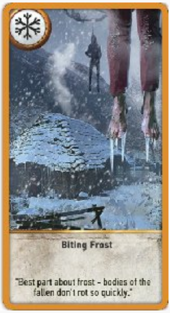


5
Young Emissary
"If I acquit myself well, perhaps next they'll post me somewhere civilized."

Decoys and Tight Bond Cards

Decoys are only usually used with Tight Bond cards after you make a mistake (or you want your opponent to think you've made a mistake) by playing a Tight Bond card without having an additional Tight Bond unit to utilize. Return the card if you draw a new Tight Bond card and wish to delay using it to another round, or as part of the "feint" tactic listed previously.





Biting Frost
"Best part about frost – bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

Decoys and Weather Cards

Is your close combat row feeling the Biting Frost? If you don't have Clear Weather, and want to save one or more of your best cards on a row for another round, employ a Decoy to salvage them. You can also place a high-value non-Hero card on a row, hoping your opponent plays a Weather card; then Decoy that valued card back into your deck, with your foe wasting the Weather card.

DECOY CARDS: KNOW WHEN TO HOLD THEM; KNOW WHEN TO FOLD THEM

Decoy cards are dramatically less useful in the third (last) round of a Gwent bout; at this point use them to prolong the round if it benefits you, or to retrieve a card you might want in anticipation of a foe's strategy you wish to disrupt (gathering a card before Scorch, or grabbing an Agile card so you can play it on a different row). But get rid of Decoy cards early (rounds 1 and/or 2, and possibly early in round 3), so you don't finish the game drawing dead (as Decoys have no points value).

UNIT ABILITY: MEDIC (10 CARDS)

Medic cards allow you to choose one card from your discard pile and play it instantly. This can be any card you like except Heroes or Special cards. Although the Medic's own points value (if available) is good to add to your total, this is a secondary bonus to their ability, especially when used in conjunction with other ability cards. Medics are also useful when played with another (usually high-value) card in mind. The basic tactics is to play an impressive non-Hero card in the first round (such as the Northern Realms Catapult for 8 points), and then retrieve it, or another high-point non-Hero card, from the discard pile in the second or third round (or after it has been Scorched) so it can demolish your foe again (and again)!

4

MEDICS AND BERSERKERS

Medics can be employed to gather up discarded Berserkers providing you already have a good Mardroeme and Berserker contingent on the board already; otherwise there are far better choices of cards to Medic. If you're holding a Mardroeme (or three), Young Berserkers, the Berserker, or Emrion, and you know you'll be playing most of these in the round, bring back any previous Berserkers you already used. Otherwise, medical attention should be employed elsewhere.

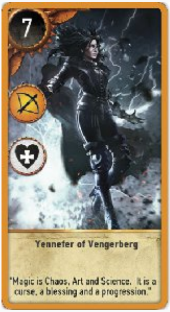
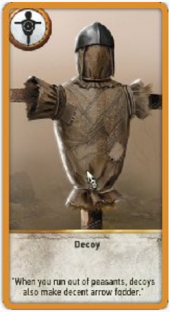
2
Dandelion
"Dandelion, you're a cynic, a lecher, a liar - and my best friend."

Medics and Commander's Horn

Dandelion (Neutral) and Draig Bon-Dhu (Skellige) are the only cards with the Commander's Horn ability (which you can't normally Medic back into play). They are also not Hero cards, thus allowing you to use them to bring his ability back to your specific rows even after they've been discarded. Doubling the strength of all unit cards in that row in multiple rounds? This is an excellent choice, especially if you're using Dandelion and you're partnering him with a Close Combat-heavy deck, like Monsters.



7
Yennefer of Vengerberg
"Magic is Chaos, Art and Science. It is a curse, a blessing and a progression."



Medics and Decoys

It's extremely useful to play a Medic, then utilize a Decoy (in the first two rounds) to gather up that same Medic so you can play it again. This keeps your card count from decreasing, and enables you to keep from playing a more valuable card you want to save or hope to play after a Scorch is removed from your opponent's deck. Use this tactic to stall for time, while watching your opponent expend cards, all the while adding to your own card count!

0
Siege Technician

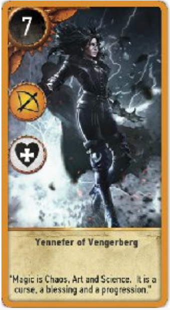
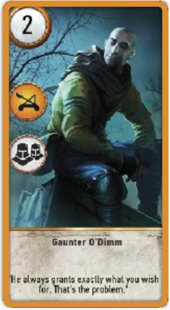
Medics and More Medics!

Usually reserved for second or third rounds (and obviously, only after you've already used a Medic that is in your discard pile), using a Medic to resurrect another of your discarded Medics has a key benefit: It keeps your card count up both in your hand and on the battlefield (you expend one card, but play a total of three: your medic, your resurrected medic, and the resurrected medic's card!). Now do it again, once you have another discarded Medic and one in your hand.



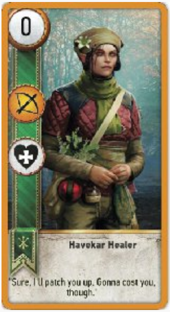
7
Yennefer of Vengerberg
"Magic is Chaos, Art and Science. It is a curse, a blessing and a progression."



2
Gaunter O'Dimm
"He always grants exactly what you wish for. That's the problem."

Medics and Muster Cards

Medics and Muster cards are fantastic combinations, but only if you don't have a Muster card in your hand (thus negating the need for a Medic). However, if a Muster unit has been discarded, simply resurrect it, and every one of them is played! You can also bring back a Muster card that might have taken the brunt of a Scorch attack too (such as Gaunter O'Dimm if struck by Schirru). Remember though; Muster cards don't gather units that are already discarded, so a Medic is the only opportunity you have.



0

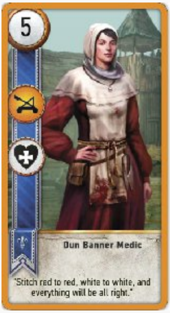
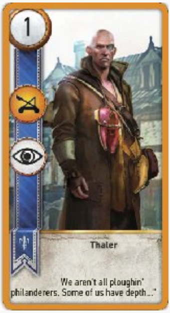
8
Schirrú
"Time to look death in the face."

Medics and Scorch

The annoying Scorch special card, and the four character cards with the Scorch ability, can seriously damage your high value, non-Hero cards. So bring back your torched card from the discard pile with a Medic. But what about when you want to use Villentretenmerth, Toad, Schirru, or the Clan Dimon Pirate yourself? Then make sure you use their Scorch ability effectively, before using a Medic to bring it back to wreak havoc in a future round (which can be insanely devastating to your opponent), or if your foe removes it in the current round. If you're playing against a foe who is using Medics, wait to use Scorch until a Medic (or two) have been committed to play, so there's less chance of the enemy card you torch being brought back into play.



5
Dun Banner Medic
"Stitch red to red, white to white, and everything will be all right."



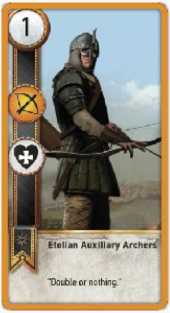
1
Thaler
"We aren't all ploughin' philanderers. Some of us have depth..."

Medics and Spies

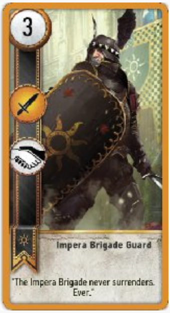
Usually after the first round, when the enemy Spies already played by your opponent are in the discard pile, simply resurrect them with your Medic and utilize them yourself, choosing the one with the lowest points value (like Thaler) first. This allows you to gather more cards later into a bout, which can be critical for out-drawing your opponent. Remember you won't be using your own Spies—only the enemy Spies your foe has already played—so a Medic can turn a previously Spy-free deck (like the Monsters deck) into one with more versatility. Feel free to resurrect and reuse your foe's own spies back at your opponent!

Medics and Tight Bond Cards

Medics are very useful if you've played a Tight Bond card earlier in your game, it has gone to your discard pile, and you have other identical units you wish to play. Though not as potent as bringing Muster cards back from the dead, you can still cause havoc by gathering all your Tight Bond cards to play in a single round, where they are most effective. Do you have two Tight Bond cards that have been discarded (or possibly Scorched together)? Then employ two Medics and retrieve them both; especially now the Scorch has passed.



1
Etolian Auxiliary Archers
"Double or nothing."

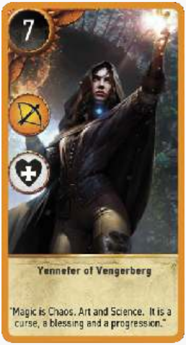


3
Impera Brigade Guard
"The Impera Brigade never surrenders. Ever."

MEDIC CARDS: KNOW WHEN TO HOLD THEM; KNOW WHEN TO FOLD THEM

Remember that Medics only retrieve non-Hero and non-Special cards from your discard pile. So you effectively waste their exceptional ability if you play them early, when your discard pile is empty or devoid of impressive cards. Did you play only Heroes in the first round? Not a good idea; as you can't retrieve them in later rounds. Medic-heavy decks benefit from more high-value non-Heroes instead of an over-reliance on Heroes, or the reliance of Heroes played in the final round.

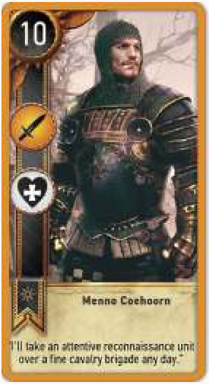
If you're playing against an opponent who uses Medics frequently (such as the Scoia'Tael deck), delay causing destruction of your foe's cards for as long as possible, lessening the impact Medics will have on you.



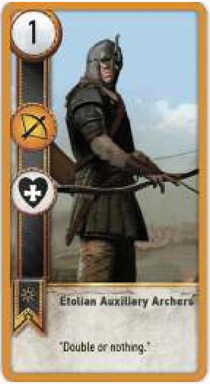
7
Yennefer of Vengerberg
"Magic is Chaos. Art and Science. It is a curse, a blessing and a progression."

NEUTRAL CARDS (Medic Ability) (1 Card)

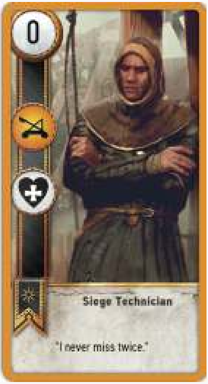
Yennefer of Vengerberg is the only Neutral Medic, as well as being a ranged Hero. This means she can't be brought back into play, and her ability is useful only once (so make it count)! As she's Neutral though, she provides a great addition to a Gwent player whose deck is usually devoid of Medics (the Monster and Northern Realms). There are no Monster units with the Medic ability.



10
Menno Coehoorn
"I'll take an attentive reconnaissance unit over a fine cavalry brigade any day."



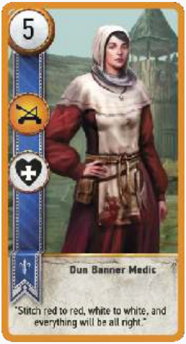
1
Etolian Auxiliary Archers
"Double or nothing."



0
Siege Technician
"I never miss twice."

Nilfgaardian Empire (Medic Ability) (4 Cards)

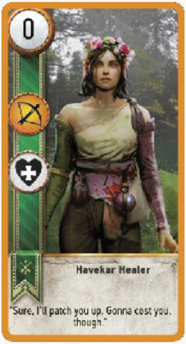
The Nilfgaard have arguably the best medics as all of them have a points value (compared to the Scoia'Tael), and there's some flexibility on where to place them (Ranged or Siege, with Menno Coehoorn being Close Combat). Menno himself is a Hero, so his Medic ability is used once. But the Etolian Auxiliary Archers and the Siege Technician can be employed time and time again (with Decoys or other Medics).



5
Dun Banner Medic
"Stitch red to red, white to white, and everything will be all right."

Northern Realms (Medic Ability) (1 Card)

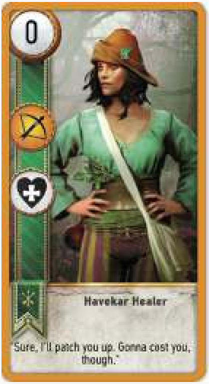
Only a single unit, the Dun Banner Medic, offers the Northern Realms hope with this ability, so bolster the deck with Yennefer if you wish, and learn (both playing with or against the Northern Realms deck) that once this Medic is played, another isn't to be expected. Offering the highest non-Hero point value (5), this medic is also a worthy Siege Unit to boot.



0
Havekar Healer
"Sure, I'll patch you up. Gonna cost you, though."

Scoia'tael (Medic Ability) (3 Cards)

There are three Ranged Havekar Healers you can bolster your Scoia'Tael deck with. Due to their non-existent points value (0), their only role is to provide their Medic ability to your tactics. Just like Spies, don't be put off by their lack of combat prowess; use them to coax your beefier units back into the fray!



0
Havekar Healer

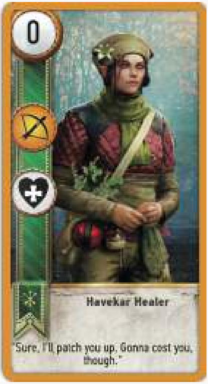
2
Birna Bran
"Skellige must have a strong king. No matter what it takes."



0
Havekar Healer
"Sure, I'll patch you up. Gonna cost you, though."

SKELLIGE CLANS (MEDIC ABILITY) (1 CARD)

Birna Bran may have a low points total (2), but her Medic ability makes her exceptionally helpful. Use her to bring back Olaf (who is Agile, worth 12 points, and has Morale Boost!), and then the Light Drakker Muster units (also worth 12 points in the Ranged row when all three are employed). Partner her with Yennefer to double your chances.

UNIT ABILITY: MORALE BOOST (8 CARDS)

This adds +1 to all units in the row, excluding the card itself. A relatively rare card (only seven have this ability), these are initially seen as similar to Commander's Horn cards; enabling you to bolster a single row's total. However, Morale Boosts are always associated with a character card (not a Special card), and they are more helpful when you have a larger group of cards (with either a low or high points value), compared to the Commander's Horn which is more potent when partnered with high value cards. As always, Morale Boosts do not affect any Heroes in the row.

MORALE BOOST: KNOW WHEN TO FOLD THEM

Morale Boost doesn't quite have the potency of the Commander's Horn, and it's usually better to swap out cards that don't have other types of bonuses as you become more proficient in deck building. Do include Morale Boost cards when you are focusing on adding an overwhelming force to a single row, and wish to further augment it, though (as ever), watch for Scorch to ruin your plans.

If you're playing a Northern Realms deck, and focusing on your Siege row, you may have stacked your deck with average to high-point equipment:

- Play a Siege Tower (6), Trebuchet (6), and the Dun Banner Medic (5), and your normal total for that row is 17.
- Play those three cards and add a Kaedweni Siege Expert (1, with Morale Boost), and your new total is 21 (your three original cards each receive +1 to their points, and the Siege Expert brings 1 point himself).

Now imagine you have eight non-Hero Siege cards on the row and the Morale Boost becomes a lot more potent (adding +8 to the row). With this in mind, it's good to keep a Morale Boost and play it last (after your row is established), if you need to push your total quickly after lulling a foe into thinking they've won by a point or two.

Olgierd von Everec
At least you now know I don't easily lose my head."

Neutral Cards (Morale Boost Ability) (1 Card)

The infamous Olgierd von Everec is the only Neutral card with Morale Boost, and therefore the only way a Nilfgaard player can utilize a card with this ability (as no faction card from that deck has Morale Boost available to it). Olgierd has the flexibility of being Agile too, and has reasonable points too (6). Use him late in a round to bolster either your Close Combat or Ranged rows and then Medic or Decoy him back into play afterwards, if you wish.

Kayran
"Kill a kayran? Simple. Take your best sword... then sell it and hire a witcher."

Monster Deck (Morale Boost Ability) (1 Card)

The Kayran is the only Monster card with this ability, which it can bring to either the Close Combat or Ranged row. As the Kayran is a Hero, he can only be used once, but otherwise has the flexibility of being placed on either a Close Combat or Ranged row, and adds eight points before any Morale Boost bonuses are calculated, which is impressive. As Monster decks are primarily focused on Close Combat, you would normally bolster this row using Kayran. However, you can sneakily wait, and place him on a Ranged row instead, if your Close Combat row is getting pounded by Weather cards or Scorch.

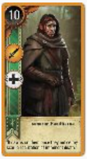
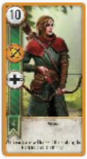
Northern Realms (Morale Boost Ability) (3 Cards)

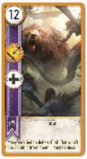
There are three Kaedweni Siege Experts to collect in a Northern Realms deck, and although their points score is a pitiful 1, all three can be stacked (enabling you to increase your Morale Boost ability by up to +3 per Siege card on the row, if all three are used). As Northern Realm players tend to utilize this, beware of your foe's focusing on nullifying this row over other ones. As always, think about bringing one of these cards back to win a match late in the round, either by keeping one in your hand or using a Medic.

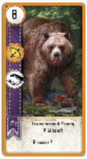




Scoia'tael (Morale Boost Ability) (2 Cards)

Two elven units have this ability; Isengrim Faoltiama (a Close Combat Hero) and Milva (a Ranged non-Hero). Both are worth 10 points too, making them extremely useful. Isengrim is a worthy card to be sure, and is usually the preferred choice over the other 10 point Scoia'Tael Heroes without this ability. Of course, he can't be returned to play after use. Milva is arguably more potent (or, at least, a more flexible a card to use), as she is the only 10 point non-Hero a Scoia'Tael player has, and is therefore able to be Decoyed or returned to play with a Medic. She is Scorch bait however, so bring her to bolster your ranged row after the coast is clear!





SKELLIGE CLANS (MORALE BOOST ABILITY) (2 CARDS)

Olaf is one of the mightiest Morale Boost cards of all! He is Agile, worth 12 points, and is a non-Hero. This makes him susceptible to Scorch, but he's also able to be Decoyed and brought back by Medics. If you coax your foe into using their Scorch cards on lesser cards (or even on Olaf so you don't lose groups of your best cards like three Young Berserkers when they have transformed into 8-point Transformed Young Vildkaarls), bring him back time and time again to add Morale Boost to either row that needs it, and bring punishment with his tremendous points value!

The Berserker offers even more bear-faced savagery than Olaf, bringing a whopping 14 points to the Close Combat row. Remember this Morale Boost card is only available once you've used a Mardroeme to transform him. In all other respects, he has the tactical advantages and shortfalls of Olaf; though his potency isn't as easily utilized due to the need for a Mardroeme card.

UNIT ABILITY: MUSTER (35 CARDS)

Muster cards allow you to find any cards with the same name in your deck, and play them instantly. This is a highly potent ability that can seriously improve your points total in a single placement! However, there are some worries about using Muster too, and you need to learn which groups of cards are going to be played together. Remember that discarded cards aren't able to be added to a Muster group (unless you use a Medic), so it is wise to play Muster cards only on a round you are setting out to win.

For example, if you were to own all three Crone cards, and played one of them during a round, the other two Crones would also appear (either from your hand, or from within the deck of cards you haven't discarded), effectively giving you their combined points total (6x3). That's an 18-point play right there, and almost double that of a 10 point Hero!

Muster: Know When To Fold Them

Muster cards are far less effective when you haven't collected all of the same card type, and don't have a full Muster group in your deck. Why play an Arachas if you have only one? Instead, focus on collecting cards so you've gathered a complete group.

The biggest advantage a Muster set of cards has (the ability to play them all at once), is also the biggest concern: When playing a Muster card, you lose a large number of cards you are holding (as all like-minded Muster cards are played at once), and you can sometimes drop far more cards from the hand than you want to (especially if you have no other options of cards to play). For this reason, learn to calculate how many cards you will have left once you play a Muster group, and swap out any related Muster cards at the initial card draw.

For example, your initial card draw from your Monster deck gives you all three Crones and an Arachas. The Arachas is fine (as the Arachas isn't part of the Crones group). But if you keep the current draw as-is, and play one of your Crones in battle, all three are removed from your hand; effectively lessening your card total by three! That's terrible, as your foe is likely to out-draw you. So counter this problem by swapping out two of the Crones during the card draw, and hope you get other Muster groups (except for Arachases!) or other Monster card types instead.

Think of Muster units as being useful only once (much like Heroes), as although they can be brought back with Decoys and Medics, once a number of them are discarded, it takes a large number of Decoys and Medics to resurrect them back into play, which isn't the best use of these card types.

Vampire: Katakan

Commander's Horn

"Drinking the blood of the Continent since the Conjunction."

"Plus one to morale, minus three to hearing."

Muster Cards and Dandelion Or Commander's Horn

This combination of cards is spectacularly potent, though it can be the focus of a Scorch or Weather card as your foe tries to circumvent such an increase in points! Whether you play your Muster cards or Commander's Horn first is up to you, but an already-impressive total is effectively doubled (providing all your Muster cards are on the same row; remember some are placed on different rows!).

For example, if you have all five Vampire types in your Monster deck, and play any one of them, all of them appear on your Close Combat row: Vampire Katakan (5), Vampire Ekimmara (4), Vampire Fleder (4), Vampire Garkain (4), and Vampire Bruxa (4). That's an impressive 21 points! Now add a Commander's Horn, and that total increases to 42 points! Expect a Weather card, Scorch, or weeping from a foe that passes after this combo strike!

8
Kayran

Muster Cards and Morale Boosts

Though not normally as potent as a Muster and Commander's Horn play, combining Muster cards with Morale Boosts is another fantastic way to squeeze out even more points from your deck. Once again, expect to be hit by Weather or Scorch cards afterwards (so wait until your opponent plays these before trying this combo). Assuming all your Muster cards affect the same row, you won't get as large of a points total as combining Muster with a Commander's Horn, but you won't lose as many points if one or more cards are nullified with Scorch, either. Plus, Morale Boost cards usually have a higher points value to bring to the battlefield, which helps offset the lower bonuses.

For example, if you play all five Vampire types from your Monster deck, placing them all on your Close Combat row (Vampire Katakan (5), Vampire Ekimmara (4), Vampire Fleder (4), Vampire Garkain (4), and Vampire Bruxa (4) for an impressive 21 points), why not add the Kayran card to complete this dominant play? The total increases to 34 points (the +1 bonus for each of the five Vampires in play, and 8 for Kayran's points).

Naturally, you can combine Muster, Commander's Horn, and Morale Boost cards to further bolster a points total to truly insane levels!

Muster Cards and Decoys Or Medics

Muster cards aren't very helpful to use with Decoy cards, as you need multiple Decoys in order to gather up all the Muster cards on the battlefield. The only time you'd use (usually multiple) Decoy cards is to gather up any remaining Muster cards after one or more of them have been Scorched.

Likewise, Medic cards have limited help to a Muster unit, until you realize you could bring a Muster card that was Scorched back from the dead. But the remaining Muster cards are likely to be either already in play, or discarded, forcing you to utilize multiple Medics you bring back the whole Muster team, and there are far better options when using Medics than this.

Muster Cards and Spies

As Spy-heavy decks (the Nilfgaardian Empire and Northern Realms) can only use Gaunter O'Dimm, and the Muster-heavy decks (Monsters and Scoai'Tael) only have the Mysterious Elf as a Spy card, synergy between these card types is minimal.

For Spy-heavy decks, and assuming you're using Gaunter O'Dimm, wait until Gaunter O'Dimm's group has been played before using a Spy, or there's a good chance you'll draw one (or two) additional Gaunter O'Dimm-related cards, wasting your Spy's ability completely.

For Muster-heavy decks, which only allow you to use the Mysterious Elf, play the waiting game until toward the end of the bout (the second or third round), when you've played all your Muster units completely. The Spy is far more effective at grabbing a (non-Muster, but important) card then.

Muster Cards, Scorch, and Countering

If you wish to counter an opponent who loves to use Muster in a Monster (and to a lesser extent, the Scoia'Tael deck), the trick is to try to coax them into playing their Muster units as early as possible, or bring a Weather card to lessen the threats they pose, playing it only after Clear Weather appears from your opponent, so you can ensure you lessen the impact Muster units present.

Most (but not all) Muster units are highly susceptible to Scorch. If you have a card with this ability, play it to ensure you win the round. For example, if your opponent plays three Crones (6 points each), retaliate with Scorch (assuming the Crones are the highest points in your opponent's row). All three Crones are then burned, as they all have equal the highest number. But if a higher numbered Monster card also appears with the Crones on the row, your Scorch targets that instead.

Neutral Cards (Muster Ability) (4 Cards)

Gaunter O'Dimm and his dark specters introduce the Nilfgaardian Empire and Northern Realms into the wonderful world of Muster cards (as Gaunter is Neutral). He also augments an already-heavy Monster and Scoia'Tael deck still further, though the chances of getting multiple Muster cards of the same name in your hand does increase, the more Muster groups you carry into battle. Gaunter is a reasonably strong Muster group, but has the added benefit of splitting his troops between Ranged and Siege (which is usually the least-used rows, especially in Muster-heavy decks).

Monster Deck (Muster Ability) (18 Cards)

As there are five possible Muster groups in a Monster Deck (and a sixth if you utilize Gaunter O'Dimm, too!) making this the most potent of Muster Decks, assuming you've spent the time gathering all the cards needed for each group. As you progress in your Monster Deck collection, swap out the lower Muster groups for higher point ones, as it's not usually a great idea to have all Muster groups. Why? Because it's easy to lose multiple cards from your hand (or deck) during a round and run out of cards before your opponent.

The Arachas group offers excellent value, as the Arachas Behemoth is a Siege unit, while the regular Arachas troops are close combat, giving an opponent with a Weather Card or Scorch something of a headache.

The same can't be said for the Crones; although they are tremendous value (and offer 18 points to play in one turn using only three of your cards up instead of the Arachas group's four), all three Crones are Close Combat units, making them highly susceptible to Scorch. As the only higher value non-Hero available to Monster Decks is the Toad or Villentretenmerth, you may need to play them to save your Crones from being torched. Or wait until the threat of Weather and Scorch as passed and then play them.

The Vampire group numbers five (which can really remove cards from your hand or pile when played!), but are arguably the best Muster group you can use. This is because the Vampire: Katakan is worth five points, while the four lesser vampires are worth four each. So even if you're Scorched (which kills the strongest cards on the battlefield), your Katakan "protects" the others while still bolstering your Close Combat row. Watch for Biting Frosts, though!

The Nekker and Ghoul groups are good to utilize when you're first starting out with a Monster deck, and are good to play as single cards (keep some of the Muster group out of your deck entirely, negating the Muster ability, in order to keep your card count high) if you're trying to feint your opponent or need to use up a card instead of a more important one. As you progress, you may find using up three Ghoul cards for a measily three points isn't worth it; there are better options to pick (Heroes, and Neutral cards).

Scoia'tael (Muster Ability)(9 Cards)

While the Monster Deck has the most devastating Muster cards, the Scoia'Tael has a few units with this ability that can help your cause to a lesser extent (and don't forget to add Gaunter O'Dimm, too!). The Elven Skirmishers offer 6 points to Ranged, though using up three cards to get these points is troubling if you're trying to keep your card count up.

Swap your Elven Skirmishers for Dwarven ones as you continue to build this deck up. You get three extra points for the same card expenditure, though you have to place the Dwarves in the Close Combat row, which may already be crowded (so use Agile cards to even up the rows). The three Havekar Smugglers are a great way to instantly add 15 points, and because you're likely to have a number of higher-value non-Hero cards to act as Scorch-fodder (such as the Dol Blathanna Scout, Barclay Els, or Yaevinn), your main worry is Biting Frost. So keep a Clear Weather card just in case. Also be mindful of running out of cards more quickly, too.

SKELLIGE CLANS (MUSTER ABILITY) (4 CARDS)

There are two separate Muster groups that the Skellige Clans can bring into a bout (and Gaunter O'Dimm makes three). The first involves the Hero Cerys. She has a unique Muster ability to summon three non-Muster cards: the Clan Drummon Shieldmaidens. Without Cerys, the Shieldmaidens are simply three 4-point Tight Bond cards. However, with Cerys, they are instantly summoned to her side, immediately giving you their Tight Bond bonus. That's 36 points not counting Cerys! Think of Cerys as instantly able to summon this Tight Bond group. Remember, only Cerys has this ability; you should hope to draw her over the Shieldmaidens at the start of any match.

UNIT ABILITY: SCORCH (7 CARDS)

Special Scorch cards are discarded after playing. Character Scorch cards remain on the board (and can be scorched themselves). Scorch kills the strongest card(s) on the battlefield (not including Heroes). Special Scorch cards, and the Clan Dimun Pirate card, affect the entirety of your opponent's battlefield. All other character Scorch cards pick out the highest value from a particular row (as long as the row's combined units' strength is 10 or more). There are only seven Scorch cards you can collect: three are Special cards, and there's a Neutral, Monster, Scoia'Tael, and Skellige Clans character with Scorch ability, too.

Aside from Weather cards, think of Scorches as the ultimate counter (and biggest threat) to non-Hero cards, and especially those with abilities of their own. Study the point value of each deck to determine the largest concentration of high point non-Hero cards of the same value. There, you'll be able to learn which high point cards, or groups of cards, you should look to use Scorch on, and what to expect your opponent to play.

For example, when playing against the Northern Realms deck, you see your opponent play a Trebuchet (Siege, six points). Nasty! But you also remember that your opponent is likely to have numerous other six point cards (such as another Trebuchet, two Ballistas, a Siege Tower, Ves, et cetera). Do you wait until your foe commits to more six-point cards and torch them all? Or do you wait until he plays a Catapult (Siege, eight points) which would automatically be the focus of your Scorch instead? The trick is getting lucky so you remove the most number of your foe's points; not necessarily cards of the highest number! This is why cards with group abilities are ripe for scorching!

A good rule to follow: Play scorch if your opponent plays several cards across their battlefield with the same points strength. Gauge the correct time. Too early and you only get rid of one or two cards; too late, and you may only hit a higher-value card instead of numerous slightly lower-value cards. You're using Scorch to remove the largest number of points in a single strike, not the strongest single card.

scorch: Know When To Fold Them (and Scorching Your Own Cards)

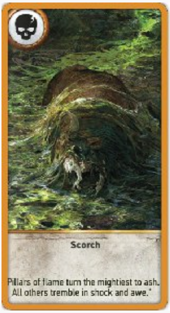
You can also simply waste a Scorch special card by playing it to remove a low point card. This is only acceptable when trying to get your opponent to pass, or when you need to hold on to more valuable cards you don't want to play yet.

You can waste Scorch character cards by playing them without any regard to their Scorch ability. For example, you can place Villentretenmerth (7 point Close Combat non-Hero) into your row, irrespective of your opponent's own Close Combat cards. If no cards of value are presented, the scorch is wasted. This is almost never a good idea due to the exceptional value the character Scorch cards represent.

Another cunning plan is to drop Hero cards on the battlefield if you know your foe is low on cards and might have Scorch (so they are forced to play it), since your Heroes aren't affected by it. Or, play your lower value cards first, increasing your points gradually until your foe plays a high value card, and you can pounce!

Has an opponent passed, confident they've won the round? Then play a Scorch, remove their strongest non-Hero, and win the round instead!

Special Scorch cards also affect your own non-Hero cards, which is something to be exceptionally mindful of when using them! Make sure your own battlefield cards are lower in value than your enemy's, or expect disappointing results. There are very few reasons why you should plan to Scorch your own cards!



Scorch
"Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."

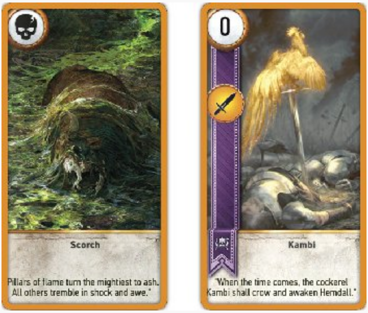
Berserker
"Kill, crush, cleave!"

SCORCH CARDS, BERSERKERS AND MARDROEMES

No Mardroeme cards (as they are either Special, or attached to Ermion who is a Hero) can be Scorched, but the Berserkers certainly can. Bide your time with these units, as the non-transformed Berserker and Young Berserker aren't usually of high-enough value to be Scorched. No so after a Mardroeme is played; check the new value of the Transformed Vildkaarl and Transformed Young Vildkaarl units and Scorch at will! Be aware that occasionally units go Berserk so they can become Scorch-bait, prior to your foe placing other units in their place to win a round; a plan you can try, too!



Scorch

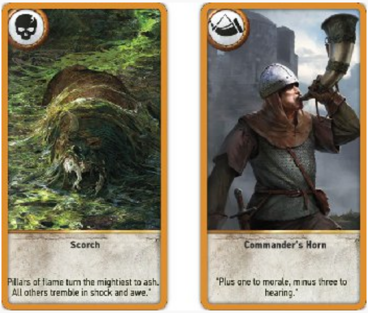
0
Kambi
"When the time comes, the cockerel Kambi shall crow and awaken Hemdall."

SCORCH CARDS AND TRANSFORMATION CARDS

Employ the Scorch on the Cow (or the Kambi) only after it has transformed into its more potent card; otherwise there is no advantage whatsoever. As you're already forewarned by the placement of the Cow (or Kambi), you can prepare to remove the transformed card later on. If you destroy a transformation card with Scorch, your opponent can use a Decoy or Medic to bring it back, even if the Bovine Defense Force (or Hemdall) is deployed; but Scorching a zero-point card is a foolish idea anyway, and one that almost never occurs.



Scorch
"Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."
Commander's Horn
"Plus one to morale, minus three to hearing."

Scorch Cards and Commander's Horn Or Morale Boosts

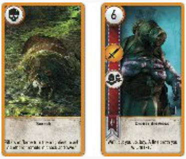
Scorch cards don't usually have any benefit being played with or against Commander's Horn or Morale Boost cards if the rows affected by the Horn or Morale Boost are the rows you are targeting (or want your opponent to target). But there are times when you want to play a Commander's Horn or Morale Boost with Scorch in mind.

First example: Say you have a Monster deck with a Forktail, Plague Maiden, Griffin, and Werewolf making up your Close Combat row, and Grave Hag on your Ranged row. All are non-Hero cards worth five points each. A Scorch would be devastating to you, so manage your losses by planning the following before a Scorch appears:

Add a higher-point non-Hero, such the Fiend (six points) to "take one for the team," keeping all your five point cards in play.

Or, add a Morale Boost card to your Ranged row by playing Kayran (Hero, Agile, Morale Boost, eight points) there. Kayran is immune to Scorch, and his Morale Boost adds one to the Grave Hag, bringing her points total to six. Now a Scorch will only kill her, leaving all your other five point cards alone.

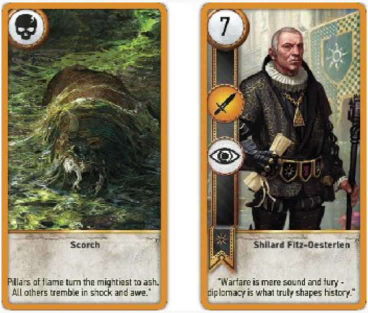
Second example: Imagine you have a Nilfgaardian Empire deck with two Black Infantry Archers in your Ranged row. Both are non-Hero cards worth ten points each, making them extremely susceptible to Scorch. Mitigate your losses by placing a Siege Engineer (a non-Hero Siege card worth six points), and then use the Commander's Horn to double the strength of the Siege Engineer to 12. Now the Scorch targets him, and not your archers.



Scorch Cards and Decoys Or Medics

Special Scorch cards are immediately discarded when used, so the tactics here refer to character cards with Scorch ability, such as the Toad of the Monster Deck. Decoy and Medics are incredibly useful to bring back a character Scorch card you've either wasted by playing too early, or want to utilize again, and should be part of any professional Gwent player's repertoire!

For example, say you've laid waste to a couple of high-point Scoia'Tael ranged cards using Toad. Simply Decoy it back into your deck so you can use it later. Or wait until the end of the round, or until the Toad is scorched off the board, and resurrect it from the discard pile to bring havoc later in a round or in future rounds. Even if you don't use the card's scorch ability again, it is a seven-point card to place.



Scorch

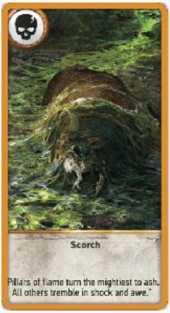
7
Shilard Fitz-Oesterlen
"Warfare is mere sound and fury - diplomacy is what truly shapes history."

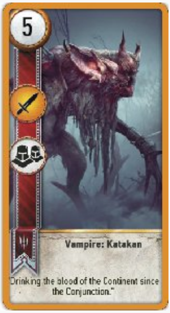
Scorch Cards and Spies

As an opponent with numerous Spies usually wants to reuse them, and they add to your own totals when a foe plays them, you don't want to Scorch high-point enemy spies such as Stefan Skellen (nine point Spy) or Shilard Fitz-Oesterlen (seven point Spy) of the Nilfgaardian Empire; the enemy has already drawn their additional cards, and is likely to want to use Medics on them anyway (though you can scorch them to stop them from being Decoyed if the situation calls for it).

Otherwise, Spies offer little benefit unless you're playing with the aforementioned Stefan or Shilard. Play either or both, grab the extra cards the Spy ability grants you. Then Scorch them (as they are both high-value cards, and currently adding to your enemy's points total). Then Medic them back into play! You can't do that as easily with lower-point Spies. Let Stefan, Shilard, (and to a lesser extent Prince Stennis (five point Spy) and Sigismund Dijkstra (four point Spy) of the Northern Realms) take one for the team!



Scorch
Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."



5
Vampire: Katakan
Drinking the blood of the Continent since the Conjunction."

Scorch Cards and Muster Cards

Scorch cards can be infuriating to players with high-value Muster cards, such as the three Crones (six points) of the Monster deck. As Muster cards usually result in multiple cards of the same strength being played at once, they are easy to Scorch out of existence. Though there are exceptions.

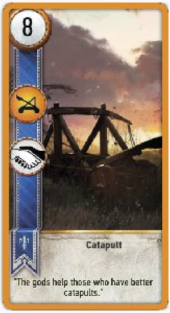
The Arachas Behemoth (six points), and the Vampire: Katakan (five points) both have higher points than the other units of their Muster group. This “protects” the majority of the group from Scorch as these higher cards are sacrificed instead.

For example, you play the Vampire: Katakan and all four lesser Vampires (four points each), for a total of 21 points on your battlefield. An enemy Scorch would only remove the Katakan, still leaving you with 16 points (the four remaining lesser vampires).

Another plan is to use lower-value Muster cards (such as the three Nekkers) to lure a foe into playing a Scorch card. As they aren’t likely to have another, you can sacrifice your Nekkers in order to place higher-value units (such as the Crones) in relative safety.

Otherwise, use Scorch to attempt to remove as many Muster units as you can. The Crones are very susceptible to Scorch, as they have a high point value.

Scorch
Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."



8
Catapult
"The gods help those who have better catapults."

Scorch Cards and Tight Bond Cards

Just like Muster cards, you (and your enemy) should focus your Scorching attention on Tight Bond cards for multiple reasons; they are usually the highest point total (especially after bonding), and they can really threaten to overwhelm you, points-wise, if left alone.

As Tight Bonds are usually played when victory is attempted, you need to wait until a Scorch is played by a foe before your Tight Bond cards are fully utilized. Though it's fine to have a single Cinfred Reavers Dragon Hunter (five points ranged) on the battlefield, especially if your foe has higher non-Hero cards, when you add a second Hunter, their points total climbs to 10 each, making them Scorch bait. For this reason, refrain from completing Tight Bonds until it is safe to do so.

Scorch Cards and Weather

Scorch cards, and especially Character Scorch cards (Villentretenmerth in particular) can cause one of the most damaging strikes in an entire Gwent game! This happens rarely, but when it does, you'll be bragging about it for weeks!

The plan of attack is this: Late into the Gwent bout, lure your opponent into playing a large number of cards (of any points value, with one or more Heroes if possible) in a particular line. For Villentretenmerth, these must be Close Combat cards. For Toad, these must be Ranged cards. For Schirru, these must be Siege cards. For the Clan Dimun Pirate, it must be all rows (including your own)!

Play a weather card that affects the row you want to decimate. For Villentretenmerth, it is Biting Frost. For Toad, it is Impenetrable Fog. For Schirru, it is Torrential Rain. For the Clan Dimun Pirate, it is Skellige Storm and Biting Frost. Now look at your opponent's row(s); it needs to have a points value of 10 or more (except in the case of the Clan Dimun Pirate, which doesn't have this limitation). As heroes aren't affected by Weather, they usually bring that total to ten already.

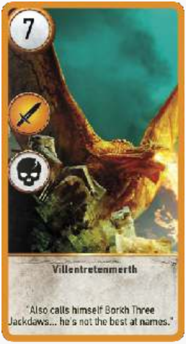
Now unleash your Character Scorch. The entire row of non-Heroes, because the Weather card has reduced them to the same points total (1), are all seen as the "strongest", and therefore scorched, leaving only your Heroes left!

For example, imagine a Northern Realms player has stacked their Close Combat deck with the following:

- Vernon Roche (10 point Hero)
- Ves (5 point non-Hero)
- Three Blue Stripes Commandos (36 points total due to Tight Bond)
- Commander's Horn (doubling the strength of everyone except Vernon Roche)

That's a total of 92 strength points in that row! Now launch your cunning plan. With a Biting Frost and Villentretenmerth in your hand, place the Biting Frost on the battlefield. Your enemy's row total is now 18 (Ves and the Blue Stripes Commandos are now worth two points each, while Vernon Roche is unaffected). That's not a bad reduction. But what happens if your foe plays Clear Weather? Before that happens, place Villentretenmerth. The Close Combat row is worth over 10 points (thanks to Vernon Roche; remember this wouldn't have worked if Vernon wasn't there, as Ves and the Blue Stripes would only be worth eight points, nullifying Villentretemerth's attack. Villentretemerth scorches Ves and the three Blue Stripes Commanders, reducing the row to 10 (only Vernon is left wondering what the hell happened!). Now your foe's front line is decimated permanently!

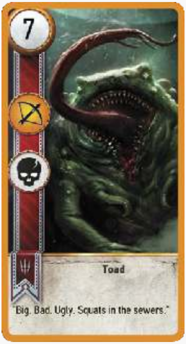
Note that Special Scorch cards affect the entire battlefield, so aren't usually able to be combined with Weather cards (as there's always a higher-point card on a different row that's targeted instead).



7
Villentretenmerth
"Also calls himself Borkh Three Jackdaws... he's not the best at names."

Neutral Cards (Character Scorch Ability) (1 Card)

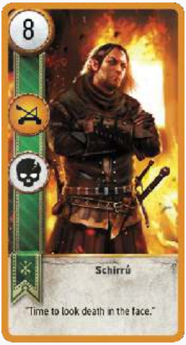
Villentretenmerth is a seven-point Close Combat Unit with a Close Combat Scorch ability. Use this in every deck; it's arguably the best card to play if you want to decimate a high value target, targets, or even an entire row if you use the Scorch and Weather card technique mentioned previously. Remember to Decoy or Medic this card so you can employ it again and again! This card's only shortfall is that it doesn't affect Ranged or Siege units.



7
Toad
"Big. Bad. Ugly. Squats in the sewers."

Monster Deck (Character Scorch Ability) (1 Card)

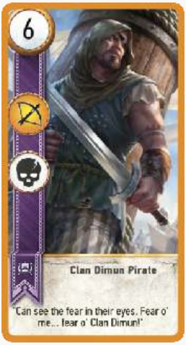
Toad is a seven-point Ranged Unit with a Ranged Scorch ability, and is also unique. Employ exactly the same tactics as with Villentretenmerth, and use both cards so you have the possible ability to specifically target Close Combat or Ranged rows. Toad is more devastating when battling against a deck that uses Ranged rows frequently, such as the Nilfgaardian Empire and Scoia'Tael. Combine him with the Impenetrable Fog card to wipe out a unit row!



8
Schirrú
"Time to look death in the face."

Scoia'tael (Character Scorch Ability) (1 Card)

Schirru is an eight-point Siege Unit with a Siege Scorch ability, and also unique. The same tactics apply here (use like Villentremerth, and employ both cards to cover Close Combat and Siege rows). However, because Siege units are used less frequently (the Monster deck only has four possible Siege cards, for example), the chances for devastating attacks are less frequent, unless you're playing against the Northern Realms. Combine Schirru with Torrential Rain to wipe out an entire Siege row.



6
Clan Dimun Pirate
"Can see the fear in their eyes. Fear o' me... fear o' Clan Dimun!"

SKELLIGE CLANS (CHARACTER SCORCH ABILITY) (1 CARD)

The Clan Dimun Pirate may be a 6-point non-hero Ranged unit, but he has the most devastating Scorch ability of all; a battlefield-wide Scorch which works in exactly the same way as a Special Scorch card! However, this does mean you can't target your attack to a specific row (unless you're using Villentretenmerth to remove a Close Combat unit or group first, with your Clan Dimun Pirate attacking the next-highest unit). Wiping out entire rows of Weather-crippled cards are less effective with the Clan Dimun Pirate (as he targets rows with higher-value cards instead, and that can include your own non-hero troops!) unless you've blanketed the entire battlefield with Skellige Storm and Biting Frost, and you're using King Bran's Leader ability: Do this, then use Scorch to wipe out your foe's entire Close Combat, Ranged, and Siege rows! This is a rare, but insanely powerful occurrence that works if you plan it correctly!

UNIT ABILITY: SPY (7 CARDS)

Spies are placed on your opponent's battlefield, and count towards their points total. In return, you receive two cards from your deck. So why give your opponent additional points? In order to bolster your own deck and receive some of the preferred cards you need or want to play, or to bolster your deck so you can out-draw your foe. It's important to understand that because Spies add to your opponent's total points, a more powerful Spy is one with a lower points total.

For example, Stefan Skellen might have nine points, but because that nine points is going to your opponent when you play him, he's a terrible Spy! Even so, giving your opponent nine points is still a good idea, as the two cards you receive usually more than make up for your shortfall, as you have more cards (a net increase of one), and more flexibility in playing future cards. Compare Stefan to Thaler (a 1 point Siege unit). Thaler is an amazing Spy, because he only adds one to your opponent's total (while allowing two cards to be taken from your deck, just like Stefan).

Spies: Know When To Use (and Abuse) Them!

Generally, the tactic with Spies is to utilize them as early as possible, starting with your most ineffectual spy (the one that gives your foe the most points). That way, you aren't playing high-point Spies later, when the points totals are more critical. Then use cards with other abilities (Decoy or Medics for example) so return a Spy to your deck and play them again (and again)! The only exception to playing Spies early is if you know your opponent is hoarding Spies for later rounds. As they can out-draw you if you're not careful, keep Spies in reserve for just such an occurrence.

The plan with Spies is to use them continuously throughout all three Gwent rounds to bolster your deck, so you have the largest number of cards available that you can, so you can more easily react to a foe, draw important cards more easily, and keeping more cards in your hand than your opponent. Remember; having more cards in your hand than your opponent is the most important strategy for winning Gwent!

Spies are more helpful if your deck total is low (the 22 minimum), and the number of Spies in your deck is high (up to four depending on your Faction). Make sure you start the second round with around two extra cards compared to your opponent. Start the final round with around four extra cards. Why? So your opponent is forced to struggle finding cards to play against you, or your card total forces them to pass, allowing you an easy round win.

When Spies are used in the first round, you're more likely to pass or throw the round to your opponent. Treat this round as a buildup in forces for the second and third rounds you must win. As you're adding cards and removing Spies to achieve this, your deck is likely to be much more powerful for the latter two rounds.

Remember that just because you aren't playing Spies, it doesn't mean you shouldn't employ these tactics, as your foe may be using them on you; forcing you to turn enemy Spies against your opponent!

Spies are utilized primarily by Nilfgaardian Empire and Northern Realm players, as there are no Monster, Scoia'Tael, or Skellige Clan spies. Only the Mysterious Elf can be played with these factions, and he is only used once as he's a Hero. As both these Decks can rely on Muster cards (especially Monsters), it usually isn't worth duplicating a Muster group you are already holding.

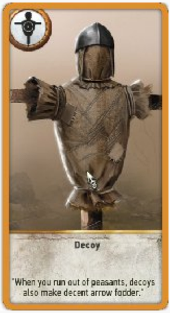
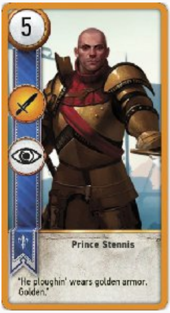
Prince Stennis
"He ploughin' wears golden armor. Golden."



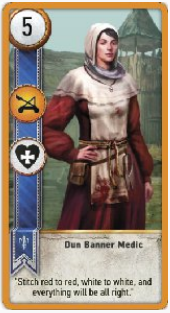
Spies, Enemy Spies, and Decoys

One of the best strategies for those with a number of Spies in their deck is to play them as early as possible; usually in the first or second round. However, once you send out your own Spies, they become enemy troops; so your only option is to Decoy an enemy spy back into your hand, so you can play it back onto your enemy's battlefield. This is all part of the overall tactic of acquiring more cards in your hand. However, this tactic doesn't work if your foe isn't sending out Spies on your side of the battlefield, so watch out for opponents who aren't using Spies (Monster and Scoia'Tael decks) and adjust your tactics accordingly.

Decoys are also the best way to counter a foe who is using Spies against you. When a Spy enters your ranks, simply Decoy it into your hand, and play it back as soon as it makes sense to (so you can claim two cards as the Spy is effectively yours, now!). Do this again if further enemy Spies arrive on your battlefield.



5
Prince Stennis
"He ploughin' wears golden armor. Golden."

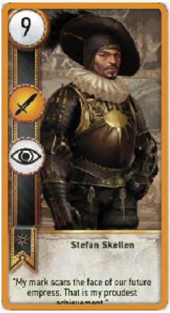


5
Dun Banner Medic
"Stitch red to red, white to white, and everything will be all right."

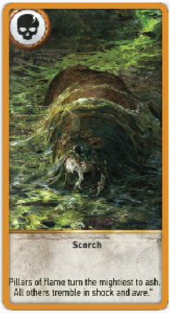
Spies and Medics

Remember that Spies that you play go into your opponent's discard pile and not your own, so any Spies you'll be resurrecting are going to be from your opponent's deck initially (unless your foe plays your own Spy back at you, and you then Decoy it!). If you have a choice of Spies to bring back into play (which is a great idea, as it gives you that two card draw again and again), choose discarded Spies with the lowest points value (such as Thaler). Higher point Spies are still viable, however.

Another good point to use a Medic on a Spy is when your opponent has passed, and you can still play cards. Utilize a Medic, assuming the points of the Medic won't cause you to lose the round (if that matters to you; you could be throwing the first round anyway). Then continue until you've maximized the cards you hold for the subsequent round.



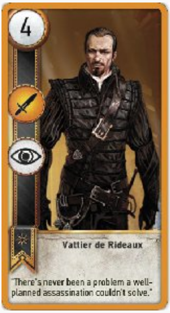
9
Stefan Skellen
"My mark scars the face of our future empress. That is my proudest achievement."



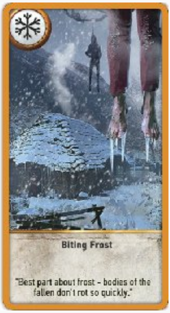
Scorch
"Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."

Spies and Scorching

This is where Stefan Skellen becomes more helpful to the Nilfgaard! If you've placed a Spy on the board, you can Scorch it into your foe's discard pile after playing it. This allows you to remove the bonus the Spy was giving your opponent (in Stefan's case, nine points!). Remember you don't get the Spy (your opponent's discard pile holds it, enabling them to Medic the Spy back). But this is an option; only for Scorching high-point Spies (as there are usually other cards with a higher point value than a Spy you've placed, like Sigismund Dijkstra with his four points). However, there are usually better ways to use up a Scorch card than this.



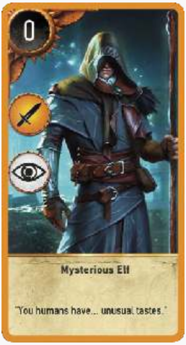
4
Vattier de Rideaux
"There's never been a problem a well-planned assassination couldn't solve."



Biting Frost
"Best part about frost - bodies of the fallen don't rot so quickly."

Spies and Weather Cards

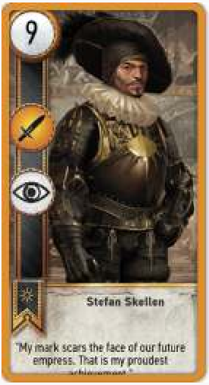
Negate the points your Spy card gives a foe by employing a Weather card after playing your Spy. If Vattier de Rideaux is heading into your opponent's Close Combat row, he's less effective if that row is fighting off a Biting Frost (reducing his points total for the enemy from 4 to 1).



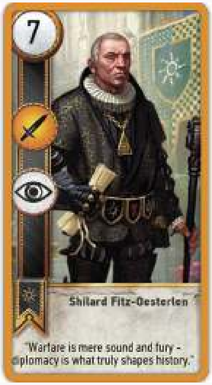
0
Mysterious Elf
"You humans have... unusual tastes."

Neutral Cards (Spy Ability) (1 Card)

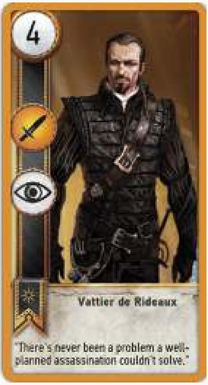
The Mysterious Elf is an extremely powerful Spy, as he doesn't increase your opponent's total at all (0 points), and is a Hero (meaning he's a one-use card per match, and can't be destroyed, Decoyed, or brought back with a Medic). He's great to add to the Nilfgaardian and Northern Realm decks (where you have a Spy roster already), but offers less help to Monster and Scoia'Tael players, who may not want to stack their deck with Muster cards. Still, he is a good choice for those decks if you want a Spy in them; he's the only one you've got!



9
Stefan Skellen
"My mark scars the face of our future empress. That is my proudest



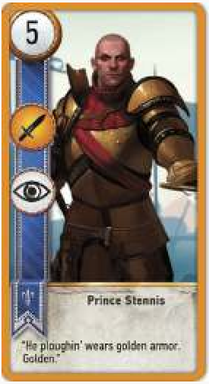
7
Shilard Fitz-Oesterlen
"Warfare is mere sound and fury - diplomacy is what truly shapes history."



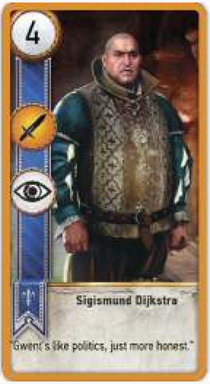
4
Vattier de Rideaux
"There's never been a problem a well-planned assassination couldn't solve."

Nilfgaardian Empire (Spy Ability) (3 Cards)

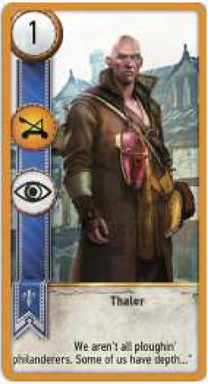
Although both the Nilfgaard and Northern Realms have three spies each, the Empire's trio of sneaky sods are decidedly more hamfisted: The infamous Stefan Skellen (9 points), the only-slightly more proficient Shilard Oesterlen (7 points), and the actually-adept Vattier de Rideaux (4 points) give your opponent 20 extra points if you play all three! Still, the extra cards you gather almost always make this a moot point. Add the Mysterious Elf for a quartet of Spies and eight extra cards!



5
Prince Stennis
"He ploughin' wears golden armor. Golden."



4
Sigismund Dijkstra
"Gwent's like politics, just more honest."



1
Thaler
"We aren't all ploughin' philanderers. Some of us have depth..."

Northern Realms (Spy Ability) (3 Cards)

The most adept Spy masters are the Northern Realms faction, featuring three competent fellows; Prince Stennis (5 points), Sigismund Dijkstra (4 points) and the amazing Thaler (1 point); they only give up 10 points when all three are used; which is far less than the benefits you get from the additional cards you draw. Add the Mysterious Elf to complete your quartet.

UNIT ABILITY: TIGHT BOND (33 CARDS)

Though there are 33 Tight Bond cards, these are only available to Nilfgaardian Empire, Northern Realms units, and Skellige Clans factions, and require you to draw two or more cards of the same unit type in order for the ability to work. However, if you can gather multiples of the same unit, you can really increase the strength points total of a particular row. Which of course, then attracts Scorch and Weather Cards from your enemy's deck. So learn to mitigate these circumstances as often as possible.

At the very beginning of the round, when you redraw two cards, if you're wanting to use Tight Bond cards in the round in question, you should redraw in the hopes of getting one (or more).

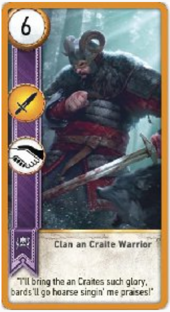
Tight Bond Cards: Know When To Hold Them

On their own, Tight Bond cards are normal unit cards that aren't very effective (with the exception of the Catapult, a Northern Realms Siege unit worth eight points). This means you can place them on the battlefield, wait a few turns, and then complete the pairing to really hammer a foe with a huge strength points increase!

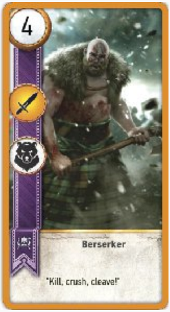
Some of the lesser cards (such as the Poor F--king Infantry) are also good to use as "throw away" cards; play them if you're stalling for time, or hoping to draw a better card.

The biggest drawback with Tight Bond cards is that you need to have all of them in your hand so you can place them all in the same round. Using them in different rounds negates their ability completely, though it's sometimes a good strategic idea to "waste" a card early, then Decoy or Medic it back into your hand when a subsequent Tight Bond with the same name appears.

There are no Monster, Scoia'Tael, or Neutral cards with the Tight Bond ability.



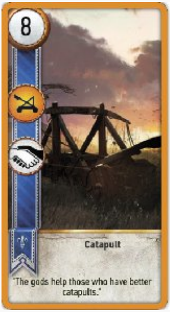
6
Clan an Craite Warrior
"I'll bring the an Craites such glory, bards'll go hoarse singin' me praises!"



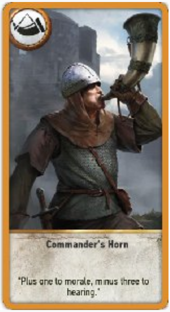
4
Berserker
"Kill, crush, cleave!"

TIGHT BOND CARDS AND BERSERKERS

Tight Bond and Berserker units have some similarities; not least because the three Young Berserkers actually have the Tight Bond ability when transformed into Transformed Young Vildkaarls! Generally, both Tight Bond and Berserker cards have bonuses that require a subsequent card to played with them, and both can skirt by Scorch cards your opponent may use, becoming more susceptible to Scorch the more powerful their points total becomes. They both have the flexibility to be "under the radar" of your opponent, before being augmented to win a round. A Berserker group can reach their bonus a little more easily (as there are up to four Mardroeme cards that cause the bonus, compared to usually only two identical Tight Bond units that increase a Tight Bond's group total). Finally, remember that Young Berserkers, when they have transformed into Transformed Young Vildkaarls, add the Tight Bond ability; they become much more powerful when transformed in a group of up to three.



8
Catapult
"The gods help those who have better catapults."

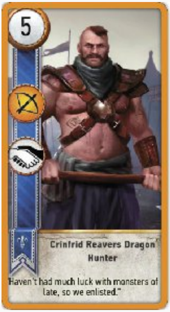


Commander's Horn
"Plus one to morale, minus three to hearing."

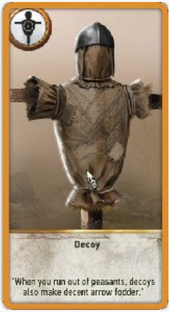
Tight Bond Cards, Commander’s Horn, and Morale Boost

Though there’s not many card combinations that cause the enemy to instantly scramble for their Scorch or Weather cards, if you’re able to halt these threats, you can add some incredible strength points to a row, and unequivocally win a round. The following is the best-case example:

Place both Northern Realm Catapults in your Siege Row. Each Catapult is worth 8 points on its own. Each is worth 16 as a duo; making 32 points. Now add a Morale Boost thanks to the Kaedweni Siege Expert (1 point unit, +1 for all units in the row). This brings the total up to 35. Then place the Commander’s Horn, doubling the strength to 70. Not bad. Wait, do you smell burning?

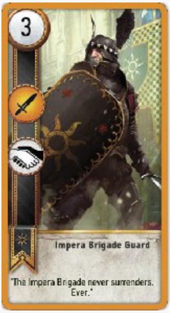


5
Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunter
"Haven't had much luck with monsters of late, so we enlisted."

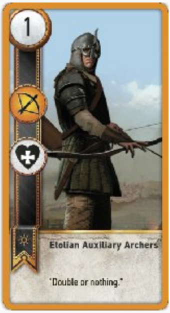


Tight Bond Cards and Decoys

Perhaps the ultimate bait-and-switch tactic is to place a Tight Bond card on the battlefield, hoping your foe thinks you’re about to place another. If the card isn’t subsequently Scorched, simply Decoy it back into your hand, and save it for later (if you were feinting, needed to burn a card, or the time wasn’t right to play it), or for when you have more of the same unit type to maximize the Tight Bond ability. Just because you look like you’re about to drop four Impera Brigade Guard units, doesn’t mean you need to follow through with this plan!



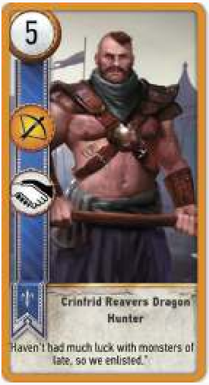
3
Impera Brigade Guard
"The Impera Brigade never surrenders. Ever."



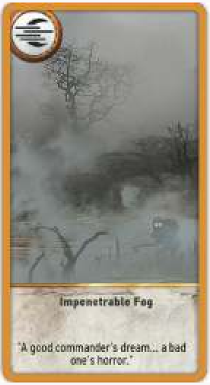
1
Etolian Auxiliary Archers
"Double or nothing."

Tight Bond Cards and Medics

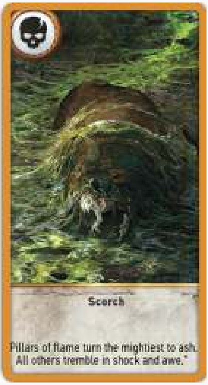
The Nilfgaardian Empire is more adept at employing Medics (they have five compared to the Northern Realms' and Skellige Clans'one Medic, though Yennefer of Vengerberg is a great addition). This allows you to bring back a complete set of Tight Bond cards, or some of a set of units you already used (when the third of that set is drawn later in the game). Reusing a group of cards with an ability to yield one of the largest points totals is always a good idea; especially after the threat of Scorch has passed.



5
Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunter
"Haven't had much luck with monsters of late, so we enlisted."



Impenetrable Fog
"A good commander's dream... a bad one's horror."

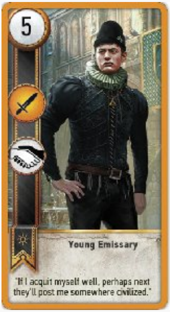


Scorch
"Pillars of flame turn the mightiest to ash. All others tremble in shock and awe."

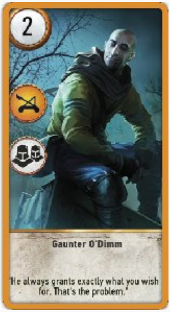
Tight Bond Cards, Scorch, and The Weather

In most circumstances, you should expect your Tight Bond cards to be targeted by Scorch, and do something about it. You could wait patiently to play the second and third cards until Scorch is used on another unit, or until the next round after Scorch disappears. You could sacrifice a higher-point unit so the Scorch targets that, allowing you to bolster your Tight Bond units to much stronger levels. Obviously, be worried about the three Scorch Character cards; up to two could be played by a Monster or Scoia'Tael player, and they can seriously damage your plans.

You can purposefully use Weather Cards to hide the potency of Tight Bond units from a player you suspect is going to use Scorch. For example, place a Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunter in your Ranged row when your foe has an impressive selection of Ranged cards on their side of the battlefield. Then play Impenetrable Fog, pretending to negate both Ranged rows. In reality, play a couple more Hunters, use Clear Weather (or a Leader ability) and reveal a much stronger Ranged row that was immune to Scorch when each card was valued at one (or two or three depending on how many Tight Bond cards were in that row).



5
Young Emissary
"If I acquit myself well, perhaps next they'll post me somewhere civilized."



2
Gaunter O'Dimm
"He always grants exactly what you wish for. That's the problem."

Tight Bond Cards and Muster Cards

While the Nilfgaard and Northern Realms primarily use Tight Bond, the only way to mix your deck with Muster Cards is by adding Gaunter O'Dimm (and his dark minions) into the mix. Both are Scorch-bait, both add a large number of points, but Muster cards are instant, offer a lesser total, can impede the total cards you hold in your hand, and aren't usually Decoyed or resurrected by Medics back into play. Tight Bond cards add a similar amount of points (though a couple of units can add much more), take place over multiple turns (a slower build of power), and are much better to Decoy or Medic. It also goes without saying that Tight Bond cards only "bind" with cards of the same name: A Nausicaa Cavalry Rider only adds to other Nausicaa Cavalry Rider totals.

Nilfgaardian Empire (Tight Bond Ability) (9 Cards)

Though the Nilfgaard don't seem quite as impressive a group of Tight Bond units overall, compared to Northern Realms, they have more Medics enabling you to return Tight Bond cards back into play; an important point to consider. Gather all three Tight Bond units as early as you can, but concentrate on employing the Impera Brigade Guards as often as possible, up to the point where higher-value cards become more important for your deck strategy.

Northern Realms (Tight Bond Ability) (12 Cards)

Though the Northern Realms' downtrodden infantry are worth using to burn a card in order to delay the end of a round, even their Tight Bond value is questionable. Ditch them when more potent cards are available. Mid-level Gwent players employ the Blue Stripes Commandos, and the Crinfrid Reavers Dragon Hunters, with the aim of launching Catapult strikes as often as possible too. Just beware your lack of Medics impedes the return of these units after a round or a scorching.

SKELLIGE CLANS (TIGHT BOND ABILITY) (12 CARDS)

Both the Clan an Craite Warriors and War Longships have the same group value, and are comprised of three individual cards. The only difference is that the former is a Close Combat group, while the latter is your main Siege force. Augment the War Longships with Draig Bon-Dhu's Commander's Horn (otherwise he's useless!), and add Yennefer with Birna Bran to hopefully Medic one of these groups into play to maximize their potential.

The Clan Drummon Shieldmaidens are a potent force on their own, though not providing quite the power of the other Tight Bond Skellige Clans cards. However, if Cerys is played, she instantly summons all three Shieldmaidens as if they were Mustered. This has the advantage that all the cards are played at once (not usually the case with Tight Bond cards), and that you can redraw any Shieldmaidens in your deck at the start of a match in the hopes of obtaining Cerys (who summons them anyway). Note you can employ the Shieldmaidens as "regular" Tight Bond cards without Cerys, but this isn't the most potent use of this group.

The Transformed Young Vildkaarl group, when partnered with Ermion or transformed using a Mardroeme, becomes a mauling and unstoppable force with tremendous value, providing you're lucky to have all three in your hand during a bout. Though the value they give you is immense, gathering the three together along with a Mardroeme (so the Tight Bond ability is triggered along with the Berserker transformation) can be tricky.

UNIT ABILITY: TRANSFORMATION CARDS (2 CARDS)

The Cow seems initially to be a useless ranged card which offers no strength bonuses, and nothing of value during the round it is played, aside from the fact it is a great card to "burn" while you wait for your opponent to run out of cards or play a Weather card or Scorch. However, once the Cow is taken off the battlefield (either after a round, or by Scorch), the card transforms into a Bovine Defense Force (an eight-point Close Combat Fiend) that begins the next round already on your board. This can surprise your foe, quickly add points to a front line, and even take a Scorching for you! While the Cow card is excellent in the first and second rounds as a prelude to enforcing your Close Combat line, it's not very useful in the last round, as the more powerful card would appear only in the last round.

NEUTRAL CARDS (16 CARDS)

Neutral cards are units and Heroes that can fight alongside your faction forces no matter which deck you decide to build; Geralt of Rivia is just as happy battling with the Scoia'Tael as he is with the Northern Realms. This allows you further customizable options when adding Neutral cards to your deck, and some interesting decisions on which cards to use, and which to ignore. Neutral cards are easily distinguished from your Faction cards as they always appear first (after your Special and Weather cards) in your “All Cards” collection list. They also have no banner design. There are 16 Neutral cards to collect, and the pictures on some of them change depending on if you have activated the Ballad Heroes DLC.

Geralt of Rivia

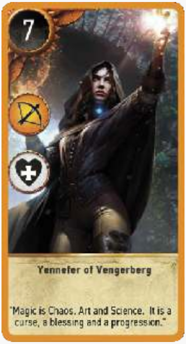
15
Cirilla Fiona Elen Riannon
"Know when fairy tales cease to be tales? When people start believing in them."

NEUTRAL CARDS: GERALT AND CIRILLA

These two Hero cards are the very best one-card strength point cards you can use, and five points higher than even your toughest faction Hero. They should be in your deck at all times, and should even take the place of faction Heroes if you’re wanting to cut some cards in favor of a lean deck. They are devastating, Close Combat fighters, immune to Weather and all special effects (so they can only be used once a bout), and used to thoroughly bolster your front lines.



7
Yennefer of Vengerberg
"Magic is Chaos, Art and Science. It is a curse, a blessing and a progression."

NEUTRAL CARDS: YENNEFER OF VENGERBERG

Yennefer is a seven-point Hero Medic who fights at the ranged row. As most of your highest point troops are likely to be at Close Combat range, this is a great way to diversify your forces. Though Yennefer isn't as strong as your best Faction Heroes, her Medic ability more than makes up for this slight shortfall. Add her to a deck you are creating with more Medics, or to forces that have no Medics at all (such as a Monster Deck), to add flexibility to your tactics. Yennefer is great for bringing back Villentretenmerth from the discard pile, for example.

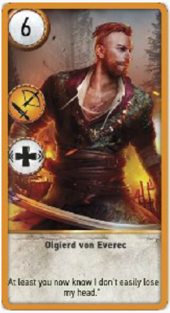
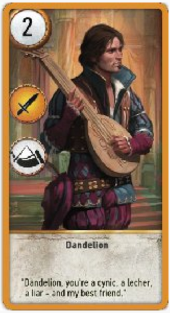
NEUTRAL CARDS: TRISS, VESEMIR, ZOLTAN, AND EMIEL

This quartet of strong-willed, Close Combat units, of which Triss is the only Hero, are among the first Neutral cards you should add to your deck when you're first attempting to play the game of Gwent. However, as you progress and collect the stronger cards (or those with abilities, as none of these cards—save Triss—have anything other than brute force to offer you), place these in your permanent discard pile so your deck doesn't get bloated. You are better off utilizing higher-point strength cards, and there are plenty to choose from.



6
Olgierd von Everec
"At least you now know I don't easily lose my head."

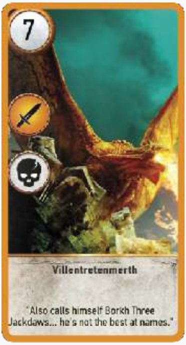


2
Dandelion
"Dandelion, you're a cynic, a lecher, a liar – and my best friend."

NEUTRAL CARDS: OLGIERD VON EVEREC AND DANDELION

Olgierd is no Hero, and he's only worth six points, but he's a good card to employ because of his flexibility thanks to the fact he is Agile, and offers a Morale Boost. This means you can place him in either the Close Combat or Ranged rows and add some much-needed bonuses. Combine him with a Commander's Horn to really increase a row's strength, and reuse him by utilizing a Medic.

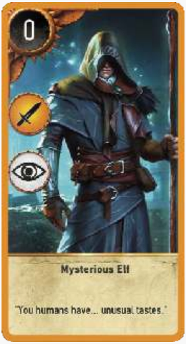
Dandelion offers a similar strategy, though he only brings two measly strength points to Close Combat rows, so isn't as flexible in his positioning (despite what the harlots at the Rosemary and Thyme may have told you). Dandelion's biggest benefit is his Commander's Horn, enabling you to ditch a Horn Special Card. Combine him with Olgierd to increase your Close Combat row by a huge amount.



7
Villentretenmerth
"Also calls himself Borkh Three Jackdaws... he's not the best at names."

NEUTRAL CARDS: VILLENTRETENMERTH

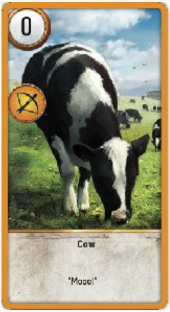
One of the best cards in the game of Gwent! Villentretenmerth must be part of your deck strategy at the earliest possible point. Though this is a seven-point non-Hero, Villentretenmerth has the invaluable ability to Scorch; not across the entire battlefield like the Special card, but a focused Scorch on your opponent's Close Combat row, if the total value of the opposite row is greater than or equal to 15. This allows you to place him (usually late in a round) to remove one or more high-level non-Heroes. Use him often, and resurrect him from the discard pile with a Medic. Use him with Toad (Monster Deck) or Schirru (Scoia'Tael Deck) to Scorch two different rows. Utilize all the Scorch tactics previously mentioned in this chapter. Watch the world burn!

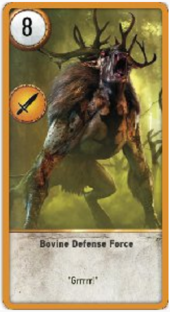


0
Mysterious Elf
"You humans have... unusual tastes."

NEUTRAL CARDS: MYSTERIOUS ELF

Initially, one might puzzle at the sight of a zero-point Hero, until you realize this elf is a Spy, and therefore gives your opponent no additional strength points, making him the finest Spy available. His only downfall is that because of his Hero status, he can’t be Decoyed or resurrected by a Medic back into your hand; so use him to gather extra cards as soon as you can. Or, wait until the very end of a round, and feint your opponent into thinking you have few or no cards left, and then use him. He is a card you definitely should employ in any deck strategy, and also allows you to utilize the fabled Spy ability in decks where Spies aren’t normally available (such as Scoia’Tael decks).

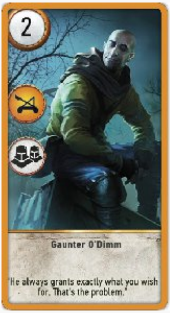




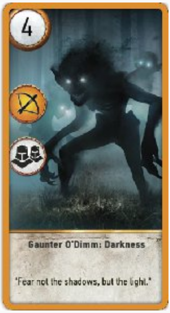
8
Bovine Defense Force
"Grrrrr!"

NEUTRAL CARDS: COW (BOVINE DEFENSE FORCE)

The Cow seems initially to be a useless ranged card which offers no strength bonuses, and nothing of value during the round it is played, aside from the fact it is a great card to “burn” while you wait for your opponent to run out of cards or play a Weather card or Scorch. However, once the Cow is taken off the battlefield (either after a round, or by Scorch card), the card transforms into a Bovine Defense Force (an eight-point Close Combat Fiend) that begins the next round already on your board. This can surprise your foe, quickly add points to a front line, and even take a Scorching for you! While the Cow card is excellent in the first and second rounds as a prelude to enforcing your Close Combat line, it’s not very useful in the last round, as the more powerful card would appear only in the last round.



2
Gaunter O'Dimm
"He always grants exactly what you wish for. That's the problem."



4
Gaunter O'Dimm: Darkness
"Fear not the shadows, but the light."

NEUTRAL CARDS: GAUNTER O'DIMM AND DARKNESS

The tactical advantages of this set of Muster cards has been discussed in the Muster section of this chapter. Simply put, Gaunter O'Dimm adds a possible 14 points (if you have all four cards) with a single placement. Not only that, but the cards sit across your Ranged and Siege rows, which are less frequently attacked by the enemy. Furthermore, Gaunter O'Dimm can add a fantastic extra dimension of strategy to decks that don't normally use Muster. You could even increase your card count without too much worry, as all five cards are used at once!

Main Quest: Ciri's Story: Out of the Shadows

End: A Hunched Homunculus

Geralt and the Baron conclude their talk. Ciri was looking for a sorceress, and all of them are in Novigrad. The Baron pleads with you to help him find Anna; who is trapped somewhere within the vast bogland south of here. Agree and Secondary Quest: Return to Crookback Bog becomes available once Main Quest: Family Matters concludes.

Uma

You're finishing your pleasantries when something hunched, with a huge bulbous head, escapes the sergeant's grasp and waddles into the great room. He's quickly lead away, but not before you quiz the Baron on who this fellow is (Uma), how he's in the Baron's company (won in a game of cards). After this odd interlude, all these quests conclude.

TYING UP LOOSE ENDS

If you have already finished all the Main Quests in Novigrad and Skellige at this point, you know what this strange creature named Uma is. In this case, Main Quest: Ugly Baby begins before the Baron leaves.

MAIN QUEST: HUNTING A WITCH

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark; Secondary Quest: Magic Lamp; Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz
LOCATIONS : Midcopse, Keira's Hut, Keira's Grotto
CHARACTERS : Keira Metz
ENEMIES : Nekkers

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection concludes.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the witch on your own or ask the residents of Midcopse about her.

Ride to the slightly depressing hamlet of Midcopse, and learn where the witch you need to question is. This can be done via conversations with the villagers, or by searching for her hideout independently. Here are two examples of peasants you can obtain clues from.

Begin near the central well, and look for residents murmuring about the witch. One is sweeping outside her cottage. Although this peasant has no knowledge, her husband does; the witch cured him of a bad back.

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to the peasant who visits the witch often.

The husband is by the fence, right of the Whetstone, and isn't happy about revealing the location of the witch. Perhaps you could change his mind? You can:

- (50 Crowns) Pay him a few crowns to change his mind.
- (Axii Delusion Level 2) Influence him through magical means.

Either of these options causes him to describe where the witch lives, allowing you to exit Midcopse and search for a pond.

Main Quest: Family Matters (Part 2)

The Woeful Despot

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to the Baron about his family.

Return to Crow’s Perch. Head to the gardens within the bailey, and you’re stopped by the sergeant, worried about the Baron’s melancholy condition. Speak with the Baron, who is reading love letters from Anna, and explain to him how your search is going. Now you’ve fulfilled your end of the bargain, the Baron agrees to reveal more about Ciri’s past exploits.

The Baron's Savior

MAIN QUEST: CIRI'S STORY: OUT OF THE SHADOWS

OBJECTIVES:

- Kill the basilisk.
- Get to the top of the tower and rescue the Baron.

The Baron recalls the whinnying horses as a huge flapping basilisk spooked the horses, and forces you to draw your silver sword. With a mixture of well-timed blocking, parries, and strong attacks between those nasty beaked attacks and wing smashes, whittle down the beast's health, until it goes for the Baron, and your objective updates.

Climb the rocky buttresses at the foot of the ruined tower you're at the base of. Continue until you see the Baron at the top, and watch as Ciri saves him from a certain death. Soon after, Ciri departs.

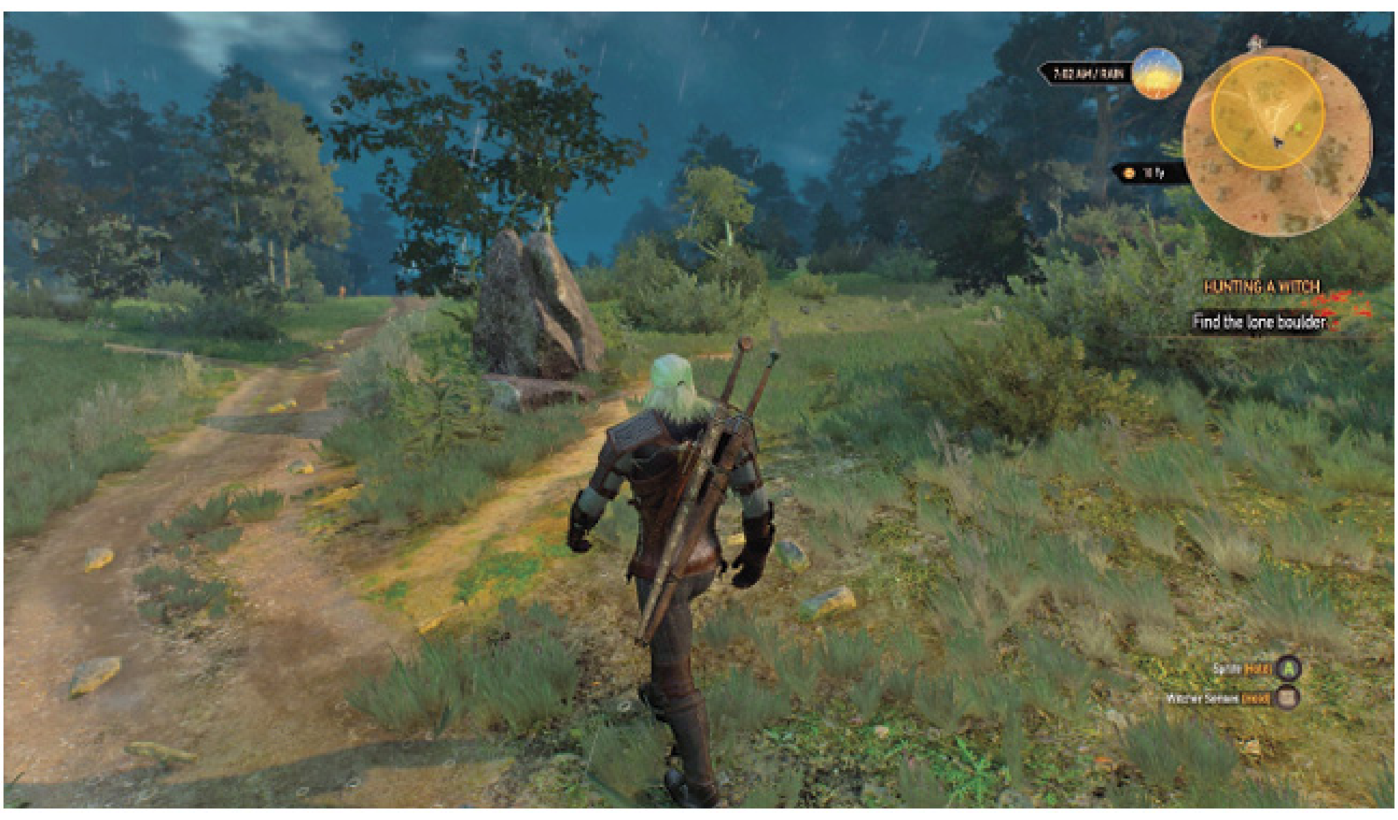
Main Quest: Hunting a Witch

The Enchantress in the Grotto

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the pond by the village.
- Find the lone boulder.
- Find the abandoned cart.
- Find the witch's hut.

Depart Midcopse heading roughly northward, with the pond's bank on your left side, and follow the path to a large oval stone. Take the right trail, up through a copse of trees to an abandoned cart and a group of nekkers you should slay. Continue along the path until you stumble upon the witch's hut. The witch shoos away some pleading villagers with a diseased cow problem. Enter the hut.

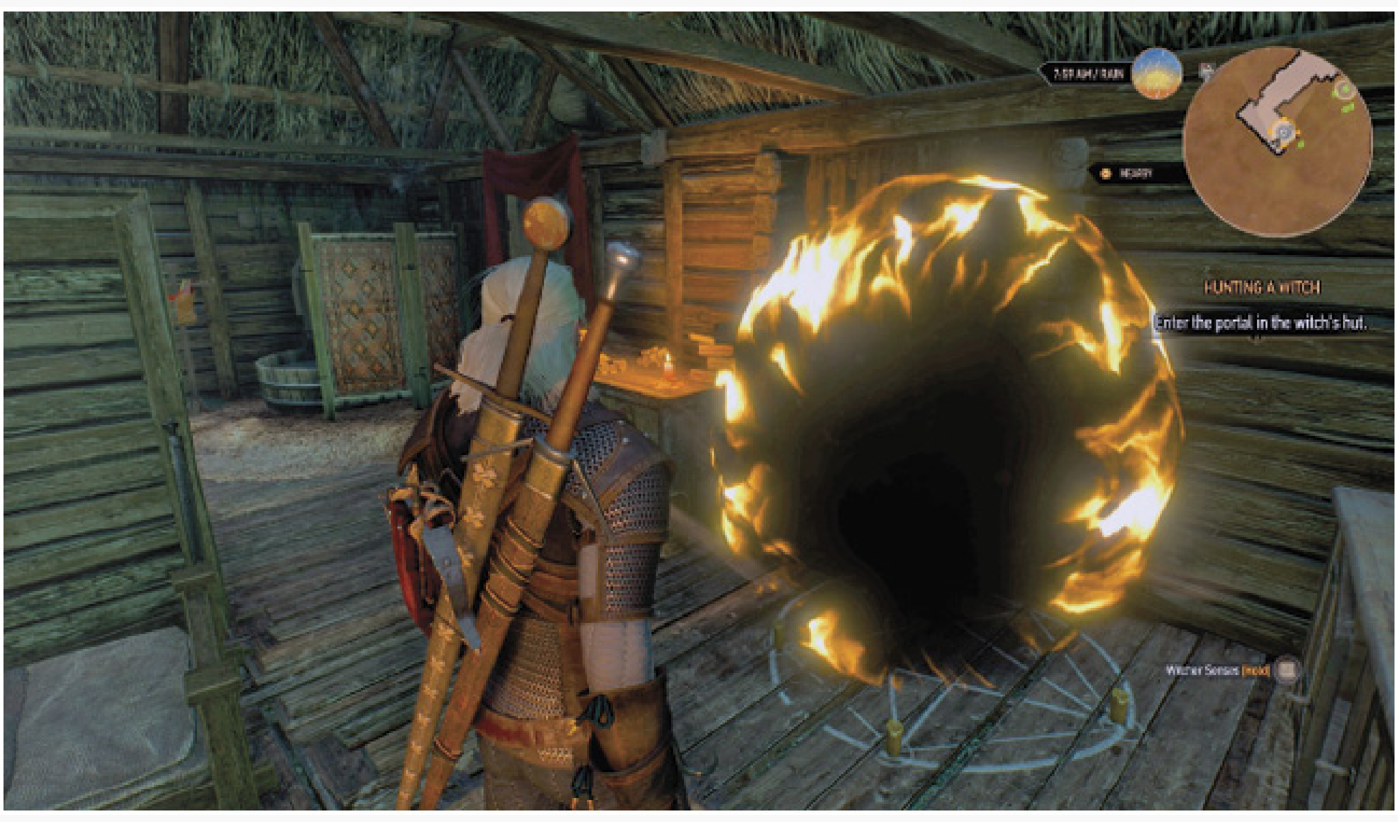


OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to the witch in her hut.
- Search the hut using your Witcher Senses.
- Enter the portal in the witch's hut.
- Find the witch.

Kelra Metz

Use your Witcher Senses to discover the witch's robes, a chalk pentagram, some interesting spell books, and a trapdoor down to a damp cellar. Look for the skull with the enchanted symbols and examine it. When a portal appears, step through it and into a large subterranean grotto. Don't be shy; head up the stairs and intrude on Keira Metz taking a bath. Feel free to talk to her about what she's doing in Velen, and the other sorceresses of the Lodge, but focus your chat on "a certain young woman."



After some wry answers, Keira admits an elven mage had been asking about Cirilla too. The fellow wore a mask, and asked that Keira lead Ciri to him. Apparently he's hiding in some elven ruins in the southwestern wilderness just northwest of the Byways marker. Agree to visit this place, and you automatically head there. Main Quest: Hunting a Witch "rests," and Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark begins.

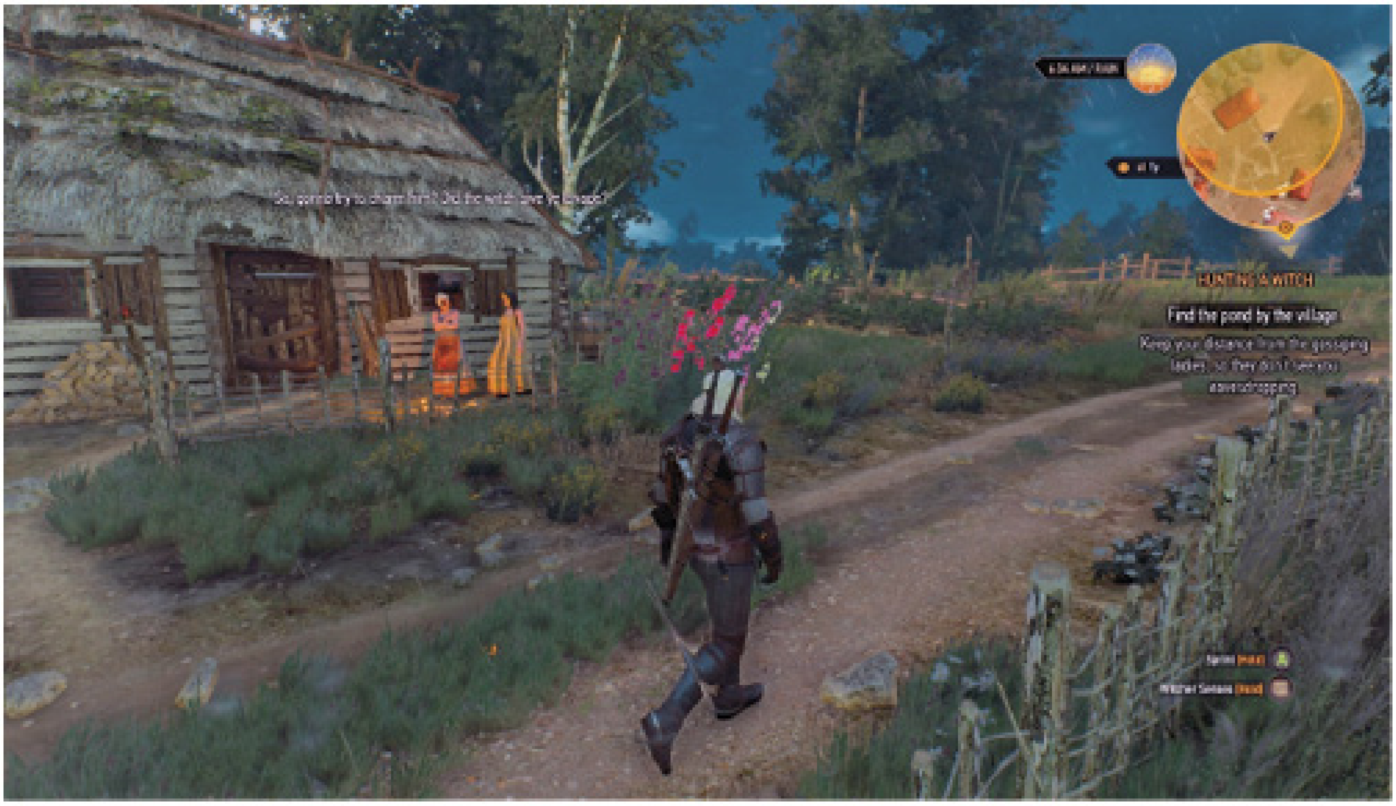
Main Quest: Hunting a Witch

Another Option: Scuttlebutt Among the Sweepers

OBJECTIVE:

- Eavesdrop on the gossiping women.

You can find the two peasant women sweeping the path close to one of the village exits. They clam up if you're close by, but stand a little further away (as shown), and they tell you about the witch's location. This is a better option if you're saving your crowns, and don't have Axii at Level 2.



Find the pond by the village

Keep your distance from the gossiping ladies, so they don't see you eavesdropping

Main Quest: Family Matters (Continued)

Omens Never Lie

By now, you should have a wide variety of evidence to present to the Baron. Find and speak with him about:

- The doll—You ask about whether it was used in black magic rituals. It transpires that the doll is supposed to look like Triss Merigold, who Tamara saw when she was younger.
- The fight (with the candlestick and moved painting)—The Baron admits to being drunk and not remembering a thing. He agrees to ask his men if they heard anything.
- The talisman—Anna (his wife) wore it. It may be related to a pellar in Blackbough, or a cunning woman in Midcopse (though she only recently arrived). It seems a chat with the pellar is your next line of inquiry. Be warned, he's apparently addled with vexes. Exit the Baron's building.

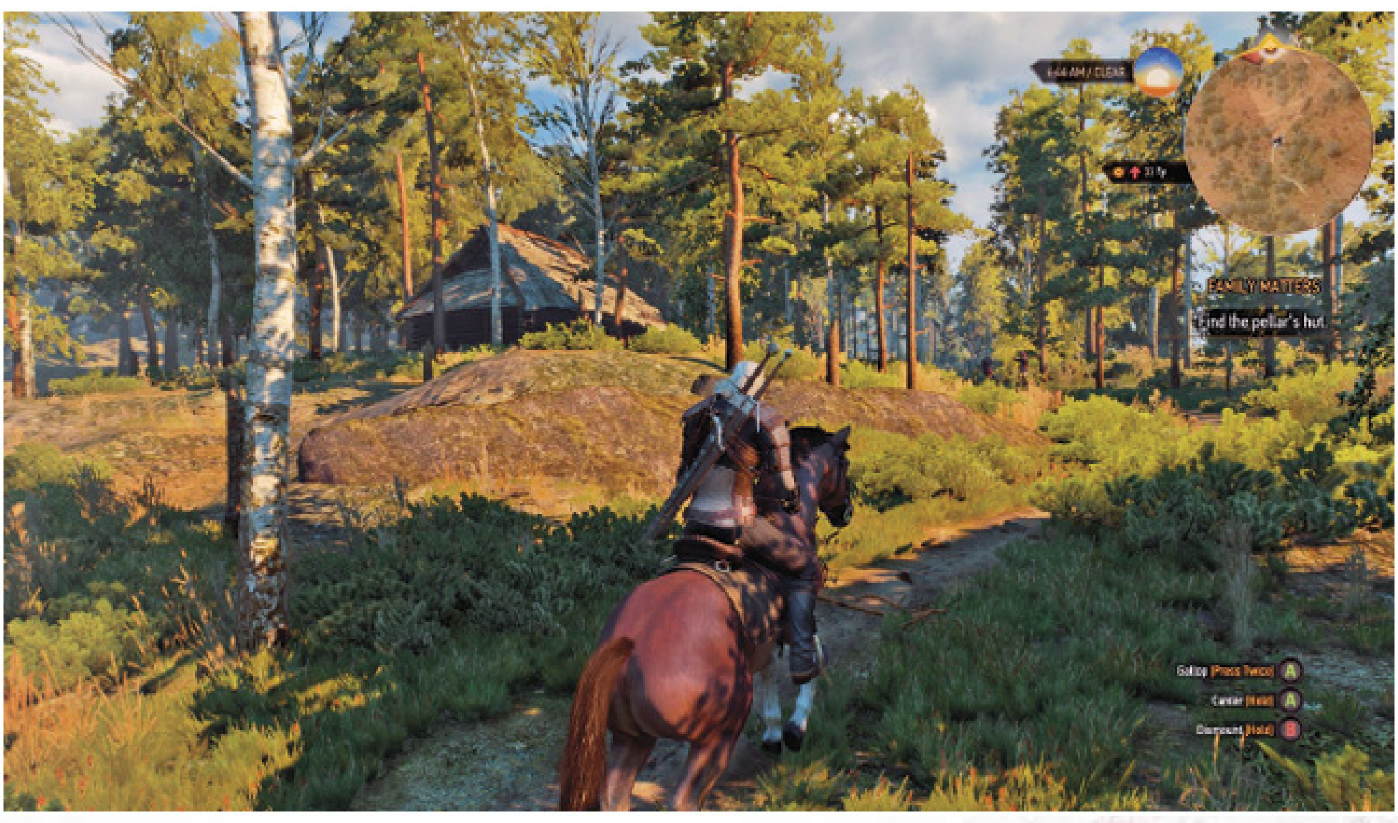
ELDRIC'S BAD BOWELS

In the yard below, you can observe two of the Baron's men waiting in line for the outhouse, while one is locked inside. Knock on this earthern closet, and you're told that Eldric has been on this toilet for some time.

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the pellar's hut.
- (Optional) Kill the bandits attacking the pellar.
- Talk to the pellar.
- Nearest Signpost: Blackbough.

Leave Crow's Perch on a westerly path toward Blackbough. Once you uncover this village, travel into the woods along a path to the northwest. The pellar's cottage is besieged by the Baron's men, who've been sent to apprehend the fellow. It's important you prevent this from happening, in one of three vastly different ways. You can:



- Pay off the men. They aren't interested in gold; only justice for Eldric, one of their comrades who came to the pellar with "evil bowels."
- (Axii Delusion level 2) Tell the men to leave, addling one of their brains with Axii as you speak. They agree to depart peacefully.
- Offer a choice—they leave or die. Unfortunately for them, they choose the latter. Make short work of all five of them with your long steel sword.
- Ask what they want with the pellar; it seems he recommended a diet of rowanberries for a friend of the men, Eldric. Ever since, Eldric has had the screaming runs. Offer to heal Eldric, then you explain a way to lessen Eldric's condition. This satisfies the men, and they depart.

The Pellar

With the men gone, knock on the door and introduce yourself to the pellar, who likes to speak with a flair for the dramatic. The pellar made the amulet for Anna, to protect her from evil surrounding her. After asking where Anna and Tamara are, the pellar knows, but requires his goat (Princess) to be returned. She was scared off by the Baron's men, and only listens to the tinkling of her bell. She also enjoys wild strawberries.

ITEM: Quest Item: Pellar's Bell

Main Quest: Hunting a Witch

Yet Another Option: Talking to the War Veteran

Or, sitting by a tree near the western entrance to the village is an old man clad in rags, smoking a pipe. He offers up the location of the witch quickly, and more easily than either of the other two options.

Main Quest: A Princess in Distress

Having a Tinkle in the Forest

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: A PRINCESS IN DISTRESS

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Family Matters

LOCATION : Pellar's Hut

CHARACTERS : Pellar, Princess

ENEMIES : Bear, Wolves

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the pellar's goat using the bell and your Witcher Senses.

Princess

You're automatically equipped with the Pellar's Bell, so access it now and have a tinkle. Then head into the grassy woodland in a westerly direction, behind the pellar's house. When you reach the objective area, use your Witcher Senses to track the goat's recent movements (and meals). When you see the goat, approach slowly, ringing the bell when you're within about ten feet or so.

MAIN QUEST: WANDERING IN THE DARK

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Hunting a Witch; Secondary Quest: Magic Lamp; Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz

LOCATIONS : Byways, Elven Ruins

CHARACTERS : Keira Metz, Nithral, Eredin, Caranthir

ENEMIES : The Wild Hunt, Drowner, Water Hag, Rats, Wraith, Duplicate of Geralt, Duplicate of Keira, Golem, Gargoyle, Hound of the Wild Hunt, Nithral

PREPARATION FOR EXPLORATION

A brief meditation and gathering of strength (and the mixing of potions) is recommended before fully exploring these labrynthian ruins.

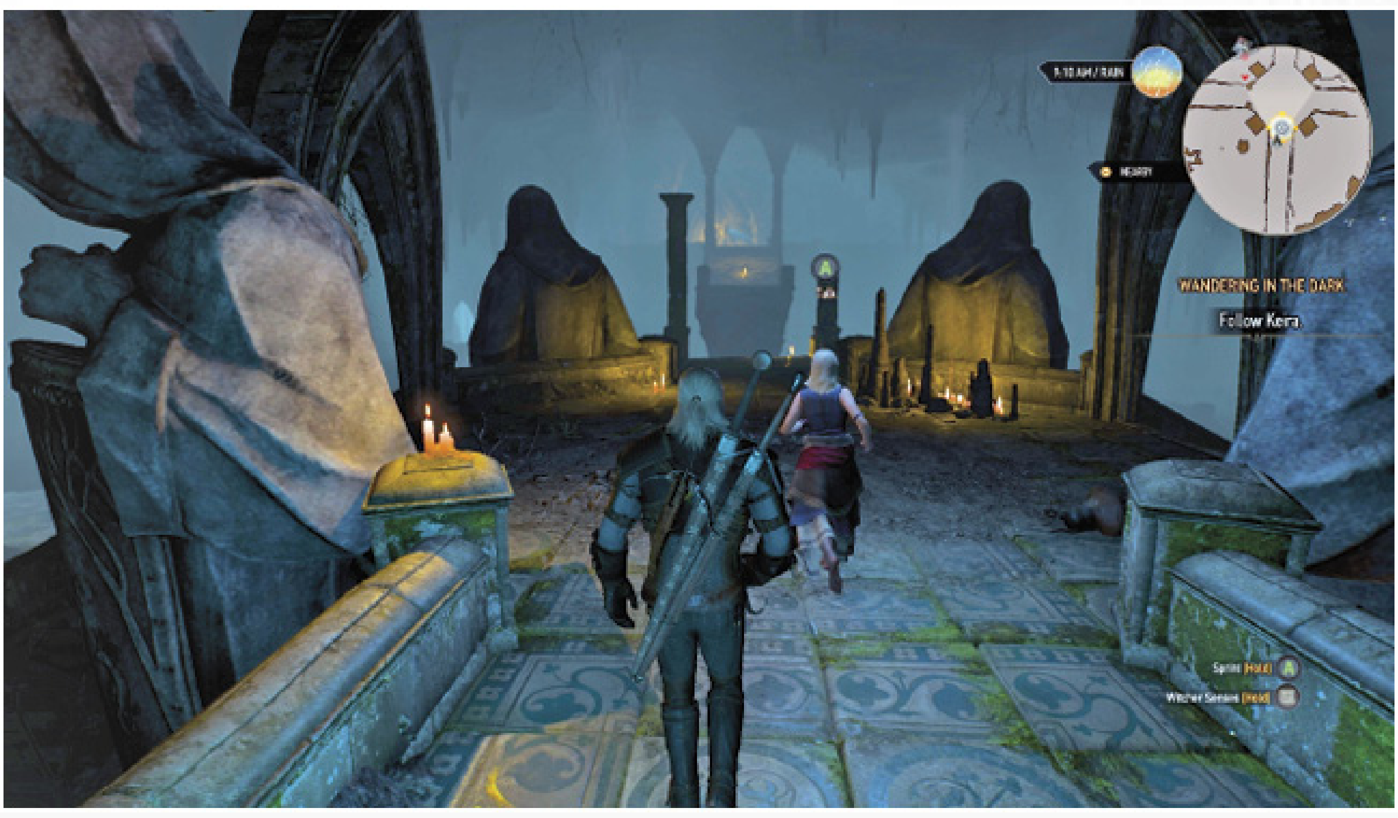
OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Keira.
- Go through Keira's portal.

Enter the cave, which opens up into a vast cavern with the ruins of an old elven bridge stretching out in front of you. On the opposite (north) side, a group of Phantom Riders—members of the Wild Hunt—are spotted! Keira conjures a portal and steps through. That screaming can't be good. You have two options:

- Rush forward into the portal; alas something has distorted Keira's portal, and you're teleported to a distant cavern, surrounded by drowners. Slay these watery fools, then dive down into a flooded corridors, swimming back roughly south to the main chamber, before you continue your search.

- Ignore the portal, which disappears. Remain in the main chamber, and descend to the watery cavern ground below. Deal with half a dozen drowners (and a water hag) before starting your search for Keira. Again.



WANDERING IN THE DARK
Follow Keira
Sprint (Hold)
Witcher Senses (Hold)

OBJECTIVES:

- Use your Witcher Senses to find Keira.
- Destroy the rat nests with Signs or bombs (2).

Keira's screams are coming from the east (use your Witcher Senses to "see" a pulse of sound indicating the direction). Climb the stairs and head through the archways from the central pit, and follow the chambers (watching for foes along the way) around until you reach a rubble-filled room. It seems Keira isn't a huge fan of rats; produce a bomb (Grapeshot, Sumum, or Dancing Star), or use Igni or Aard, and remove the two large rat nests in this area before she drops her protective shield. Speak to Keira, and convince her to keep going.

Main Quest: A Princess in Distress

Really Getting Your Goat

OBJECTIVES:

- Bring the goat to the pellar.
- Defend the goat from the bear.
- Use the bell and lead the goat to the pellar.

The goat should slowly approach, and then you should head east, watching the goat behind you. Periodically, Princess stops to munch on a few wild strawberries. No big deal. Check your map so you're progressing directly towards the pellar's hut (rather than wandering the woods away from your goal). A few steps later, expect Princess to take a liking to some plant life near a steeper sloped area close to a bear.

Position yourself between the bear and Princess, and slay the ferocious creature (the bear). At this point, some fast walking and periodic bell-tinkling is all that's required to lead Princess out of the woods, and toward the loving arms of the pellar.

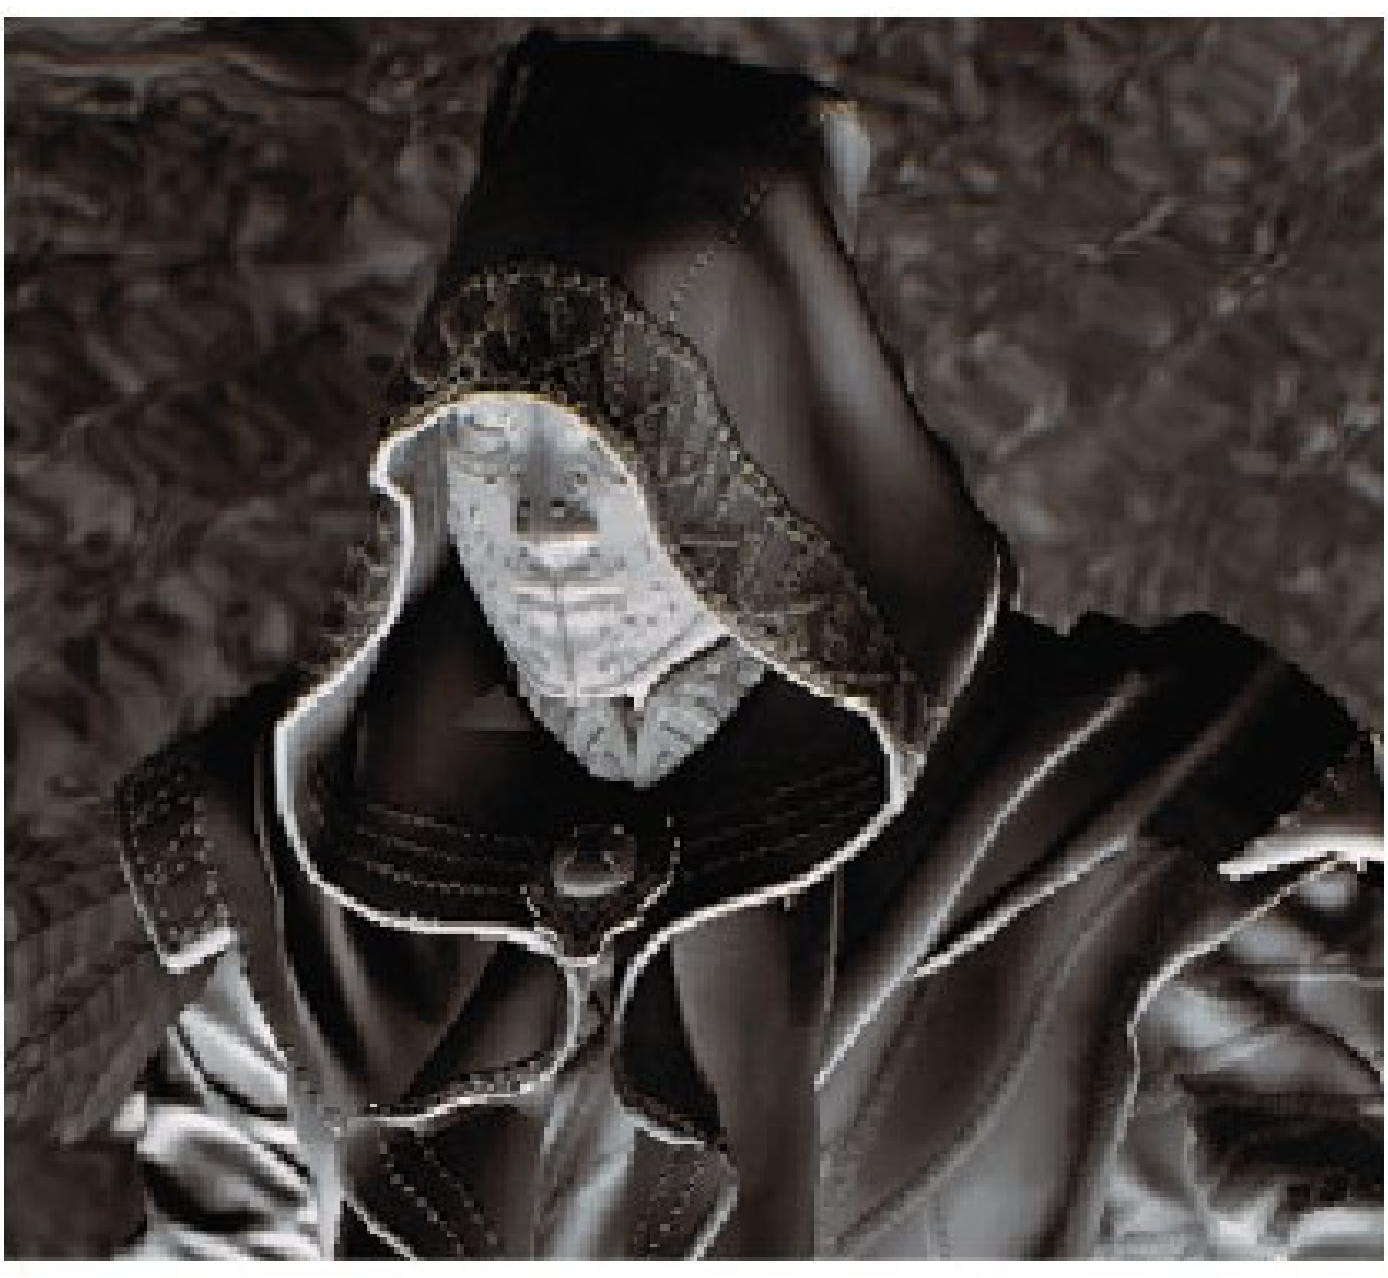
The pellar has knowledge you require; ask about a child that Anna miscarried. It was in some way a grotesque. Ask whether Anna was abused by the Baron. The pellar infers as much, but his evidence isn't watertight (it's related to Princess's habits of licking the hands of those that suffer). Now the child, thrown away without a proper burial, has become a botchling, cursed to wander and seek blood. The Baron should reveal this unhappy family secret if you speak with him. This quest concludes, and Main Quest: Family Matters recommences.

Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark

Zireael and Kelpie: The Sword and the Horse

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the elven ruins and look for information about the mage.
- Explore the ruins and follow the Swallow symbols.



The Masked Elf (morphic projection)

Head south and east to reveal a morphic projection of the elf you seek. After some deduction, and knowledge that Ciri's sword is named "Zireael" or "Swallow," you embark on an inspection of nearby glyphs with a Swallow motif. Now head south, into a pungent, but vast chamber. The yellow vapor is from toxic mushrooms growing here, so set the clouds ablaze (from a distance) using Igni before you encounter and slay all the wraiths guarding this cavern.

CLOUD DISPERSAL AND THE FLOODED CORRIDOR

Before you advance into the toxic clouds, simply ignite them with Igni, or disperse them with a strong gust of air using Aard. But don't hang around here, as the clouds reform.

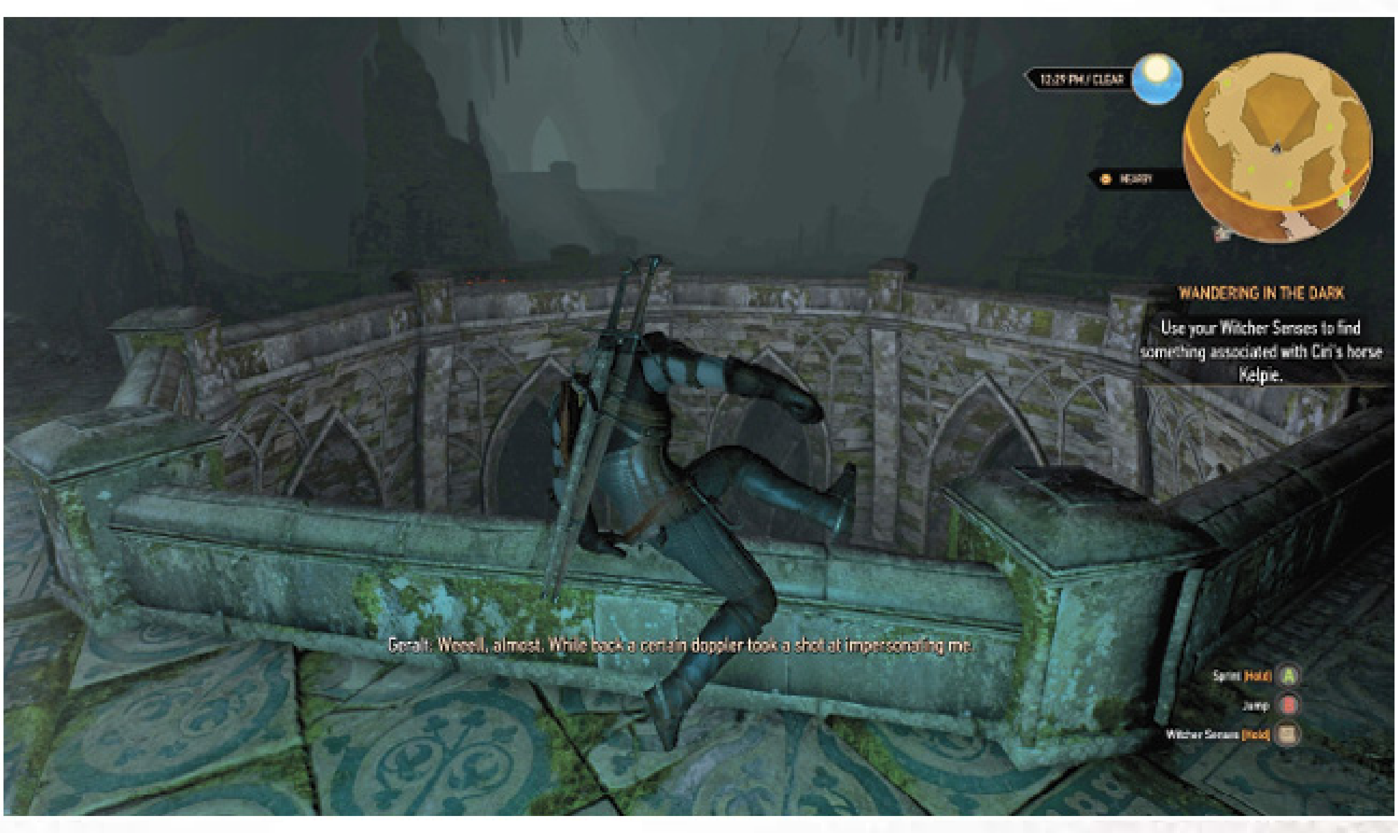
Also check a flooded corridor to the east, with a strange symbol at the entrance. Dive and swim down this submerged tunnel to reach an otherwise-inaccessible chamber that contains a rusty casket with a diagram, manuscript, and a fine sword. Watch for summoned wraiths afterwards, as you return.

Harvest any mushrooms you wish as you continue roughly northwest into a large tunnel with climbable sections. These lead to a strange octagonal chamber, and another elvish projection to listen to (by the Sign of the Swallow).

OBJECTIVES:

- Search the chamber using your Witcher Senses.
- Find something associated with Ciri's horse, Kelpie.
- Rejoin Keira.

Carefully inspect the glyphs along the wall, optionally using your Witcher Senses. None of them are signs of a horse, but activating the Kayran Sign triggers a spell that conjures a duplicate of both you and Keira! Return with more potent strikes to see off both of these reasonably weak, cloned specters! That chalk drawing of a dog isn't much help either; it explodes when touched, dealing significant damage and knocking you back. Leave that alone!



Use your Witcher Senses to find something associated with Ciri's horse Kelpie.

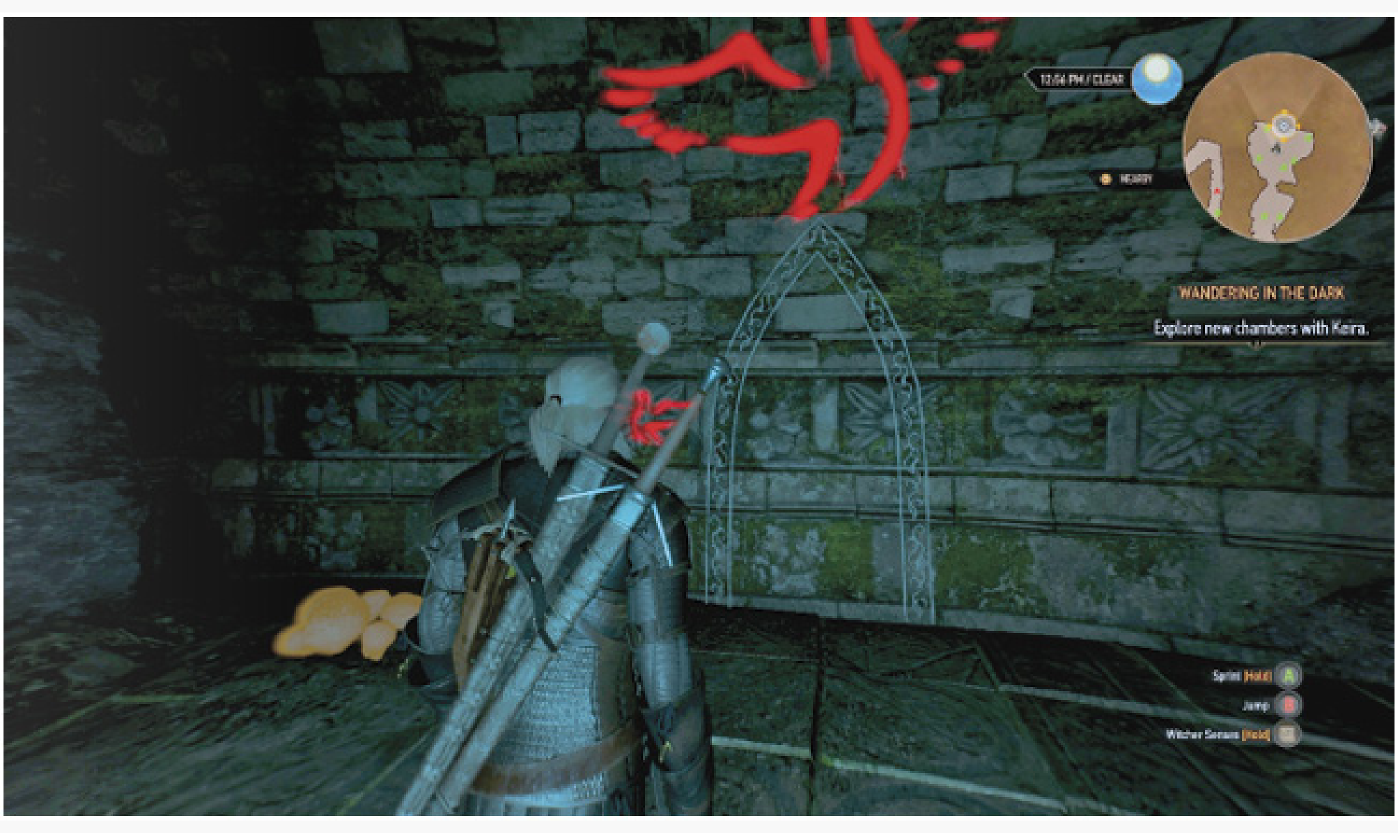
Geralt: Weeell, almost. While back a certain doppler took a shot at impersonating me.

It seems the image of Kelpie isn't on this higher balcony, so jump and drop down into the octagonal pool. Wade to the picture of the horse and activate it. Then dive and swim roughly westward and northwest to escape the water pit. Climb the steps to a second horse glyph and activate it. Then scramble up the rubble and drop back down into the room; a door rumbles open.

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore new chambers with Keira.
- Enter the portal.

Through the door is a dead-end, and a portal Keira is sure distorted her own attempts at teleportation. It features the Sign of the Swallow; stand next to the arch and activate the portal. Then step inside.

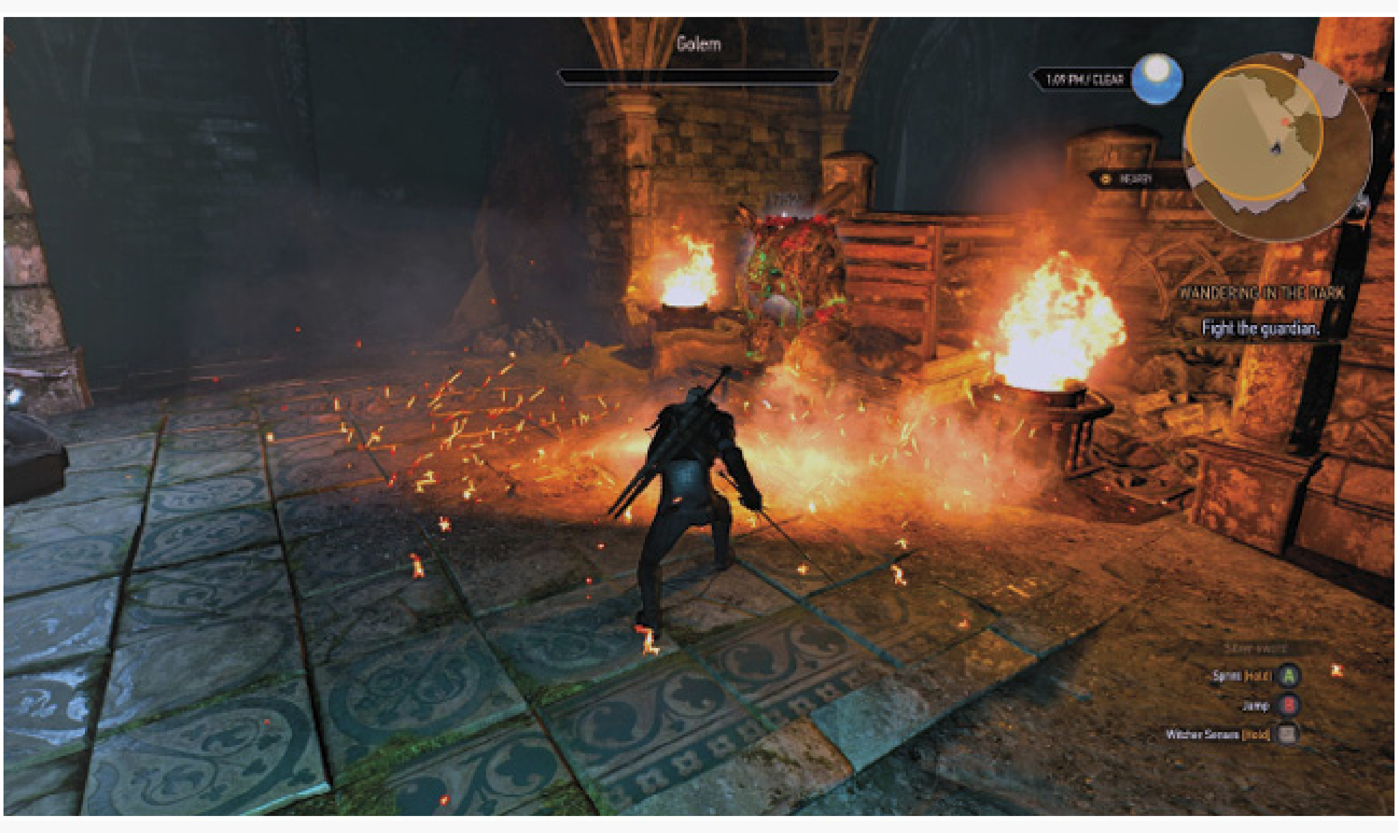


Explore new chambers with Keira.

OBJECTIVES:

- Examine the next room using your Witcher Senses.
- Fight the guardian.
- Continue exploring the ruins and follow the Swallow symbols.
- Find a way to activate the portal using your Witcher Senses.
- Enter the portal.

The next chamber features a lurching golem that must be fought. Climb the ruined stairs behind the golem, and turn left (southwest). Head down the passage as it bends around to the south. On the left there is a side passage down to another portal. Ahead and left is a dead-end cave guarded by a gargoyle. The latter isn't necessary to face, but when you enter there is no going back, since the entrance closes behind you! Awakened, the gargoyle needs to be slain for the stone door to open again. If you don't feel ready to face the gargoyle, head down the side passage to another identical portal. Activate the Swallow Sign and step through.



Fight the guardian.

Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark

Biting Cold: Navigating the White Frost

OBJECTIVE:

- Follow the Wild Hunt's warriors.

Success! You appear on the opposite side of the bridge in the initial cavern chamber, where the agents of the Wild Hunt were spotted. Head north up the steps, past some petrified sentries the Phantom Riders froze to death. Pass further guardians as you reach a massive, flat chamber. The Wild Hunt are on the opposite side, and their powerful mage fills the air with a biting cold; he has summoned the White Frost!

OBJECTIVES:

- Keep close to Keira and stay under her magic shield.

You won't last a minute in this blizzard if you aren't properly protected; so Keira casts Demetia Crest's Surge; enveloping an area around you both in a sphere of calm. As Keira battles to keep the White Frost from encroaching, she slowly moves through the chamber. Your role is as follows:

- Protect Keira at all times; stay close and attack any bounding foes that appear from the rifts you are passing close to.
- The foes in question are hounds of the Wild Hunt. There are around nine or ten to slay in groups of three to four as you pass by each rift.
- Slay them quickly so they don't swarm Keira, and minimize your time away from Keira's protection, as the White Frost is very damaging.

Once across the room, Keira collapses in your arms as the spell took a great deal of power to maintain. You can offer two possible responses:

- Just don't faint on me—a more favorable response, light-hearted banter designed to elect a more positive response.
- If you can't go on—a less favorable response, if you aren't as interested in flirting with Keira.

Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark

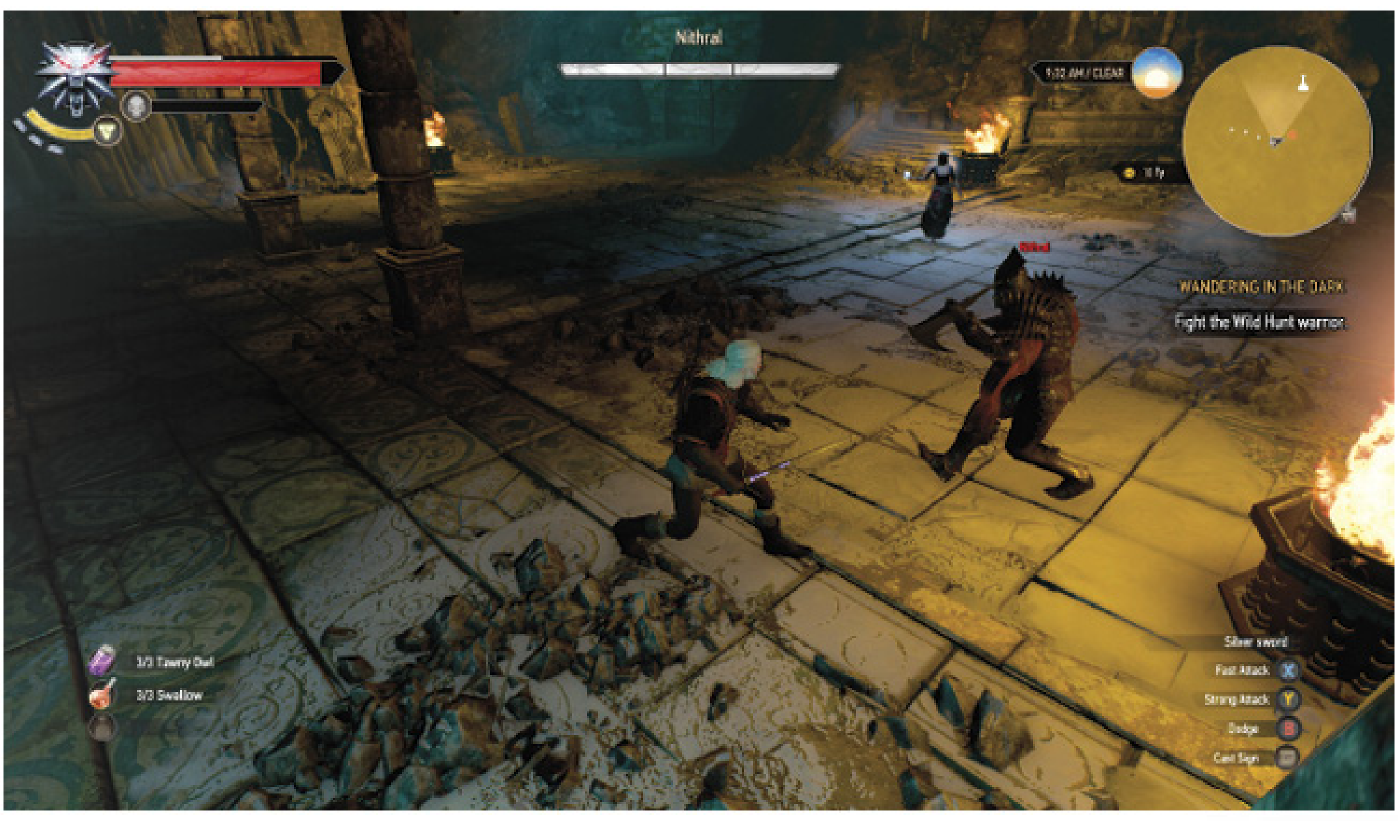
You Are Stubborn, Dh'Oine

OBJECTIVES:

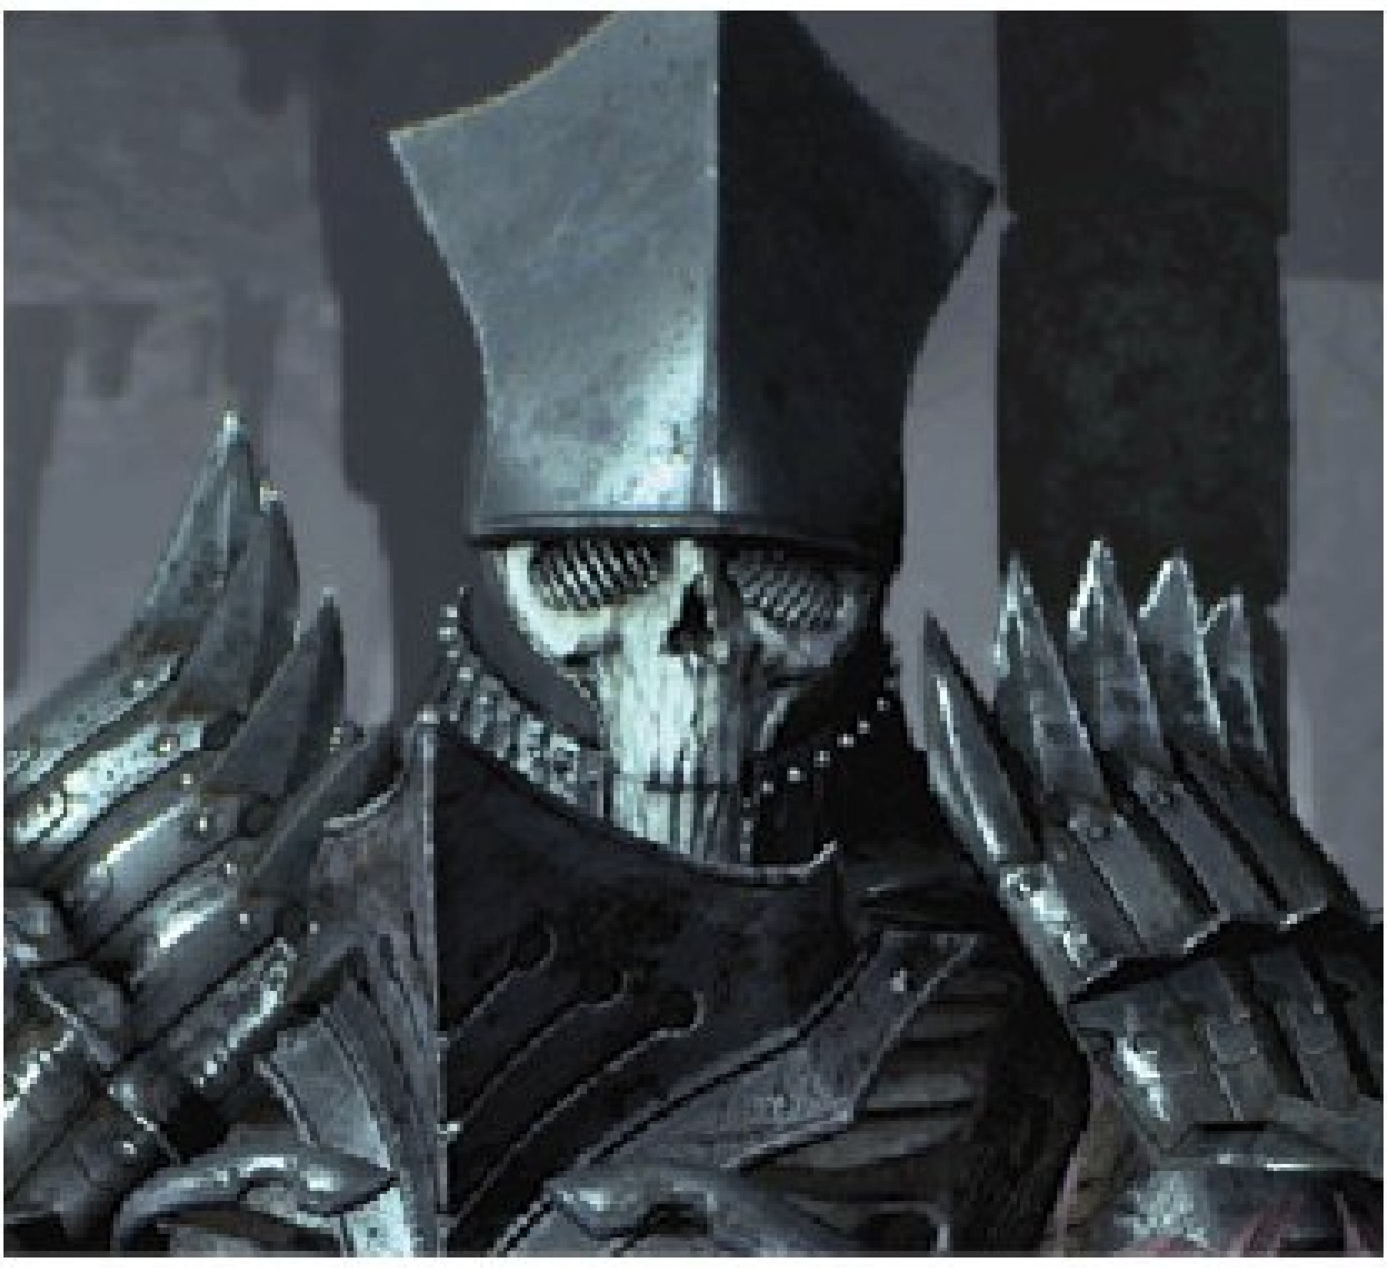
- Chase the Wild Hunt's warriors.
- Fight the Wild Hunt warrior.

MEDITATION AND PREPARATION

You may wish to medidate, prepare potions and oils, and choose your favored blades before continuing. Remember, once you begin the following battle, you can't escape or retreat! You must slay Nithral!



Follow Keira as she dismisses a wall of ice, and follow her through a winding passage to another huge and flat chamber. A massive, armored foe strides forward; a warrior sent by the Wild Hunt to waylay you. Brandish your silver sword and prepare for battle!



Nithral of the Wild Hunt

- Nithral is your main focus. He wields a two-handed weapon, so brush up on your swordplay and your Signs and continuously attack him. All other opponents are secondary.
- At around three-quarters health, Nithral summons a rift, and Hounds of the Wild Hunt pour out. Expect three rifts during the remainder of the fight. Keep an eye on Keira, but otherwise only attack these foes when they encroach on your combat with Nithral.
- At around half health or less, Nithral summons another rift, and more Hounds leap forth from it. Expect around three of these foes, so back up if you're swarmed and fight methodically. Finish off these foes if Nithral falls first.

NITHRAL'S FALL

When Nithral attempts to heal (inside his magic bubble), do not attack him or face losing around 10 percent of your own health, as well as being knocked back. Nithral heals three percent of his health every two seconds, but stops healing and emerges from this protection when his underlings (the other warriors and hounds) are slain. So, kill his summoned minions as fast as you can, to keep Nithral from healing as quickly as possible; making him easier to defeat.

Buff yourself with a Swallow Potion, use Quen Sign as often as possible, and employ Thunderbolt, as well as heavy attacks, which pierce his armor.

Just an Illusion: Escaping the Old Ruins

OBJECTIVE:

- Look for information about Ciri using your Witcher Senses.

With the first Wild Hunt adversaries slain, loot their corpses before heading to the opposite (east) side of the chamber. Climb onto the raised area to discover a trove of books, laboratory equipment, and other trinkets. Have a thorough look around. You receive the last message from the masked elf, telling Ciri to trust no one; especially the witches of Crookback Bog.

Speak to Keira; even though she doesn't know the crones personally, she's read of them. She offers you instructions on reaching their location. Afterwards, search the laboratory (using your Witcher Senses). Gather the following:

ITEM: Quest Item: After the White Frost, Quest Item: The Elder Blood

As well as some burned notes, the only other area of interest lies in a section of wall. Your medallion trembles. Keira was expecting this—an illusion—so she brought an artifact that dispels such magic; the Eye of Nehaleni. She gifts it to you, along with a book to read.

ITEM:Quest Item: The Eye of Nehaleni, Quest Item: The Ladies of the Wood (Book)

OBJECTIVES:

- Use the Eye of Nehaleni to dispel the illusion.
- Follow Keira.

Approach the arched wall section, and equip the Eye. The magical illusion fades away, allowing access into an exit tunnel. Keira stops you once more, mentioning something about a magic lamp. She hopes you'll retrieve it for her. Choose a response:

- You can agree to help.
- Or head straight to Crookback Bog.

As before, the former response is more friendly, while the latter results in a more curt response from Keira. Either way, you have the option of completing the optional quest, or ignoring it. The former is recommended. Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark now concludes.

GATHERING TREASURE: RELICS OF THE PAST

Remember to gather any other items from chests you loot to increase your weapon collection and obtain other fine pieces of equipment. One of the most impressive is close to the entrance to the chamber where you fought Nithral. Look for an archway you can blast with Aard. Step through, and explore the corridors behind and treasure chests, one of which contains a powerful sword guarded by a foglet. Slay the monster, and the treasure is yours. Now return and exit with Keira.

QUEST UPDATED!

MAGIC LAMP

MAGIC LAMP

Look for the lamp in the mage's laboratory using your Witcher Senses.

Head into another chamber, where a number of statues are standing. You sense a riddle. Beckon Keira over to read the Elder script carved on the wall. Her rough translation is as follows:

- Four guardians, four flames, standing proud in a line.
- The First to light his fire dared not march on the end.
- The Second, by the First, played a woeful lament.
- The Third kept close to his faithful beast.
- The Fourth marched not beside the First, yet like the Second, played a tune.
- And thus they stood o'er their queen, who slept benath flickering stars.

OBJECTIVES:

- Light the braziers in the correct order.
- Look for the lamp in the mage's laboratory using your Witcher Senses.

After some head-scratching, the riddle is solved thusly:

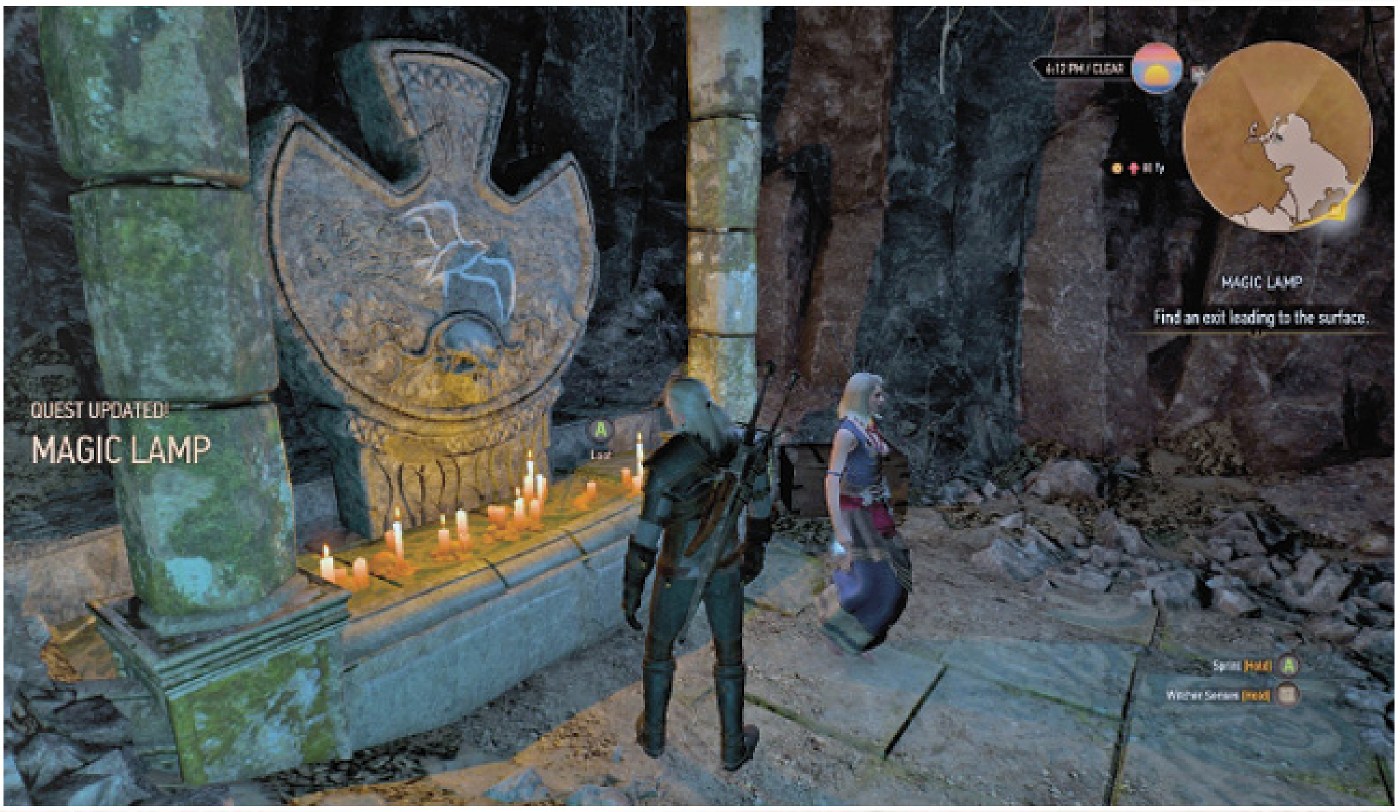
- The first guardian is just to the right of the arched doorway.
- The second is just to the left of the doorway.
- The third is to the right of the first guardian (far right statue).
- The fourth is to the left of the second guardian (far left statue).

Use Igni next to each statue's brazier. Once all four are lit, the door rumbles open.

Secondary Quest: Magic Lamp

The Hidden Sepulcher

Enter the hidden elven sanctuary. Should you wish to, there is a climbable passage to your left, leading to a golem you can battle. Otherwise, inspect this sepulcher. After pondering who this is honoring, Keira produces the item she came here for—a magic lamp.



LAMP FIRST, GOLEM SECOND

If you need more help defeating the golem, pick up the lamp first before venturing to the golem chamber; this way Keira follows you, and helps out in combat.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find an exit leading to the surface.

Turn and head south, all the way to a side tunnel and steps up to the right (west) that end at a large boulder blocking your path. Produce the Eye of Nehaleni, and the boulder illusion dissolves.

Step out onto the misty shores of Lake Wyndamer, and speak to Keira once more. Choose a (pleasant or unpleasant) acknowledgement to visit her (at her hut) when you have the chance, and these quests conclude with you gazing out at Fyke Isle, close to a boat you can take out onto this lake, if you wish. You should also read “The Ladies of the Wood,” when prompted, so you can directly head to Crookback Bog instead of chancing upon the Main Quest of the same name.

Open the book Keira Metz gave you at the end of Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark, and read it; this pinpoints the entrance to the swamp where the ladies lurk. Venture into the muddy swamps until you discover the strange wooden effigy of a comely woman, with a necklace of treats draped around her. This starts you on a winding path of foxgloves and other flowers, along with sapling branches with more sweet desserts to spot hanging from branches or along the muddy ground. The path eventually winds its way into Crookback Bog, where you overhear a child singing a rather interesting rhyme.

Main Quest: Ladies of the Wood

Come Out, Come Out, Wherever You Are!

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the hidden children using your Witcher Senses (4).

The four orphans (Travik isn't playing as he's inside the hut with Gran) scatter, and make haste to their hiding spots. Your unfair advantage is your Witcher Sense, which allows you to discover all four urchins rather easily, and in any order:

- Mikula—a trail of footprints leads into the northwest hut, where she's hiding.
- Genny—footprints lead up onto the roof of the eastern hut, and down the other side to a haystack, where he's hiding.
- Yagna—more footprints allow you to spot her behind some bushes behind the eastern hut, close to the corner of the building.
- Aynara—a trail of footprints leads to a thicket behind the southwest hut.

Enough tomfoolery! The children live up to their word, and coax Gran away from the hut with Travik inside. Head there, and receive knowledge about a strange tree growing on the edge of the swamp; that's where Johnny sometimes plays.

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Johnny to the swamp village.
- Defeat the monsters.

Chaperone Johnny as he scampers back towards Crookback Bog (there are drowners to defeat along the way), and wait as he convinces Gran (Anna) you should gain an audience with the crones. You enter a rickety home filled with candles, and a tapestry made of hair, showing three ladies most becoming. After a song, Anna speaks through the cloth to them. Ask about the ashen-haired woman; they have seen her, but need you to rid nearby Downwarren of a dark presence.

Anna brings you the dagger the ladies instructed her to give you. Afterwards, feel free to explore the cellar of the crones' hut, which has an interesting shrine and other detritus to look at.

Tree Spirit Savior: Preparation for the Ritual

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE WHISPERING HILLOCK

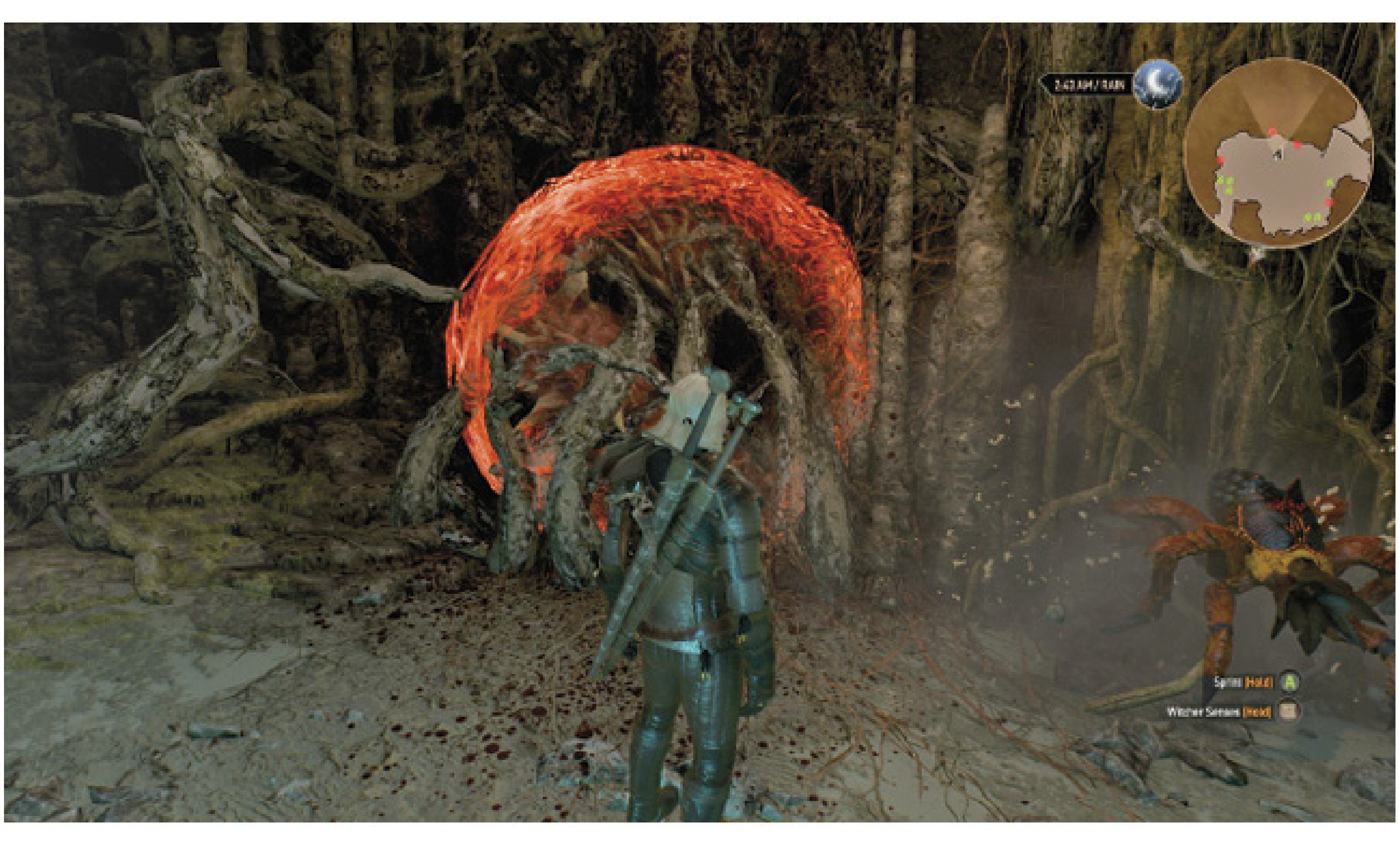
LOCATIONS : Ancient Oak, Crossroads
CHARACTERS : The Tree Spirit
ENEMIES : Bilge Hag, Drowners, Endreaga

OBJECTIVE:

- Find where the voice is coming from using your Witcher Senses.

The Tree Spirit

The main path through this cave is blocked by roots, which are immune to Igni, so dive under water, swimming counter-clockwise to the continuation of the cave. The voice you've been hearing now reveals itself as a cursed tree spirit; a mass of pulsating globules and spines, a grotesque and bound creature.



It begs you to free it. You can:

- Trust the beast, and choose to help and free the tree spirit.
- Ignore the beast's pleas and choose to slay this abomination.

TREE SPIRIT SAVIOR OR SLAYER?

Think your actions over, as they have a major effect on the village of Downwarren, as well as Main Quest: Return to Crookbag Bog (which includes the fate of the Baron and his family). Also note you can deal with the tree spirit before beginning Main Quest: The Ladies of the Wood. If you wish to attempt this, meet the ealdorman of Downwarren once The Whispering Hillock is complete, and inform him that his problem is solved. He removes his ear as a gift for the Ladies. In this option, the spirit can only be freed from the tree, it won't help the orphans (as you don't know about them yet), and the Baron's wife (Anna) is turned into a monster (encountered during Secondary Quest: Return to Crookback Bog). As you cannot choose an outcome, this isn't the optimal path to take.

Agree to help the tree spirit. In return, the tree spirit assures you it will free the orphans, but for that to happen, a rite must be performed. Raven feathers, white bones, and a swift steed all are needed in preparation for this ritual, and you've agreed to find them all.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the bones of the spirit trapped beneath the Whispering Hillock using your Witcher Senses.

Depart the Ancient Oak via the passage to the north (which is your preferred entry point from this moment onwards). Head roughly westward, down the hill and into the swamp. You may be waylaid by a bilge hag and other drowner fiends. Remove these threats, before searching the objective area for a lone grave marker (shown) and loot these bones, not of human born.

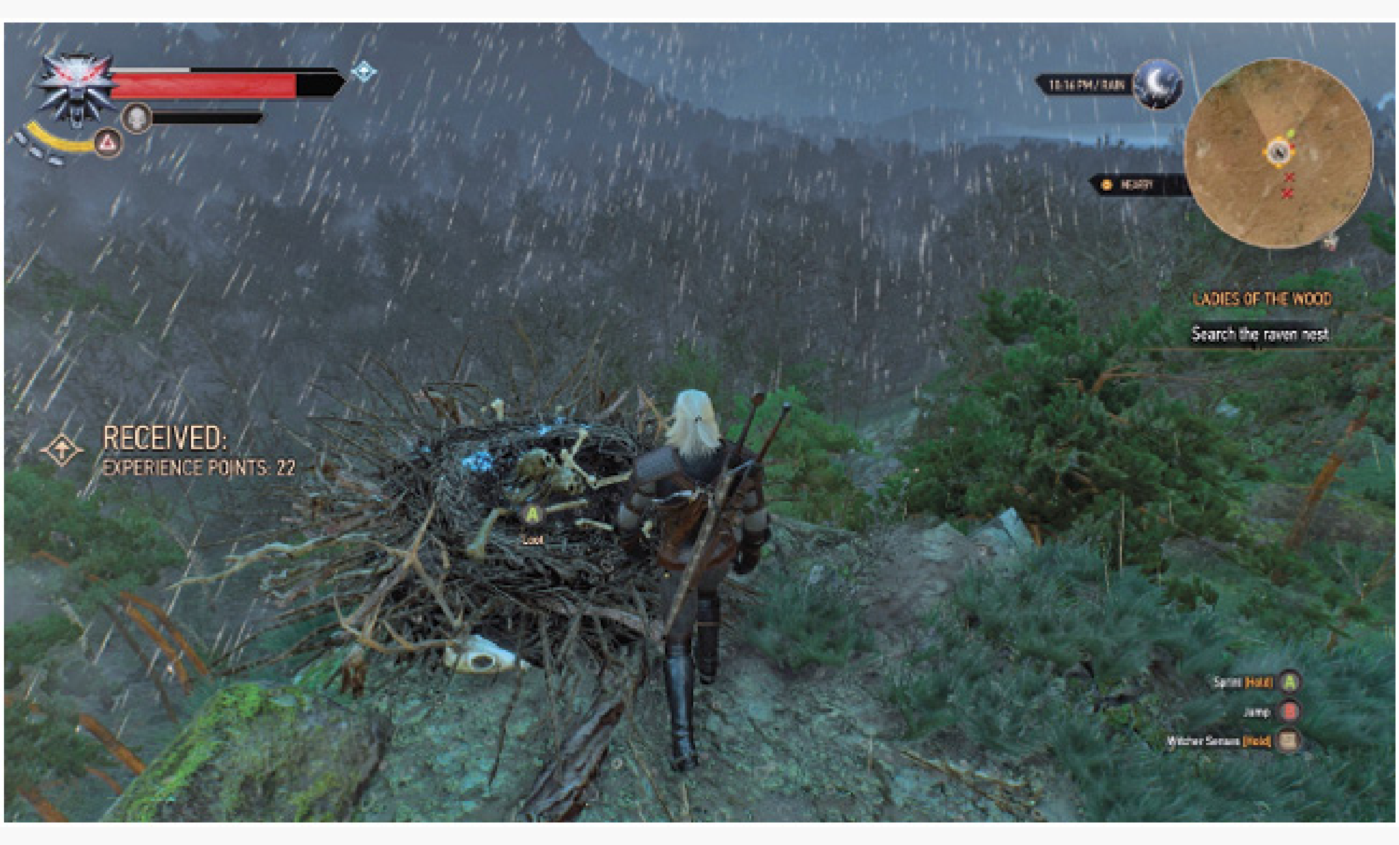
ITEM: Quest Item: Woman's remains

OBJECTIVE:

- Obtain a raven's feather.

Obtaining a raven feather is extremely straightforward; you should have already gathered one from the harpy's nest during the previous quest (The Ladies of the Woods) when you were searching for the Sealed Bottle that gave Johnny his voice back. If you didn't grab the feather as well, trek roughly northwest from the Ancient Oak, climb up the cliffs to the nest (dealing with any returning airborne foes), and gather the feather.



ITEM: Quest Item: Raven's Feather

OBJECTIVES:

- Calm a wild horse using the Axii Sign and mount it.
- Bring a black horse to the cave beneath the Whispering Hillock.
- Nearest Signpost: Crossroads.

Journey roughly south and a little eastward, heading for the Crossroads signpost, and a hilly area of lush grasslands where the wild horses roam. Dismount if you're on Roach, and carefully approach any of the jet black horses. Slow down to a creep, as these horses are skittish. Then, use your Axii Sign to tame one of these mares. Ride it back to the Ancient Oak, and continue into the entrance along the north side, by the small shrine and gnarled lesser oak tree.

Once inside the cave, the roots previously blocking your way part, allowing you to ride up to the tree spirit. Agree to start the ritual, and complete it using the dagger and ingredients you provided. The wild horse, now containing the spirit, vows to free the orphans of the bog. Meanwhile, you can inform the Downwarren villagers of your actions. This quest now completes, and The Ladies of the Woods continues. Note that instead of completing the ritual, you can choose to kill the heart, or even betray the heart, by not feeding the horse with blood. In this case the heart will die, without combat.

OBJECTIVES:

Tree Spirit Slayer: Retribution for the Villagers

OBJECTIVE:

- Destroy the heart in the tree's roots.

Vow to slay the tree spirit. In retaliation, the spirit folds its roots and protects itself with a magical shield, while summoning a group of endreaga to end your days. Fight these vile creatures with your silver sword and magic, and after slaying around three endreaga, plunge your blade into the tree spirit itself, weakening it. Repeat this process (ideally one more time), until the spirit is finally slain. With this evil spirit banished, you can inform the Downwarren villagers of your actions. This quest now completes, and The Ladies of the Woods continues.

QUEST UPDATED!
LADIES OF THE WOOD

Main Quest: The Ladies of the Wood (Continued)

Talk to the Ealdorman

OBJECTIVE:

- Tell the ealdorman of Downwarren you took care of the problem.

Head north, out of the Whispering Hillock and across to where you slew the werewolf. Stride over to the green-tuniced ealdorman, and let him know the evil spirit haunting this place is no more.

- If you freed the spirit, the ealdorman is incredulous; he can't believe you let this entity loose to sow its evil across the land.

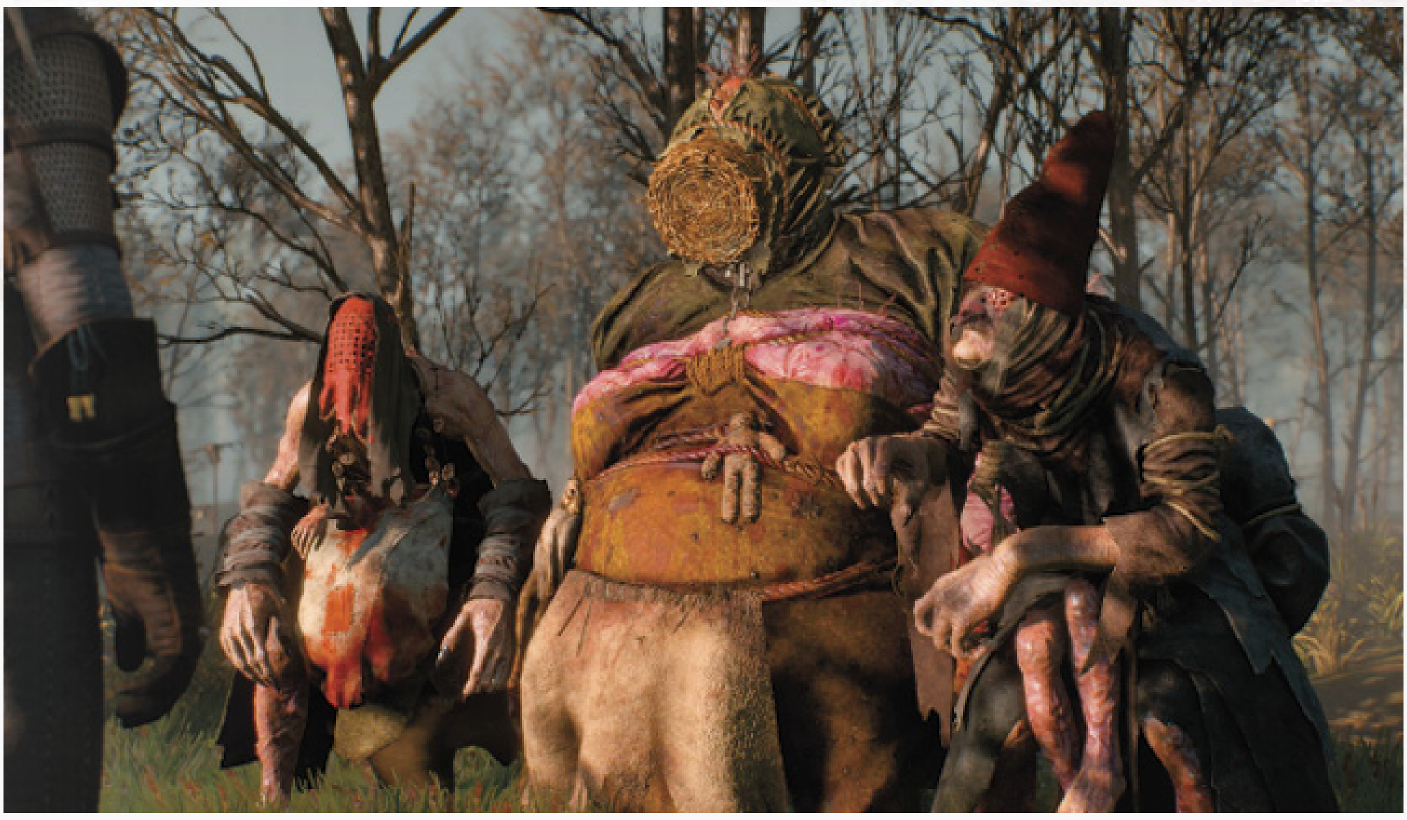
- If you slew the spirit, the ealdorman has a palpable sigh of relief.

The ealdorman takes the dagger that Gran (Anna) gave you, and returns with an offering for the Ladies of the Wood. Take the appendage.

ITEM: Quest Item: Ealdorman's Ear

BEHIND THE TAPESTRY: EVEN LOVLIER IN REAL LIFE

The ear is placed on an altar stone. Anna is shoved forward by one of three grotesque giantesses. Abhorant forms, faces masked, but folds of skin scabbing and flapping in the bog breeze.



Two witches with too many limbs, and another ear to add to their collection. The crones reveal their true forms. They torment Anna, while eying you up and down.

- If you freed the tree spirit, the crones lash out at Anna for letting their plump and juicy "piglets" escape.

- If you killed the tree spirit, the crones remark on the insanity of Anna.

Now the conversation turns to you. Resist the crones' advances, and instead ask about the woman you seek (after optionally listening to them babble about the kids, the tree spirit, and other unsavory chatter. When it comes to Ciri though, the crones' recollections are most vivid.

LOCATIONS : Keira's Cottage, Fyke Isle, Oreton

CHARACTERS : Keira Metz, Vserad, Anabelle, Graham, Alexander

ENEMIES : Drowner, Ghoul, Water Hag, Ghosts, Wraiths, Plague Maiden (Pesta)

QUESTING DECISIONS

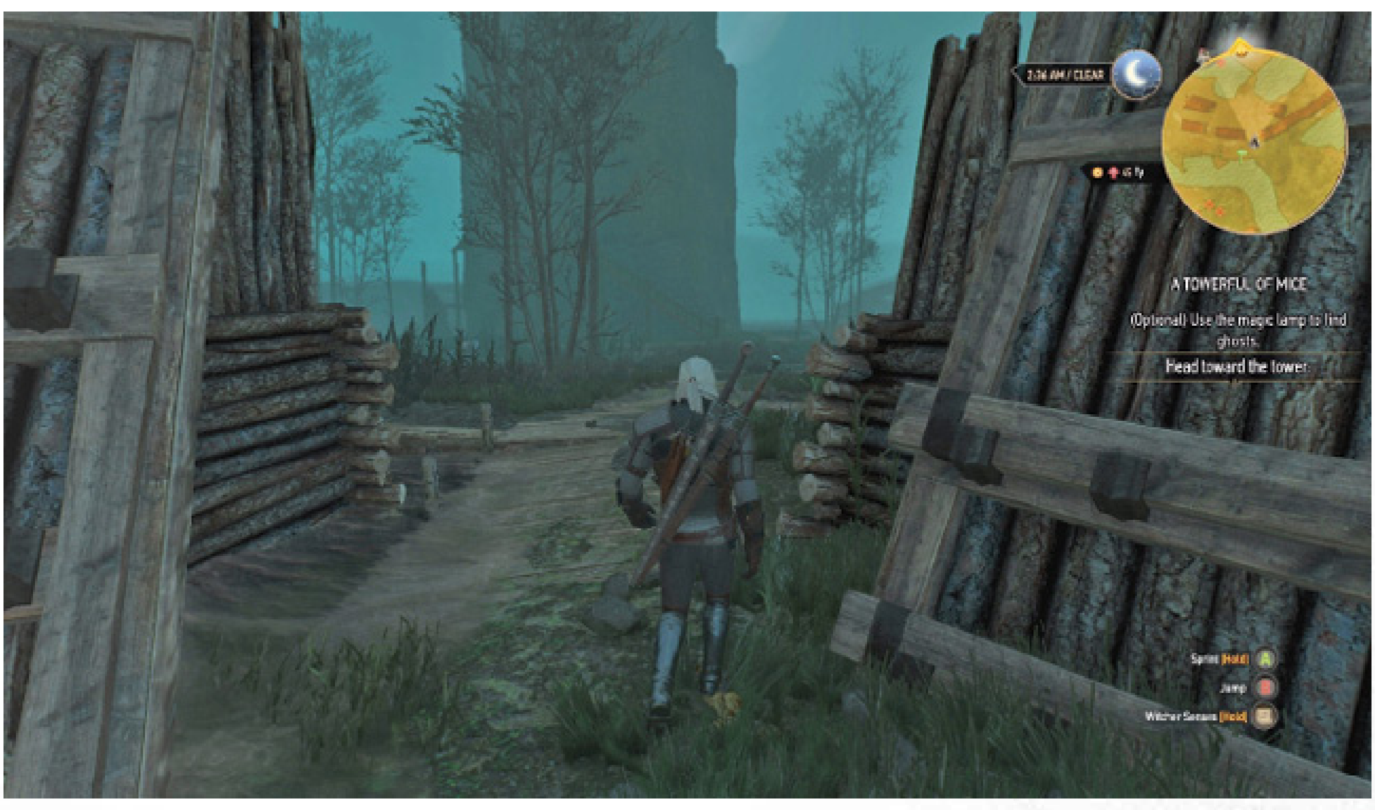
This quest becomes available once you complete all of the quests related to Main Quest: Hunting a Witch. Once this quest line has concluded, this becomes available. It is purely optional, but completing this quest allows you to continue to choose Keira's fate.

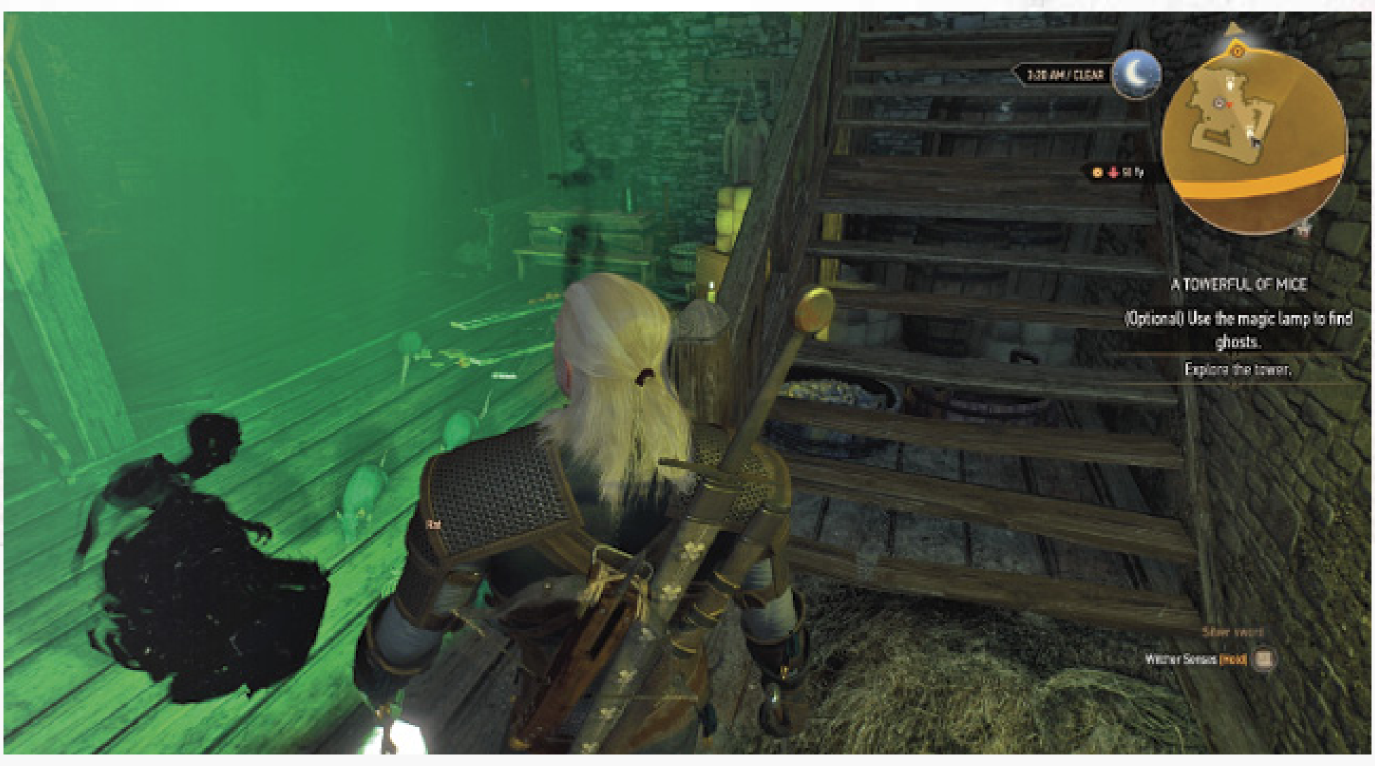
OBJECTIVES:

- Find a way to get to Fyke Isle.
- Head towards the tower.

ITEM: Quest Items: Magic Lamp, Xenovox

Return to Keira's cottage, close to the village of Midcopse, and enter Keira's cottage. She is communicating with the dead. After talking about the magic lamp she (or you both) uncovered, she requests a small favor from you. She wants you to visit the cursed Fyke Isle on Lake Wyndamer (where you appeared at the end of Main Quest: Magic Lamp).





The place is now infested with wraiths. The curse supposedly is linked to Vserad, lord of these lands, who took refuge there when the Nilfgaardians invaded. Talk to the spirits there to find out more; by using the Magic Lamp she hands you. After explaining how you use it, she also gives you a Xenovox, with which to speak over long distances.

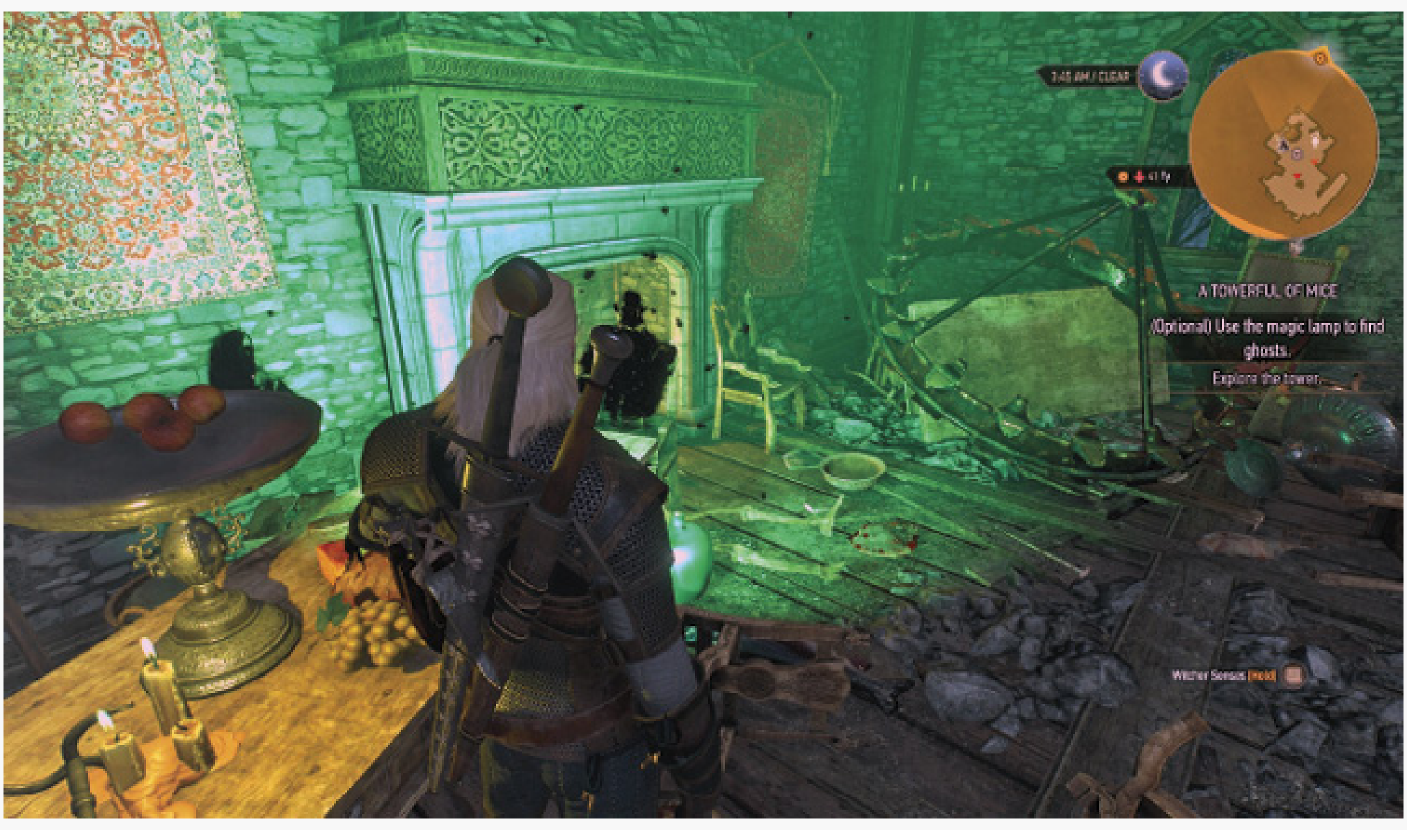
Exit Keira's hut, follow the path to a moored boat at the side of the lake, then use it to cross to Fyke Isle. Or, you can simply swim there. Feel free to run the boat aground at any point close to the looming tower that dominates the island; or stop further away, and bring your sword down on the groups of drowners and ghouls that lurk on the path, and close to the standing stones.

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the tower.
- (Optional) Use the magic lamp to find ghosts.
- Find the mage Alexander's laboratory.

Cross the remains of a defensive boundary, watching for a lurking water hag. Ascend the exterior steps of the tower, and slip inside.

Ground Floor—now bring out your lamp and attempt to view your first ghost. An apparition stands close to the interior stairs, with another on its haunches nearby. They speak about the noble, how death is too good for him, and how they must find him atop this structure. Also present is the corpse of Vserad, the old warlord of Crow's Perch. They comment that he died, and they must find his daughter at the top of the tower.



Cellar—to the southeast is a door that leads to stairs with a storage room at the bottom. Use your Witcher Senses to uncover a pile of dead rats, and some spilled blood. Two ghosts are also here, stuck in time guarding the crates. They speak about releasing the vermin, and the harm the rats would do to a nearby village.

Upper Floor 1—head back upstairs, and climb more steps to reach the upper floor. A formal hearth and fancy tapestries lie strewn about and furniture is scattered around. The ghosts speak as soon as you enter; one named Vserad snaps at another named Anabelle about the condition of the peasants. He will not hear of their suffering. Then another (Alexander) shouts that intruders are through the door. Use your Witcher Senses to spot some strewn hammers on the floor; the peasants didn't ask

MAIN QUEST: CIRI'S STORY: FLEEING THE BOG

LOCATIONS : Crookback Bog

CHARACTERS : Ciri

ENEMIES : Drowners, Hounds of the Wild Hunt

OBJECTIVE:

- Escape from Crookback Bog.

You find yourself trapped in the swamp water of Crookback Bog, with hounds of the Wild Hunt closing in on you. Fight for as long as you must. Unless you're particularly skilled, it is usually a better plan to sprint away, heading eastwards, and eventually escaping the slow-going waters of the marshland. However, Ciri is still being tracked by the Wild Hunt.

Back at Crookback Bog village, the crones slowly retreat, still sure of the the fate they have in store for you. Main Quest: Ladies of the Woods now concludes.

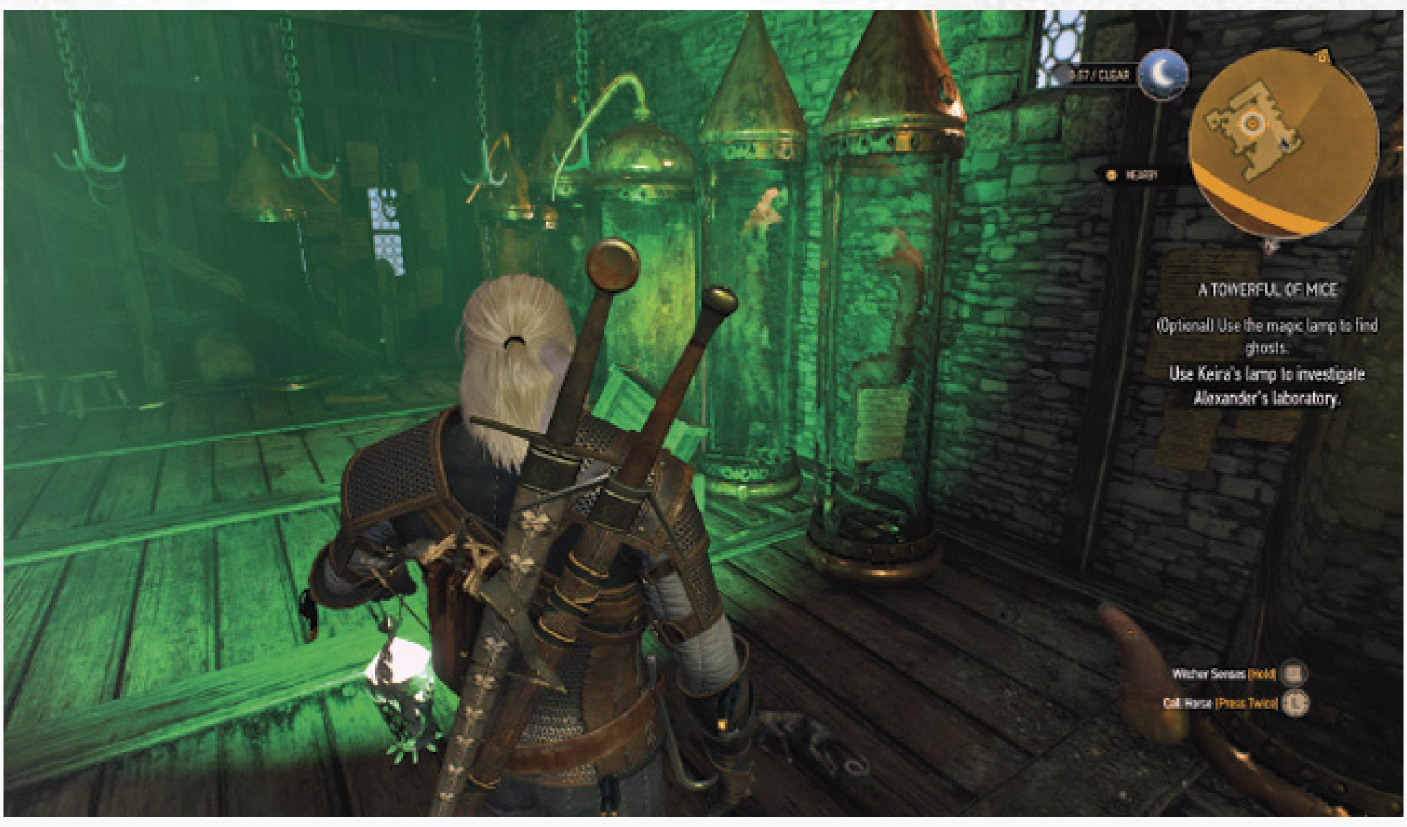
Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz and A Towerful of Mice

Alexander the Not-So-Great

OBJECTIVE:

- Use Keira's lamp to investigate Alexander's laboratory.

Upper Floor 5—enter a laboratory, and immediately check nearby shelf for some notes, as well as peering into the giant incubation chambers. Your Witcher Senses spot human forms; despicable experiments that once writhed inside. Gather both notes (for these subjects were used to test a cure for a disease called Catriona), and inspect the chambers before moving towards a gathering of ghostly particles.



A TOWERFUL OF MICE

(Optional) Use the magic lamp to find ghosts.

Use Keira's lamp to investigate Alexander's laboratory.

ITEM: Quest Items: The mage Alexander's log, part 1, The mage Alexander's log, part 2

Anabelle's wraith reveals itself to you, telling her tale of woe. Her beloved Graham was unable to stop the hordes rampaging up the tower, ready to slay all the lord's subjects after Alexander's experiments were discovered. It seems Anabelle's love seems to be the key to solving these forlorn hauntings. Her fate is tied to the isle, and her forgiving Graham (who failed to save her) may lift the curse that binds her. At this point, you have two possible paths to conclude this quest. You can:

- Agree to help Anabelle gather her bones. Path 1 now begins.
- Ask about the fresh corpse you found in the tower (as previously indicated in this quest; of the looter). Tell Anabelle you don't trust her, and she becomes most angry. Path 2 now begins.
- If you didn't find the fresh corpse, simply tell Anabelle you need to look around the tower some more. She allows this, but seals the exit door on the lower floor. As soon as you attempt to leave, she begins to attack! Path 2 also now begins.

LOOTING (BUT NOT FALLING FROM) THE TOWER

Search the roof for items and a great view if you wish, but don't leap from this uppermost area, as your death is assured!

Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz and A Towerful of Mice

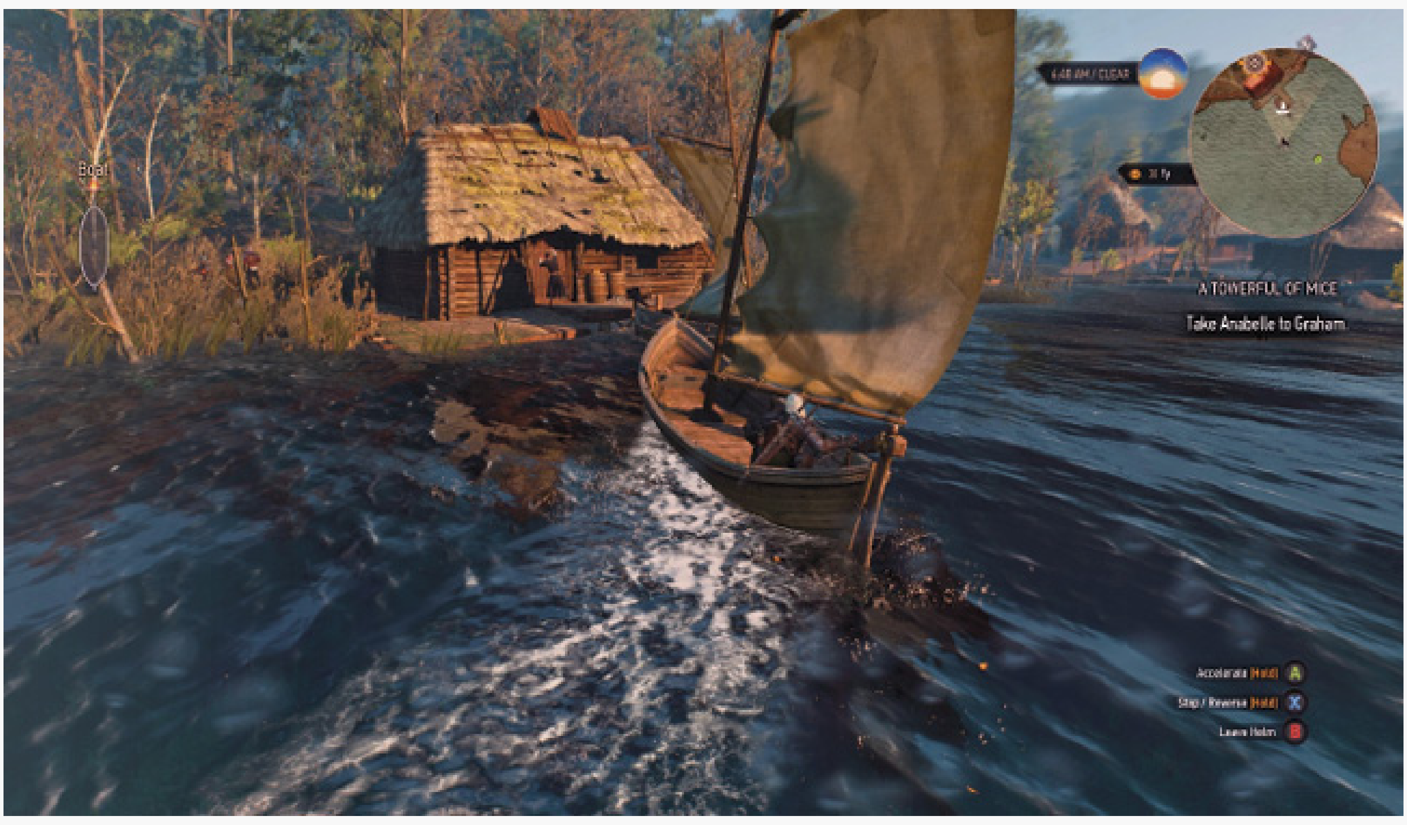
Path 1: The Displeasure of a Pesta

OBJECTIVE:

- Take Anabelle to Graham.

Agree to gather her bones. Descend to the marsh surrounding the tower (where you may discover another ghost—a villager desperate to find someone named Millie). Take the boat, or swim across the lake, heading northwards to the fishing village of Oreton. Graham's hut is on the western side. Knock on his door, and explain to Graham that Alexander the mage attempted to save Anabelle, drugging her to appear dead. She may have survived the assault on the tower, but not the rats that gnawed her to death while she lay immobile. Though wrecked with guilt, Graham knows what to do as you hand him Anabelle's bones.

Graham



ITEM: Quest Item: Anabelle's Remains

OBJECTIVES:

- Tell Keira you've lifted the curse on Fyke Isle.
- Investigate what happened.

Sprint off into the woods, until you hear a blood-curdling yell from Graham's hut. Head back, and discover his felled corpse still twitching, and Anabelle's ragged spirit hovering over him. She disperses; it seems she was a pesta (or plague maiden). Slaying Graham set her free.

Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz and A Towerful of Mice

Path 2: The Fury of a Plague Maiden

OBJECTIVES:

- Defeat the plague maiden.
- Follow the plague maiden.
- Defeat the plague maiden.

Continue to tell Anabelle you don't trust her, and that she's probably the monster in the tower, and she lives up to your hypothesis; forming into a more vicious plague maiden form of tattered terror. Battle her; after two successful strikes she turns transparent, and cannot be struck. She attempts to flee from the tower. Head to the lower floor where the exit is. There, on the marshy grounds at the base of the tower, you must fight her again. When you "kill" her, she disappears, but cannot be slain.

PLAGUE MAIDEN VULNERABILITIES

This pesta is vulnerable against the following:

OIL: SPECTER

SIGN: YRDEN

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Keira and find out who Graham is.
- Talk to Graham about Anabelle.

You speak to Keira through the Xenovox, about Anabelle's love (Graham). Keira lets you know where Graham resides. Take the boat, or swim across the lake, heading northwards to the fishing village of Oreton. Graham's hut is on the western side. Knock on his door, and explain to Graham that Anabelle has taken the form of a mournful pesta, but the curse can end if he truly loves Anabelle and can prove it. Graham agrees to help.

OBJECTIVE:

- Take Graham to Anabelle.

You reconvene with Graham at the entrance to the tower. Battle two wraiths as you enter the structure, and ascend up towards the laboratory, until Anabelle makes her appearance. She demands proof of his love (a kiss) and you're unsure this is wise. It doesn't matter to Graham however, and the two of them embrace. As if by magic, Anabelle's human form is revealed, but the coupling topples Graham as he dies on the spot. The curse is lifted, but at a cost.

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: A FAVOR FOR A FRIEND

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Wandering in the Dark, Secondary Quest: Magic Lamp, Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keirz Metz
LOCATIONS : Keira's Cottage, Hangman's Alley
CHARACTERS : Keira Metz
ENEMIES : Drower, Water Hag, Rotfiend
RECOMMENDED ITEMS : Keira's Magic Lamp

OBJECTIVES:

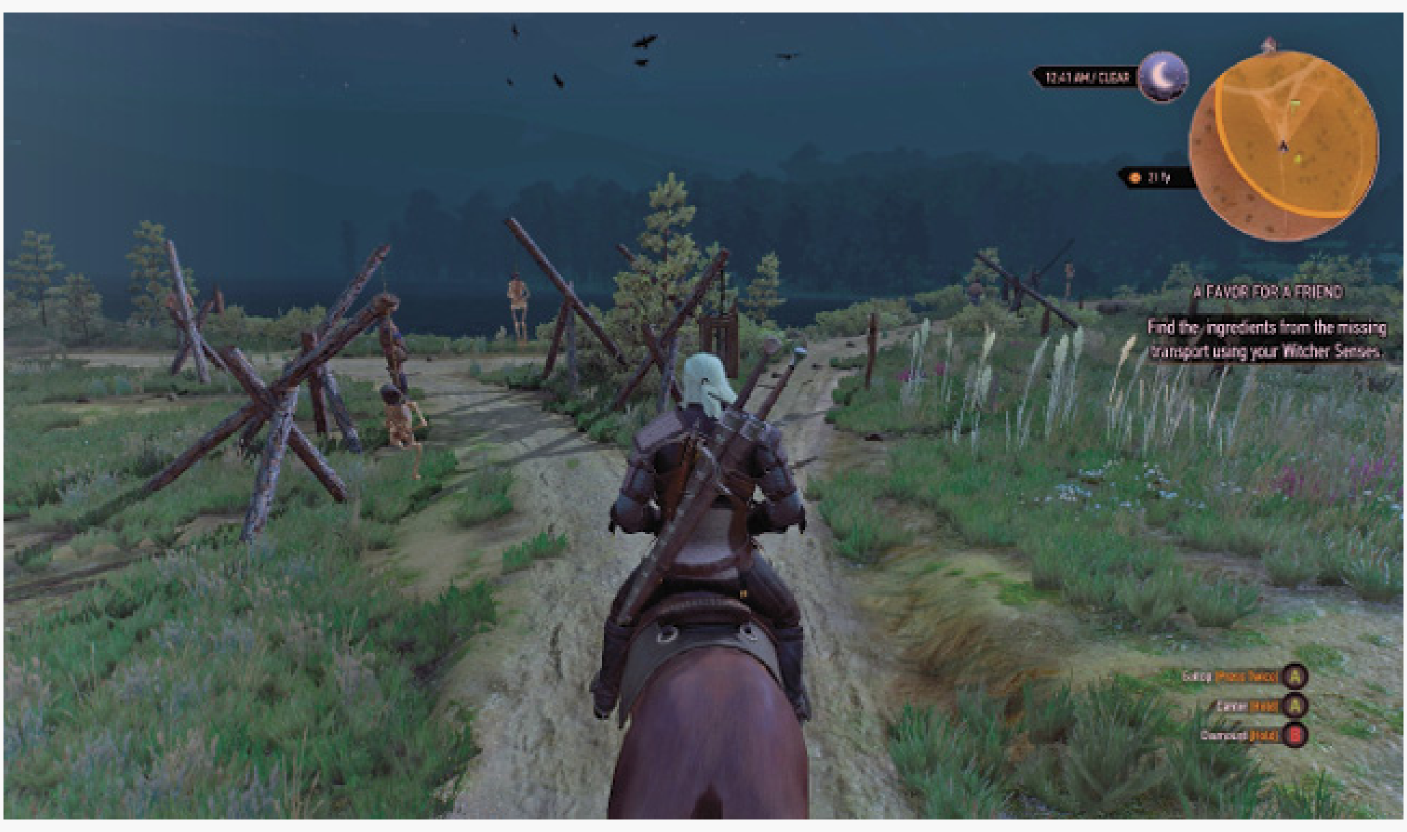
- Collect ingredients from the missing transport using your Witcher Senses.
- Nearest Signpost: Hangman's Alley.

QUEST DECISIONS

This quest is accessible once you have completed Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz, and Secondary Quest: A Towerful of Mice. Completing the following quest allows you to continue to choose Keira's fate. Start the quest by revisting Keira at her cottage deep within the Velenian woods, close to Midcopse.

Keira Metz

Fyke Isle is free of its curse, thanks to your previous questing actions. You can also speak about the research Alexander was doing. After you say your goodbyes, Keira urges you to stay a little longer; she has a small favor for you to complete. A delivery of substances from Novigrad hasn't arrived, and she hopes you may find it. Start your search at Hangman's Alley once any aquatic foes have been vanquished.

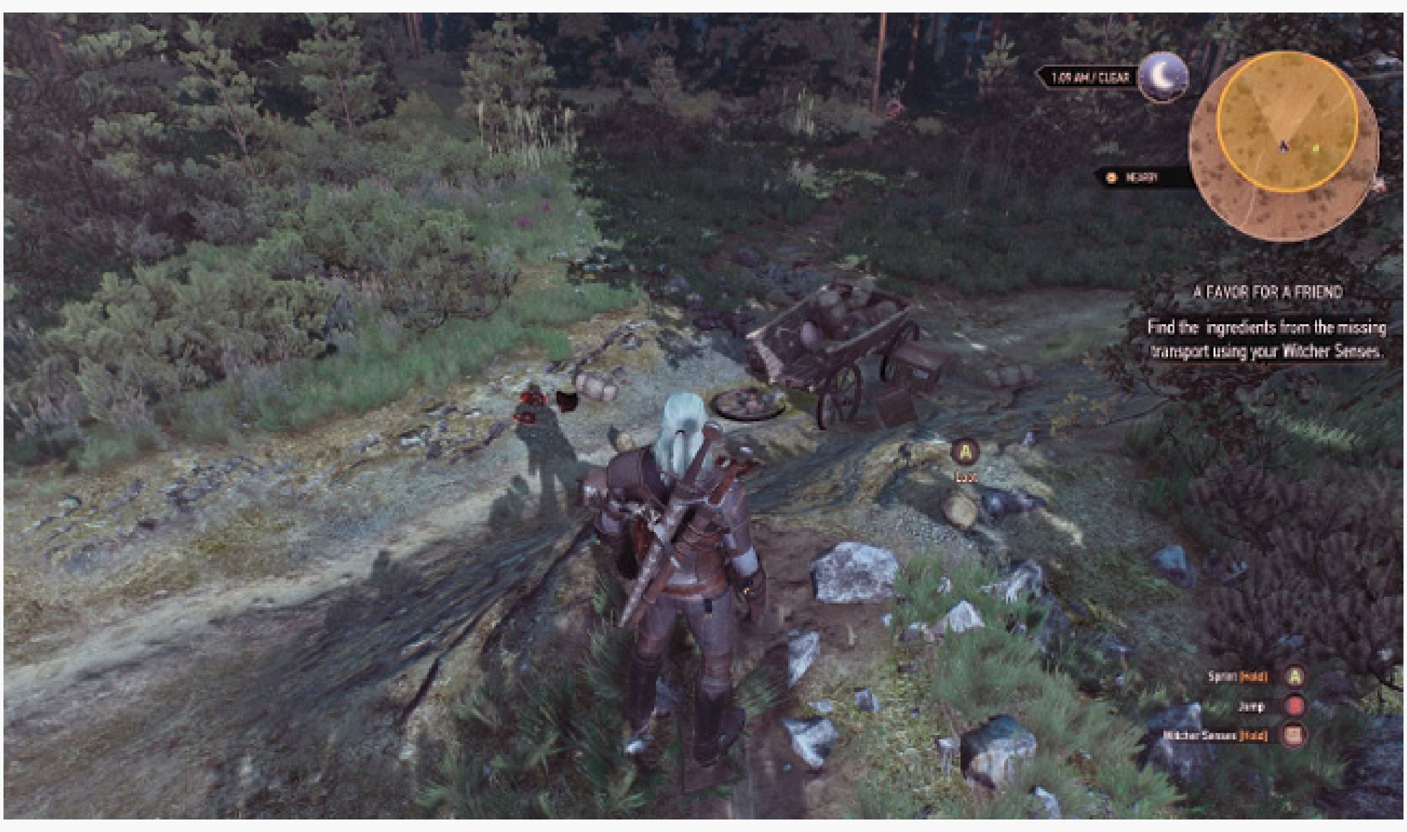


A FAVOR FOR A FRIEND

Find the ingredients from the missing transport using your Witcher Senses.

With your Witcher Senses, follow the heavy merchant cart tracks southward until they leave the road. A lost wheel and debris scattered over a low ridge is what you'll discover, along with a locked box with Keira's ingredients.

Close by, a rotfiend is nibbling on the remains of the merchant. After defeating this foe, check the dead merchant for a letter you can read.



A FAVOR FOR A FRIEND

Find the ingredients from the missing transport using your Witcher Senses.

ITEM: Quest Items: Package for Keira, Missing Merchant's Letter

Secondary Quest: A Favor for a Friend

End: Friends with Benefits

OBJECTIVE:

- Find Keira using your Witcher Senses.

At the meal, the conversation takes a turn for the romantic. When Keira becomes most forward with her advances, you have three different conversation choices. You can:

- Say you don’t have to ask twice. Using your Witcher Senses, you discover a trail of Keira’s clothes. You head into the undergrowth (and start to explore…). After some writhing, you gaze up at the stars, before you’re put to sleep by a spell. You awaken with Keira nowhere to be seen, while you stare at Fyke Isle.

- Tell her you’re not in the mood. She asks if you have any “performance anxieties,” after which you agree to lie and watch the stars. She puts you to sleep with a spell, and you wake up staring at Fyke Isle.

- Inform her there’s someone else. She calls you old-fashioned, you agree to lie and watch the stars with her, after which she puts you asleep and leaves you to waken, staring at Fyke Isle.

The quest now concludes.

SECONDARY QUEST: FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF LEARNING

RELATED QUEST : Secondary Quest: A Favor for a Friend
LOCATION : Fyke Isle
CHARACTERS : Keira Metz
ENEMIES : None

QUEST DECISIONS

This Quest becomes available once Secondary Quest: A Favor for a Friend concludes.

- If you chose to have “relations” with Keira during Secondary Quest: A Favor for a Friend, you have an additional conversation choice during your chat with Keira, regarding this fact.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find out what Keira’s doing in the tower on Fyke Isle.

Keira Metz

There is a light on atop the tower in Fyke Isle. Journey to the source of Alexander’s experiments, and Keira Metz greets you at the base of the stairs. You ask her if she found what she was looking for. Indeed she did; notes allowing her to concoct a remedy for the Catriona plague. One she plans to take to Radovid in exchange for monies and even the forgetting of her past associations with the Lodge. At this point, your conversation choices matter. You can:

FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF LEARNING
Find out what Keira’s doing in the tower on Fyke Isle.

- Tell her you can’t let her do that (or that you can’t believe you had “relations” with her). This more strident attitude does not sit well with Keira, and allows you to start Quest Conclusion 1.
- When she mentions seeking out King Radovid and attempting to manipulate the ruler, agree with this plan. This results in Quest Conclusion 2.
- Tell her it is suicide. This more forgiving nature allows you to start Quest Conclusion 3.

THE FATE OF KEIRA METZ

Be very careful with the conversation choices you make; some of these you can’t take back! The choices listed here show you how to end this quest either favorably, or unfavorably, towards Keira. There are other choices too, but the listed ones are most important.

Secondary Quest: An Invitation from Keira Metz and A Towerful of Mice

End: I'm Almost Inclined to Say "Good Work"

OBJECTIVE:

- Tell Keira you've lifted the curse on Fyke Isle.

The paths now merge. Return to Keira's Hut (this is a horse ride heading northwest), and explain what happened. As always, Keira knew more than she let on. The quest concludes, and Secondary Quest: A Favor for a Friend automatically begins.

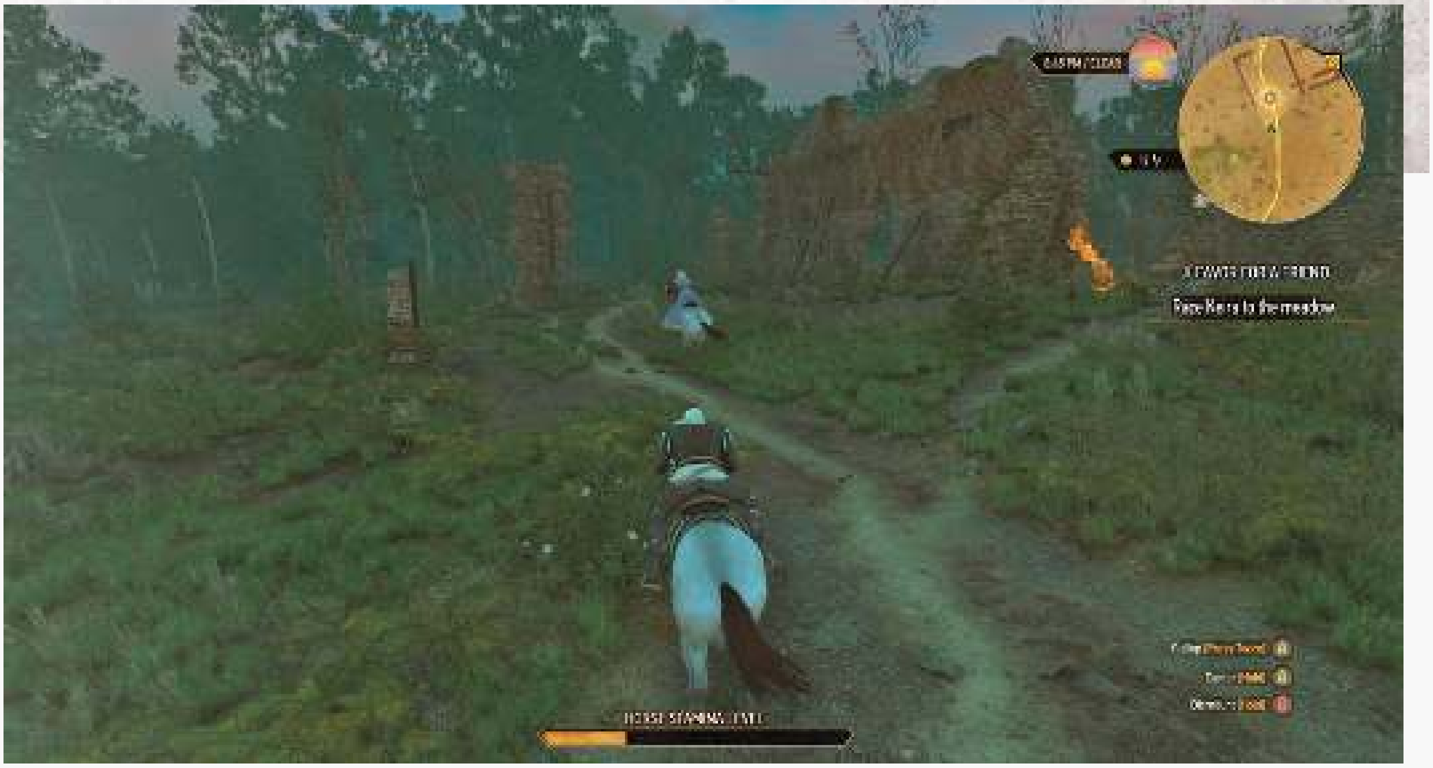
Secondary Quest: A Favor for a Friend

Bychane, Gvyn, Caeffyl!

OBJECTIVES:

- Bring the ingredients to Keira.
- Race Keira to the meadow.

Return to Keira at her hut, and let her know you have her ingredients. It so happens that these are part of a surprise Keira has planned for you. Also included are two white mares; horses transformed from mice with a 66.67 percent chance of success. Agree to race Keira on these steeds to a meadow where her surprise continues. The race is straightforward, involves you following the trail along the minimap (though you can take shortcuts and force your horse to gallop to attempt to beat Keira to her woodland glade).



Secondary Quest: The Fall of the House of Reardon

Monster in My Manor

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: THE FALL OF THE HOUSE OF REARDON

RELATED QUESTS : Secondary Quest: Ghosts of the Past

LOCATIONS : Lindenvale, Reardon Manor

CHARACTERS : Dolores Reardon

ENEMIES : Wraiths

OBJECTIVES:

- Ask Dolores about the monster in her manor.
- Find the Reardon family manor.

QUEST DECISIONS

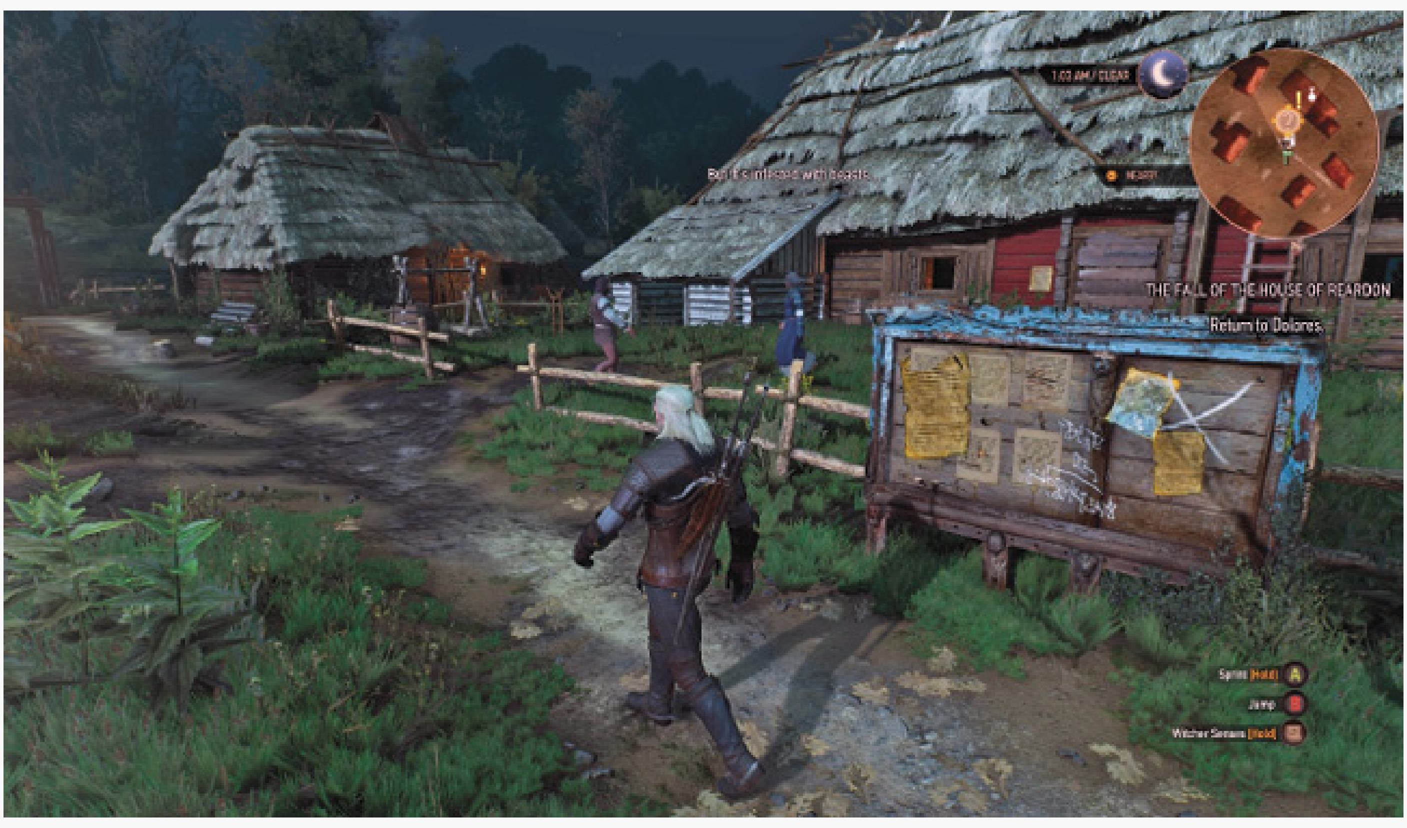
This quest is accessible once you have completed Main Quest: Imperial Audience. However, whether you complete The Fall of the House of Reardon, or start Ghosts of the Past, hinges on the following:

- PC Only: Is Letho still alive in your Witcher 2 game? If he is, Ghosts of the Past becomes active.
- PC Only: Is Letho dead in your Witcher 2 game? If he is, only The Fall of the House of Reardon is active.
- PC, PS4, Xbox One. Without a previous save game? Then Ghosts of the Past cannot be started, unless you answered your conversation choices with General Voorhis during Main Quest: Imperial Audience, and mentioned Letho is alive, not dead. Only then can Ghosts of the Past be started.

To begin this quest, visit a Notice Board, such as the one in Lindenvale, and read the letter marked "Monster in my Manor!"

Dolores Reardon

After finding her notice pinned to a board on your travels, journey to the settlement of Lindenvale, and search for poor old Dolores Reardon; she's being thrown out for non-payment of rent. In fact, Dolores isn't that poor; she owns the Reardon manor nearby, but the infestation of monsters on the property hasn't allowed her to spend her golden years there. Agree to help her rid the manor of her monster problem. Now journey eastwards from Lindenvale to reach the eerily quiet manor grounds to begin your search.



Secondary Quest: For the Advancement of Learning

Quest Conclusion 1: The Advancement of Spurning

Keira becomes increasingly short with you, ending the conversation abruptly, perhaps with a few truths that hit a little close to home. At any point during the conversation, insist that she hand the notes she made on the plague over to you. She isn't about to part with them, and the argument degenerates into a fight. Slay Keira Metz (beware of her powerful shield and magical lightning strikes; you may need to retreat and use the tower for cover, as well as dodging constantly), picking up and burning the notes from her corpse as the quest concludes.

▶ As you might have guessed, Keira Metz is not available to help defend Kaer Morhen during Act II: Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen.

Secondary Quest: The Fall of the House of Reardon

A Few New Tenants

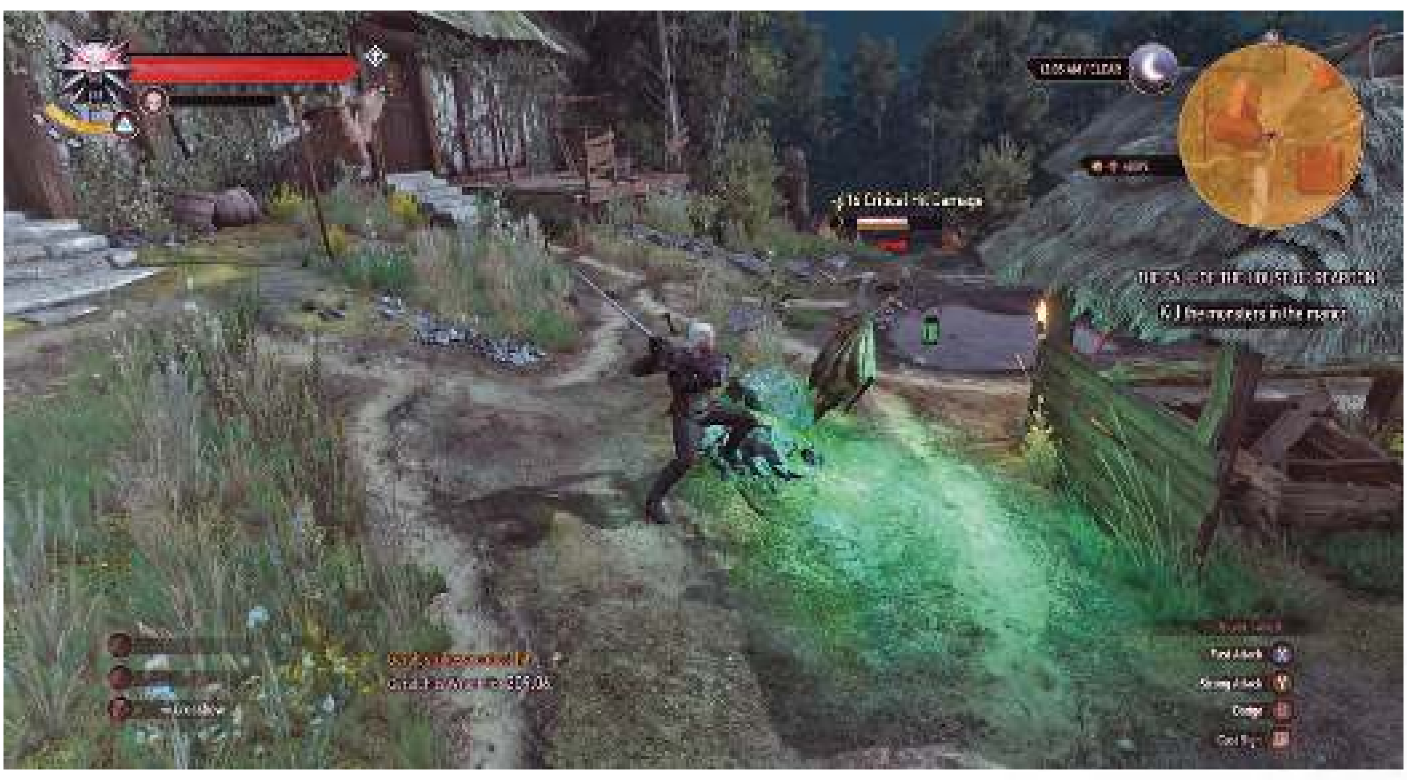
OBJECTIVE:

- Kill the monsters in the manor.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

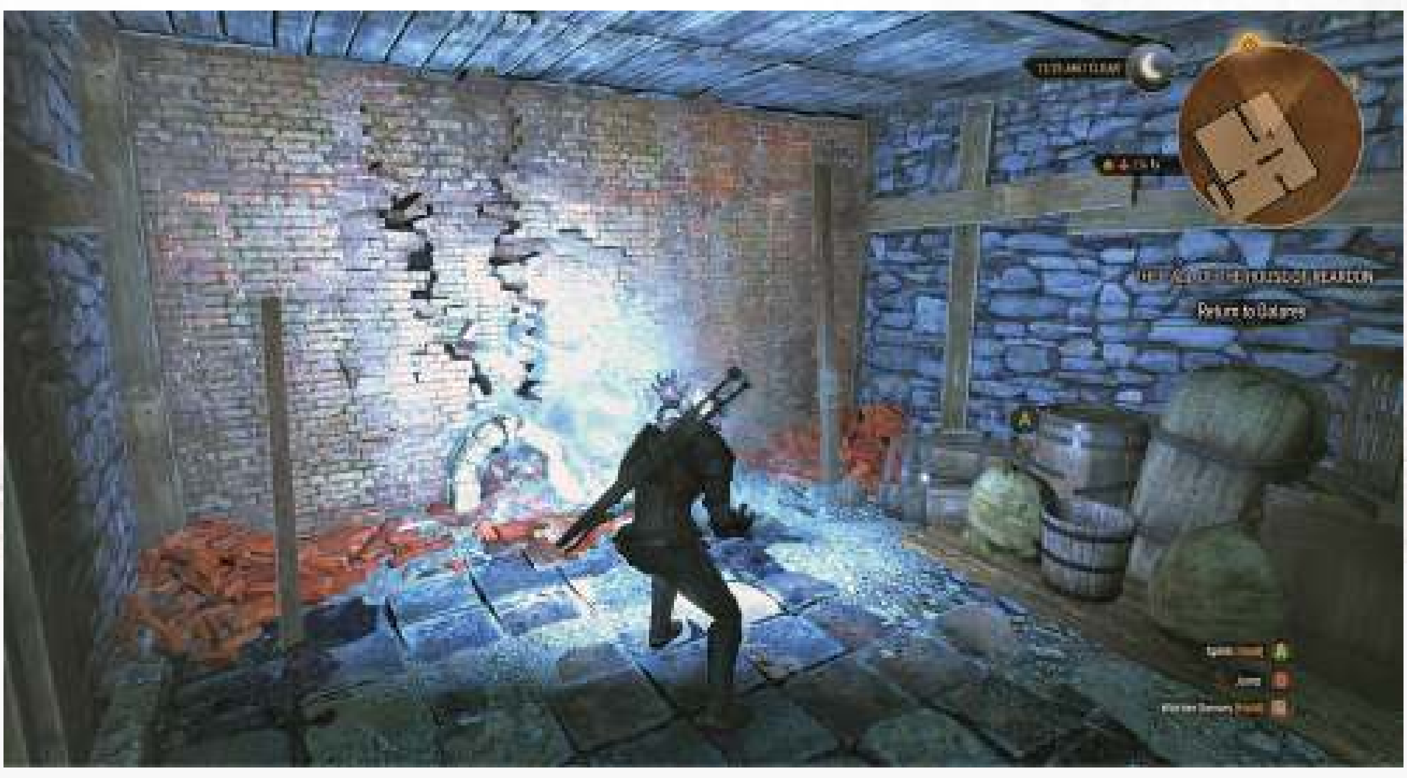
- Wraiths lurk in this manor if Letho is dead in your Witcher 2 save game.
- The manor is strangely empty, but full of traps, if Letho is alive. Either way, you can complete The Fall of the House of Reardon, whether you finish Ghosts of the Past or not.

It doesn't take long to find the new tenants that are haunting this property; a trio of wraiths are to be searched for and dispatched. Look behind, inside, and around all the buildings as you go. Once all of the wraiths are dispatched (expect four), you may wish to make a careful search of the premises.



THE FALL OF THE HOUSE OF REARDON
Kill the monsters in the manor

Optionally, (after completing Ghosts of the Past) locate the cellar steps on the southern exterior of the main barn, and break through the weakened wall in the cellar below using Aard to discover a skeleton. Using Witcher Senses, you confirm it was Dolores' brother Humbert; killed here by her husband Roderick.

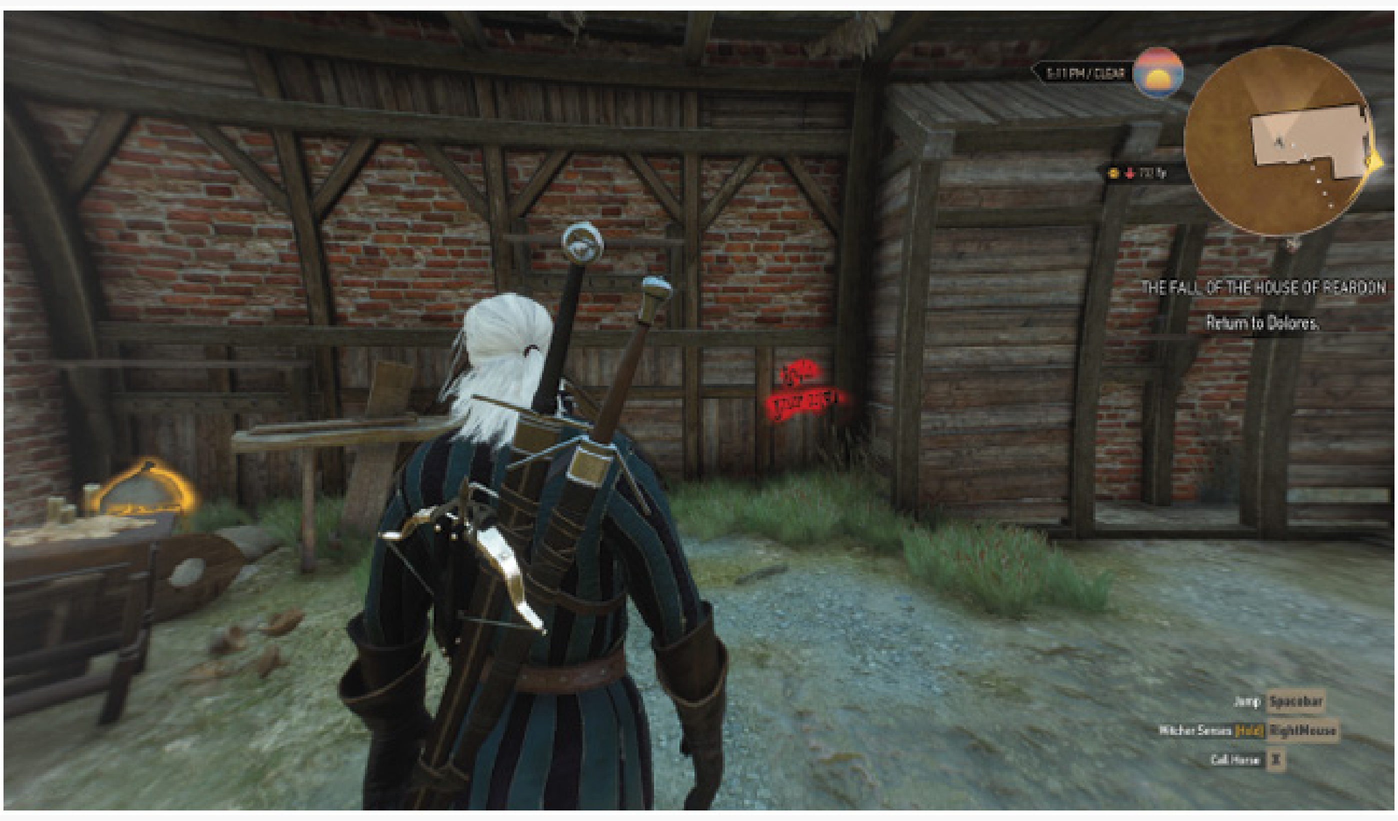


END: REARDON FAMILY SECRETS

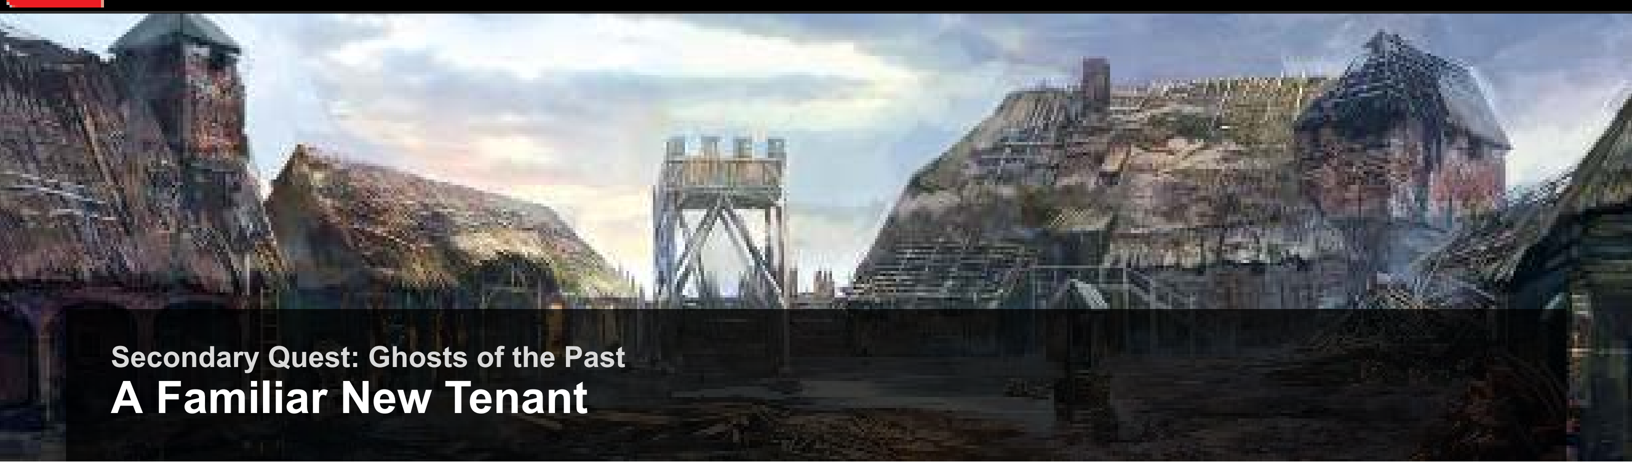
OBJECTIVE:

- Return to Dolores.

Head to the back corner of the barn where you should utilize your Witcher Senses and discover some graffiti with Dolores' name written on the wooden planks of the barn wall (as shown). Check this area for a loose board, which reveals a small lockbox. Remove the contents. These treasures are the payment Dolores expects you to take. She'll tell you as much if you return to her empty-handed. Either way, once you speak with her back in Lindenvale, optionally telling her of her brother's murder, this quest concludes.



ITEM: Reardon Family Treasure



Secondary Quest: Ghosts of the Past

A Familiar New Tenant

SECONDARY QUEST: GHOSTS OF THE PAST

RELATED QUESTS : Secondary Quest: Fall of the House of Reardon, Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen
LOCATIONS : Lindenvale, Reardon Manor, Louis' Hideout, Arnout's Hideout
CHARACTERS : Dolores Reardon, Letho of Gulet, Louis, Arnout Vester ENEMIES : Wraiths, Headhunters (Bandits), Bandits

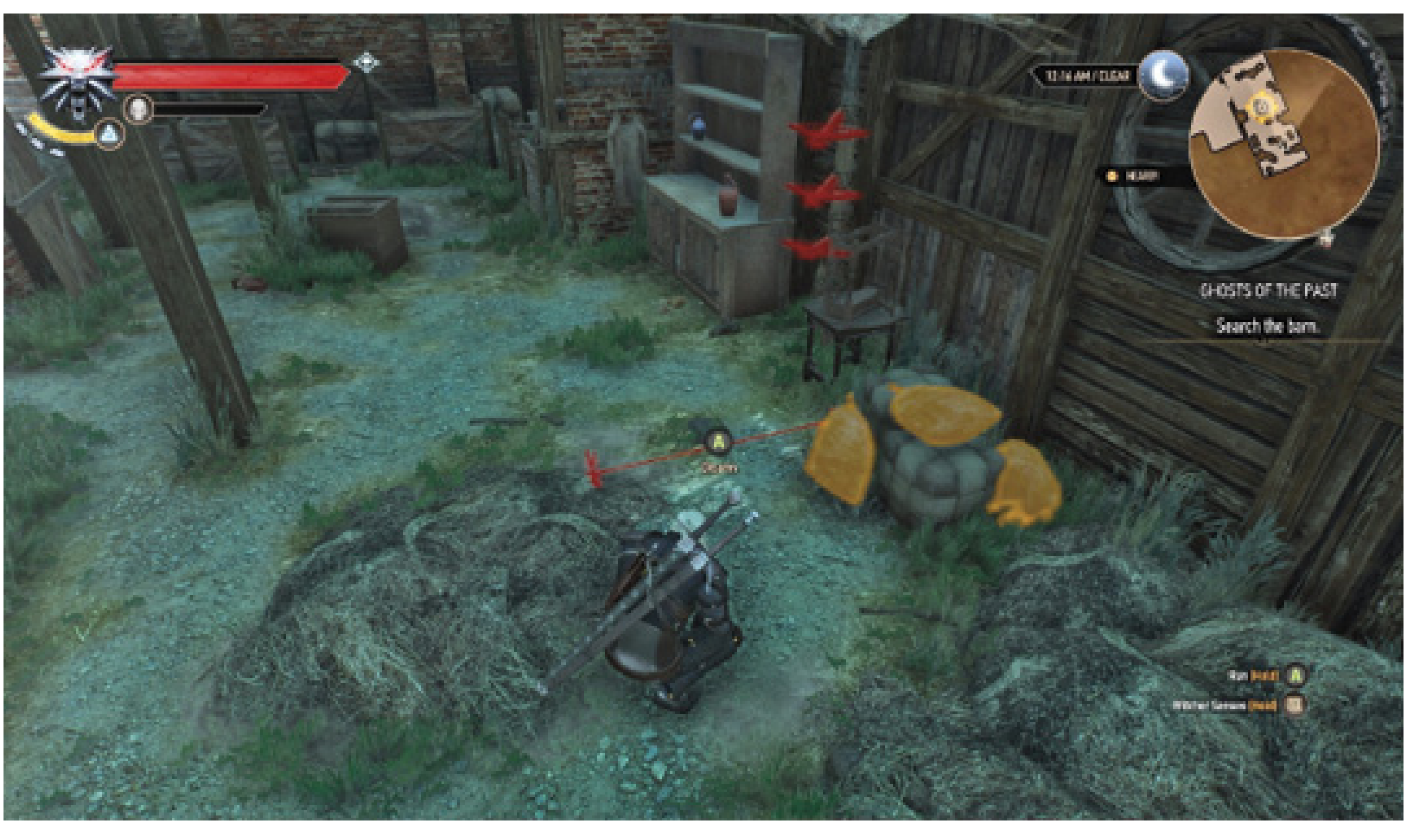
OBJECTIVES:

- Search the farmstead. Search the barn.
- Kill the bounty hunters.

QUEST DECISIONS

- This quest is only available if Letho is alive in your Witcher 2 save game (PC only), or if you answered that Letho is alive during your conversations with General Voorhis at the Palace of Vizima, during the Prologue.

Remember you can complete both this, and Fall of the House of Reardon, in any order you like.



It doesn't take long to discover any monsters have long since fled this place. Instead, the area around the farmstead is riddled with dozens of well-set traps. These include the following:

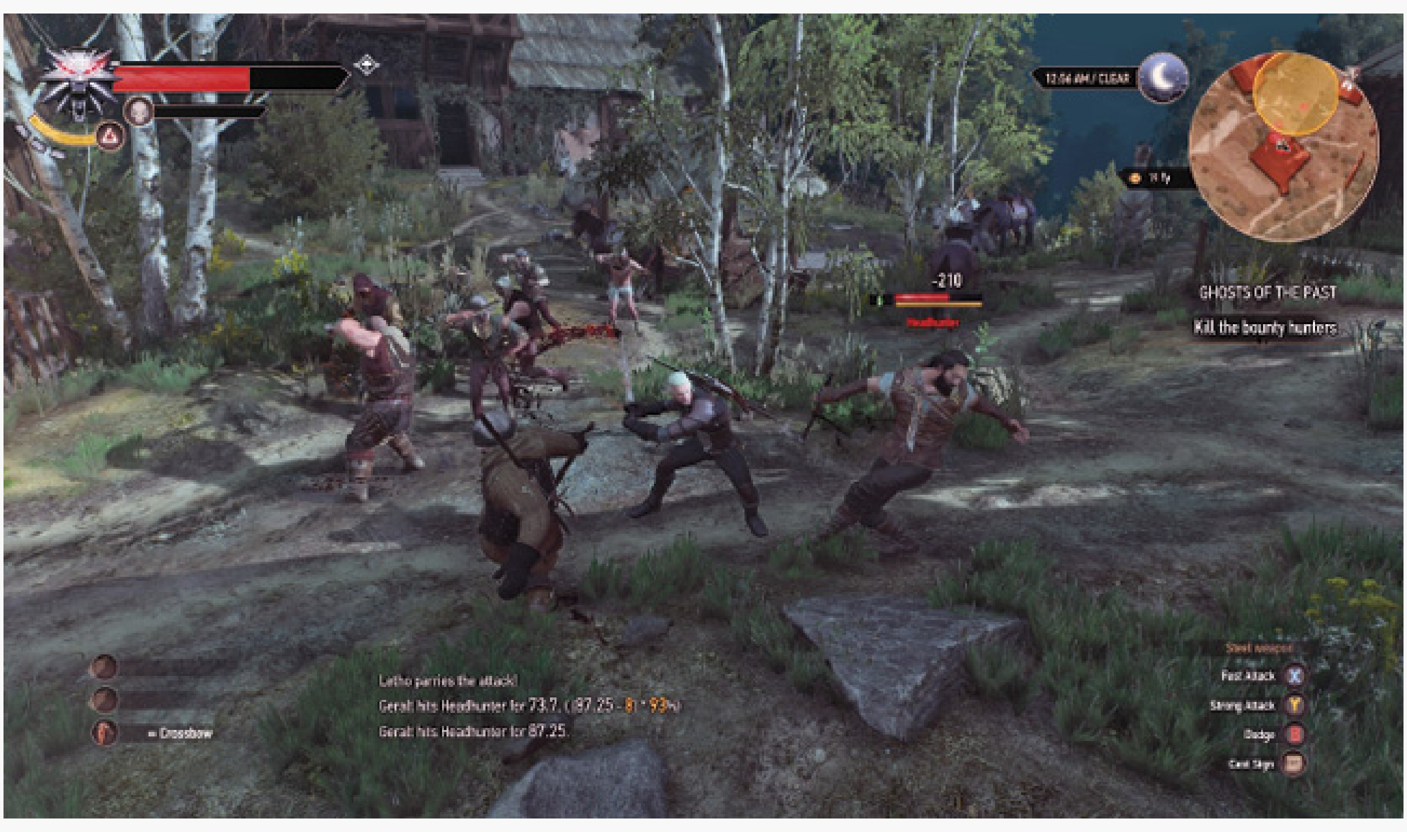
- Trip-Wires—a thin wire at ankle-height, with an explosive charge rigged to set you on fire, or a crossbow ready to puncture you.
- Explosives—a fiery bomb planted into the earth, ready to explode if you step on it.

FANCY FOOTWORK OR CLUMSY CARNAGE

Slow your pace down considerably as you search the manor premises, or you may set yourself on fire, or fall down into a spiked pit and die. Fortunately, the trap locations appear on your minimap while using your Witcher Senses, and all (but the spiked pits) can be disarmed.

Letho of Gulet

It isn't necessary to disarm all the traps; simply head to the barn on the south side of the courtyard, and open it. Drop down and disarm two trip wires, before spotting an attic above you. Ahead is a ladder you can prop up and climb to reach whoever has been setting these deterents.



Letho parries the attack!
Geralt hits Headhunter for 73.7. (87.25 - 8) * 93%)
Geralt hits Headhunter for 87.25.

You may be surprised to discover the culprit behind the trap-laying; the man-mountain named Letho who you've had previous dealings with. Now he's on the run, mentioning an old friend of his named Louis. However, your chin-wagging stops as a noise outside indicates his pursuers (Arnout Vester's men) have found him. You can:

- Choose to let Letho fight the Headhunters himself.
- Choose to drop down into the courtyard and aid Letho in his fight.

Afterwards, Letho asks if you'd like to accompany him to find Louis.

Secondary Quest: For the Advancement of Learning

Quest Conclusion 2: The Advancement of Burning

Keira has a plan to sell her secrets to King Radovid, in return for the ruler sparing her life (as he is currently exterminating all the mages of the lands). Agree to her plan, and leave her to be on her way. You don't hear from her again until Act III: Final Preparations, where you learn she has been burned at the stake at Hierarch Square in Novigrad. During Main Quest: The Great Escape, Triss asks for your help in removing her corpse.

Secondary Quest: For the Advancement of Learning

Quest Conclusion 3: The Advancement of Yearning

Keira tells you to shut up, twirls around, and shows off the bedbugs that bite at night. Bedbugs! This swamp is no place for a member of the Lodge of Sorceresses! Tell her “Go to Kaer Morhen.” You let her know to expect a battle with the Wild Hunt, and that you’ve been listening to her; Keira wants her dignity back. Her performance in the forthcoming battle will show everyone what she is made of. Ask her “See you at Kaer Morhen,” and she agrees, teleporting away as the quest concludes.

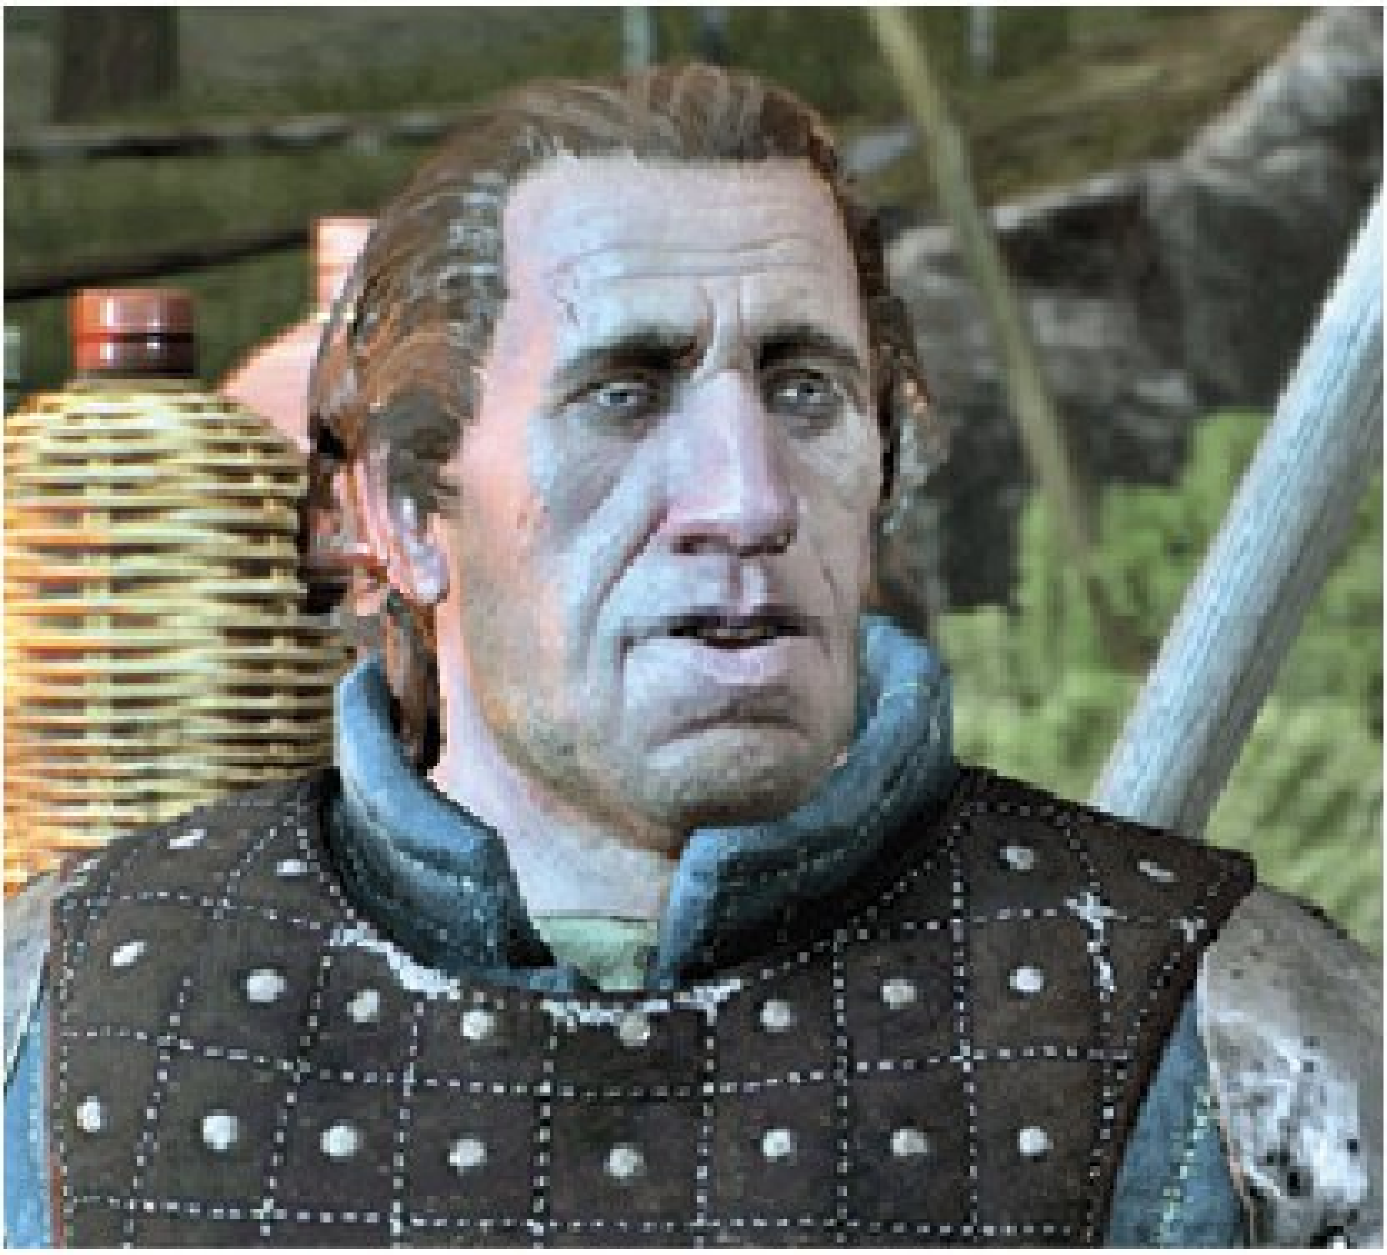
- Keira Metz becomes available to help defend Kaer Morhen during Act II: Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen.

Secondary Quest: Ghosts of the Past

Here Lies Louis

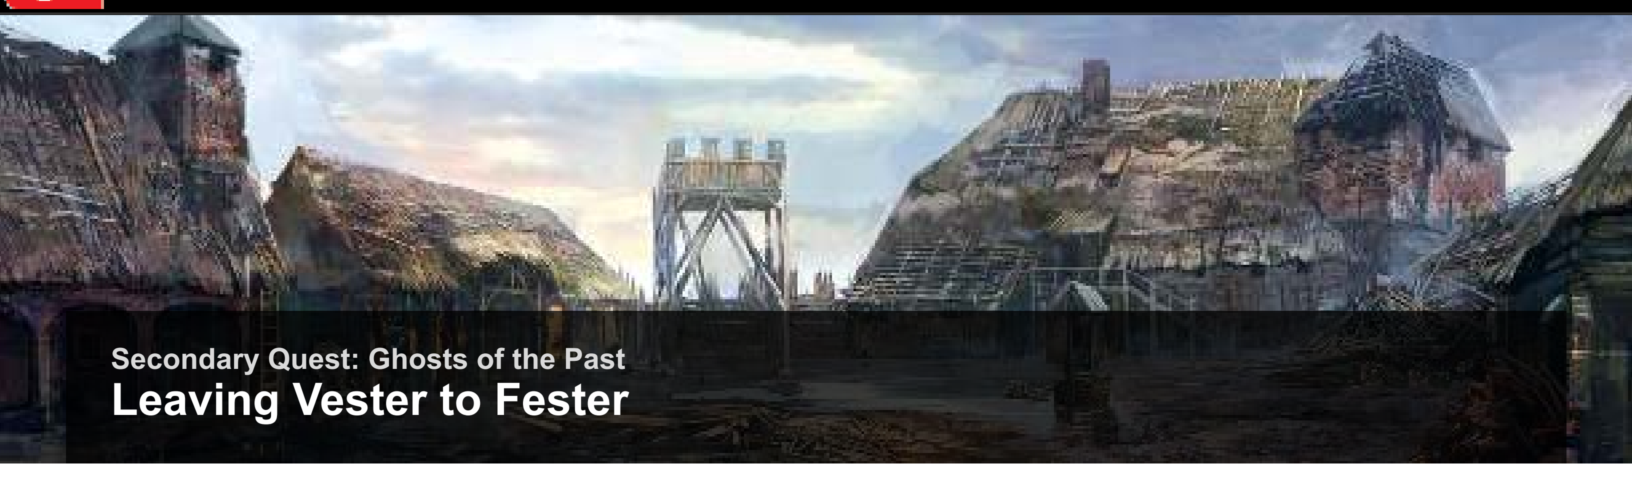
OBJECTIVES:

- Ride with Letho and find Louis.
- Kill the bandits.



Louis

Set off on horseback, following Letho as he explains his predicaments, and the double-crossing curr that you're searching for. It doesn't take long to follow Letho into Louis' camp. Louis is accused of sending Vester's men to the Manor, and the conversation soon degenerates into blind, ugly violence. Slay the five bandits (or watch Letho do it). Afterwards, Louis gurgles the location of Vester himself, before he bleeds out.



Secondary Quest: Ghosts of the Past

Leaving Vester to Fester

OBJECTIVES:

- Ride with Letho to Lindenvale.
- Accompany Letho around Lindenvale.
- Deal with Vester and his men.

Arnout Vester

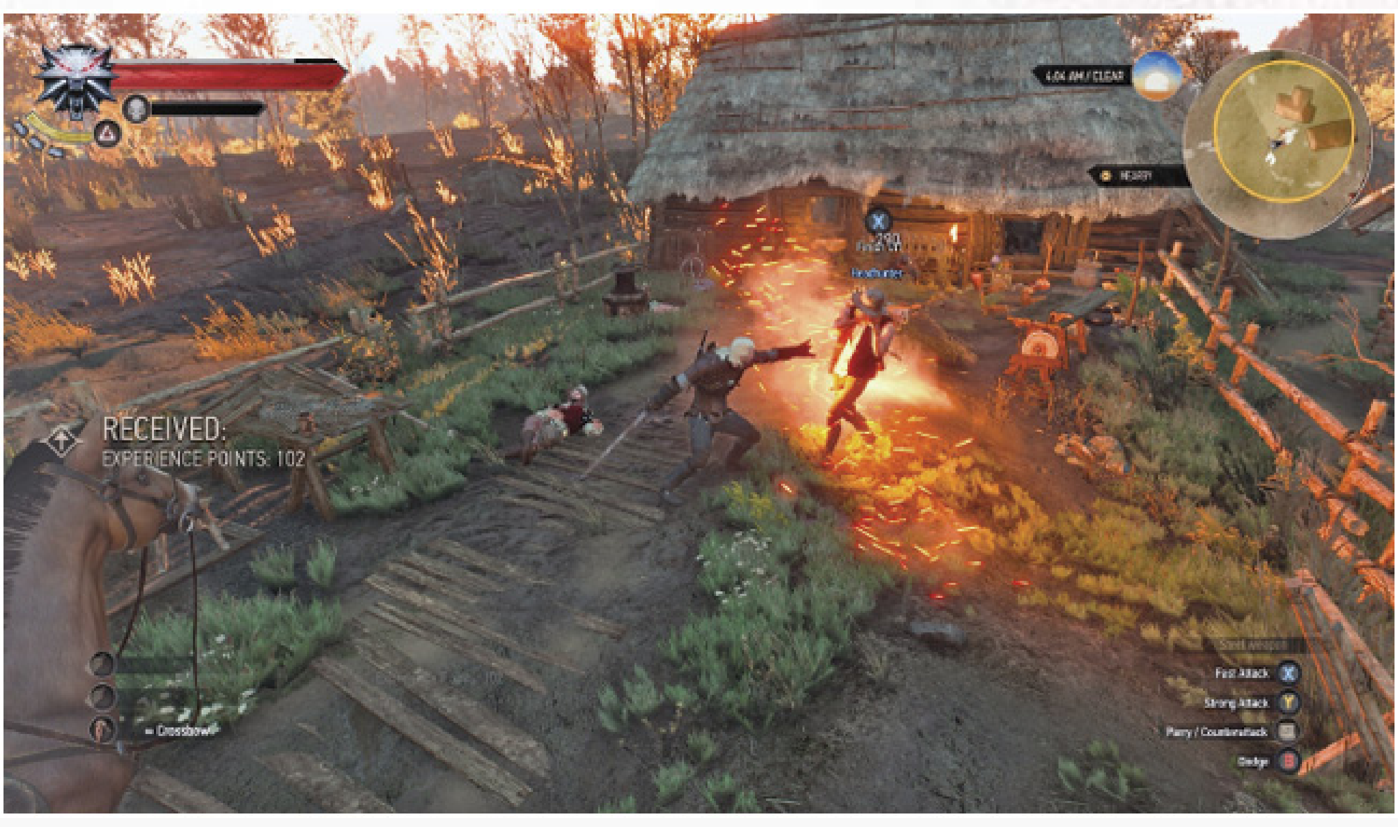
Letho speaks about Vester as you canter down the hill and take the trails to Lindenvale. This guy is a piece of work, and he is part of the Nilfgaardian underworld. As you reach Lindenvale, watch Letho as he rides to some suspicious horses worth more than the village. You inform a young child to tell her parents to flee from here.

- After an impressive explosion, Vester's men flee the barn, while Letho approaches Vester and tells you not to interfere, no matter what. Letho intimidates one of Vester's crew into firing a crossbow into Letho's shoulder, but this only causes Letho's simmering fury to come to the boil. After a brief and bloody melee, Letho lays on the ground, appearing to be mortally wounded, and surrounded by the corpses of Vester's bounty hunters. Vester himself is still alive, flanked by the only two other men still alive.

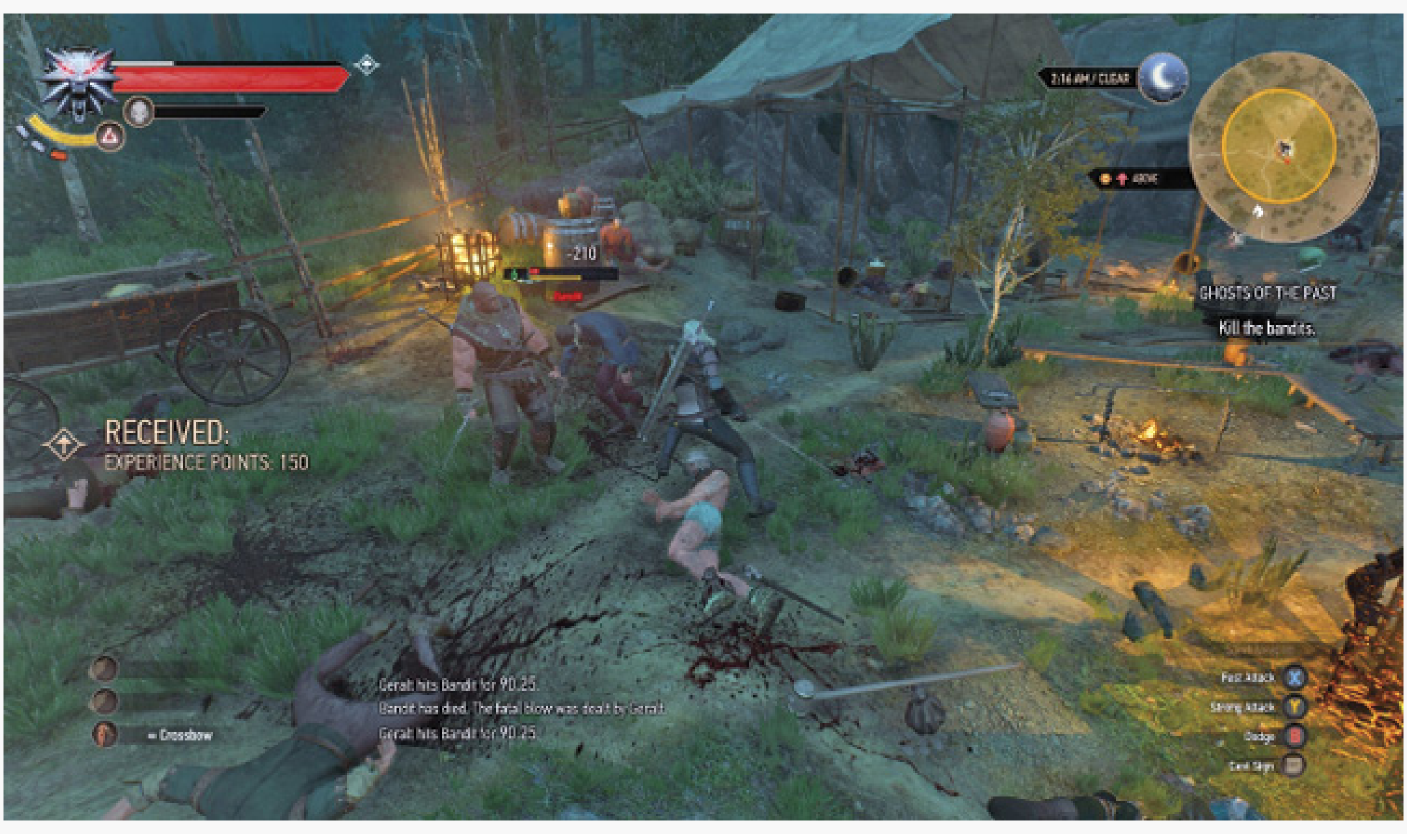
You can:

- Simply walk away, failing the quest. Letho is not available during Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen.
- Permit Vester and his men to leave, but not without first taking Letho's snake amulet as proof they killed the witcher. You must talk Vester out of taking Letho's head; they settle on the amulet.
- Interfere, standing up to Vester and choosing to slaughter him and his men.

If the two latter choices are made, Letho subsequently reveals himself to be poisoned, but still quite alive. Faking his death allowed those hunting him to believe Letho was killed, and the snake amulet was proof of this. Of course, if you stuck your sword into Vester, there's no one to corroborate this plan, which isn't Letho's preference. Either way, you can invite Letho to Kaer Morhen. Despite his past atrocities, he may be extremely handy in the battles to come.



Ghosts of the Past now concludes. Now return to Dolores and finish The Fall of the House Reardon.



Geralt hits Bandit for 90.25.
Bandit has died. The fatal blow was dealt by Geralt.
Geralt hits Bandit for 90.25.

QUEST DECISIONS

This quest becomes available once you complete all of the quests related to Main Quest: Family Matters, and Main Quest: The Ladies of the Wood. Once both these quest lines have concluded, this becomes available. It is purely optional.

One previous decision during Main Quest: Family Matters has a minor effect on this quest:

- If you chose to visit Tamara in Oxenfurt, there are some different conversations between her and the Baron during this quest.

One previous decision during Main Quest: The Ladies of the Wood has a major effect on this quest:

- If you elected to kill the tree spirit, the village of Downwarren is intact, and both Anna and the Baron's fate play out differently (Path 1).
- If you elected to work with the tree spirit, the village Downwarren is destroyed, and both Anna and the Baron's fate plays out differently (Path 2).

Secondary Quest: Return to Crookback Bog

Paths 1 and 2: Together, But Not Reunited

QUEST UPDATED!
RETURN TO CROOKBACK BOG

Set off in a roughly southerly direction down the hill, and into the misty marshland. With the Baron by your side, you may wish to fight small bands of drowners, rotfiends, and water hags on your own, or with the Baron's men aiding you. Or, you can simply flee past these adversaries, staying on the firmer ground, and heading straight for the relative safety of Crookback Bog Orphan's Village. As you arrive, a group of witch hunters—lead by Graden, who recognizes you if you met him in Oxenfurt during Main Quest: Family Matters—is finishing off a group of degenerate drowners. You can either help them or watch.

Secondary Quest: Return to Crookback Bog

Path 1: Decimated Downwarren

Enter the marshes and wade your way to the hilly ground and decimated village of Downwarren. The Baron is speaking to the ealdorman about this razed hamlet; apparently a jet black mare with red steaming eyes slaughtered the ealdorman's kinsfolk. You explain it was the spirit of the forest that you freed. The Baron isn't concerned about these peasants, but the ealdorman pipes up that a band of witch hunters passed through; with some lass leading them, and asking after her mother. PATH 1: CONVALESCING IN THE BLUE MOUNTAINS

▶ The insane Anna is gathered up by the Baron, who vows to take her beyond the Blue Mountains, and heal her no matter what it takes. Tamara begrudgingly agrees, and the family part ways. The quest (and your dealings with the Baron) now conclude.

PATH 2: CURSED IN THE CROOKBACK BOG

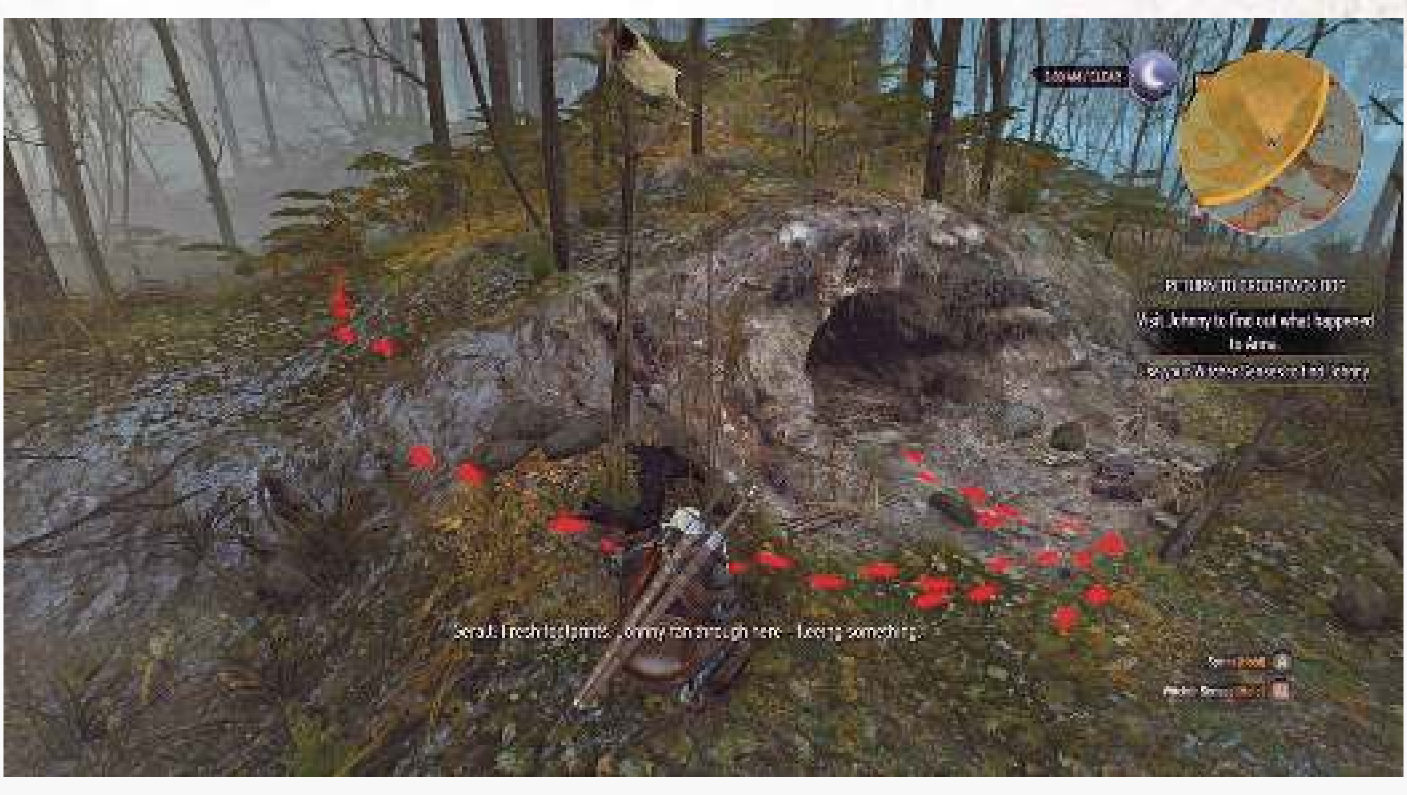
OBJECTIVES:

- Visit Johnny to find out what happened to Anna.
- Use your Witcher Senses to find Johnny.
- Tell the others what happened to Anna.

▶ The monstrous Anna has been cursed. After Tamara pleads with you to help, you mention Johnny the Godling might have an answer as to what happened. Head northeast into the swamp, clearing Johnny's burrow of any drowners and a water hag, and inspect the lair.

Johnny the Godling

Johnny is missing. Use your Witcher Senses to uncover his footprints. Follow the footprint trail east and a little southeast, to a collection of planks and posts masquerading as a den. Johnny is hiding in there. When you question him about Anna, he explains he was with her when the curse was cast, as punishment for letting the children escape. Weavess took a lock of Anna's hair, descended into the cellar, and after a while Anna started to transform into her current form. Johnny tried to help, but the crones returned, and he had to flee.



RETURN TO CROOKBACK BOG

Use your Witcher Senses to find Johnny.
Geralt: Fresh footprints. Johnny ran through here - fleeing something.

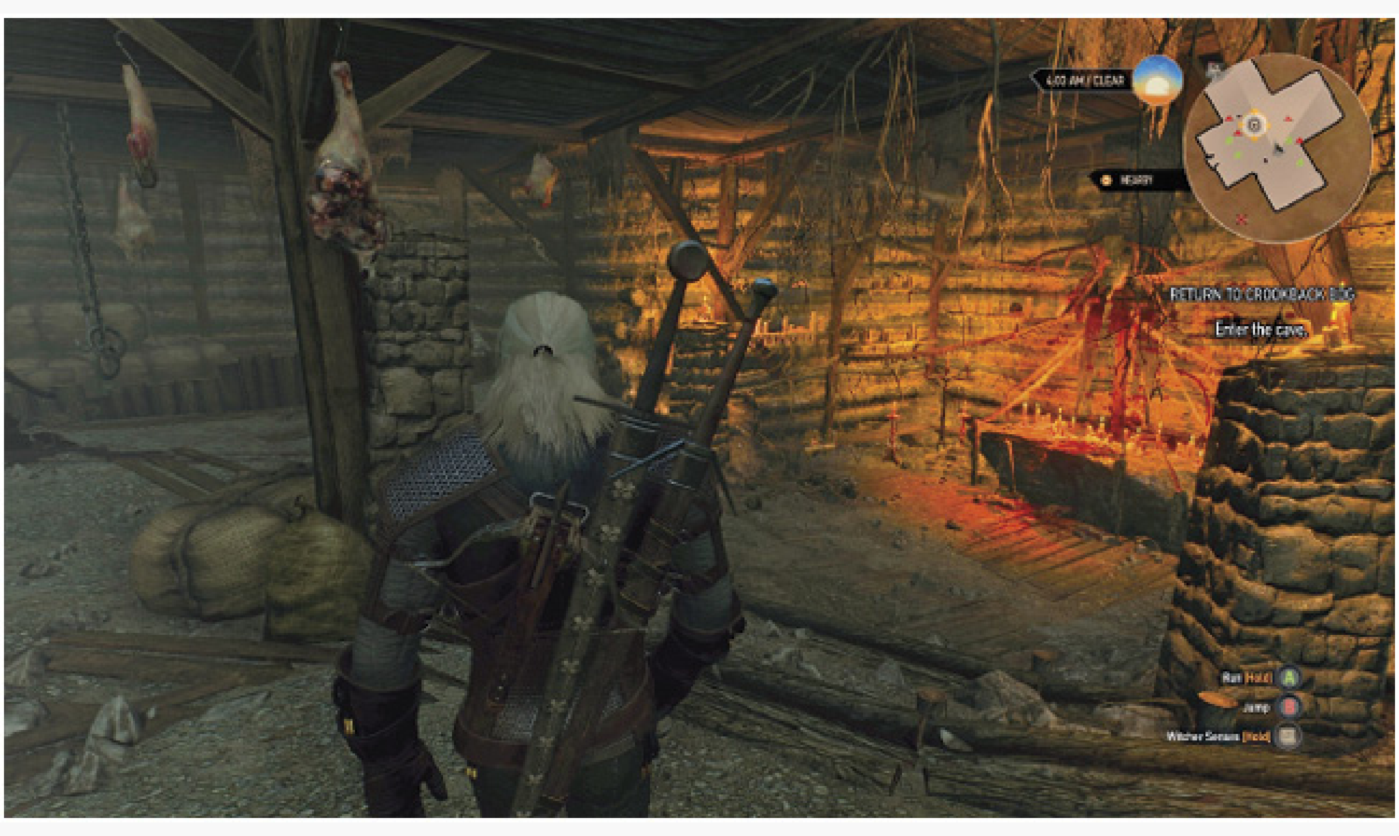
OBJECTIVES:

- Find the door to the hidden room.
- Enter the cave.
- Talk to the the baron.

Head directly back to the orphan village, and inform everyone. Graden orders the crones' hut opened. Head inside, look to your right for a trapdoor, and descend into the cellar. The earthern cave room is dominated by a huge altar, used in black magic rituals. Graden is familiar with such matters, and notes there are a number of dolls, woven in with Anna's hair and a keepsake. Only one of the dolls symbolizes Anna, and is the key to removing the curse. Inspect each one carefully:

- Doll with the red bead—Anna wears this around her neck, as do half the women from Novigrad to Vengerberg.
- Doll with the bird feathers—this one reminds you of Philippa Eilhart.
- Doll with the violet hollyhock bloom—the Baron told you this was Anna's favorite flower.
- Doll with the human ear—it probably belonged to a peasant. Anna still has both ears intact (just not what's between them).

Now pick the one you think represented Anna. It is the one with the violet hollyhock bloom.



ITEM: Quest Item: Crones' Doll

▶ Choose the correct doll, and there is a scream from outside. Anna has returned to her human form, but alas, she is dying. Nothing can be done.

▶ Choose the incorrect doll, and there is a scream from outside. Anna has returned to her human form, but is burning alive. The Strenger family are suitably furious, but clutch to their grief over a violent outburst towards you.

The family is torn apart. A distraught Tamara cannot forgive her father, and leaves for Novigrad with Graden. A shocked Baron tells you to head to Crow's Perch for your pay. When you reach the castle, you see that the Baron has ended his days hanging from a noose. You receive your reward from the sergeant as this quest concludes.

ENEMIES : Thieves, Drowners, Witch Hunters

QUESTING DECISIONS

Even though you are able to commence this Main Quest, which allows you to thoroughly explore Novigrad, you are free to start, stop, or go back to any other part of the Main Quest in any of the other major land masses of this realm. Your choices are as follows:

This Quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Imperial Audience concludes.

- Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection, and commence the Main Quests across No Man's Land (Velen).
- Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad, and commence the Main Quests across Novigrad (this quest).
- Main Quest: The King is Dead—Long Live the King, and commence the Main Quests across Skellige.

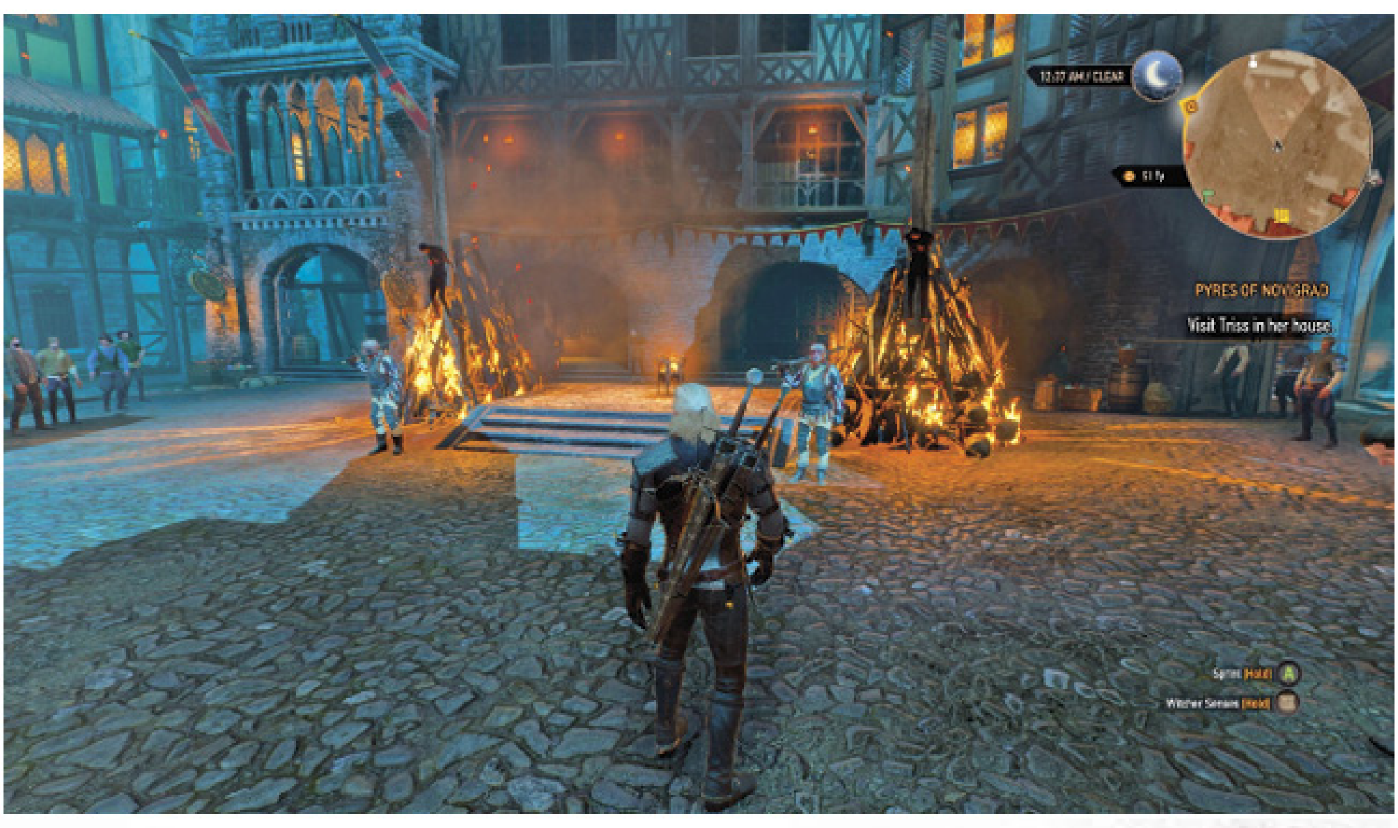
OBJECTIVE:

- Visit Triss in her house.
- Nearest Signpost: Hierarch Square.

CARTOGRAPHICAL EVIDENCE

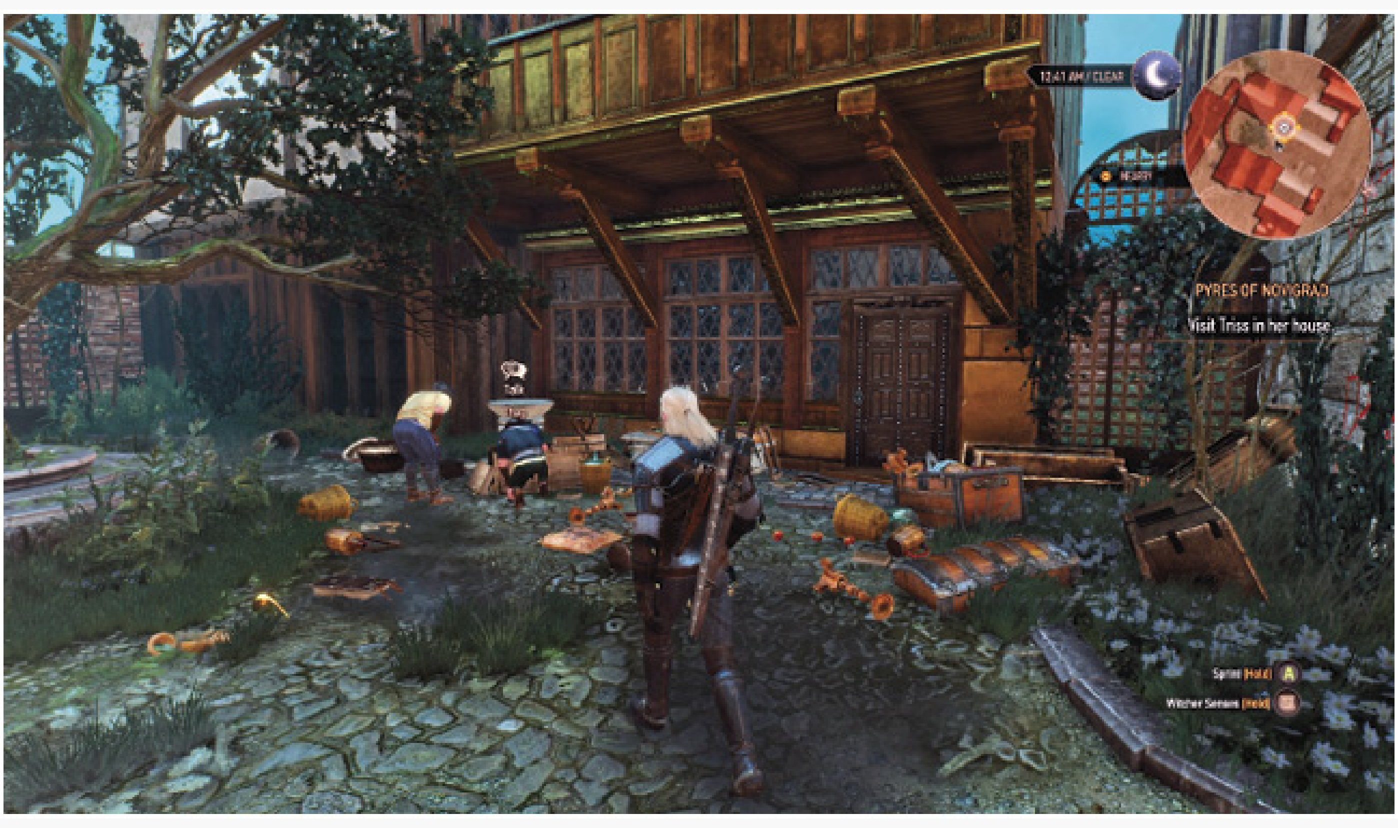
You are about to undertake a series of quests within the sprawling streets of this city-fortress. It would therefore be wise to consult this guide's Atlas to Novigrad for further information on the areas of this place.

Enter Novigrad via any of the gates, and head into the district known as Glory Lane. Work your way through the cobblestone streets to Hierarch Square, where the Captain of the Temple Guard—a callous man named Menge—burns a sorceress and a doppler (shapeshifter) at the stake, in the name of the Eternal Fire. Watch the spectacle if you wish, before heading to Triss' last known whereabouts.



Two looters are ransacking the belongings in the courtyard of the Ubbizi Townhouse, where Triss was staying. You're not here for loot (or a fight) so steer the conversation into asking who might know of where the sorceress of this residence is. They agree that Putrid Grove—where thieves and beggars hang out—is your best bet; it's where the King of Beggars resides, and somewhere not even Menge would dare venture.

Captain Menge



Menge himself—and his Temple Guard—decide to take this opportunity to arrive, cart away the two looters, and Menge pries you for information on the "bitch sorceress" who lives here. Then he departs, keeping an eye on you. Optionally enter the townhouse, which has been ransacked, using your Witcher Senses to uncover some amulets emanating magic, some of Triss' clothing, and a flower that has sentimental value for the both of you.

ITEM: Quest Item: Rose of Remembrance

Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad

Chatting or Tracking

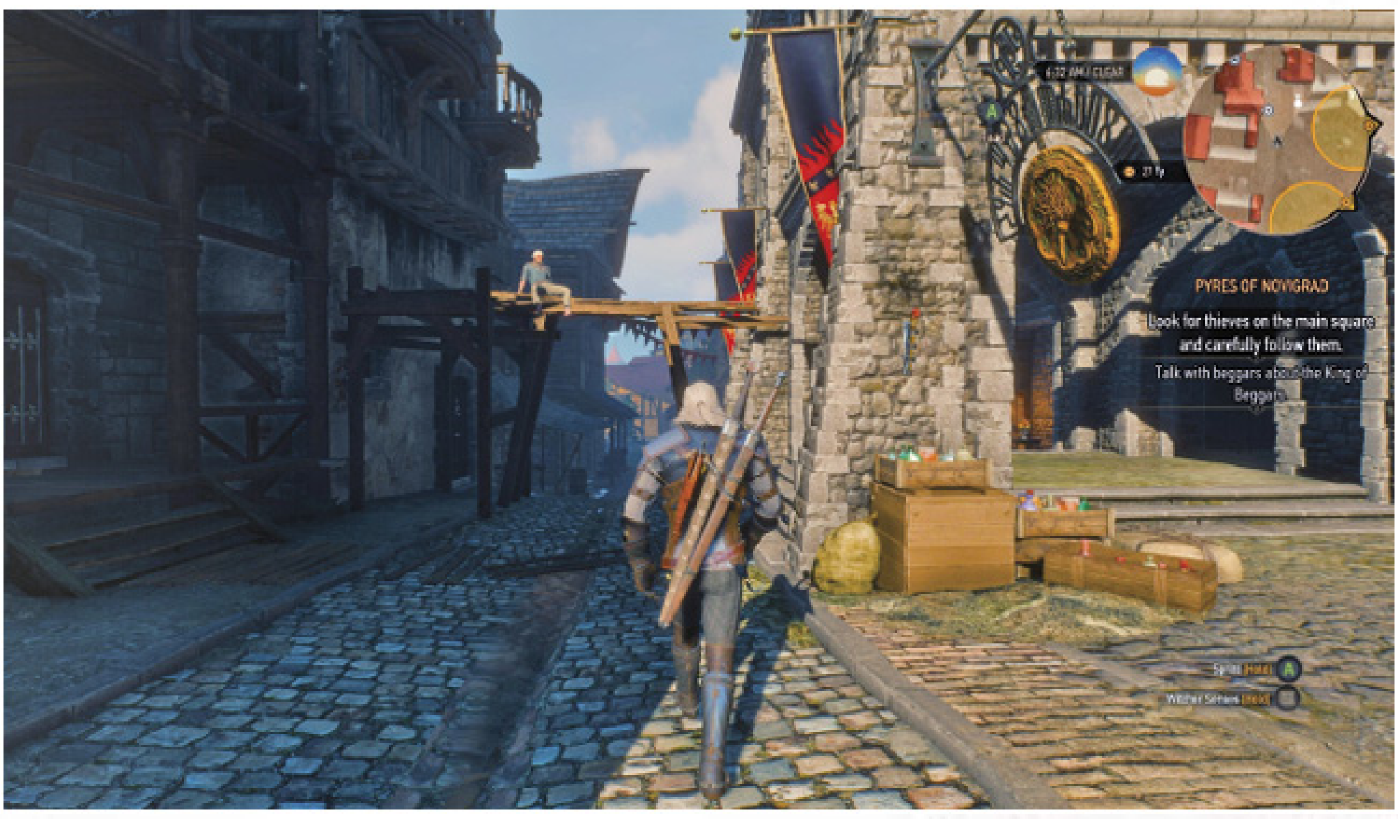
OBJECTIVES:

- Talk with beggars about the King of Beggars.
- Look for thieves on the main square and carefully follow them.

Look to your minimap as you walk back into the town square, and find stationary targets (beggars and thieves), the latter of which become moving targets (thieves) once a crime is committed. One of the latter has already stolen a purse from a bystander, and has disappeared into the crowds. Watch from a safe distance for another pickpocket crime to be committed, and follow the thief. Or, feel free to ask around, finding a number of beggars that offer a variety of knowledge about Novigrad; though not much of it is useful to your current objective.

CHATTING: THE OLD SOW'S FARROWED PIGLETS

Head west from your starting location, finding a beggar such as the one perched on the wooden scaffolding at one of the corners of the square (as shown). Start a conversation—you may need to leave and come back again or choose another beggar—but always choose the first speech option; don't mention Putrid Grove yourself. Eventually, you and the beggar brings up the location on your own. He describes where Putrid Grove is (in Lacehalls, and neither putrid, nor a grove), and a possible passphrase to use ("the old sow's farrowed piglets") when speaking with the sentry. Simply run to this location (south, and across the bridge), to a large and sturdy door. Your quest updates.



PYRES OF NOVIGRAD

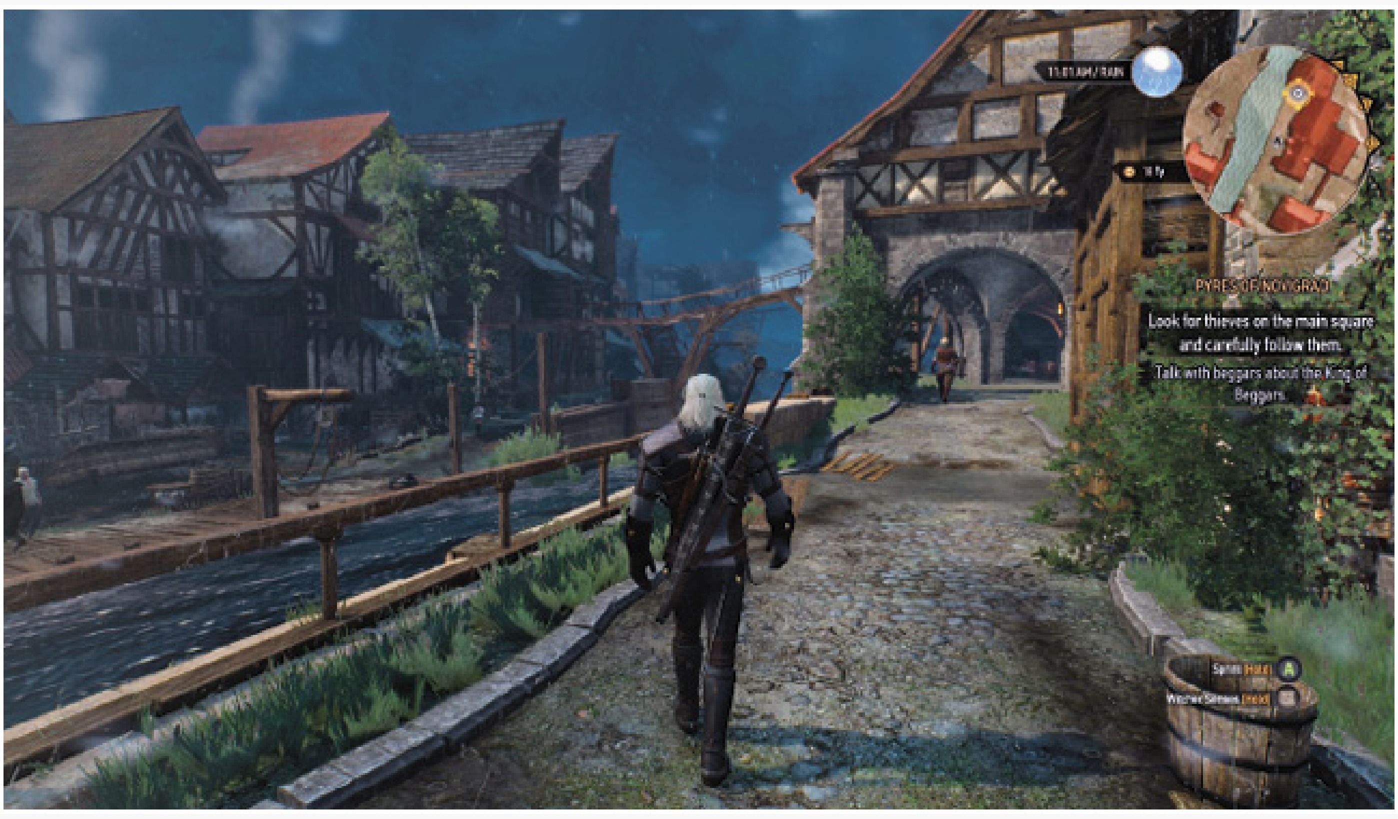
TRACKING: THE DEFT THIEF'S NIMBLE DIGITS

Begin to follow the thief you saw as you emerged from the townhouse courtyard. Or, if you spook a thief, or wish to speak to a beggar or two beforehand, simply remain in the square until a thief makes a pickpocket, and begins to walk. With keen eyes and minimap watching, you'll soon be able to follow one of these ne'er-do-wells. Trail your thief as he heads east, and turns right (south), into an open-air theater (the Butcher's Yard Theater). Here, you're waylaid by a beggar attempting to fleece you of your crowns. He holds no information on the King of Beggars, so politely decline this shakedown, follow the thief east down the alley with the washing and straw hut, and drop down to the lower street. At this point, the thief makes a switch; giving his loot to a second pickpocket.



PYRES OF NOVIGRAD
Look for thieves on the main square and carefully follow them.
Talk with beggars about the King of Beggars.

- One is a decoy; following him (across the bridge to the south) leads to a short and rough-and-tumble ambush, where you must fistfight the foes that spotted you tailing one of their own. The leader of these thugs, once you knock everyone down, mentions a possible passphrase to use to enter Putrid Grove ("the old sow's farrowed piglets").
- Or, you can follow the fellow with the actual loot, who heads along the side of the canal, toward the fishmarket.

At this point your quest updates:

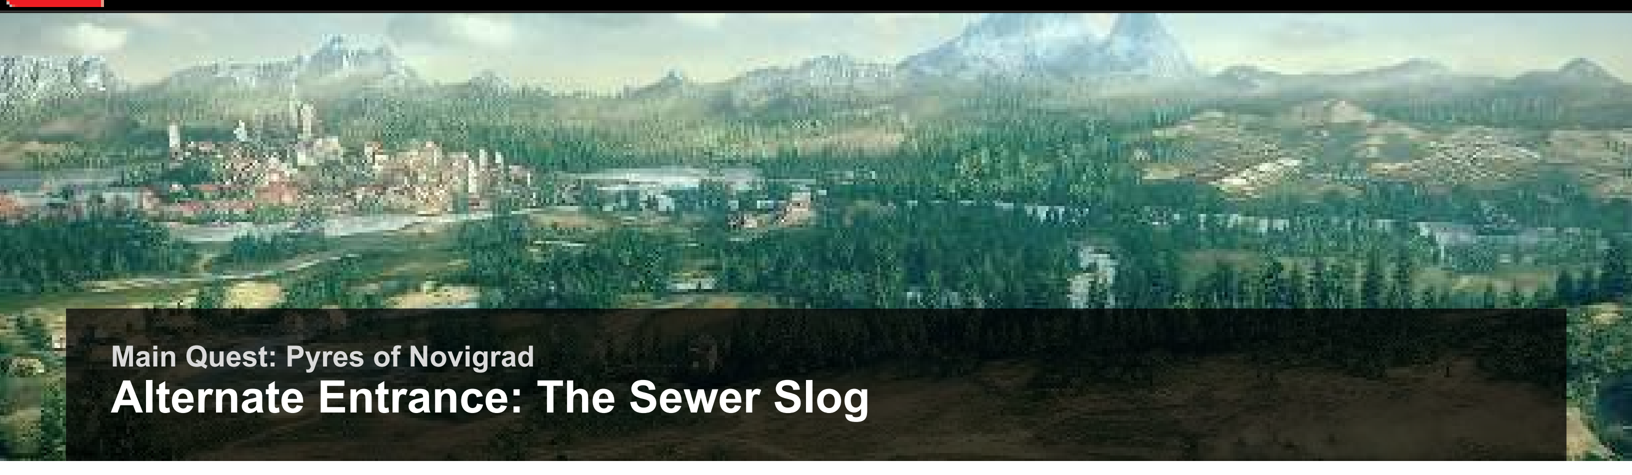
OBJECTIVE:

- Find the King of Beggars' hideout.

Secondary Quest: Return to Crookback Bog

Path 2: Disquisition in Downwarren

Enter the marshes and wade your way to the hilly ground and village of Downwarren. The Baron is already interrogating the ealdorman about a band of witch hunters that recently passed through, with some lady leading them, and demanding knowledge of her mother's whereabouts. You must meet up with them at once; there's little time to lose!



Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad

Alternate Entrance: The Sewer Slog

If none of these options to enter Putrid Grove appeals, or you lose your thief, there is a third method of entering Putrid Grove. Head outside the city walls, to the Glory Gate, and find the sewer entrance under this structure (see picture). Enter the sewers with your finest drowner-slaying equipment at the ready, since a few of these creatures are lurking down here. Use your Witcher Senses (if you wish) to locate a corpse, looting it for a key.

Kluhg

Triss explains her recent predicaments as you retrieve your weapons from the sentry, and tell her of your search for Ciri. Follow Triss northeastward, into a store. She asks the proprietor (Kluhg) for the ingredients she ordered. Unfortunately, they lie on a canal bed, thanks to Temple Guards increasing their presence. Answer how you wish before Kluhg escapes the incoming guards, and you do the same via a trapdoor into the sewers.

The location of Putrid Grove appears on your minimap. You can ignore any other beggars or thievery, until you reach the door with the hatch. Explain your predicament (you're a freak), and you have a number of options to gain access:

- (Chatting only) When asked for a passphrase, be sure to use the one the beggar told you. You're let in. Otherwise, you'll need other plans of infiltration (see below).
- (Chatting or Tracking: 50 Crowns) Delve into your pockets, and produce coin for the sentry.

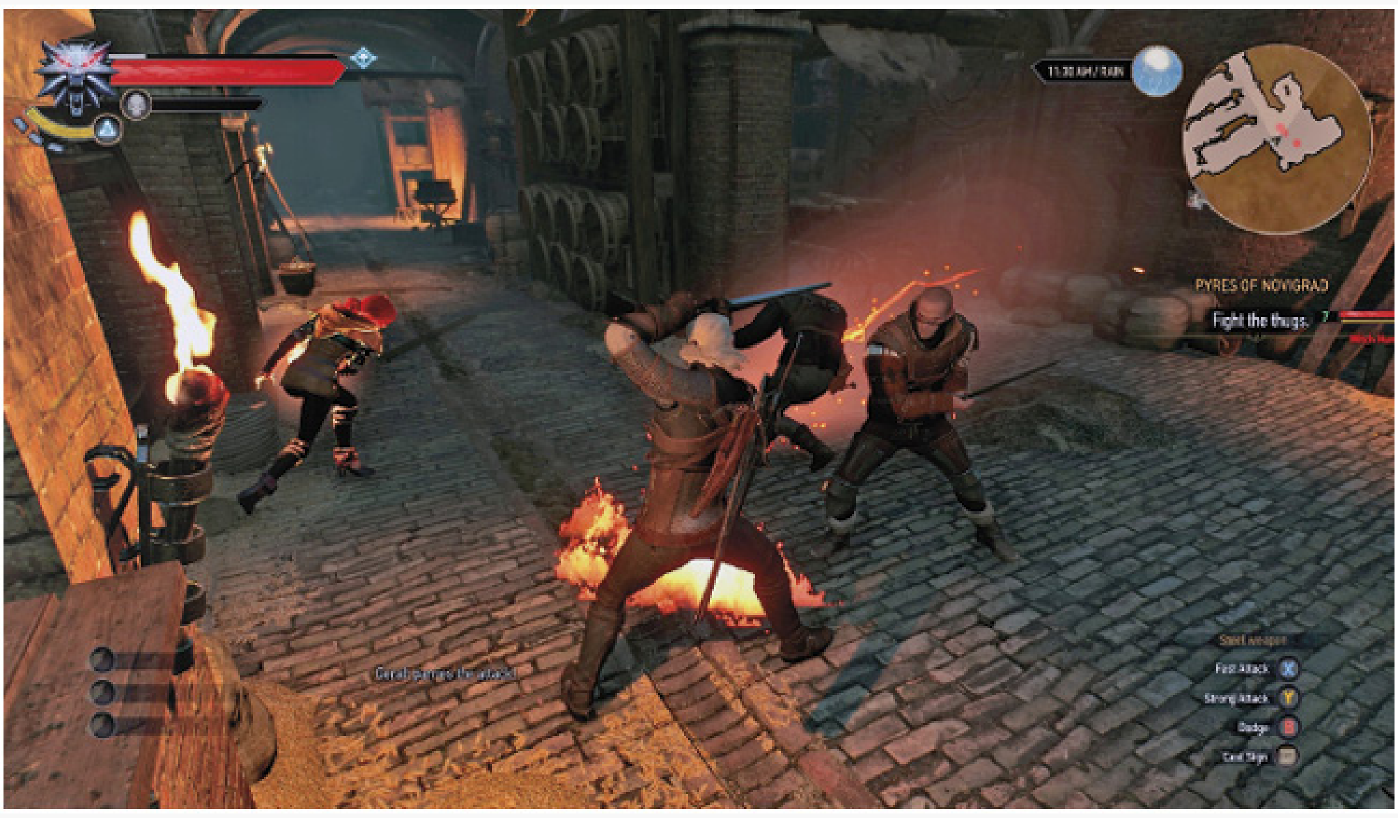
OBJECTIVES:

- Place rat traps around the warehouse—use your Witcher Senses to guide you (3).
- Tell Triss you've completed your task.
- Talk to Triss after she activates the spell.
- Fight the thugs.
- Leave the warehouse.

Triss has informed Brandon of her powers as a sorceress, which makes her ideal to rid Brandon's warehouse of his rodent infestation problem. During your conversation, it's simply good business to request you're paid in advance. Triss mentions some crystals, which are to be placed around the granary where evidence of rats is found. Find three such locations to set your crystal traps. Use your Witcher Senses and look for low, small archways and channels, or dead rats.

Brandon

Find Triss and talk to her. Make your conversations pleasant or distant, depending on how you feel about her. She asks about Yennefer (answer how you wish), before your conversation is interrupted by Brandon, and three witch hunters. They are here to rid Novigrad of your kind. Slay these thugs. Outside, Brandon professes to have been forced into revealing your location. You show mercy, but fleece the fool for double the crowns he was paying Triss.



Triss has a lead regarding an oneiromancer in town (by the name of Corinne Tilly) who may have powers to see where Ciri is. Triss leaves your company, telling you to visit her in the Bits (near the fish market). Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming now begins.

Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming

The Dreams in the Witch House

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: NOVIGRAD DREAMING

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad, Main Quest: Broken Flowers
LOCATIONS : Novigrad; Rudolf de Jonkheer's House, The Golden Sturgeon CHARACTERS : Rudolf de Jonkheer, Corrine Tilly, Sarah
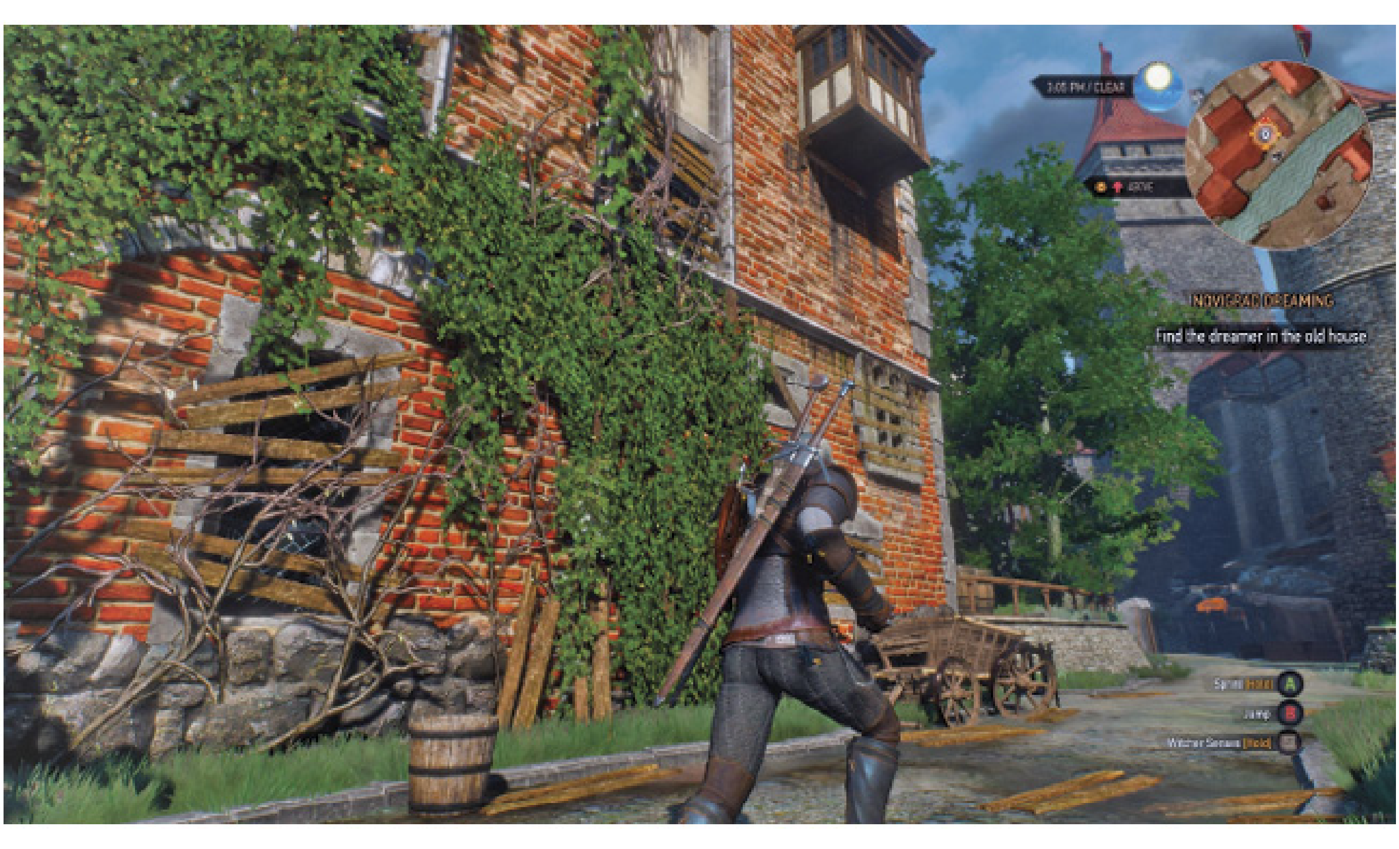
ENEMIES : None

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the dreamer in the old house.

Rudolf de Jonkheer

You're attempting to find Triss' contact—Corrine Tilly—who lives in rented accommodation a short dash eastward along the canal from the Brandon Granary. Turn left at the old cart, bound up the stone steps, and stop for a chat with Rudolf de Jonkheer. He is a fancy man and the owner of the residence. This dandy confirms Corrine is inside the house, but that the building has been plagued by ghostly activities—furniture moving, giggling in the night, and an unpleasant present in the parlor. Noticing your swords, he lets you in when you ask him.

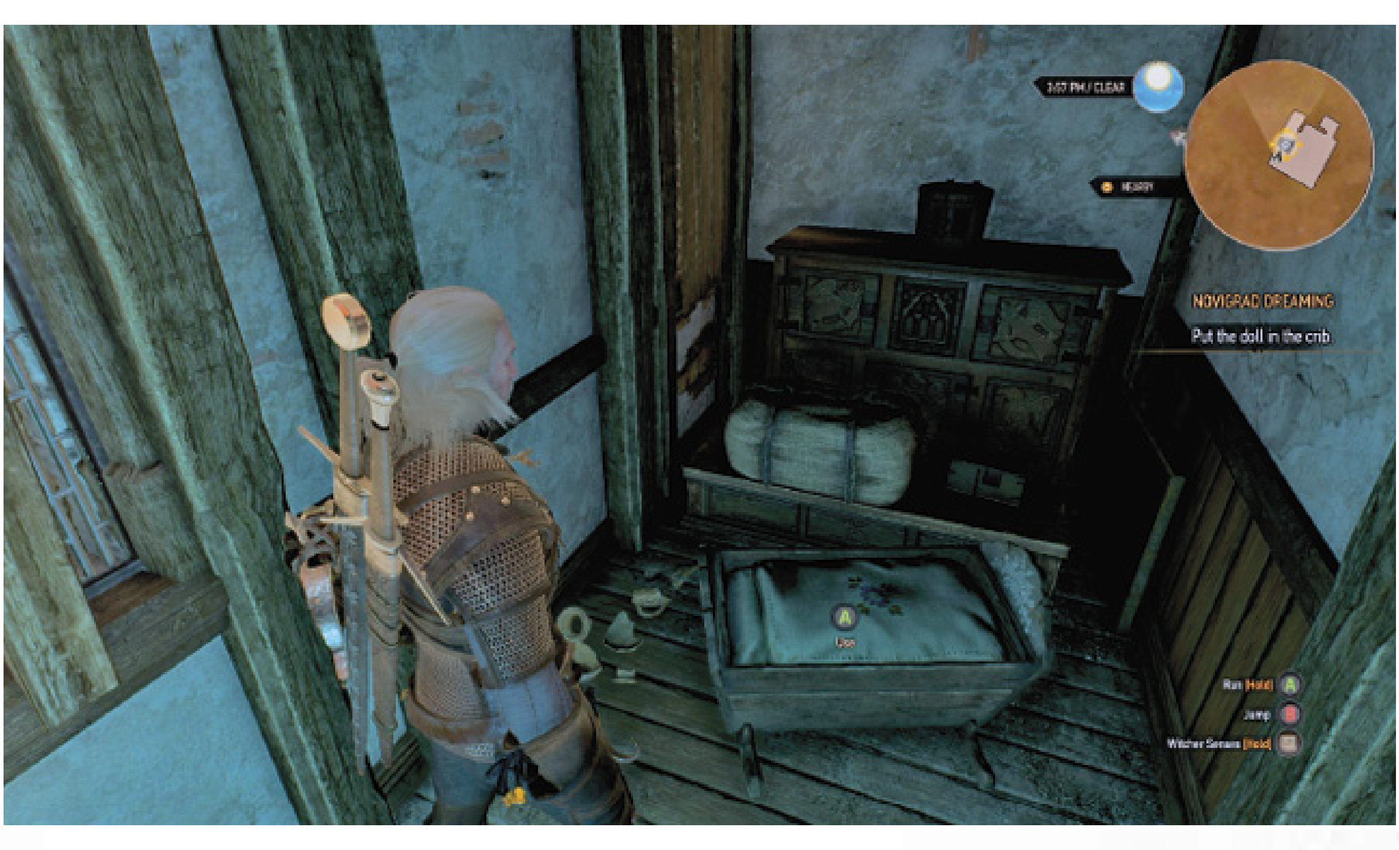


Listen for sounds of Corrine coming from upstairs. Head up there just in time to she an ashen-grey child scamper away, while Corrine lies on the bed, seemingly unable to be woken. She mumbles something about the attic.

OBJECTIVES:

- Search the attic.
- Take the doll.
- Put the doll in the crib.

Ascend to the musty attic via the ladder while Corrine scolds an invisible child from inside her own nightmare. Use Aard to break open the planks blocking an entrance to a storage room, where two items lie. Pick them both up, then read the note. You realize the ashen-skinned child wants her dolly in the crib. Return to Corrine's bedroom, step into a small side chamber off this room, and deposit the doll into the crib. A moment later, a loud bang startles you.



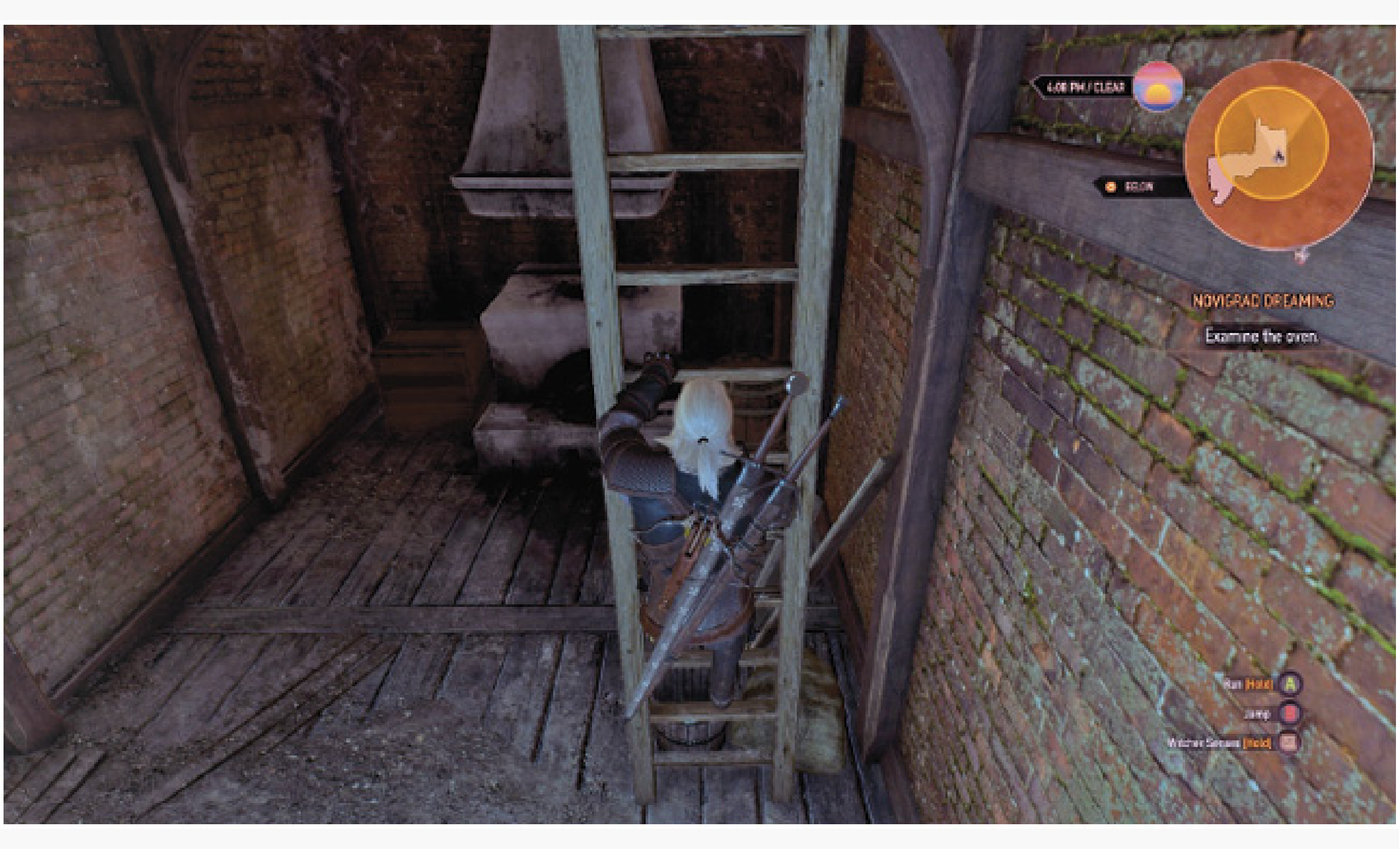
ITEM: Quest Items: Drawing of a Crib, Rag Doll

OBJECTIVES:

- Find out why the door slammed shut.
- Examine the oven.

Sarah the Godling

The door behind you slammed shut. Pinned to it is another child's drawing; this one of an oven and a blackened grate. Where did you see an oven? Head downstairs, and open the trapdoor to the cellar from the room adjacent to the entrance. At the bottom of the ladder is an oven. Approach it, and your "ghost" pokes her head out; a Godling child named Sarah.



Speak with Sarah, convincing her that tormenting Corrine isn't an agreeable act, and when she starts a little strop when you ask her to leave, you have an important choice to make. You can:

- Tell her "let's make a deal" and agree to let her stay in the house. Sarah is delighted, and tells you she'll wake Corrine up immediately.
- Tell her "guess I'll have to throw you out, then" and threaten to evict her with a whiff of Burdock if she doesn't end her mischevious ways. If you have Burdock (ingredient) on your person, you can use it. If you don't, you need to find a herb merchant (such as Kluhg, who you met earlier), as it cannot be picked in the wilds. Place the Burdock in the oven, and burn it: Sarah snaps Corrine out of her stupor, but doesn't like you.

SHOULD SARAH STAY OR GO?

You've made your intentions clear to Sarah, but the decision is irreversibly made once you exit the house, and speak to Rudolf (see below). This choice influences a conversation during Main Quest: Bald Mountain.

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to the dreamer.

Corrine Tilly has woken from her nightmare. You explain how she was caught in a Godling's curse, and she's thankful you woke her. After clearing her head at the Golden Sturgeon (where she rents a room), she'll be happy to help you.

NOVIGRAD DREAMING
Talk to the dreamer.

Time to leave. On your way out, Rudolf de Jonkheer stalls you, demanding answers regarding his ghost. This is the opportunity to help or hinder Sarah the Godling. You can:

- Tell Rudolf the house is still haunted (and lie about it being inhabitable). You will meet a happy Sarah again in Main Quest: Through Time and Space.
- Tell Rudolf why the house is "haunted" (and tell him it is the work of a Godling). You will meet an angry Sarah again in Main Quest: Bald Mountain.

Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming

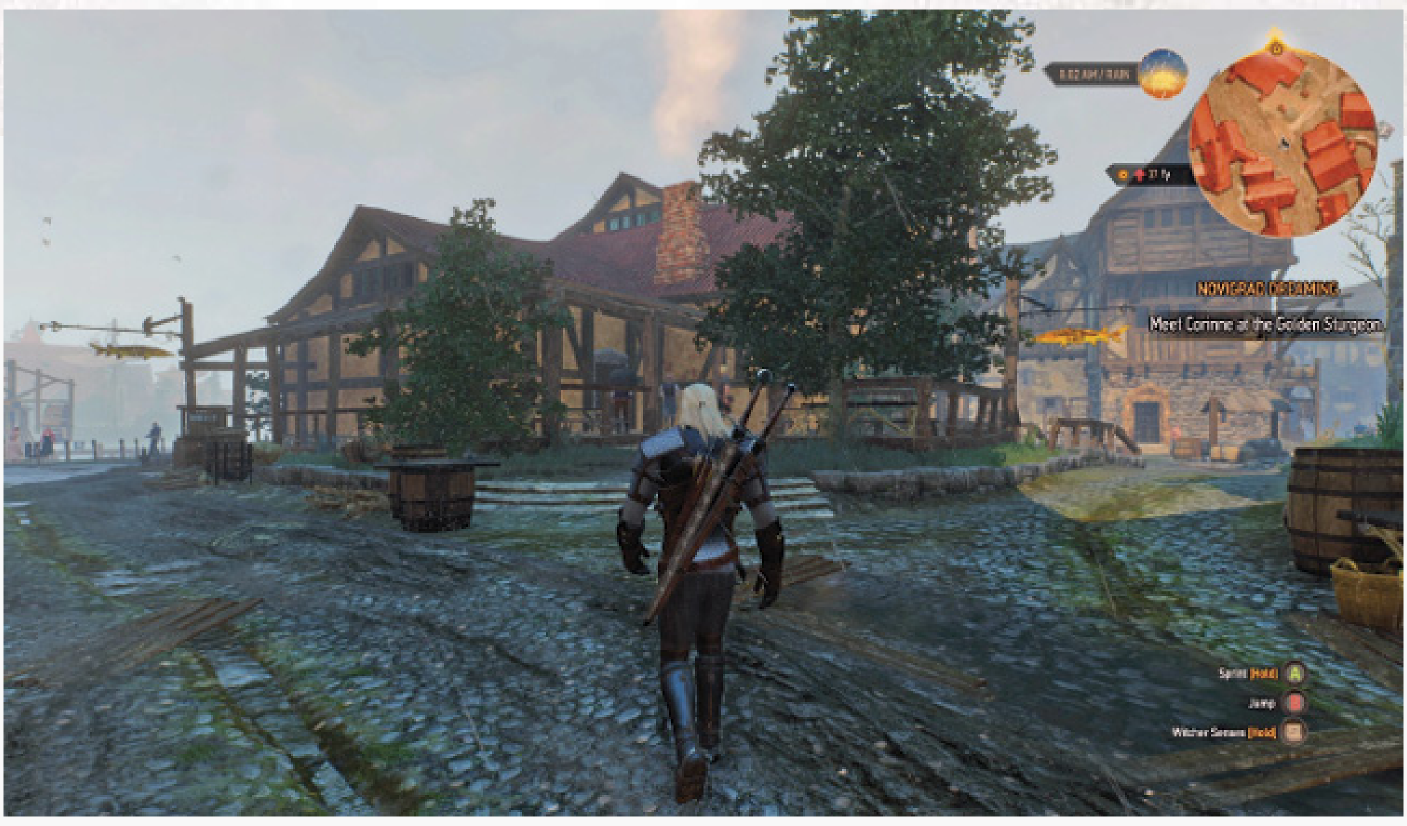
The Dandelion and the Swallow

OBJECTIVE:

- Meet Corrine at the Golden Sturgeon.

Follow the canal westward, then head north through a market and short alley, and west again toward the Golden Sturgeon Inn. You're not here for revelry. Head upstairs and meet Corrine in her dreaming room. Agree to start your guided dream. You may tell Corrine as much (or as little) as you like, from the following memories:

Corrine Tilly



- You remember when you and Ciri first met.
- You trained her at Kaer Morhen
- You saved her life once.
- She was there when you died.

Next, you can inform Corrine as much (or as little) as you like regarding Ciri's abilities:

- Ciri is a child of the Elder Blood.
- Ciri is called the Lady of Space and Time.
- She had trouble controlling her abilities.

Just before your dream, you tell Corrine that Ciri must have tried to find another friend. The number of secrets you reveal to Corrine isn't important, and you may choose either Dandelion, or Yennefer and Triss, to influence your dream. The end result is the same:

You see the poet with a bird (a Swallow) and realize Ciri contacted Dandelion. Upon wakening, you mention this to Corrine who (obviously) knows of the fellow; in fact someone has just been left the Rosemany and Thyme to him. Let's hope that's not a brothel. However, it is enough of a clue to check out. This quest now concludes.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad, and Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming conclude.

You may visit the Rosemary and Thyme brothel prior to completing the aforementioned quests. You'll find a number of ruffians lounging around, making a mess of the place. Conversation attempts are met with curt replies, so Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming is vital to complete first.

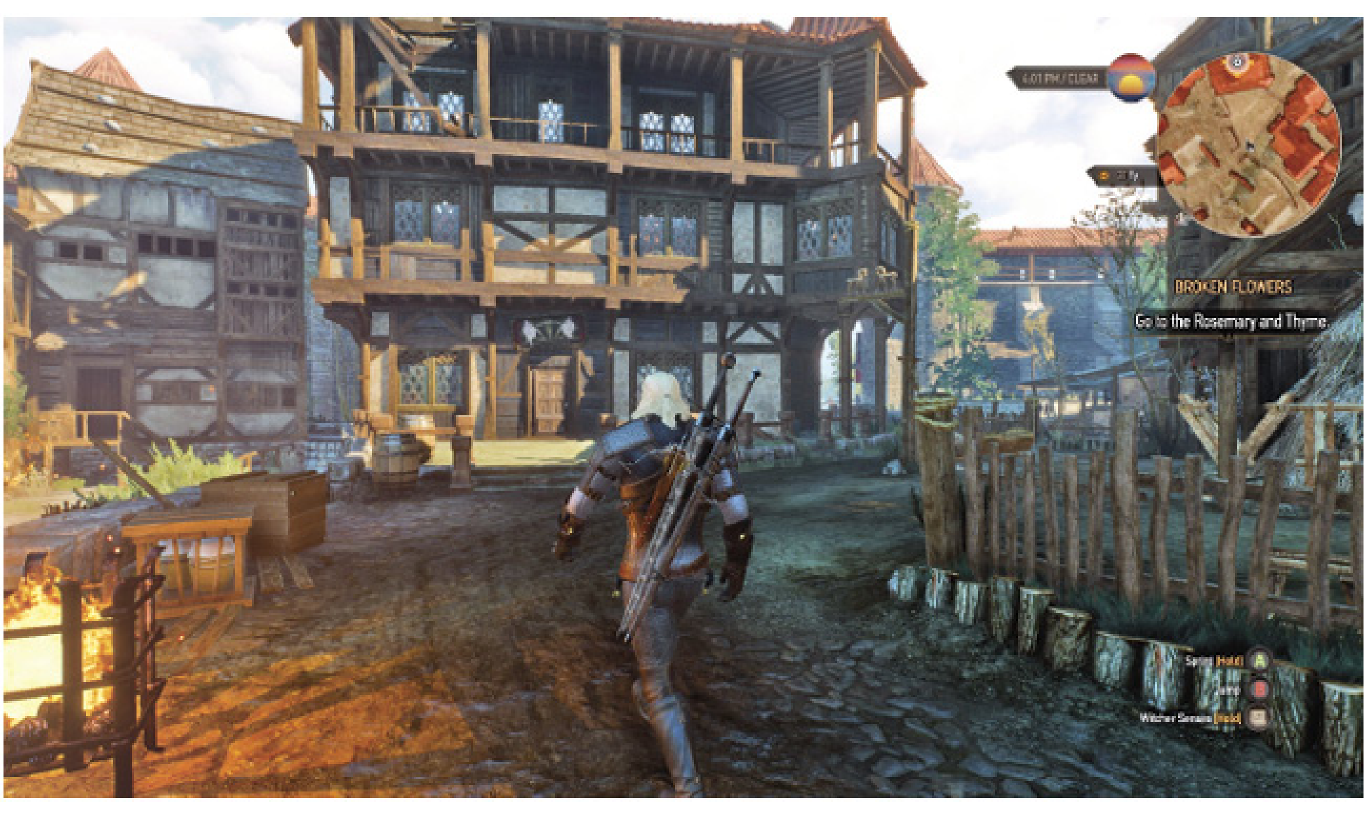
Part of this quest changes depending on your actions in Witcher 2 (PC only), or your conversation with General Voorhis during Main Quest: Imperial Audience.

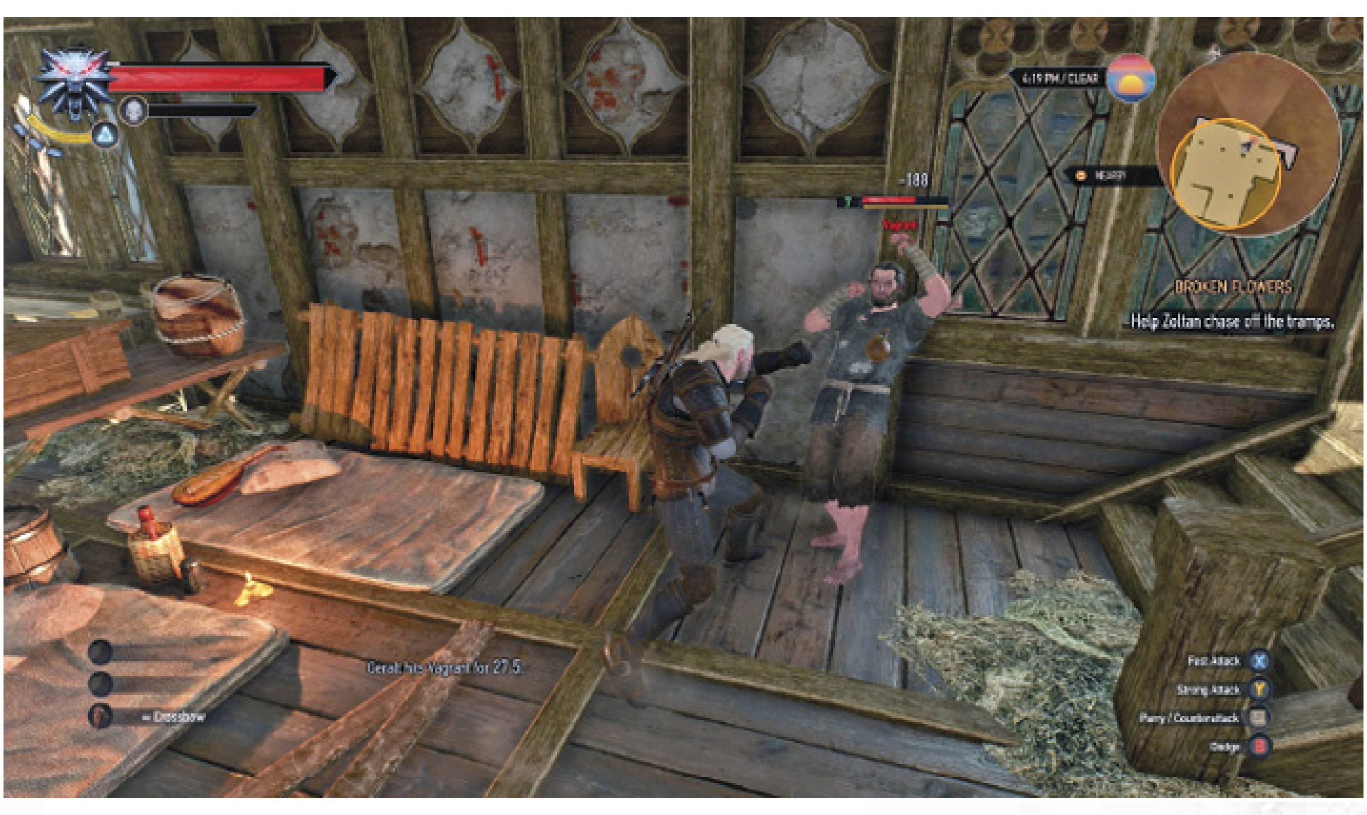
▶ If Arjan is alive, your interactions with Molly are slightly different.

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to the Rosemary and Thyme.
- Help Zoltan chase off the tramps.
- Nearest Signpost: Gate of the Hierarch.

Arriving at the threshold to Dandelion's brothel, three ruffians are suddenly extricated from the premises; thrown out by your old acquaintance Zoltan. More Vagrants are fleeing down the stairs; give them a swift pummelling with your fists to see them off. Speak with Zoltan, explaining your need to find Ciri and Dandelion. The owner of this knocking shop has disappeared too. Perhaps a clue lies around here, somewhere?





OBJECTIVES:

- Search the ground floor for clues, using your Witcher Senses.
- Read Dandelion's planner.

Zoltan Chlvay

Look for any objects that glitter, and use your Witcher Sense to find the rest. There's a variety of objects to spot here:

- A diploma from the faculty of Oxenfurt University, hanging on one of the walls.
- A Silver Laurel award from the Annual Balladry Content, hanging on another.
- Dandelion's precious lute that he got from the elves of Dol Blathanna.
- Three overly-wrought poetic letters, from different lovers of Dandelion's poetry.
- Barrels of wine.
- A huge portrait of Dandelion standing over a dead wyvern (which you and Zoltan comment on).

But the important find is Dandelion's appointment and accounts book sitting on a shelf under a window. Zoltan snatches the book from you, but gives it back, allowing you to access it from your inventory. It contains a wealth of contacts. Naturally, almost all of them are female.

ITEM: Quest Item: Dandelion's Planner

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Zoltan.

Make sure you speak with the dwarf before you leave, as he has knowledge regarding all the people mentioned in the planner:

- Molly—a chambermaid in the service of Baroness la Valette.
- Marabella—a perverse companion of Dandelion's who referred to him as her "stallion". Speak to Zoltan about her now, and when you meet her, you have additional conversation choices.
- Vespula—an old flame, who threw flower pots at Dandelion.
- Rosa var Attre—a woman with a special name for Dandelion's "gwyhyr." There's also an entry in the planner stating she is looking for a swordplay instructor; allowing you to speak to the Captain of the var Attre guards about this, later into this quest.
- Elihal—an elven beauty that Dandelion seemed fascinated with.

Main Quest: Broken Flowers

Vespula: A Downtrodden Washerwoman

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Vespula.
- Nearest Signpost: Gate of the Hierarch.

Head out of the Gate of the Hierarch, and down towards the washerwomen's huts down by the river. As you approach, you can hear a group of bandits attempting to extort money from Vespula, who is pushed about and knocked to the ground. The bandits' strange attire is related to one of the underworld gangs of Novigrad—Cyprian Willey (also known as Whoreson Junior). You step in to prevent a beating.

- Threaten the bandits with violence, which leads to a fight. If you stay (and don't flee), you must slay all four of them. Vespula is horrified at your savagery, and tells you the thugs' boss will make her pay for this. This forces her to close up her laundry shop, and open up a new one on the Oxenfurt outskirts, later into your adventure.

In both cases, you ask her if she remembers you from the time she kicked Dandelion out (through a balcony). She's really had it with him this time; he was strolling along the harbor with a harlot, and frequented the city's bathhouses. As you depart, she tells you that it would be nice if Dandelion dropped by.

Main Quest: Broken Flowers

Elihal: An Open-Minded Elf

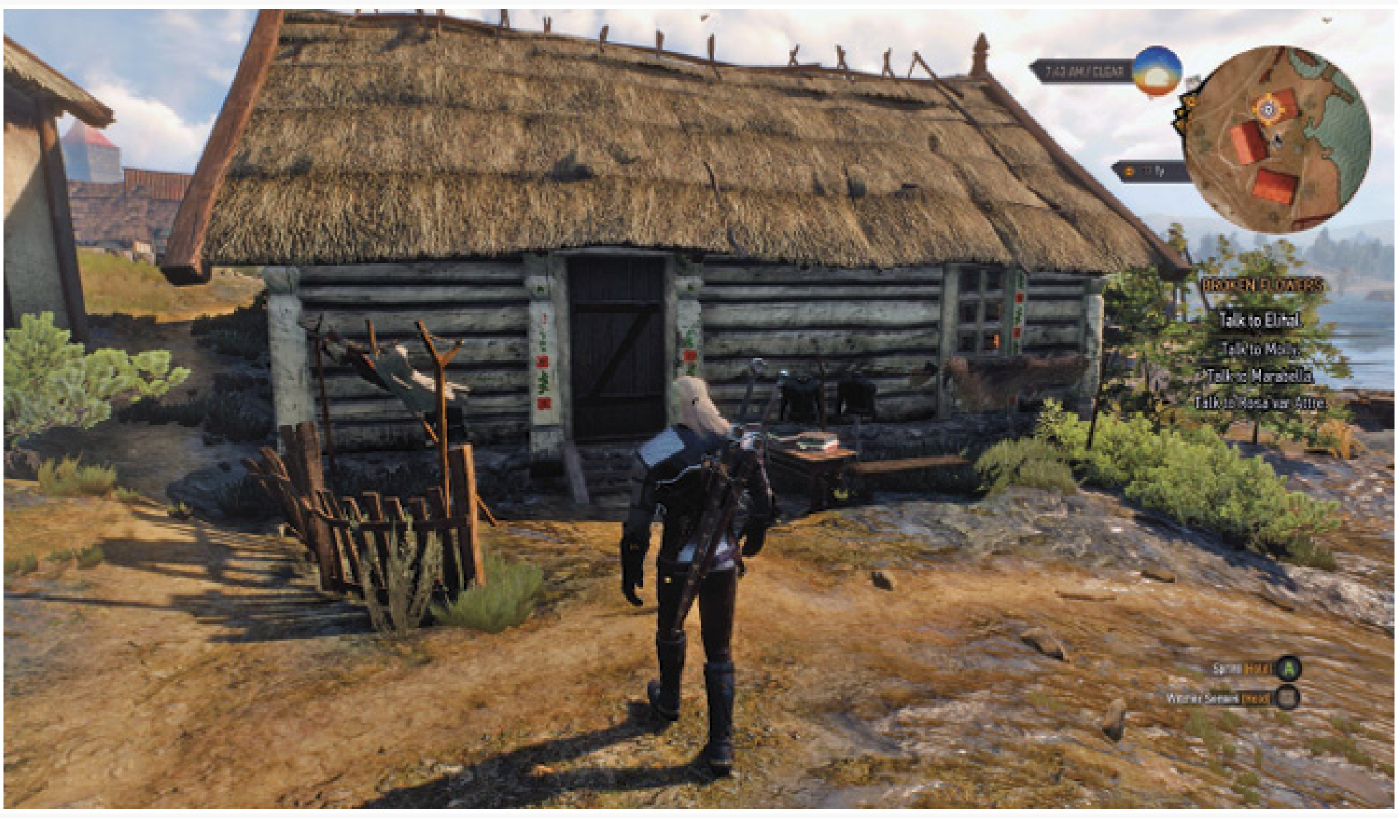
OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Elihal.
- Nearest Signpost: Tretogor Gate

A little further eastward along the river bank, close to Tretogor Gate, is a modest tailor's shop. Enter the store and continue to the back room to find a spry elf fanning a high cheek-boned face. You mention you were expecting Elihal to be one of Dandelion's girlfriends.

Elihal the Tailor

A moment later, Elihal appears, fancied up in lady attire, and brushing off your gender descriptions as irrelevant. You may ask about Elihal's drunken night with Dandelion (your answers can be inquisitive, or verging on offensive without a penalty). Elihal is at pains to point out that men aren't of any interest. Elihal's thrills are the act of dressing up.



Elihal mentions Dandelion talked about someone named Kalkstein, an alchemist the witch hunters recently burned at the stake in Hierach Square. You part ways with Elihal, who you can return for any clothing alterations you wish.

THE MASKS OF ELIHAL

Elihal has a number of unique masks, and these are critical during Secondary Quest: A Matter of Life and Death. Check them out now, or during the aforementioned quest.

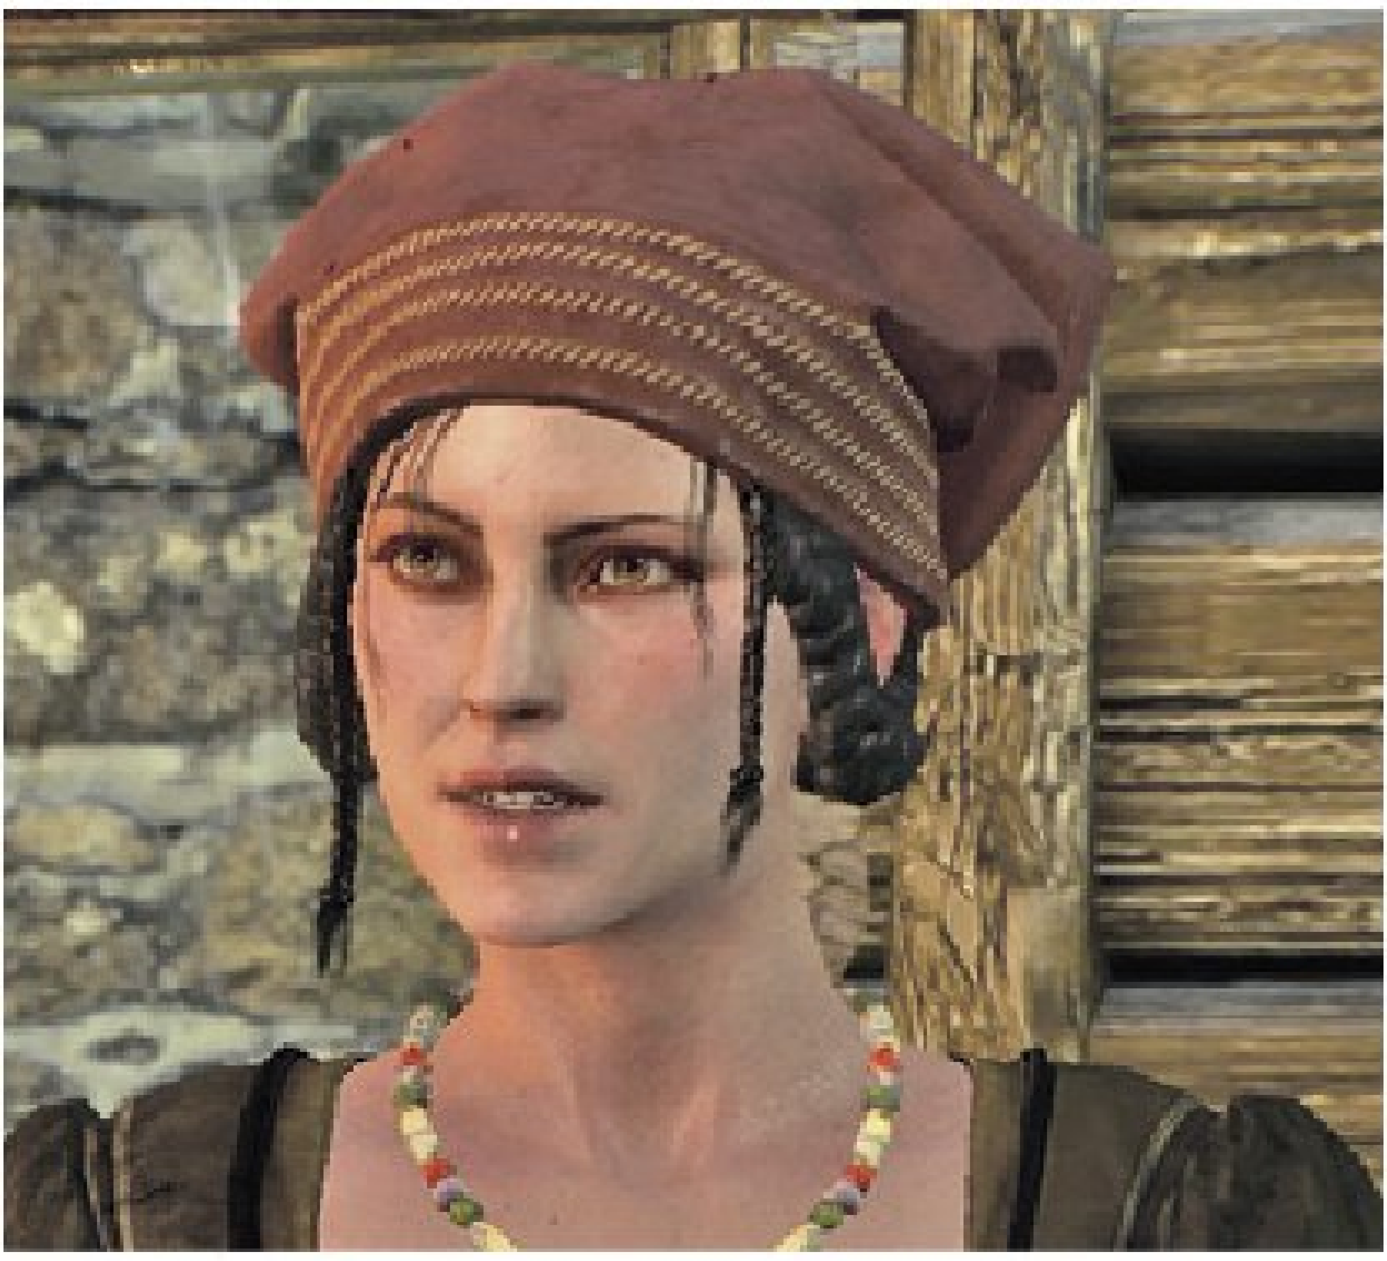
Main Quest: Broken Flowers

Marabella: Dandelion's a Real Fungi to be With

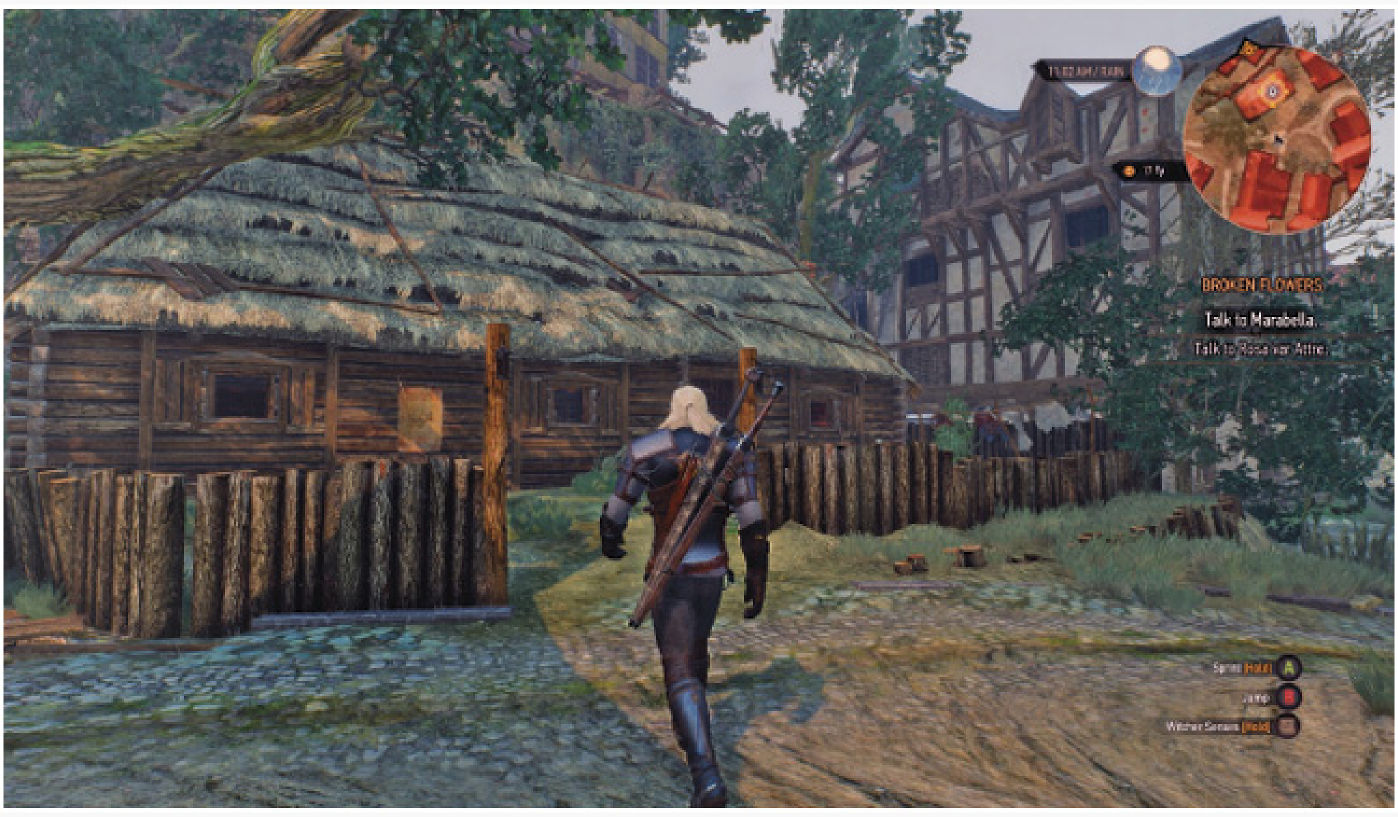
OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Marabella.
- Nearest Signpost: St. Gregory's Bridge.

Descend to a lower cobblestone street, and find the thatched-roof cottage that's home to a local school. As you enter the door, Marabella is finishing up a lesson, telling a gaggle of disappointed urchins that the rat-catcher won't be coming to tell them about his job. She asks you to wait.



Marabella



You can:

- Agree to wait, and you stand around until the lesson is over before speaking with Marabella.
- Refuse to wait, after which Marabella beckons you into the class, and the children ask you a few awkward questions about witchers and monsters.

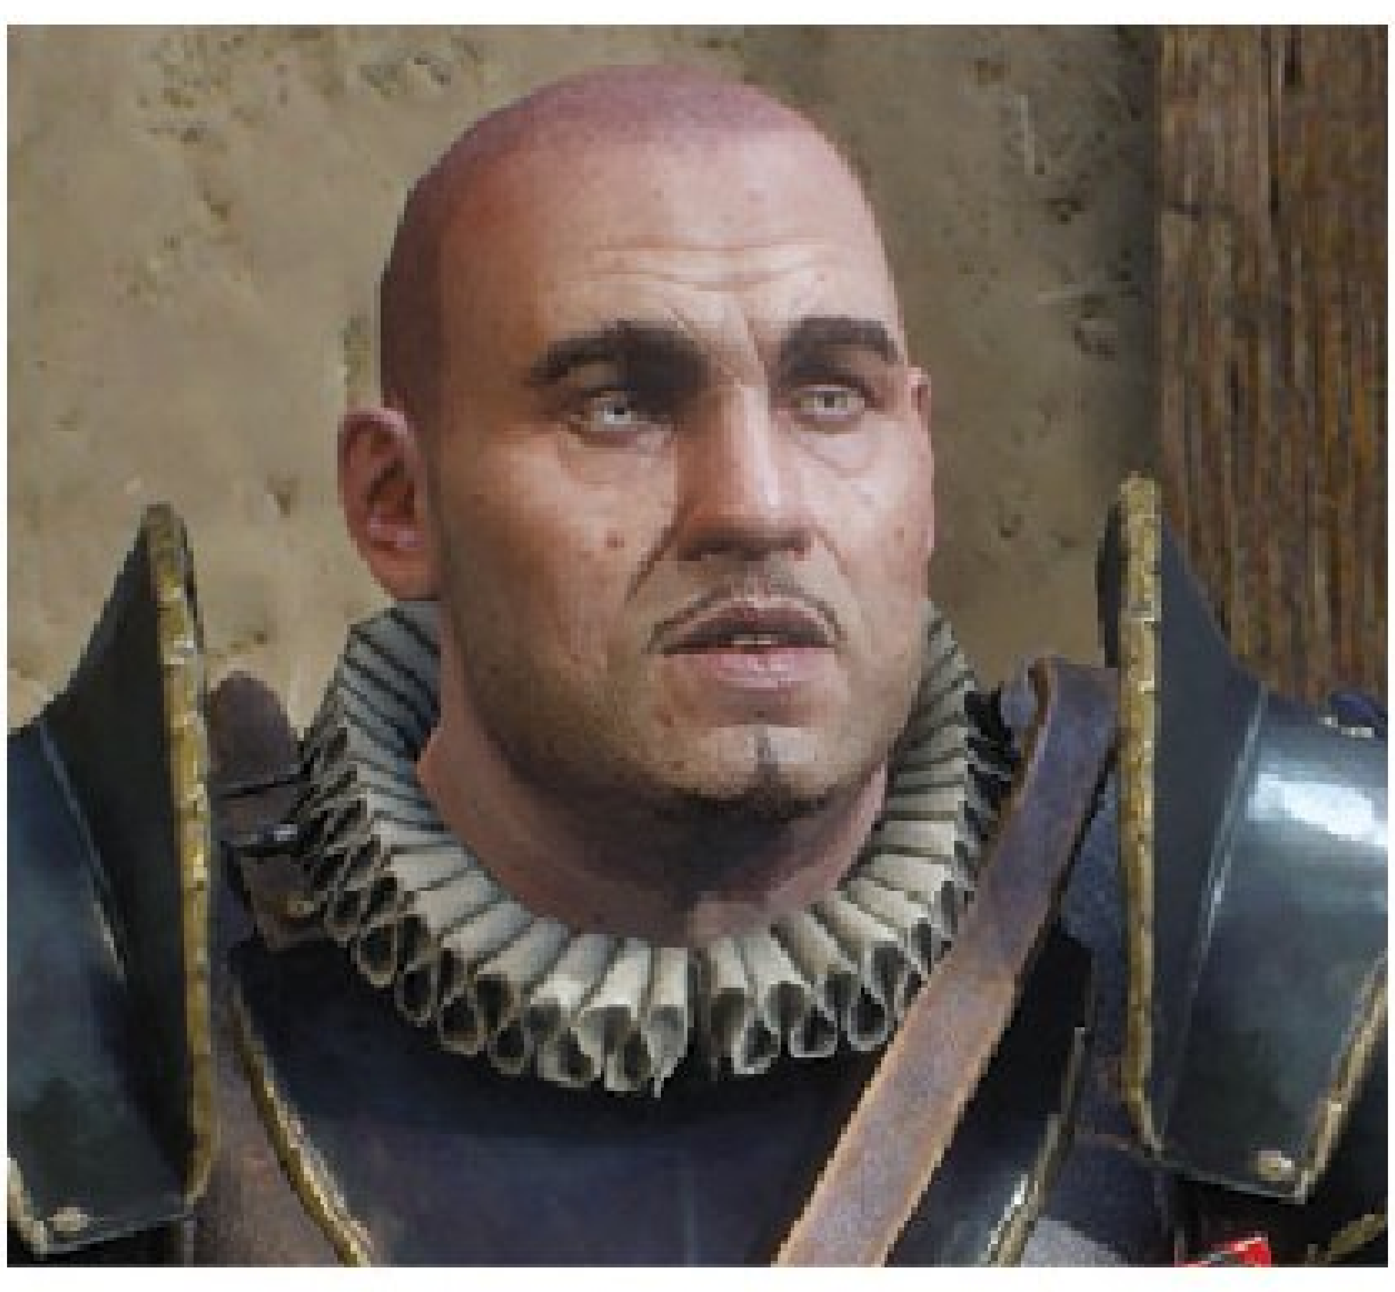
Afterward, speak to Marabella. Strangely, the topic of conversation is about fungi. Dandelion and a bored Marabella spoke of medicine while the fire of their relationship winked out. You can optionally mention the poem Dandelion wrote about her, which causes Marabella to recite some of her own distinctly amateurish poetry about horses. With a clue about fungus, you can bid Marabella a farewell.

Main Quest: Broken Flowers

Rosa Var Attre: Double Trouble

OBJECTIVES:

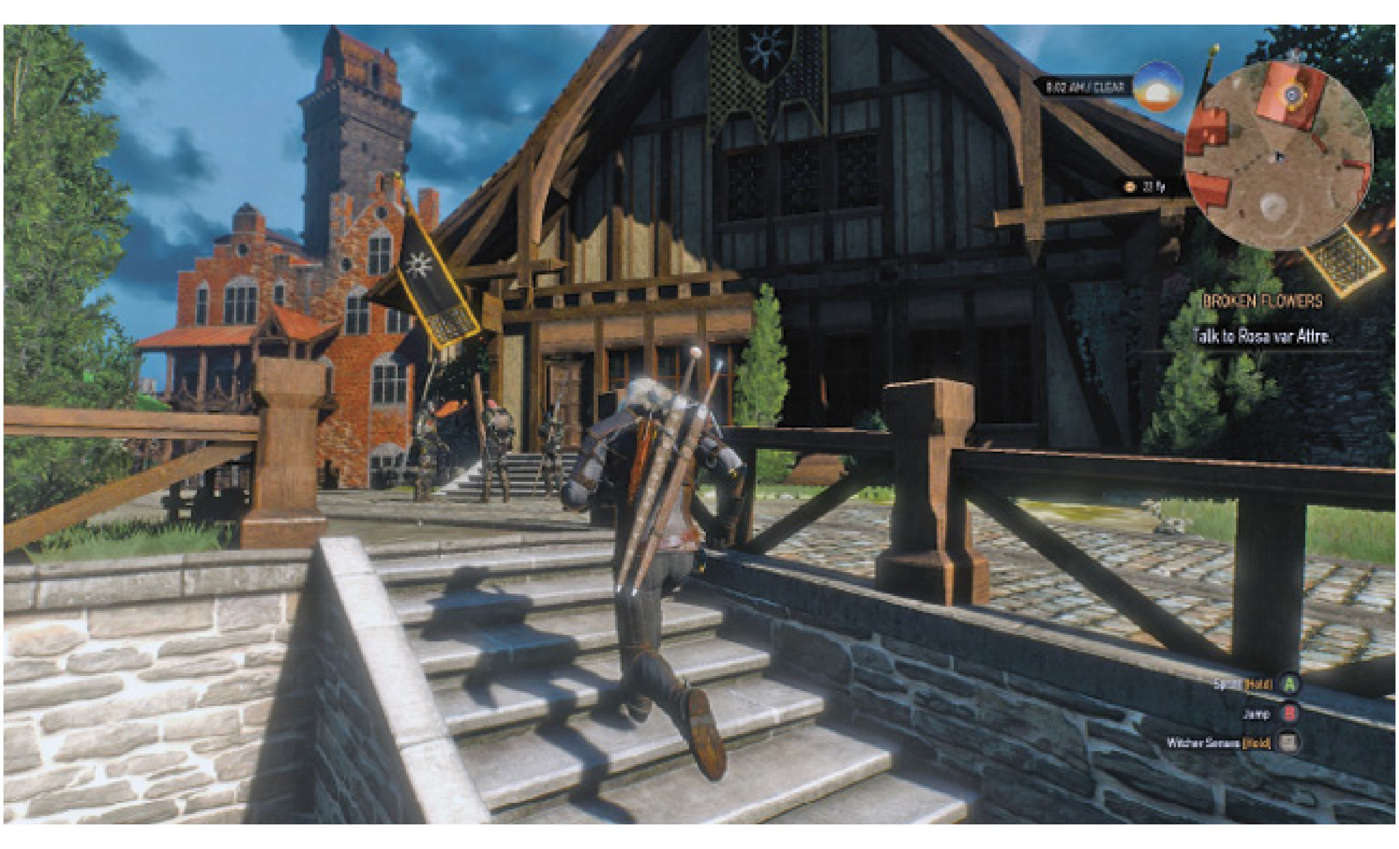
- Talk to Rosa var Attre.
- Nearest Signpost: St. Gregory's Bridge.



Var Attre, Guard Captain

The imposing Var Attre residence is well-guarded and, if you approach slowly, you can hear talk between the guards about a gap in the gardens that you might be able to slip through to gain entry into the house. However, a straightforward approach is also possible. Before any infiltration occurs, speak to the Guard Captain. You can:

- Pretend to be a cook, or mention your profession as a Witcher. Neither allow you to progress into the residence, forcing you to enter surreptitiously from the gardens or sewers.
- If you listened to Zoltan (by asking him for more information on Rose), you have the option of introducing yourself as Rosa's new fencing instructor. The gullible guards allow you in through the front door!



INFILTRATION: THIS IS FREDERIC FRANCIS DE BERGERAC

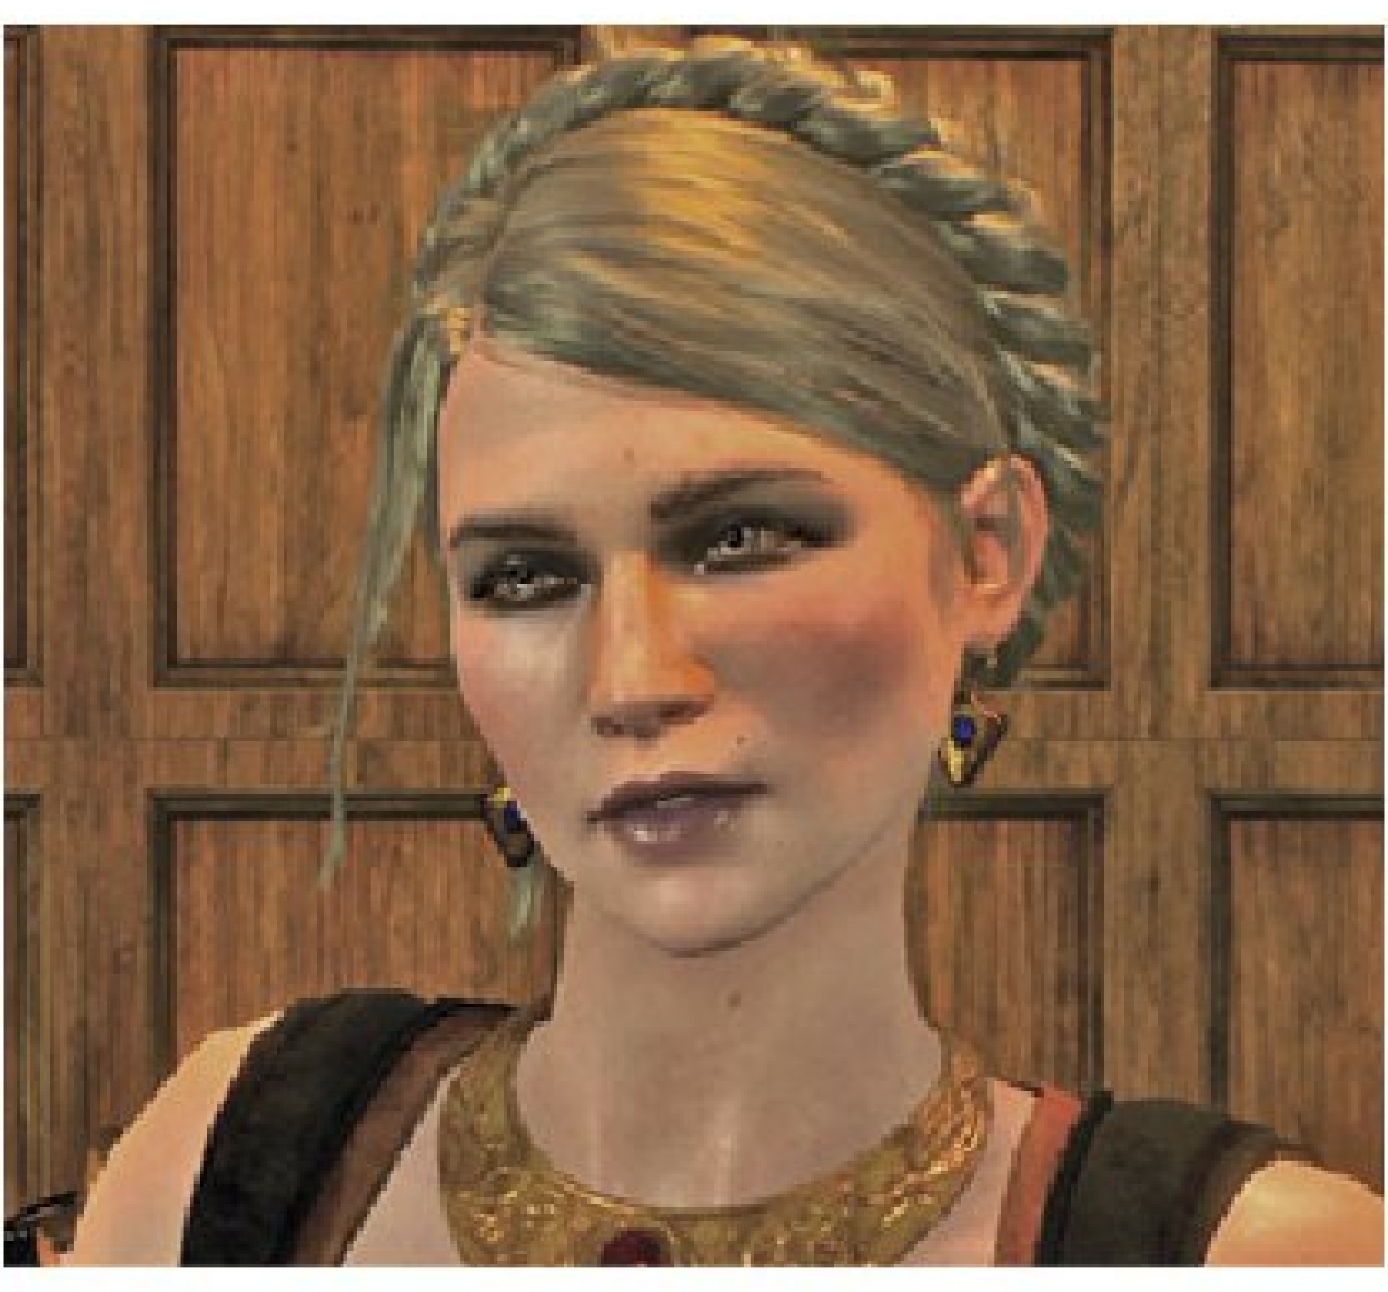
OBJECTIVE:

- Find a way into the var Attre villa.

With no other option, pick one of two infiltration locations:

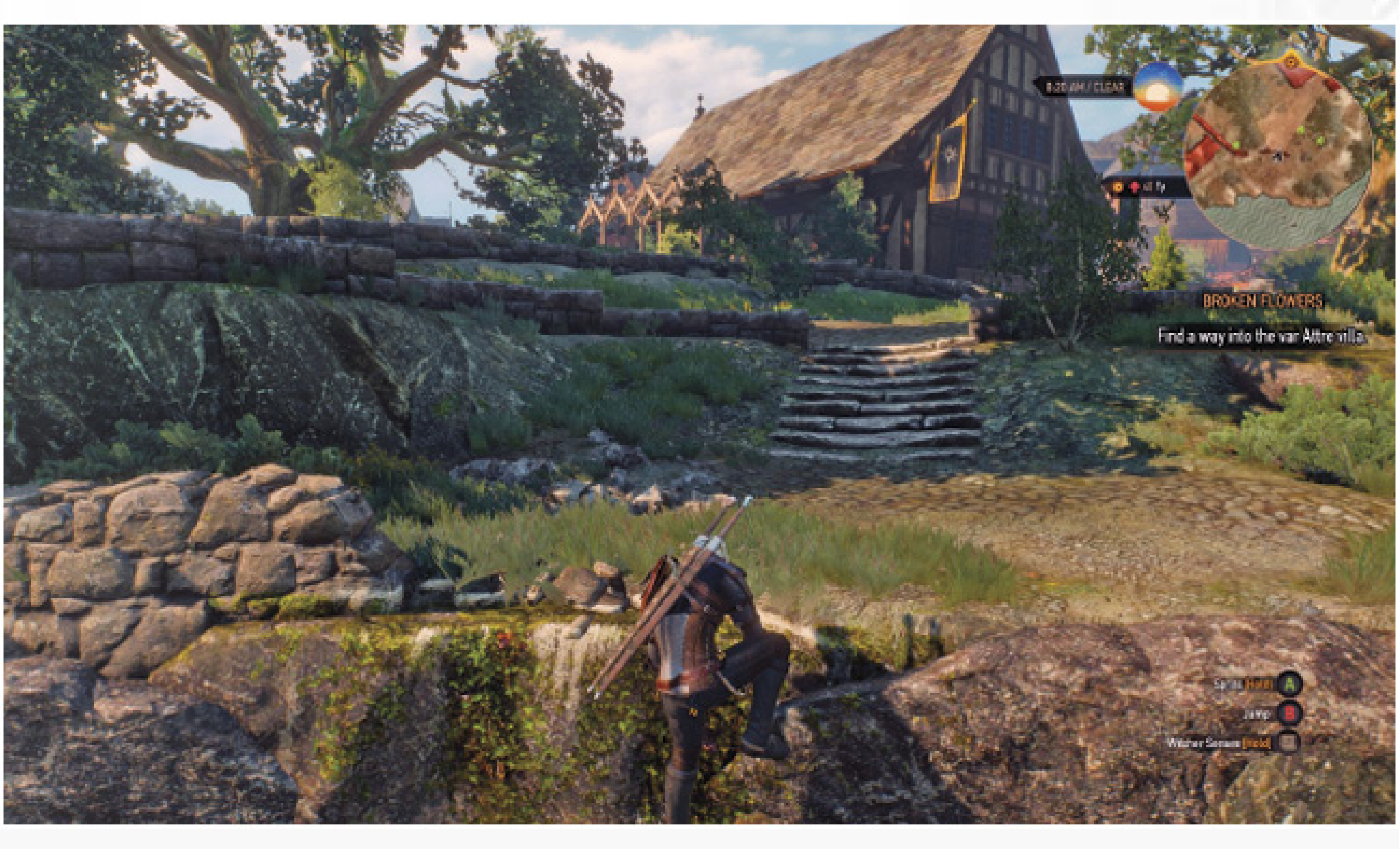
The Gardens—Run left (roughly north), keeping the curved stone perimeter wall of the var Attre villa on your right side, until you reach some rugged rocks at the end of the wall, close to an angel statue. With a few clambering maneuvers you should be able to work your way to the cobblestone rear grounds of the residence.

The Sewers—Find the sewer grate close to the stairs, and jump down, wading through a few flooded chambers to face drowners and a water hag (who summons more drowners). This path is more taxing due to the revolting enemies. Simply follow the sewer to the exit, accessing the rocks to climb up and into the rear grounds of the residence.



Edna var Attre

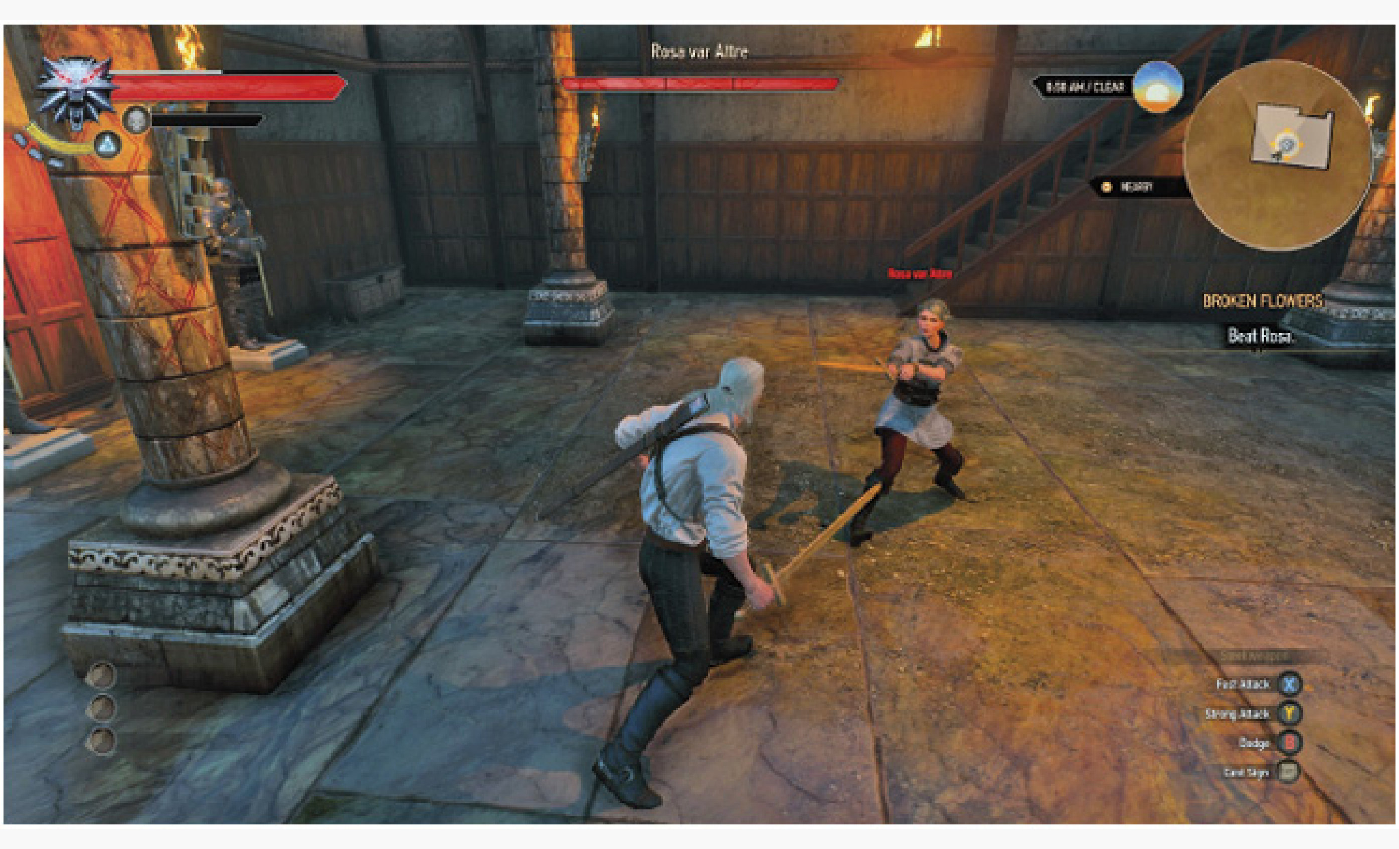
Once inside the perimeter, you're promptly discovered by a young woman in a fancy flowing dress. The guard captain recognizes you, but Edna var Attre (the sister of the woman you seek) covers for you, telling the captain you're a nobleman with a suitably pompous pseudonym. You tell him you're here as a sword instructor, and the captain reluctantly tells you to follow him into the villa.



INSTRUCTOR: GRAB A WOODEN SWORD, LEARN TO ATTACK

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the guard.
- Grab a wooden practice sword.
- Keep following the guard.

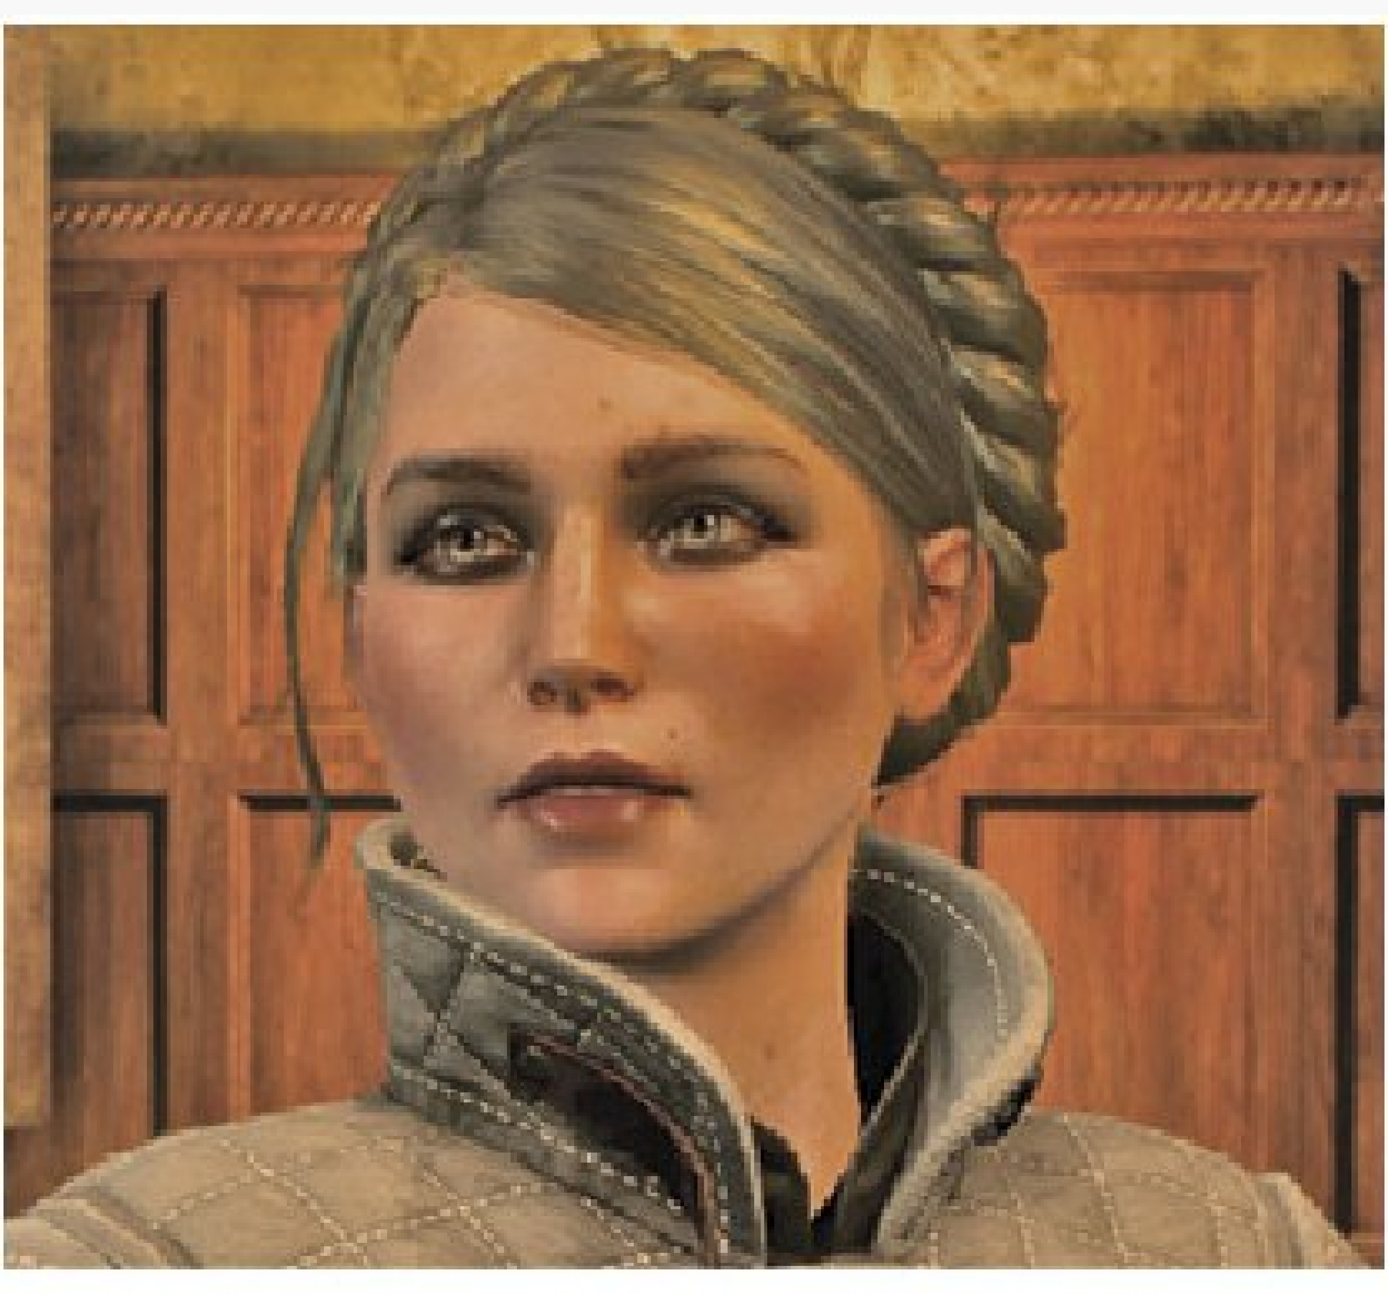


Follow the guard captain inside, to the top of the cellar stairs. When prompted, take one of the wooden practice swords, equip it so you aren't striking the ambassador's daughter with cold steel, and descend to a large practice chamber below.

ITEM: Quest Item: Wooden Sword

OBJECTIVE:

- Beat Rosa.



Rosa var Attre

Rosa var Attre is already waiting to begin the lesson, and a brief display of sword prowess is needed (you can win or lose, depending on your pride and conversation choices you wish to make). After the first bout, you explain you're here on business other than swordplay. Feel free to embellish your chatter with flirtacious conversation choices, then ask about Dandelion. Rosa denies a relationship; it seems her twin sister may have led Dandelion on after he was hired to play the lute.

After a second bout (which may be won or lost), assuming you beat Rosa, she asks if you're interested in giving her some private lessons. Answer "gladly" and Secondary Quest: Fencing Lessons becomes active in your future.

At this point, Edna (Rosa's twin) enters the chamber, and explains her mischief-making (wooing Dandelion in Rosa's name) and the two start to squabble. Separate them with light or gruff requests, ask about their backgrounds if you wish (including the Nilfgaard and their stay in Novigrad), before steering the conversation back to Dandelion. He gave strange quizzes after visiting the graves of celebrated Oxenfurt professors, especially someone named Margrave Henckel. He also praised a female troubadour with a melodious Koviri accent, named Callonetta.

As you leave, Rosa pays you, and asks again about more lessons.

- Agree, and Secondary Quest: Fencing Lessons becomes available.
- Answer that you're not interested, and Secondary Quest: Fencing Lessons cannot be started.

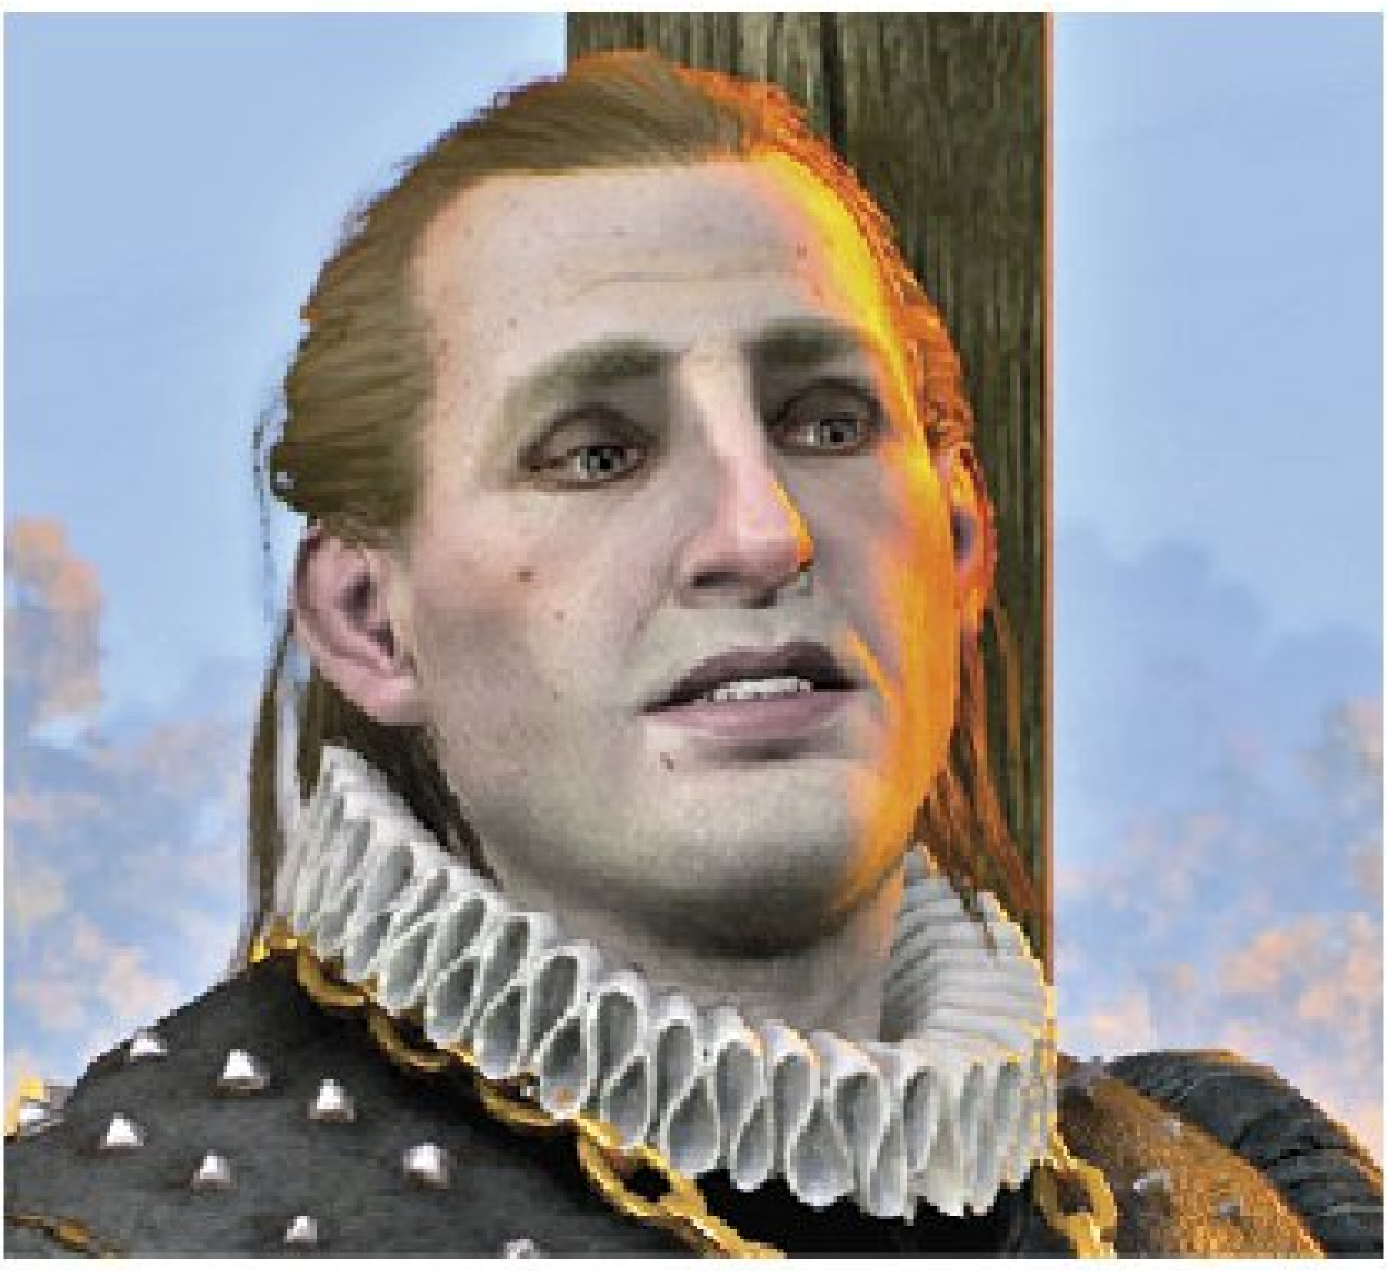
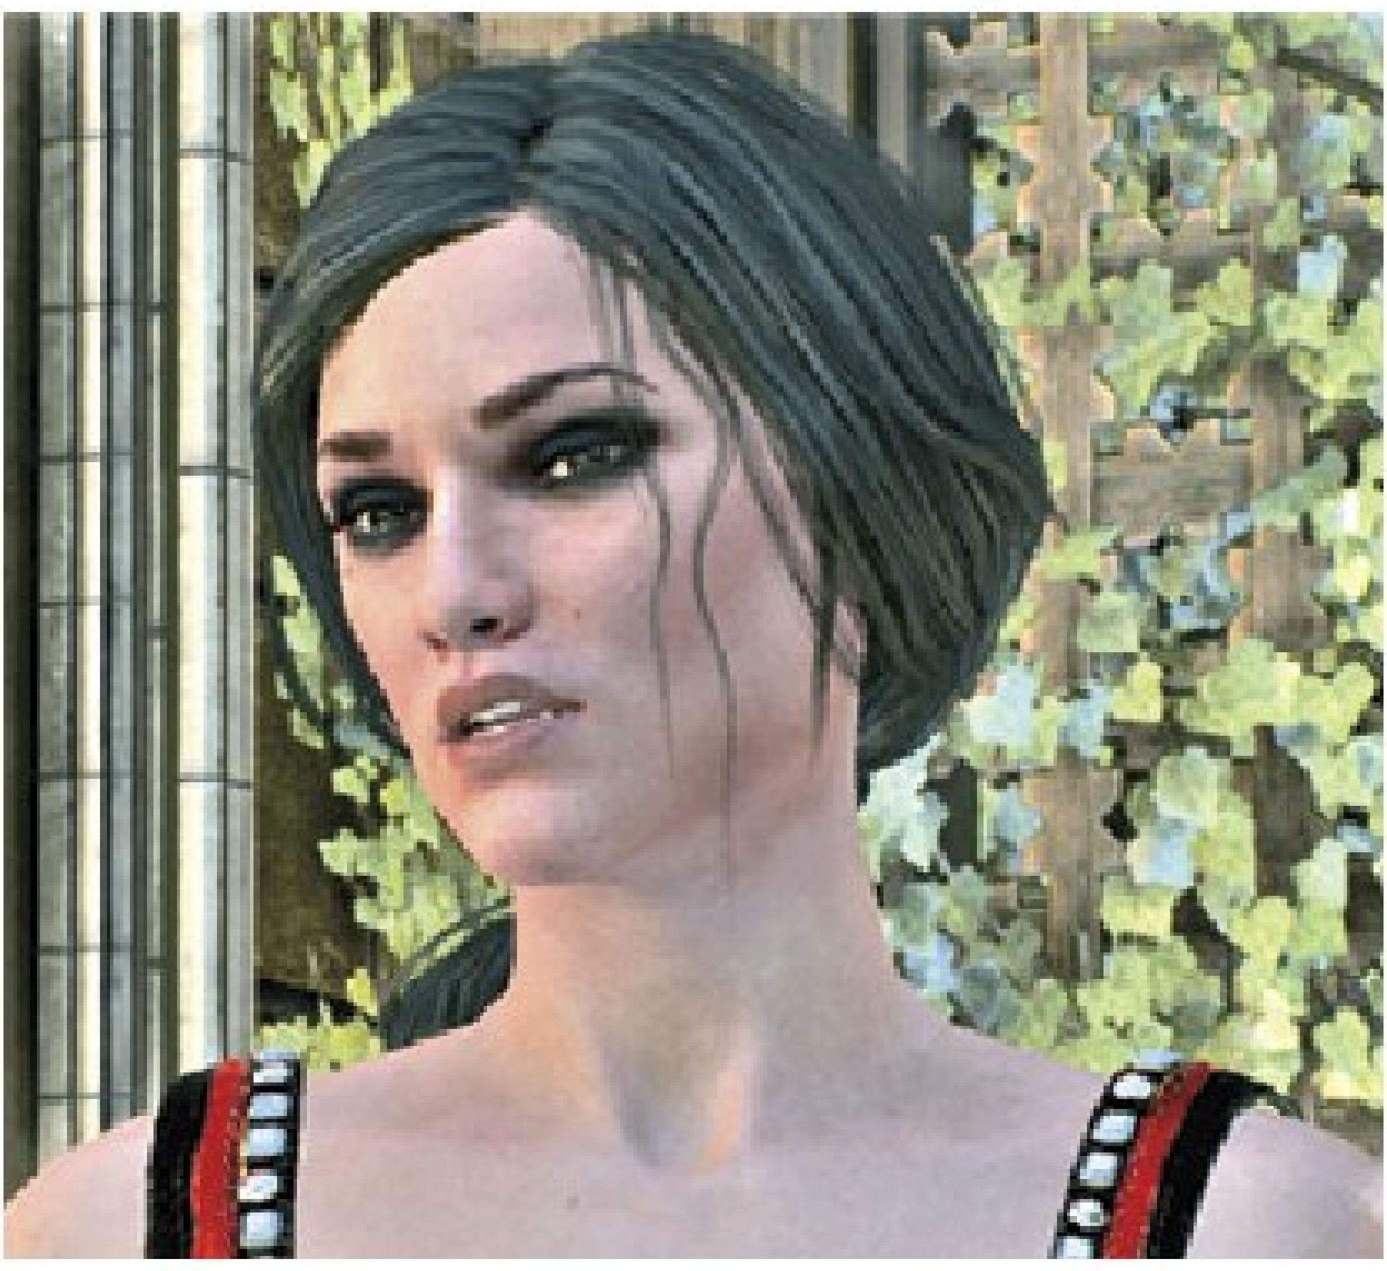
Molly: Off to the Races

OBJECTIVES:

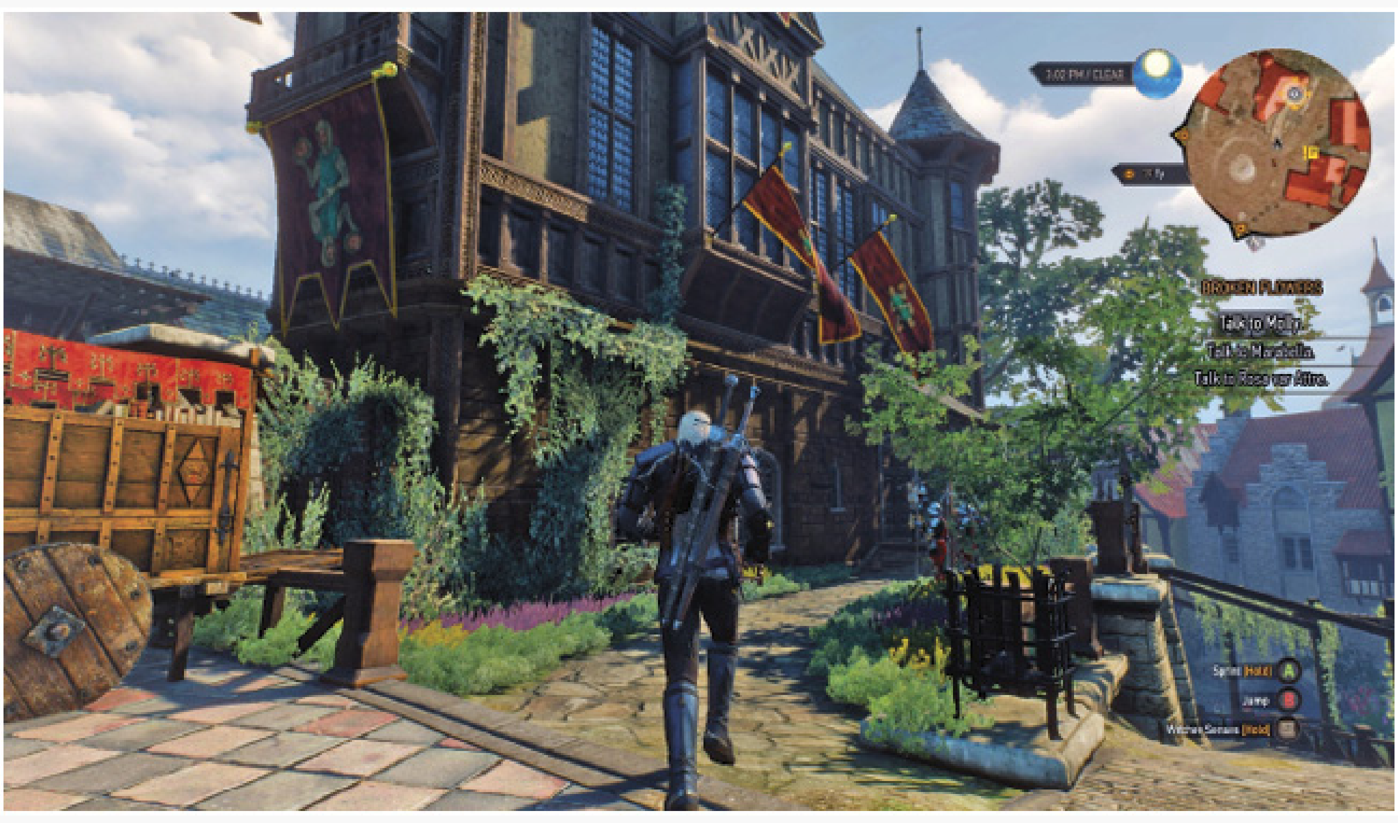
- Talk to Molly.
- Nearest Signpost: St. Gregory's Bridge.



General Voorhis of Nilfgaard



Baroness La Valette



Move toward the La Valette residence (opposite the Var Attre's, on the opposite side of the round plaza near St. Gregory's Bridge), and approach the imposing villa. A surly guard is waved away as the Baroness herself is exiting the building, accompanied by General Voorhis, who you met at the Emperor's castle.

- If Arjan is dead in Witcher 2—the Baroness recognizes you as the man who murdered her son, and treats you with cool detachment and derision. You ask about Molly; who profited from Arjan's death as she is no longer a maid, having married the Baroness's nephew. They are currently at the home of the Baroness's dear friend Patricia Vegelbud.

- If Arjan is alive (or you have no save game) from Witcher 2, the Baroness introduces you to the general, but there is no need—you've already met. You ask about Molly and the Baroness says her maid-servant is currently at the home of her dear friend, Patricia Vegelbud.

Voorhis seems quite pleased at this and beckons you to ride with them to the races they were setting out for.

- General Voorhis is hoping you'll accept his light-hearted challenge to a horse race. If this interests you, be sure you thoroughly quiz him about every one of the horses ("know much about the others"), since his hubris allows you to learn which filly is the finest.
- You can politely insist on not racing, after which the baroness points you in the direction of Molly.
- Or, you can pick any horse from the following list: Cantarella, Nemrod, Chestnut (Thunderbolt), and The Zerrikanian bay. They are all similar in their Stamina.

When the race begins, be sure you use your galloping, Sign befuddlement using Aard, and other techniques you've learned during your time in the saddle.

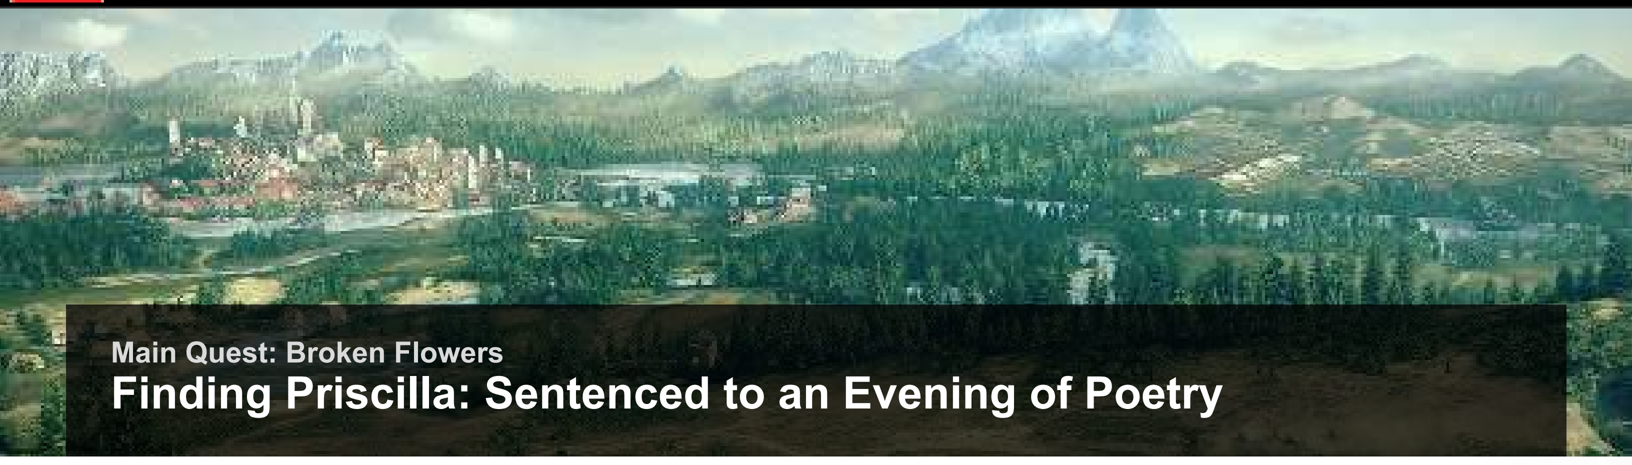
Molly

When you're ready, talk to Molly, who is sitting on the elevated seating near to the Baroness.

- If Arjan is dead in Witcher 2—the newly-minted Lady la Attard introduces herself politely.
- If Arjan is alive (or you have no save game) from Witcher 2—the house servant, Molly, introduces herself with reverence.

Molly recognizes you from Dandelion's tall tales. Alas, she has no idea where Dandelion is, but mentions his blond-haired "sister." This is strange since he has no siblings you're aware of.

If you already visited all the other contacts, you realize Molly is probably speaking about the female troubadour, Callonetta.



Main Quest: Broken Flowers

Finding Priscilla: Sentenced to an Evening of Poetry

OBJECTIVE:

- Consult with Zoltan.
- Meet Zoltan in the Kingfisher Inn after sundown.

Priscilla

Return to the Rosemary and Thyme to meet Zoltan. He is training his pet parrot, Polly, though you're sure it's an owl. The conversation moves to Dandelion, and you mention the mysterious troubadour. Zoltan realizes you mean Priscilla, an infatuation of Dandelion's. She plays with a troupe nightly at the Kingfisher Inn. You agree to head there at sundown.

The inn is the imposing brick structure just northeast of the Ubbizi Townhouse. You should reach the alley entrance and meditate until sundown before entering. Priscilla is tuning up her lute, and takes her place on the stage, singing ballads to a mainly appreciative audience. This is an apt description, as the slewing bandits during your stay at the Inn at White Orchard, while progressing through Main Quest: Lilac and Gooseberries, results in you being recognized. Elza the innkeeper stands up and loudly accuses you of murder. The crowd grows restless, but you aren't challenged, and Priscilla beckons you over.

QUESTING DECISIONS

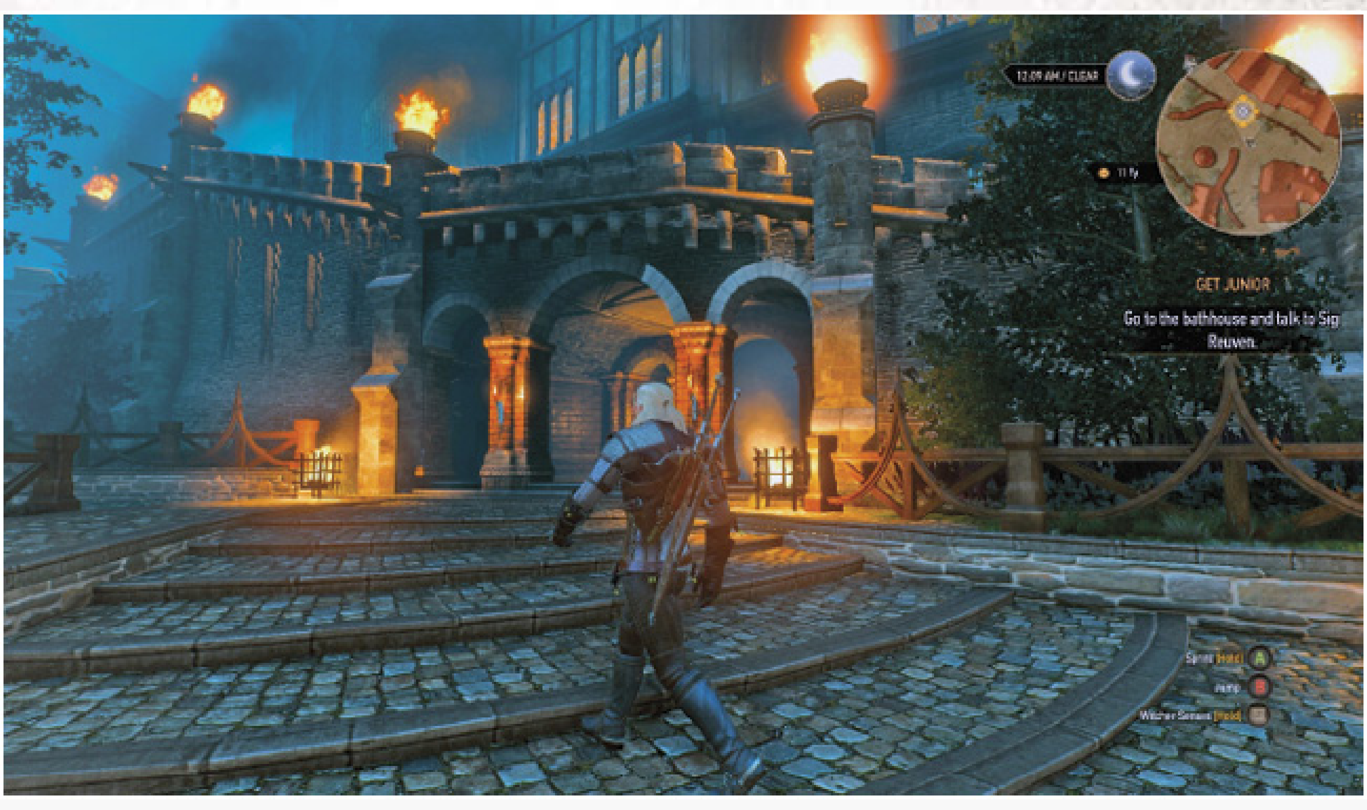
This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Broken Flowers concludes. You have a new lead—during her time in Novigrad, Ciri met with a bandit named Whoreson Junior. You need to find him, discover what happened, and hopefully not be caught up in the gang wars plaguing this city.

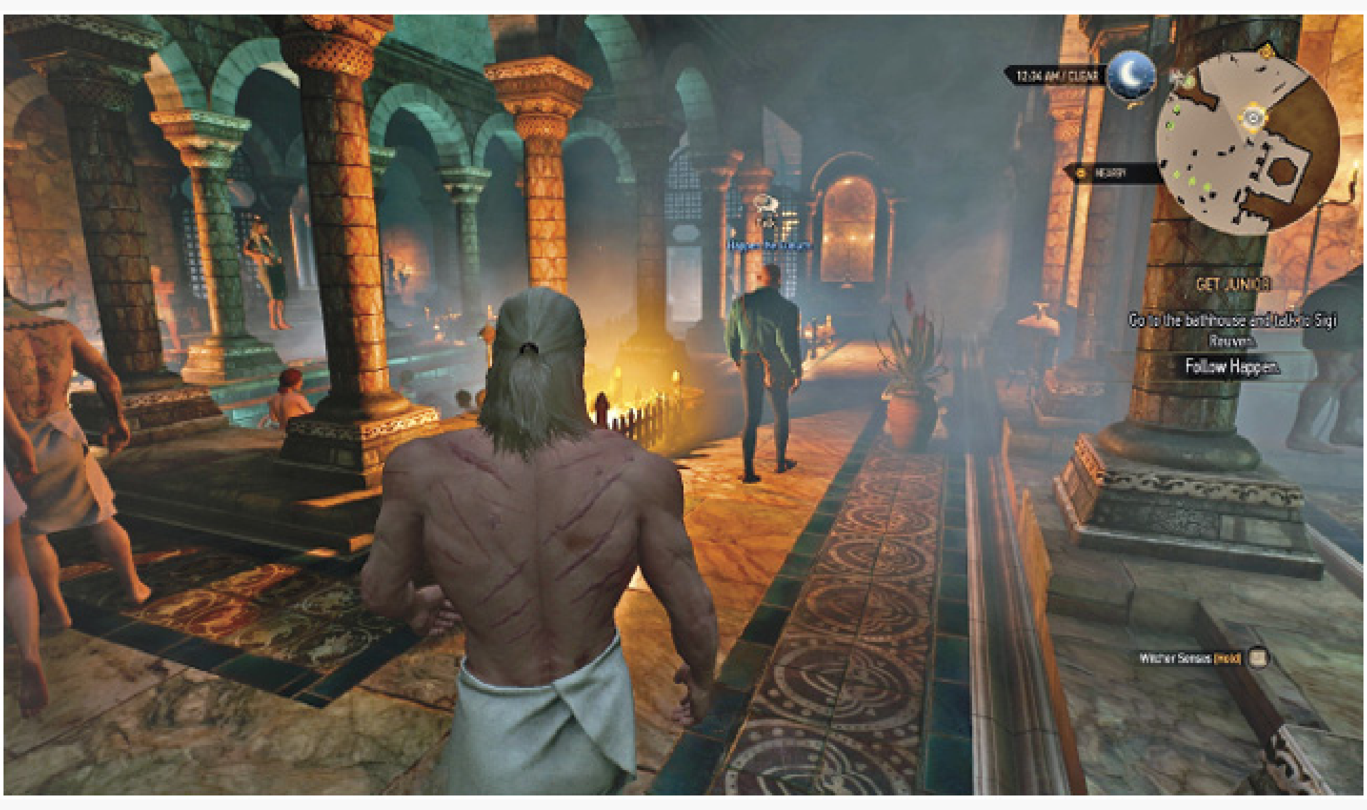
OBJECTIVES:

- Go to the bathhouse and talk to Sigi Reuven.
- Get undressed and put your clothing in the dresser.
- Follow Happen.
- Nearest Signpost: North of Hierarch Square.

Happen the Eunuch

Head to the bathhouses in the central part of Novigrad's main city district. Be sure you find the entrance underneath the sloping, torch-lit street above you, off the small circular park area. After banging on the door, you're told to wait. A while later, Eunuch Happen motions you to the dressing room, where you need to disrobe. Simply access one of the dressers and deposit your equipment. You appear wearing only a towel. Stroll through the bathhouse, optionally listening or talking to any of the courtesans along the way. Happen stops by the carved door and steam area. Open the door.





A trio of sweaty men with faces like slapped arses are meeting, with one of them (a dwarf named "Cleaver") intent on murdering a man named Whoreson Junior. After a less-than pleasant greeting by Cleaver, answer him how you wish, before speaking with "Sigi Reuven", or as you already know him; Sigismund Djikstra. Your chat is interrupted by screams from the bathers; assassins have entered the bathhouse!

Main Quest: Get Junior

None of This Swinging Your Steel C--K About

You dress, and meet Dijkstra in his office. Reminicing about your last encounter (where you hobbled him). Answer him how you wish (apologetic or otherwise), then glean information about Whoreson—Cleaver should be left alone in his vendetta against Whoreson, while you discretely delve into his operations. Feel free to ask avoiding the war with Whoreson, about Dijkstra's past, but mainly about Whoreson's grip on the city:

- He owns a gambling den; the largest casino in town. It's near the city's wall and towers, in The Bits District.
- He runs an illegal fighting arena in the city's bowels. It's in the sewers beneath Gildorf, but you'll have to enter through the Bits.
- He has a house in Novigrad, too, but he isn't likely to be there. It's located on Temple Isle to the north.

These are the three locations (and related quests) you must concentrate on exploring once the conversation with Dijkstra concludes. However, there is other business to attend to; after telling him you're off to look for Whoreson, you can:

- Ask about Radovid (he isn't in contact with the ruler), and Philippa Eilhart (a sorceress who Radovid blinded and who Dijkstra hopes is rotting).
- Speak about Dijkstra's previous occupation as a master spy, and his transformation into a master criminal. He tells you they offer similar job perks and satisfaction.
- Ask about Dandelion; after some Grade-A sarcasm, he reckons Dandelion is dead. Answer him how you wish regarding a possible beef between them, and Dijkstra offers a surprising annoyance at the standard of Dandelion's recent poetry. After this additional sarcasm, Dijkstra says he has other problems to worry about. Problems you might be able to help him with: This allows you to begin Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure.

Main Quest: Get Junior

Cleaver Cleaned It Out

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Whoreson Junior's hideout.
- Search Whoreson Junior's hideout using your Witcher Senses.
- Nearest Signpost: Electors' Square.

Either swim or cross the bridge into Temple Isle—the northern island of Novigrad where the ominous Eternal Fire temple is located. Step to the front entrance (the rear door is locked) and you'll see Cleaver's henchdwarves are already guarding the place. Dammit! Step inside to a scene of recent chaos. Cleaver has ransacked the place. Stoop down and inspect the scattered papers.

Now head up the stairs and use your Witcher Senses to find:

- Scattered clothing near a wooden bathtub; the dwarves were thorough.
- Check the forceps and other equipment on the wall. The place has been scrubbed clean.

Up on the attic floor is some minor loot, but the dwarves have taken almost everything of value. Talk to any of the dwarves, and expect sharp and brusque responses. This has been a dead-end.

Secondary Quest: The Gangs of Novigrad

Helping the Smallest of the Big Four

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: THE GANGS OF NOVIGRAD

LOCATIONS : Cleaver's Hideout (Novigrad), Whoreson's Casino, Whoreson's Arena
CHARACTERS : Carlo "Cleaver" Verese, Cleaver's Henchdwarves
ENEMIES : Whoreson's Thugs

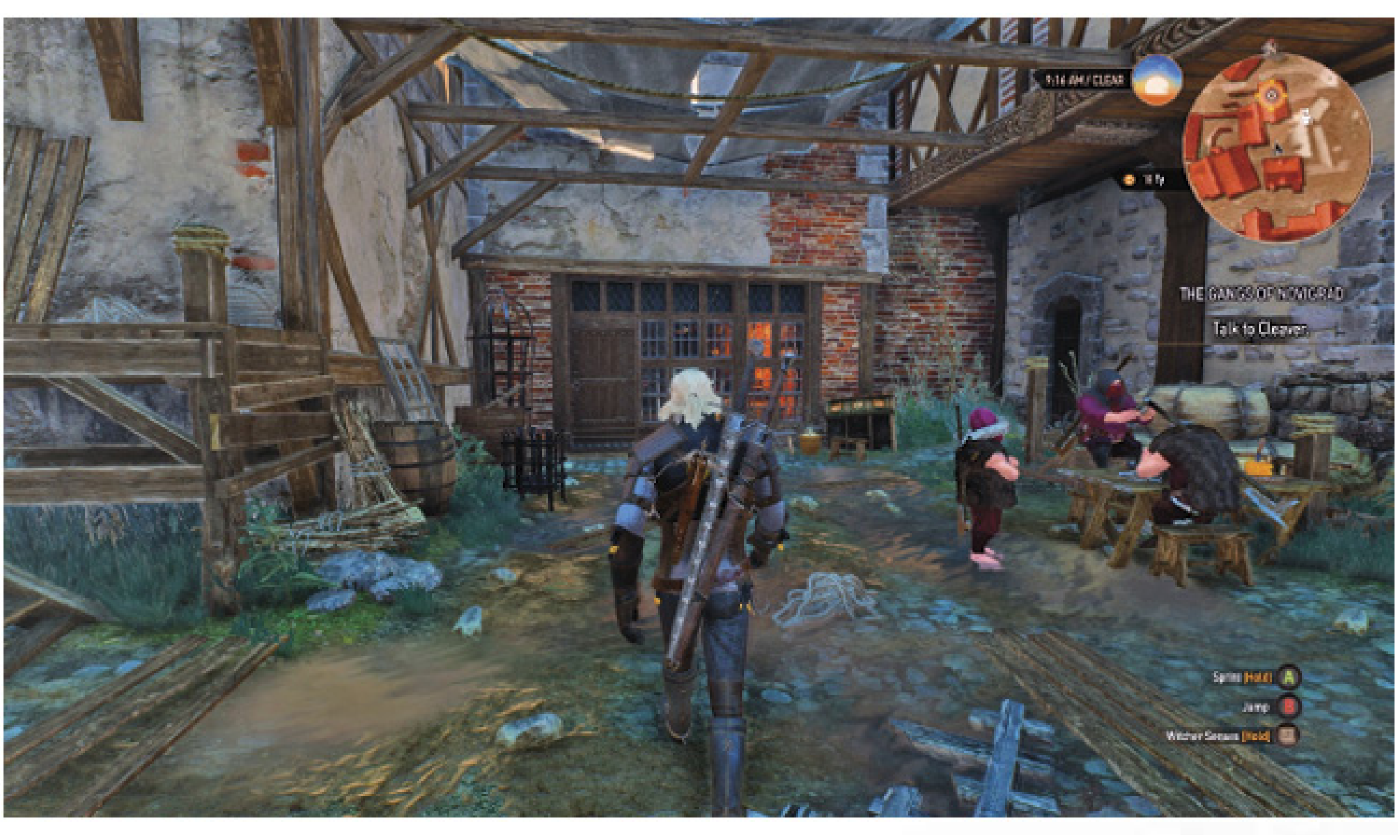
OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Cleaver.
- Nearest Signpost: Hierarch Square.

WHEN AND WHERE TO FIND CLEAVER

This quest starts once you visit Cleaver in his headquarters, adjacent to Hierarch Square, and agree to help him in finding Whoreson. If you already visited (and ransacked) the casino or arena, or you visited Cleaver, but didn't use his dwarven henchmen, you don't receive the back-up during the first part of this quest. However, the quest doesn't fail; simply tell Cleaver you've cleared out the casino and arena already, then ask him for help. The following (optional) path pre-supposes you speak to him before this occurs.

Carlo "Cleaver" Varese



Journey to the Hierarch Square, then locate an unassuming building on the northwestern corner of this area; however, the entrance is difficult to find. Approach from the south, heading north through the stone archway, up the steps, and enter by the leaded windows.

As you arrive, Cleaver is interrogating a hired thug, with predictable results. Then he sits you down at a feast table to talk. He's about to send his men to Whoreson's hideouts. He wants you to lead his dwarves into these locations, and drag the bastard out of his hidey-hole. Agree if you want to continue this quest. Cleaver tells you more about:

- Whoreson's casino in Gildorf.
- The arena beneath the Bits.

His lads will be waiting near both locations. Your quest updates with the following objectives:

OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Cleaver's dwarves outside the casino and/or arena.
- Kill Whoreson's thugs.
- Destroy Whoreson Junior's casino/arena.

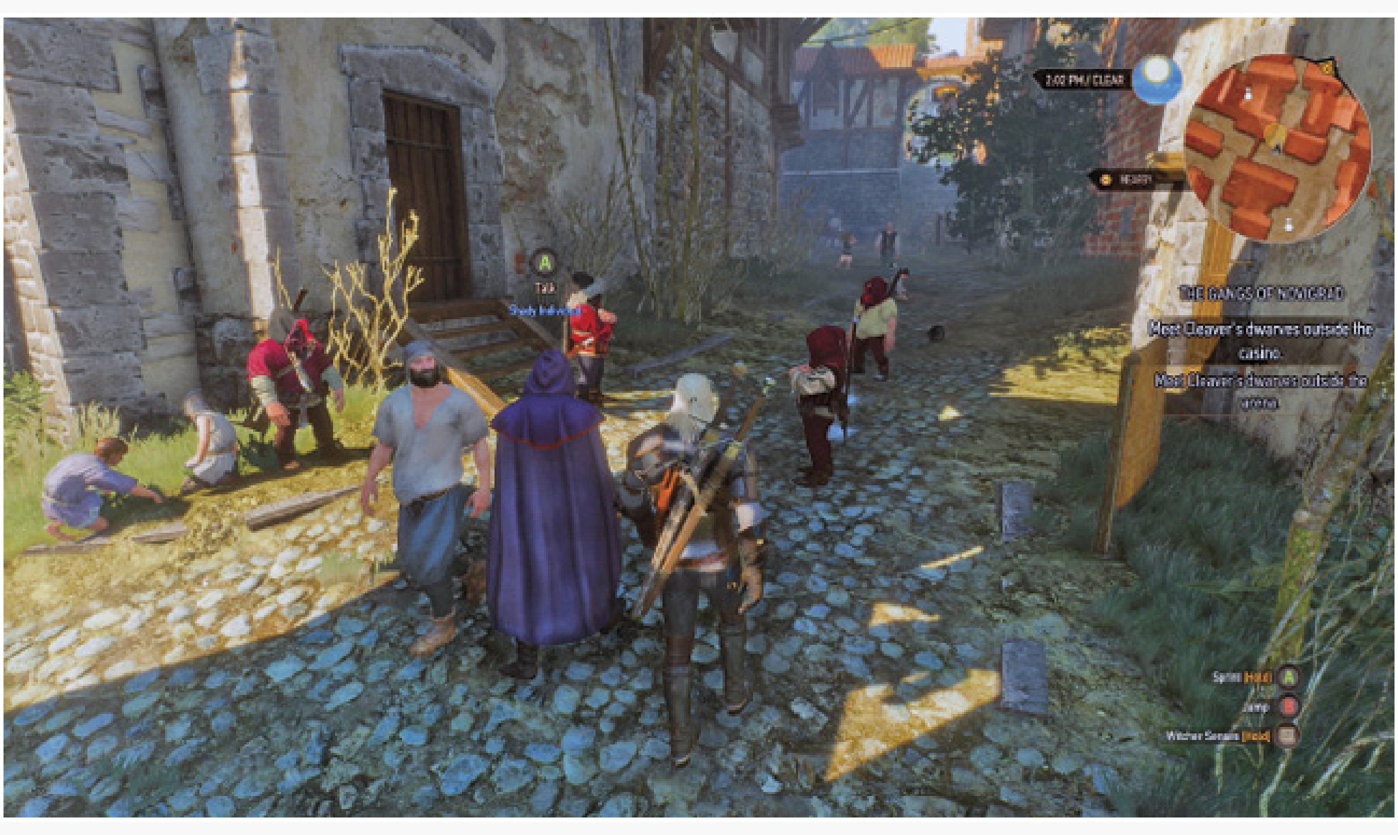
DECISIONS, DECISIONS

Wait! At this point, you may have progressed through Main Quest: Get Junior to a certain point. If you:

- Already visited and completed your investigation (and fight) of the casino, Cleaver's dwarves are only available at the arena.
- Already visited and completed your investigation (and fight) at the arena, Cleaver's dwarves are only available near the casino.
- If you visited and completed both the casino and arena objectives, no dwarves are available.

The following plan of attack is shown "out of order", and is an example of bringing Cleaver's dwarves into the arena instead of infiltrating it on your own. It is the "violent" plan, and purely optional.

If you want the help of Cleaver's dwarves during your investigations of the casino and/or the arena, check your minimap. Run to the indicated location (usually close to the objective), where a group of Cleaver's henchdwarves are waiting your orders. Tell them to come with you and the objective updates.



Now, when you head into either of Whoreson's locations, you forgo any conversations and "investigations," and simply charge in with your dwarven friends providing additional back-up. Choose this option if you favor fighting over talking, but also if you aren't confident you can handle multiple foes on your own.

Afterward, don't forget to return to Cleaver to tell him what happened. Do this before you head off to meet Vernon Roche for the first time. Once either (or both) locations are devoid of Whoreson's men, this quest concludes. Should Main Quest: A Favor for Radovid commence, and you failed to speak to Cleaver for a final time (or at all), this quest fails once you emerge from the Oxenfurt chess club.

Main Quest: Broken Flowers

Quest Conclusion: Raising a Ruckus But Leaving Little Trace

It seems Dandelion hasn't spared Priscilla any details about telling her your story, but you're here on more important matters than your love life. Priscilla tells you Dandelion has planned a heist against an underworld boss named Sigi Reuven, but hasn't been seen since. He's definitely crossed Whoreson Junior (the biggest metaphorical prick in Novigrad), and another of the four bosses that controls the seething underbelly of the city (the others are Carlo "Cleaver" Varese and the King of Beggars). As the quest concludes, you decide that finding Whoreson and Sigi Reuven are your best options.

SECONDARY QUEST: HONOR AMONG THIEVES

LOCATIONS : Putrid Grove (Novigrad)
CHARACTERS : Francis Bedlam, King of Beggars

OBJECTIVE:

- Collect a reward from the King of Beggars for freeing Rico.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts only after you free Rico the Halfling from Whoreson's casino.

WHORESON'S HENCHMEN: ACTIVE IN NOVIGRAD

Beware! Expect to fight at least eight of Whoreson's thugs as you cross the city, from this point onward.

Trek across Novigrad, moving to the hideout of Francis Bedlam, which is at the Putrid Grove where you first met Triss during Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad. Knock at the door and inform the sentry that you're here to see Bedlam (or enter via the sewers). Enter his residence, and speak to Francis, telling him his halfling sang like a Swallow. However, the little fellow is still alive, and the promised reward is handed over as this quest concludes.

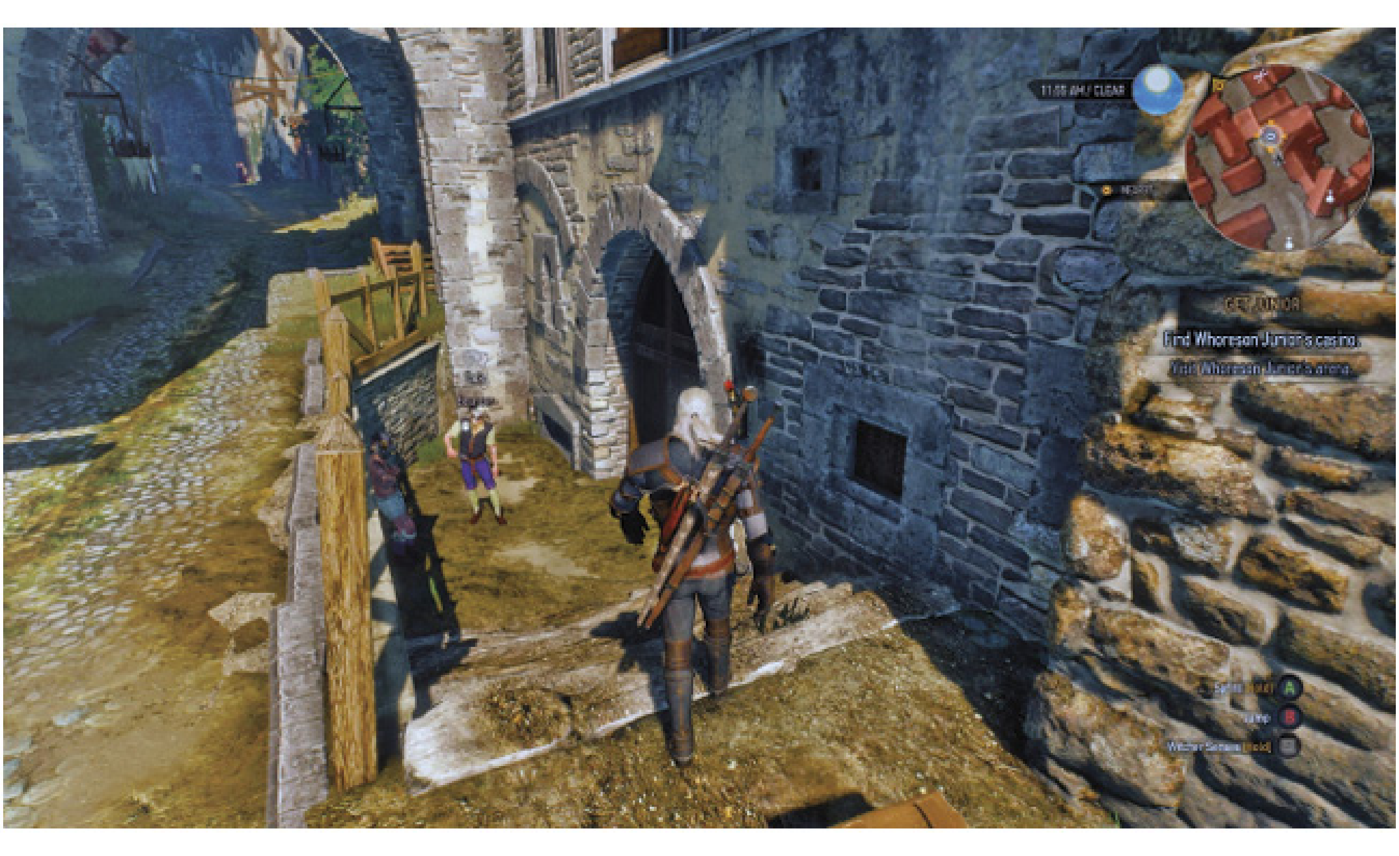
STOUT FELLOWS: CLEAVER'S DWARVEN ALLIANCE

You may be undertaking Secondary Quest: The Gangs of Novigrad, at this point. If you've met Cleaver at his hideout, and agreed to help the dwarves slay as many of Whoreson's men as possible, you can plan an attack with some back-up, as one of the "Vulgar Violenace" options (see below).

Your next port of call is the underground gambling den Whoreson is running in the dilapidated Gildorf District, over on the eastern side of the city. The entrance is guarded by two of Whoreson's bouncers. Talk to these tattooed clowns, who tell you this is an invite-only establishment. You can:

- Make a deal: They laugh at you, and prevent you from entering the casino.
- Threaten them. This turns into violence, and means your entire investigation of the casino occurs using your steel sword rather than subtlety.
- (200 crowns) Bribe them with a bag full of money. This works, unsurprisingly.
- (Axii Delusion Level 3) Flummox them into letting you in, and wishing you luck.

There are two main ways you can complete this objective:



GET JUNIOR
Find Whoreson Junior's casino.
Visit Whoreson Junior's arena.

▶ Peace and Prosperity: You can use cunning and Gwent-playing prowess, and be careful during conversation choices not to arouse suspicion. If you win a round of Gwent against two of the casino patrons, the dealer invites you upstairs to a VIP room.

▶ Vulgar Violence: You can simply use combat to solve your problems, either with Cleaver's dwarves backing you up, or on your own after making an aggressive conversation choice. This leads to a pitched battle throughout the casino with Whoreson's men.

PEACE AND PROSPERITY: ON THE CARDS

OBJECTIVE:

- Play cards with the casino guests.

Assuming you didn't start a fight already (if you did, we'll get to that in a bit), the patrons aren't particularly friendly, while Whoreson's henchmen aren't talking to the likes of you. The dealer at the front desk is also evasive—don't ask for Whoreson, or the situation turns violent. Instead, head up the stairs, past the strumpet and peasants, then sit down with a card player.

Pull up a bench opposite any of the players waiting for a Gwent opponent.

- One of the players tells you this is a high stakes game.
- One of the players tells you he doesn't play with plebs.
- One of the players doesn't like Witchers.

Do not, under any circumstances, tell them you're here to see the owner, mention Whoreson, or be impolite (or the situation turns violent). Be respectful during conversation choices, and when the opportunity presents itself, start a game of Gwent with the player. Now all you need to do is win! Beat two of the players once; emerge victorious in both games of Gwent.

GWENT: IT'S ON THE CARDS

Not mastered this ancient dwarven card game? Then consult these Gwent tactics. Remember that you can win some rare cards and monies from each opponent, and hone your Gwent game, making this the preferred course of action. This, in turn, helps you in your Gwent Secondary Quest: Collect 'em All!.

Once all three players have been bettered (and you can try to beat them as many times as it takes to win), Whoreson's dealer steps in and asks if you're interested in a special high stakes game upstairs. Hmmm… unless you're mistaken, this looks like an interrogation room. It seems Whoreson is on to you, no matter how non-violent you were! Instead of being tortured, you must now resort to savage swordplay and vanquish every enemy throughout this casino! A Vulgar Violent outcome is imminent!

Visiting Whoreson's casino ends in combat no matter how careful or respectful you try to be. Prepare for battle when one of the following activities occur:

▶ You visit Cleaver (Main Quest: The Gangs of Novigrad), agree to slay every one of Whoreson's men, meet up with a group of dwarves prior to visiting the casino, and launch an all-out strike at this establishment without worrying about a game of Gwent. Attack!

▶ You speak to the bouncers, dealer, or any player outside or inside this gambling den, and mention you want to speak to Whoreson. This causes suspicion, and you're deemed a threat. Fight!

▶ You manage to complete three games of Gwent, you're taken upstairs, and instead of a high stakes Gwent game, Whoreson's thugs try to torture you. Big mistake! Slaughtering time!

CASINO RUMBLE

You will face about 12 opponents (Whoreson's men, bandits, and bouncers) during this attack; three on the ground floor, six on the Gwent game floor, and three in the upstairs interrogation room. Expect a much easier fight with Cleaver's dwarves backing you up (but less XP rewarded as there are fewer kills).

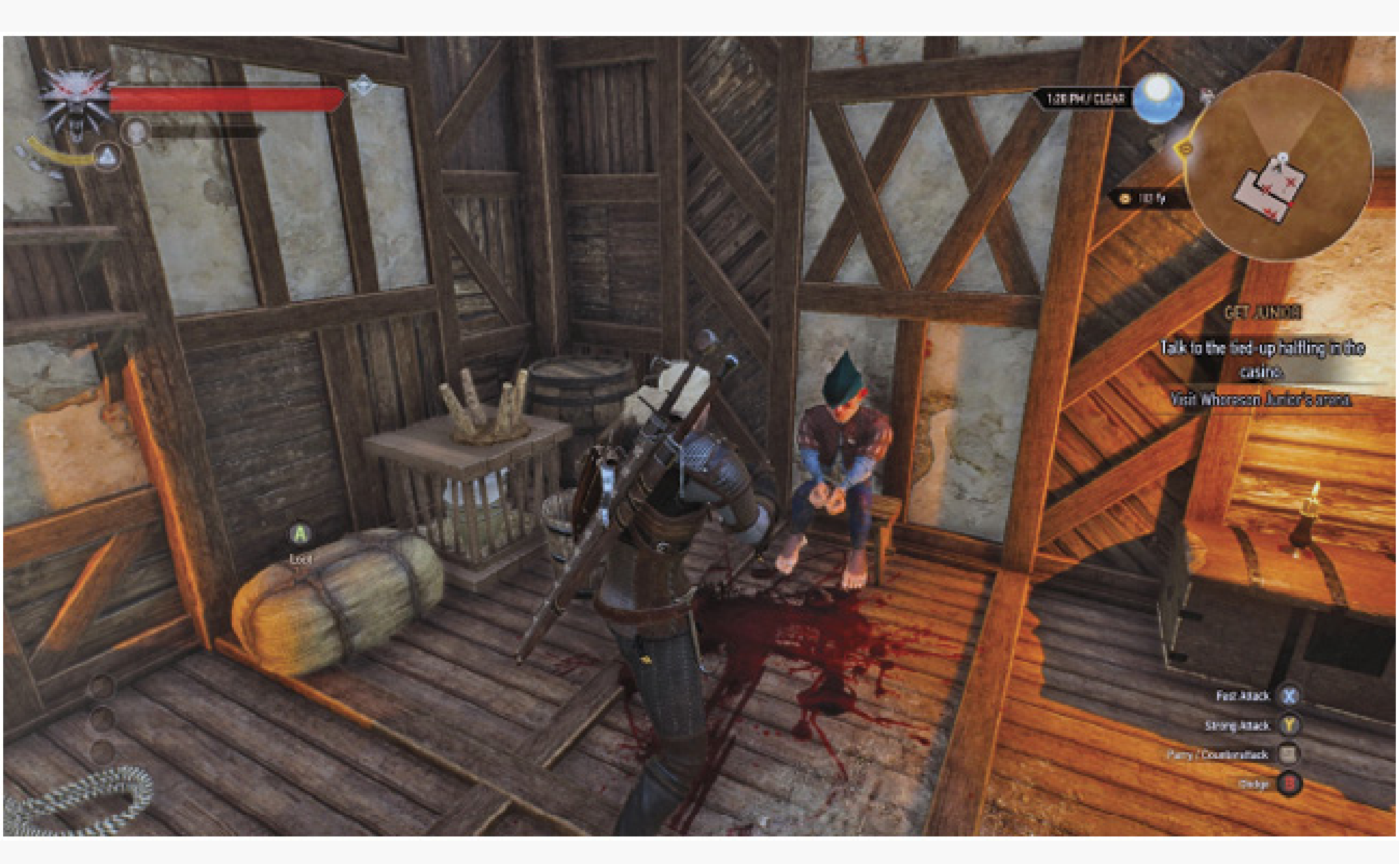
CASINO CONCLUSION: RICO THE SQUEALER

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to the tied-up halfling in the casino.
- Talk to Dijkstra about Whoreson's ties to the Redanians.
- Talk to Vernon Roche in the partisan camp.

RIco

Once the massacre is over, return to the top-floor interrogation room, and locate the bound halfling with serious facial contusions. After some attemps at wit, Rico tells you he was mistaken for one of Bedlam's moles. He's learned Whoreson is working with the Redanians. At the end of the chat, choose to let Rico go. Even though you may not trust him, Rico is an ally of Bedlam (the King of Beggars), and he tells you to visit him for a reward after you cut Rico's bonds. This begins Secondary Quest: Honor Among Thieves. Main Quest: Get Junior continues.



GET JUNIOR

Before starting this new quest, head back to the Bathhouse, and visit Dijkstra in his library office. There's a wealth of conversation options here (about your investigation progression, Dijkstra's own contact with Radovid, and chats about Radovid plucking the eyes out of the sorceress Philippa Eilhart), but tell him that Junior is working with the Redanians. Answer how you wish. You ask Dijkstra if he has a contact among the Redanians. He doesn't, but you do! Remember the former commander of the Blue Stripes? Vernon Roche! He's holed up in a camp near Oxenfurt.

At this point, you have multiple objectives to be completed in any order. You can:

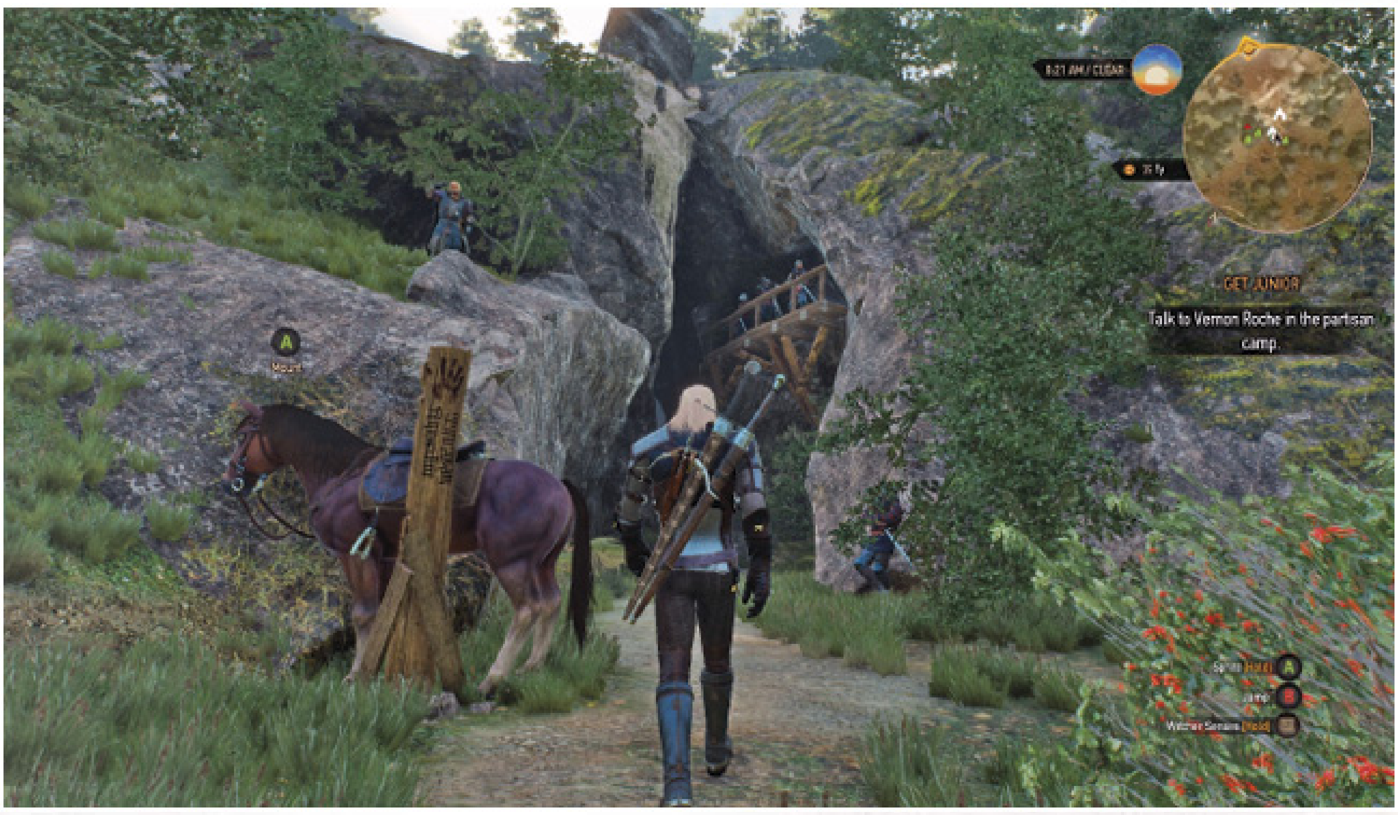
Vernon Roche: Temeria's Last Hope

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Vernon Roche in the partisan camp.
- Nearest Signpost: Temerian Partisan Hideout.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This objective begins once you either complete your investigation of the casino, or the arena, or both.



Time to leave Novigrad; summon Roach and gallop southeast toward Oxenfurt. In the rolling hills and scattered woodland just north of this second city, is a rocky gorge. This is the Temerian Partison Hideout, where two old friends are ready to be reacquainted with. Speak to the guard named Hortensio. You can:

- Have a slightly tense chat about hornbills, after which Vernon waves you in.
- (Axii Delusion Level 2) Flummox Hortensio into letting you into the camp.
- (Witcher 2 Save Game or conversation with General Voorhis during Main Quest: Imperial Audience; if you sided with Iorveth in Witcher 2): Hortensio challenges you to a fistfight, after which you're let in.

Ves strides in to talk to Vernon about saving some fleeing villagers, but Roche's threadbare army is stretched too thin to help. Ves sees you, rolls her eyes, and leaves. Speak to Roche, asking what he is up to, and how he wound up here, but more importantly, tell him you're looking for Whoreson. You tell him he counts Radovid as an ally, as does the man you seek. As luck would have it, Roche is on his way to meet a Redanian contact. He agrees to bring you with him.

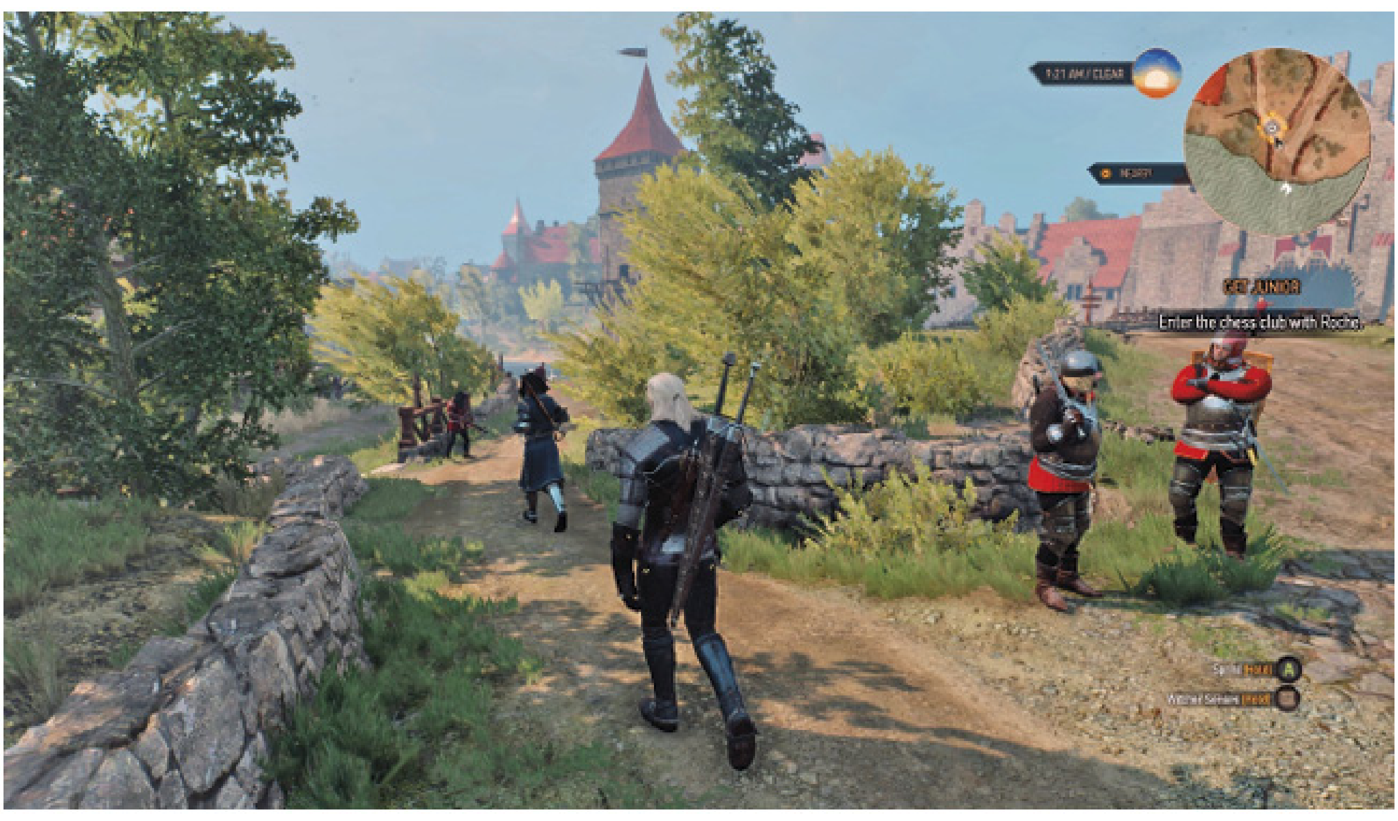
Main Quest: Get Junior (Continued)

King Takes Pawn

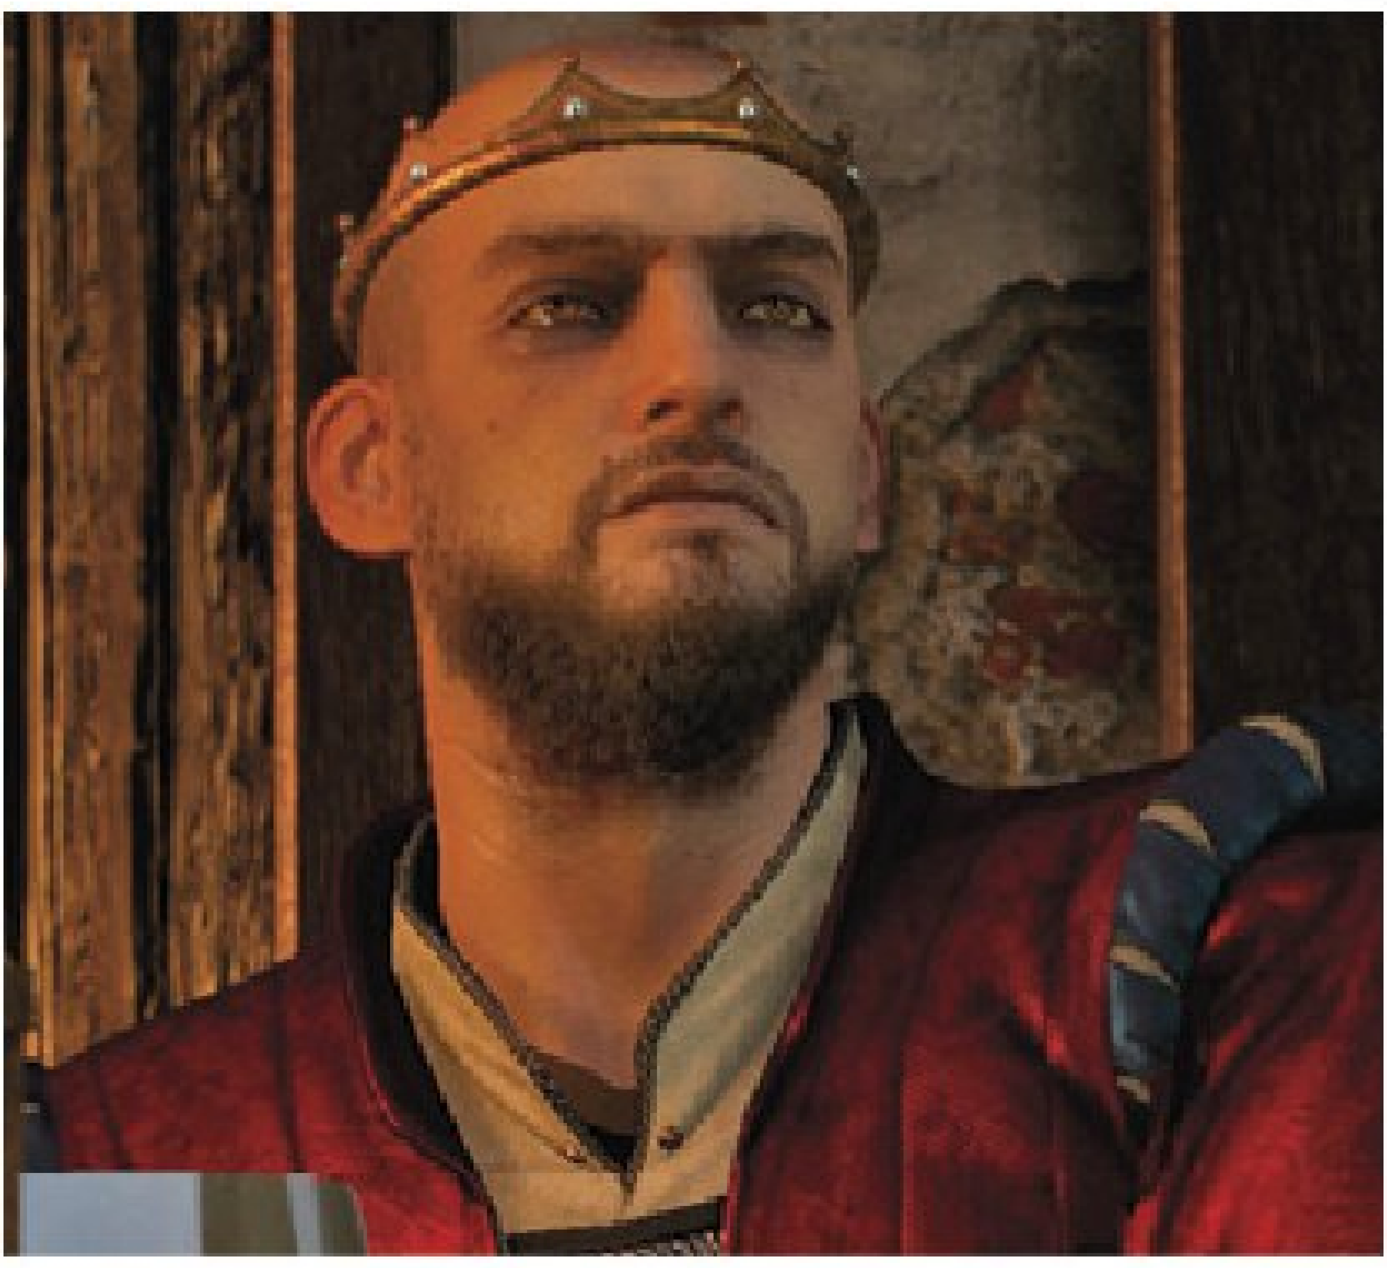
OBJECTIVE:

- Meet Roche by the bridge in Oxenfurt.
- Enter the chess club with Roche.
- Nearest Signpost: Novigrad Gate

Leave the rag-tag band of Roche's followers, and gallop south across the fields of hay, and across the eastern bridge (confusingly known as Novigrad Gate, despite being in Oxenfurt!), slowing to a canter as you spot Roche on the other side. Get off your horse, and tell him "let's go." Dismount and follow Roche. You're heading roughly south, passing numerous Redanian guards. In fact, there's a large number of them, as well as witch hunters. Something isn't right.



It seems the club has been graced with the presence of King Radovid himself. He professes not to be a fan of the game, as it doesn't mirror real life. He asks you why he plays chess. Answer him however you wish as the question is mostly rhetorical. He bids you sit with him while he strains his metaphors and shows his madness. Answer as you like (regarding your understanding of what he speaks about). Radovid tells you a hidden truth; that a monarch is always surrounded by fools. Answer again, then Roche interrupts you by telling the king you're about to explain why you're here. Tell him you're looking for Whoreson.



King Radovid V

The king is surprisingly helpful, letting you know he's placed Whoreson in an Oxenfurt mansion. To enter, you must tell the guards you've come about the new whores. "Fresh women" are constantly being sent there, and aren't treated well, apparently. When you ask why this information was so easy to come by, the king tells you he expects a favor from you in return. You will be contacted in due course. This occurs as the last of these sister quests. Once outside, you both remark on Radovid's descent into madness. Then Roche requests you return to his camp at some point; he has a terrible problem with Ves and needs someone to talk some sense into her.

QUESTING DECISIONS

Main Quest: Get Junior (Continued)

Arena: Into the Pit

OBJECTIVE:

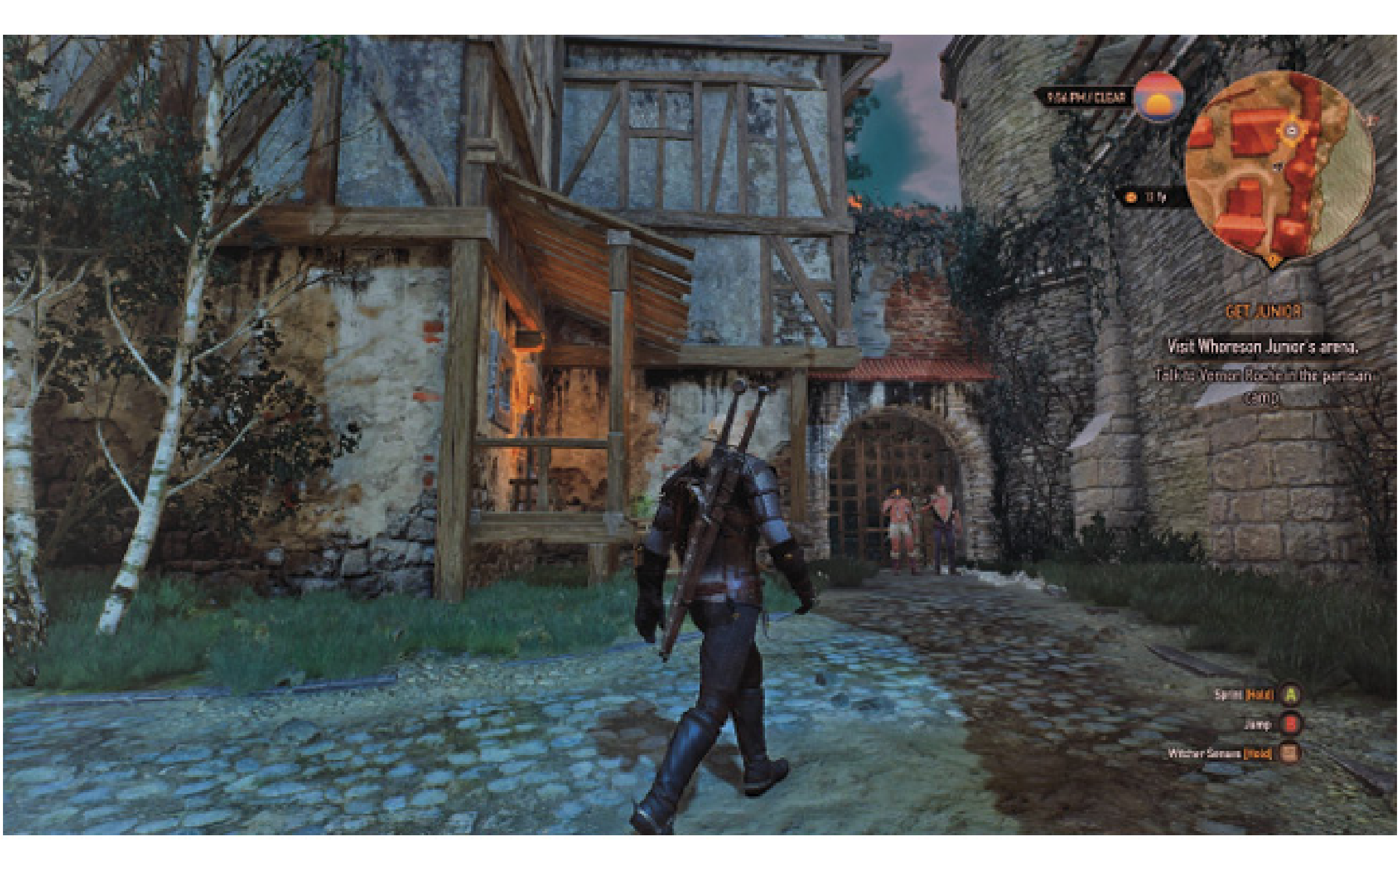
- Visit Whoreson Junior's arena.

QUESTING DECISIONS

You may be undertaking Secondary Quest: The Gangs of Novigrad, at this point. If you've met Cleaver at his hideout, and agreed to help the dwarves slay as many of Whoreson's men as possible, you can plan an attack with some back-up, as one of the "Senseless Slaughter" options.

Your next area of investigation is the subterranean sewer section in the Bits district, which Whoreson Junior has turned into an illegal fighting arena. Head to the northeastern part of the city. The gated entrance is guarded by two of Whoreson's bouncers. Speak to these inked idiots, who aren't about to let the likes of you in here. You can:

- (100 Crowns) Bribe them with a bag full of money. This works, unsurprisingly.
- (Axii Delusion Level 3) Flummox them into letting you in, telling them you're here to fight.
- (Invitation) Wander The Bits District, looking for a poor fellow in this impoverished slum being set upon by thugs. Expect the fracas in the area close to the arena entrance, and the Vilmerius Hospital. Loot the corpse of this victim—a man named Zdenek, who you may remember from previous adventures—and show this invitation to the bouncers.
- Threaten them. This turns into violence, and means your entire investigation of the arena occurs using your steel sword rather than subtlety.



GET JUNIOR

There are two main ways you can complete this objective:

- Arena Agitator—You can speak to the man in charge of the arena; Igor (also known as Hook). Then you can face a variety of opponents in combat for prestige and coin, before concluding your investigation.
- Senseless Slaughter—You can simply use combat to solve your problems, either with Cleaver's dwarves backing you up, or on your own.

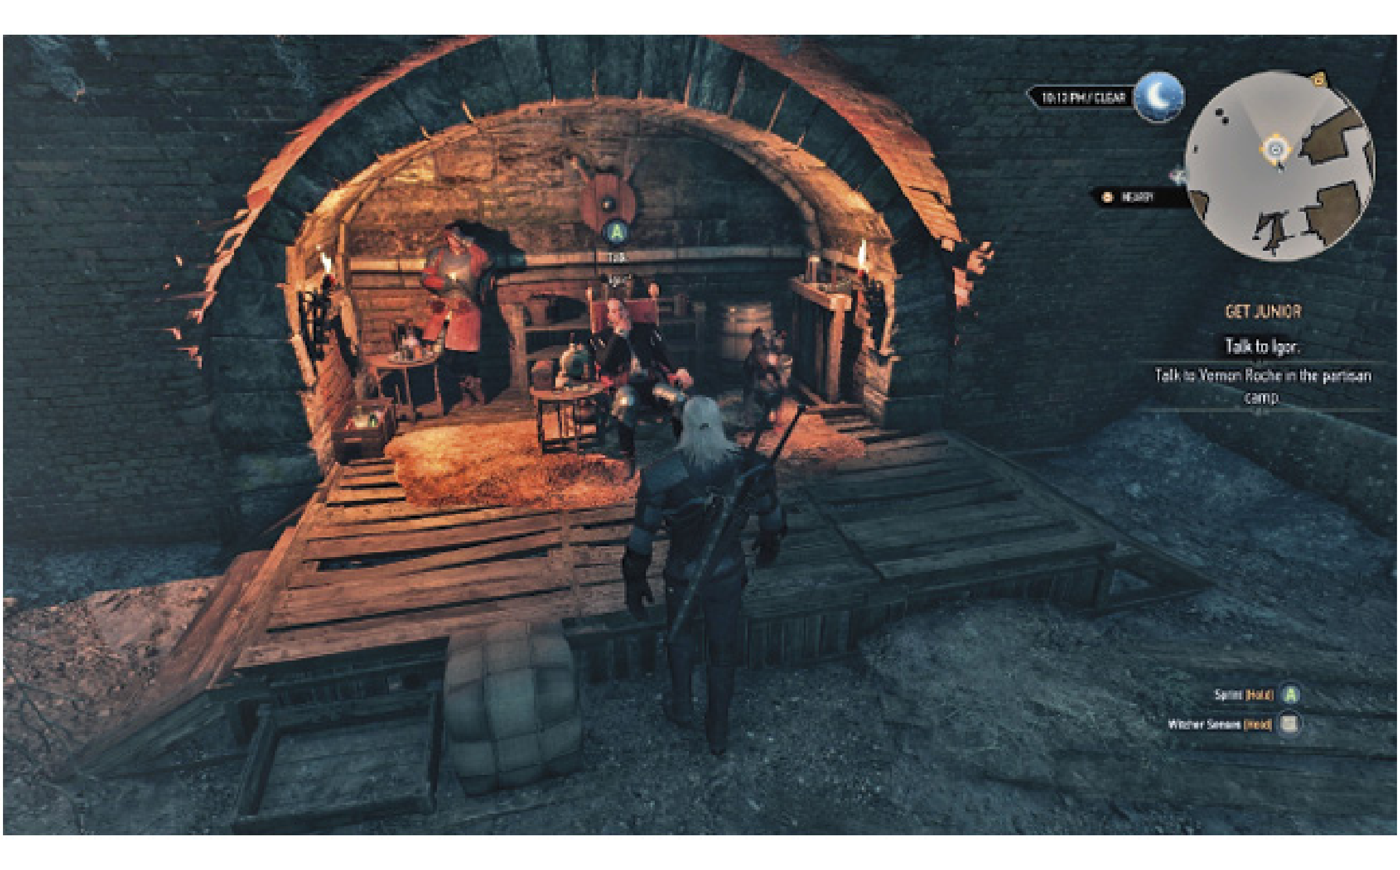
ARENA AGITATOR: A MURDEROUS MUTANT!

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Igor.
- Fight in the ring to prove you'd make a good bodyguard.
- Defeat your opponent(s).
- Survive the fight.

Igor the "Hook"

Descend the sewer steps, through two gates, and listen to the henchmen talking about the proposed fights scheduled in the arena. Head south, passing some fisstech addicts, then head east passing a locked gate on your left, passing guards and gaining an audience with Igor himself. You tell him you need work; perhaps as protection. Igor seems interested. Don't mention Whoreson's name, but otherwise answer however you wish. He wants to test your mettle. Survive three bouts in the arena, and you'll be put to work. Agree to this. You have time to prepare after agreeing.



MEDITATION AND PREPARATION

Feel free to prepare and meditate for a number of (sanctioned) fights to come, before visiting Igor himself.

You appear in the arena (and there is no escape). Igor whips up the crowd with talk of your murderous nature, and then introduces your opponent(s):

Bout #1: Gustav Roene: A hardy man, but with little combat prowess. You can:

Swiftly kill him. The crowd goes wild.

Spare him as he has three children. The crowd isn't happy, but Gustav is; he helps you during all the subsequent bouts!

GET JUNIOR

Bout #2: The Hairy Brothers: Two Skelligers who are double the trouble. Although you may yell at the last remaining brother to yield, he is too proud, and must be slain. The crowd goes apoplectic with bloodlust!

Bout #3: A Wyvern appears, and must be brought down to earth with a thug (and possibly a Sign or crossbow bolt). Dodge, weave, and watch that breath! The mob is freaking out!

Bout #4: Wait, wasn't this three rounds? Well, you're tested with a pair of Endrega. Consult the Bestiary chapter of this guide if slaying these terrible insects is beyond your competence.

Bout #5: Boris! A large lumbering bloodthirsty bear pads out to maul you. Return the favor, and expect a protracted combat. End him, and you conclude your career as a pit fighter.

As the applause dies down, a figure appears on the balcony above. He introduces himself as Cyprian Willey, known to most as Whoreson Junior. Answer as you wish. Whoreson is about to leave when Igor comes running into the arena. Cleaver's dwarves are in the tunnels! Whoreson orders all of them killed. Along with you! Instead of a peaceful solution, you must now resort to brutal bloodshed and slay every enemy throughout this sewer! A Senseless Slaughter is inevitable!

Turn from the throne and head west down the tunnel. Turn right (north) through the arch grating. Turn right again (east) and run down the sloping tunnel, which curves to the right (south). Then turn left (east) and locate the scraping on the ground of the alcove along the far wall. This signifies a secret door. The wall torch to open it is on the wall, just right of you (left of the rubble pile). Light and interact with it. Step through the wall opening, and gather the following from the secret stash:

ITEM: Crowns, Quest Item: Mysterious Letter

OBJECTIVE:

Access your Inventory menu and read the letter; it tells of King Radovid's displeasure at Whoreson for not ridding Novigrad of the other members of the "Big Four" (Dijkstra, Cleaver, and Bedlam). It is signed "M." This knowledge should definitely interest Dijkstra, so return to the Bathhouse, and visit Dijkstra in his library office. OBJECTIVE:

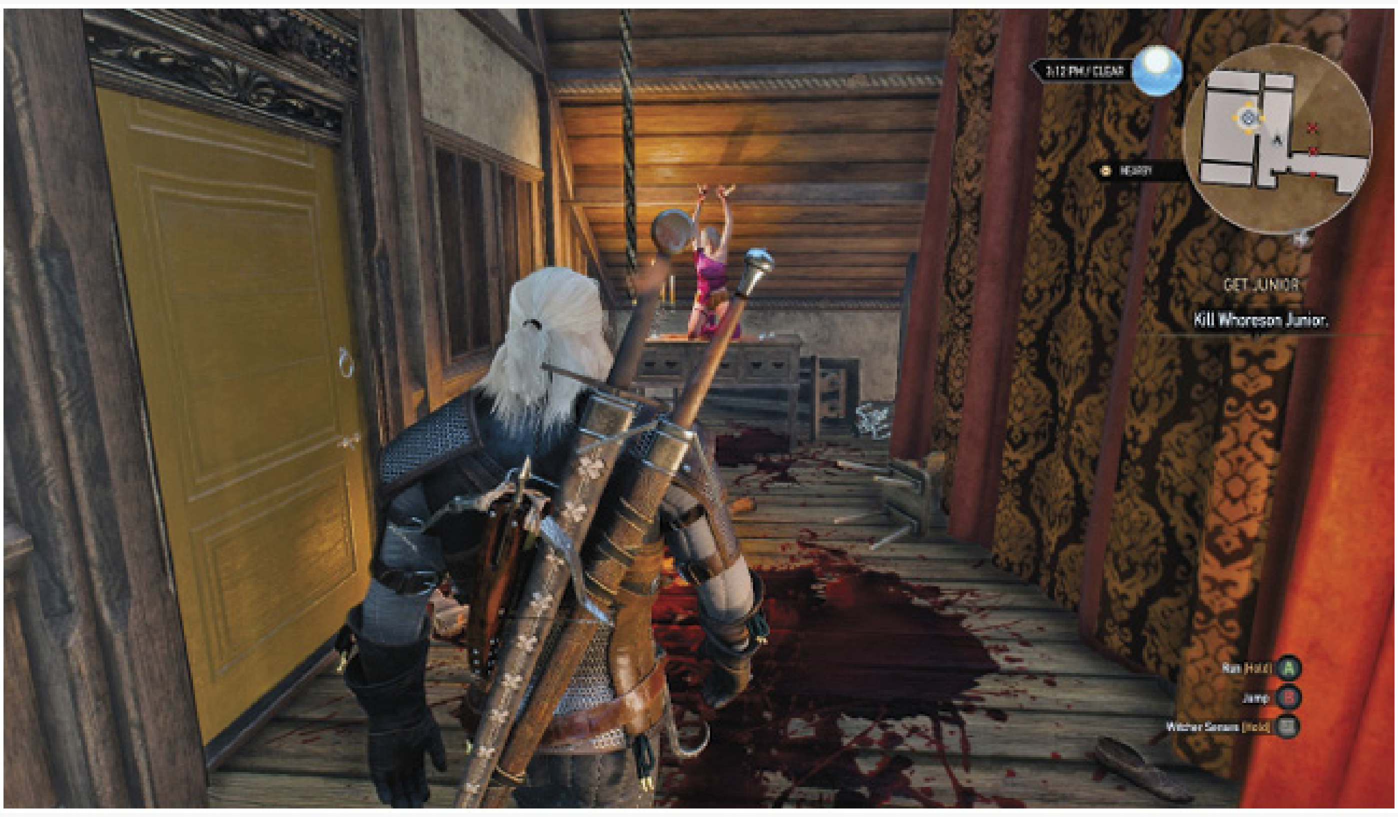
- Kill Whoreson Junior.

Look for a set of stairs in the northwestern room of the mansion that leads up (east) to some grim findings on the upper floor. Use your Witcher Senses if you wish, and examine a horrific act this degenerate inflicted on a woman of Oxenfurt. Then open the bathroom door.

Cyprian Willey (Whoreson Junior)



You catch Whoreson with his pants down (literally). The corpses of tortured prostitutes are strewn about the chamber like discarded clothing. It takes a single punch to put Whoreson on his back. After some vicious pummeling, Whoreson pleads for you to stop. Tell him you're here to kill or talk to him. There's more pleading. Eventually, he agrees to tell you about Ciri and Dandelion, who apparently came to him looking for help in repairing a phylactery. He obliged, and in return, they were to steal Reuven's treasure. When they failed to return, he flew off the handle, kidnapped their Doppler (Dudu), and kept the phylactery, which is on a nearby table. Main Quest: Get Junior temporarily stops.

QUESTING DECISIONS

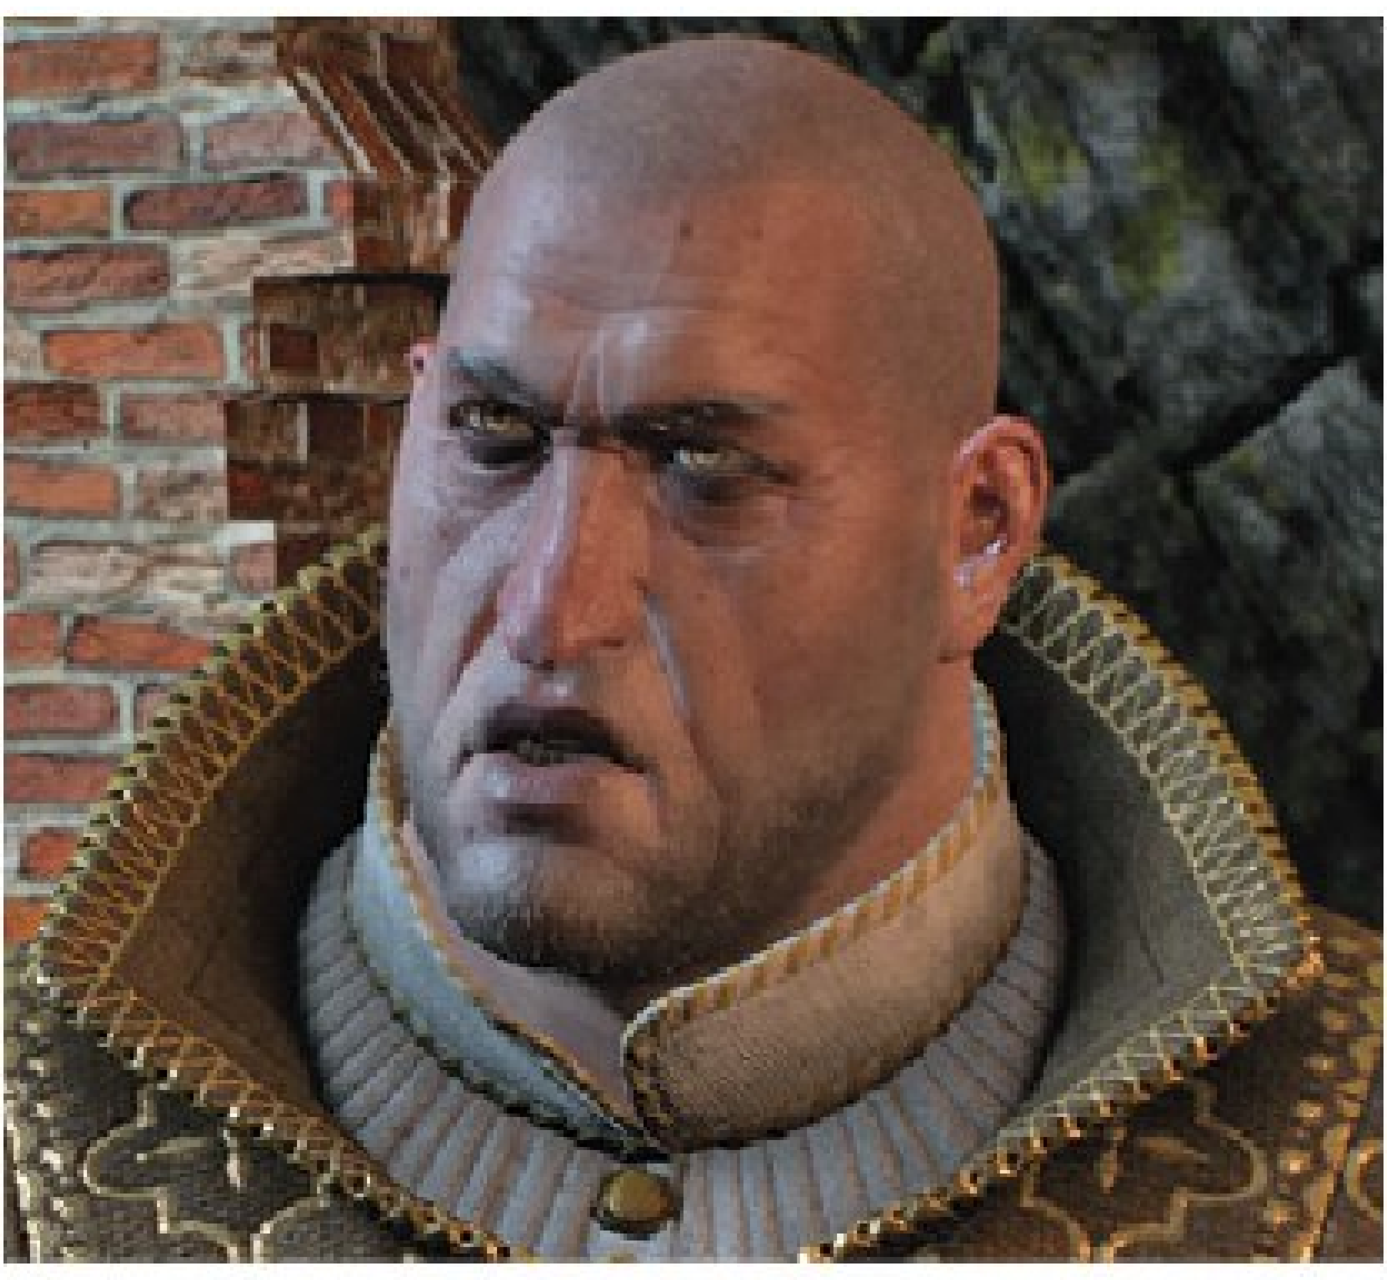
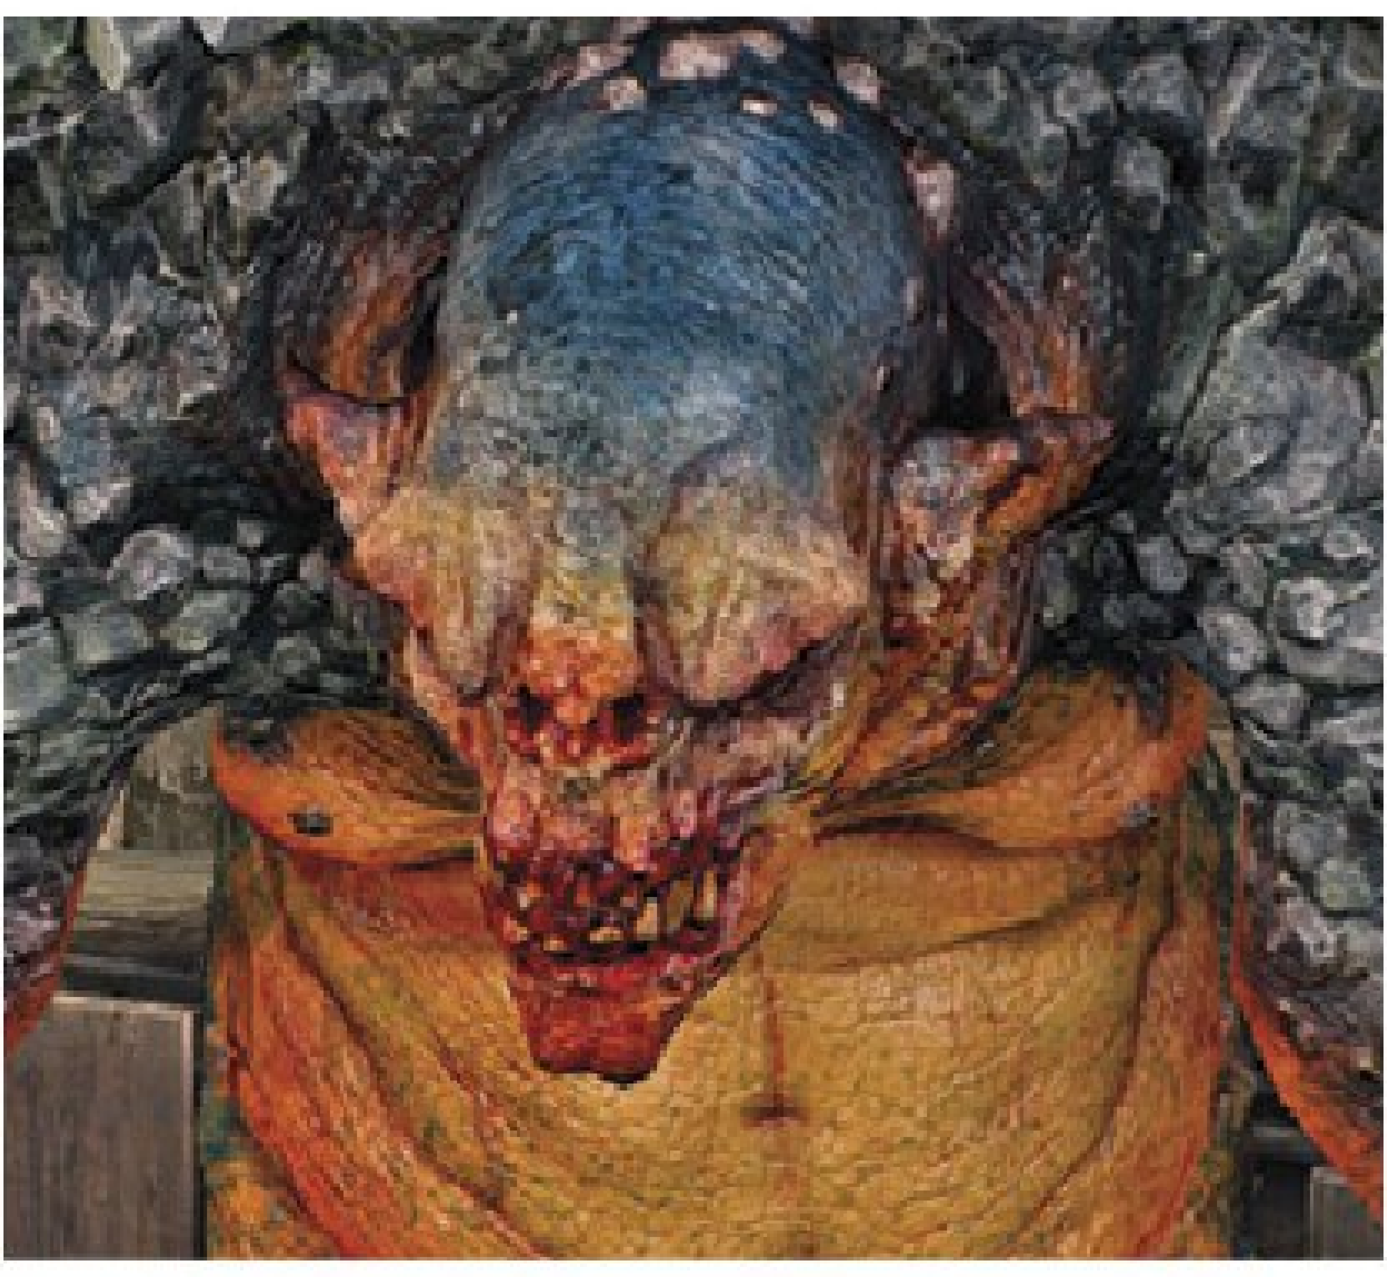
This Quest only becomes accessible once you start Main Quest: Get Junior, visit Sigismund Dijkstra's Bathhouse in Novigrad, fight off Whoreson's henchmen, and gather information regarding Whoreson afterward.

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Dijkstra
- Nearest Signpost: North of Ubbizi Townhouse.

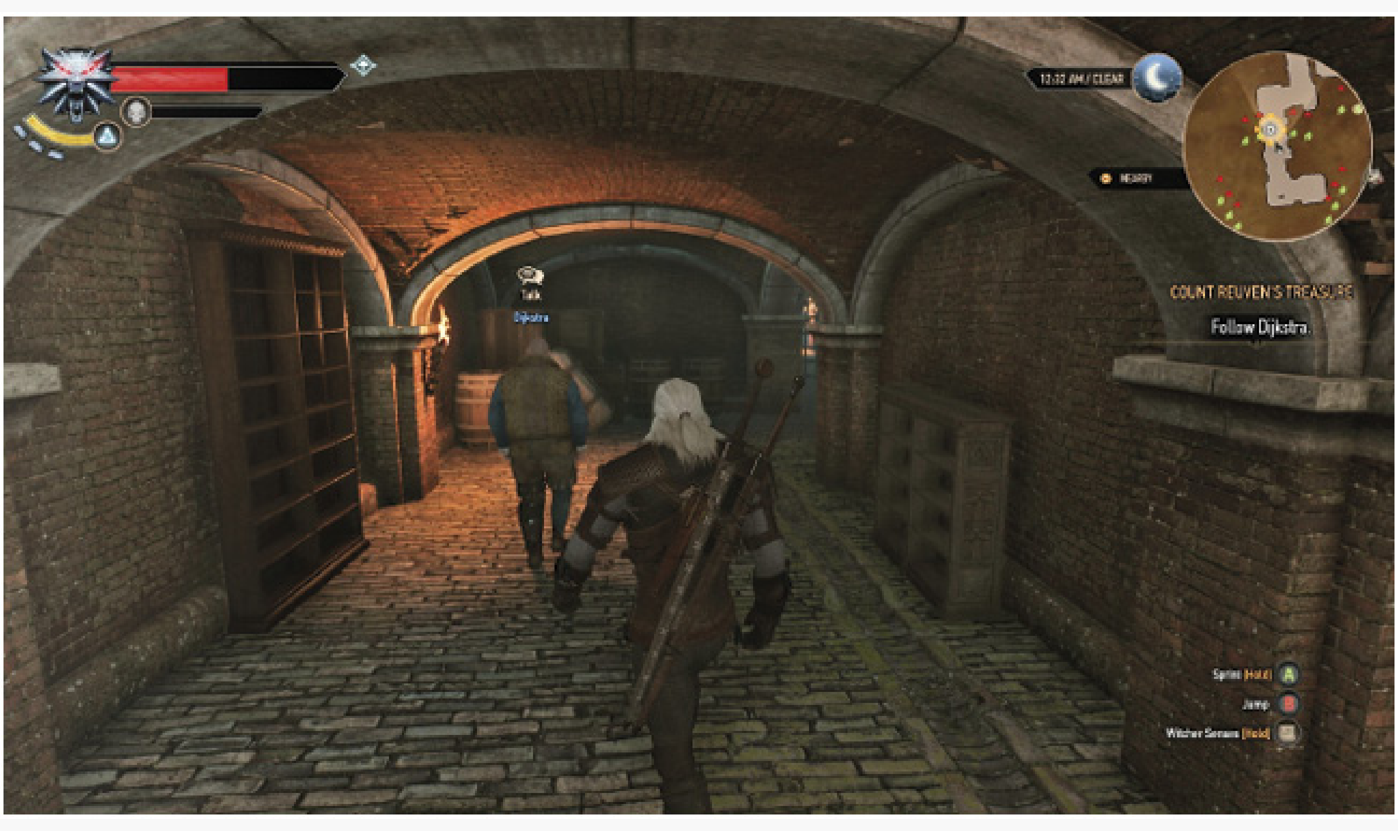


Sigi Reuven (Sigismund Dijkstra)



Bart the Rock Troll

After the bathhouse fracas, and you've dressed and met Dijkstra to glean information regarding Whoreson from him. Now ask about Dandelion. After some Grade-A sarcasm, he reckons Dandelion is dead. Answer him as you wish regarding a possible beef between them, and Dijkstra offers a surprising annoyance at the standard of Dandelion's recent poetry. After this additional sarcasm, Dijkstra says he has other problems to worry about. Problems you might be able to help him with. Ask him what he needs (or mention payment, leading to a short conversation about you helping the Emhyr), and he walks you to the pillared bathhouse chamber, and inserts a key into one of the columns. Water drains from the central well.



A secret ladder and passage down into the sewers beneath the bathhouse is revealed. Climb down the ladder, keeping your sword sheathed (or Dijkstra orders you to put it away), and follow him along the dank brick corridors… to a rock troll named Bart, who is banging its head against a sewer wall. Ask about Dijkstra's troll (he won it in a card game), then concentrate on the hole in the wall leading to the fast-moving effluent tunnel. Beyond it is Dijkstra's vault, which was filled with countless valuables, until someone made off with most of it. Agree to help and ask about:

- Witnesses (none other than Bart and the thieves, and the bathhouse didn't report any incidents on the day of the robbery).
- The approximate value (Dijkstra doesn't immediately tell you, but after you insist, he rattles off a list of valuables that could pay for a small invasion force).
- The hole in the wall; Bart attempts to explain ("boom" referring to explosion that blew open the hole in the wall, and "bad mushrooms" referring to pops mold with its toxic spores that grow in the sewers. They knocked the troll out and would kill most others).
- Now ask about who he used to track the thieves down. He mentions a lummox named Fonce—they both took an antidote to the mushroom poison, and explored the tunnels until Fonce vomited up the antidote and lost his protection, dying in the process. As he was dragging the body out, Dijkstra saw something monstrous in the poison mists, but can't elaborate further (though he can insult you some more). Now start your sewer exploration, taking the remaining antidotes from Dijkstra before you go.

ITEM: Quest Item: Pops' Mold Antidote (3)

A SWIG BEFORE THE SEWER TOUR

This antidote is critical to surviving the sewer exploration. Take this when you're close to the mold spore clouds. It lasts for 360 seconds.

Main Quest: A Favor for Radovid

A Contract from the Mage Murderer

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

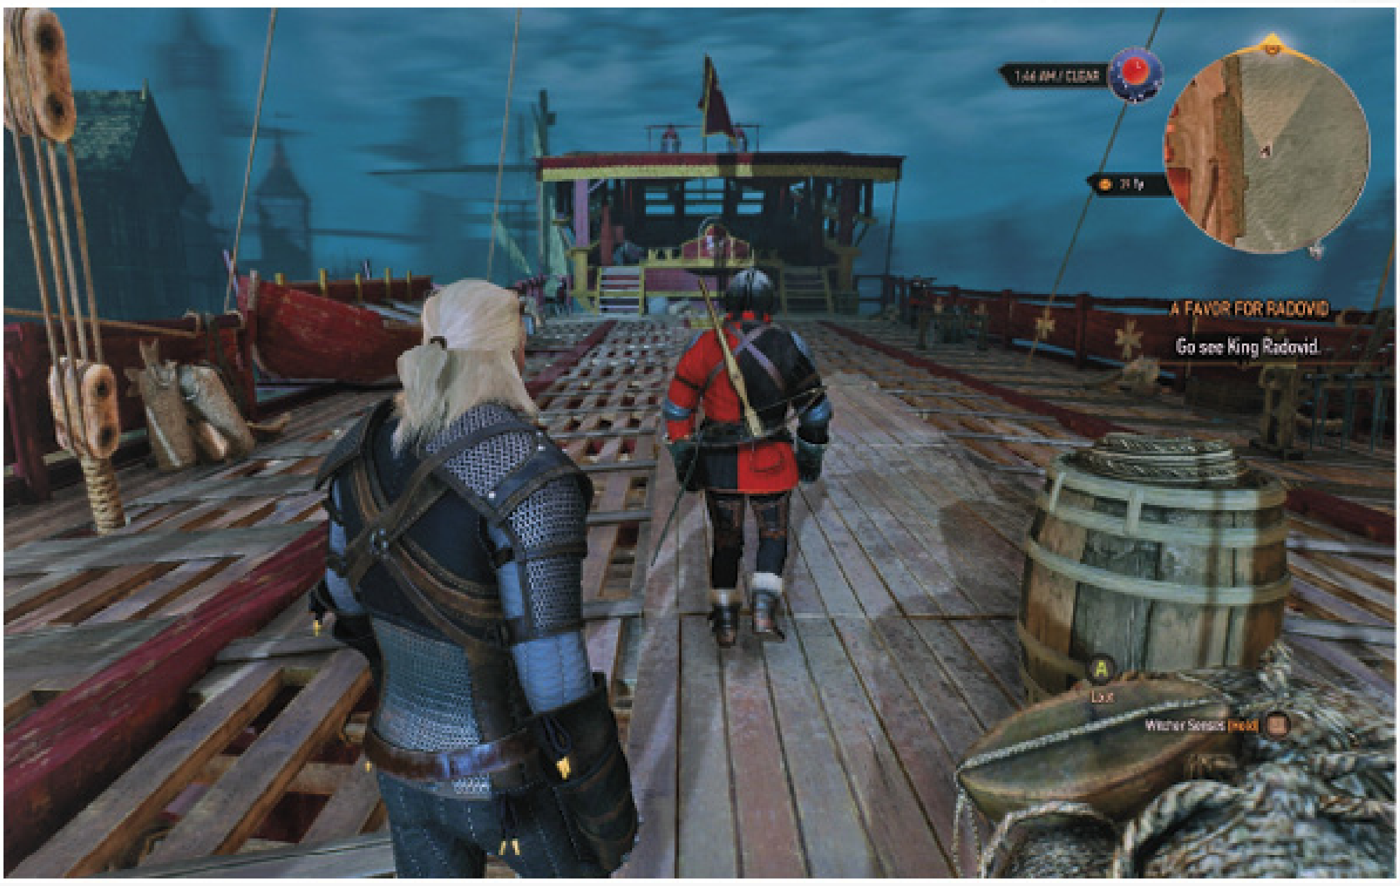
MAIN QUEST: A FAVOR FOR RADOVID

LOCATIONS : Oxenfurt Port, HMS Oxenfurt-Tretogor
CHARACTERS : Redanian Soldiers, King Radovid V
ENEMIES : None

OBJECTIVE:

- Go see King Radovid.
- Nearest Signpost: Oxenfurt Port

Leave Whoreson's estate via the entrance you entered, and you're stopped in the street by some heavily-armored Redanian soldiers. It seems Radovid requires your presence at once. There's no point in stalling; you're taken across town to the HMS Oxenfurt-Tretogor, an impressive galleon. You leave your weapons and must stroll across the deck, following the guard.



Radovid is waiting. Speak to the sunken-eyed weasel of a ruler. He isn't one to mince words; he wants the sorceress Philippa Elhart found. He ordered her eyes gouged out, but this apparently hasn't dissuaded her troublemaking and recent escape. He wants her alive, and brought to him. He no longer trusts the Lodge of Sorceresses. You can answer however you wish, but the results are the same; travel into the mountains and find her.

At this point, Secondary Quest: Redania's Most Wanted begins. Simply complete this quest, and A Favor for Radovid concludes at the same time. All that remains is to head to the Kingfisher Inn (off Hierarch Square), locate Priscilla in her bedroom, and tell her what you learned about Dandelion and Dudu. This quest now concludes.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically after Main Quest: Get Junior concludes.

Main Quest: Get Junior (Continued)

End: Got Junior

Ask Whoreson what happened to Ciri (and Dudu); he has no idea about the latter, but Ciri escaped. Whoreson pleads for his life. You can:

- Kill him. This has an effect on Act III: Main Quest: Payback, and you can speak to Dudu about your actions then.
- Let him live, and incur the wrath of the other Big Four. This has an effect on Act III: Main Quest: Payback, and you can speak to Whoreson then.

After optionally speaking to Bart and gathering almost no useful information from the rock troll (aside from the fact it heard a hissing noise from the wall while it was taking a "turdy dump"), begin your Witcher Sense inspection of the scenery:

- The blast in the wall indicates it was blown open from the inside. The bathhouse drain pipes converge at this point.
- Step through the blasted wall into the sewer tunnel and search the initial chamber. There is a grate, and bits of pipe clear across the chamber—it was a powerful blast. Perhaps a bomb, and not a spell? The objective updates when you find both these clues.

CHECK YOUR MINIMAP

The current now appears on your minimap; follow it!

Now head to the open grating (east), and take one of the Pops' Mold Antidotes to continue.

- There are three pipe gratings on the outside curve of the tunnel (to your right).

Further down the tunnel, prepare to slice apart a drowner lurking in the poison mists. Close by is an easily-overlooked emerald ring. Evidence that the thieves used this tunnel to escape. Continue down the tunnel to a connecting chamber. Slice two more drowners apart, then examine a corpse. This is Fonce, the thug Dijkstra hired. Follow the current and tackle two more drowners ahead.

OBJECTIVES:

- Use your Witcher Senses to search the sewer room for evidence.
- Return to the bathhouse and summarize with Dijkstra.
- Look for clues about the thieves in the bathhouse side rooms using your Witcher Senses.

Continue through an open gate into a large, wooden-walled storage chamber with a couple more drowners, and steps up to a balcony. There's no need to ascend. Check the iron gate to the west (along the sewer current) to find part of a silver cylinder with runes etched into it. A bomb part? Just beyond the gate is an exit to the canals of Novigrad (where the thieves probably loaded their loot onto a barge).

Your objective updates; retrace your steps through the poison mist, back into the cellars and pass Bart, then climb the ladder up into the columned bathhouse room. Now, maneuver your way through the bathhouse to Dijkstra's library office.

Happen the Eunuch

Tell him you're done investigating. You show him the bomb fragments, and inform him of the ingredients you smelled. Answer however you wish. After some talk about chemical reactions and sugar, tell him the bomb was found inside the pipe, and in pieces. You both deduce someone flushed the bomb down from a bathhouse pool inside this building. Use your Witcher Senses to uncover the following:

- There is a film of oil on top of one of the pools, southeast of your starting location. On the pool step opposite the oil is a silver lid matching the cylinder base you found. You summon Dijkstra.

Dijkstra tells Happen (his eunuch) to drain the pool. Ask about Happen's loyalty if you wish (it is beyond question), then inspect the pool. The grate has been removed. Happen rattles off the names of those who used the pool on the day of the explosion: Margrave Henckel? Impossible! He's been dead a year! Time to search his home, and pronto!

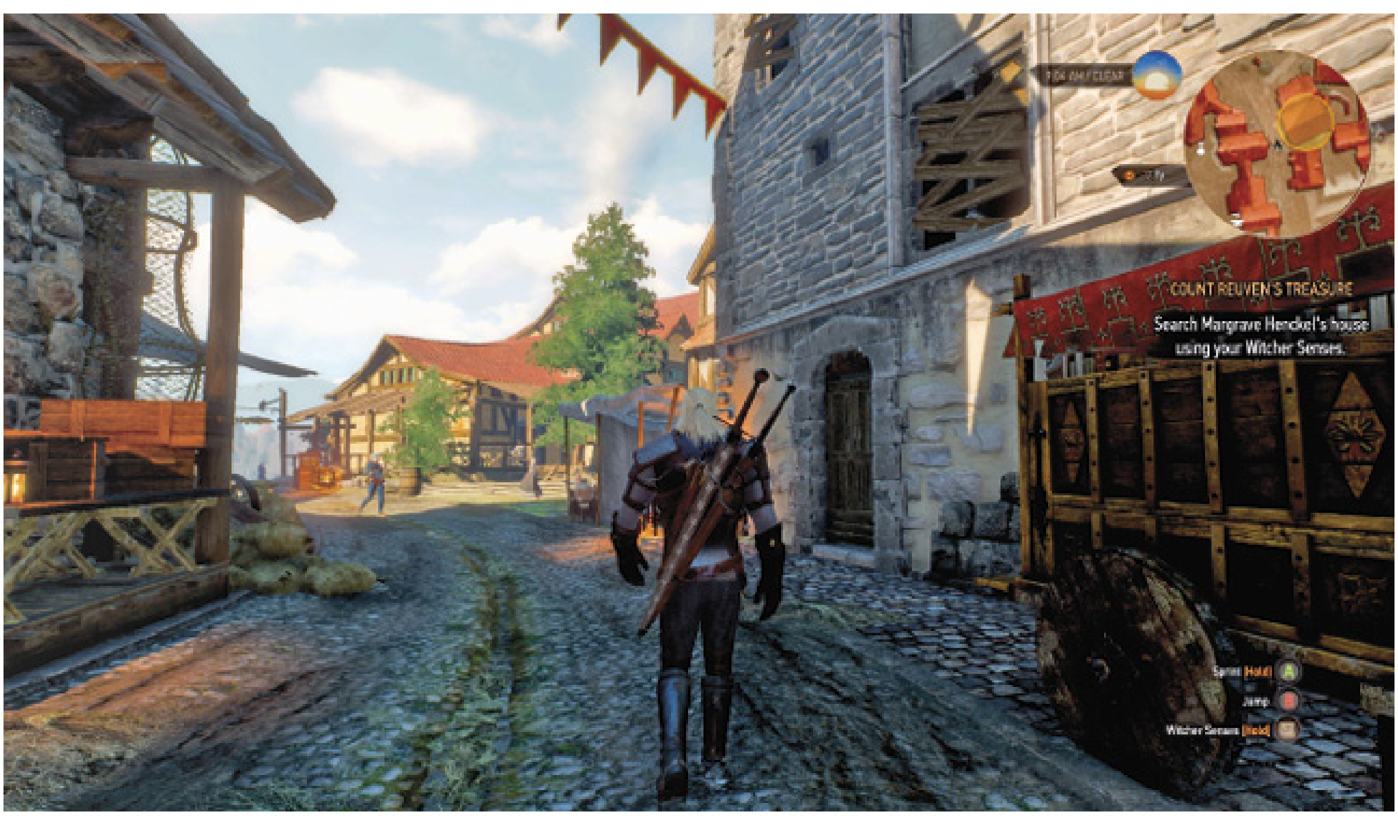
Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure

Pardon My Beauclairoise, but Who F--king Nicked My Gold?

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to Margrave Henckel's house.
- Search Margrave Henckel's house using your Witcher Senses.

Head out of the Bathhouse and into the Town Square, then head west toward the Golden Sturgeon. Henckel's townhouse is across the street from it, although it looks rather run-down. "Knock" on the door using Aard and step through the splinters, to the residence where you can easily spot footprints leading upstairs, and onto a landing. Check the table nearby for some wine and an odd note. It contains a riddle to read.



ITEM: Quest Items: Bottle of Wine, Mysterious Note

OBJECTIVES

- Solve the riddle from the mysterious note.
- Search the hidden room using your Witcher Senses.
- Check what's going on downstairs.

Adjacent there is a small room stocked with wine. You reckon the number of "your birth year" may refer to Dandelion or Ciri. Examine the wines belonging to the years 1251-1254. You place the bottle in the open slot for 1251 and there's a satisfying click in the room next to you. The door the footprints lead to is now open.

Inside this secret room (where Dandelion probably planned the heist) is the following to inspect using your Witcher Senses:

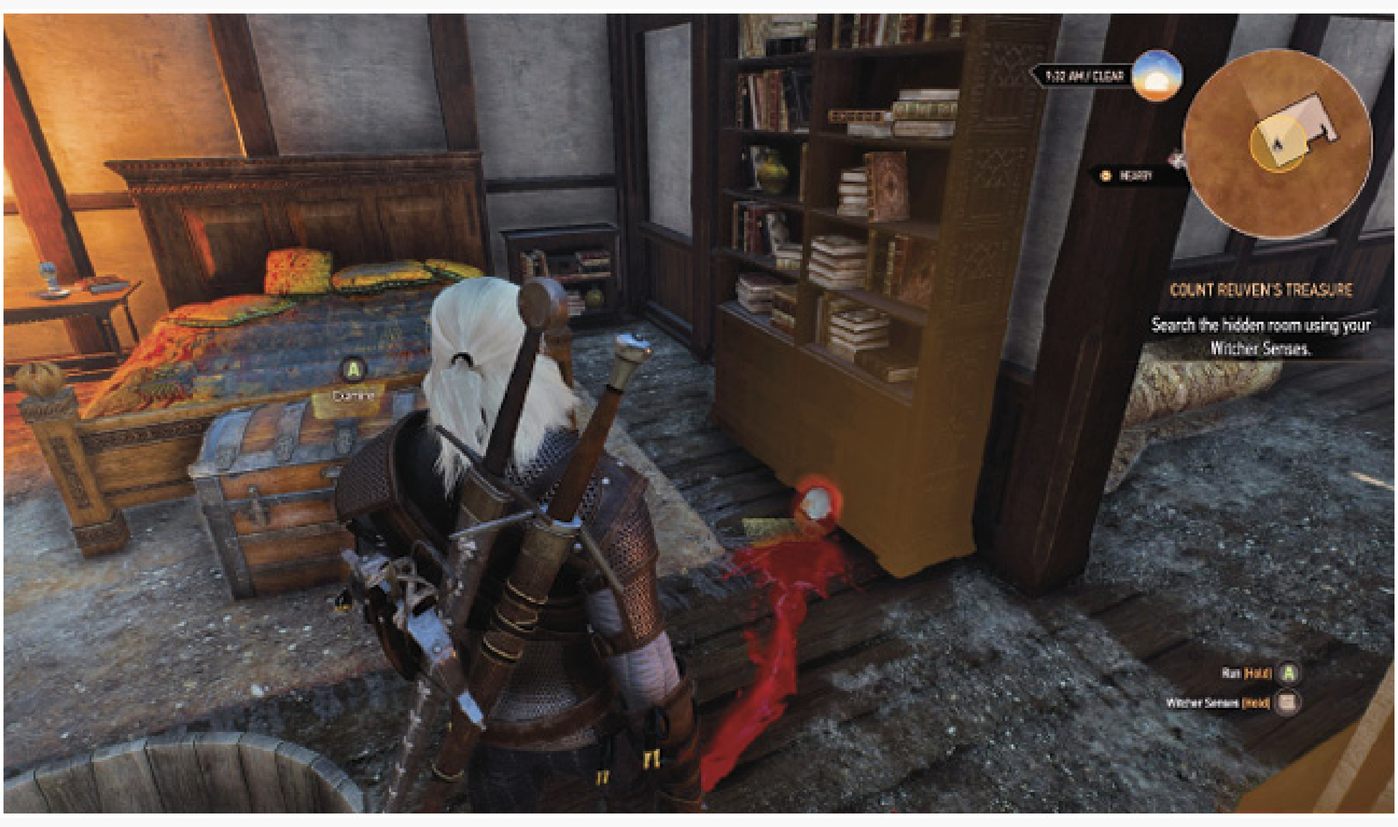
- Clues suggesting the bomb was created in this room.
- Instructions on how to build a bomb, signed by "Kalkstein."
- Some spilled wyvern oil.
- A chest at the foot of a bed, with a letter from Dudu on it. You read it. It is addressed to Ciri and tells of Commander Menge seizing the treasure and taking Dandelion.

ITEM: Quest Item: Letter from Dudu

You hear footsteps from downstairs. Time to investigate.

You're surprised to see Dijkstra and Triss Merigold. She's been called upon to provide help deciphering the rune on the bomb. Tell Dijkstra all signs point to Commander of the Temple Guard; Caleb Menge (though you can ask about him trusting you first). During this conversation, you can attempt a lie (that Henckel is still alive and orchestrated the heist with Menge), but Dijkstra doesn't believe you, and Triss steps in to further your commitment to completing this task. It is agreed to pay Menge a visit at the docks, and find out where Dijkstra's gold is being held.

Triss Merigold



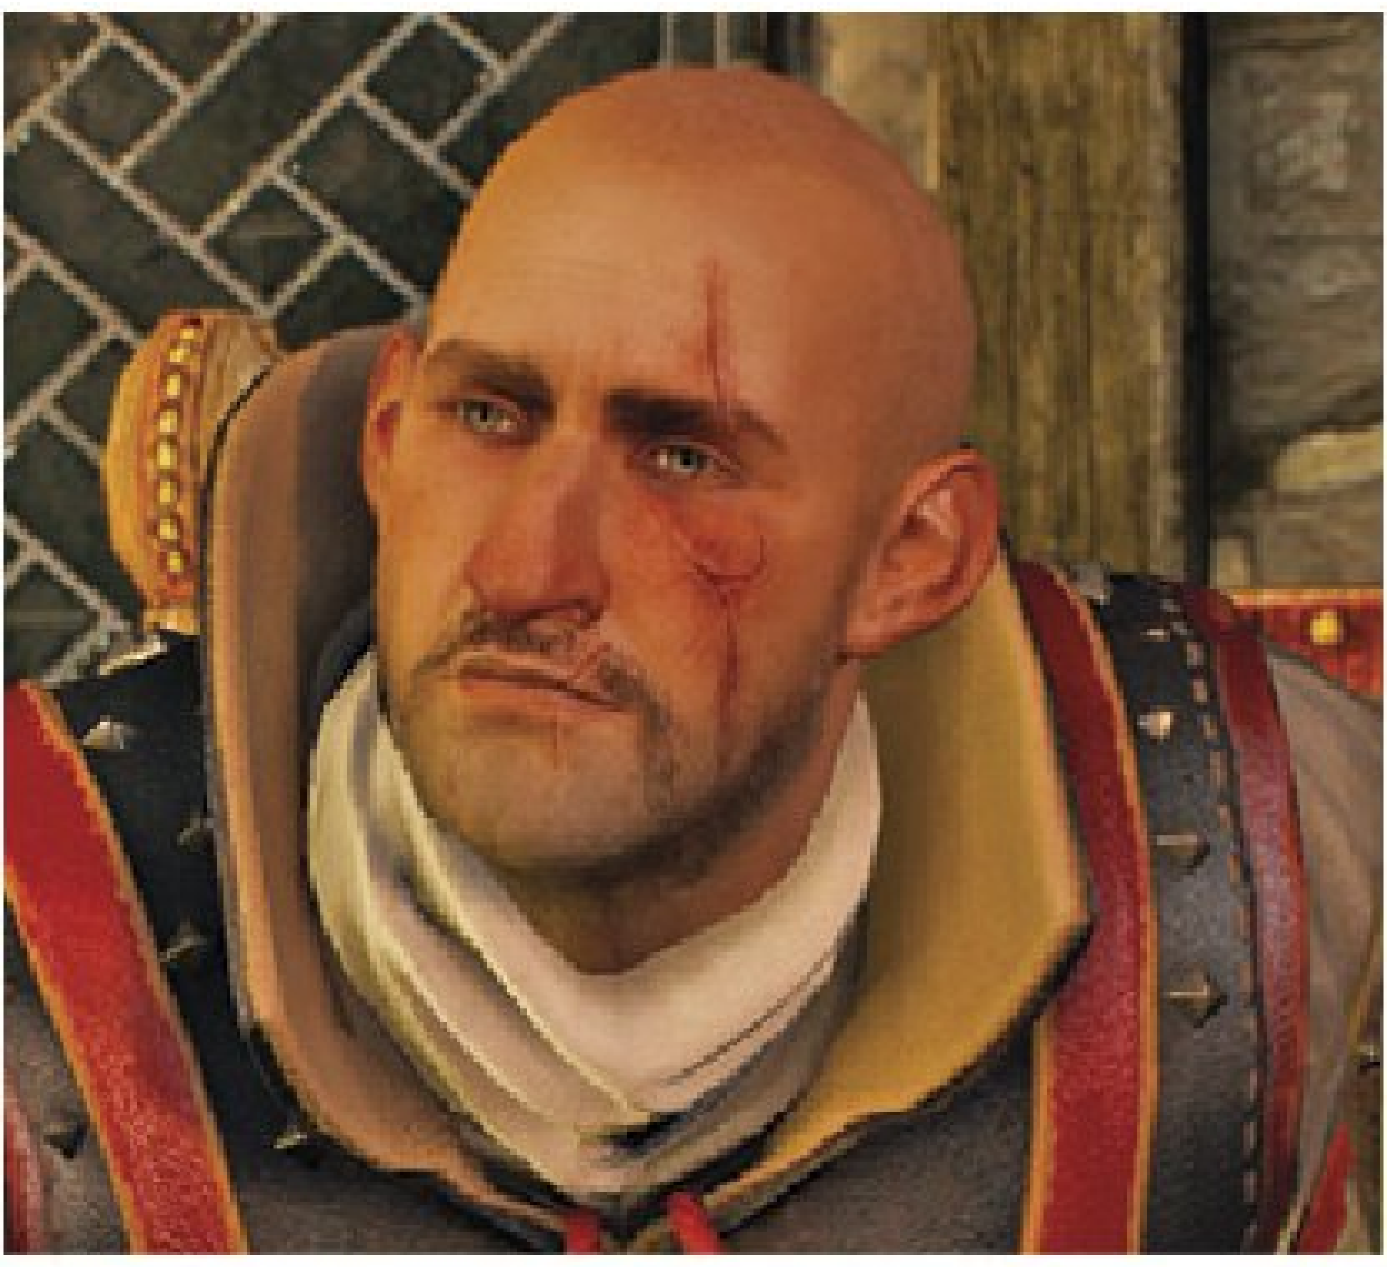
You can also tell Dijkstra that you and Triss were together, but this is in the past (and the less romantic choice compared to telling Dijkstra he's using you both). After straying from the topic (talking about your relationship with Triss), you both focus on the task at hand. But this isn't simply about finding the gold; it's about finding Dandelion. Triss tells you to meet her at the Eternal Fire shrine (east of the harbor) around midnight. You'll infiltrate the witch hunter barracks from there.

Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure

Infiltration: Nailed It

OBJECTIVE:

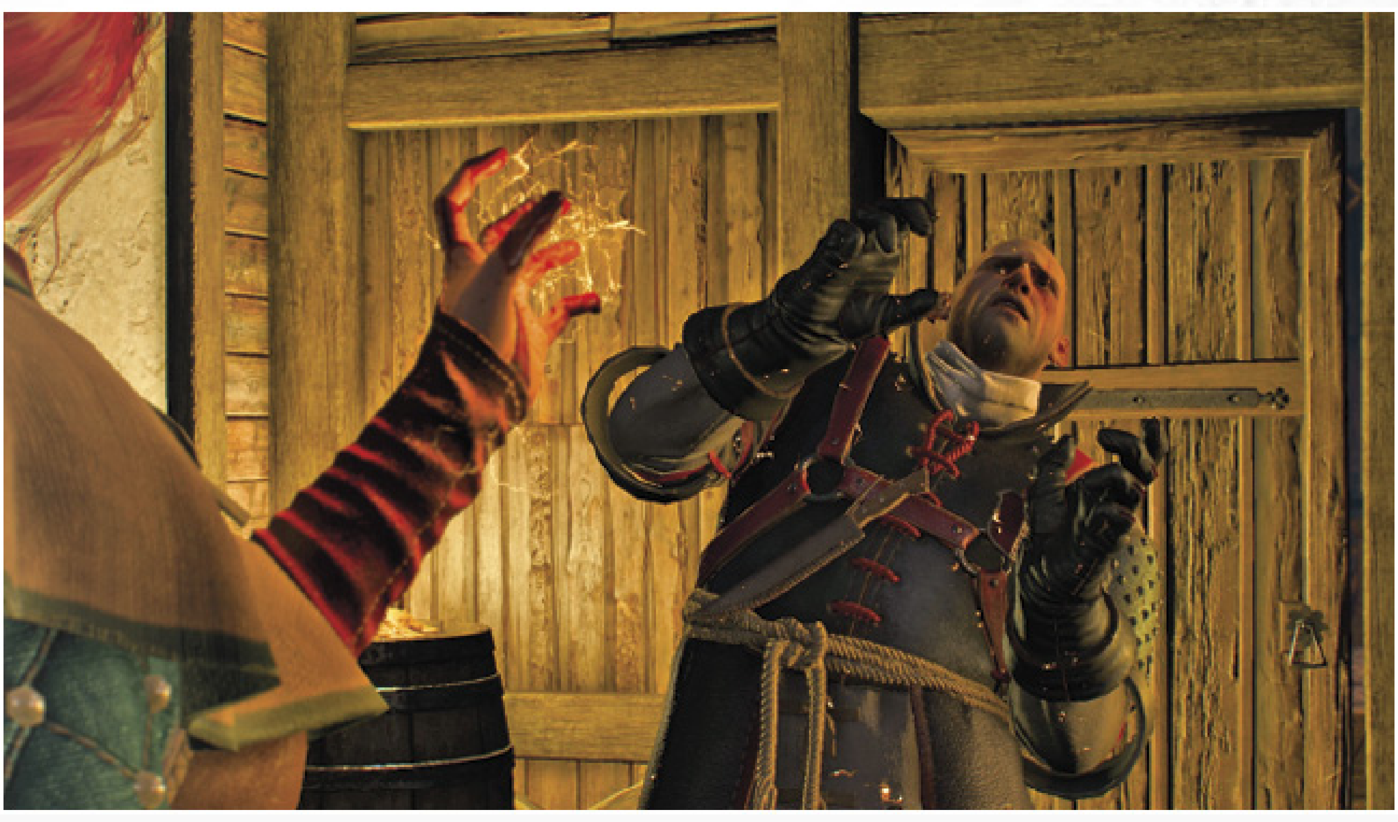
- Follow the witch hunter leader.



Commander Caleb Menge

You're led up the central stairs of this outpost. Stray too far from Triss, and you're warned to keep up. Ignore this, and the witch hunters turn hostile (leading to the "Eradication" solution). Triss is handed off to a torturer, who reckons losing a few fingernails might loosen Triss' tongue (before it's cut off). Answer with:

- "Fine, take her." Or,
- "Fine, but no torturing." (which raises the suspicion of the hunter; answer callously or use Axii Level 2 so your cover isn't blown).



TRIPPING UP TO SAVE TRISS

Throughout this infiltration, you have numerous chances to save Triss, and give the game away that you're not here to provide information on the whereabouts of more sorceresses. Choose any conversation answer other than the ones list here, and the witch hunters grow too suspicious, your cover is blown, and the "Eradication" plan must be completed instead.

While Triss begins her torture, you're ordered to sit down with Menge. He offers you a drink (interestingly, the goblet is silver; he's making sure you're not a doppler). Answer with:

- "Why not."

Menge shoos away Kurt the witch hunter leader, and the conversation turns to testing you regarding the wine and goblet. You can elongate the conversation if you wish, but don't ask to release Triss. Answer with:

- "Your hunters are torturing Triss, but haven't been paid."

The muffled sounds of fingernail extraction can be heard as Menge tests your mettle. Hold firm! He's impressed you turned in your lover. Answer with:

- "Witchers do anything for gold" or "Triss betrayed me first."

This pushes the conversation forward more quickly. Be sure you listen for Triss biting the torturer, after which she's gagged. Menge is surprised at your callousness; perhaps you can make a deal after all. He asks about Philippa. Make sure you don't choose "I'm looking for this treasure," and instead, answer with:

- "Free my friend Dandelion."

Menge refuses as he has a magnificent execution planned for him. In his hubris, he lets slip that Dandelion is being held in the dungeons beneath Temple Isle. Menge stands, drops a couple of notes into a fire, and wants to check in on Triss. He finds Kurt and the torturer dead. Triss advances while paralyzing him with a spell conjured from her bloodied hand. After stabbing him in the throat, she lets Menge fall dead on the torture room floor. Speak with her, telling her about Dandelion's location.

You can tell her Menge burned some papers, but it is too late to salvage them. You can acquire whether necromancy is worth trying, but Triss doesn't practice such magic. You decide that your friend Dudu might be able to help. Triss finds an office key on Menge's body, and a vault key hidden in the lining of his tunic. She hands both to you to give to Dijkstra. This might not be enough, but should keep him off your backs. For now though, it's time to find a way out of this place. The quest paths now merge, as you return to Dijkstra.

OBJECTIVE:

- Meet Triss at the Eternal Fire shrine near the harbor around midnight

Move roughly southward from Henckel's townhouse, crossing the canal and heading to the brothel district, just east of the docks. Locate the shrine to the Eternal Fire (as shown), and meditate until midnight. Triss arrives, telling you the barracks is a fortress, and sneaking in would be impossible. Fighting into the structure would cause Menge to easily flee, so a more cunning plan is needed. Cuff Triss with her shackles (opt for a flirty response if you wish). The plan is to present her as a prisoner to Menge personally. Agree to this, and personally thank Triss if you want to make her blush.

ITEM: Quest Items: Letter to Caleb Menge, Menge's Holy Tome, Menge's Key, Key to Dijkstra's Treasury

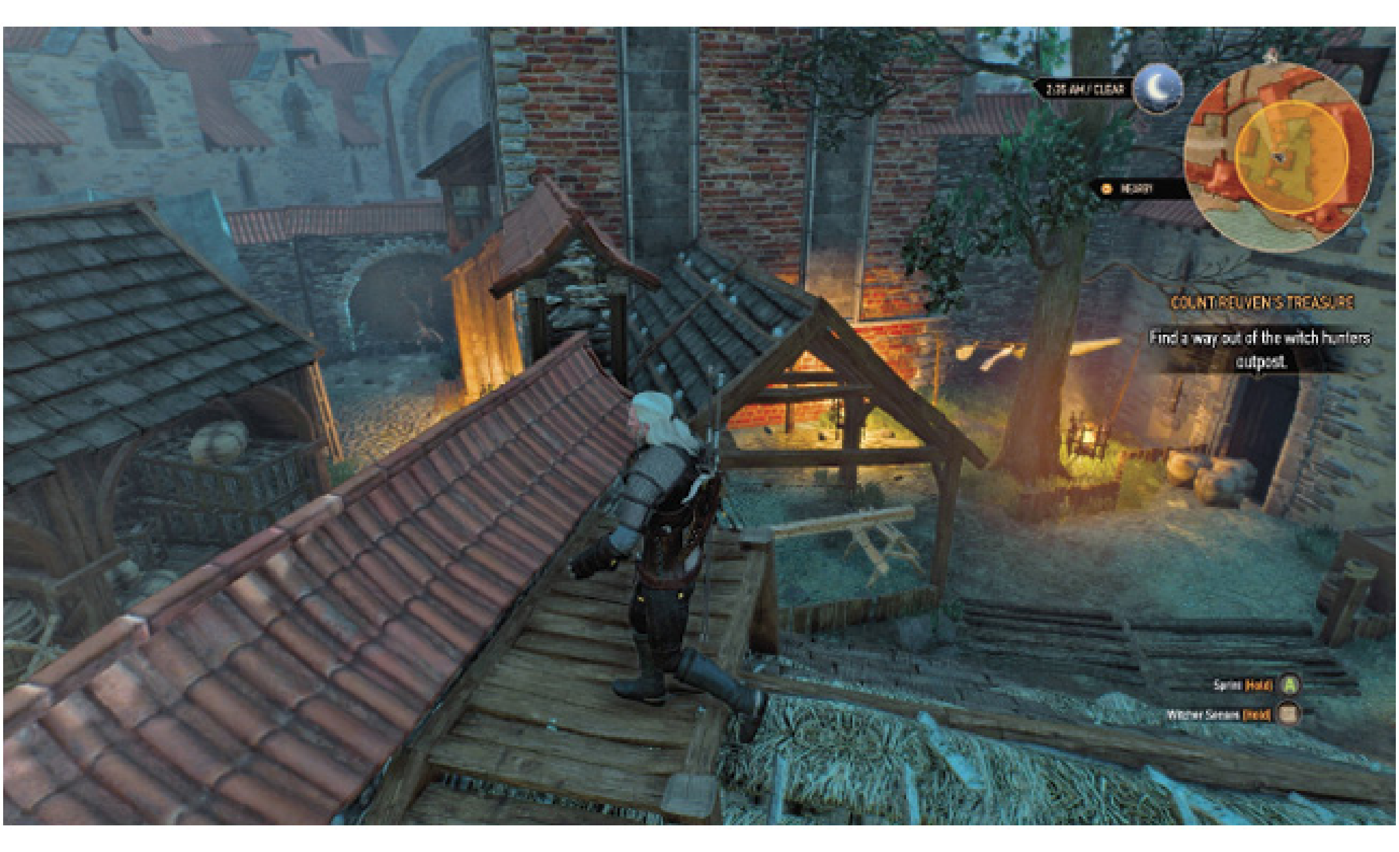
Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure

Infiltration and Eradication: Outpost Extraction

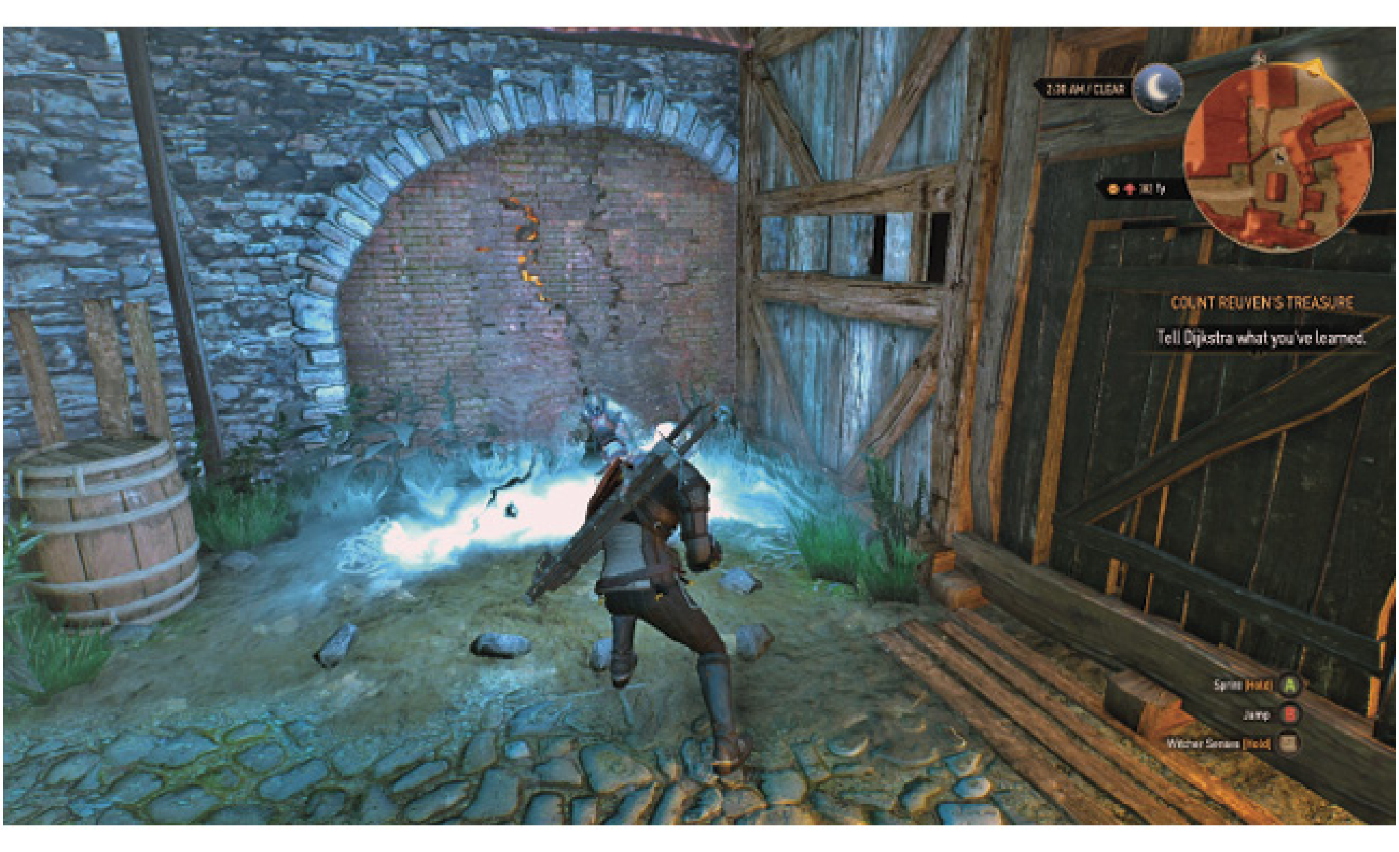
OBJECTIVES:

- Find a way out of the witch hunters' outpost.
- (Optional) Sneak out the witch hunters' outpost.

Whether you used wanton or targeted violence, you must leave here by the following route. Using Menge's Key, your only exit option is to find the door in the northwest corner of Menge's office, and open it. Step onto a wooden balcony down the side of the building. Triss tells you she's going to stay here to burn the place down. Optionally help her by using Igni on any flammable objects located along the building's wall.



Leave the outpost without attracting attention by jumping on the crates near a torch, stepping onto a shed roof adjacent then dropping down into the outer courtyard.



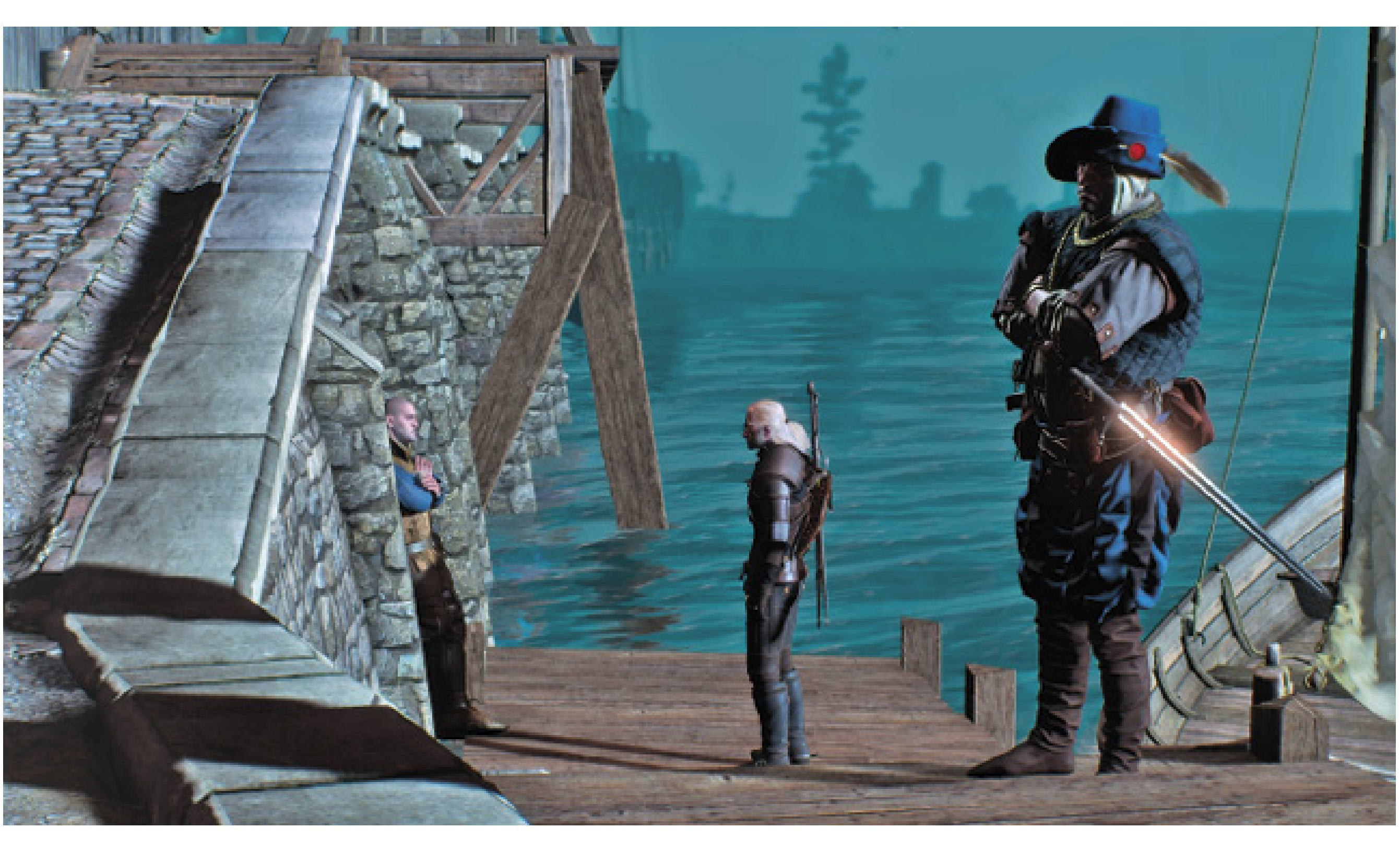
The main doors to the outpost barracks are locked, forcing you to improvise. Turn and look for a bricked-up arch in the northern part of the walled compound, and utilize Aard to shatter the crack up the middle of the brickwork. Rush through, and you're apprehended by Dijkstra's (sorry, Reuven's) henchmen, and taken to the docks.

INFILTRATION END: I ALWAYS PAY MY DEBTS. EVEN TO LIARS.

OBJECTIVE:

- Tell Dijkstra what you've learned.

Dijkstra isn't pleased that you didn't return with a cartload of valuables. But you do have the key to the vault, and hand it over. Since you've figured out where Dandelion is, Dijsktra tells you never to lie to him again. You part ways and head off to inform Priscilla.

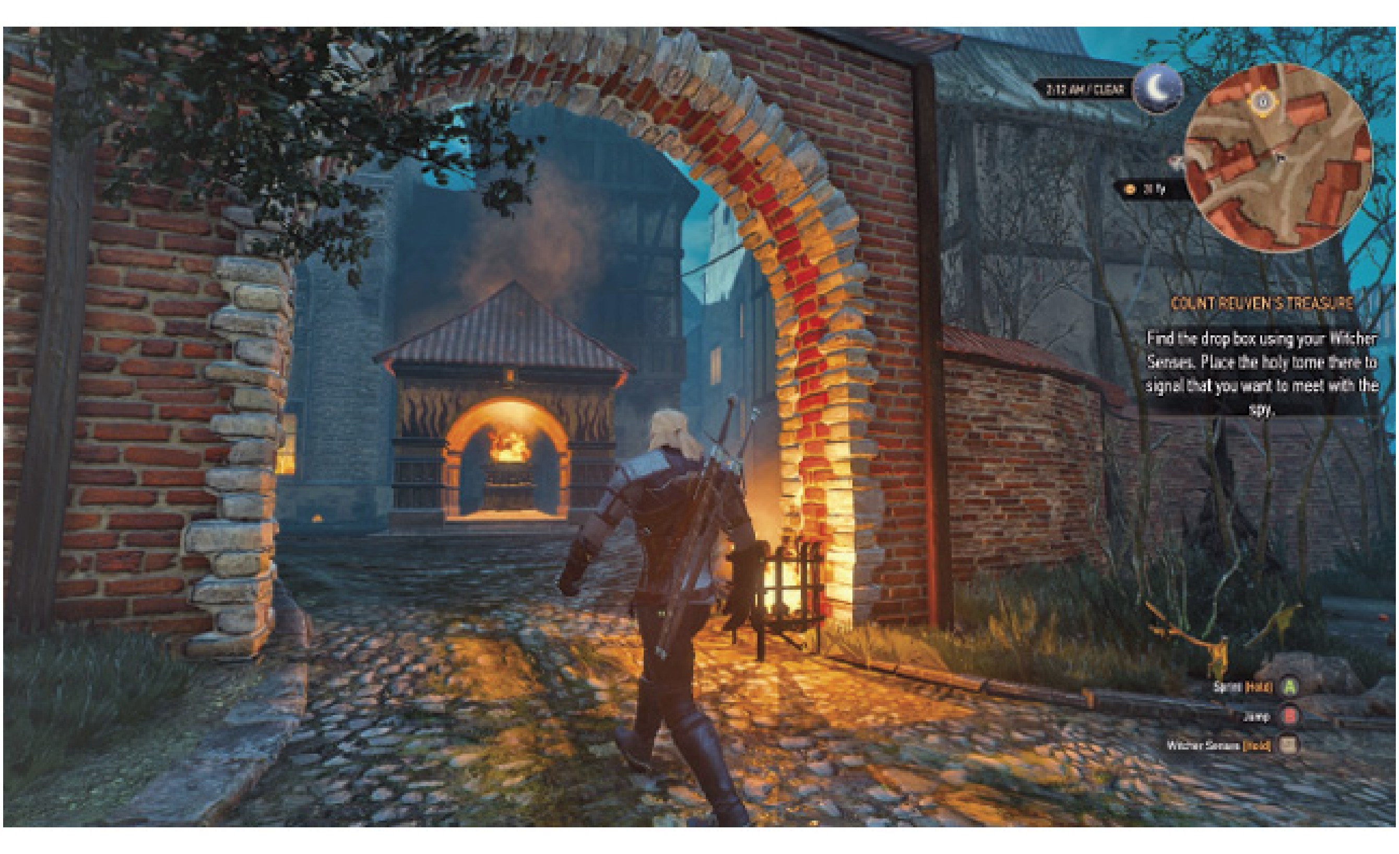


ERADICATION END: A TOAST TO YAMURLAK

OBJECTIVES:

- Tell Dijkstra what you've learned.
- Find the drop box using your Witcher Senses.
- Place the Holy Tome there to signal that you want to meet with the spy.

Dijkstra isn't pleased that you massacred Menge and didn't return with a cartload of valuables. But you do have the key to the vault, and hand it over. Dijkstra tells you never to lie to him again. But there's the letter from the spy calling himself "Yamurlak." It details how to arrange a meeting. Dijkstra tells you the spy usually shows up in a ruined house, in Farcorners, around midnight. How does Dijkstra know this? He's a former spy himself. You part ways and head off to attempt a rendezvous with this "Yamurlak."



COUNT REUVEN'S TREASURE
Find the drop box using your Witcher Senses. Place the holy tome there to signal that you want to meet with the spy.

Head to the Eternal Fire shrine directly east of the Hierarch Square signpost, in the eastern part of town, and use your Witcher Senses to uncover the lockbox on the southeast pillar. Interact with it to place the Holy Tome and signal for the spy to show up.

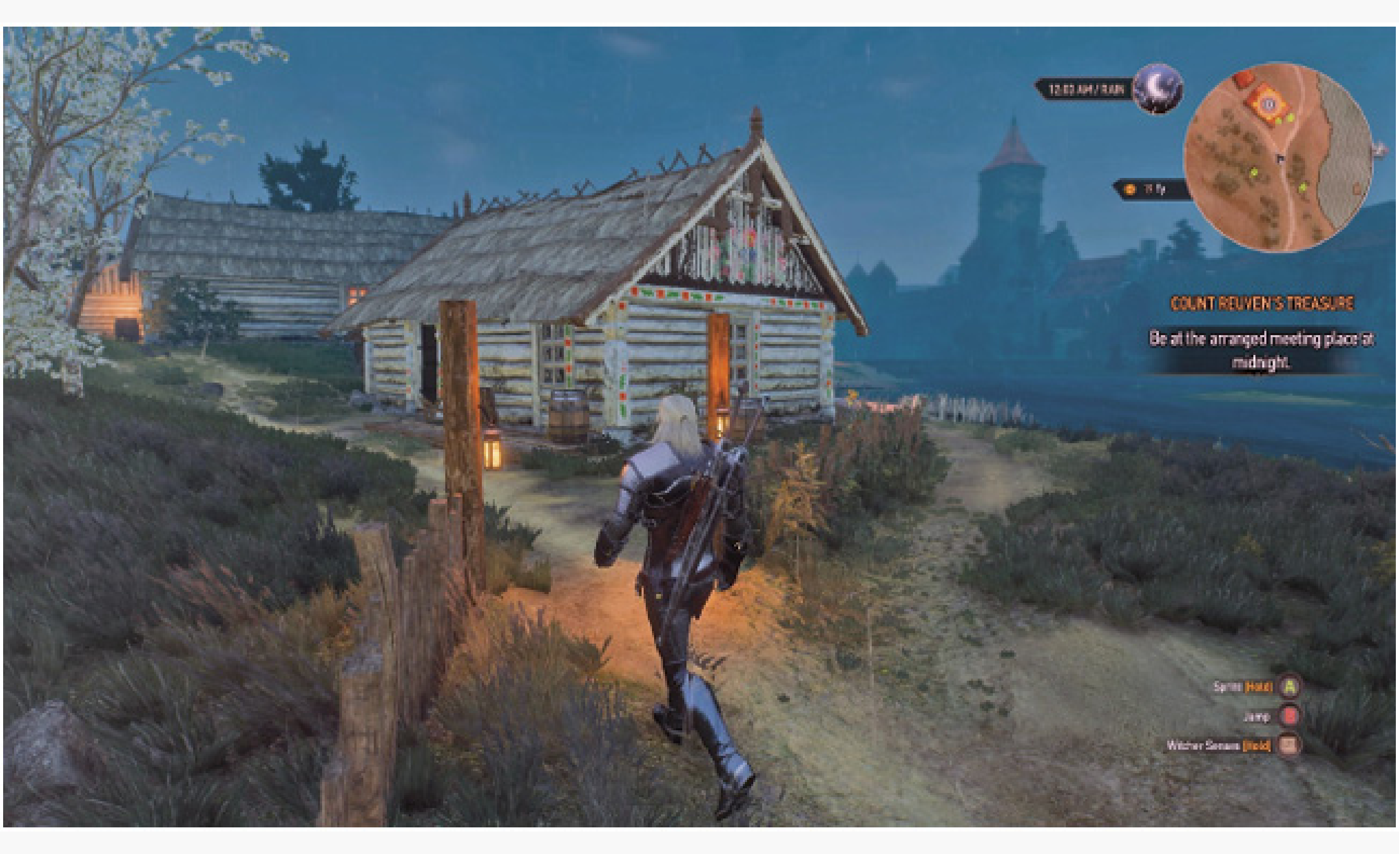
OBJECTIVES:

- Be at the arranged meeting place at midnight.
- Find a good place to hide and wait for the spy.

Yamurlak the Spy

Now head southward, passing through the Glory Gate and out of the walled part of Novigrad, to the nonhuman shanty town of Farcorners. Locate the empty house after meditating until around midnight. Enter, then step behind the open door to start hiding. You're surprised as Triss arrives, explaining she learned of the place from Dijkstra, and wanted to see this through to the bitter end.

When the spy appears at the house, he's not eager to talk. However, with some convincing from Triss (and her magic torture tricks), he becomes more talkative—you can choose to let her continue using her magic on the spy or ask her to stop. Either way, the spy will talk. He reveals that Dandelion is in the dungeon on Temple Isle, awaiting his execution.



Both you and Triss know that this spy can't be released after your conversation. You can choose, however, if Triss should wipe his memory or kill him. You then decide that your doppler friend Dudu might be able to help—by impersonating the recently-killed Menge to arrange Dandelion's escape.

THE VERY END: DANDELION'S PREDICAMENT

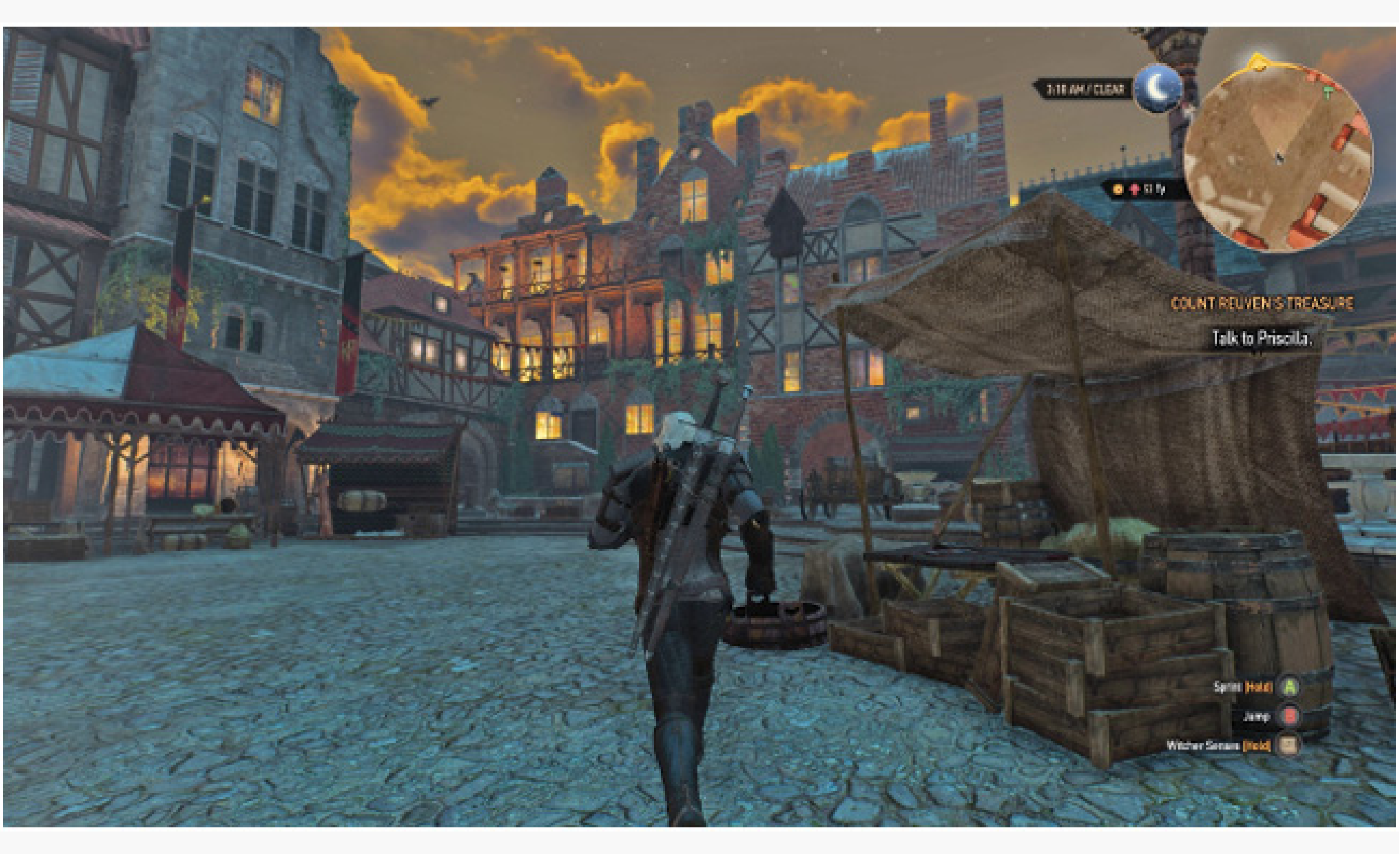
OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Priscilla.

Priscilla

All that remains is to head to the Kingfisher Inn (off Hierarch Square), locate Priscilla in her bedroom, and inform her of Dandelion's predicament. This quest now concludes.

- If you completed this quest and obtained information on Dandelion from Menge while under cover, without violence (until the very end), you can call upon Dijkstra to help you during Main Quest: Brothers in Arms: Novigrad.
- If you completed this quest and obtained information on Dandelion from Menge while massacring him and his men, you are unable to call on Dijsktra's help during Main Quest: Brothers in Arms: Novigrad.



Main Quest: The Play's The Thing

It is not in the Stars to Hold Our Destiny, but in Ourselves

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE PLAY'S THE THING

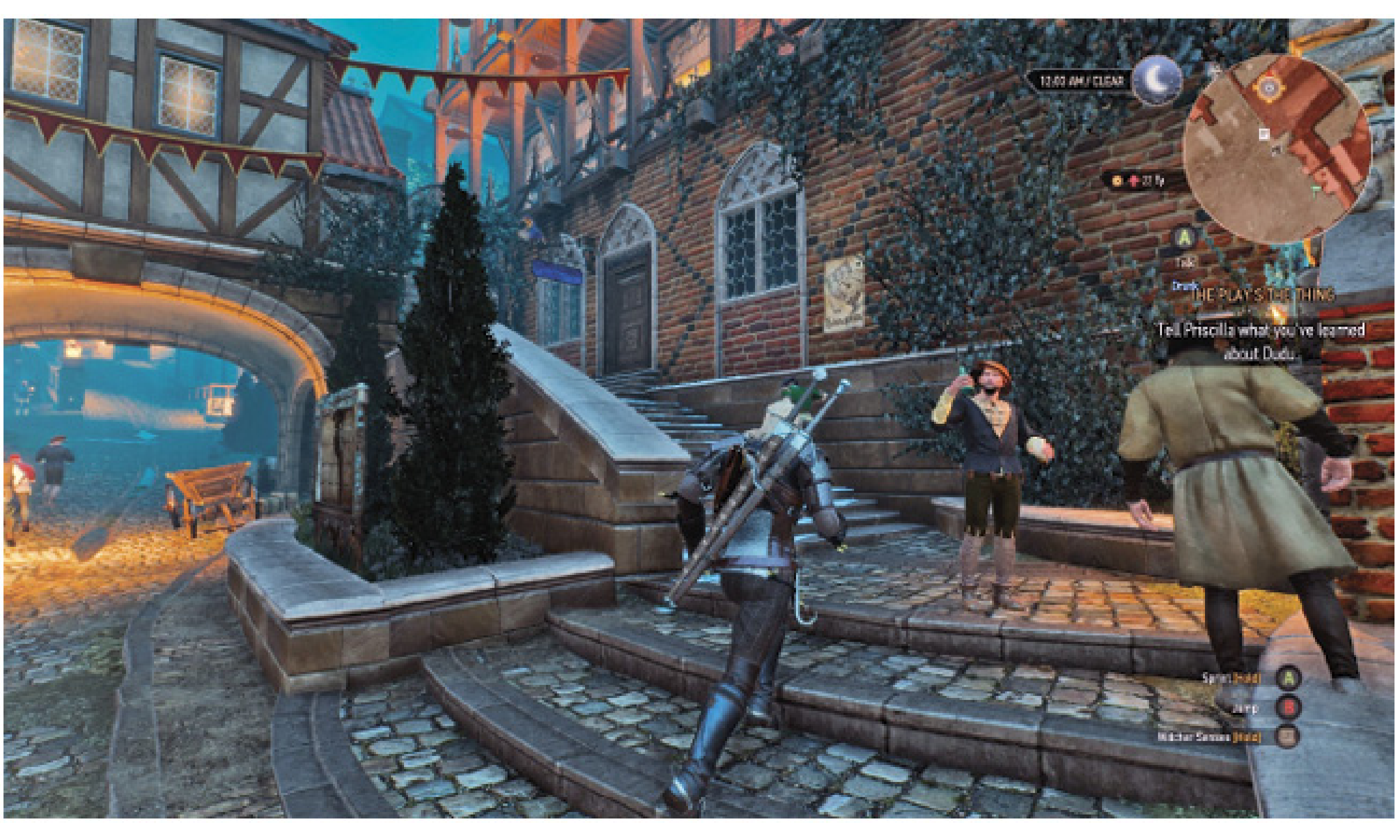
RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: A Poet Under Pressure; Main Quest: Ciri's Story: Breakneck Speed, Main Quest: Get Junior, Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure, Secondary Quest: Carnal Sins, Main Quest: Ugly Baby
LOCATIONS : Kingfisher Inn (Novigrad), The Butcher's Yard Theater, Puffins' Townhouse, Novigrad Docks
CHARACTERS : Priscilla, Irina Renarde, Nissa, Sofus the Bull, Hal, Abelard Rizza, Maxim Boliere, Dudu
ENEMIES : Bandits, Fatso, Enraged Townsfolk
RECOMMENDED ITEM : 120 Crowns

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure and Main Quest: Get Junior both conclude, after deciding you must locate your doppler friend, Dudu.

OBJECTIVE:

- Tell Priscilla what you've learned about Dudu.



Priscilla

Return to the Kingfisher Inn off the Town Square in Novigrad, close to the Ubbizi Townhouse, and head up the first flight of steps, onto the landing, then take the door on the right into Priscilla's room. You tell her of a plan to find the doppler Dudu, convince him to assume the form of Captain Menge, order Dandelion moved to Oxenfurt, and attempt an extricating ambush along the way. Ask Priscilla about Dudu, and she mentions he was friendly with Irina Renard's theatrical mummers' troupe. Suggest the idea of staging a play with a hidden message to Dudu in it, and lure him out that way. Priscilla agrees, but with a much more grand plan: to write an entirely new play. Agree to work on the play at once, after which Priscilla throws ideas at you. Choose the following:

- The title of the play ("The Doppler's Salvation" or "A Changeling Rescued, or the Witcher's Triumph").
- Whether the play is a comedy or a melodrama.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

These choices affect only how successful the play is, and your reward for staging it (cut of the profits). In addition, after the comedy concludes, everyone leaves peacefully. After the melodrama concludes, there is a riot.

A few hours later, Priscilla has some semblance of the play ready, and requests you present it to Irina Renarde over at the Butchers' Yard off the main square.

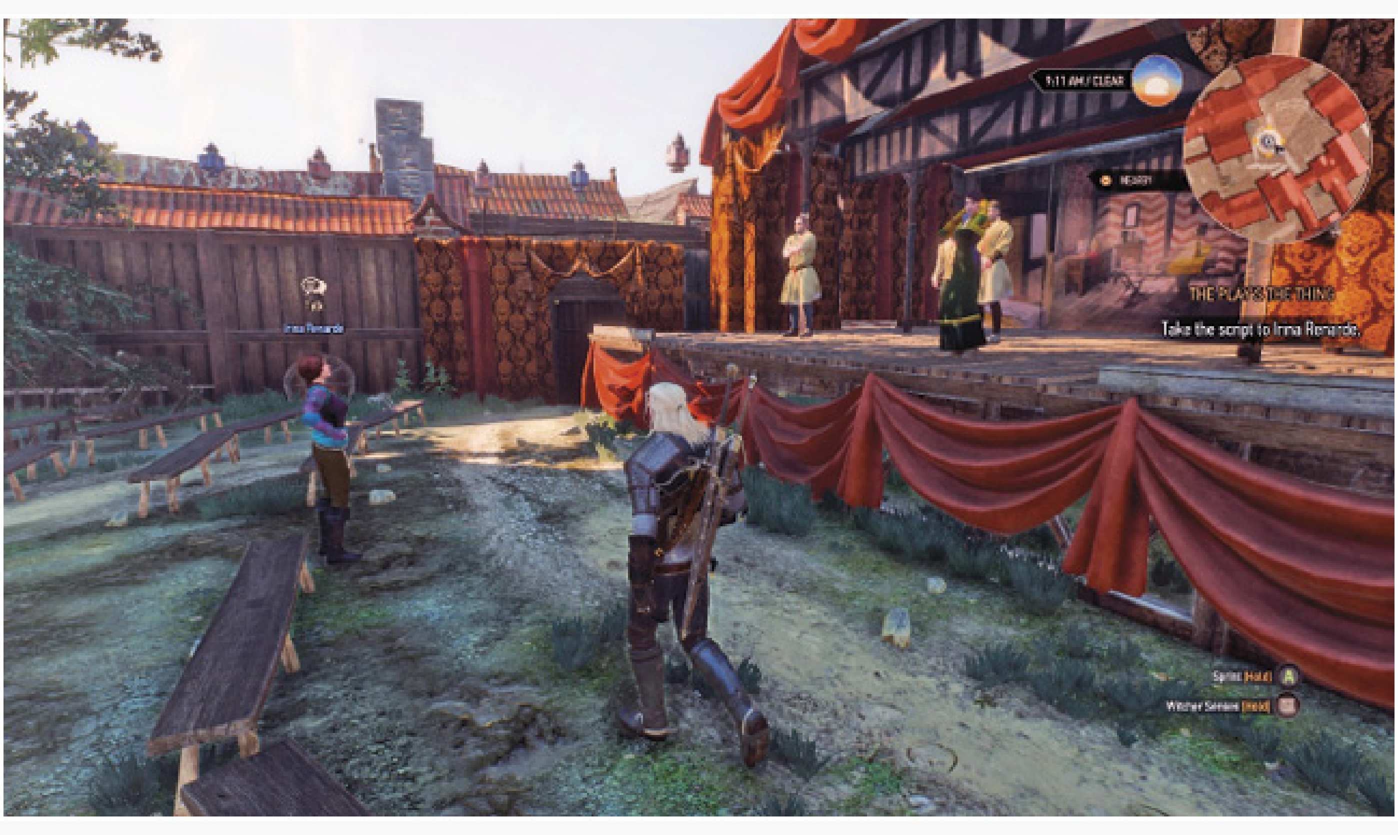
OBJECTIVE:

- Take the script to Irina Renarde.

Exit the Kingfisher Inn, run south along the edge of the Town Square, making a left and right toward the Ubbizi Townhouse, which overlooks The Butcher's Yard where the troupe are practicing. The door is locked and a Ticket Seller requires you pony up some funds.

- (50 Crowns) The only way into this area is by purchasing a ticket.

Bards are strumming, and the mummers are learning their lines with Irina Renarde offering constructive criticism. Talk to Irina, telling her you're here to speak about Dudu. In her back room, you explain your most cunning of plans.

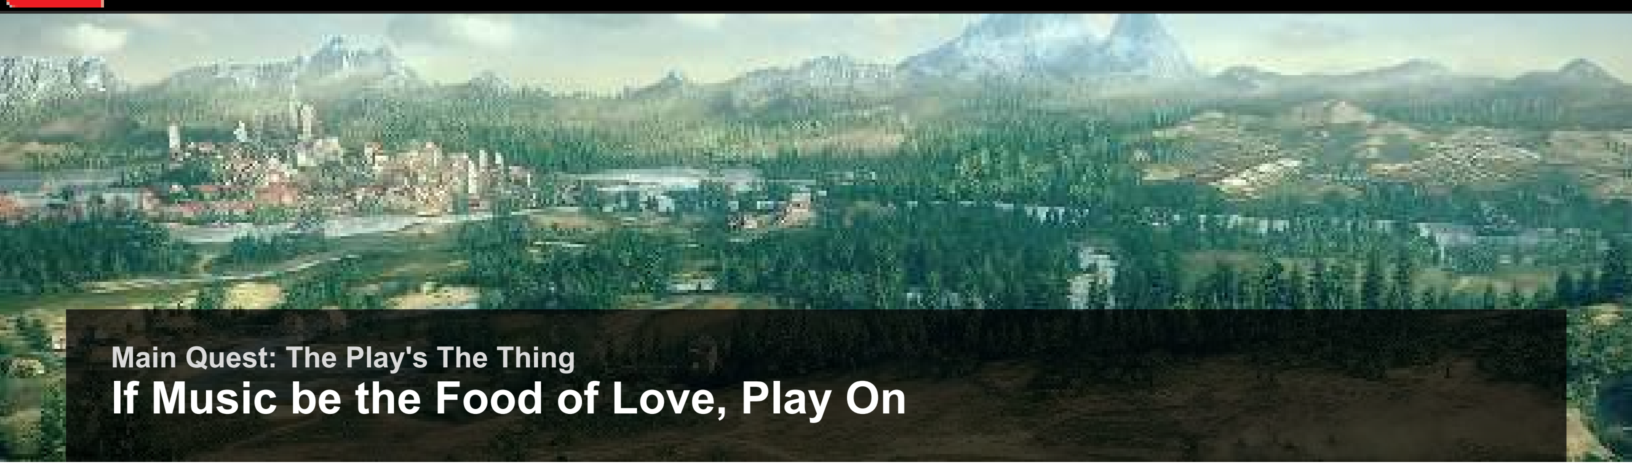


Irina Renarde

She agrees, but she requires some additional preparation:

- Ushers are needed for protection (as the Novigrad audiences can sometimes be a little… "difficult" with the tendency to pelt the troupe with bricks and sharp implements). Find some muscle on the docks.
- Heralding the new play across the city is important, so the Puffins (a group of street artists) must be approached to help out.

After optionally asking for the locations of each group of helpers, set off to hire them. This can be done in either order, though the Puffins are closer to your current location.



Main Quest: The Play's The Thing

OBJECTIVES:

- (Optional) Recruit jugglers from the performing troupe called the Puffins.

Quickly dash to the northeast, into the tall looming wattle-and-daub slum houses in The Bits district, close to the Southern Gate, in the middle of Novigrad's maze of muddy alleyways. - Tell them to go away. Now.
- (50 Crowns) Attempt to bribe them to leave.
- (Axii Delusion Level 2) Befuddle them into leaving.

All choices lead to the same conclusion—a fight. Draw your sword and make mincemeat of these three bandit thugs. Feel free to utilize your fists or steel sword during the fracas. After realizing their error in challenging you, Fatso and his men are sent packing. The Puffins appear, thank you so profusely it borders on verbal harassment, and agree to advertise your play without the need for payment.

- Hire the Puffins, and more of Novigrad's citizens come to watch your play. If it's a melodrama, there is a larger angry mob rioting afterward, too!
- Ignore the Puffins' predicament, and don't expect a large crowd to appear at your opening night.

OBJECTIVES:

- (Optional) Defeat the strongmen form Metinna.
- Nearest Signpost: Novigrad Docks

Strike up a conversation with a sizable gentleman called Sofus the Bull. Tell him you require his services to provide protection for the play. But Sofus and his brother Hal are only interested in arse-kicking. You can:

- (70 Crowns) Offer to pay him for his services. He agrees.
- (Fistfight) Or agree to a bout with Sofus and Hal by the docks. Utilize fists only, and prepare for fisticuffs. Winning or losing the bout still results in Sofus, Hal, and his toughs agreeing to help you.

Main Quest: The Play's The Thing

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Irina Renarde and start the play.

Zoltan Chivay

Head back to the Butcher's Yard theater. Sofus' toughs are already positioned either side of each entrance. Enter the main building across from the courtyard, and speak with Irina. Now discuss the script. She's taken a look at the script, and must discuss a few hiring choices. You can:

- Only choose yourself in the role of the Witcher.
- Choose either Priscilla or Irina herself in the role of the Princess.
- Choose either Aleblard Rizza (competent, but uninspiring) or Maxim Boliere (outstanding but usually drunk) in the role of the Prince.

Conclude the conversation by telling Irina you need to learn your lines (you actually don't, but this pauses the quest in case you wish to meditate or otherwise prepare). Agree to start the play when you're ready. Naturally, Zoltan shows up; he'd rather shave his beard than miss the opportunity to watch you prancing in a codpiece.

TO BE, OR NOT TO BE

The play begins. It consists of three Acts. Depending on your previous choices, the following occurs:

DECISION 1: THE PUFFINS

- Decision 1: If you hired the Puffins to promote the play, the courtyard is packed with expectant townsfolk.
- Decision 1: If you ignored the Puffins and they didn't promote, the courtyard still has a sizable audience. The only difference is a larger XP reward for helping the Puffins.

DECISIONS 2-6: A COMEDY OF ERRORS

Throughout this melodrama or comedy, you are forced to recite some lines written by Priscilla:

- Decision 2: During Act I, you are required to step on stage, and deliver one of two lines:

2: "I kill monsters for pleasure…" causes you to flub your line.

2: "To slay beasts most foul…" causes you to complete your line.

- Decision 3: During Act II, you must deliver another one of two lines:

3: "Perhaps 'midst the guests…" causes you to deliver your line with gusto.

3: "Maybe he's hid…" causes you to flub your line.

- Decisions 4, 5, and 6: During Act III, you must deliver three sets of lines, as the play reaches its zenith:

4: "If the maid loves him…" causes you to flub your line.

4: "Seems men's hearts…" causes you to complete your line with feeling.

5: "But a lack of morals…" causes you to flub your line.

5: "But a base heart…" causes you to ace your lines, and deliver a performance worthy of an understudy!

6: "No monster is he…" causes you to deliver a final, impassioned speech to bring the house down!

6: "Show love for the dopplers…" causes you to stumble, hashing the line.

The amount of XP you receive (150 for a perfect reading, or 110 if you flub all of your lines, and an amount in-between for partial success) depends on how perfect your delivery is.

DECISION 7: THE PRINCESS

- Decision 7: If you chose Priscilla as the Princess, she appears rather radiant, but a little stiff in delivering her lines. Expect additional monies as a reward, if you choose her.

Oh, darling, I will, I will, I will!

- Decision 7: If you decided on Irina as the Princess, she appears a little too old for the role, but gives it her all.

Oh, darling, I will, I will, I will!

There is no other difference, aside from the acting.

DECISION 8: THE PRINCE

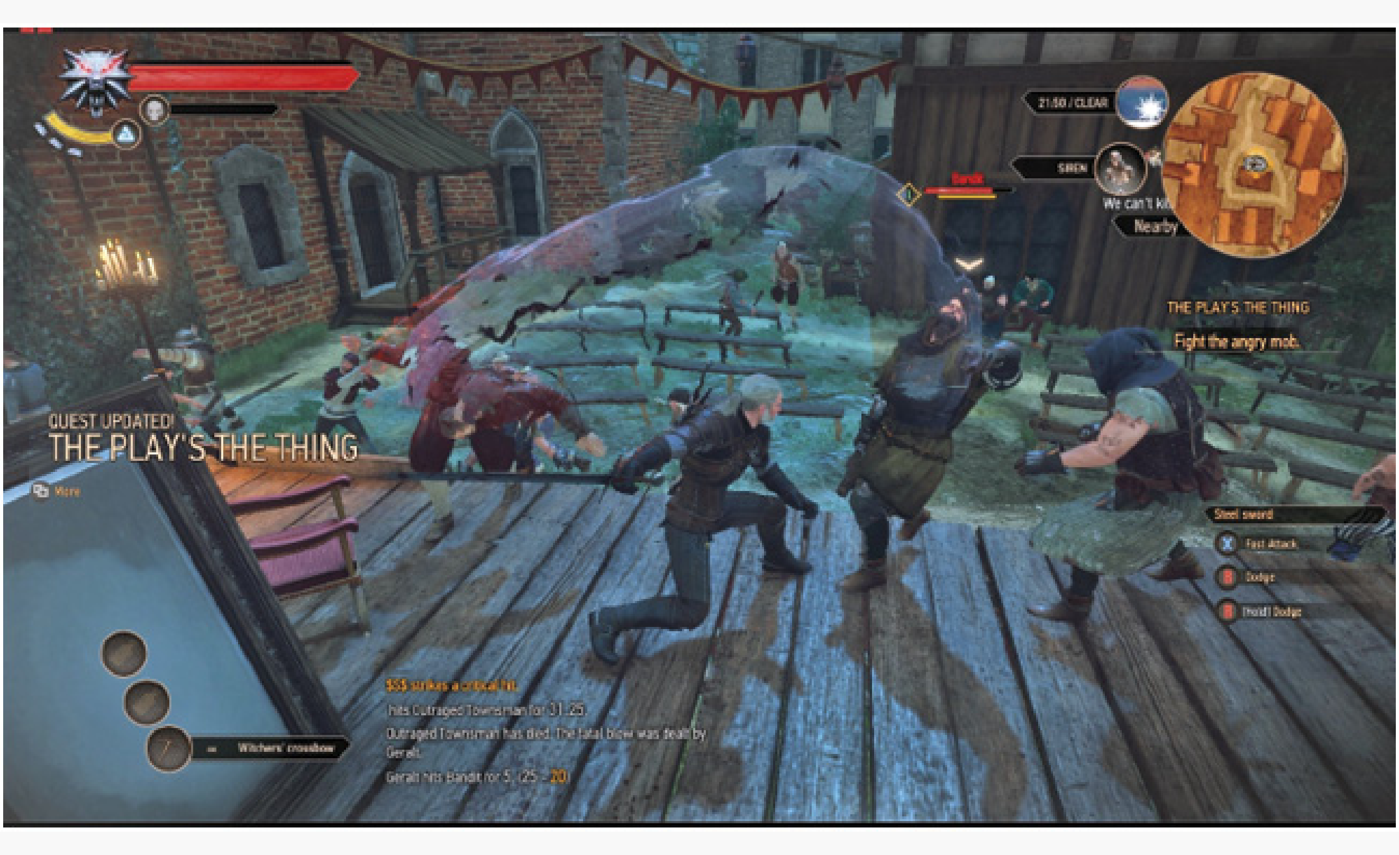
- Decision 8: If you picked Abelard Rizza as the Prince, expect a moderately entertaining performance by this professional, and additional takings as a reward.

- Decision 8: If you favored Maxim Boliere as the Prince, expect a slurred tipsy thespian that sometimes forgets his lines.

DECISION 9: THE COMEDY OR MELODRAMA

- Decision 9: If you decided the play would be a comedy, you beckon a guard with a scar up onto the stage as part of the play, and the third act finishes without incident.

- Decision 9: If you decided the play would be a melodrama, you beckon the guard up onto the stage. At this point, the Eternal Fire fanatics (and Fatso) start yelling at you for blashempy, and a fight breaks out. Defeat around eight bandits and enraged townsfolk, with the help of Sofus' toughs and Zoltan.



Main Quest: The Play's The Thing

Boldness Be My Friend

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Dudu in Irina Renarde’s room.

The play was a triumph!? Now quickly head into Irina’s quarters, and meet Dudu (in halfling form). Speak to Dudu about his escape from Whoreson’s, after which you can optionally ask him to change into Ciri for you. The effect is… odd. Now tell Dudu that Dandelion has been found, and Dudu’s help is needed in the most cunning of rescue attempts. This quest concludes, and Main Quest: A Poet Under Pressure begins (once Irina rewards you for your amateur(ish) dramatics).

Main Quest: A Poet Under Pressure

Plucking a Dandelion

OBJECTIVES:

- Chase Dandelion's abductor.
- Use your Witcher Senses to pick up the trail.
- Ask if anyone from the camp has seen Dandelion's abductor.

Zoltan's forces cut trees from the sides of the ravine and a band of dwarves attack. There are reinforcements; Redanian forces hiding in a rear caravan, and the ambush takes a turn for the chaotic. During the commotion, a guard bolts on horseback, taking a bundled-up Dandelion with him. Leave the fighting immediately, and begin to chase the abductor. Scramble up the ravine to the grass field above, and whistle for Roach. He soon disappears, forcing you to use your Witcher Senses to track him.

Slow to a canter within the objective area, and spot the horse prints, following them roughly northeastward to the right of a lake. Beware of drowners along the lake shore. These creatures are out in force and around eight should be tackled.

Follow the horse tracks across a field, onto and off a road, back onto the road, and then northwest off the road again. Canter back onto the road and turn right (northeast) at the sunflower field. Then slow and ask around a farmer's camp on the road ahead (southeast of Beanston). One of the Townsfolk tells you a horseman rode through here with a "wench" squealing and wailing with a sack on their head. That's got to be Dandelion!

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the smell of Dandelion's cologne.
- Explore the area in front of the hut in the woods.
- Enter the halflings' home via the secret passage.
- Free Dandelion. Defeat the Witch Hunter.

Just beyond the camp is a fork in the road. Dismount and inspect a strange object on the side of the right road. It is a perfume bottle—the heady aroma of "Nuits de Beauclair." Your Witcher Senses pick up the scent trail. Follow the smell into the woods, heading northeast up a side road, then into heavily forested hill. Just ahead is a dwelling in the woods (Isolated Hut Marker), evidence the horse was limping, and finally the abductor's horse itself. The beast collapsed on the grassy path. There are voices, too.

Dandelion

Walk through the cellar, where the halflings spend their time (it seems) daubing paint everywhere. Head west to the opposite end of the cellar, and look for a second ladder. Climb up into the Isolated Hut. You can hear Dandelion's voice… until he annoys the guard so much he's gagged. Burst through the door, brandishing your steel sword and cut the witch hunter down where he stands.

You untie Dandelion, who is surprised to see Priscilla and Zoltan waiting outside. You attempt to steer the conversation away from Dandelion's inflated opinion of himself, and quiz him about Ciri's whereabouts. He remembers the last time he saw her; on Temple Isle running from Whoreson's men… This quest now concludes, as the halfling painters hand you one of their works.

Foreseen at the Ravine

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: A POET UNDER PRESSURE

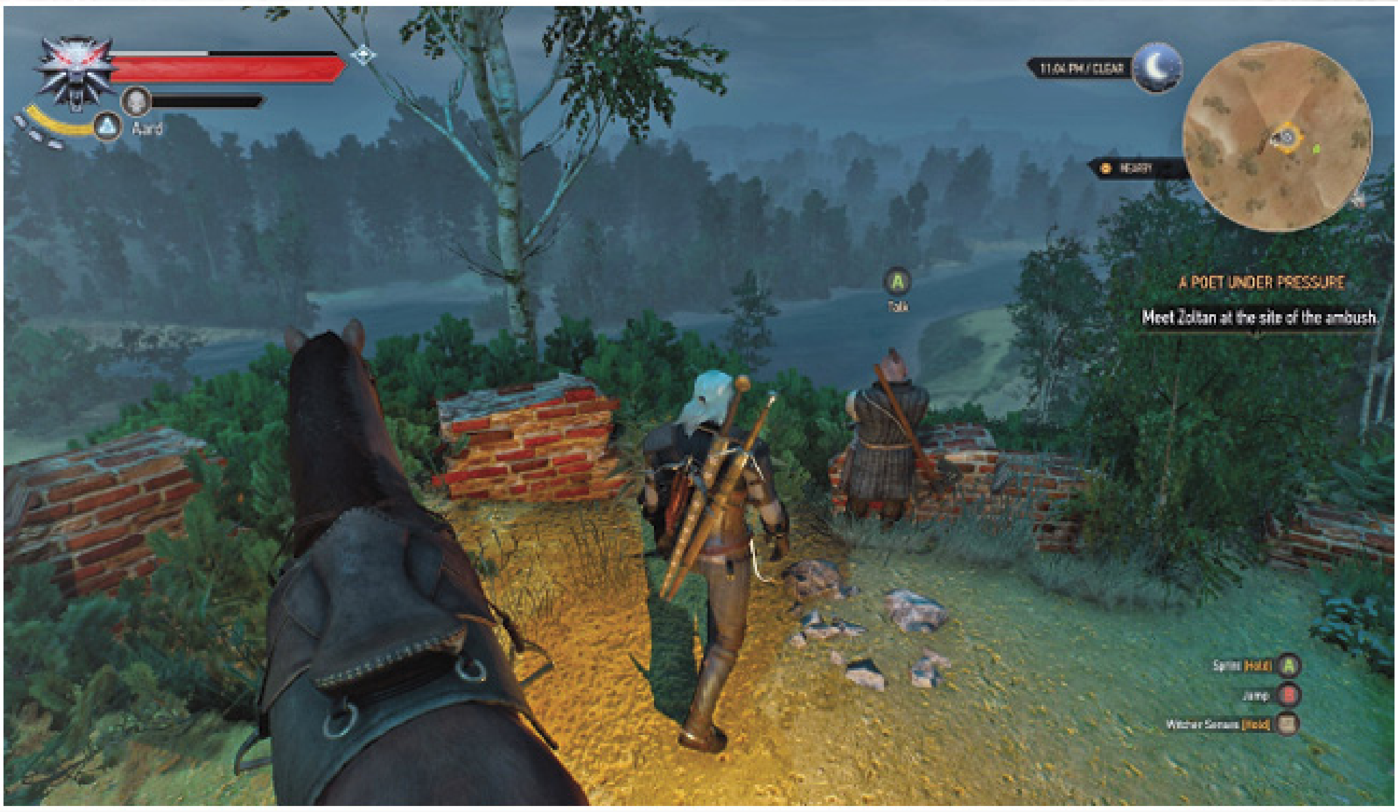
LOCATIONS : The Butcher's Yard Theater (Novigrad), Seven Cats Inn, Isolated Hut
CHARACTERS : Zoltan Chivay, Priscilla, Halflings and Dwarf, Dandelion
ENEMIES : Redanian Guards, Drowners, Witch Hunter

OBJECTIVES:

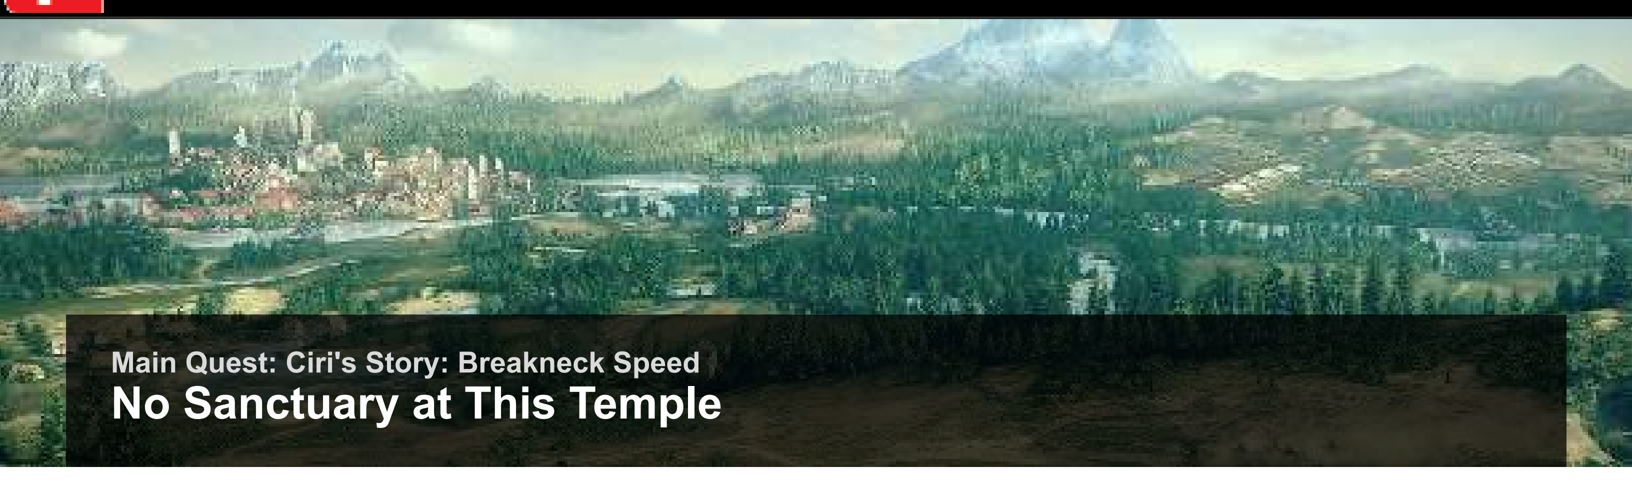
- Meet Zoltan at the site of the ambush.
- Nearest Signpost: East of Seven Cats Inn.

Travel eastward out of Novigrad, passing the Seven Cats Inn via the road by the river to reach the ambush point. As you approach the objective, head up the grassy embankment to the north, then around to a small campfire and some low brick ruins where Zoltan is waiting. He and some of his fellows have set the ambush for a convoy transporting Dandelion from his prison on Temple Isle (north Novigrad) to Oxenfurt.

- If you helped Dijkstra with his treasure hunt during Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure, you can meet him back in his bathhouse office, and he agrees to send a small band of his men to help you with the ambush.



Explain to the dwarf your intentions regarding raising suspicion or that an ambush is simpler (your choice). Then Priscilla arrives—an unwise move on her part due to the danger—bringing a note from Dudu. The convoy leaves at dawn, but she stays whether you ask her to leave or not. Zoltan challenges you to a game of Gwent while you wait. Agree or don't. Then wait until you hear the sounds of horses approaching.



Main Quest: Ciri's Story: Breakneck Speed

No Sanctuary at This Temple

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: CIRI'S STORY: BREAKNECK SPEED

LOCATIONS : Temple Isle (Novigrad), Elector's Square, Temple of the Eternal Light

CHARACTERS : Cirilla, Dandelion

ENEMIES : Redanian Guards, Whoreson's Men, Bandits

OBJECTIVE:

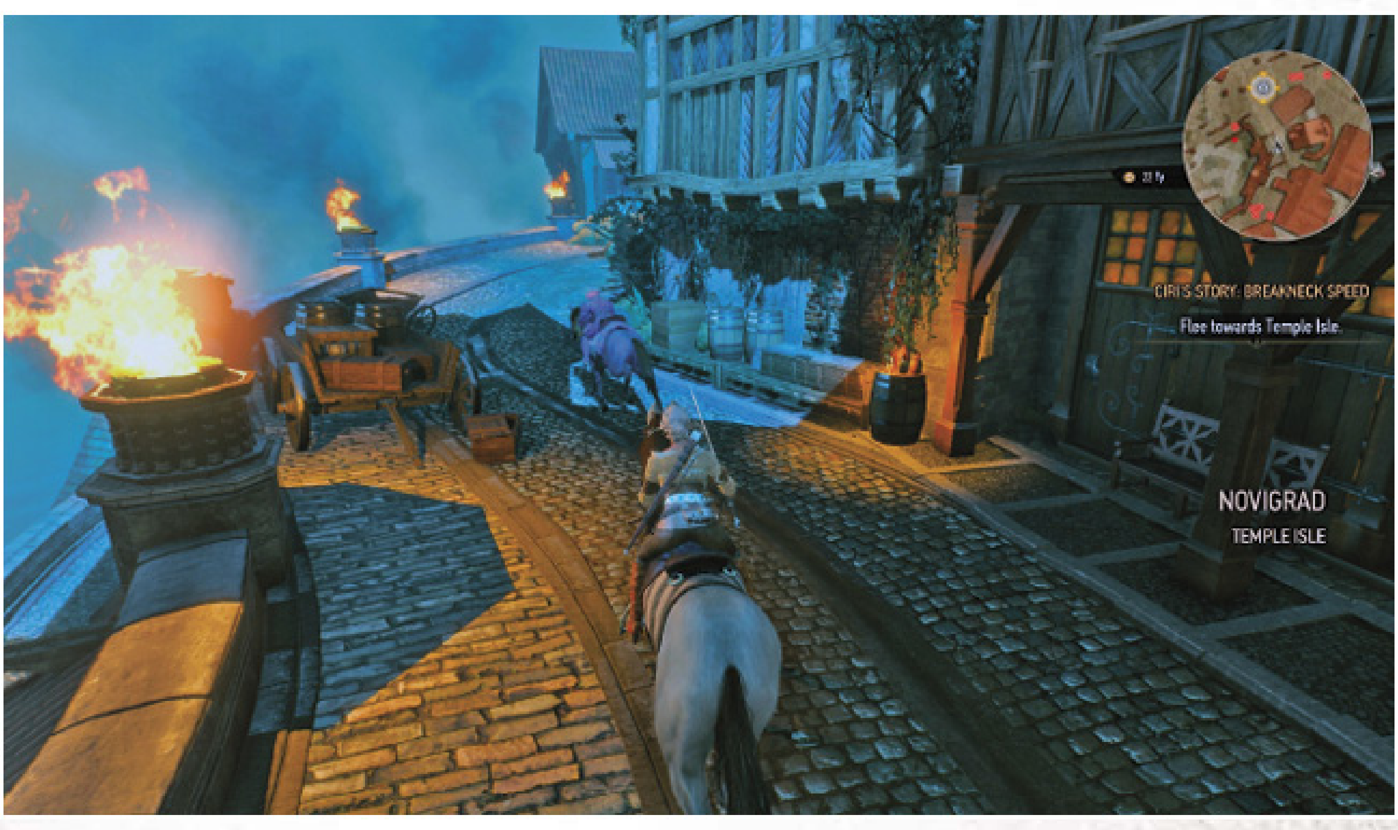
- Flee toward Temple Isle

MORE HASTE, AND MORE SPEED

If you're slow or caught by guards, you may be overwhelmed and easily cut down. The following route should be utilized as quickly as possible.

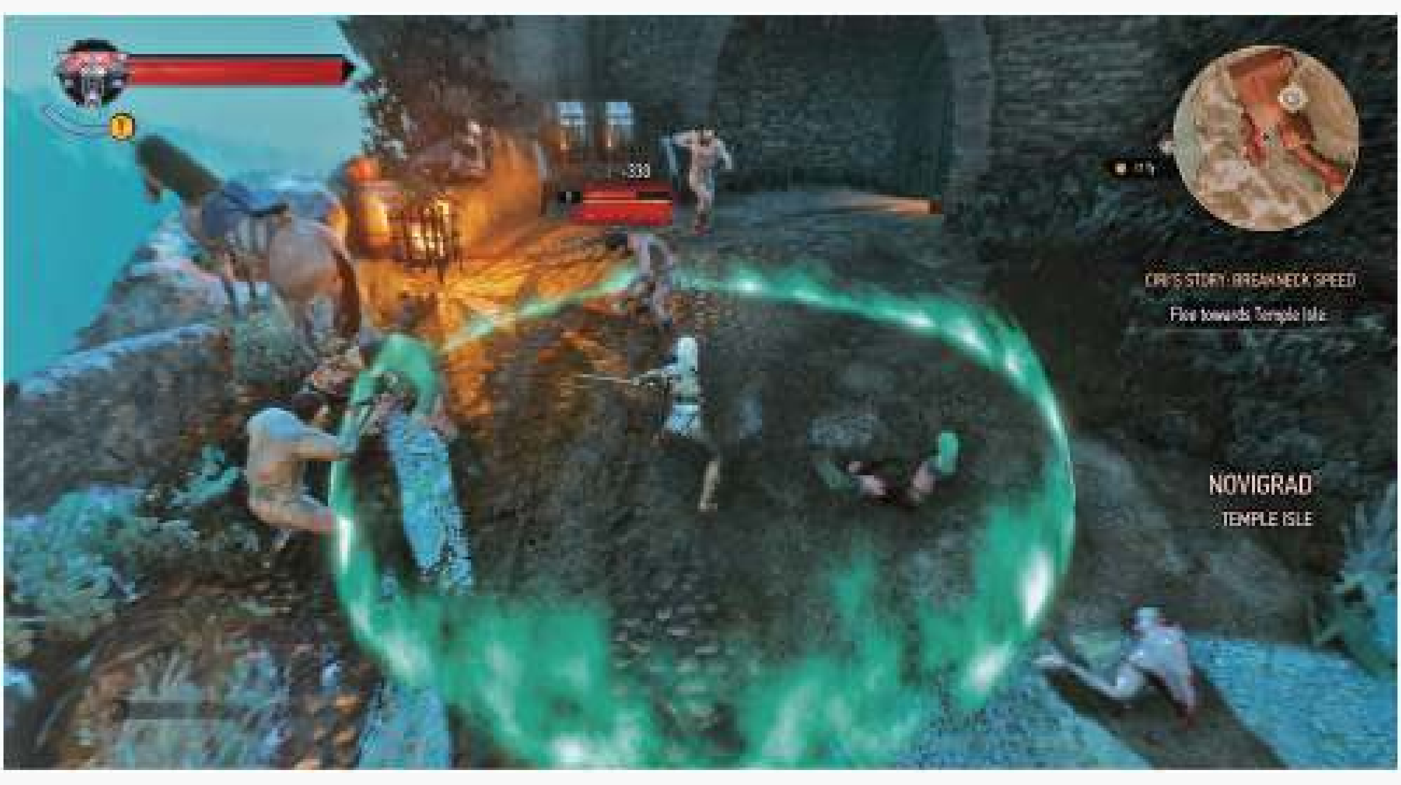
Cirilla

You are Ciri. You're being chased through the streets of northern Novigrad. Whoreson Junior's men are after you, and are yelling at the Redanian Guards to give chase. From your starting point, dash southwest up the cobblestones and through the portcullis gate. Dandelion raises the portcullis, motioning you to mount a horse. It is advisable to choose the more docile mount on the left.



Reverend Nathaniel Pastodi

Gallop along the main cobbled road, passing too many enemies to keep track of (at least a dozen). Head past some wooden barrels and defenses, passing a crossbow ambush and the signpost. Race up the hill until Dandelion yells at you to leave your horse. You have at least eight of Whoreson's men to battle on the high road lit by braziers. Slay them all, then wait for Dandelion to approach the door.



Run up a large set of stairs toward the Temple of the Eternal Fire. You tell Dandelion to run, while you try to fend off more bandits. The temple guard now join the fray, with the Reverend Nathaniel Pastodi attempting to arrest all of the troublemakers. After being surrounded, you have just enough time to teleport away. Dandelion is less lucky. The quest then concludes.

Secondary Quest: Cabaret

Trouble in Paradise

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: CABARET

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: The Play's the Thing, Secondary Quest: Carnal Sins

LOCATIONS : Rosemary and Thyme (Novigrad), Butcher's Yard Theater, Sophronia's House, Polly's House, Rautlec's House, Vegelbud Residence (Gustfields)

CHARACTERS : Priscilla, Dandelion, Irina Renarde, Sophronia, Crimson Avenger, Polly, Hubio, Hank Rautlec

ENEMIES : Bandits

RECOMMENDED ITEM : 200 Crowns

OBJECTIVES:

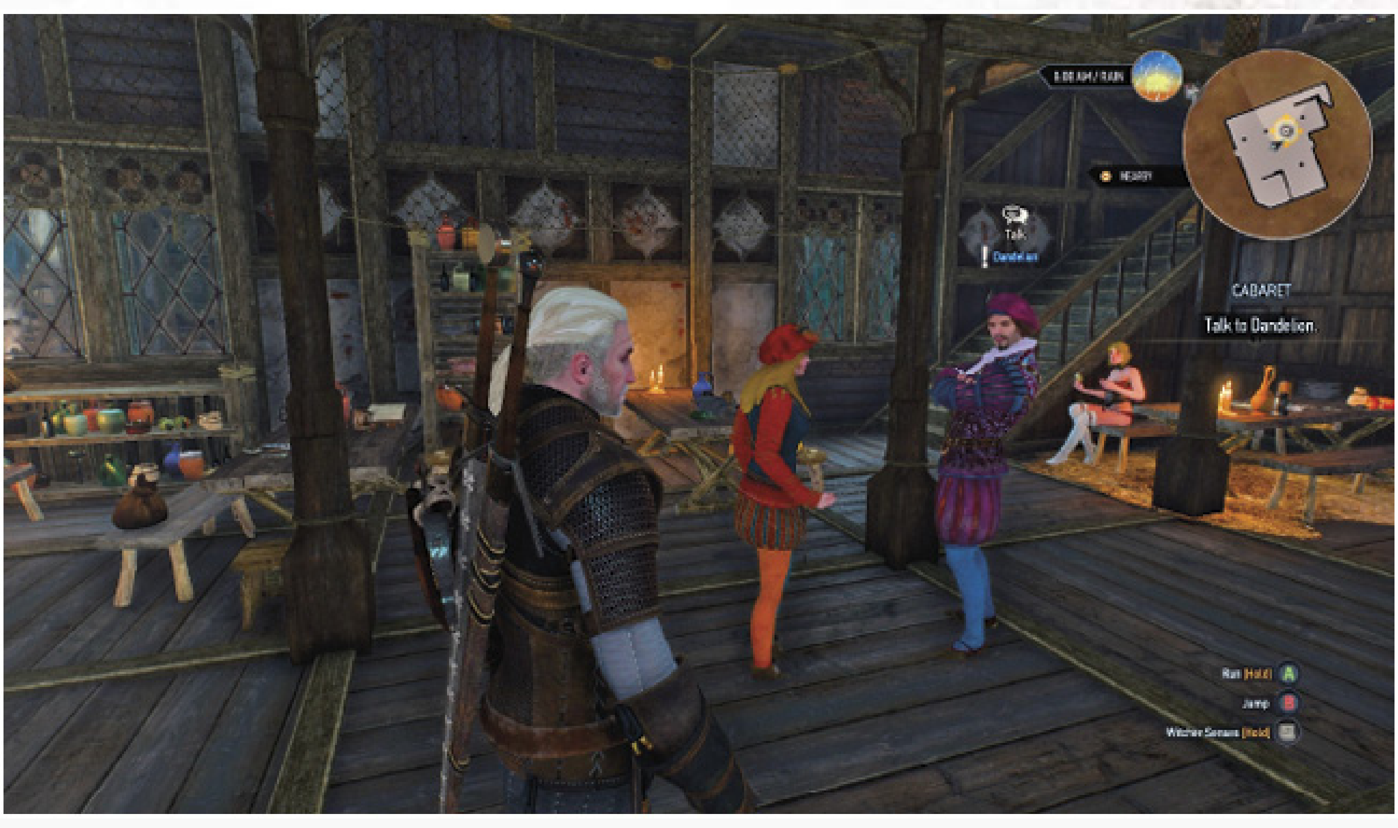
- Meet Dandelion at the Rosemary and Thyme.
- Talk to Dandelion.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest becomes available once Main Quest: The Play's the Thing concludes, and Dandelion is rescued.

Dandelion

Return to the Rosemary and Thyme, and head inside. You witness the tail-end of an argument between Priscilla and Dandelion. She storms off, and he whines to you about being called a "whoremonger and a witless hack." He hopes to change the more risqué nature of the Rosemary and Thyme. In fact, he is planning a cabaret. Though you may have advice about Dandelion using a bank, or your own coin, simply agree to help Dandelion. A past fling of his—Sophronia—has a merchant father, and the coin could come from her. But to win her over, there must be a ruse most cunning. It involves a dull sword from Madame Irina, and a meet-up outside of Sophronia's house at sunset.



OBJECTIVE:

- Borrow a prop sword from Madame Irina.

Irina Renarde

It's a short jog across and along the northern side of the canal. Locate the footbridge above the canal that leads to the rear entrance of The Butcher's Yard Theater. Enter Irina's quarters (the brick building), and request the dull sword. She happily obliges.

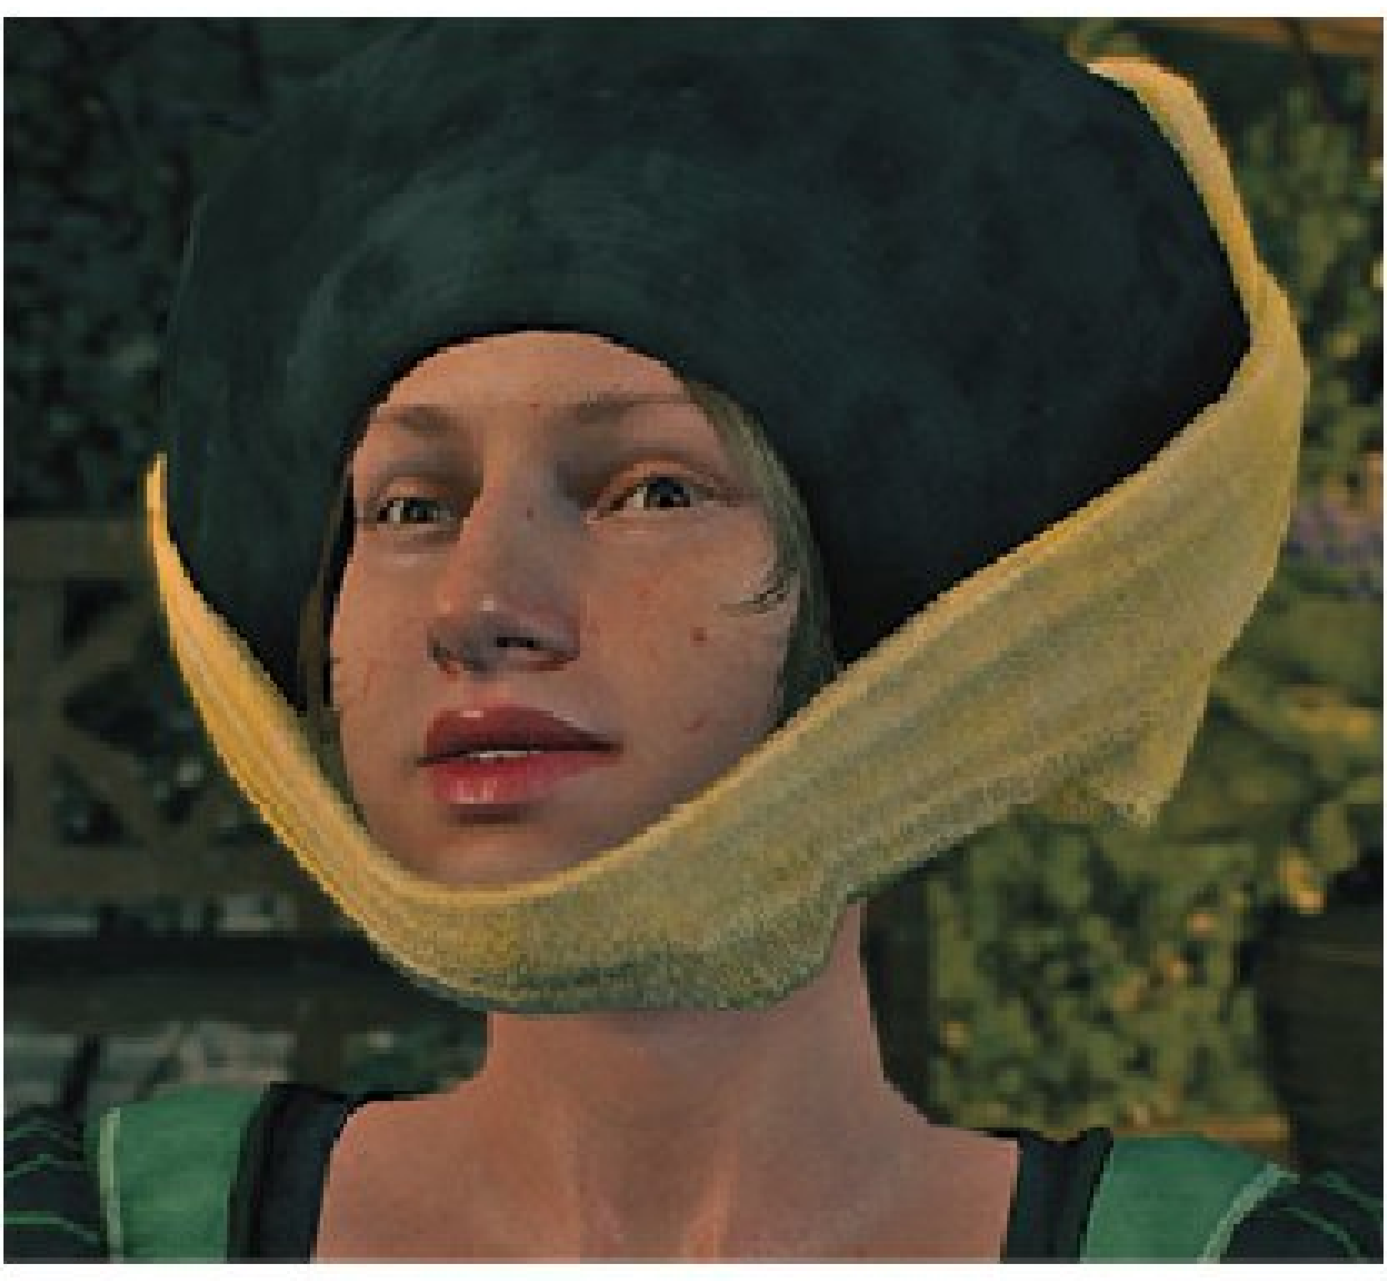
ITEM: Quest Item: Blunt Sword

Secondary Quest: Cabaret

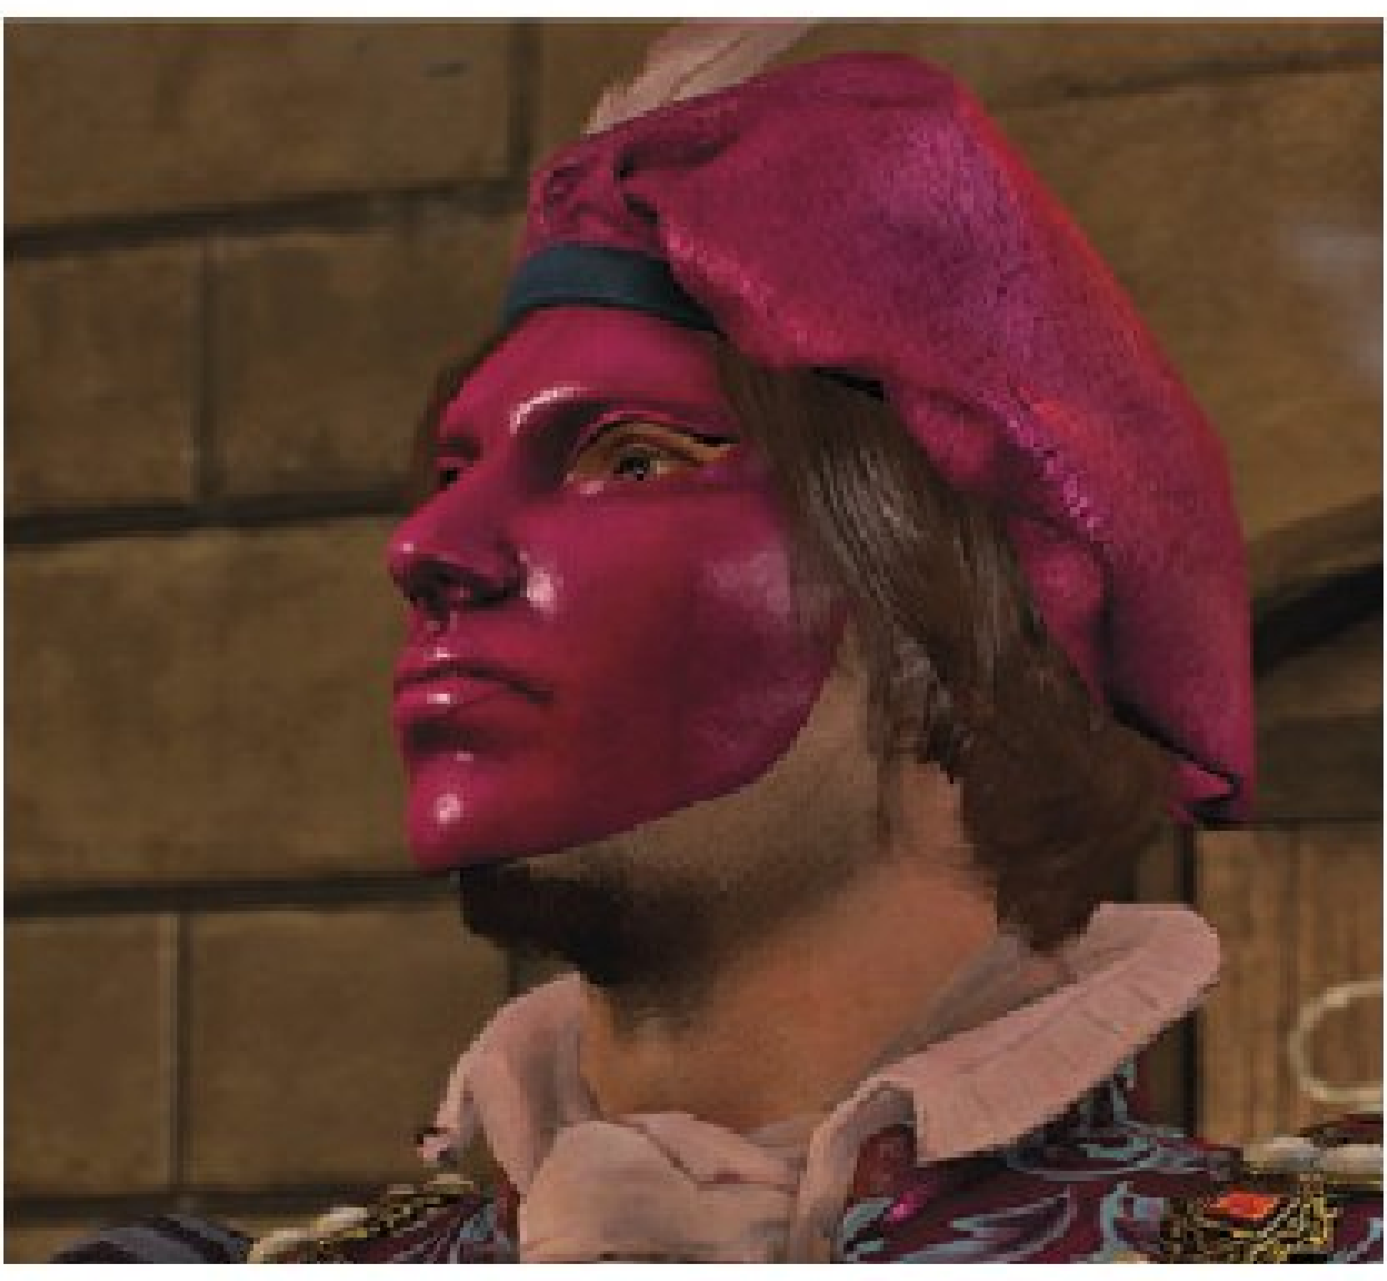
A Hero is Born

OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Dandelion near Sophronia's house after dark.
- Fight the Crimson Avenger.



Sophronia

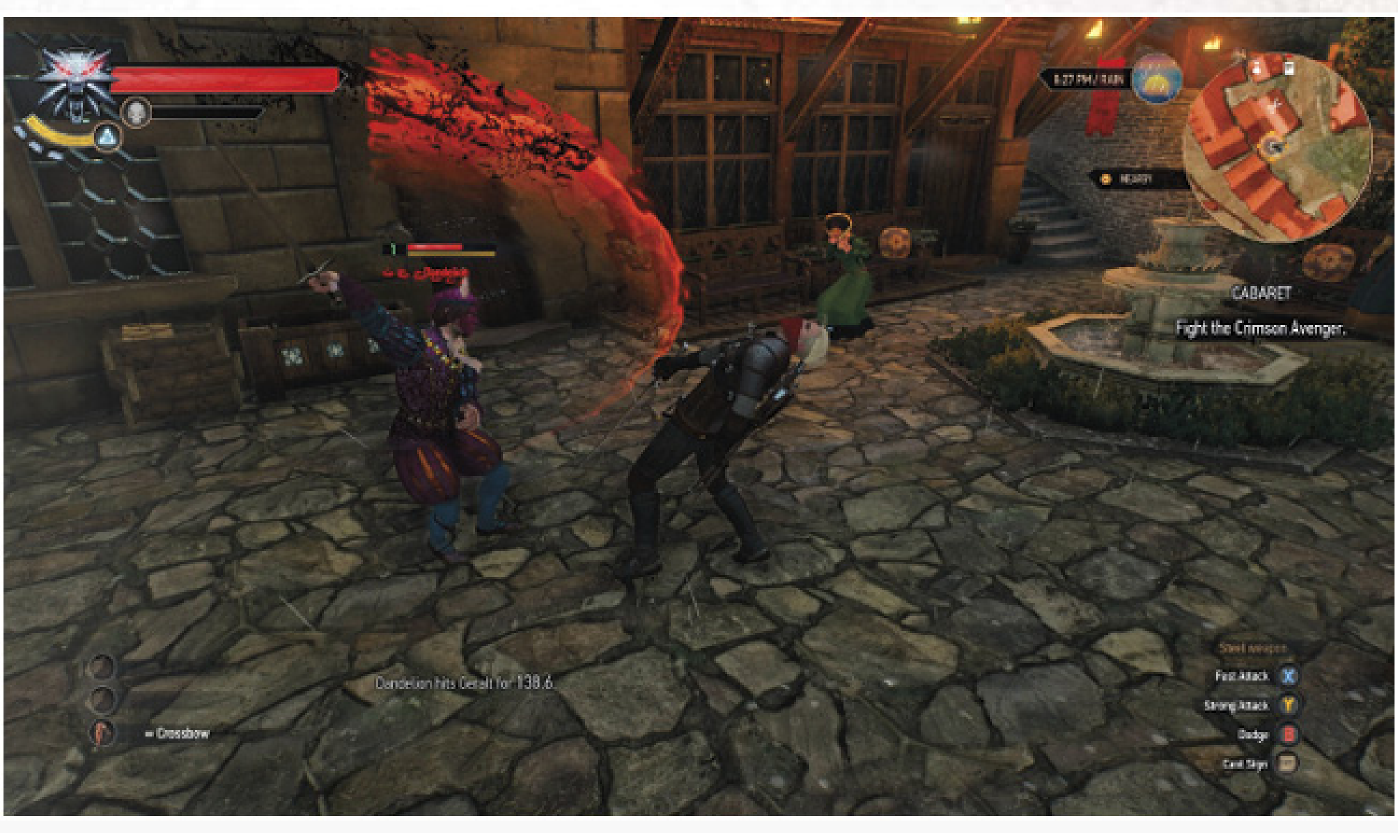


The Crimson Avenger

Head northward into the Gildorf District, along the raised thoroughfare above the bathhouse, then head to the courtyard just south of the main market square, near a small fountain. If Dandelion hasn't shown, meditate until just after sundown. He's fashionably late, and pitches you a plan—he needs Sophronia to believe him to be a hero who can save her from a bandit. You're playing the part of the bandit. You can agree, disagree, or be incredulous at the stupidity of it all. Before there's any more time to argue, he shoves a handkerchief to hide your face, and tells you to meet him back at the Rosemary and Thyme in the morning, after you scare the woman. You have two opportunities to try the following:

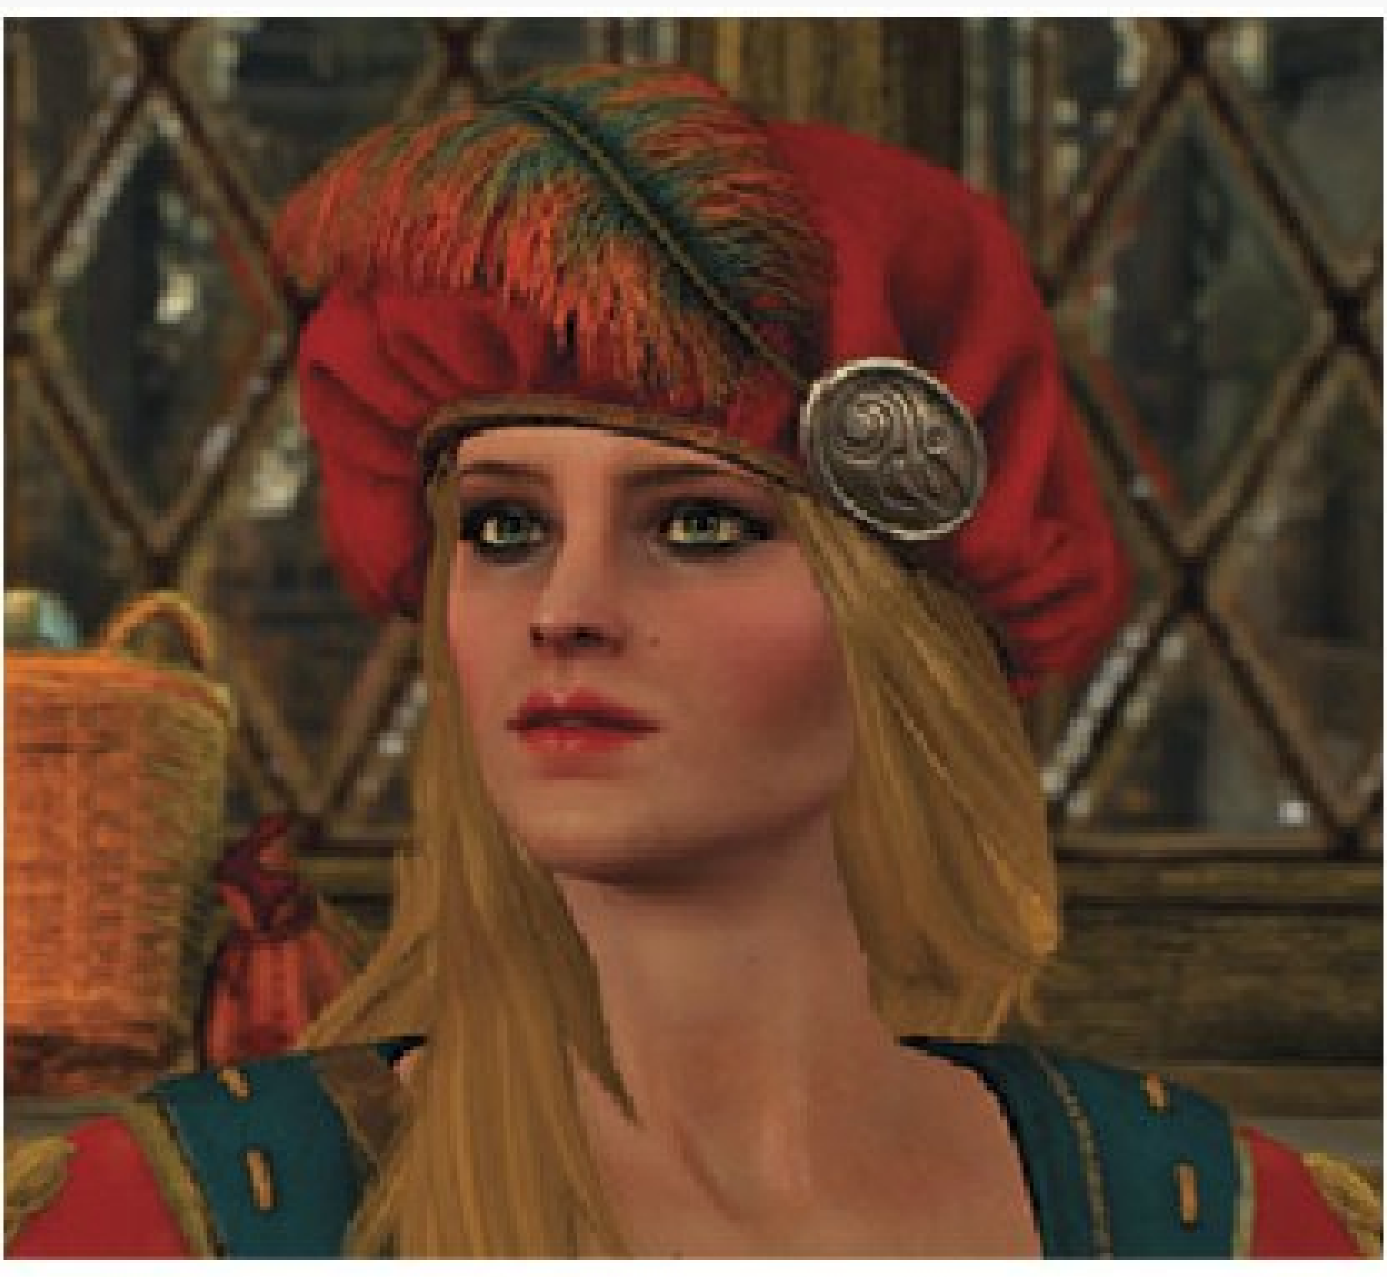
- Read from the card Dandelion gave you.
- Or improvise.

Either plan results in an interruption from Dandelion—or as he now wishes to be known, the Crimson Avenger—who intends to defeat you with swordplay. If you're adept and parrying and try to teach Dandelion a lesson, he protests. Instead, simply try some ineffectual counter attacks and let him strike you until "combat" concludes. Sophronia is really getting into the live-action roleplay part of this, and offers to bandage up Dandelion inside her house. Meanwhile, you're asked to leave.



OBJECTIVE:

- Meet Dandelion in the morning at the Rosemary and Thyme.

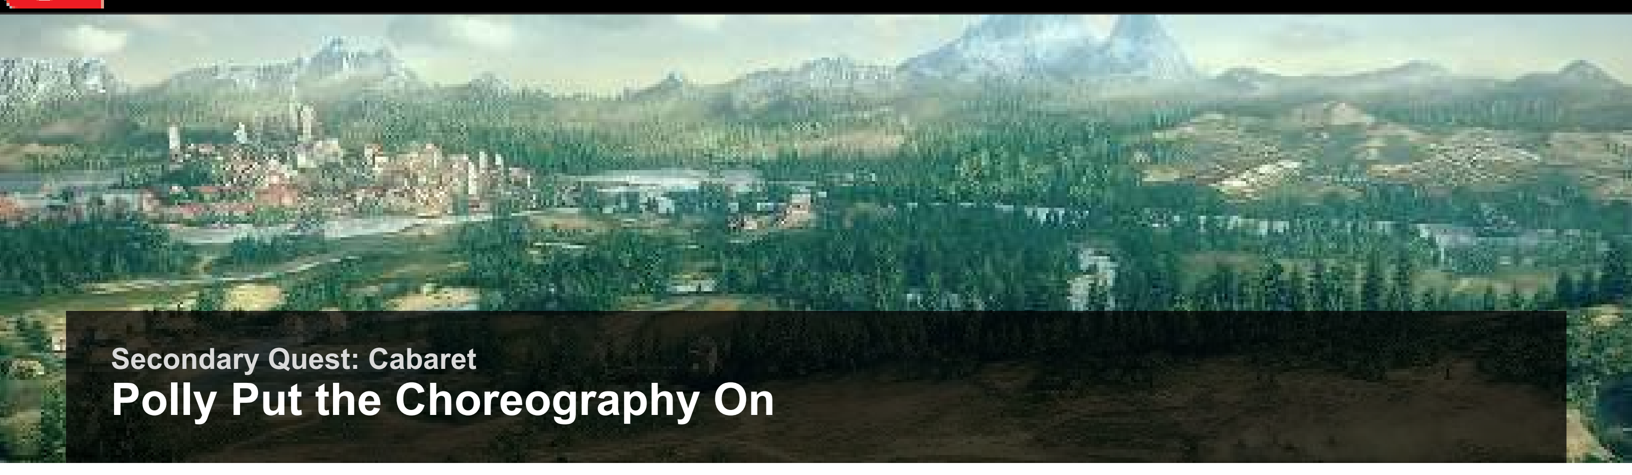


Priscilla

Head back to the Rosemary and Thyme (meditating until morning if necessary. Inside, Priscilla is speaking with a dwarven set builder. He turns to you to choose the interior decoration.

- Choose a theatrical look (this is Dandelion's preference).
- Choose a boudoir look.
- Let Priscilla decide. She chooses a theatrical look.

After speaking about Dandelion to Priscilla, choosing any answer you wish, you agree to find the fellow.



Secondary Quest: Cabaret

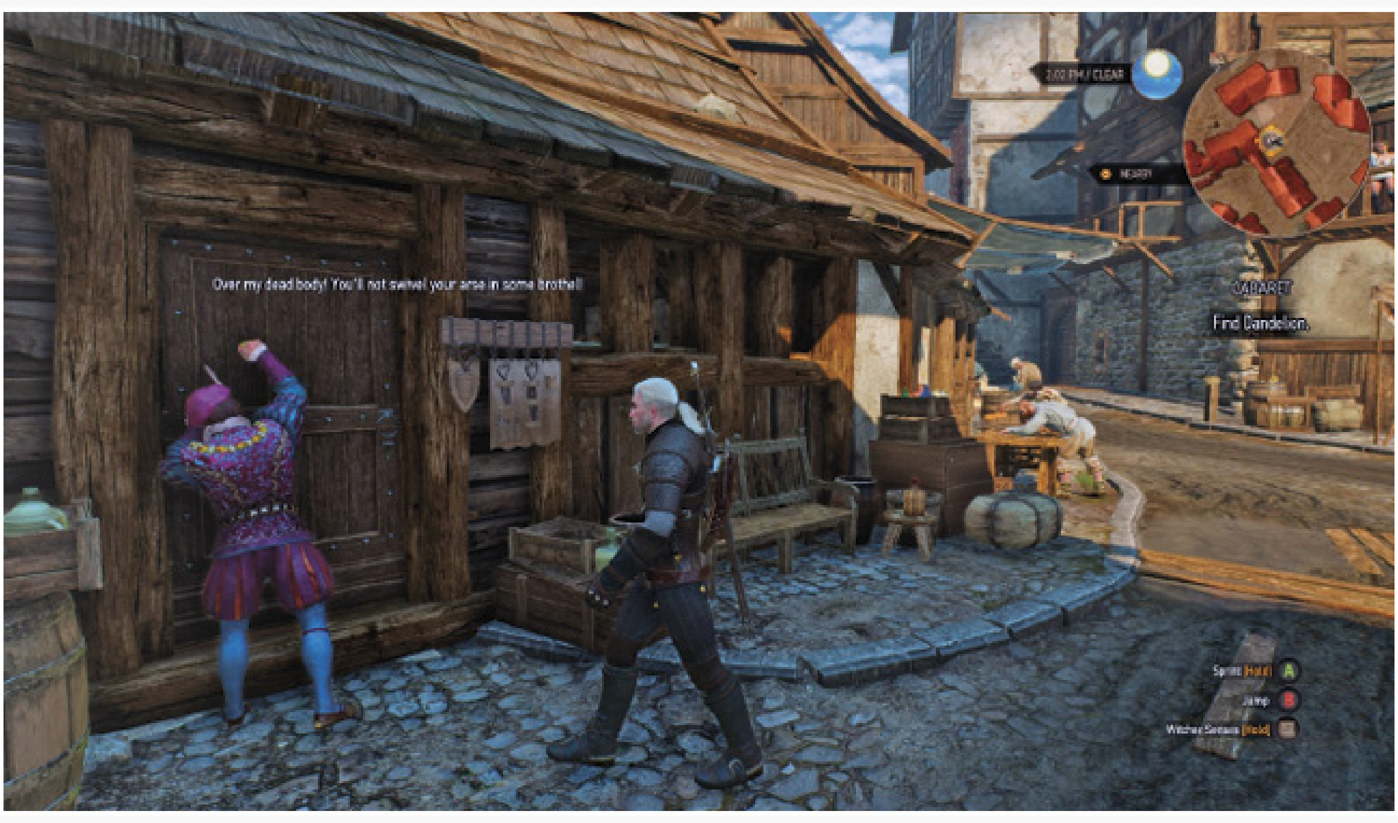
Polly Put the Choreography On

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Dandelion.
- Look for the key using your Witcher Senses. Open the door to Polly's home.

Polly

Hublo



Over my dead body! You'll not swivel your arse in some brothel!

Dandelion is west and a little south of the Rosemary and Thyme. Find him banging against the door of Polly, Dandelion's preferred choreographer, and her fiancé who doesn't trust Dandelion's motives. You offer to break down the door, but Dandelion reckons there's a spare key around here, somewhere. Use your Witcher Senses and look under the wooden bucket to the right of the bench and front door.

Once inside, Polly's fiancé has some choice words for the dandy, and you're able to ratchet down the verbal assault by choosing your own threatening words (you have two attempts, the first choice is a verbal put-down, but the second results in fisticuffs). Once Dandelion butters Hubio up, swears the Rosemary and Thyme is no longer a brothel, and offers to pay Polly handsomely, he relents. Polly agrees to help, leaving you to converse with Dandelion as you wish.

Main Quest: Ciri's Story: Breakneck Speed

Tying up Loose Ends in Novigrad

The conversation returns to Geralt, Dandelion, Zoltan, and Priscilla. You focus on the information you discovered during your adventures in Novigrad:

- The fact that Ciri isn't in Novigrad.

Depending on how much of the adventure you have completed (in Velen and Skellige), this quest ends with the following options:

- If you have completed Main Quest: Family Matters and Main Quest: Hunting a Witch, you reckon exploring Skellige (Main Quest: Destination Skellige) is in order.
- If you have completed Main Quest: Nameless, you think Main Quest: Family Matters or Main Quest: Hunting a Witch are both good plans.
- If you haven't completed up to either sets of quests in Velen or Skellige, you are at a loss at what to do.
- If you've completed Main Quest: Family Matters and Main Quest: Hunting a Witch, as well as Main Quest: Nameless, Main Quest: Ugly Baby automatically begins.
- In addition, there are Secondary Quests available for Dandelion, Zoltan, Triss, and the Assassins plotting regicide. All of these are detailed in the next section.

Secondary Quest: Cabaret

Off to the Races

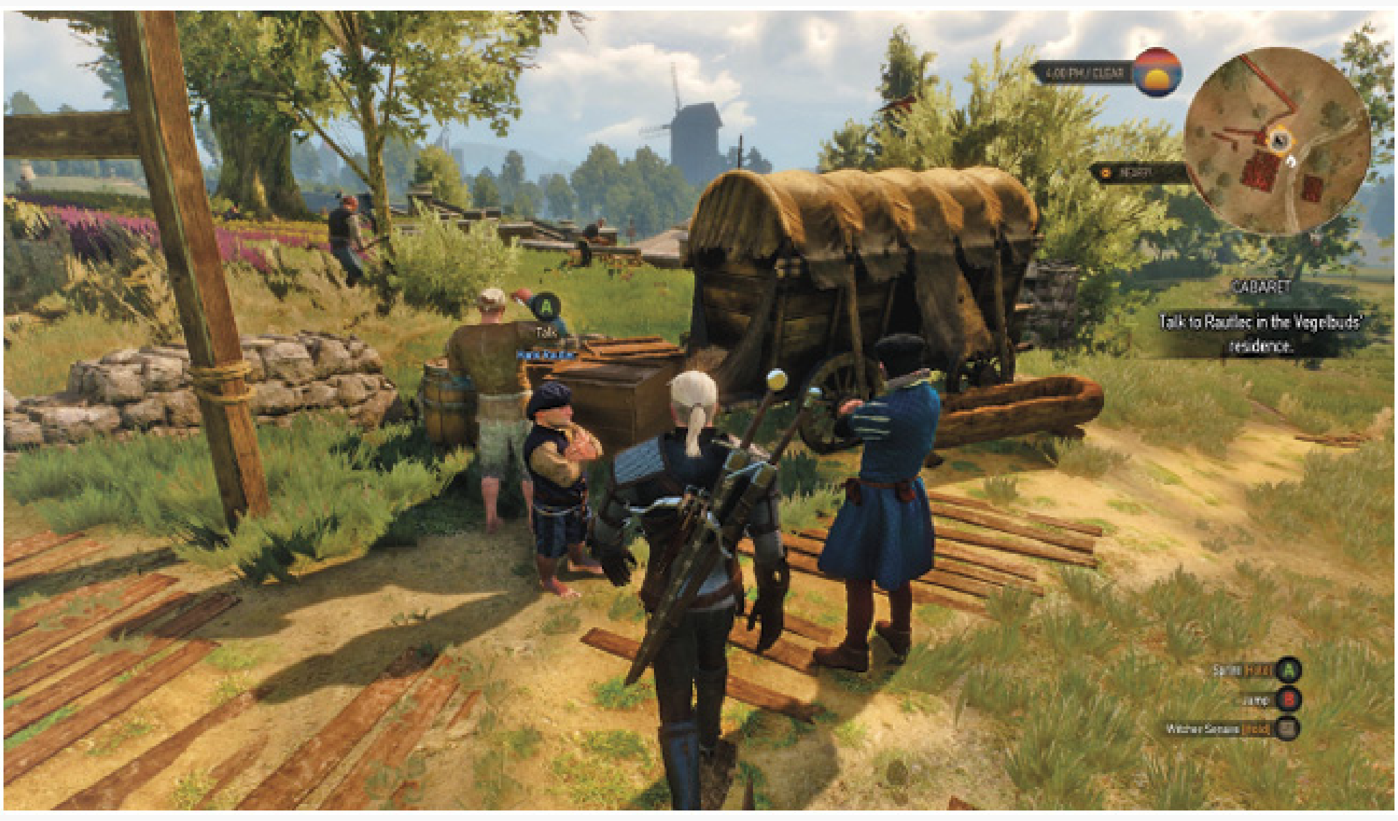
OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Rautlec in the Vegelbuds' residence.
- (Optional) Win the race.
- Return to Dandelion.

Hank Rautlec

The Vegelbud Residence is a lavish mansion with formal gardens and its own countryside racing road. It's east of here, and requires Fast Travel or a gallop on Roach. You'll find Rautlec by a small caravan near the race seating and bookie caravan, talking to Count de Luverten. The Count has coaxed the halfling into one more bet, but if Rautlec's horse loses, he'll be indebted for a lifetime. There are ways to solve this problem, of course. You can:

- Persuade him that you'll race, and then win it. If you win, the halfling is most appreciative, and tells you he'll deliver the placards. If you lose, you can pay off his debt (275 crowns now), or ignore Rautlec and let him flee. Either way, you return to Dandelion.
- (200 Crowns) Simply pay off the debt. He's shocked by your generosity, and tells you he'll deliver the placards. Head back to Novigrad.
- Ignore Rautlec's plight, and head back to the Rosemary and Thyme to tell Dandelion he'll have to live without his placards.



HORSING AROUND

Be sure you're familiar with the finer arts of horse racing, and the twists and turns of this course. Why not gallop around the circuit once or twice on Roach, before speaking to Rautlec?

QUEST CONCLUSION: OPENING NIGHT BUTTERFLIES

Back at the Rosemary and Thyme, Dandelion is either thrilled at the "theatrical" façade of the place, or a little miffed at the boudoir décor. Either way, he aims to christen the place "the Chameleon." Priscilla nips off to change her dress, and Dandelion orders a round of drinks to celebrate. Agree or refuse a drink. Then answer Dandelion however you wish, when he begins to talk about Priscilla (again). The conversation drifts on, as this quest concludes, and Secondary Quest: Carnal Sins automatically begins.

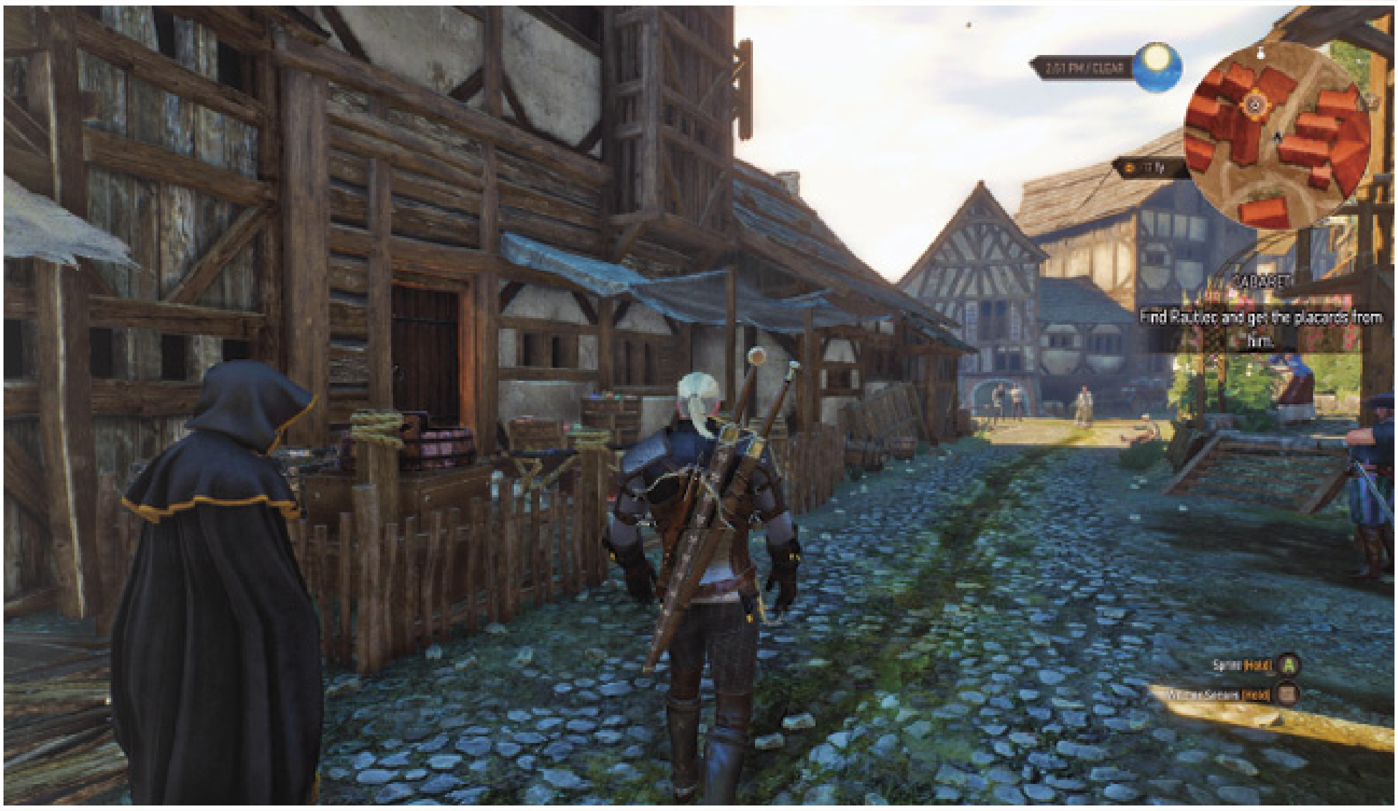
Secondary Quest: Cabaret

Placating the Placard-Makers Collectors

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Rautlec and get the placards from him.
- Deal with Rautlec's creditors.

Next, Dandelion needs to stop by Hank Rautlec's, a famed portrait artist (apparently). He's in charge of the placards for the Rosemary and Thyme, and Dandelion already ordered some from Rautlec, but they haven't arrived yet. Ask about Rautlec if you wish, then offer to get the placards. His place is a few doors northwest of the Golden Sturgeon. Head north, across the canal, then northwest to the entrance shown in the previous picture. Enter the modest establishment, and two bandits are sifting through his better works of art.



CABARET

Find Rautlec and get the placards from him.

You can:

- Stop them from stealing, resulting in combat with the two foes.
- Tell them you're only interested in the placards.

Either way, a spot of fisticuffs is in order. After the two bandits are beaten down, they tell you where the halfling is—over at the Vegelbud estate, losing his last crowns at the races.

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: CARNAL SINS

RELATED QUESTS : Secondary Quest: Cabaret

LOCATIONS : Novigrad; Rosemary and Thyme; Vilmerius Hospital, Gildorf Sewers, Novigrad Mortuary, Meyer and Meyer Woodworkers Shop, Vegelbud Estate, Crippled Kate's, Warehouse 12

CHARACTERS : Dandelion, Priscilla, Joachim von Gratz, Fabian Meyer, Hubert Rejk, Reverend Nathaniel Pastodi, Gus Meyer, Ingrid Vegelbud, Patricia Vegelbud, Sweet Nettie

ENEMIES : Drowners, Water Hag, Poor Townsmen, Dogs, Vegelbud Guards, Vampire

RECOMMENDED ITEMS : Axii Delusion Level 3; 200 Crowns

OBJECTIVES:

- Go meet with Von Gratz.
- Go through the sewers to get to the mortuary.
- Nearest Signpost: Hierarch Square.

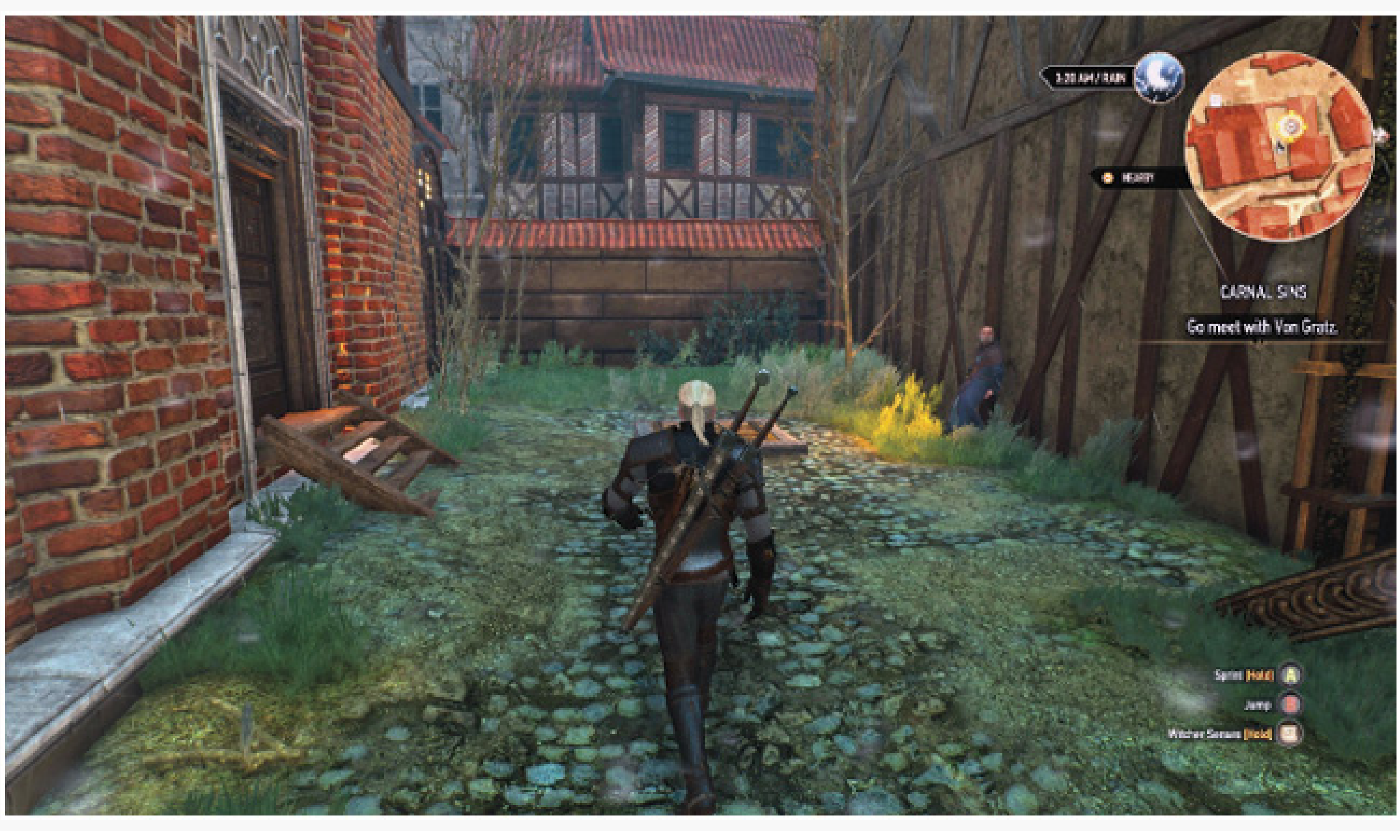
QUESTING DECISIONS

This purely optional quest automatically starts at the conclusion of Secondary Quest: Cabaret.

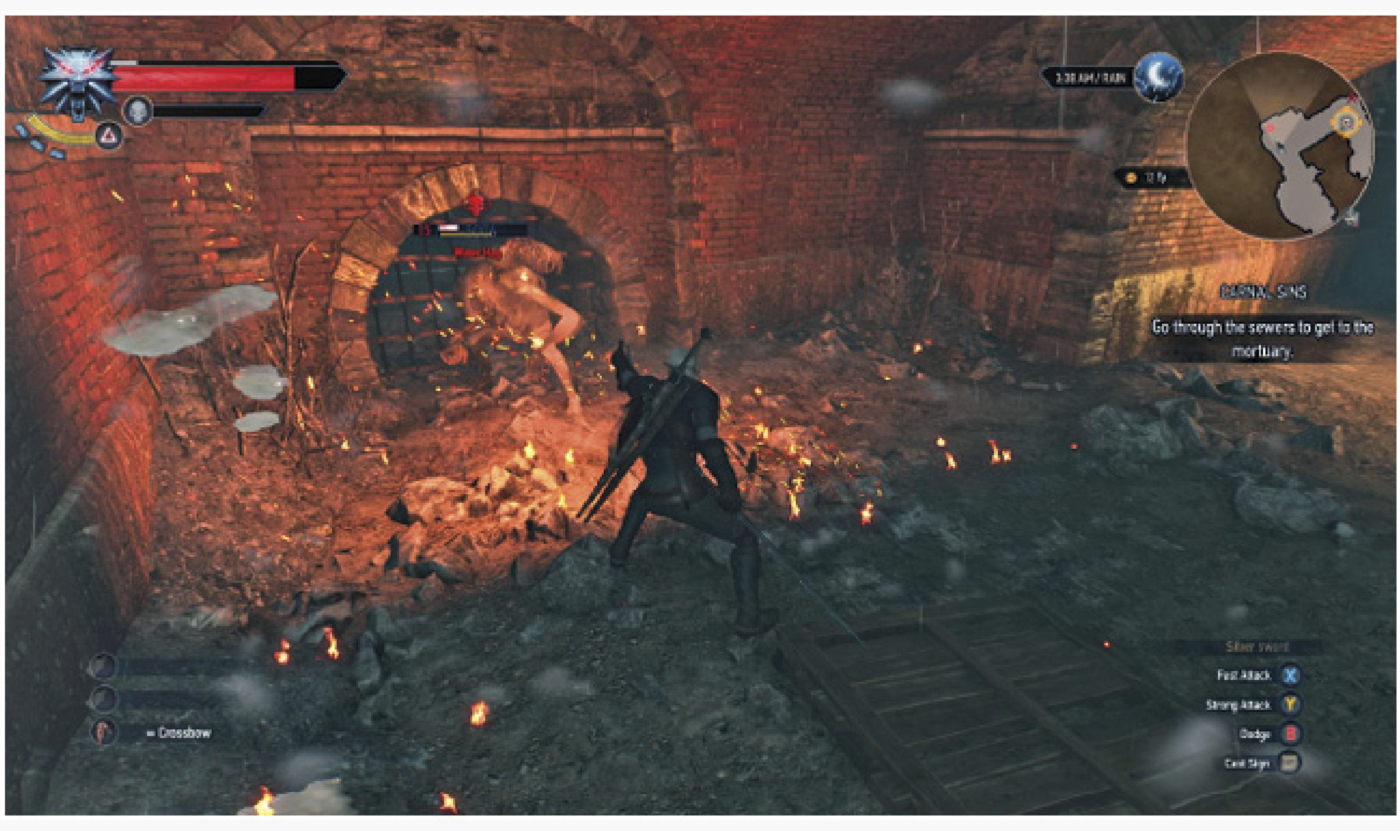
Your dandy friend is wearing a groove in the Rosemary and Thyme floorboards, pacing up and down in anticipation of Priscilla's arrival. When a messenger arrives to tell you both that she's been hurt, you both speed to Vilmerius Hospital. The doctor (Joachim von Gratz) describes her condition as critical. Answer the doctor how you wish regarding the method of the attack (she was forced to drink a caustic fluid after being immobilized in some way). This isn't the first victim to be mangled in this manner, either. Dandelion pleads for you to help find the person responsible. Agree, to continue this quest. Or arrange to meet him outside the Kingfisher Inn, if you need to prepare. Joachim seems helpful. He offers to take you inside the morgue via the sewer entrance, so you can inspect the previous victim. Head to the sewer grate by the side entrance to the Kingfisher Inn, and descend. You appear with Joachim in the brick-walled dankness under the city.

Dandelion

Joachim von Gratz



Joachim seems to be part vigilante, as you speak to him while ridding the intial corridors of a couple of drowners. Two more lollop your way along with a water hag, before you can climb a wooden stairwell to a brick balcony and upper tunnel to the west. Follow Joachim up the stairs and then a ladder, and finally a door into the mortuary itself.



Secondary Quest: Carnal Sins

We Seek the Corpse of a Dwarven Woodcarver

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the dwarven woodcarver's body using your Witcher Senses.

Inspect the bodies on the gurnies using your Witcher Senses. One has been mauled by necrophages. Another is human, not dwarven. The dwarf lies in the northeast part of the area, near the autopsy posters. Tell Joachim to start the autopsy, in any of the following areas:

Hubert Rejk

Reverend Nathanlel Pastodl

- Head—hair is burned, eyes are scooped out. An incision made into the voice box, possibily with a scalpel. The murderer performed a tracheotomy. The mouth is burned and blistered like Priscilla's. There is gray dust around the eye sockets, too; burning coals were placed into the sockets.
- Torso—deep wound to the left of the rib cage. A scar the length of his stomach; examine both. The scar is an old wound, but the stomach indicates the heart was carved out. Joachim delves into the wound and produces a small ball-shaped egg from an amphibian. This was the murderer's doing. Open the abdominal cavity, resisting the stench of formaldehyde. This was ingested!
- Hands—welts on his wrists, indicating he was tied up. Someone took a ring off his finger.
- Legs—he kicked something with his right foot.
- Genitals—early stages of syphilis.

Afterward, you can tell Joachim your deductions (ritual murder, punishment, no motive, or you'd prefer not to share your conclusions) as you wish. You're then interrupted by the coroner (Hubert Rejk), who tells you the name of the dwarf (Fabian Meyer). Hubert isn't happy that Joachim is doing his job for him. Ask how they know each other, then where the woodcarver's body was found (at his workshop near Farcorners, and dragged to the morgue by Eustace the corpse collector). Continue the investigation there, after Hubert covers for you once the prickish Reverend Nathaniel arrives, and closes the mortuary down. On the way out, chat to Joachim about Nathaniel's past as a torturer who now wears the garb of the Eternal Fire.

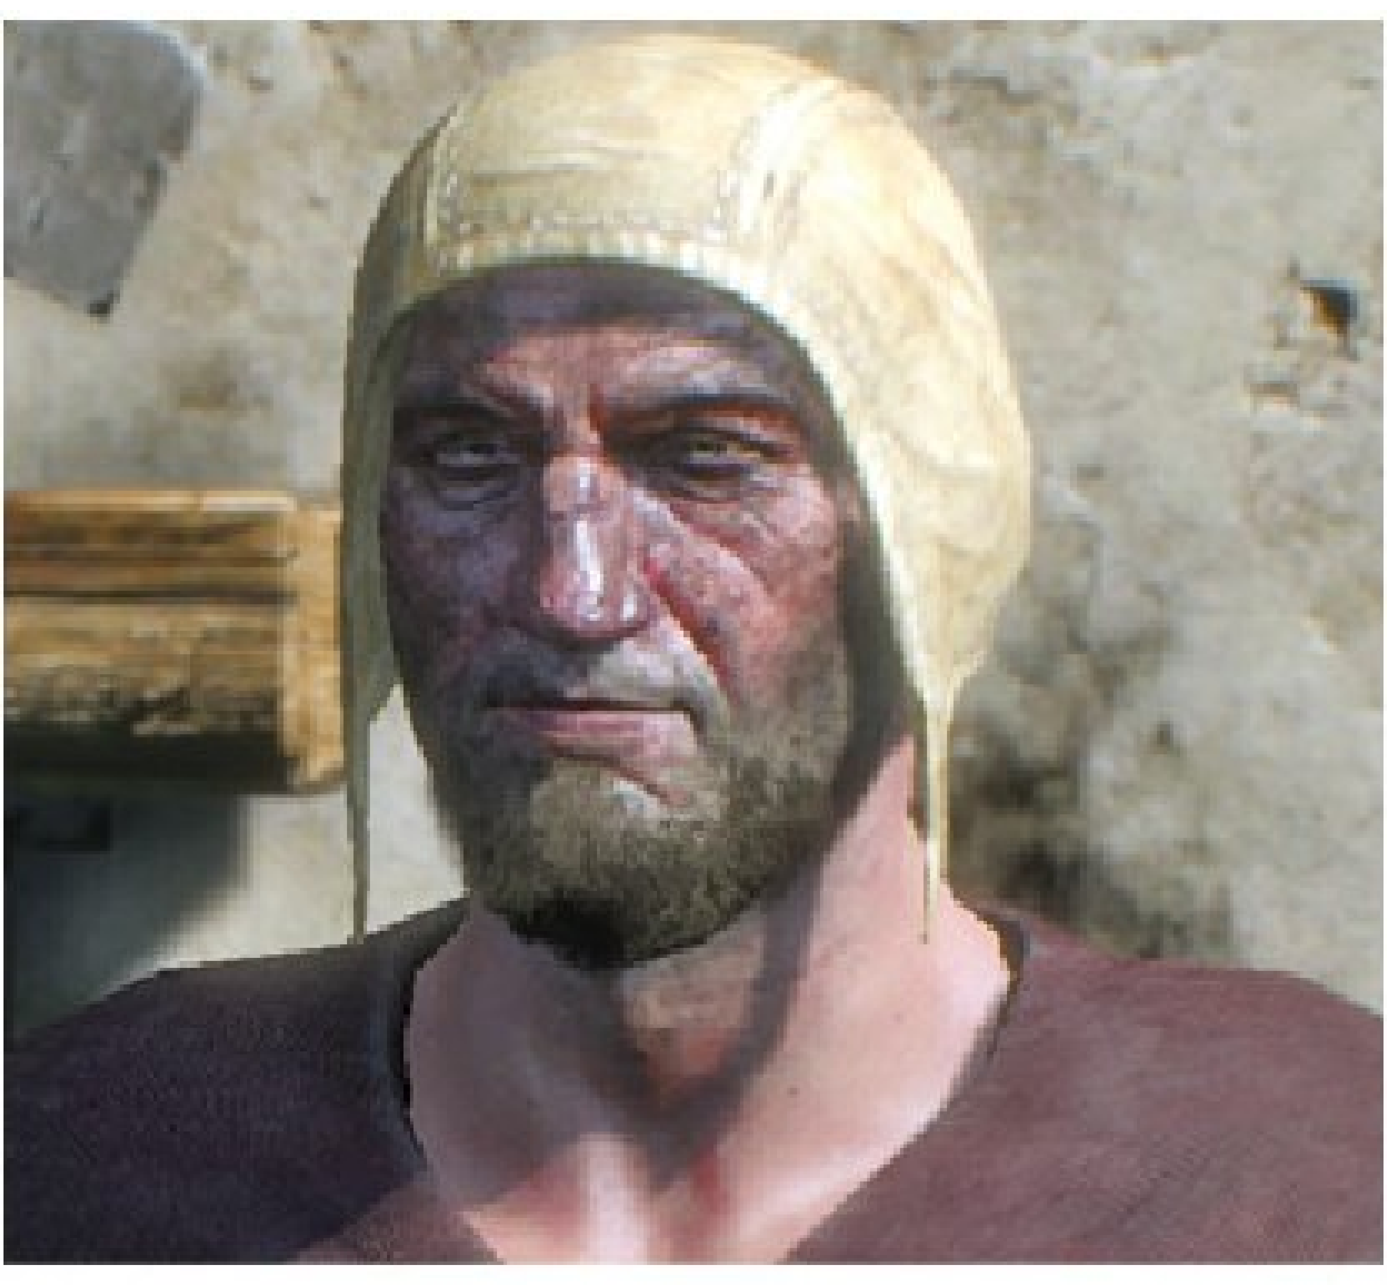
Secondary Quest: Carnal Sins

Seeking Sacrilege: Asking Thricely

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Eustace the corpse collector.
- Talk to Eustace.

The following objectives can be attempted in any order.



Eustace

Explore the The Bits District as you're not far from Eustace's location, near the recently deceased. He recalls the dead dwarf. Ask if he searched the corpse, and if there are others bearing the same wounds. There are—all ordered to be burned by the Reverend. After you accuse Eustace of stealing from corpses, the conversation turns tense. You can:

- (Axii Delusion Level 3): Befuddle him into revealing what was in the dwarf's pockets.
- (200 Crowns): Bribe him into telling you what the dwarf was carrying.
- Threaten him. This doesn't phase Eustace, as he knows he has an important job, and protection from the likes of you.

Ask the dwarf about the murder, and his brother's enemies (none, though he liked whores). Then use your Witcher Senses to find the following:

- A bonfire of statues, probably deemed too revealing by the Eternal Fire.
- Bloodstains where Fabian lay. The murderer dragged something heavy here.
- The sermon of a concerned citizen. Read it, to find some prose regarding depravity in these parts.
- The workshop door; Gus opens it, providing you checked the drag marks and the blood, then talked to Gus. Check the corner inside for some formaldehyde. There are also more blood stains and an overturned chair.

Now speak to Gus again, talking about his sculptures if you wish, but also about what exactly happened. The burning of the sculptures seems to be a lesson for the dwarves… and the whole city.

ITEM: Quest Item: Concerned Citizen's Sermon

OBJECTIVE:

- Investigate the alley where Priscilla was attacked using your Witcher Senses.

Journey to a seedy part of The Bits, close to the city wall near an ivy-covered shack, where a lady shows you a bit of leg. Hey, isn't that Whistling Wendy, the whore from Henselt's camp who helped you find the kaedwenians conspirators (in Witcher 2)? It leads to a dead-end. Pry the Concerned Citizen's Sermon off the wall, and optionally read it. It's a diatribe about filth polluting the city. Then inspect the area with your Witcher Senses:

- There's blood on the ground. Possibly Priscilla's.
- A brazier, seemingly out of season for this time of year.
- A man's footprint, who took a step back.
- Formaldehyde splattered on the ivy.

It's only when you try to leave that the gates are closed, and three of Whistling Wendy's brothers attempt to beat you to death. Use fists (as they've mistaken you for the murderer), though swordplay works, too. Afterward, the whore seems taken aback, realizes her hastiness, and tells you about her relationship with Priscilla (who treated her well, but jested about the Eternal Fire), and that her attack wasn't the first.

A Crisis of Faith

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to the coroner.
- Go to the Vegelbud residence.

During your previous objectives (usually after the second of the three are completed), you're stopped by a guard and told there's been another murder! You're to report to the coroner at once, back at the Mortuary. Hubert is waiting before he starts the autopsy. Ask about him and von Gratz if you wish. Then begin the grisly evidence-removal. The coroner produces a parchment made of human skin… "Patricia Vegelbud." Not the heiress?! Off to her estate, and don't spare the horse!

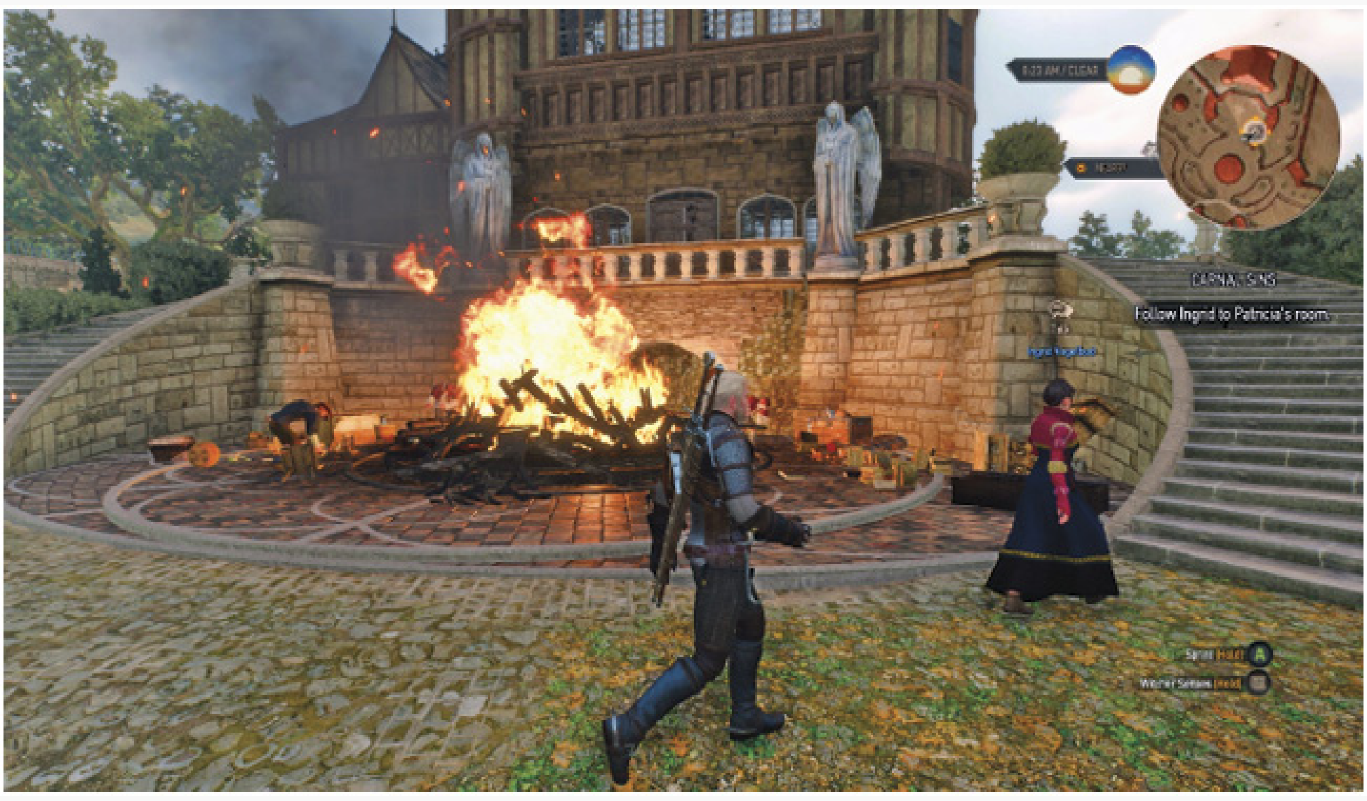
OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Ingrid to Patricia's room.
- Chase the murderer.

Ingrid Vegelbud

Whistle for Roach, and depart to the Vegelberg Estate, close to Wheat Fields (signpost). Speak to a gate guard, who is at pains to let you into this compound. You reach Lady Vegelbud's daughter Ingrid, who doesn't believe you, but seems content to check on her mother. Follow her past the fountain, where servants are burning a bonfire of holy books and reliquaries after Patricia's crisis of faith. You enter the mansion, and reach Patricia's bedroom.

Inside, you find Lady Vegelbud tied to the bed, and not in a good way. The murderer is escaping! Sprint across the room, down the stairs, and then head outside. You're forced into combat with a few guard dogs, and then around five Vegelbud guards. Progress to the area around the stairs, and you're stopped by a crossbow-wielding guard, who takes you prisoner.



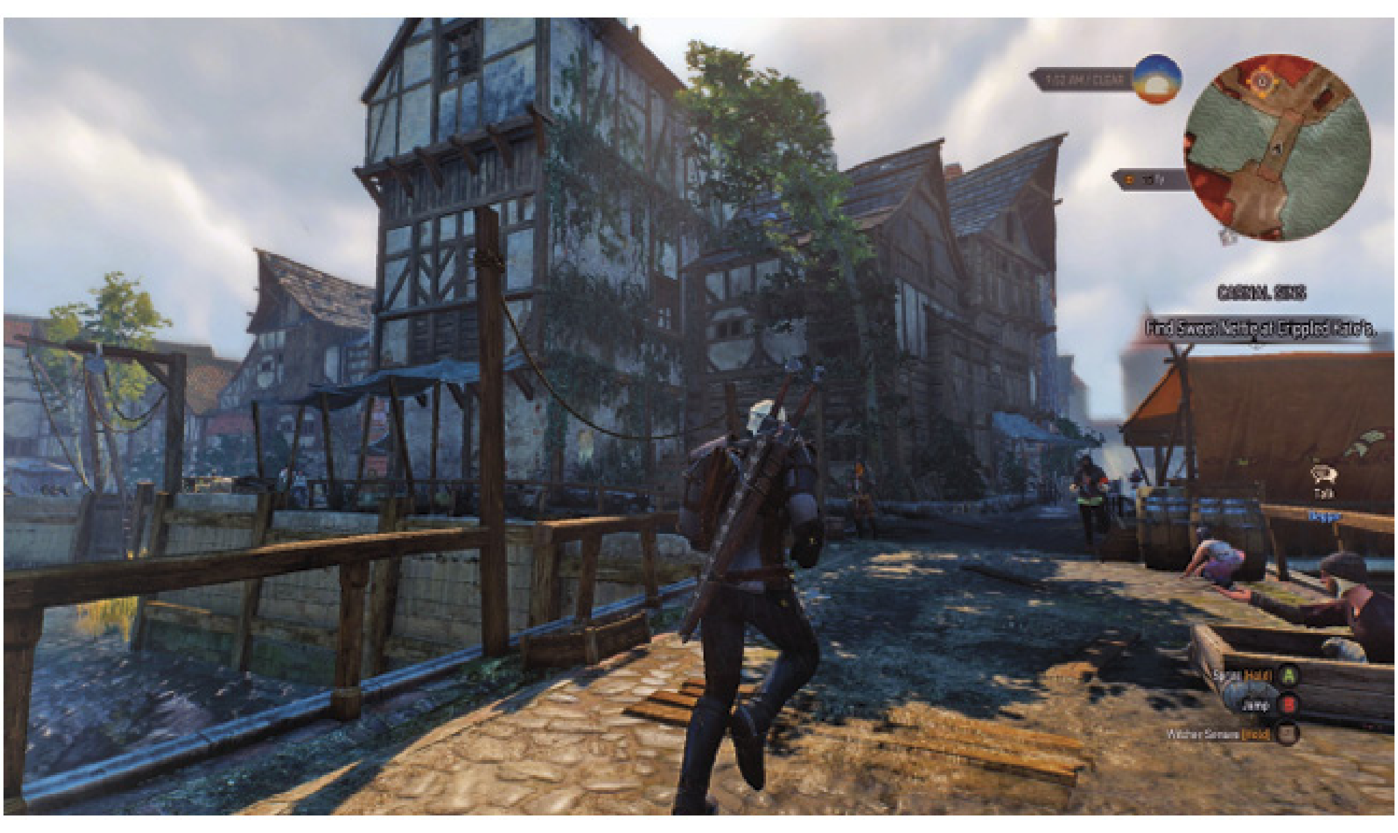
Secondary Quest: Carnal Sins

A Knockaround Guy

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Sweet Nettie at Crippled Kate's.
- Enter Sweet Nettie's room.

Sweet Nettle



A fast gallop (or a Fast Travel) to the mouth of the canal at the western docks in Novigrad allows quick access to the brothel known as Crippled Kate's. Ask inside, and you're told she's with a customer. Sprint upstairs (all the way to the top floor), and enter a bedroom where Nettie sits, stripped and tied to a chair, and about to be intruded by none other than the Reverend Nathaniel! He's annoyed with the interruption, and vows to see to you first. Answer him within the timer (choose any option), then listen carefully to his response, as he tells you he's not the killer. Your response?

- That he almost convinced you. This leads to Quest Conclusion #1.
- Ask who left the letter on Patricia. This leads to Conclusion #2.
- Tell him to mind his manners. This leads to Conclusion #2.

QUEST CONCLUSION #1: COGITA ANTE SALIS

OBJECTIVE:

- Kill Nathaniel.

This deviant in priest's clothing cannot be allowed to live! Battle him in the bedroom, and then untie poor Nettie. She tells you he wanted to do "everything," which included hitting her so she passed out. Though the man was a monster, Nettie's account doesn't seem to quite tally with the sheer inhumanity of what the previous victims underwent. Oh, well… the quest is solved.

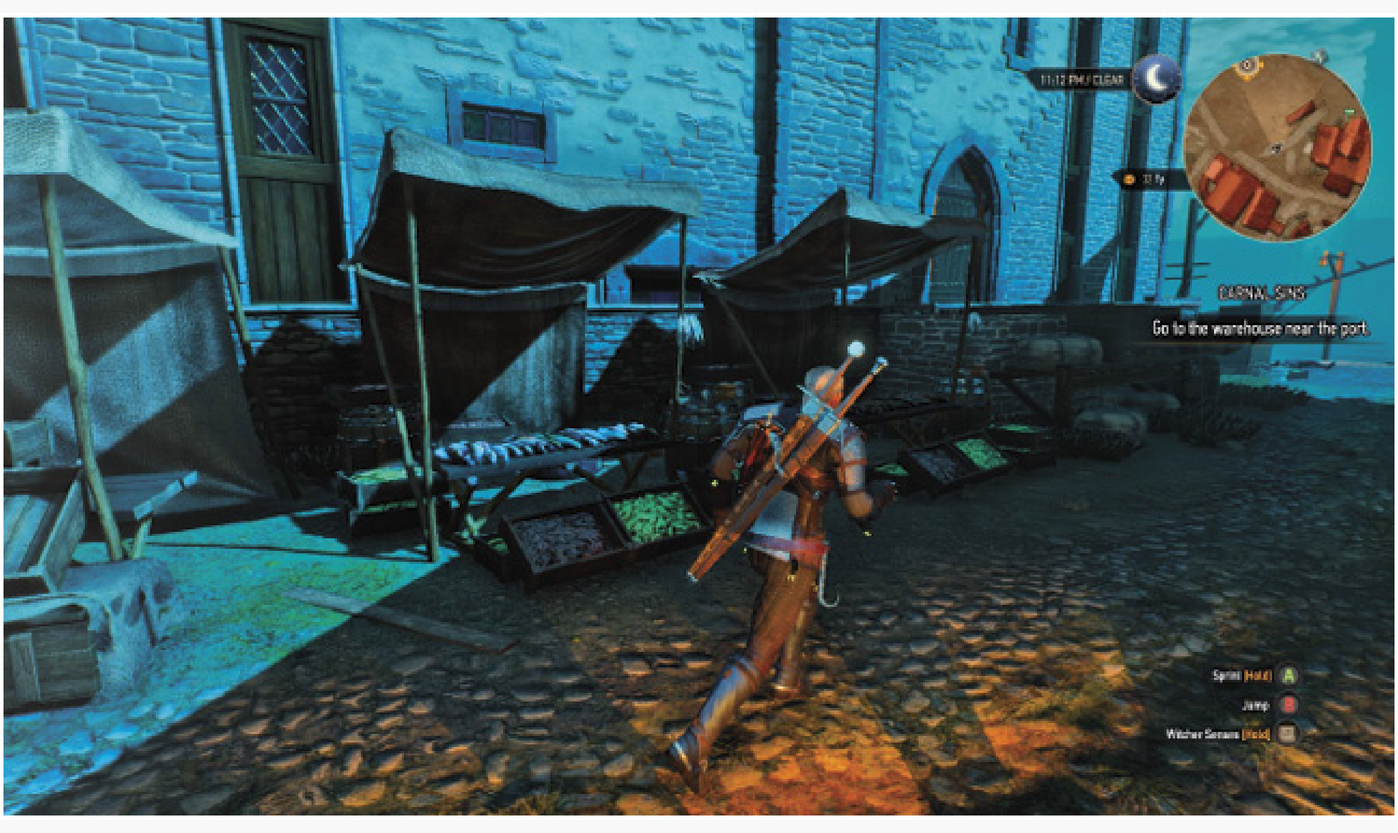
ANOTHER VICTIM

Some time later, you may stumble on another victim of the psychotic attacker, revealing you made the wrong decision. Check the note on the victim directing you to the mortuary, and a second note. Then complete Conclusion #2 if you wish.

QUEST CONCLUSION #2: IN FLAGRANTE DELICTO

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the warehouse near the port.
- Kill the vampire (1).

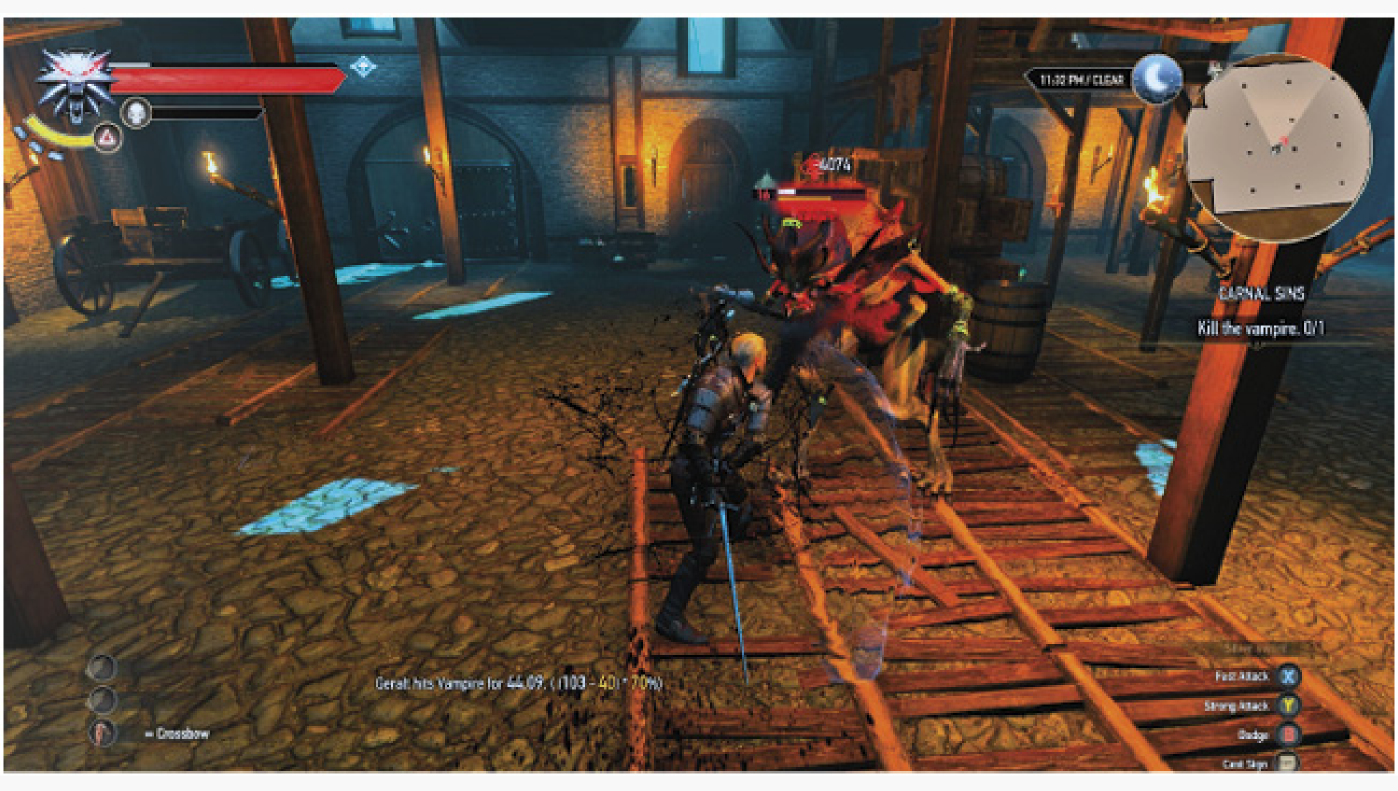


This deviant in priest's clothing cannot be allowed to… wait, what did he say? He wants to calmly talk to you, and you quickly figure out that the coroner is the only one that knew where Nathaniel would be. Now it's the turn of the Reverend to point you in the direction of his erstwhile friend. He's at warehouse twelve procuring formaldehyde. Now he'll get back to Nettie… until you:

- (Axii Delusion Level 3) Befuddle him into leaving her alone. This ends with Nettie being freed and Nathaniel unharmed.
- Stopping him with a stern warning. This ends with Nettie being freed after you slay Nathaniel. Untie poor Nettie, but her account doesn't seem to quite tally with the inhumanity the other victims underwent, so Nathaniel isn't the man you want.

Journey further into Novigrad Docks District, and open a side door just left of the main (locked) gates.

Hubert Rejk is caught red-handed. Though his cool disposition belies his true form as a higher vampire! After waffling on about the symbolism present in his murders, and his concurrence with the Eternal Fire Church's diagnosis of Novigrad as a fallen city, you can answer him as you wish; each of the three choices leads to a grotesque transformation, and a battle against this vampire! Defeat it, using tactical knowledge gleaned from the Bestiary. Once it's dead, the quest is solved properly.



END: DANDELION AND CALLONETTA

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Dandelion about Priscilla's condition.

- Nearest Signpost: Glory Gate

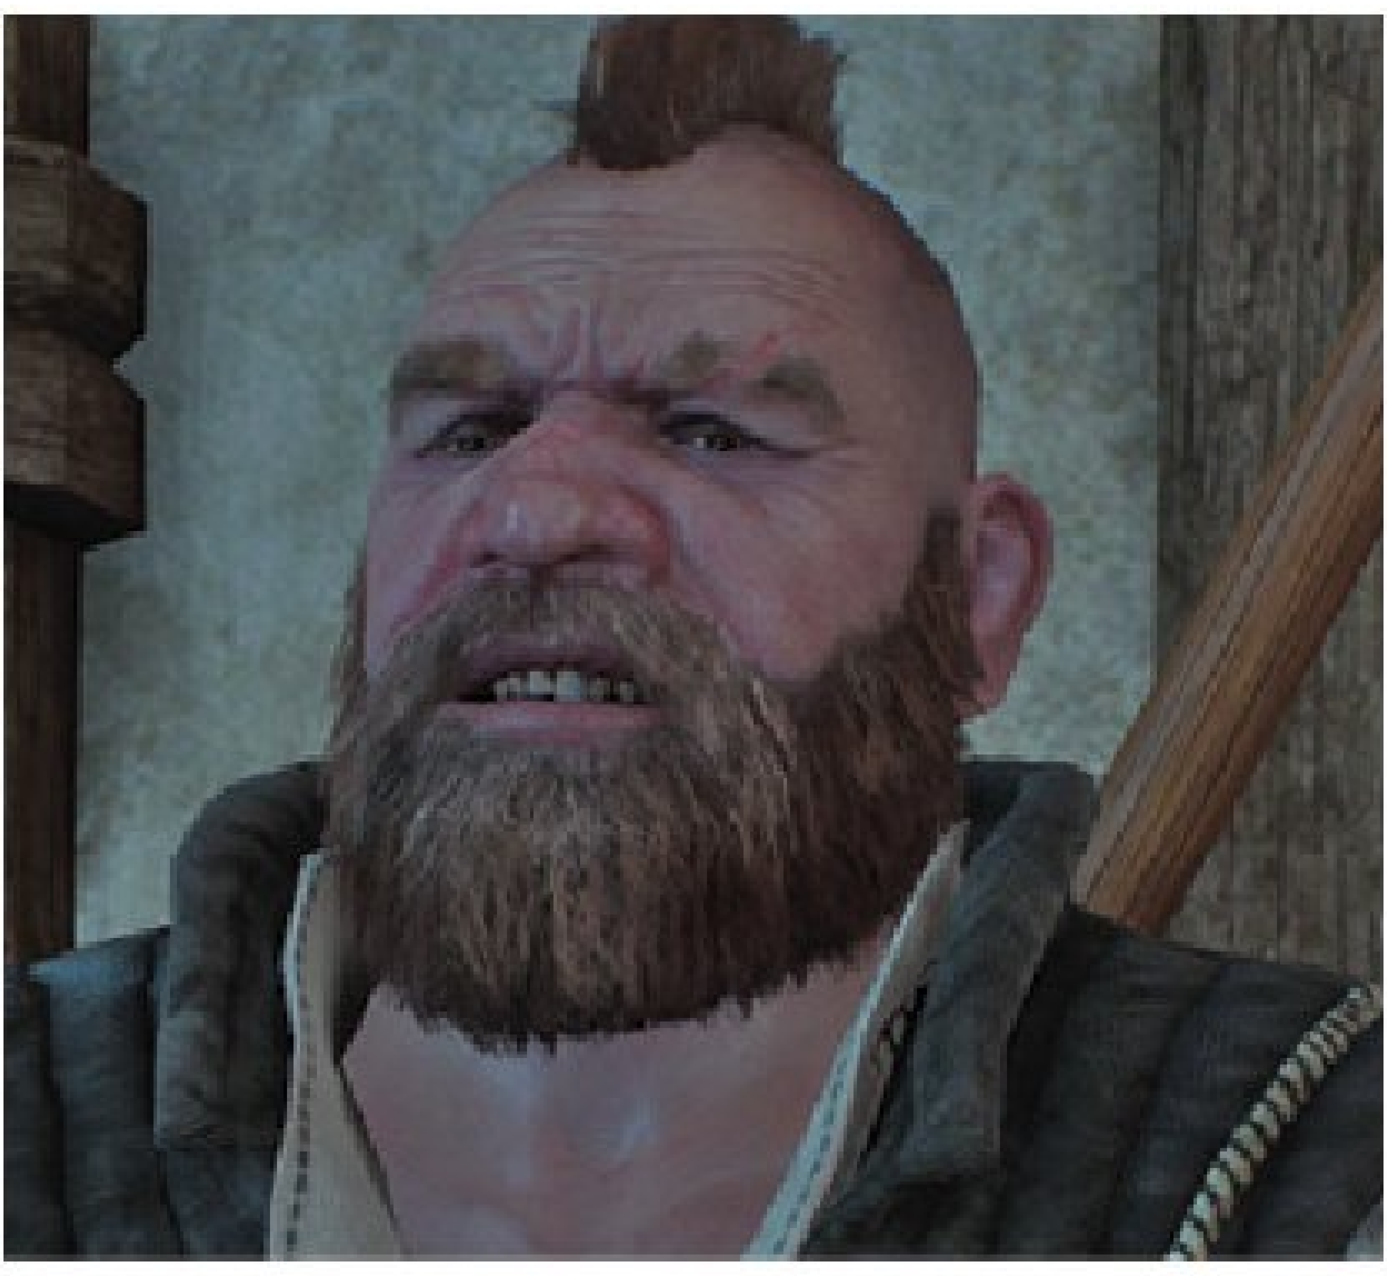
QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest is available once you complete Main Quest: The Play's the Thing, and all of Dandelion's Secondary Quests.

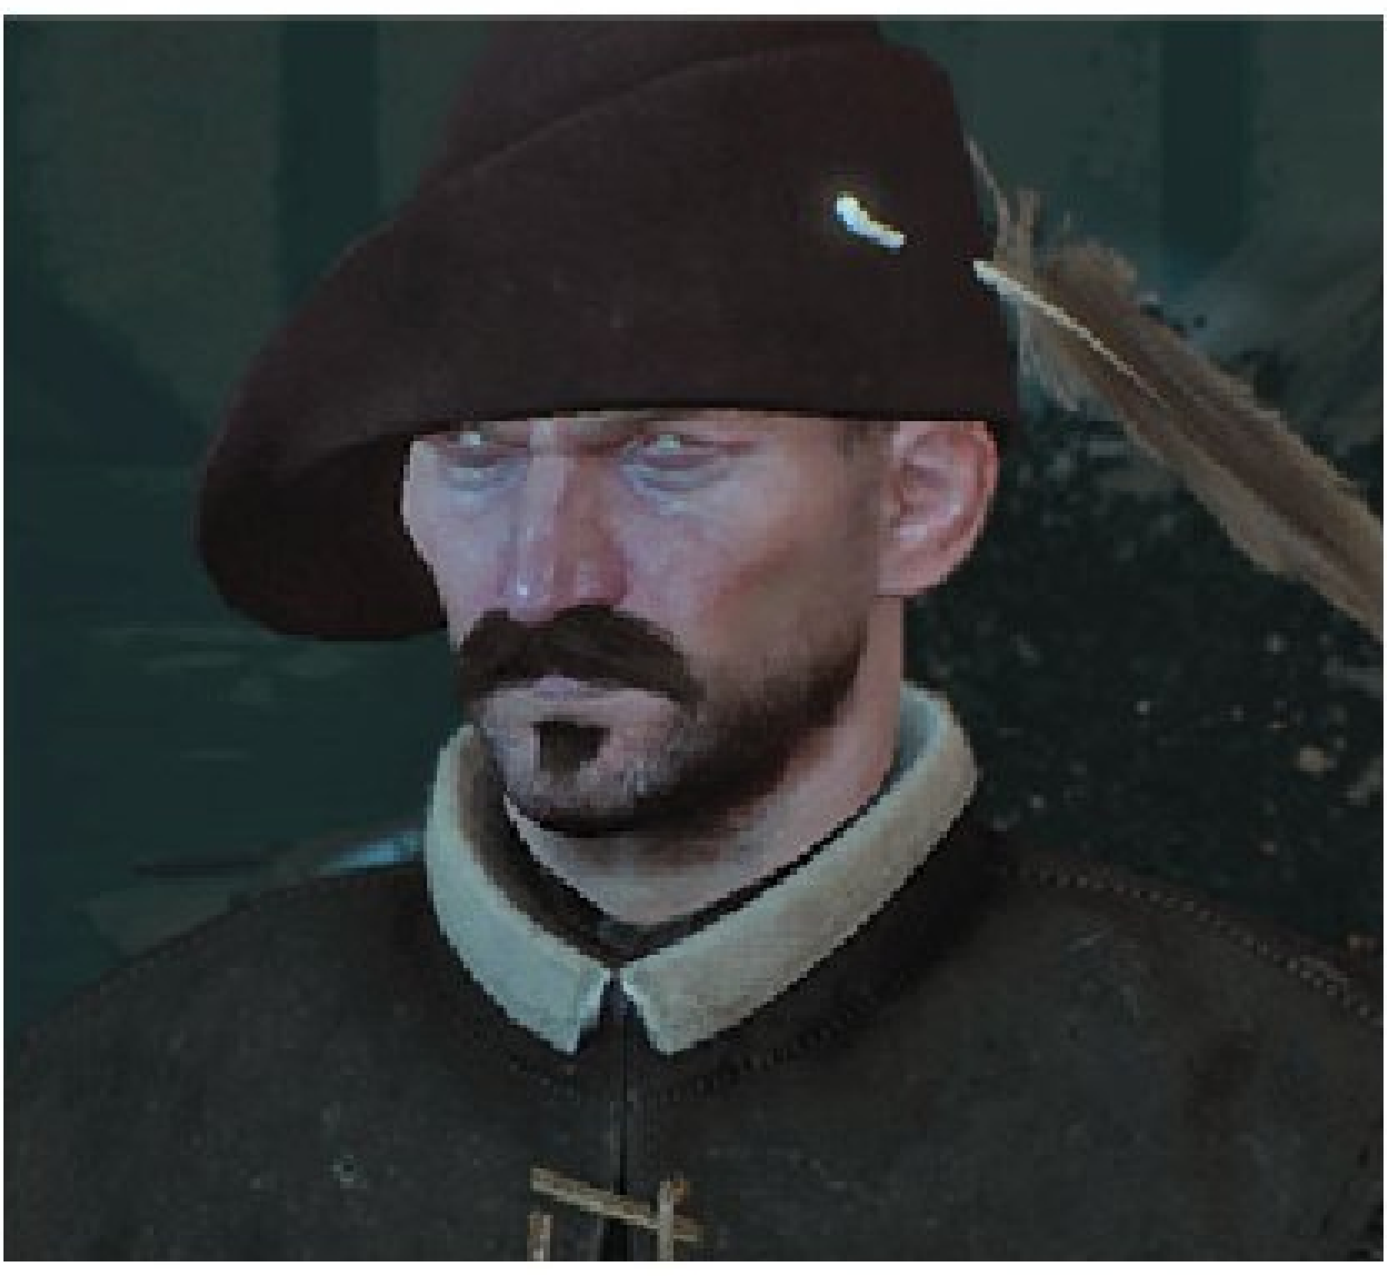
IT'S ON THE CARDS

This quest involves the location and gathering of certain high-value Gwent cards. There are actually nearly 200 of these to gather throughout your adventures, and many allow you advantages over the opponents you play against. For further information, check Secondary Quest: Collect 'em All!.

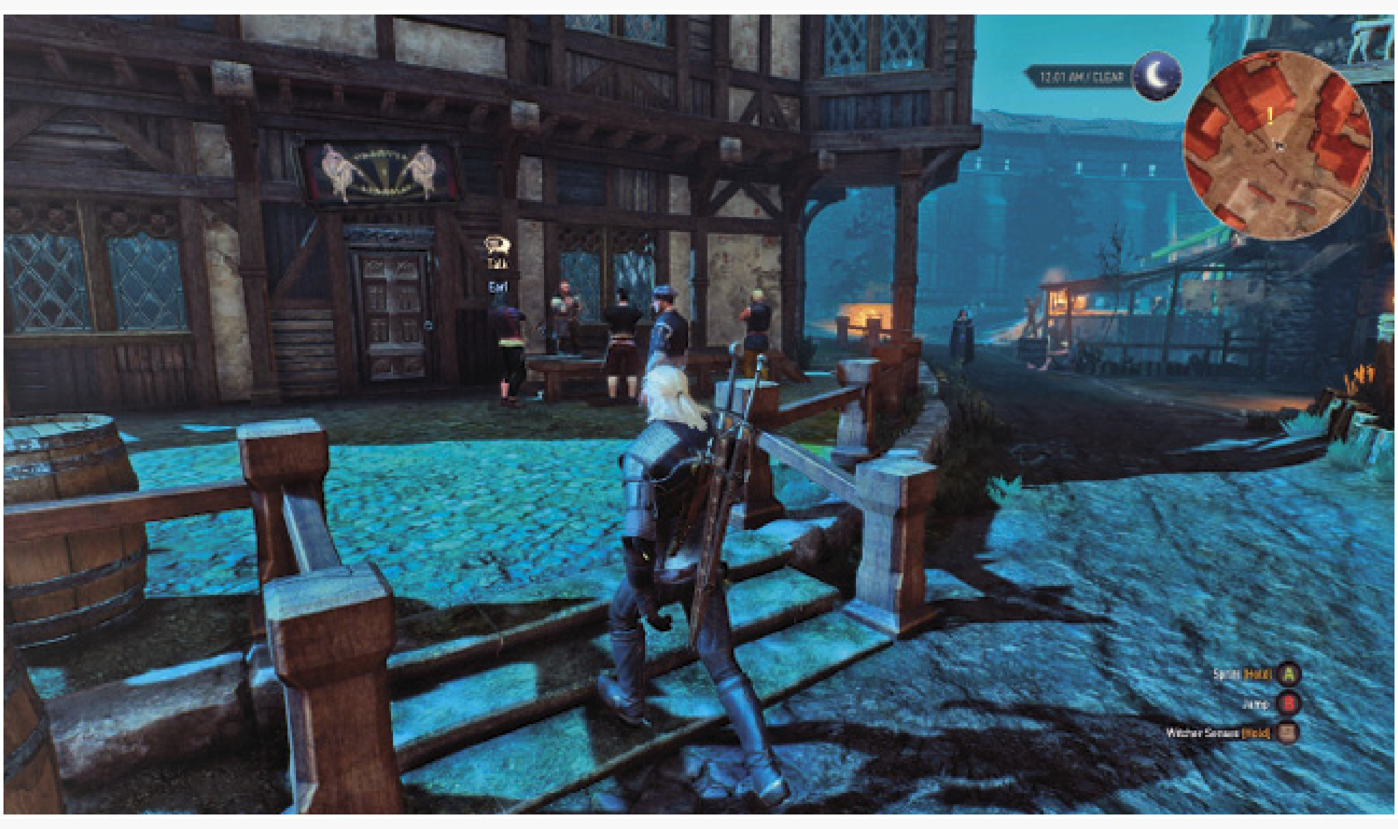
On your way back to the Rosemary and Thyme, you may encounter a heated argument between your friend Zoltan, and a group of bandits led by a Duke. There's threatening talk, which you verbally break up.



Zoltan Chivay



Duke



After the unfriendly folk have gone, Zoltan confides that Duke and Earl are pretenders to the criminal underworld chieftains of Novigrad. Keep prying, and Zoltan eventually reveals he owes a wee sum to Franis Bedlam, King of Beggars. To pay him back, the dwarf is taking up Gwent—not playing the game, but collecting the rarest cards. He has a buyer, but he's missing three critical rare cards. Care to help? He needs the following:

- Fringilla Vigo.
- Isengrim.
- John Natalis.

Zoltan reckons one of his pawnbroker friends (Zed) might have these cards. His shop is only a few steps away to the southwest (and north along the main thoroughfare up from Glory Gate).

Secondary Quest: A Dangerous Game

Zed's Dead, Baby. Zed's Dead.

OBJECTIVES:

- Find a way into Zed's home.
- Search Zed's home using your Witcher Senses.
- Find Zed's ledger using your Witcher Senses.
- Find the Isengrim card.
- Bring the card and Zed's ledger to Zoltan.

Run southwest along the main road, and up the wooden steps to the locked door above Zed's stall. There are sounds of commotion coming from inside. Head back downstairs, climb the ladder by the woodworkers, then ascend to the roof ledge before stepping to the edge and leaping across to Zed's roof. Enter through the attic door.

Once the intruders have been defeated, inspect the corpse of the bandit called Ringo, and you can gather the first Gwent card you seek, along with the keys to this abode (allowing you to unlock the door you couldn't access on your way here).

ITEM: Other Item: Isengrim Faolitarra (Gwent Card), Quest Items: Key to Zed's Pawnbroker's, Ledger of Income and Outlays

Speak to Zoltan about the cards. The ledger shows Zed's been selling cards to somebody called Caesar Bilzen, and another called Ravvy. Ask who these fellows are (Cleaver's clerk, and someone Zoltan doesn't get on with, so they must be visited alone). Your two new objectives appear, and can be completed in either order (though it's better to visit Ravik first).

Secondary Quest: A Dangerous Game

(Optional) A Life-or-Death Game of Gwent

OBJECTIVES:

- Get the John Natalis card from Ravik.
- Defeat Duke's thugs.

Ravik

Ravik is in the lower drinking chambers of the Golden Sturgeon, due west of the Town Square. As you arrive, he's being threatened by "Earl," one of the henchmen you encountered earlier. Through conversation, you are presented with one of two choices:

- (Gwent) Play Gwent, with Ravvy's life on the line (you lose, and he dies). If you lose, they quickly kill Ravvy, forcing you to fight. If you win, they attack you, but Ravvy survives.
- Or simply have the bandits kill Ravvy, and slay them afterward.

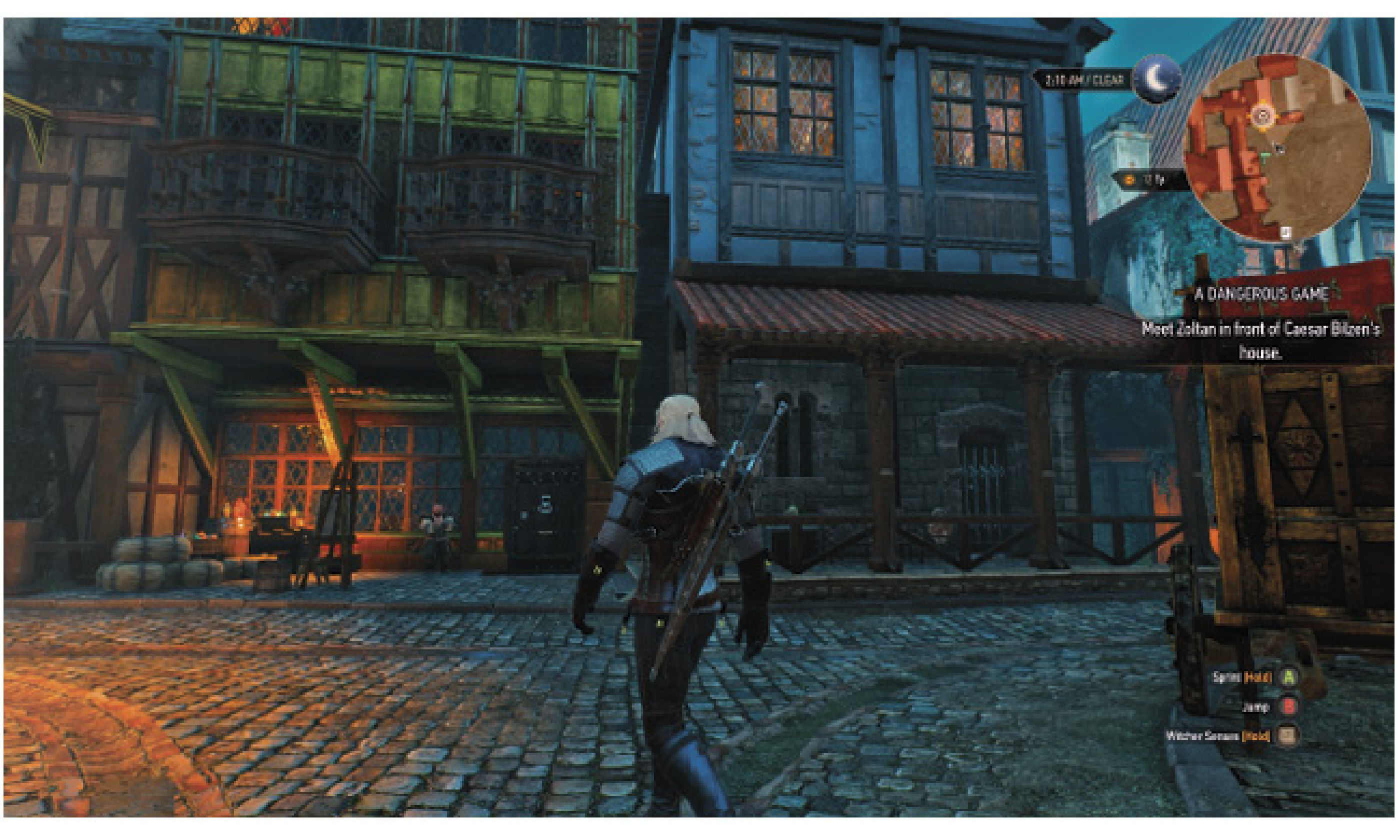
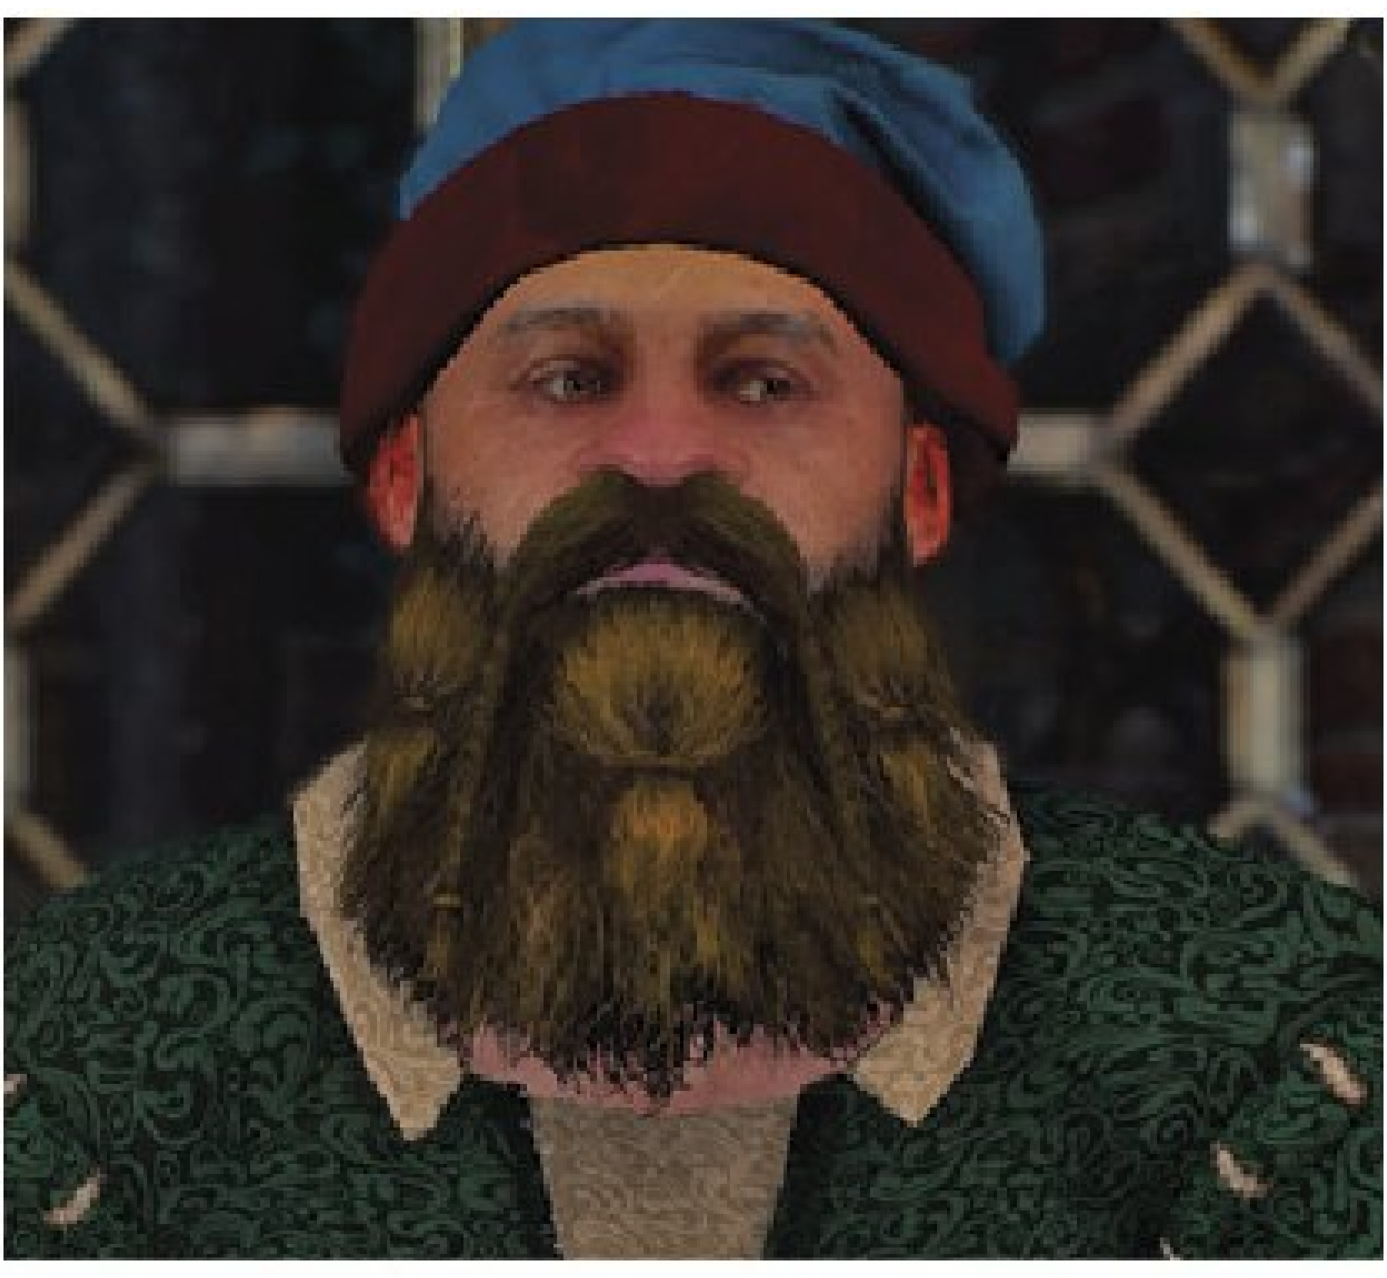
High Spirits with Caesar Bilzen

OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Zoltan in front of Caesar Bilzen's house.
- Search upstairs in Caesar Bilzen's home using your Witcher Senses.

Meet Zoltan at Caesar's house, in the southeast corner of the Town Square, and talk about hoodwinking the dwarven fisherman. You must sneak upstairs while Zoltan keeps him occupied with some Mahakaman spirit.





Caesar Bilzen

The ruse begins while Caesar asking if you fish. Answer however you wish. As the drink starts to flow, you're asked how zander tastes (answer how you wish), and how you enjoy catching fish (bombs or live bait; answer how you wish). When Zoltan nudges you to find more to drink, take this (or the previous choices to leave) as a cue to start searching the premises.

Atop the stairs, inspect the large room using your Witcher Senses. The cabinet with the knife on it opens when you inspect the knife itself. Inspect the drawer, and gather a Triangular Key. Now head over to the bookcase. The right one has a triangular hole in the wall. Insert the key, and the left bookcase slides open to reveal a secret door.

ITEM: Quest Item: Triangular Key, Alchemy and Crafting: Dwarven Spirit

Open the secret door, climbing more stairs to a hidden top floor. Here, there's a variety of treasure to gather or leave, but before departing, be sure to grab the Jade figurine on a small cabinet, and the Fringilla card on a display table ahead and left of the top of the steps (after you enter the room).

ITEM: Quest Item: Jade figurine, Other Item: Fringilla Vigo (Gwent Card)

OBJECTIVE:

- Let Zoltan know you've found the card.

Head back down to the drunken dwarves, and let Zoltan know you're ready to leave. Caesar is about to protest you not returning with any spirits, when two masked dwarfs crash through the front door. They are henchdwarves of Cleaver, one of the "Big Four" crime bosses of Novigrad. You can:

- Stay and stop the abduction.
- Leave, and not fight the two henchdwarves.

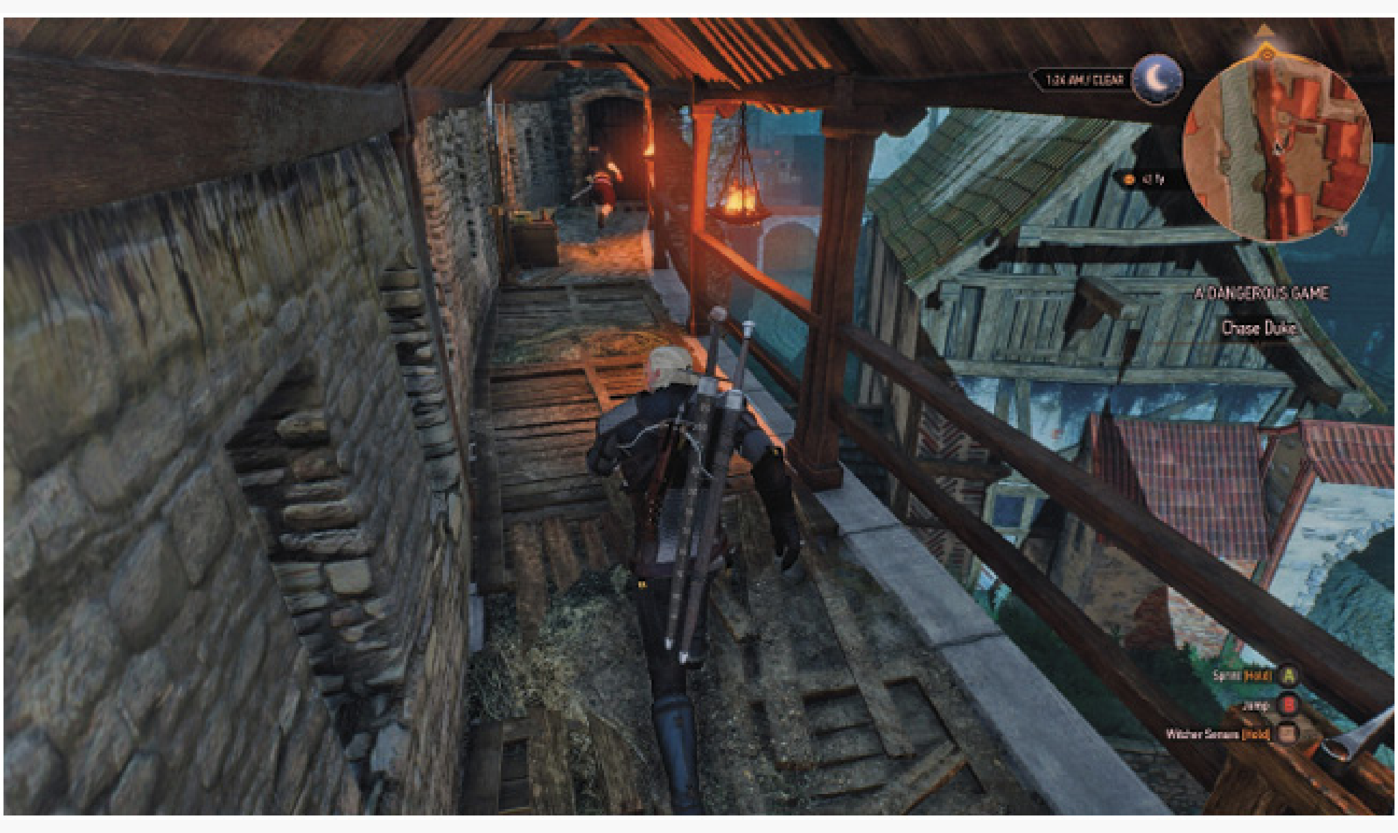
Afterward, you can tell Zoltan about Caesar's collection and his obsession with the Nilfgaard. Tell Zoltan about the Jade figurine you pocketed, and he suggests you show it to Triss (beginning Secondary Quest: The Soldier Statuette).

END: THE CATFISH IS THE KING OF THE PONTAR!

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to the meeting with Zoltan's buyer.
- Chase Duke.

With all three cards pocketed, you can now meet Zoltan's Gwent card buyer, over by the city wall, through the brick archway. Standing over the corpse of the buyer is the Duke, who has murdered the poor fellow. As bandits surround you, Duke flees. Give chase while Zoltan mops the floor with the mercenaries.



Sprint to the open door opposite, climb the two ladders in the stone towers, passing a fallen guard with Duke's fist imprinted in his face. Turn right (southeast) and run along the city wall battlements, through a small tower, then another, and into a second larger gatehouse. Descend all five ladders until you reach the sewer entrance.

Enter the sewers, ignoring Duke ahead of you (the grating between you both is locked). Turn right (northeast), heading down a tunnel ramp and engaging two drowners in combat. Face left (northwest) and use Aard to destroy a weak wall. Then sprint ahead, into a cistern chamber where drowners have sliced into the hapless Duke, who lies wounded on a wooden platform. Choose to leave him to bleed out, or kill him quickly.

AN EARLY DEATH FOR DUKE

If you caught Duke earlier, you don't need to venture down into the sewers.

Back at the meeting place, Zoltan has dealt with the bandits. Inform him of Duke's demise, and then choose whether you want to claim the dwarf's three Gwent cards (to add to your collection), or share the bag of coin. The quest then concludes.

Triss Merigold

Head into The Bits district of Novigrad, finding the leaning townhouse where Triss is currently hiding out. Beware of Whoreson’s henchmen, who may be active (and must be defeated) in this area. Enter the townhouse and ascend to Triss’ room. She tells you Lady Ingrid Vegelbud has sent her a message. She is prepared to help mages escape from Novigrad, but this isn’t charity; it is a quid pro quo. She’s supposed to find out more from a servant of the Lady’s, who has arranged to meet at the fish market. You can offer to help, tell her not to go near, and offer other advice. However, it is decided that you’ll wait nearby, while she meets this mystery man.

Ask what’s going on, and you’re told Lady Vegelbud’s son, Albert, has taken an interest in alchemy, and the Temple Guard knows of this heretical pastime. Bribery isn’t working. Posit that Albert might have to flee away from his mansion. This is to take place at a forthcoming masquerade ball. You can call this idea good or bad; it’s still taking place! You’re given an invitation, and told to wear a fox mask so you’re easily let in by the Vegelbuds’ estate guards. Opt to head there immediately, or after you prepare. - Or tell Triss to get out of here, and step away without incident.

Feel free to walk around the gardens, listening to the merry makers and revelers. When you reach the stone steps to the large wooden doors, Triss bumps into an old friend, Moritz. OBJECTIVES:

A MATTER OF LIFE AND DEATH
Find Triss Merigold in the labyrinth.

Triss hopes you might pass the time sitting on a garden bench with her. Oblige (or spend some time playing more Gwent first, if you want). Head back through the gate, into the lower gardens, and find the bench tucked away behind a privet hedge. Sit down, and Triss sips from a wine goblet. You bring up Moritz, after which Triss seems to waver in the belief of her abilities. You can:

- Tell her she's charismatic. Or has personal charm.
- Or the mages don't have anyone else helping them.

The latter doesn't win you any favors with Triss. You pull her close as a lost reveler wanders by. Triss professes her drunkenness, laughing at the maze's nude statues. Then she bolts for the garden maze! Quickly follow her down the stone steps of the maze entrance, before following the minimap and chasing Triss into the middle of the maze.

She leaps on the edge of the fountain, and falls. You catch her just as the fireworks begin to spark and thunder.

- Kiss Triss as the fireworks start.
- You don't have time for such frivolous activities.

You put Triss down, after which Albert makes an appearance. You switch masks to confuse any potential pursuers.

END: MORE FIREWORKS

OBJECTIVES:

- Get out of the labyrinth.
- Defeat the witch hunters.
- Meet Triss and Albert in the stables.

Retrace your steps out of the maze, using the map to guide you if you aren't sure of the route to take. Head up the stone steps to the small hedge courtyard where a female reveler is looking for Albert. You're then surrounded by two witch hunters and an officer.

Without swords, you're using your fists and feet to punish them. When all three are dropped, weave your way up and out of the stone stepped exit, and into the lower gardens. It is now a simple matter of heading north down the gardens toward the stables, where you meet Lady Vegelbud, Triss, and Albert. After a brief chat, Triss and Albert depart as the quest concludes.

SECONDARY QUEST: NOVIGRAD, CLOSED CITY

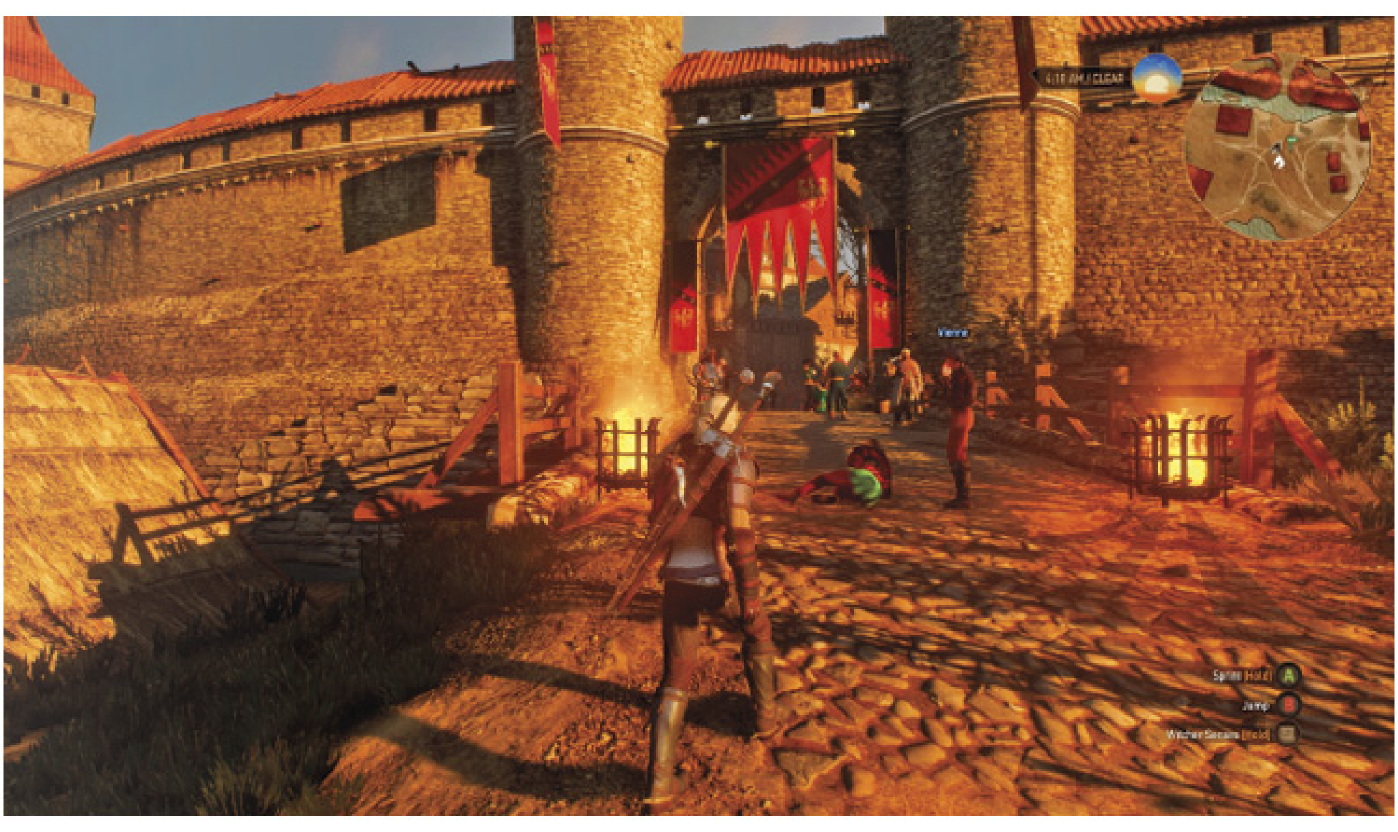
DANGER ALERT

SPOILER ALERT

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts once Main Quest: Count Reuven's Treasure, and Secondary Quest: A Matter of Life and Death have concluded. The quest starts once you leave Novigrad, and return to any of the city gates.

The combined forces of Radovid, his witch hunters, and the Eternal Fire have transformed the city of Novigrad into a death trap for anyone even considered to be a mage. Approach a gate, and you may see a hapless victim being accused of witchcraft for brewing a herb potion! Attempt to enter the city, and you're stopped by the Temple Guard, who demand to see your pass. What pass? One that confirms you aren't a mage.



Tell the guard you don't have a pass, and he begins to instruct you on the ways to prove you aren't a mage so you can get one. Fortunately, he's stopped by a second guard, who hands him the pass, whispering "regards from Sigi Reuven" as he leaves. You are now free to move about the city, but be prepared for an increase in witch hunter activities across town. One of the mages burning in the town square, for example, was Triss' "friend" who you met during Secondary Quest: A Matter of Life and Death. The situation for the mages is¬¬¬ getting desperate. Can you help?

Before you do, you may wish to engage in one (or both) of the following quest activities:

PLAN 1: SOMETHING SMELLS OFF

QUESTING DECISIONS

This Quest begins when you find the bandits mentioned below.

Head to the filthy street junction just north of the Golden Sturgeon. A trio of bandits beckon you over (find them near the rickety fence). They hope you can help them find an injured mate of theirs. Agree to help to further this quest. Ask for clues, and they tell you he came from the sewers.

OBJECTIVE:

- Track the smell of blood and sewer muck using your Witcher Senses. (Optional) Kill the Bandits.

Pick up the scent using your Witcher Senses along the cobblestone street just northeast of the bandits. Examine the following as you locate the scent:

- Boot prints with traces of sewer slime. There's a mark on the ground nearby, too. Continue to the wiped handprint on the stone wall. Head down an alleyway just left of the handprint, heading north. Head up the steps to the market stall. Then continue northwards along the long, shallow stone steps to the outer wall of the witch hunters' compound, and the man you seek is by the bushes.

This isn't a friend of the three bandits, but rather a Witch Hunter, lying wounded and ready to be killed by them. Feel free to:

- Let the murder occur, and obtain payment (a small amount of crowns) from the bandits.

- Stop the murder, killing all three bandits and receiving a shocked thanks from the Witch Hunter. We wasn't expecting help from the likes of you. The wounded Witch Hunter asks to be patched up. You can agree (you automatically appear inside the hospital), or leave him to fester.

At this point, the quest concludes.

PLAN 2: A HAUNTING WE WILL GO

QUESTING DECISIONS

This Quest begins when you find any of the three keys. You don't have to speak to the noblewoman to start the quest, though this is the optimal path.

Head to the Temple District of Novigrad, and locate the noblewoman (she's at the north end of the main covered bridge), who seems to be having trouble with some supernatural entities in her abode. Agree to help her, and she leads the way.

OBJECTIVE:

- Enter the woman's home and get rid of the danger. Defeat the guards.

Follow the woman northwards, along the main street, to her dwelling – part of the imposing stone gatehouse – and defeat two witch hunter guards inside. You accuse her of attempting to trap her, and she's sly with her answers before giving up some rather interesting information; the first of three treasure keys! Perhaps this is the reward to take? It seems so, as the woman promptly flees the scene. Now check the corpses of the foes you slaughtered for a Warrant (either body has one).

ITEM: Treasure Key (1 of 3)

Open your Quest Items inventory and read the warrant you picked up. It refers to three bandits said to be in possession of magic contraband:

- Lussi the Fox, hiding on Temple Isle near the bridge.
- Fritz, hiding near the Crooked House.
- Walter, last seen in the Lacehalls (Putrid Grove).

It seems Lussi was the startled noblewoman you just spoke with. Now to find the other two!

PLAN 2: FINDING THE SECOND TREASURE KEY

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the other partners mentioned in the note and look for keys (3)

You have one key already. Now to find the other two. These can be approached in either order (though the following route is optimal), and the general objective location was listed in the warrant:

The further of the two bandits has dropped his key, which can be found close to the area just behind (south of) Crippled Kate's brothel. Simply find the bag behind the back door, on the deck, near the small market square.

ITEM: Treasure Key (2 of 3)

PLAN 2: FINDING THE FINAL TREASURE KEY

The nearer of the two bandits is close to the Crooked House (where Triss Merigold resides). Head there, until the objective area appears on on your minimap, and begin searching using your Witcher Senses.

There's a Concerned Citizen's Sermon on the ground, near some wooden stairs. Head up the stairs, turn right into the dwelling, and find the remains of Fritz inside. He's long dead. Stay inside this hovel, head up the stairs, to a small landing (past a torch recently used), and search the desk for a key and note.

ITEMS: Treasure Key (3 of 3), Letter about the treasure.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the safe the three keys go to.

The reason to find the keys in the order listed is due to the fact that the safe all three keys unlock is adjacent to the desk you found the letter about treasure on. Read the letter, then turn left, unlock the safe (which holds a variety of excellent treasure), and conclude this quest

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts once both Main Quest: A Favor for Radovid, and Secondary Quest: A Matter of Life and Death, both conclude. Triss has asked you for help, and you must oblige her in helping those hiding from the witch hunters.

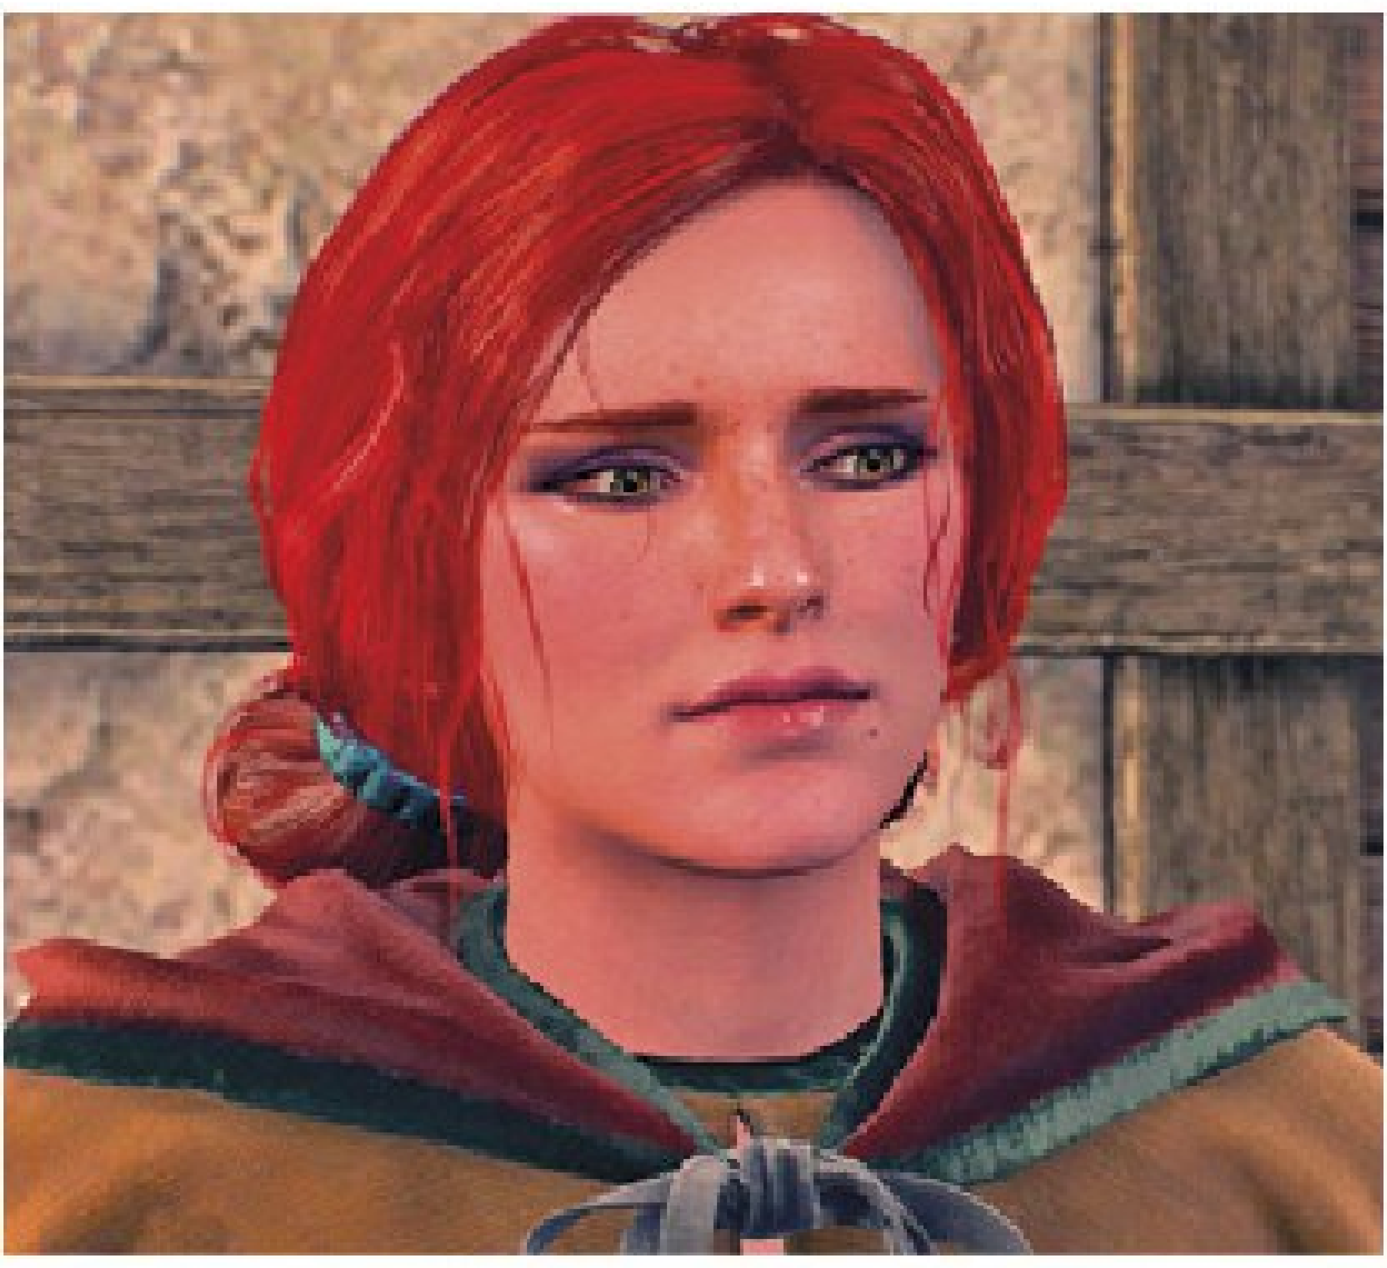
- If you ignore this quest, all the mages are massacred by witch hunters (the results of which are seen during Act III: Main Quest: Blindingly Obvious) and you cannot hope for a romantic involvement with Triss.

- If you complete this quest, you have additional interactions concerning nonhumans becoming scapegoats, during Main Quest: Blindingly Obvious.

- If you convince Triss to stay during this quest, she becomes your love interest. If you've already convinced Yennefer of this fact, prepare for an interesting diversion during Act III: Secondary Quest: It Takes Three to Tango!

The temple guard and witch hunters are guarding the streets by Triss' townhouse. You may speak with them; they are "scrubbing the fungus clear." Speak with a threatening tone, and you have the three of them to dispatch. Or, a more subservient tone allows you to walk away.

Afterward, enter the leaning townhouse (known as "The Crooked House") and ascend the stairs to where Triss is talking to her frightened landlady and landlord.

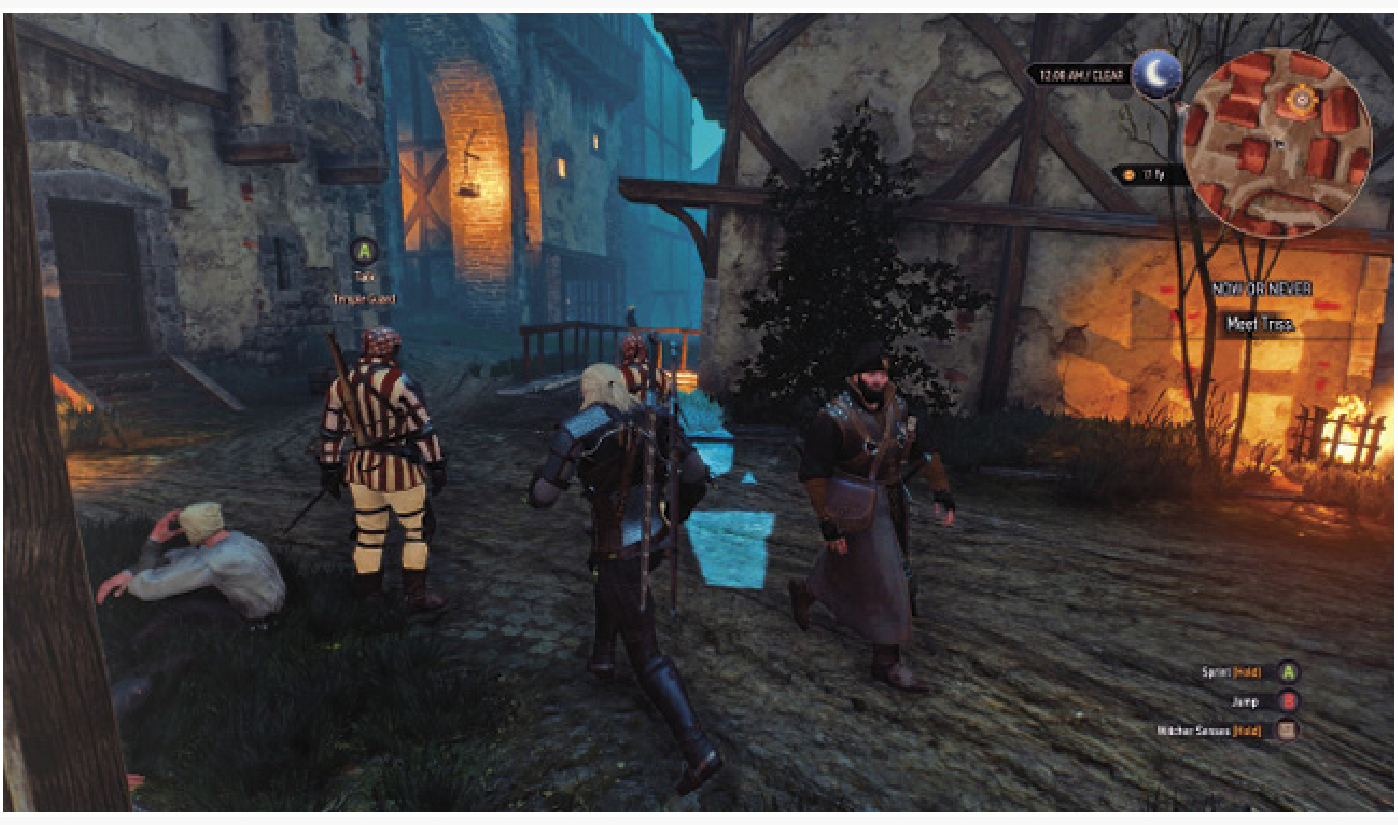


Triss Merigold

- If you fought the foes down on the streets, they are furious at you attracting attention to this place.

- If you walked away from the foes down on the streets, they are discussing Triss' rent payments.

Triss attempts to calm the couple down, and offers them her necklace. You can let her give away this cherished possession, or lightly threaten the landlady. Either way, the two of them leave. As sheltering a sorceress is a crime punishable by death, Triss tells you they risked a lot. Answer her how you wish. She tells you Novigrad has been locked down; the temple guard and witch hunters now stop even common folk with lucky rabbit's-foot charms as they look for mages. Ask how you can help (to continue this quest).



She is unsure whether to move the mages hidden below the city streets to the docks, or to try and find two wayward mages (Berthold and Anisse) who haven't rendezvoused in yet. Answer how you wish (though don't tell her you can't help if you want to continue this quest). Triss wants to know whether to help these two lost mages (and put the others at risk) or head straight to the Kingfisher Inn (where the others are hiding) and abandon the two to certain death. You can:

- Tell her "we should help Anisse and Berthold." The quest continues.

- Inform her that she shouldn't "risk everything for two people." You can now head directly to the Kingfisher Inn.

Secondary Quest: Now or Never

OBJECTIVE:

- (Optional) Follow Triss to Berthold and Anisse's hideout.

Anisse

The waylaid mages are hiding somewhere in The Bits district. Follow Triss out of the townhouse and roughly east down some wooden steps. Triss spots a patrol; usually witch hunters or temple guards numbering three or four. You can:

- Hide at the corner of a building, waiting for the patrol to pass, before continuing.
- Or face questioning if spotted, and combat afterward.

Then it's northward into the alleyway within The Bits, and up into a dwelling on your right, just before the stone steps. Something is amiss as you race up the interior stairs. Witch hunters are already in the room! Finish them both with gusto (and with speed, as they can slay either of the mages you are rescuing.

- If one of the mages died, the other is devastated.
- If both survived, Berthold isn't keen on leaving.

- If you rescued Anisse and Berthold, repel three witch hunters who have already discovered a group of mages inside. Do not rest until they are slain. You stoop over the corpse of Olivier—you were too late to save him. Speak with Triss, answering with compassion (or not), then follow her.

The drowner was guarding an iron gate. Fortunately, it is unlocked. Head down the tunnel. Triss hears rats. You spot two more drowners—attack them along with Triss' magic backing you up. Then push open another gate, leading you into a brick balcony on the perimeter of a large and foul-smelling room teeming with rodents! Triss greets the news with revulsion, but it's nothing she can't handle.

OBJECTIVE:

- Find a way to cross the rats' feeding ground.

Continue around the balcony and down the wooden steps to the ground level. Push back the rats with judicious use of Igni. Along the way, you spot strewn corpses. You're right under the main square, and 'The Cleaver' has his headquarters here. That's not a coincidence. Head south to the set of wooden steps. The gate beyond is sealed, so head up the steps, and proceed along an ascending tunnel. Stop at the landing for a moment as Triss inspects her bite wounds. Now continue up and easterwards battling three more Drowners at the top of the tunnel. This upper area is a dead-end (come here to clear it of foes). Take the side tunnel to the south, back down the last short tunnel steps you just walked up. It leads to this small chamber of scattered debris and a high window (as shown).

The reason for this death is in the next chamber (west); a prowling katakan that should be dispatched. Then it's up a series of curved tunnels east and west, all the way to the Novigrad docks.

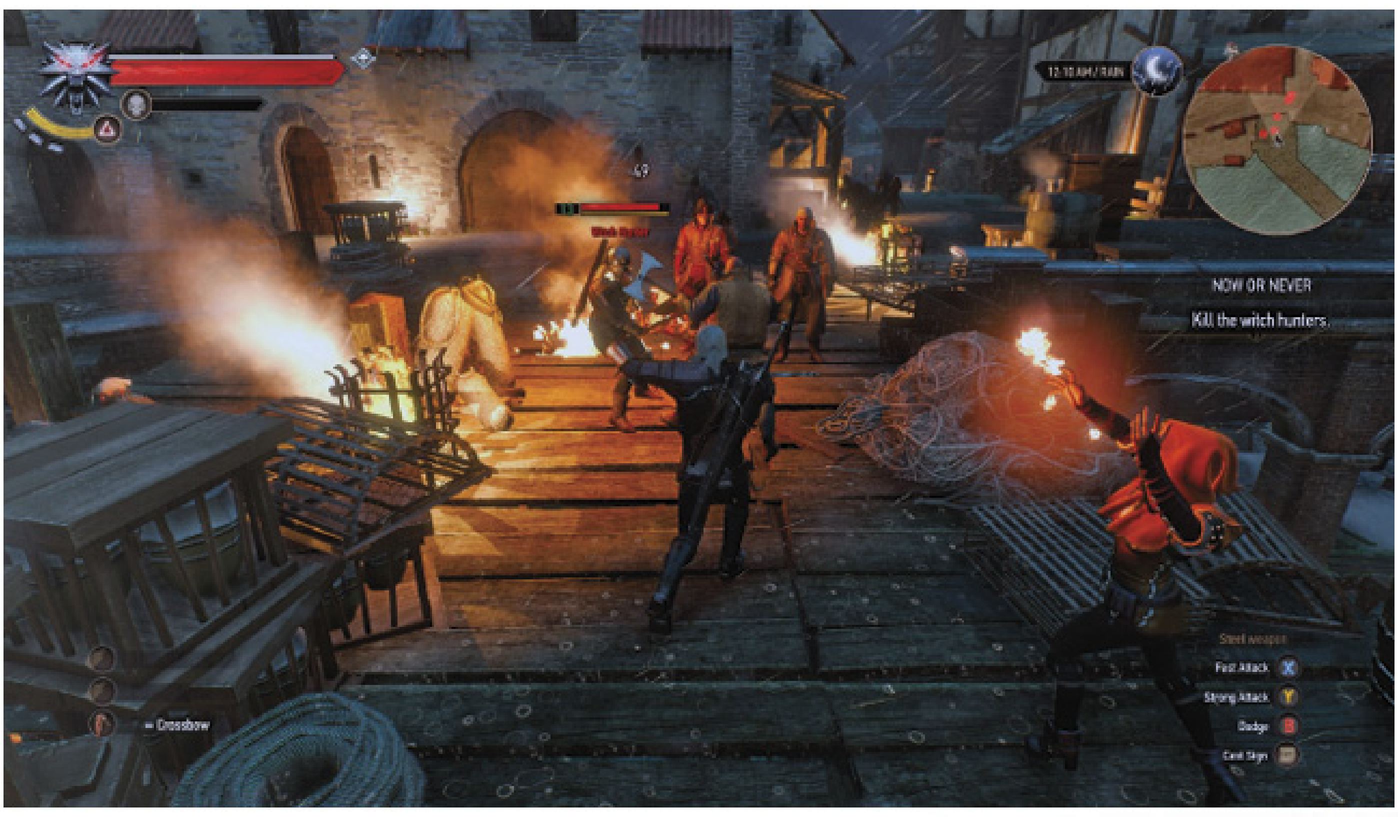
Secondary Quest: Now or Never

Quest Conclusion: One Last Farewell?

OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Dijkstra at the port.
- Kill the witch hunters.

Climb the wooden wharf to reach Dijkstra's men, then the man himself. The boat isn't in the best shape, but it should make the trip to Kovir. You have a brief opportunity to verbally tussle with Dijkstra (answer how you wish) about your affections for Triss, before a physical tussle with the advancing witch hunters becomes inevitable. Kill all six of them, advancing onto the main dock if fighting becomes cramped.



Triss returns with the mages. She'll never forget what you did for her. At this point, you can:

- Tell her "farewell" and she forlornly boards the ship, which sets sail for Kovir.
- Tell her, "stay with me" and she tells you she can't do this again, with you. You both had your chance. You can tell her:

"Go, I'll miss you" and she boards the boat. "Let's try again" and she refuses, and boards the boat. "I love you," and she still boards the boat.

Return to Dijkstra, who tells you of his own failed love story (which you can listen to or not). Then, only if the following circumstances have been fulfilled, Triss returns to shore, shocked at your passion. You need to:

- Kiss her during the masquerade ball (Secondary Quest: A Matter of Life and Death).
- Not have told her that you couldn't help her with the mages, at the beginning of this quest; you must agree to help.
- Tell her "I love you" at this point. Answer her politely (don't say she's "changeable," or anything unpleasant), and she tells you she knows a spot where you can watch the ships."
  - Without Triss—You bid Dijkstra farewell, who tells you he needs some help with the assassination of King Radovid, and a meeting has been arranged at the Passiflora (Secondary Quest: A Deadly Plot), and the quest concludes.
  - With Triss—You recline at the lighthouse, watching the mages' ship sail away, and engage in a spot of majestic revelry. Triss is now considered your girlfriend (whether or not Yennefer is, too!). After your trist with Triss, you climb down the lighthouse, and run into Dijkstra, who tells you he needs some help with the assassination of King Radovid, and a meeting has been arranged at the Passiflora (Secondary Quest: A Deadly Plot), and the quest concludes.

When this is all over, I aim to open a whorehouse. In Vizima.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE

Meet Roche at his camp.

Journey into the territory of Gustfields, northeast of Oxenfurt, and locate the Temerian Partisan Hideout where you first met Roche. Find him in one of the many crags, talking tactics with his guerillas.

Ask him about the "problem" he mentioned, and he tells you that Ves took a couple of men across the river to Mulbrydale, to stick it to the Nilfgaard. Unfortunately, this went against Roche's direct orders. He hopes you'll track her down and stop her before she puts herself and Roche in danger. Agree to help.

Head across the river to Hanged Man's Tree (where you began your Velen exploration), and speak with Roche who is already waiting for you. You both look down the hill and, since the village of Mulbrydale isn't on fire yet, you trust Ves hasn't launched her attack. No, wait. There's yelling and smoke. Ves is here alright!

Ves

Sprint after Roche, down the road and into Mulbrydale, and begin a pitched battle with up to a dozen Nilfgaardian soldiers. They attack in groups of around three or four. Roche can handle himself, so you may wish to tackle the soldiers who aren't engaged in combat. Head southwest, to the far end of the village, as quickly as you can (even if that means breaking off combat), if Ves' health drops dangerously low.

Ves is valiantly battling near a merchant's tent. Help her out by slaughtering the well-armed (and armored) forces here, drawing the attention of the enemy to yourself. When you bring down your final Nilfgaard, Vernon Roche greets Ves with a furious diatribe, mainly concerning Ves' decision to dress inappropriately for battle.

END: STOPPING THE LEADER'S PLEADING CHATTER

It appears the leader of the Nilfgaard is still alive. Ves wants him dead, while Roche wishes to show mercy. You can:

- Side with Ves, and the pleading leader gets swift dagger to the throat, courtesy of a troubled Roche.

- Side with Roche, leave the pleading leader alive, who thanks you profusely. Ves is seething, though.

Either way, Roche tells you to count on him if you require any help in the future, as the quest concludes.

- Complete this quest, and you may call upon Vernon Roche and Ves when assembling allies during Act II: Secondary Quest: Brothers in Arms: Velen.

Travel south from Novigrad, through northern Velen to the Border Post signpost at Halver Isle, just before reaching the bridge to the island on the shore of the Pontar river. Bring Roach to a canter and find a shifty-looking Redanian guard. Gregor has been expecting you, and you both take a walk. He motions to the hanging corpses; killed over trumped-up charges using rules from the king. That’s Gregor’s motive for helping you. Talk turns to the cobbler, who came through here on a wagon. Follow the scattered shoes carefully, until you find a rough wagon trail and a rock troll farther upslope. Prepare something approaching a conversation with the troll (named Rogg), who is collecting the shoes. He tries to hide the fact that his friends (Ogg and Pogg) have someone in their cave. Who better to teach Ogg and Pogg, the two nearby trolls, how to curse? Now to extricate him from his predicament. The trolls aren't ready to let him leave. You can:

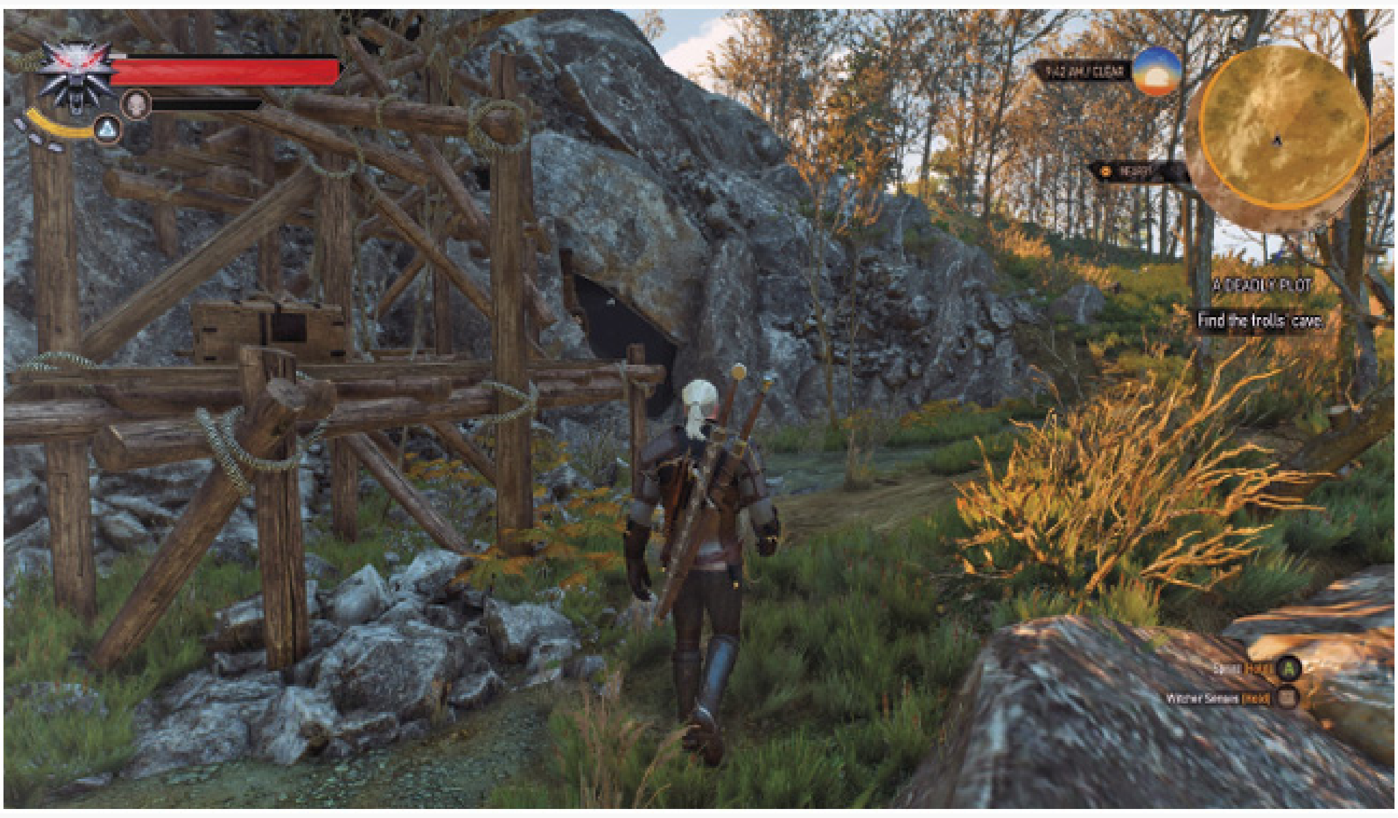
Thaler

- Choose the first conversation choice (at either time), which is threatening, and fight Ogg and Pogg. Closely followed by Rogg.
- Choose the second conversation choice (both times), which allows you to leave with Thaler under the pretense of finding leather for their shoes.



END: STILL TART AS ROTTING RHUBARB

ENEMIES : Nekkers, Ifrit, Witch Hunters

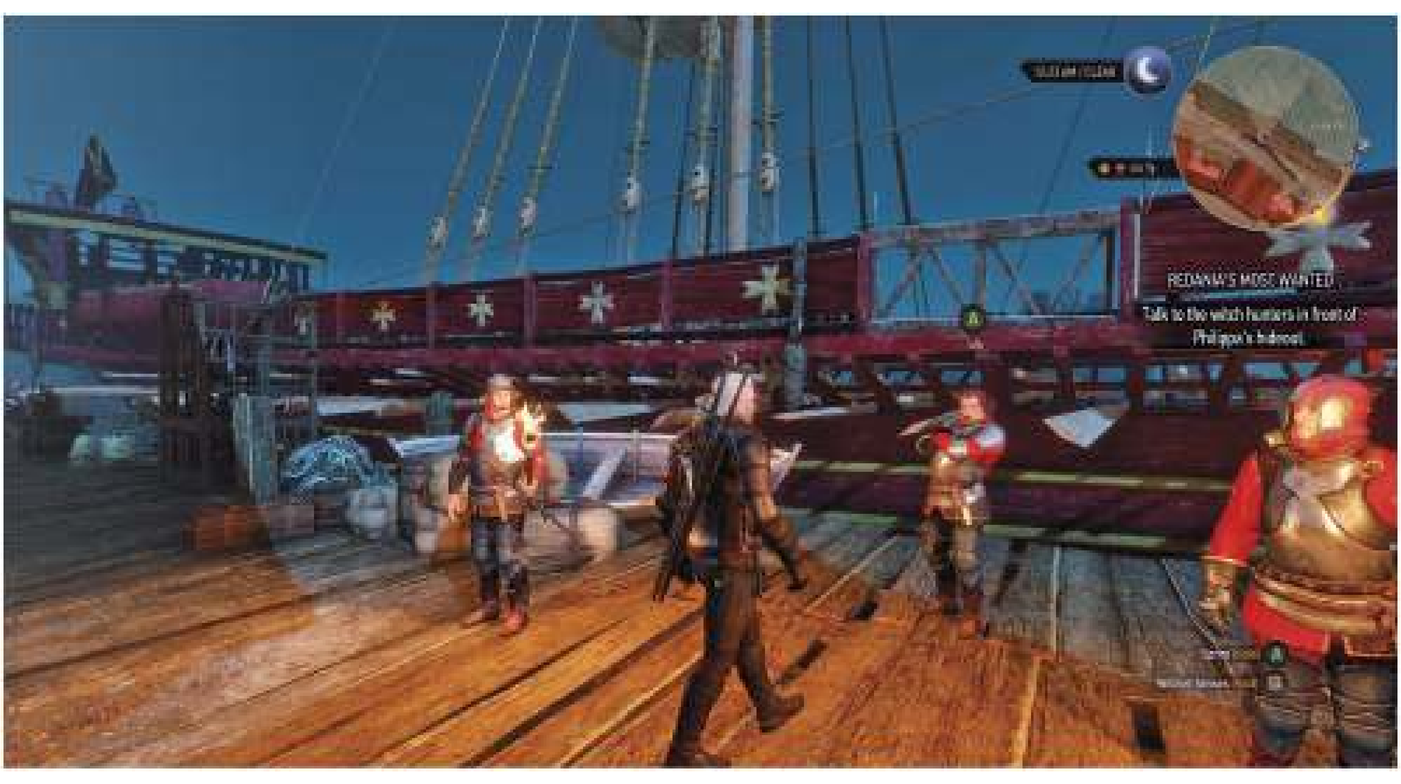
RECOMMENDED ITEM : Axii Delusion Level 2

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to the witch hunters in front of Philippa's hideout.
- Nearest Signpost: Est Tayiar

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest is available immediately at the end of Main Quest: Get Junior. It begins when you visit King Radovid V aboard his ship. It is usually wise to complete this once Secondary Quests: An Eye for an Eye and A Deadly Plot are over.



You arrive at Radovid's ship, moored off Oxerfurt's bay after the summons, and speak to the sunken-eyed weasel of a ruler. He isn't one to mince words; he wants the sorceress Philippa Elhart found.

King Radovid V

Witch Hunter Leader

He ordered her eyes gouged out, but this apparently hasn't dissuaded her troublemaking and recent escape. He wants her alive, and brought to him. He no longer trusts the Lodge of Sorceresses. You can answer however you wish, but the results are the same—travel into the mountains and find her.

Journey northeast of Oxenfurt, into the wooded hills, following the pathways on horseback until you reach the top of a hill and discover a set of ivy-covered ancient ruins. There's a series of outer pillars caked in lichen and moss, with an inner archway and tiled entrance area where a group of witch hunters are nursing their wounds. They've had great difficulty attempting to enter these catacombs known as Est Tayiar. You explain who you are and who sent you. The leader motions to one of his men, who shows you a tile block imbued with power.

OBJECTIVES:

- Open Philippa's hideout.
- Search Philippa's hideout.

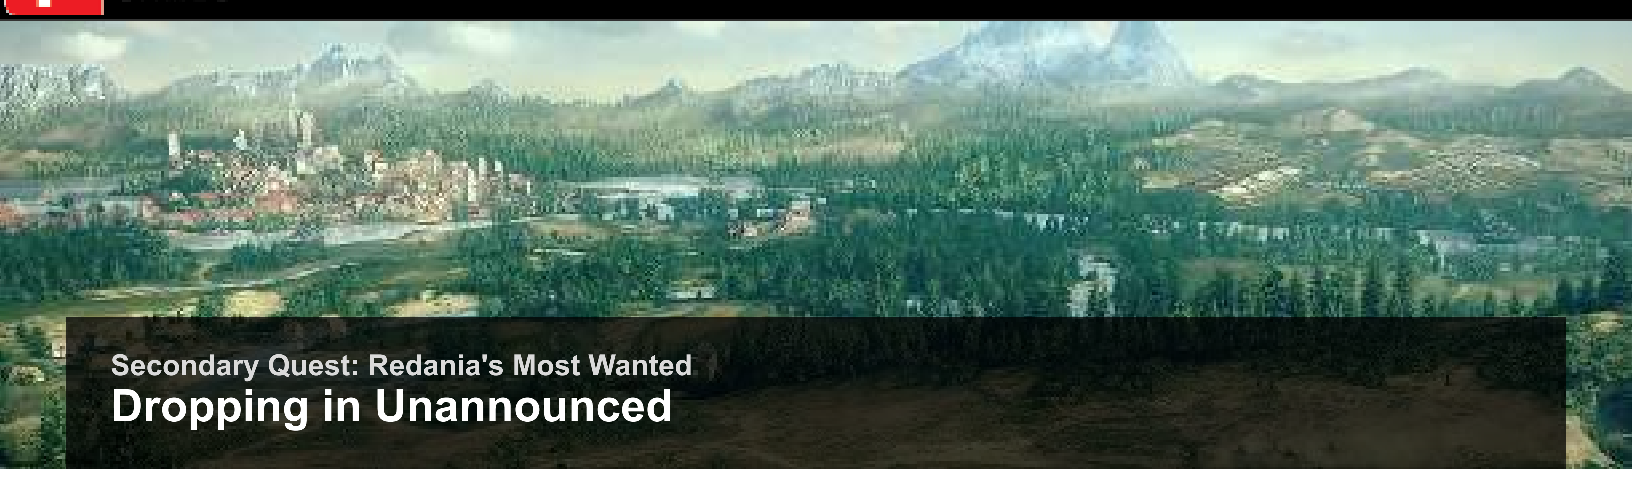
Descend to a junction chamber with two arches on either side. In front is a sheer drop into a cavernous lower chamber where you must go (without falling and killing yourself, of course). The right arch leads to a ledge and a nasty drop). The left arch leads to a portal, which is actually working. Step into it.

You enter a stone chamber with rocks and rubble, and a few scattered barrels. Use your Witcher Senses:

- There is a remex (an owl feather) with its edge frayed.

Head up the stairs to the southeast, turn left, and engage a group of nekkers down some more steps. After slaying both of them, descend to a deactivated portal on a stone ledge. Approach the power cell (an activation crystal), and use your Aard Sign to spin it into activation. Then step into the portal.

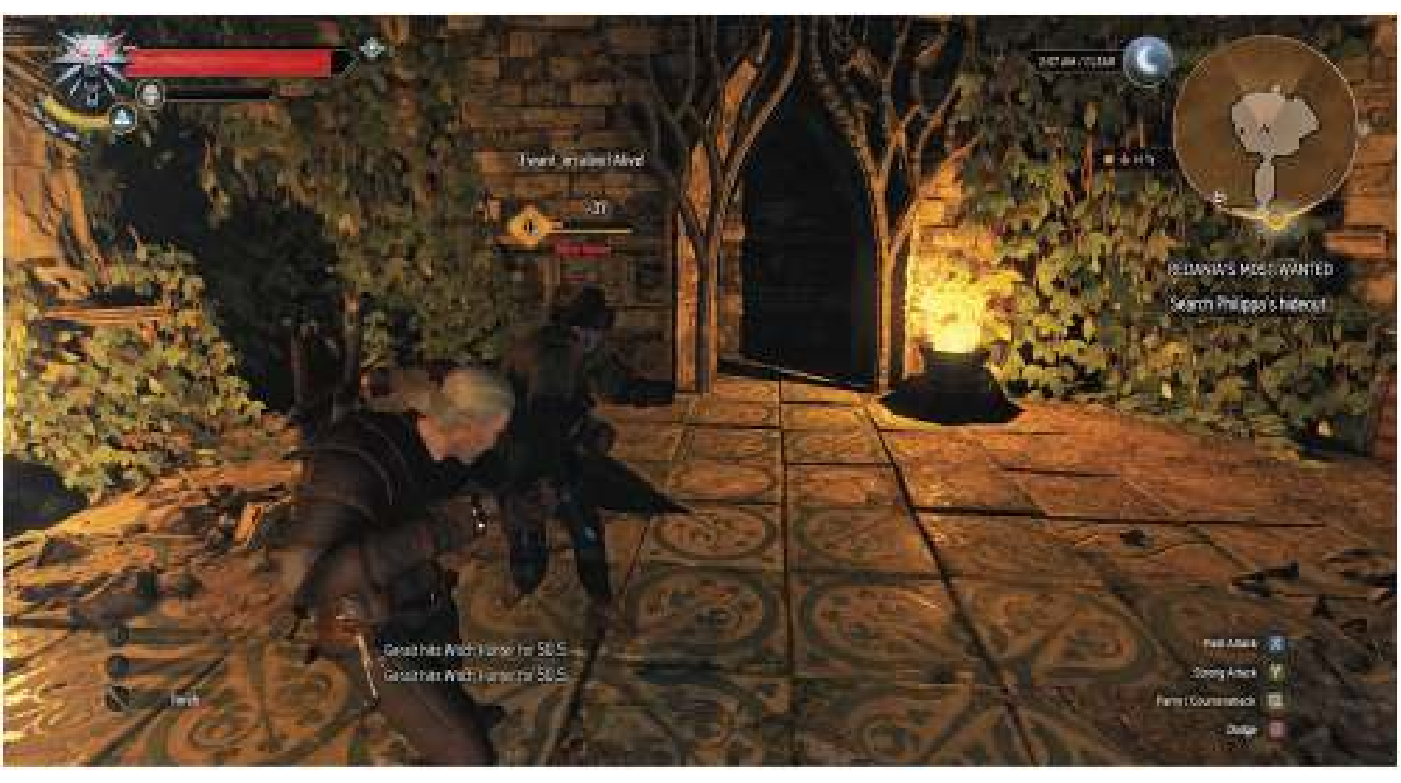


Secondary Quest: Redania's Most Wanted

Dropping in Unannounced

OBJECTIVES:

- Put the crystal in the right spot.
- Use Aard to activate the crystal, and activate the portal.
- Search Philippa's hideout (continued).

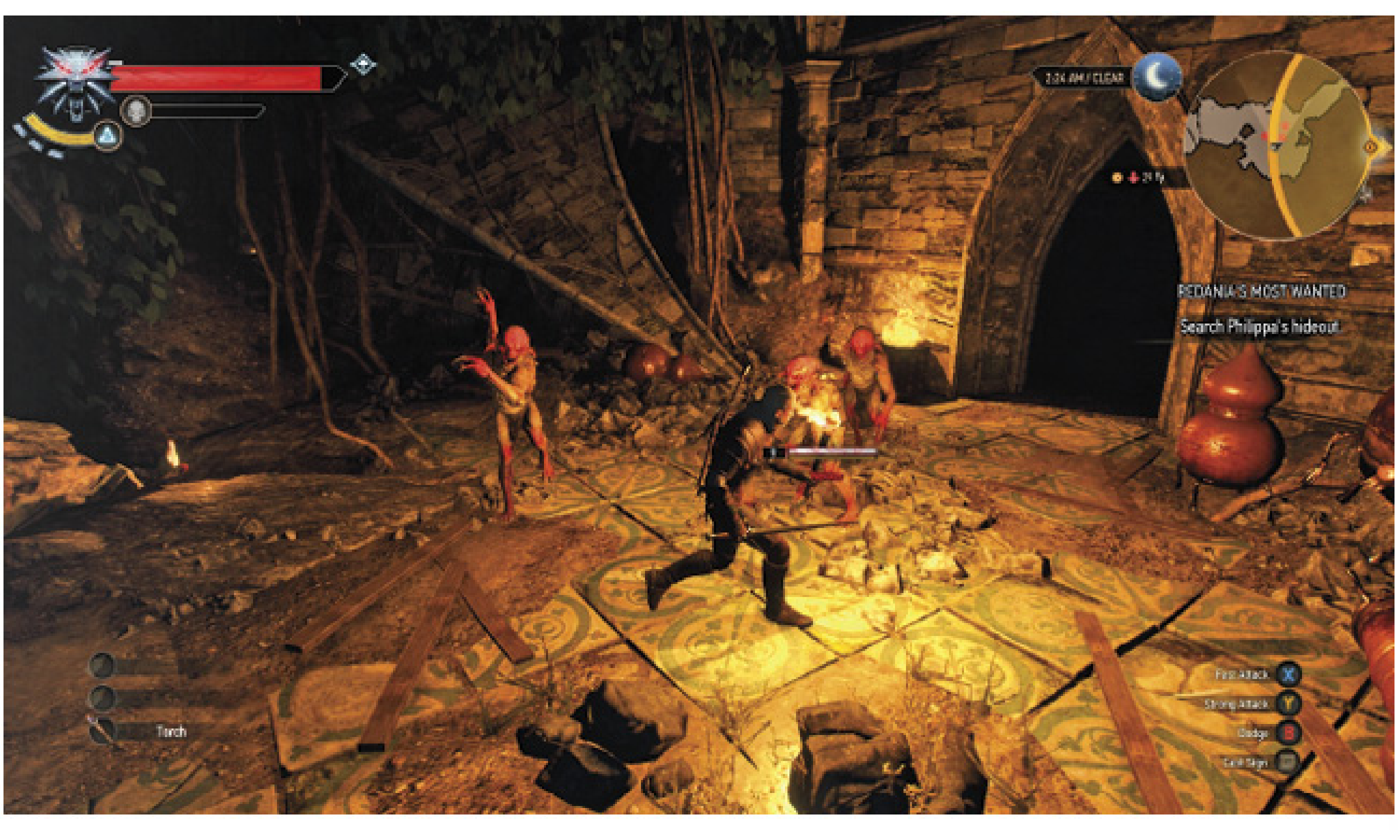


A lone witch hunter is brandishing his sword. Lost and disoriented, his inspection of the area has convinced him that a meeting of sorceresses is set to take place here. However, in order to protect himself from creatures visiting this area, he has removed the nearby portal's power cell. Naturally, you need the power cell to continue. You can:

- (Axii Delusion Level 2) Tell him to behave and give you the crystal.
- (Fight Fight) Tell him he's in a world of hurt, and literally beat the power cell out of his hands.

Aside from denigrating your antics, expect no more annoyances from the witch hunter. Inspect the chamber you're stuck in. There's another feather (a Sign of polymorphy) and a chest containing some love letters written to Philippa (from a woman scorned by her as she discarded her for… Dijkstra?!). Now run up the stairs to the deactivated archway portal. Fall off here and you die, so turn around, place the power cell into the wall alcove to your left, activate it with Aard, and step on through.

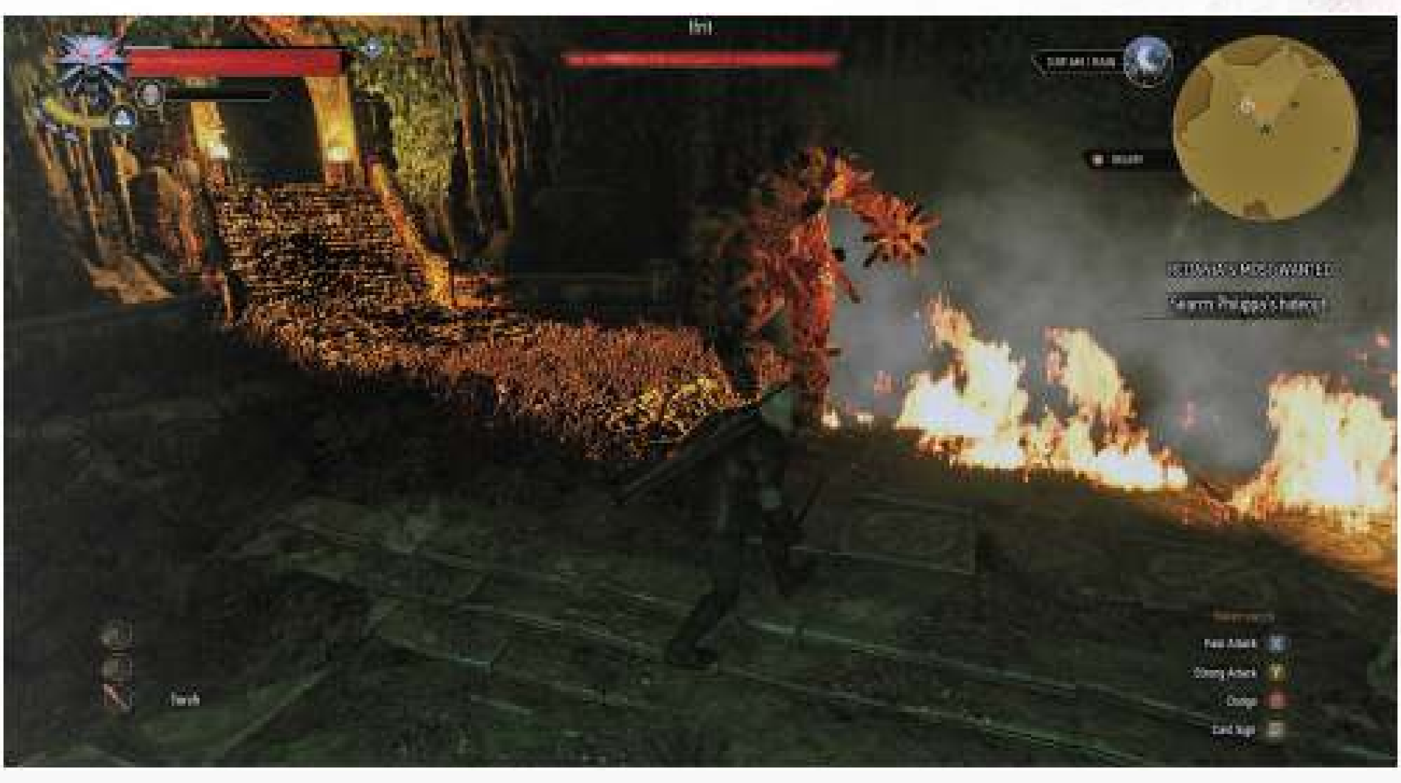
ITEM: Quest Items: Power Cell, Letter to Philippa



You step into a chamber of three nekkers that attack you immediately. Slay all three and inspect the remains of Philippa's laboratory.

There's another feather on the ground, and an opening that leads down some ledges into a small watery cave. Attack four more nekkers in this lower cave area, before exploring it thoroughly. There is a power cell to gather. Grab it, head back up into the laboratory, and up the steps to the portal platform. Once again, insert a power cell into the wall alcove to your left, activate it with Aard, and use the Portal.

Now finally on the lowest level of this maze, dash forward (northeast) toward the central tiled pathway lit by braziers. At the far end you are greeted by a guardian summoned by Philippa—an Ifrit to slay. Once the fire elemental is snuffed, head up the stairs, through two archways and into Philippa's private quarters.



OBJECTIVE

- Search Philippa's quarters using your Witcher Senses.

Amid the broken furniture, rubble, and discarded equipment, your Witcher Senses pick up the following:

- Agates that Philippa wore around her neck. These are covered in blood for unknown reasons.
- Blood-stained surgical instruments indicating she operated on someone.
- Notes that are so charred they are unreadable.
- The remains of her megascope, scorched and covered in soot.
- A heavily-chipped crystal from the megascope. Your favorite sorceress friend will know what to do with it.

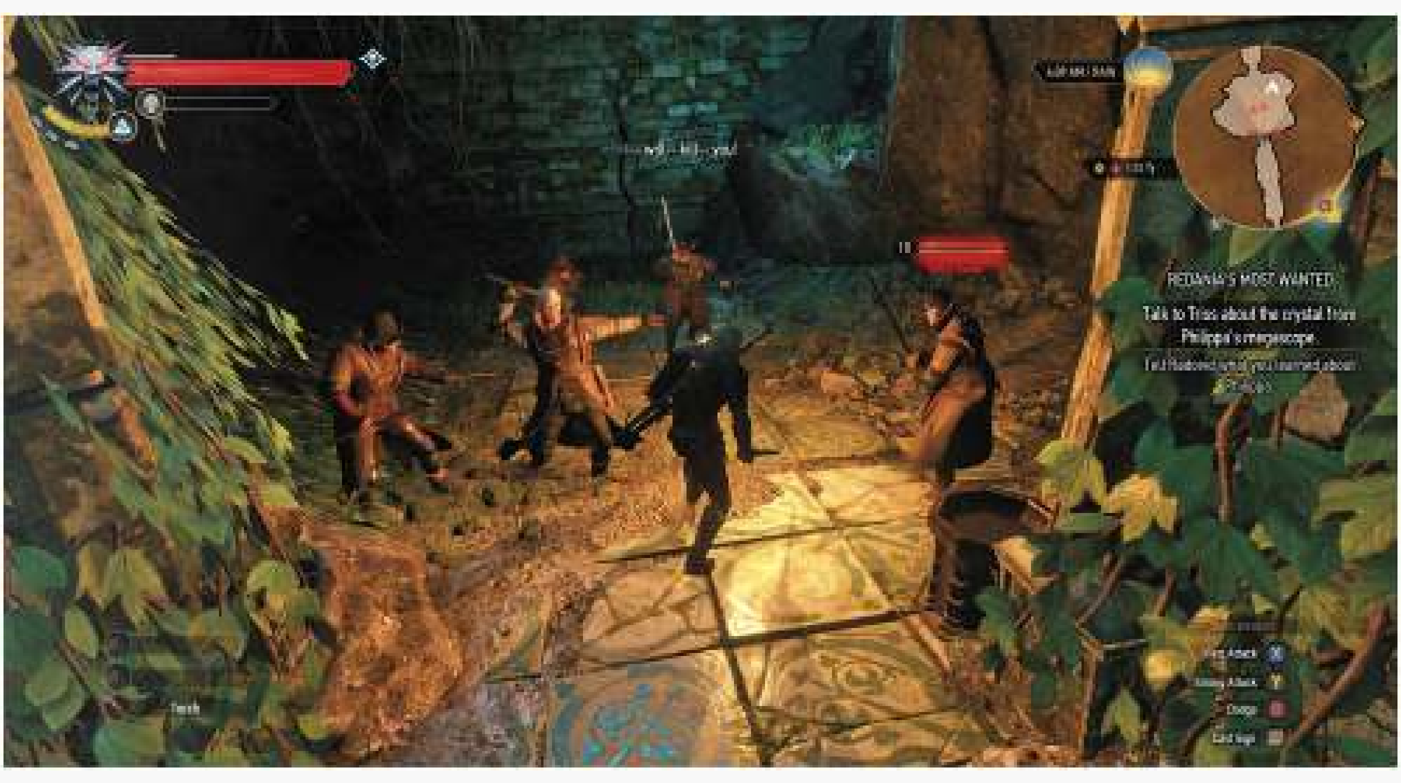
ITEM: Quest Items: Agate, Polished Crystal

Depending on your previous quest and romance choices, you may optionally take the Polished Crystal to be examined by:

- Triss in Novigrad.
- Yennefer in Skellige.
- Yennefer in Kaer Morhen.

Or, you can ignore the sorceresses completely, and return to Radovid.

Exit Est Tayiar the same way you entered. Access the portal and ascend to the hole below the exterior ruins. You notice that the witch hunters are discussing your efforts, and their leader aggressively demands to learn what you've found out.



You can:

- Be as rude as you wish, or attempt to hide the fact that you found the megascope's crystal. It matters not; you must fight the five witch hunters.
- Or you can hand over the megascope's crystal to the leader immediately. You aren't able to visit either Triss or Yennefer, and should head back to Radovid's boat for your reward. This isn't recommended.

Optional (Triss): Gaining Trust with Triss

Afterward, you mention that Radovid would like the crystal. This troubles Triss, who implores you not to do it. End your chat by:

- Leaving the crystal with Triss.
- Taking it with you to show the king (though you can return it to Triss before you meet with Radovid if you change your mind).

OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to Yennefer about the crystal from Philippa's megascope.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

The objective to take the crystal to Yennefer is available only if you've already begun Act II of the Critical Path (Main Quest: Ugly Baby), but haven't yet completed Main Quest: The Isle of Mists.

Yennefer of Vengerberg

Assuming you didn't give the crystal to the witch hunters, make a long trek to the island of Ard Skellig, visiting Kaer Trolde Harbor and heading up into the village along the coast, into the New Port Inn and Yennefer's chamber. Or, if Yennefer is in Kaer Morhen, then head there.

Yennefer is mocking in regards to Radovid's cruelty. You want to see what the crystal can tell you about Philippa before any decision about Radovid is made. END: DO YOU SIDE WITH THE SORCERESSES?

OBJECTIVE:

- Tell Radovid what you learned about Philippa.

Return to Oxenfurt Port, and speak with the Redanian Soldier to access Radovid's galleon. Radovid asks what you have learned. You can be evasive, or mention the crystal, or that she is trying to restore her eyesight. But Radovid is only concerned with the crystal, and your past decisions influence how this quest completes, and your reward (or lack thereof):

- If you hand over the crystal, you are paid and Radovid mentions he'll hand the crystal to his captive mages to examine.

ITEM: Crowns

- If you already handed the crystal over to the witch hunters when exiting Est Tayiar, you learn they took the credit for finding the crystal, and are nothing but a coward in their eyes. Radovid has no proof they are lying, and refuses to pay you.
- If you gave the crystal to Triss or Yennefer, you may elect to tell Radovid about what Philippa was planning, or you may remain evasive. Either way, without the crystal (and therefore proof), he refuses to pay you.

After one of these occurs, the quest concludes.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Imperial Audience concludes. Even though you are able to commence this Main Quest, which allows you to thoroughly explore Skellige, you are free to start, stop, or go back to any other part of the Main Quest in any of the other major land masses of this realm. Your choices are as follows:

- Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection, and commence the Main Quests across No Man's Land (Velen).
- Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad, and commence the Main Quests across Novigrad (this quest).
- Main Quest: The King is Dead—Long Live the King, and commence the Main Quests across Skellige.

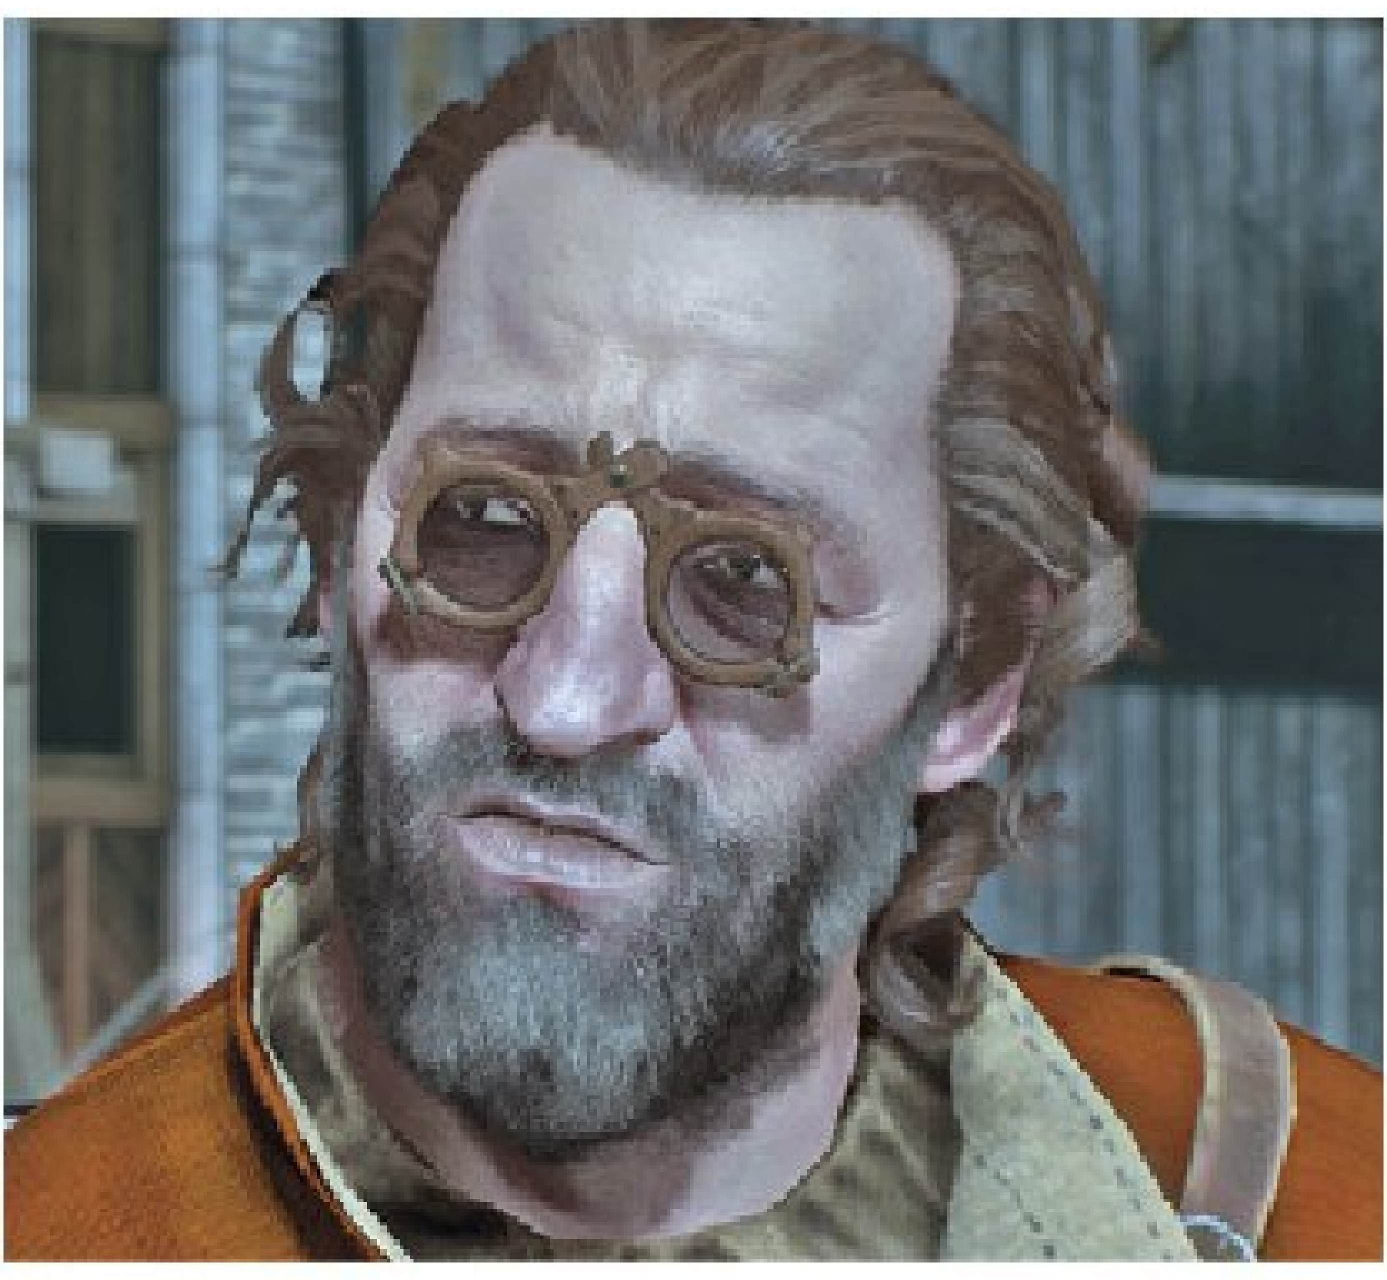
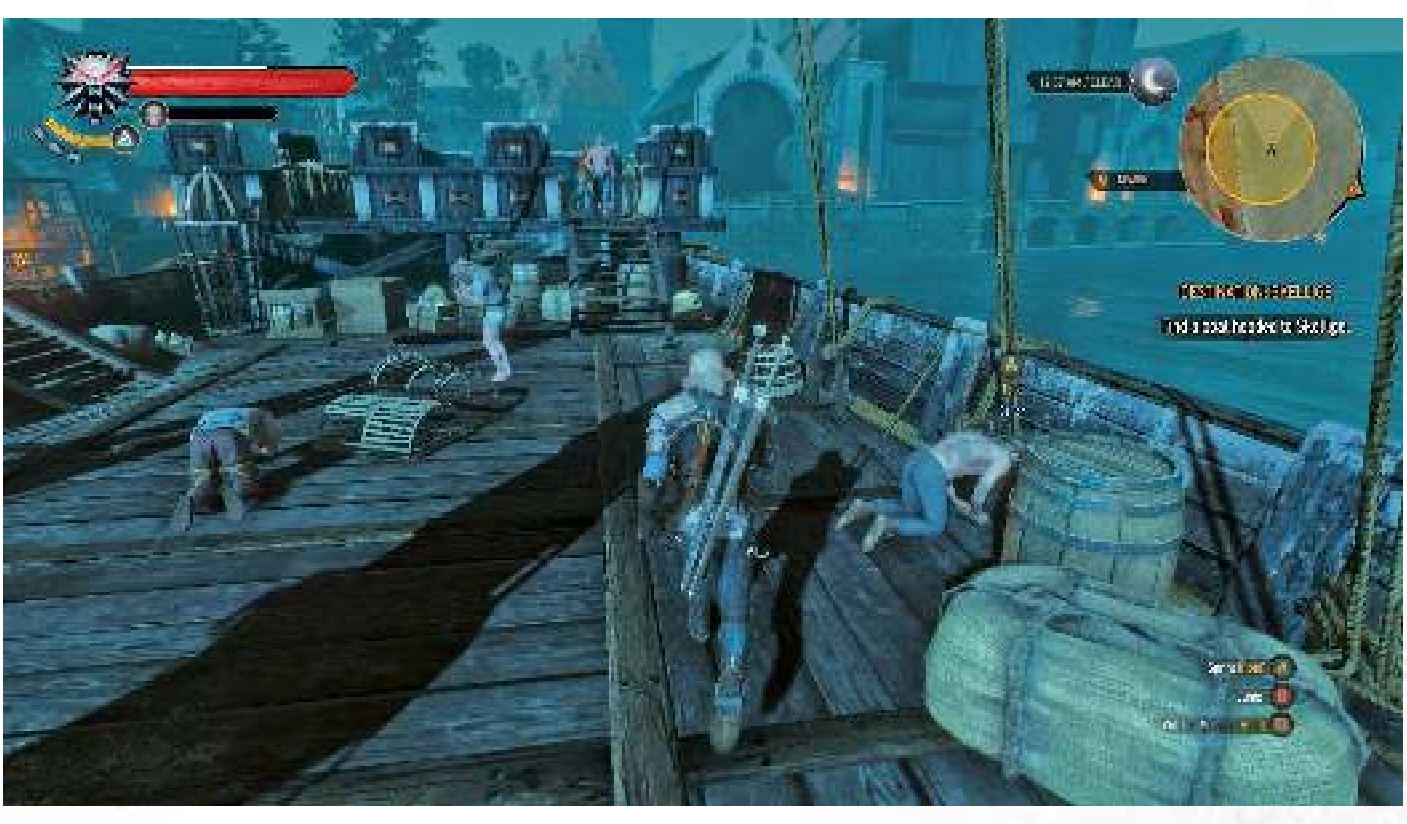
OBJECTIVES:

- Find a boat headed to Skellige.
- Nearest Signpost: Novigrad Docks.



Captain Liglad

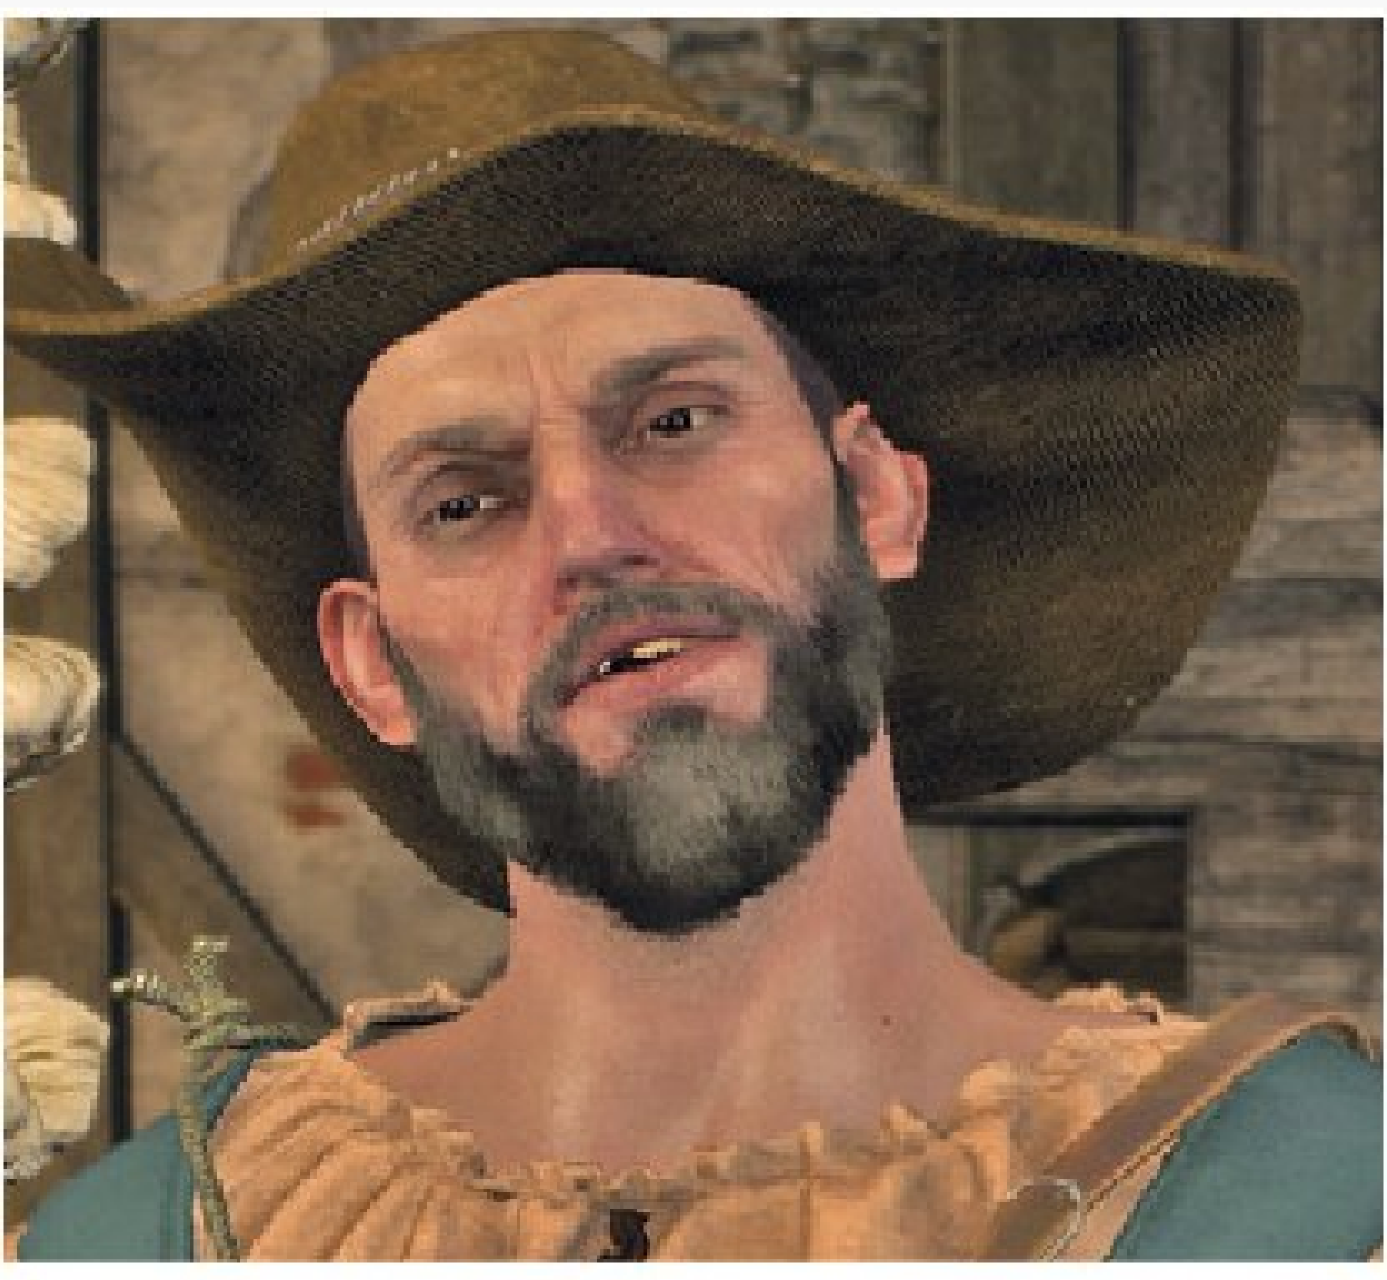


Yennefer has already transported herself to the wild isles of Skellige, and to meet her there you must arrange safe passage on one of the ships that are setting sail. Begin by heading into Novigrad, and locating the Novigrad Docks signpost. Work your way around the dockside wharfs, checking your minimap for three possible vessels.

One is captained by a lady who isn't interested in heading to Skellige. The second is currently captainless. The crew say the captain is off drinking somewhere. This is Captain Wolverstone—his ship is the Atropos. The third is moored farther around the harbor. Speak with Captain Liglad aboard the vessel. He's not interested in sailing to Skellige either, but he does recommend speaking to the drunk and unreliable Wolverstone, who's currently draining the Golden Sturgeon dry of ale.

OBJECTIVES:

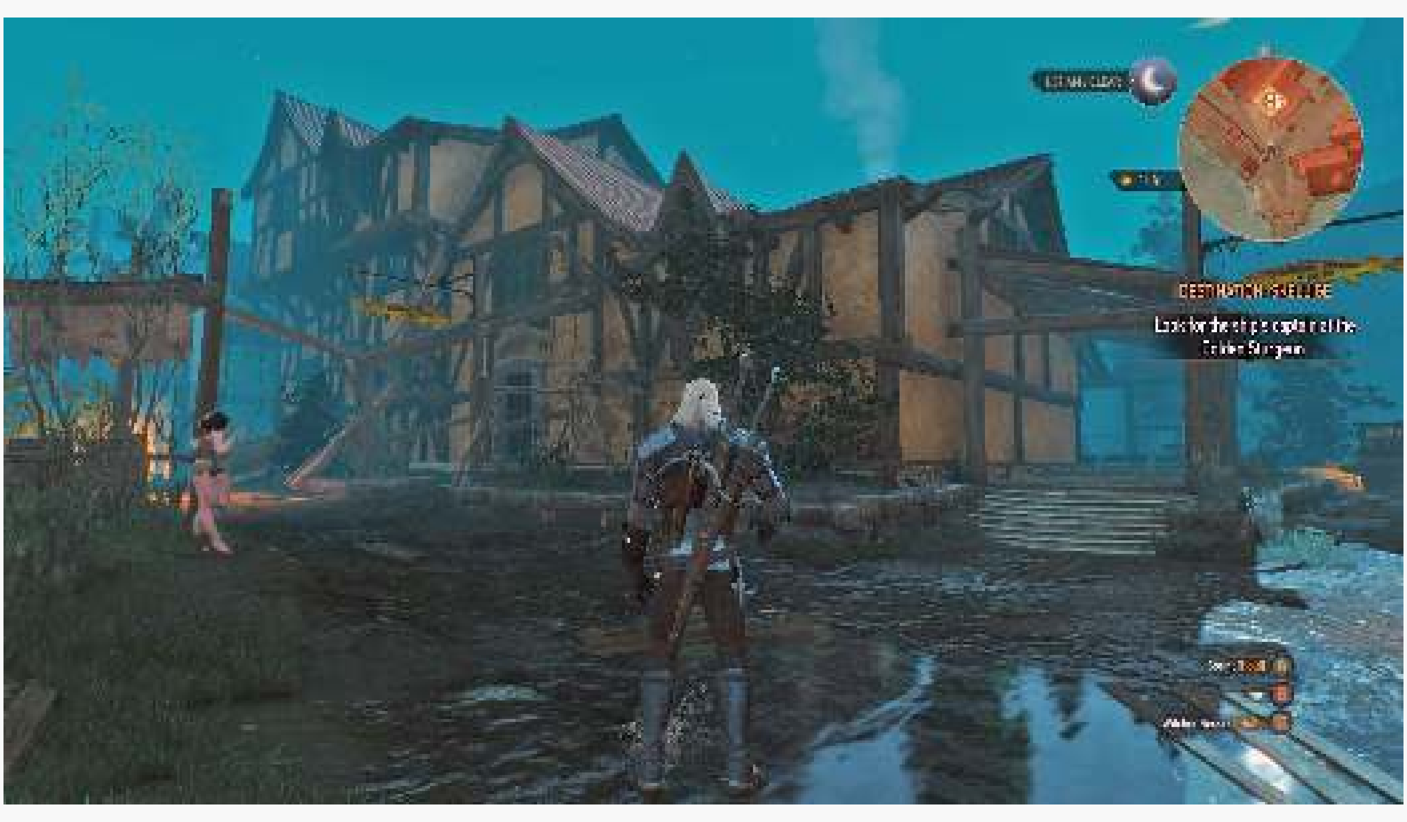
- Look for the ship's captain at the Golden Sturgeon.
- Pay Captain Wolverstone the requested amount to sail to Skellige.
- Defeat the pirates.



Captain Wolverstone

The Golden Sturgeon is on the harbor walk, and easy to find. Enter this drinking establishment, and speak to Wolverstone. He is about to set sail for Ard Skellig, the largest of the Skellige islands.

- (1,000 Crowns) Once you hand over some monies, he agrees to take you. You can pause, adventure throughout Novigrad and Velen if you wish before returning, and confirm you wish to leave for Skellige when you're ready to depart. Main Quest: Destination Skellige now commences.



During the voyage, you're woken from your sleep by shouts from the deck. The Atropos is being boarded by pirates! Expect around eight of them. Support the crew and tackle the foes nearest you, mopping them up in combat. With the pirates repelled, Wolverstone looks ahead at a fierce storm, and yells at his crew to cut the tether lines to the pirates' ship. The longboat drifts away, while the Atropos is dashed against an iceberg.

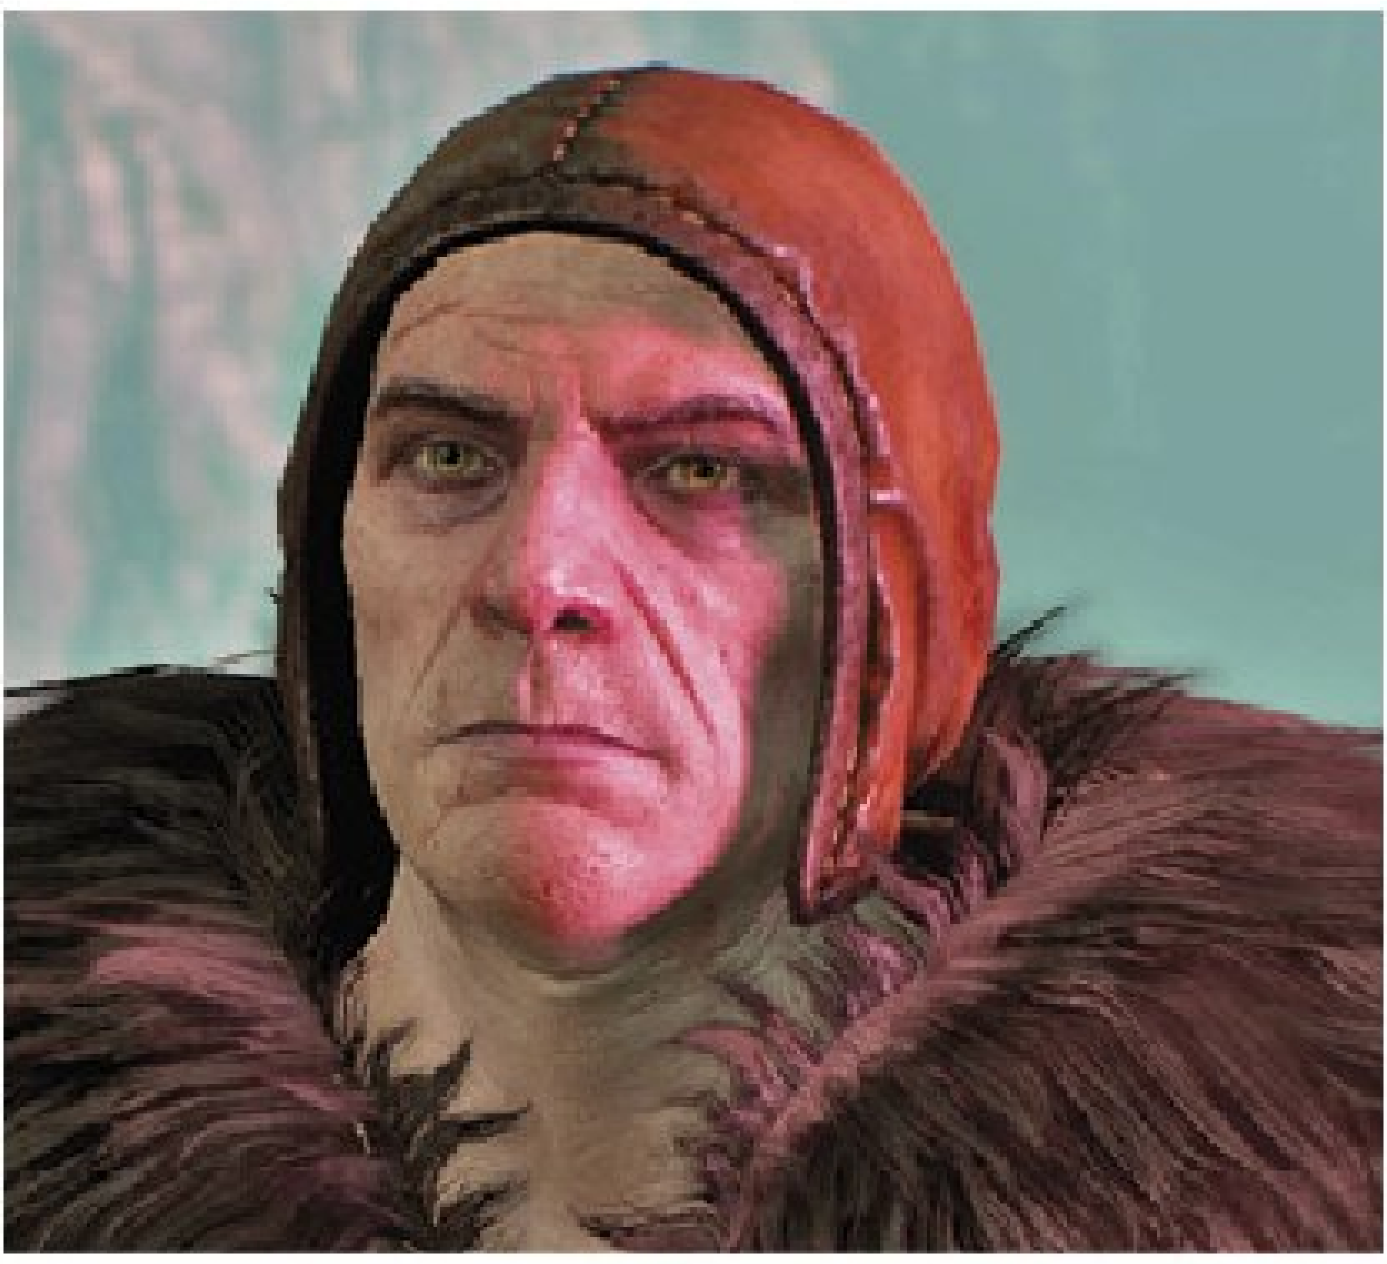
Know the Way to Kaer Trolde?

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to the port near Kaer Trolde.
- (Optional) Teach Steingrim a lesson.
- Nearest Signpost: Crossroads.



Steingrim

You wake up on a gravel beach with splintered flotsam everywhere, and a fur-shawled islander picking at your equipment. This man of Skellige (named Steingrim) is proud, prone to violence, but can be friendly. Depending on your conversation choices, you gain knowledge about the location of Yennefer:

- Be pleasant with your chat, and you end the conversation with the islander in a civil manner.
- Tell the man you'll slap him after he insults Yennefer, and start a fistfight. This can end with victory for you (after which, the man is suitably impressed), or victory for him (after which, your handiness is called into question).
- Choose offensive comments and the chat can degenerate into combat. This can also occur if you unsheathe your sword during the fistfight. Steingrim shouts to Trofast (his hunting wolf) to attack you, deal with both of them.

A FUTURE FEASTER

If Steingrim is still alive, you may see him during the Secondary Quest: King's Gambit.

1,000 CROWNS IN YOUR POCKET

Before going anywhere, check the immediate area and gather loot from the shipwreck. Behind the ship you can find the body of Captain Wolverstone. Search his pockets and gather the 1,000 crowns you paid him for the voyage.

Follow the path east and then north, whistling for your horse if you wish to cover more ground. Stay on the path and discover the Crossroads signpost. Continue to gallop north along the winding road, turning left (west) just before the gates of Kaer Trolde, and descending down into Kaer Trolde Harbor (signpost). Dismount and move to the far (west) end of the harbor.

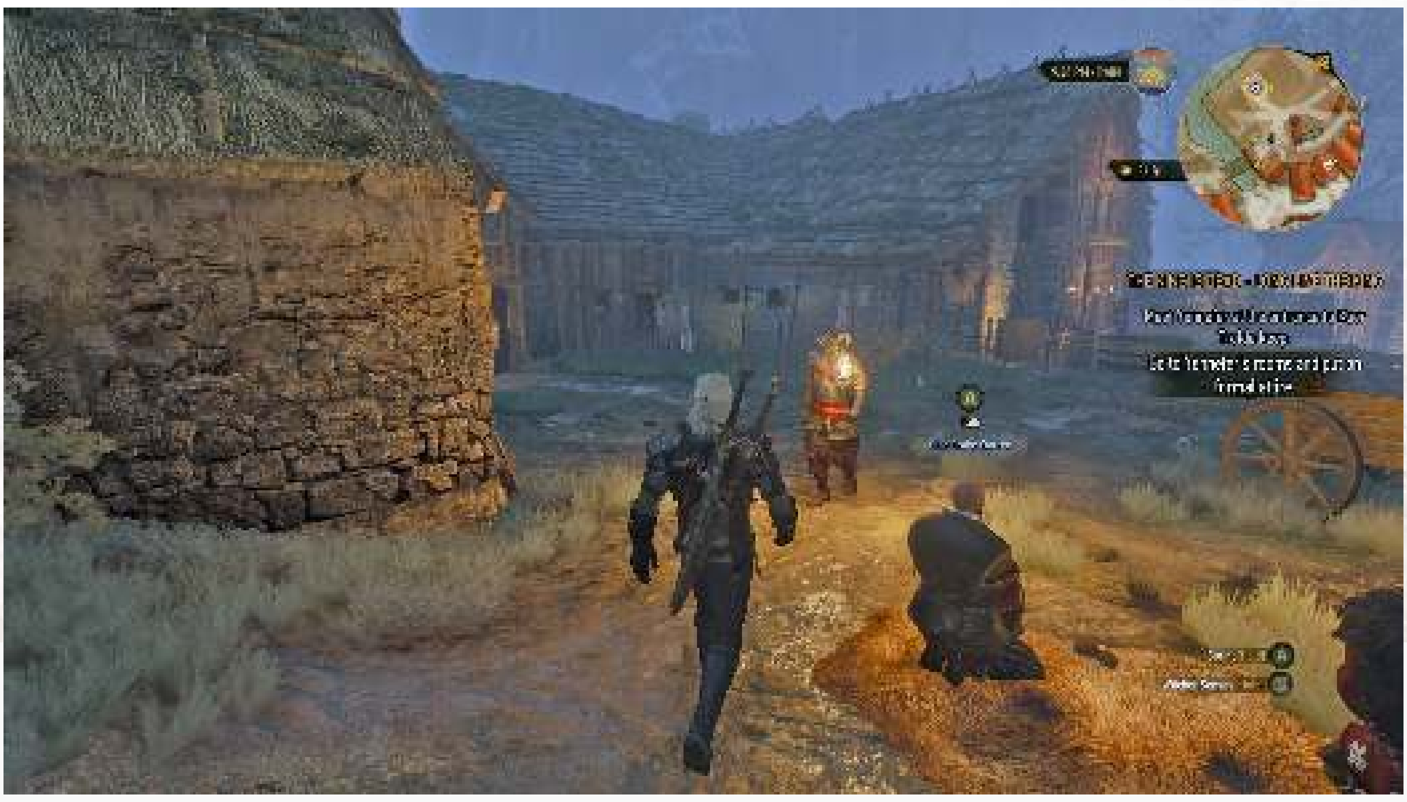
Continue along the harbor path into the cluster of buildings and small gatehouse below the main hike up to the keep. Remain close to sea level as you head north and turn left (west), opening the door leading into Yennefer's Room (which is adjacent to the Old Port Inn). Yennefer has certainly spread out her belongings, which can be inspected using your Witcher Senses:



- There's a book, beauty cream, a megascope for her magic, wardrobe with Yennefer's clothes, and a stuffed unicorn that might bring back memories. The traditional Skellige outfit (in a choice of two colors) is hidden in the corner chest, by the megascope.

The journey to Kaer Trolde Keep is quite a climb. Head to the main road uphill, heading north through the first gatehouse, across the wooden bridge, and up through the long overhang with the spectacular view of the gorge below. Kaer Trolde Keep looms up, cut from the granite mountain it sits on. Wind up through the tunnel, and slow down as you cross the gorge bridge. Yennefer is speaking to Birna Bran, the widow of King Bran. It is a discussion bordering on an argument about rights of lineage. The Queen Mother promptly leaves, and Yennefer looks you up and down.

- If you dressed up as she requested, you receive a compliment.
- If you didn't, a verbal dressing down is all you receive.

OBJECTIVE:

- Go with Yennefer to the wake inside Kaer Trolde.

Stride into the keep and speak with Yennefer about attire, until you reach the great hall, where a servant named Arnvald motions you to your seats. You're to break bread with the offspring of Skellige's jarls. Cerys an Craite (daughter of Crach), Blueboy Lugos (firstborn of Madman Lugos), Halbjorn (son of Holger Blackhand) and Otrygg (son of Donar an Hindar).

There's some light banter, and a mention of Cerys' brother Hjalmar, who isn't here (he walks his own path). Then conversation turns to a race up the mount. Eager to prove herself, Cerys challenges you. You can:

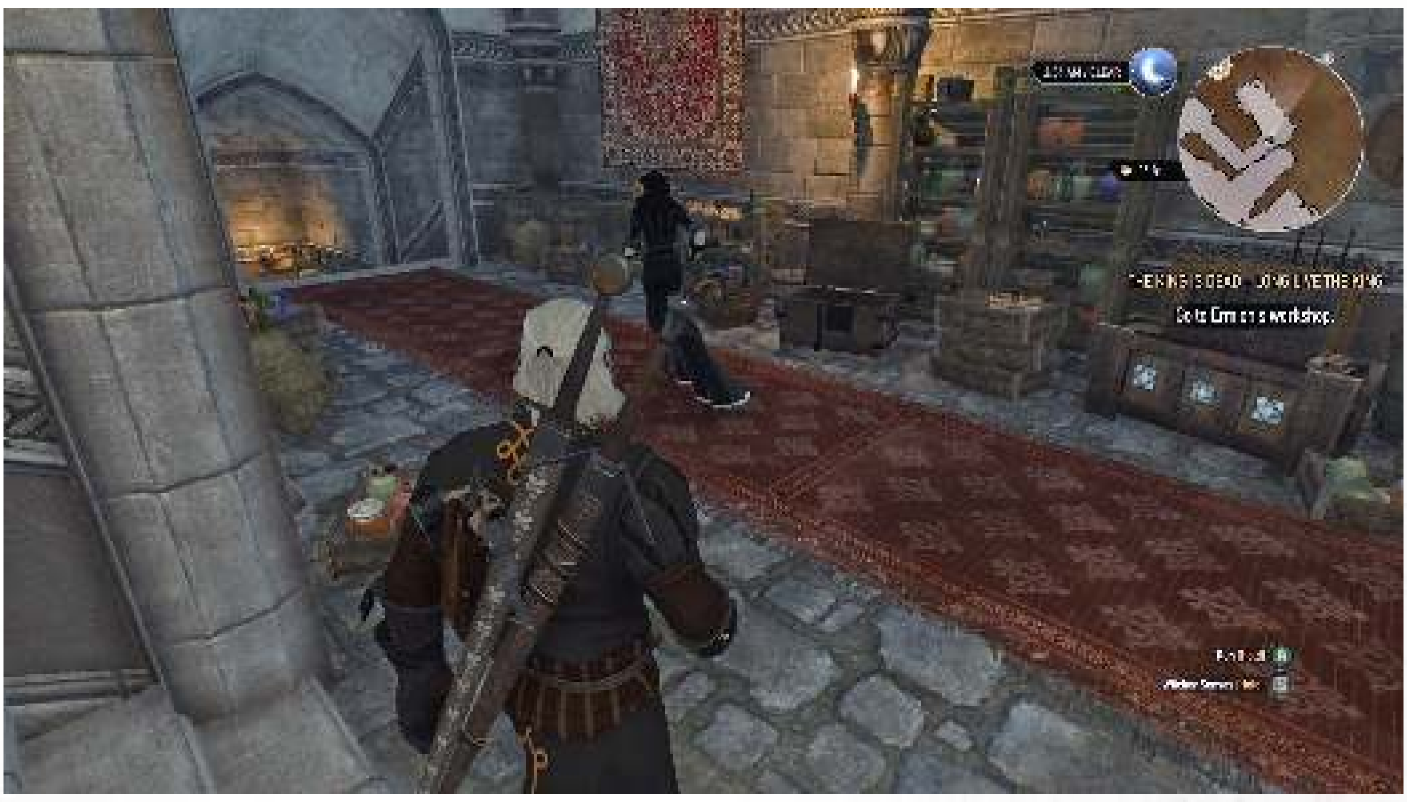
- Explore the mysterious room using your Witcher Senses.

The door behind the arguing jarls is open, allowing you to head downstairs (southward) deeper into the keep. Yennefer is here to visit Ermion's laboratory (without an invitation). Follow Yennefer, keeping behind her so you don't attract any guards, and speak to her about the Mask of Uroboros (which she intends to steal). This stairwell stroll and a pair of doors are guarded by a murder of crows—Ermion's spies.

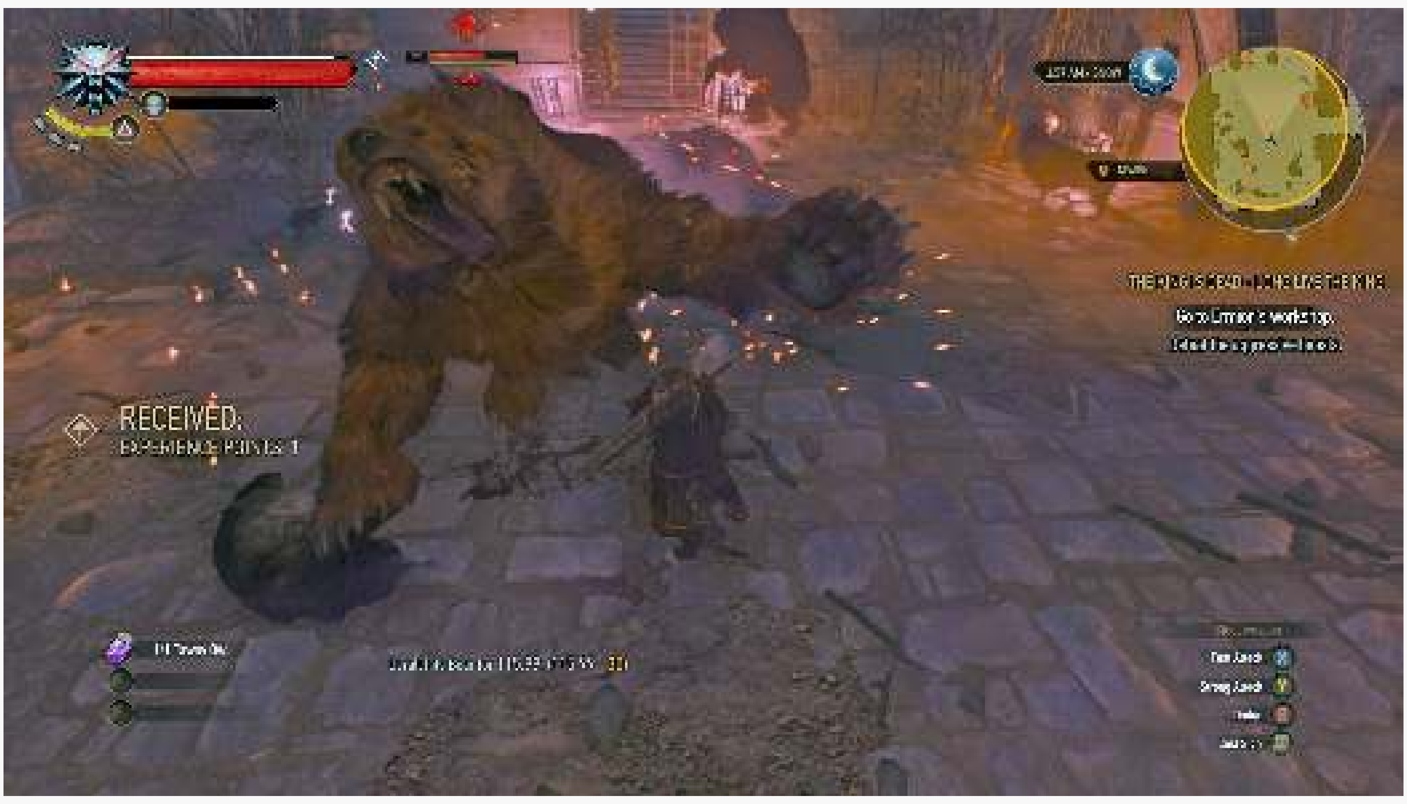


Simply head to the nearby window, walk outside, cross the outer balcony to the next window, and open it. You appear past the door, with more stairs down, through a portcullis and into a mysterious room. It is filled with stuffed animals. Use your Witcher Senses and uncover the following:

- There are four bears, ten wolves, and four deer. All motionless.
- There is a roughly hewn altar with a basin of water for teleprojection.
- A door to the side is locked, and you cut yourself opening it. The room is filled with an eerie glow. Those animals aren't stuffed, they're alive!

OBJECTIVE:

- Defeat the aggressive beasts.



Does this room smell like mushrooms? Weird. No matter. Brandish your sword and begin to slash at the three animals attacking you (usually a bear and two wolves). Once they've been removed, expect three wolves and a bear. Slice and dice them, before the last foes (a wolf and two bears) must be defeated. Then you collapse in a heap, unaware that you were hallucinating and the animals were still stuffed! Still, the side door is open now. Head on through (to the west).

Main Quest: Echoes of the Past

Only Ignorant Fools Belittle Myths

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: ECHOES OF THE PAST

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: The King is Dead—Long Live the King; Main Quest: Nameless

LOCATIONS : Redgill, Druid's Camp, Cataclysm (Ard Skellig)

CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Ermion

ENEMIES : Foglets

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest becomes available automatically once Main Quest: The King is Dead—Long Live the King concludes. It is mandatory, and must be completed to continue the Main Quest. As you may have concluded any number of other quests before starting this one, the journey to the Druids' Camp cannot be accurately plotted. The following is the optimal method of reaching this location on eastern Ard Skellig.

OBJECTIVES:

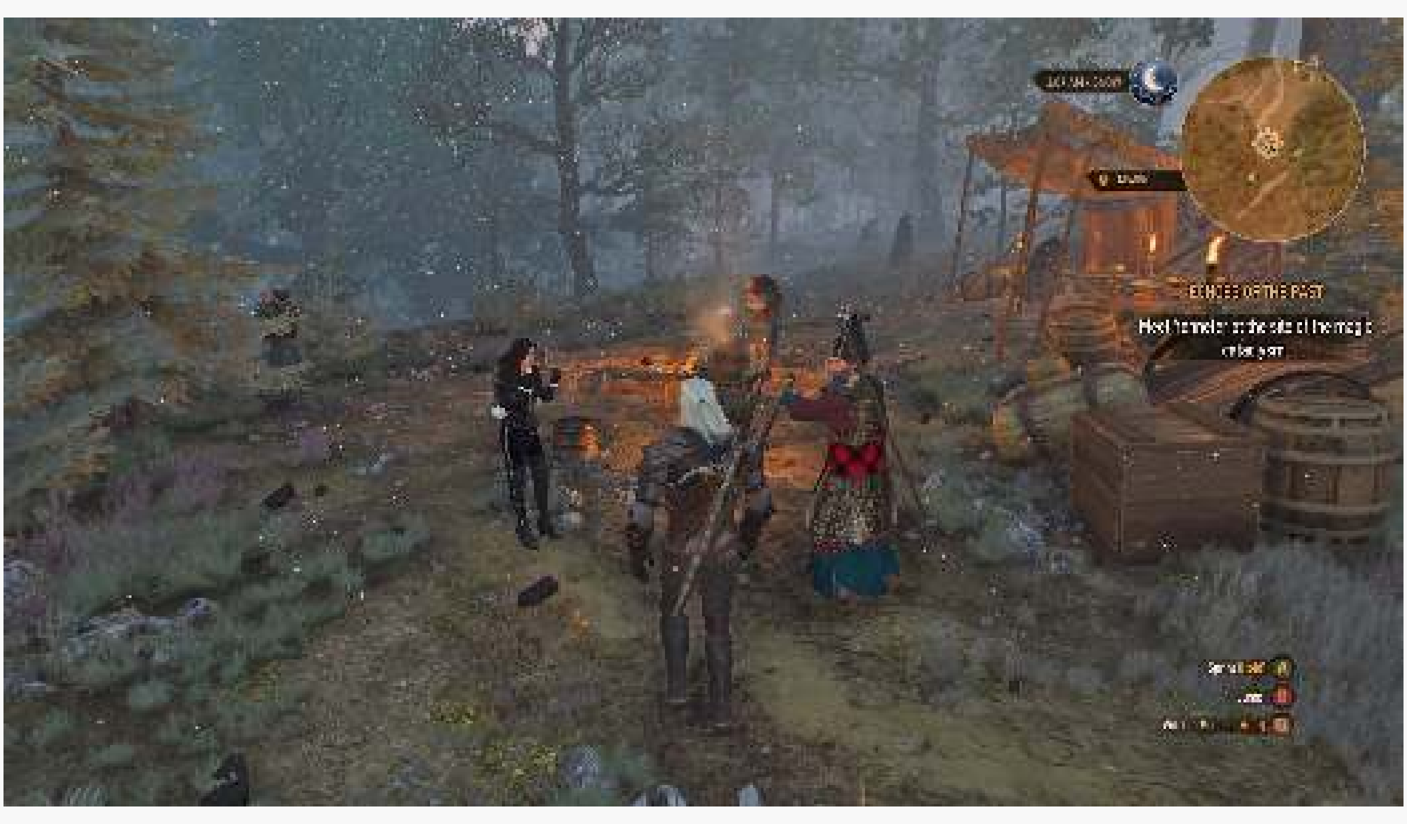
- Meet Yennefer at the site of the magic cataclysm.
- Nearest Signpost: Druids' Camp (Ard Skellig).

Yennefer of Vengerberg

Ermion

Sail to the deserted port village of Redgill on Ard Skellig's eastern coast. There's little here now but steps up to a winding beach pathway that meanders vaguely westward, and finally ends up at your destination—the Druids' Camp. Or, trek up the coastal hills and into the woods, heading directly for the camp. When you arrive, Yennefer is already having a rather heated discussion with Ermion. You can:

- Join in the conversation, reminding the two of them that their behavior isn't appropriate.
- Wait for this initial salvo in the argument between Yennefer and Ermion to subside. Then begin a proper conversation.

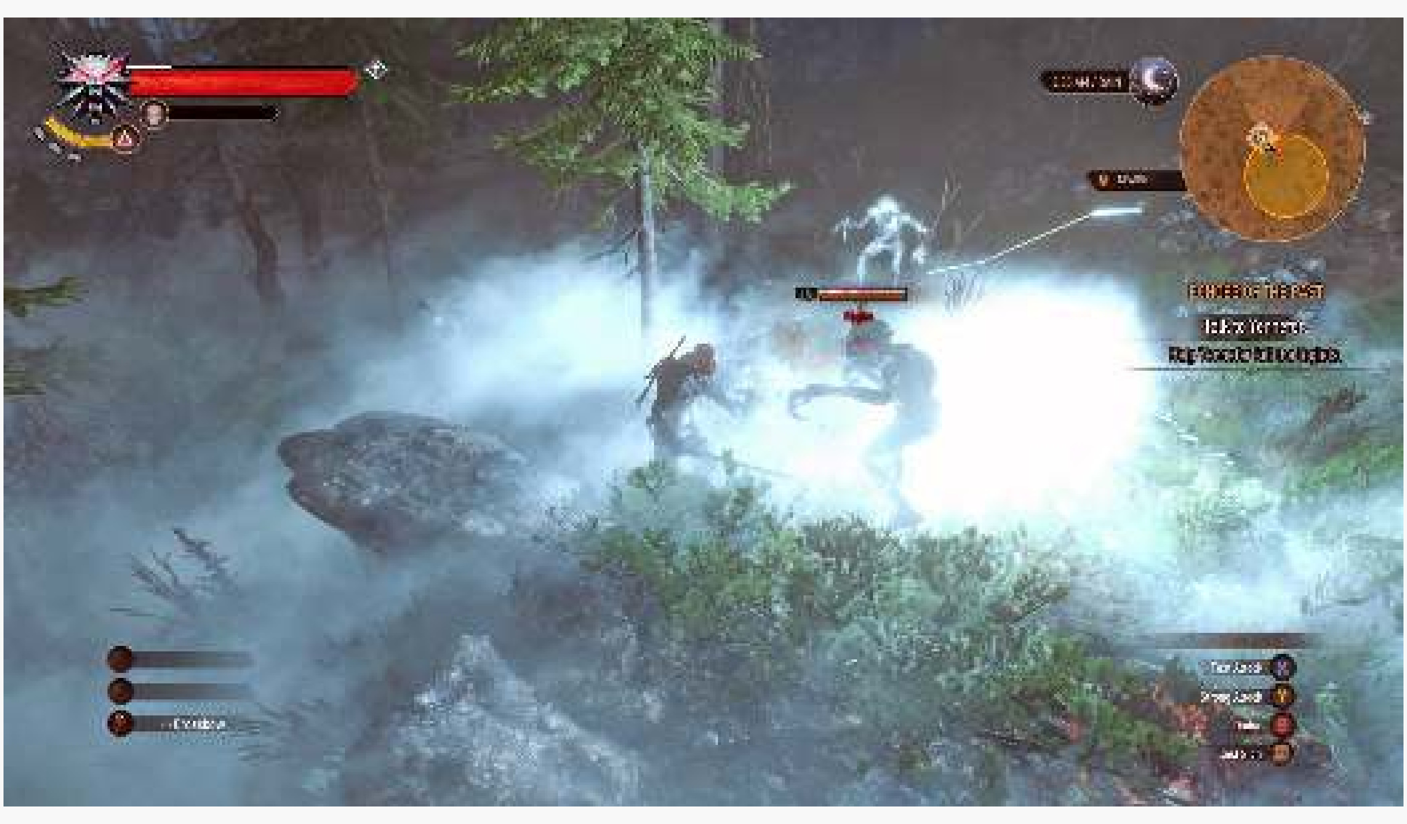


Make conversation choices as you wish. Ermion is furious that Yennefer has taken the Mask of Uroboros, and fears another cataclysmic explosion if it is used. As he recalls the history of the device, and you answer Ermion in any way you wish regarding Yennefer's thievery, there's an ominous sound, and you fail to see Yennefer. She has snuck away during your talk with Ermion! She used the mask!

OBJECTIVE

- Talk to Yennefer. Help Yennefer kill the foglets.

Quickly head downhill in a roughly southerly direction down the path, in sight of the cataclysm, where acres of forest have been stripped to skeletal remains from the previous blast that Yennefer seeks to investigate.



Ermion and the other druids descend too, starting a spell in the hopes that they might halt any disaster the Mask of Uroboros would cause. You find Yennefer engaged in electrical combat with a group of foglets. Engage in combat with them, helping her slay these tricky foes.

Afterwards, the wind whips up as Yennefer explains the mask summoned the foglets. The device apparently reveals the past, but only in certain places with a strong magical imprint. She hands the mask over to you. She wants to read your mind and see what you see. There's little point in arguing.

ITEM: Quest Item: Mask of Uroboros

USING THE MASK

Remember to quickly put the mask on and take it off using the Quick Slot item menu.

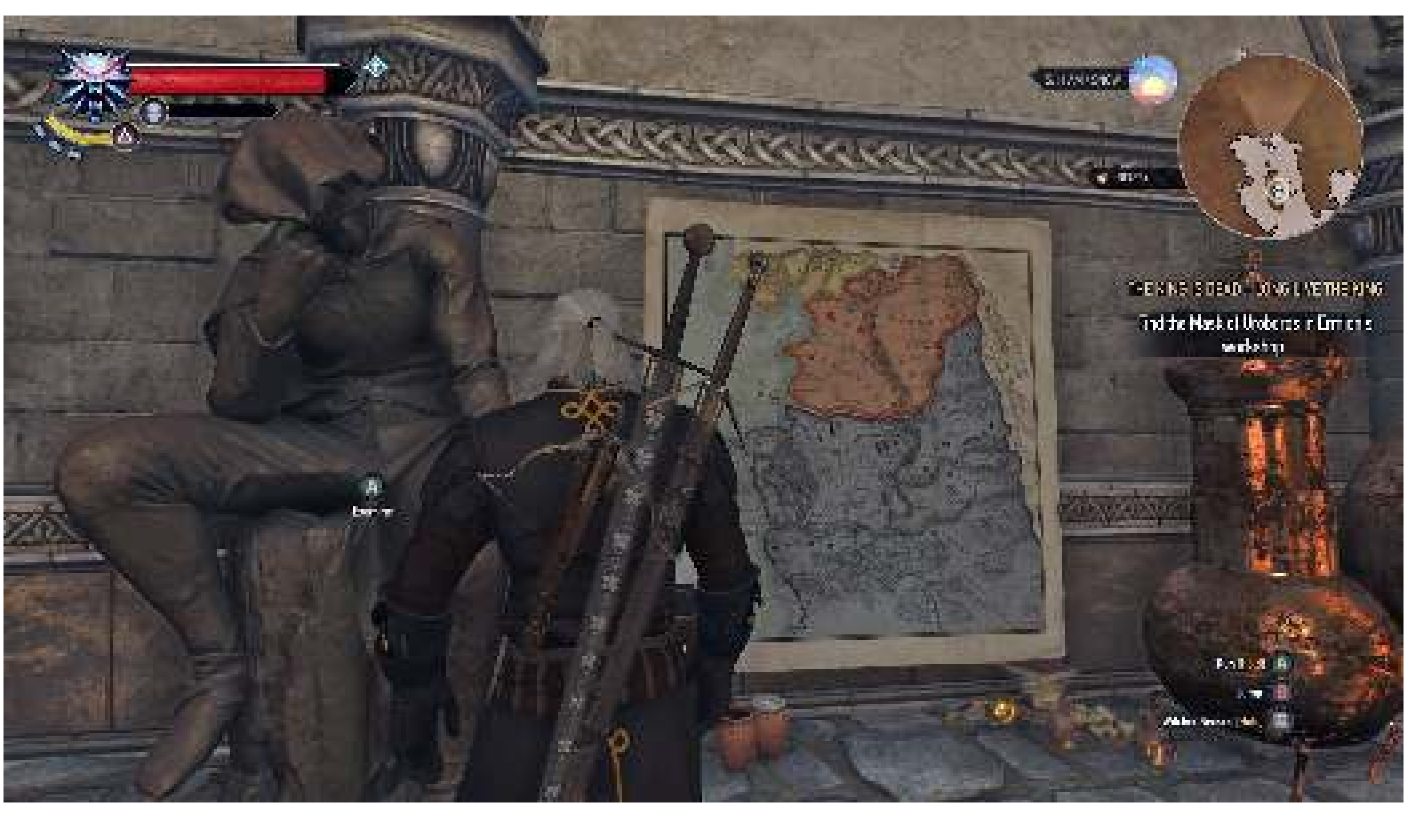
Main Quest: The King is Dead. Long Live the King

Making the Earth Move

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to Ermion's workshop (continued).
- Find the Mask of Uroboros in Ermion's workshop.

Continue down more stairs and into Ermion's laboratory. Here there are two types of items to inspect, of varying interest to you:



"Glittering" objects which are usually notes and other marginalia from Ermion, to add to your Lore knowledge. There are also objects that appear in red when you utilize your Witcher Senses. These are of importance, and some must be found in order to continue. Find the following:

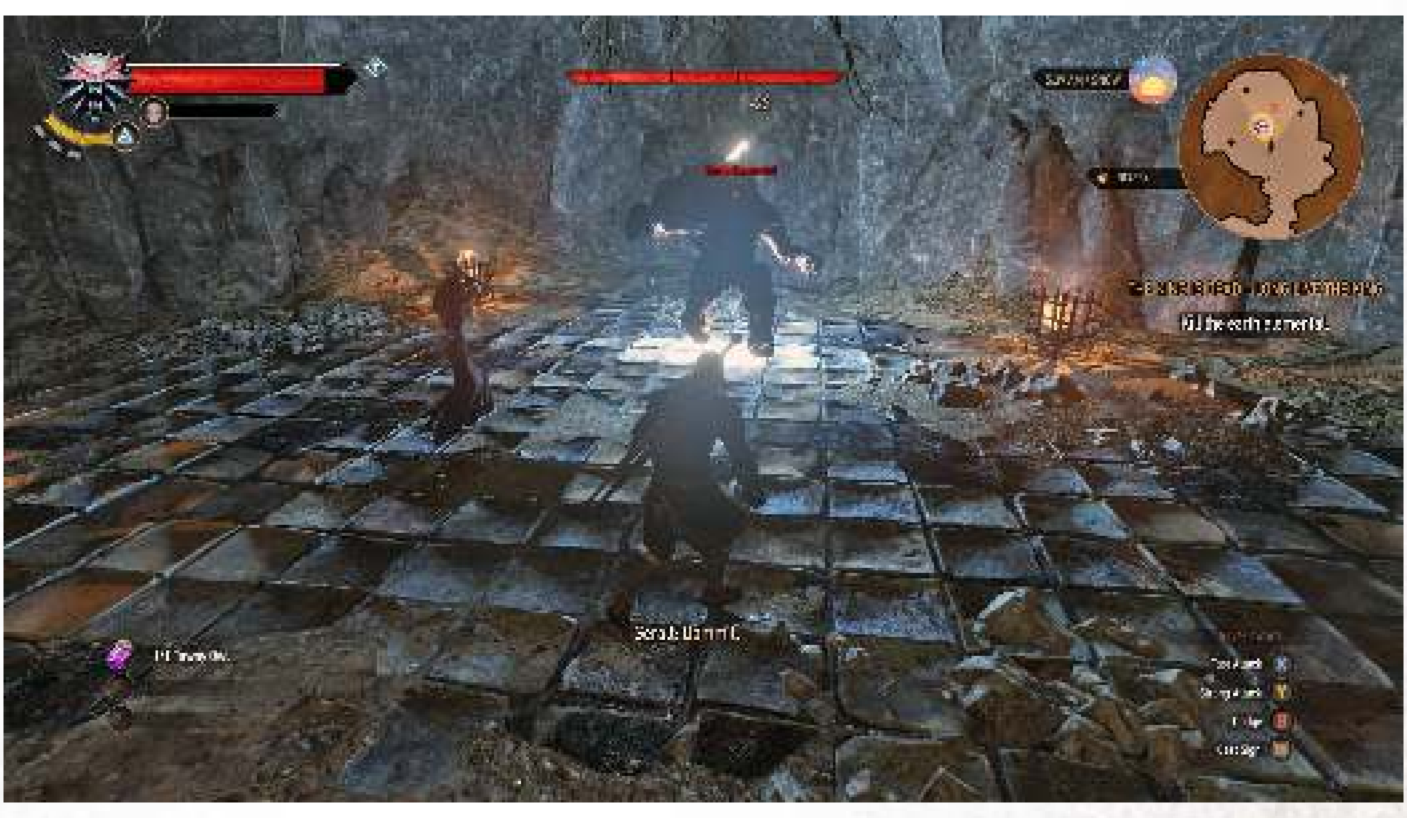
- A correspondence letter on a sideboard.
- Ermion's pipe on a small table near the fireplace.
- A book—Tales of the Wild Hunt—on a small table by the main pillar.
- A large goblet of dwarven triple mead on the bedside table.
- A set of ornate boiling casks atop a low bookshelf. A laboratory worthy of an imperial alchemist.
- A wooden goat on a plinth, sitting on a barrel. According to Yennefer, this might have been whittled by Ciri (as Ermion was Ciri's tutor during childhood).
- A human skull, sitting on a small circular table. Wait, is that a child's skull?
- Ermion's wand, propped up against a wardrobe.
- An extremely large pine cone, on the table by the bookcases.
- A sword placed into a stone. Try as you might, you can't pull the blade out; mainly because this is a vice!
- A larger-than-lifesized statue deep in thought. There is an outstretched hand to place something in. Perhaps the mead goblet? Slot it into place, and a section of wall rumbles open.

ITEM: Quest Items: Ermion's Correspondence, Tales of the Wild Hunt, Mead, Skull, Cone

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the secret chamber using your Witcher Senses.
- Kill the earth elemental.
- Look around for a way to escape from the trap.

Head down the steps into a cavern under the keep, where Yennefer spots (and takes) the Mask of Uroboros floating in this strange roughly-hewn chamber. Alas, it is guarded by a lumbering earth elemental!



OUT OF YOUR ELEMENT?

This terrifying entity can be a real pain to slay, so be sure to adequately prepare before the fight (just after the secret door is opened), and read up on the best tactics to slay earth elementals in the Bestiary.

When the Elemental crumbles, the room begins to fill with gas! You now have 15 seconds to look around. Just enough time to gather the valuable loot from the slain elemental. With no way out, you implore Yennefer to teleport you both out of there. But she needs you to have a clear head, and you must choose from two options quickly!

- We're gonna choke and die: You tumble onto a feast table in Kaer Trolde, in between the drunk revelers. You avoid any carnal knowledge with Yennefer.
- Damn, I wanna kiss you, Yen: You tumble back into Yennefer's bedroom back in Kaer Trolde Village. She's torn part of her dress.

Tell her you should get back to the wake, and she finishes up with her sewing and you both return to the great hall.

Tell her you wouldn't mind watching, and you appear to Yennefer clad only in a loin cloth. You both catch up on lost time. After some bedroom (and unicorn) antics, you both return to the great hall.

♥ Carnal Knowledge: Yennefer of Vengerberg

END: OATHS OF THE OFFSPRING

You finally make a return to the wake, where you witness a Skellige tradition. All the candidates for ruler place their weapon onto an animal skin, as a symbol of their will to rule. Crach substitutes for his son Hjalmar, who has already departed for Undvik to slay an ice giant. There's a surprised murmuring when Cerys, the only woman with such machinations, throws her dagger onto the pile.

Afterwards, you appear with Crach and Yennefer on one of the keep's crenelation promontories. Crach pledges help to find Ciri, but you need to ask for assistance with Ermion. He supports Yennefer's decision to seek out the anomalous magical blast elsewhere on Ard Skellig. Then Crach has a request of you.

- His son Hjalmar has sworn an oath to kill the giant of Undvik: Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik.
- His daughter Cerys has sworn to lift the curse of Udalryk on Spikeroog: Secondary Quest: Possession.
- Yennefer is off to change, and explore the area around the anomaly. Main Quest: Echoes of the Past.

Agree to help Crach. You now have three important tasks to accomplish, in any order you like. But for now, this quest concludes.

Main Quest: Echoes of the Past

Magical Blasts from the Past

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Yennefer (4).
- Use the Mask of Uroboros (4).

Follow Yennefer to an area where the earth is ripped apart and a waterlogged gully exists where a path once was. Place the mask on and you see two shadow figures step from a portal. Geralt claims one of them was Ciri! Remove the mask when Yennefer decides to move to the next area of magical force.

Engage a foglet, slicing it apart before donning the mask again. This time a group of shadow figures are torn apart by a blast of bright light. This is the impact spot of the cataclysm. But Ciri and her companion escaped.

Remove the mask, and follow Yennefer for a third time. When she stops and you don the mask one more time, you see a shadow figure attacking another, and the second fleeing through a portal. It appears Ciri escaped, but may have been wounded in the process. Ciri's magical residue indicates that she traveled to Velen from here, but her attacker is closer by.

Defeat another summoned foglet, then continue to follow Yennefer down the hill, moving toward the east. Wear the mask when instructed to see two shadow figures battle each other, one defeating the other. Yennefer deduces Ciri has a powerful ally—a mage most likely—and you're about to wonder what happened to this person when the weather starts to clear up, and Ermion strides into view.

END: FORESHADOWS OF THE FUTURE

OBJECTIVE

- Look for a body.

Ermion's apoplectic fury is abated when you inform him of a trail that seems to indicate Ciri's whereabouts. When you hand back the mask, Ermion tells you it has lost its power. Once you tell him you need to examine one more trail, he grants your progress. You're looking for a corpse, someone Ciri's companion killed. Head south with the watery ditch on your right. Yennefer lifts a fallen tree from the ditch, and you discover the body of a Wild Hunt Rider. The armor is clean, with no blood or sword nicks. Ermion is frightened by this revelation, and tells you the Wild Hunt was already seen on the Isle of Hindarsfjall.They ransacked the village of Lofoten. Yennefer proposes that you both travel there via teleport. Agree and Main Quest: Missing Persons begins.

MAIN QUEST: MISSING PERSONS

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Echoes of the Past, Main Quest: Nameless, Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing, Main Quest: The Calm Before the Storm, Secondary Quest: The Mysterious Passenger, Main Quest: Ugly Baby

LOCATIONS : Lofoten (Hindarsfjall), Freya's Garden

CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Priestesses of Freya, Tordar, Morkvarg

ENEMIES : Wolves

QUESTING DECISIONS

Main Quest: Missing Persons is available automatically, once Main Quest: Echoes of the Past concludes. It is mandatory, and must be completed to continue the Main Quest.

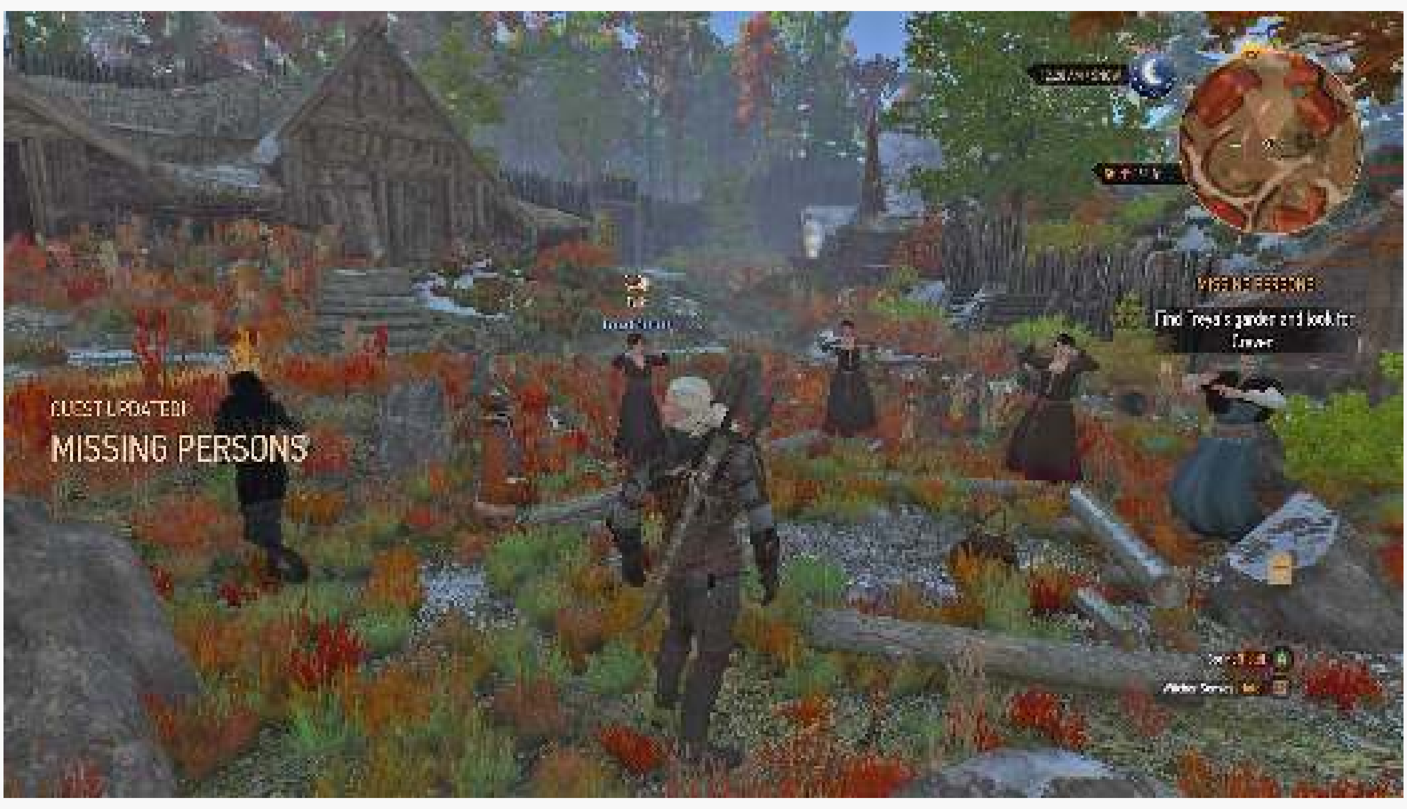
Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing is a closely related quest, and any mandatory elements of this quest are featured in this section. While that quest concentrates on killing a cursed werewolf, Main Quest: Nameless concentrates on uncovering the fate of the Craven one.

OBJECTIVE:

- Follow Yennefer to Lofoten.

Yennefer transports you to the Isle of Hindarsfjall, and correctly remembers the way to the village of Lofoten. Head north from the Cemetery into the center of the village where the Skellige women (priestesses of Freya) are conducting some kind of ritual. Yennefer interrupts the ceremony, and you ask the whereabouts of Ciri, the "ashen haired" one.

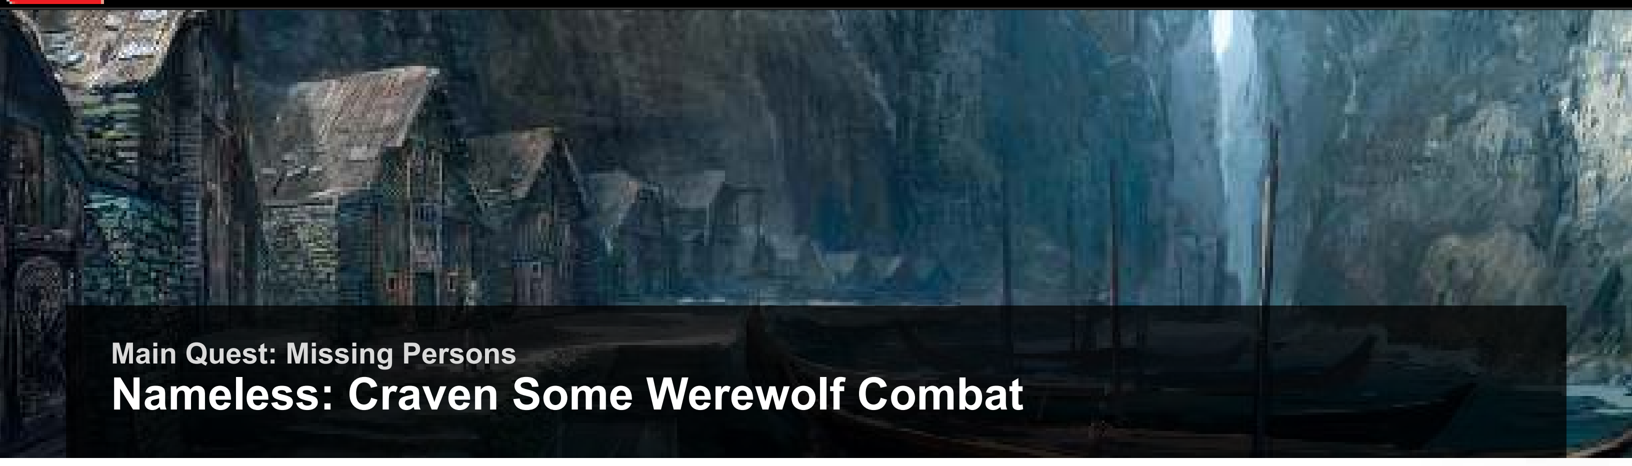
Yennefer of Vengerberg



Apparently, Ciri was seen before the Wild Hunt attacked, in the stables with a man named Craven (who is cursed by the other priestesses). Ask if Craven has a name. He did until he was struck from the Saga of Ancestors after fleeing the village during the attack. This Craven character attempted to clear his name by traveling to Freya's Garden to defeat Morkvarg, "the vilest man ever to inhabit Skellige," who stole, killed children and pregnant women, and attacked his own clan's lands. Answer how you wish. Afterwards, you realize this monsterous Morkvarg has a complex curse upon him. You both decide to head to Freya's Garden in the hope of finding, and dealing with both Morkvarg and Craven.

IN WOLF'S CLOTHING

At this point, you may wish to concurrently complete Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing. Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing can also be completed before you begin Main Quest: Missing Persons, if you wish.

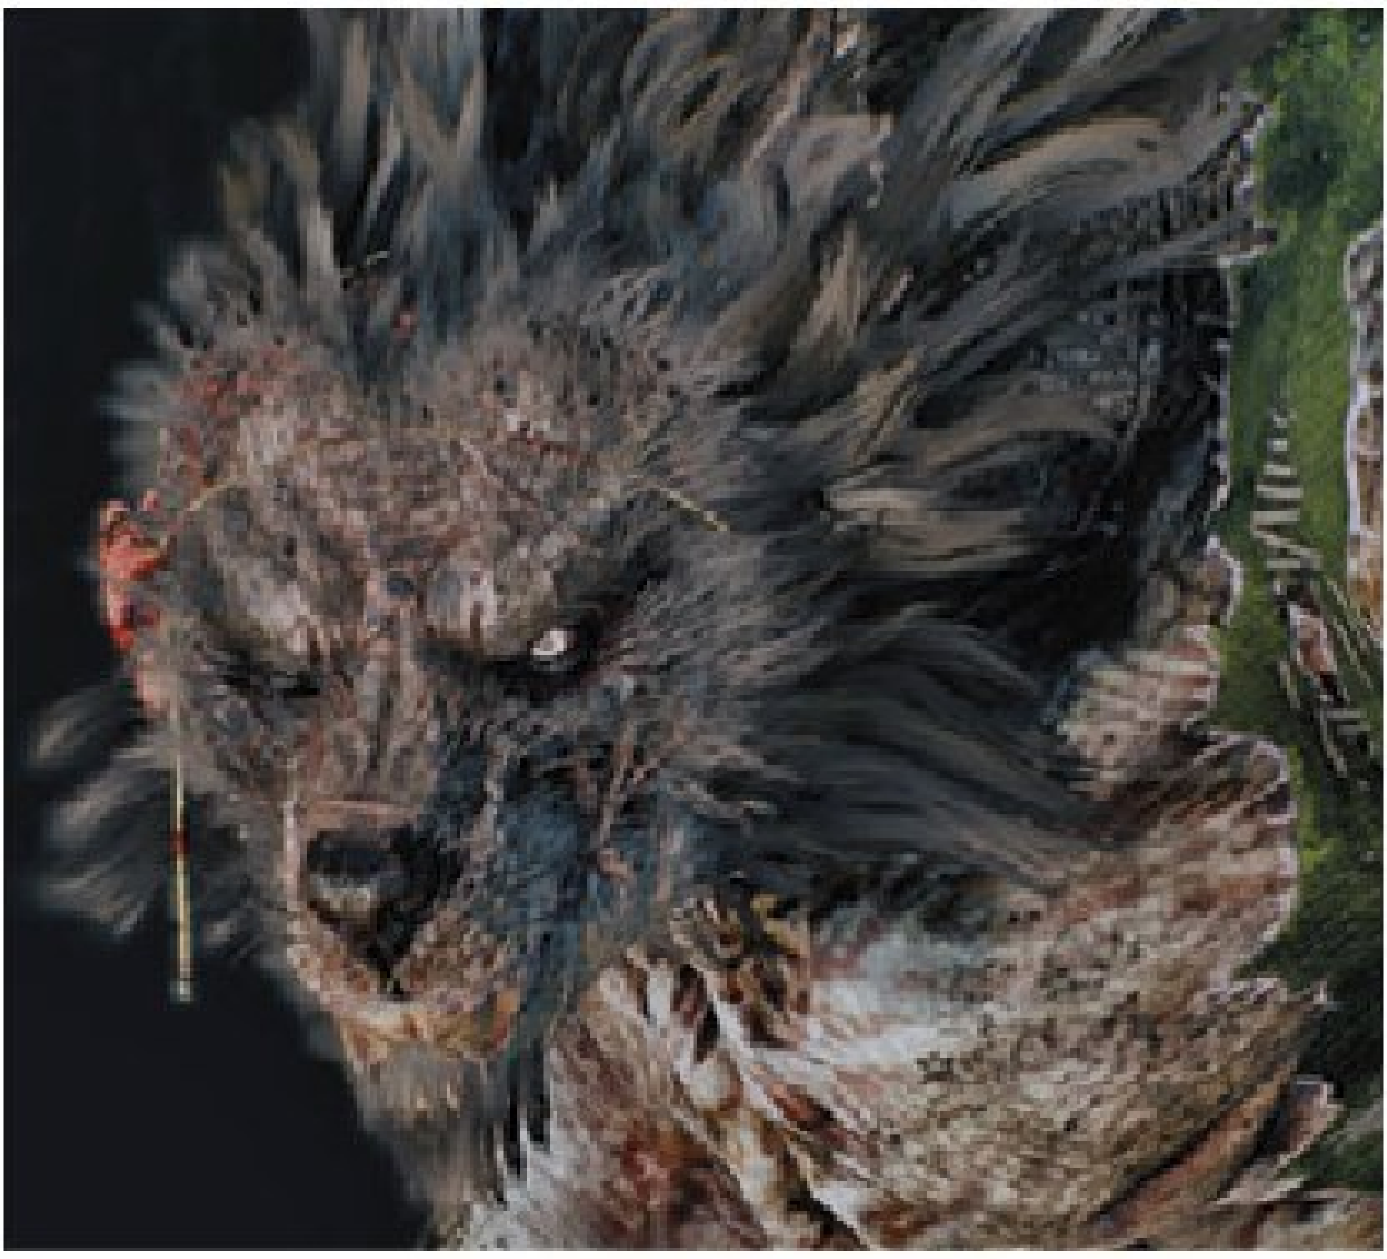


Main Quest: Missing Persons

Nameless: Craven Some Werewolf Combat

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Freya's garden and look for Craven.
- Nearest Signpost: Freya's Garden.



Morkvarg

Accompany Yennefer to Freya's Garden; a walk along the main road heading northeast (exchanging thoughts about Craven and his chances against the monster). Or, meet her at the gate if you journeyed from talking to Tordar. At the gates, you hear gnawing sounds and muttering. A huge, sinewy werewolf is devouring some meat, but it spews the contents out of its gullet and curses; an important clue for Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing. It lashes out at you through the gate, and flees toward a large oak tree deeper into the gardens. He doesn't seem to be receiving visitors. Main Quest: Nameless now begins.

MISSING PERSONS
Find Freya's garden and look for Craven.

Main Quest: Nameless

Trail of the Craven

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: NAMELESS

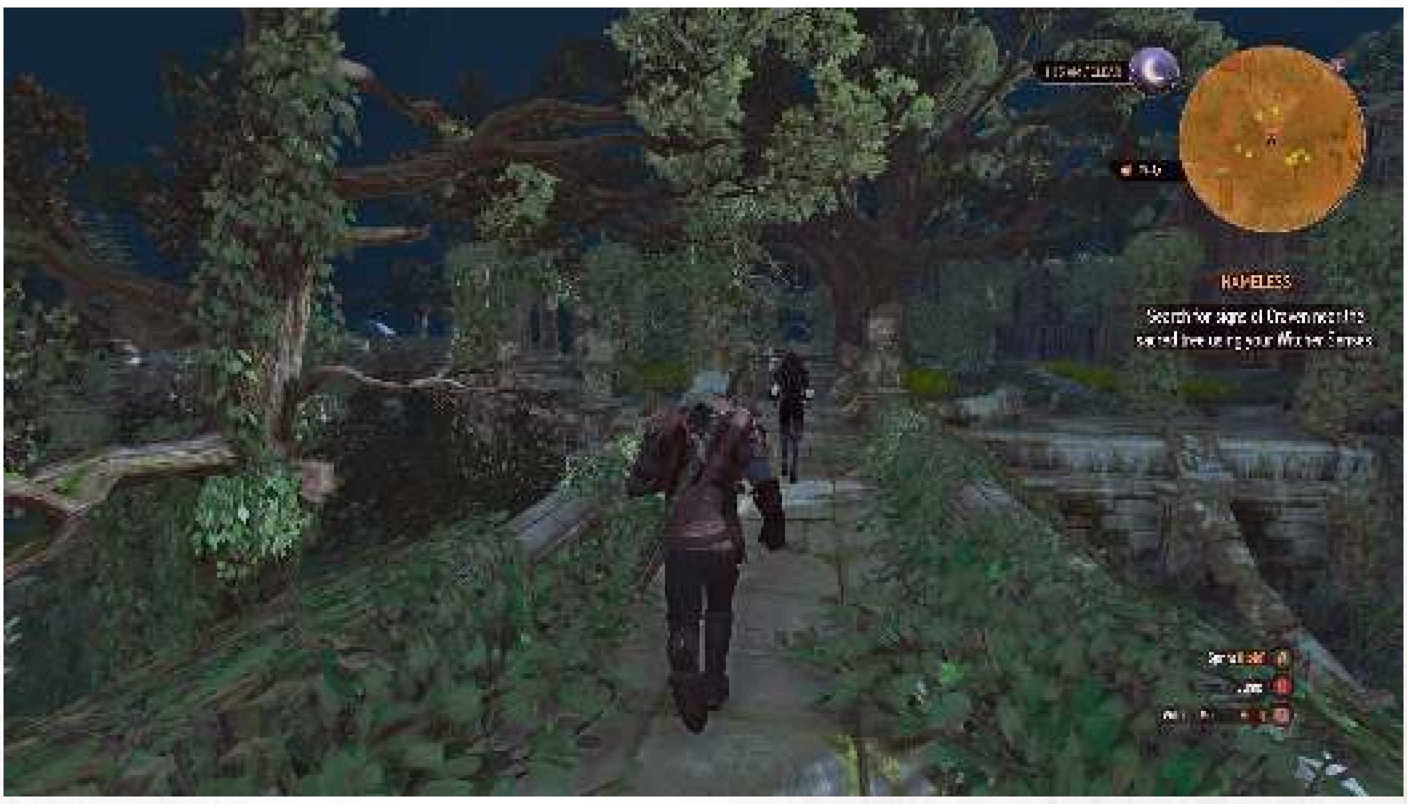
LOCATIONS : Freya's Garden

CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Priestesses of Freya, Morkvarg, Craven

ENEMIES : Wolves, Morkvarg

OBJECTIVE:

- Search for signs of Craven near the sacred tree using your Witcher Senses.



NAMELESS
Search for signs of Craven near the sacred tree using your Witcher Senses

The gate is locked, so follow Yennefer up the steps. Travel across the ivy-covered stone bridges connecting various parts of the garden together, then head northwest, into the very middle of the garden to a huge and sacred tree. You pick up the trail of Craven immediately (he cut himself to make a blood offering). Afterwards, you explain to Yennefer that hunting a werewolf is best done alone (she agrees and waits at the tree).

- Before you head off, feel free to speak to Yennefer again to learn more about the garden's history, and engage in some playful banter.

OBJECTIVE:

- Follow Craven's footsteps using your Witcher Senses.

Utilize your Witcher Senses at the tree, and begin to follow a variety of clues:

- Craven's blood by the tree, flowing profusely with a clear trail.
- A crack between the tree root in the ground. Something is below, but you can't tell what.
- A trail of blood and footprints (he trod carefully) leads you down into the lower gardens. Turn right (west) and engage a wolf in combat.
- A corpse, half-hidden in shrubbery. Morkvarg doesn't eat his victims.
- Monster tracks by the main gate; there was running and chasing. Expect two more wolves prowling the area as you continue in a clockwise search.
- A number of footprints showing where Morkvarg finally attacked. Craven's blood is here.
- More splatters of blood. Craven ran away wounded, after blocking the werewolf as he tried to escape. The trail ends at a door that is firmly closed. You need to head around it.

Secondary Quest: The Mysterious Passenger

Selling the Ugliest Man Alive

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: THE MYSTERIOUS PASSENGER

LOCATIONS : Larvik (Hindarsfjall)
CHARACTERS : Donar an Hindar

QUESTING DECISIONS

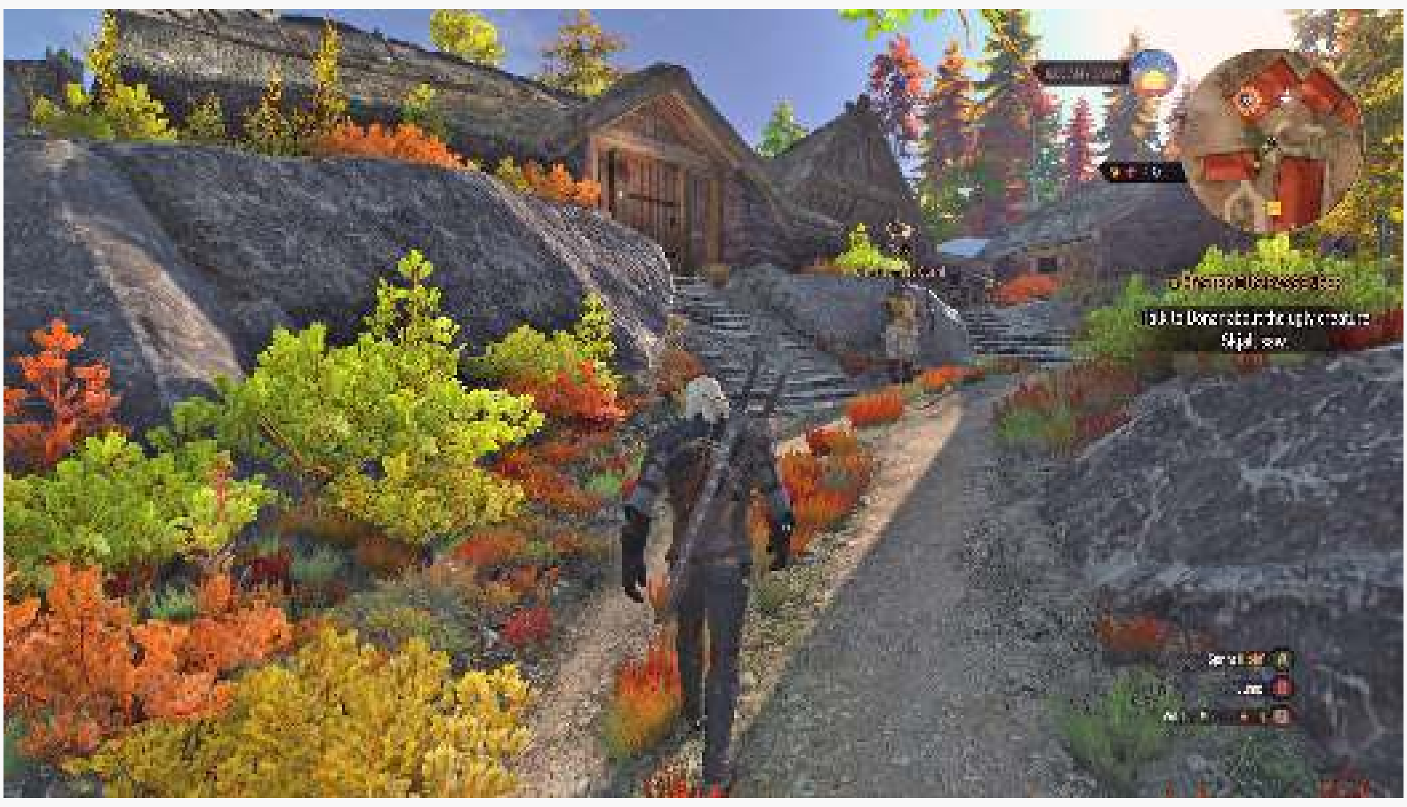
This quest becomes available automatically after the conclusion of Main Quest: Ciri's Story: The Calm Before the Storm, and you haven't seen Uma by visiting Crow's Perch yet. It is purely optional.

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Donar about the ugly creature Skjall saw.

Jarl Donar an HIndar

Head across the heaths and hilly roads to the village of Larvik on Hindarsfjall, enter through the gates and run east toward the jarl's longhouse. Speak to the Jarl, optionally asking him about his lineage, the news from Hindarsfjall, and Skjall's honor. But you're here to inquire about the ugly creature. He tells you it was sold to a merchant who asked about the sea routes to Novigrad. Not much of a clue, but worth a visit. This quest now concludes.



Main Quest: Nameless (Continued)

Skellige Search Successful

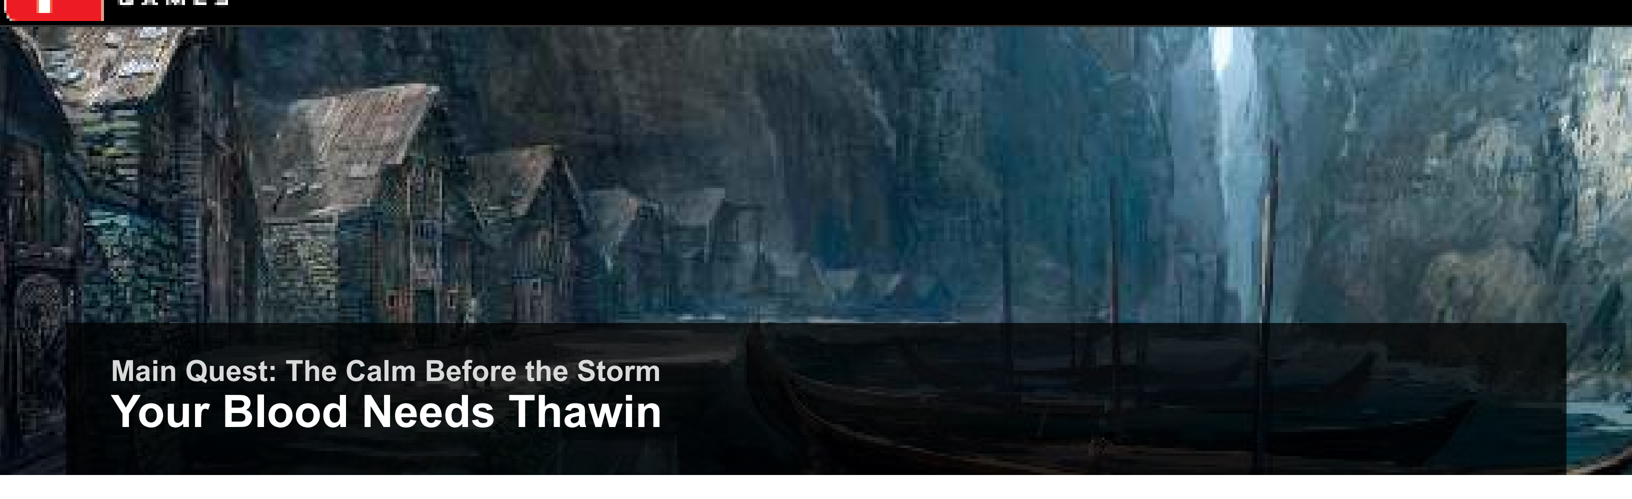
Yennefer dismisses the wretched carcass of Skjall the Craven. Her ritual has caused a great destruction in the garden, and you are visited by the Priestesses of Freya, who are both betrayed and enraged at her. Yennefer expresses little remorse. Answer the priestesses as you wish. Afterwards, you focus on the information the dead Skjall told you. Speak to Yennefer about the following:

- The fact that Ciri isn't in Skellige.
- The ugly creature is linked to Ciri somehow. It could even be Ciri herself, cursed by forces unknown.

Depending on how much of the adventure you have completed, this quest ends with the following options:

- If you have completed Main Quest: Family Matters and Main Quest: Hunting a Witch (Velen), you reckon exploring Novigrad, and starting Main Quest: Pyres of Novigrad, is in order.
- If you have completed Main Quest: The Play's the Thing (in Novigrad), you think Main Quest: The Nilfgaardian Connection is a good plan.
- If you haven't completed up to either sets of quests in Velen or Novigrad, you are at a loss at what to do.
- If you've completed Main Quest: Family Matters and Main Quest: Hunting a Witch (Velen), as well as Main Quest: The Play's the Thing (Novigrad), Main Quest: Ugly Baby automatically begins.
- In addition, Yennefer recommends you seek out Jarl Donar (who took the creature under his care) and ask him to whom exactly he sold the… gnarled lump you saw on the beach. Secondary Quest: A Mysterious Passenger automatically begins.
- Finally, as Yennefer parts company with you, she hopes you'll meet her in Larvik, as she has something to tell you. Secondary Quest: Last Wish becomes available. This quest will not start, however, if you already found Uma at Crow's Perch.

PRIMA GAMES



Main Quest: The Calm Before the Storm

Your Blood Needs Thawin

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

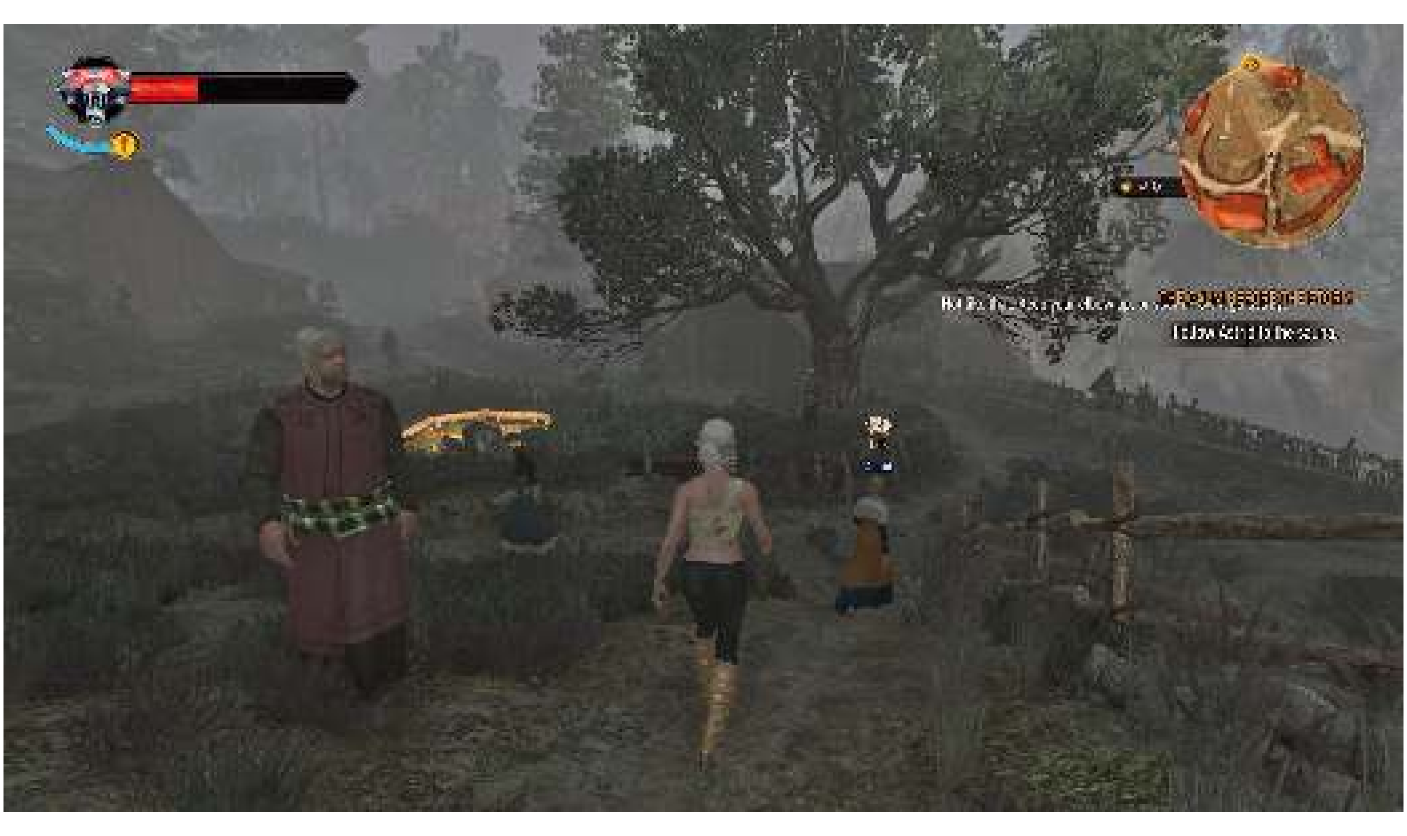
MAIN QUEST: THE CALM BEFORE THE STORM

LOCATIONS : Lofoten (Hindarsfjall), Drowned Dead Rock
CHARACTERS : Skjall, Cirilla, Astrid
ENEMIES : Hounds of the Wild Hunt, Wild Hunt Riders

OBJECTIVES:

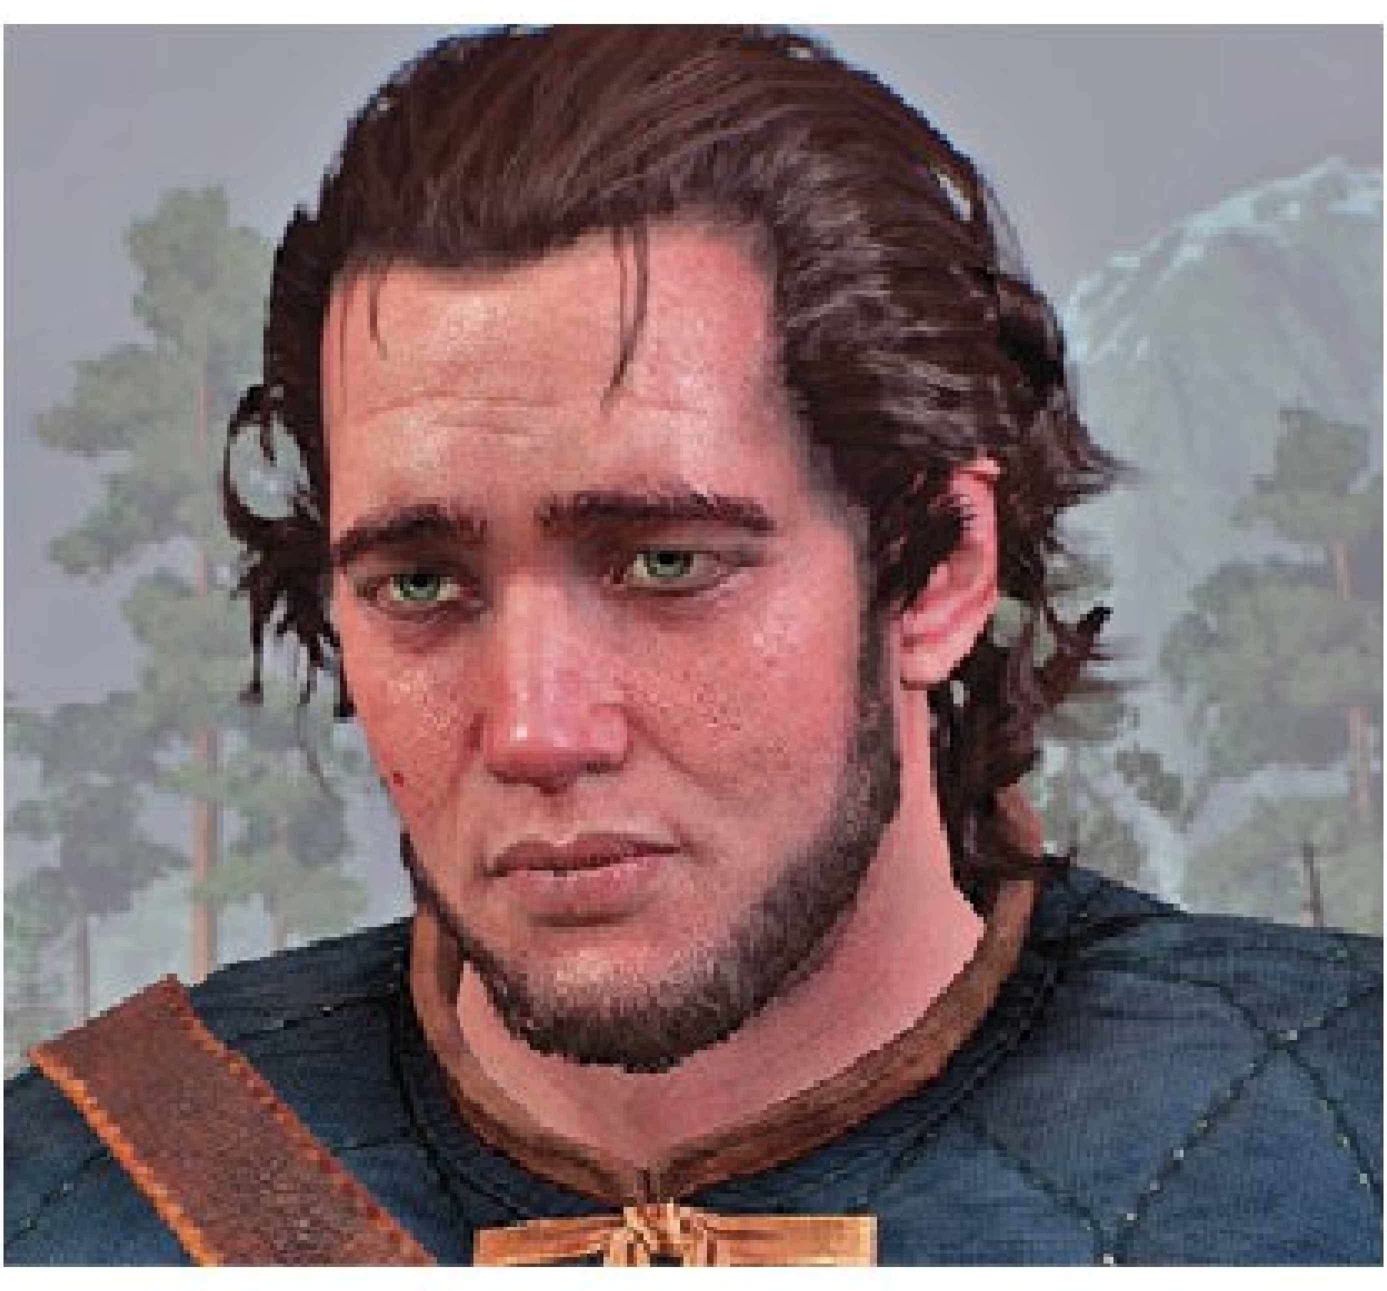
- Follow Astrid to the sauna.
- Leave your clothes in the changing room.
- Follow Astrid.

Skjall is harvesting crabs on the sea shore when he's startled by a woman falling from the skies. He drags her to Lofoten and tends to her wounds. You waken (as Ciri) with Avallach—the elf whose images you saw during your cave exploration with Keira—speaking to you. An instant later, Skjall is hovering over you, being teased by his sister Astrid, who recommends you bathe with the rest of the women to warm yourself up. You ask for help in getting to Drowned Dead rock. Skjall leaves to prepare a horse for you.

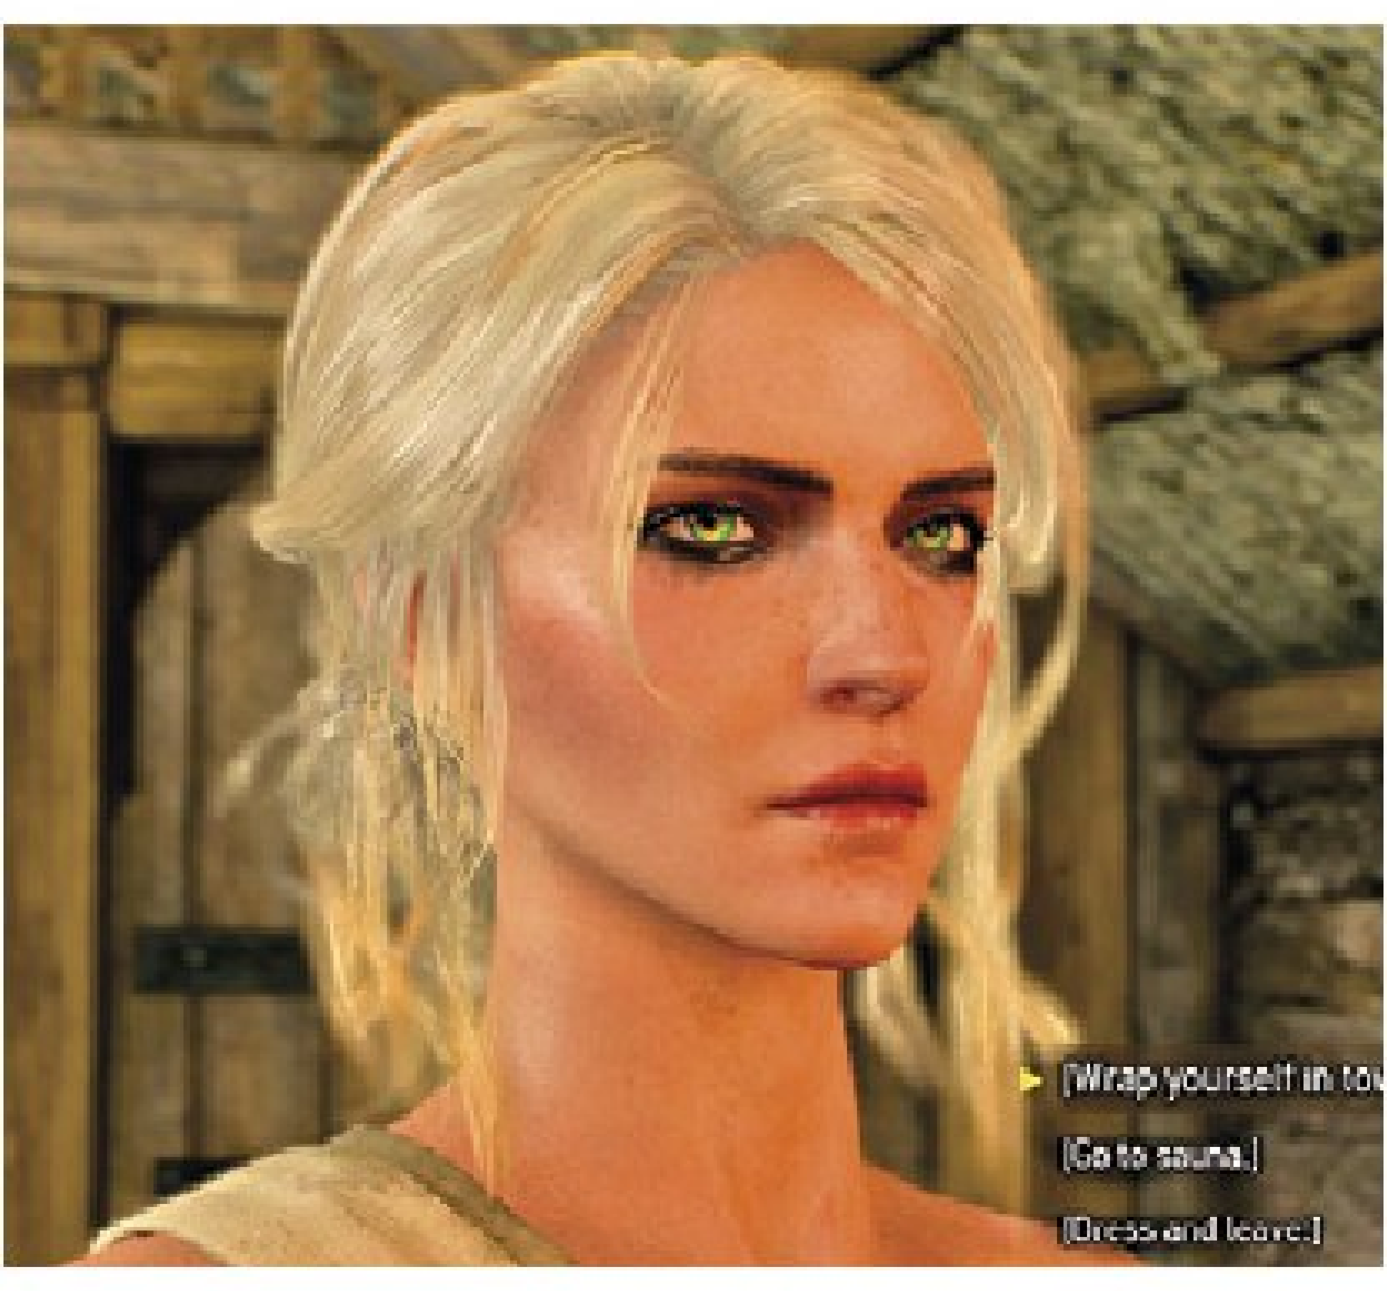


OBJECTIVES:

- (Optional) Jump into the water to cool off.
- (Optional) Drink a shot of Freya's Firewater to warm up.



Skjall

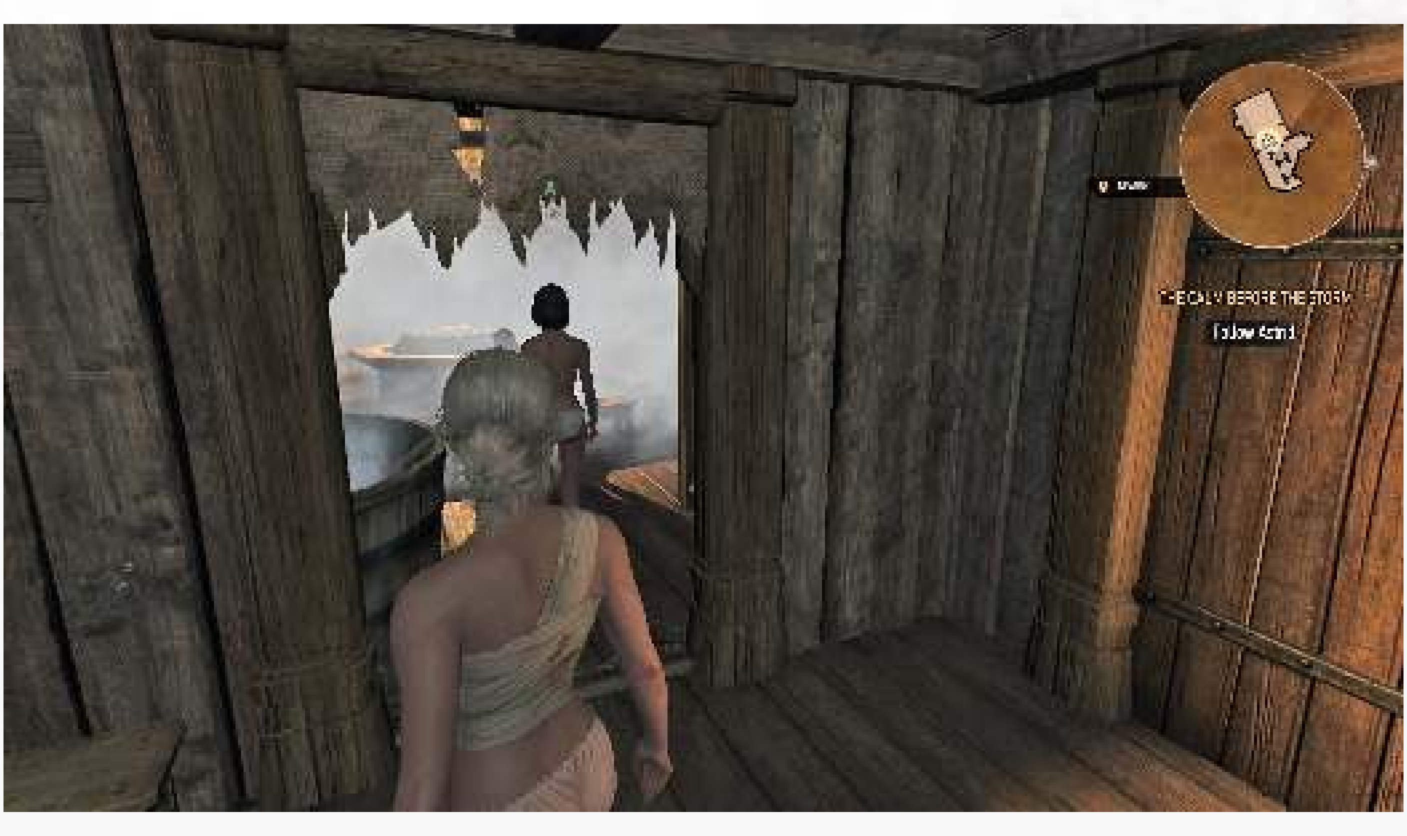


Cirilla

Follow Astrid as she talks to you about "the man in the mask from afar" (Avallach). Head out into Lofoten, around the village circle and old oak tree, and up towards the sauna where Astrid's mother is waiting. Enter a small changing room, accessing the mirror. You can:

- Wrap yourself in a towel and head into the sauna.
- Head into the sauna without a towel. The conversation turns to a rose tattoo, as you've exposed it.
- Or ignore the sauna, dress, and leave. However, you must disrobe and enter the sauna to continue this quest.

Assuming you wander into the sauna with Astrid, you meet her mum, talk about your red rose tattoo (if you're without a towel), the coals are doused, and you speak of your homeland (as much or as little as you'd like). The conversation moves on to Skjall. Astrid asks if you fancy him. Answer how you wish (obtain a blush from Astrid if you remark that you prefer women). Finally, you're able to take a quick dip in the cold water outside, head to a jug of whiskey under a tree for a shot to warm you up, or take your leave (as Skjall has readied the horses).



A TIPPLE AND A DIP

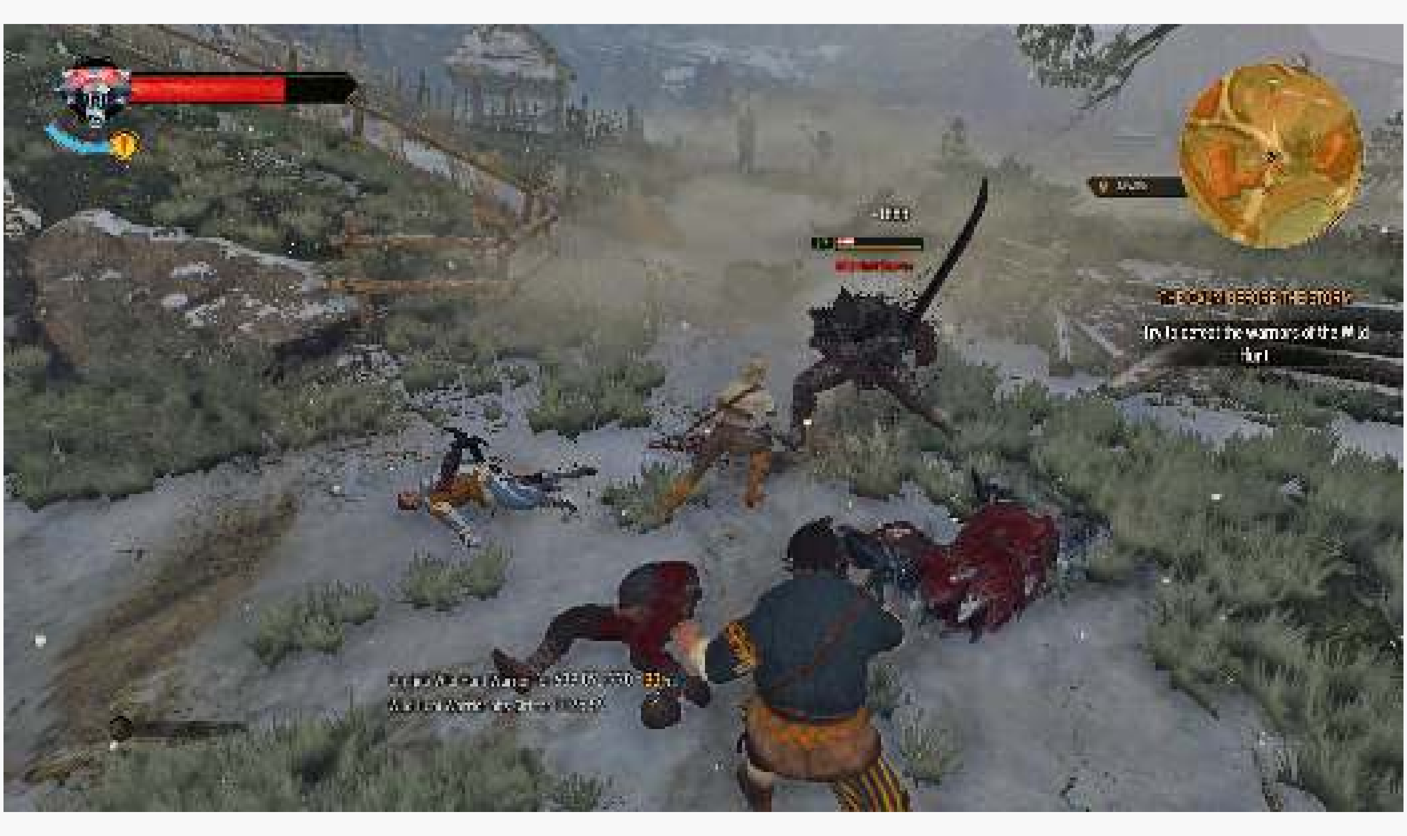
The shot of whiskey and the dip in the refreshing waters are more than relaxing; they grant you health regeneration, making the next part of this quest easier.

END: SKJALL'S SACRIFICE

OBJECTIVES:

- Join Skjall in the stable.
- Try to defeat the warriors of the Wild Hunt.

Return to the changing room, put your clothes on, and head out into the village. Optionally view the villagers of Lofoten in their daily lives (a young man and his father learning how to shoot a bow, a married couple on a hill above you, and folks remarking about a coming storm). How right they are.



THE CALM BEFORE THE STORM
Try to defeat the warriors of the Wild Hunt

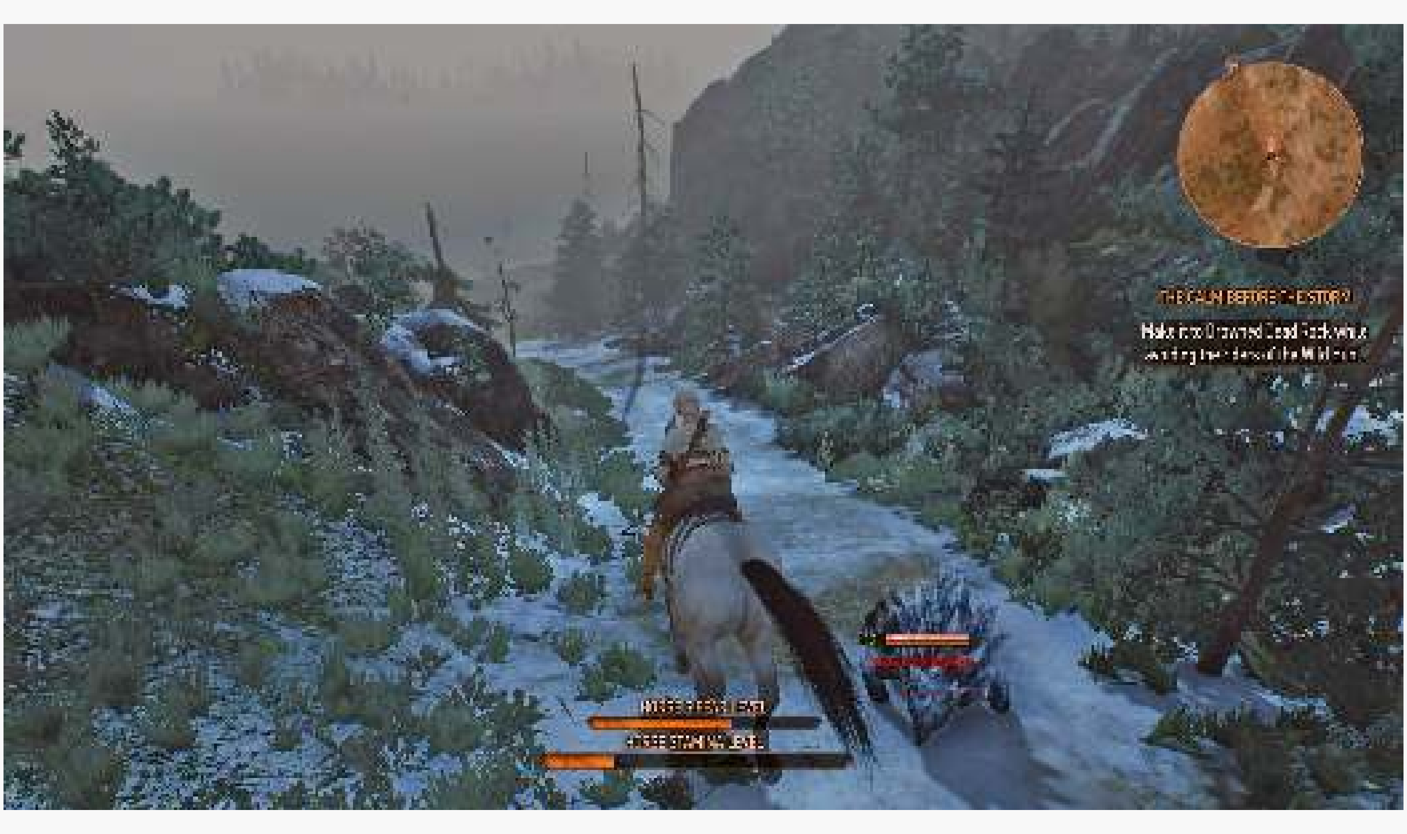
At the stables, you may optionally tease Skjall about his feelings for you. This can lead to Skjall's first attempt at a kiss. But your flirting is interrupted by shouts from outside. Dash outside, and defend yourself from hounds of the Wild Hunt, as well as Wild Hunt Riders who are razing the settlement! You must kill between three and four of these foes, now you have cured your weakened state in the sauna. Battle until Skjall shouts, then return to the stables. Skjall vows to show you the way to Drowned Dead Rock. You can:

- Thank him.
- Or ask about his family. This leads to slight conversation changes when Geralt and Ciri meet in Act III: Main Quest: Child of the Elder Blood.

OBJECTIVE:

- Make it to Drowned Dead Rock while avoiding the riders of the Wild Hunt.

Set off at a canter heading roughly south, following Skjall along the road out of Lofoten. Along the Cliffside road there are intermittent infractions with hounds. Avoid them to stop your horse from panicking, and gallop as much as possible. Expect a few hounds to attempt to thwart you.



DON'T RIDE A HOARSE HORSE

Replenish your horse's stamina when no foes are close to you on your minimap.

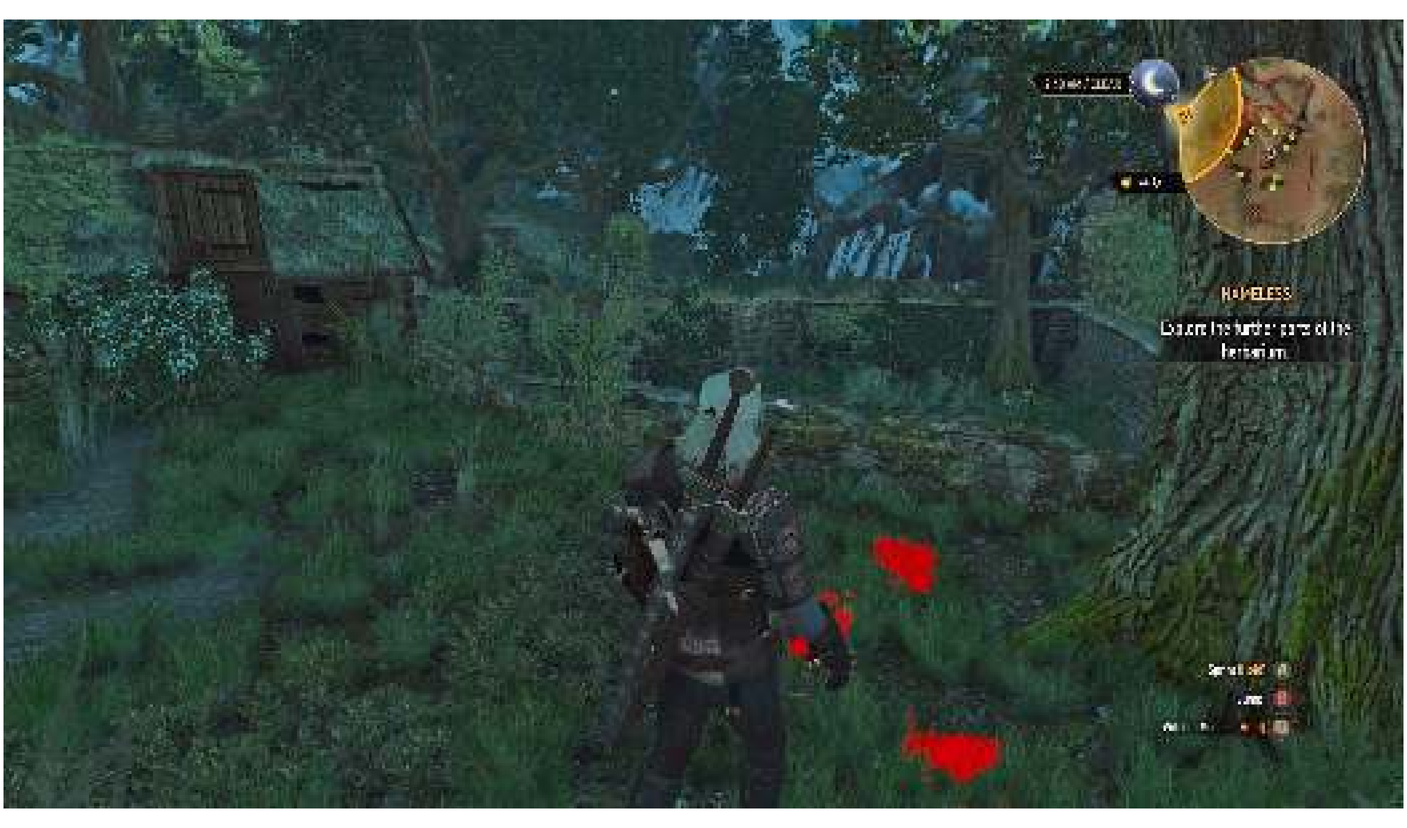
You race to a boat along the coast, and are taken aboard by Avallach, cast adrift into the waters. Skjall races to help, but is cut down by a Wild Hunt rider. The next morning he awakens to see Avallach's boat wrecked on the beach. A grotesque homunculus looks over the broken boat. Main Quest: The Calm Before the Storm concludes.

Main Quest: Nameless

Overcoming an Undying Lycanthrope

OBJECTIVE:

- Explore the further parts of the herbarium.

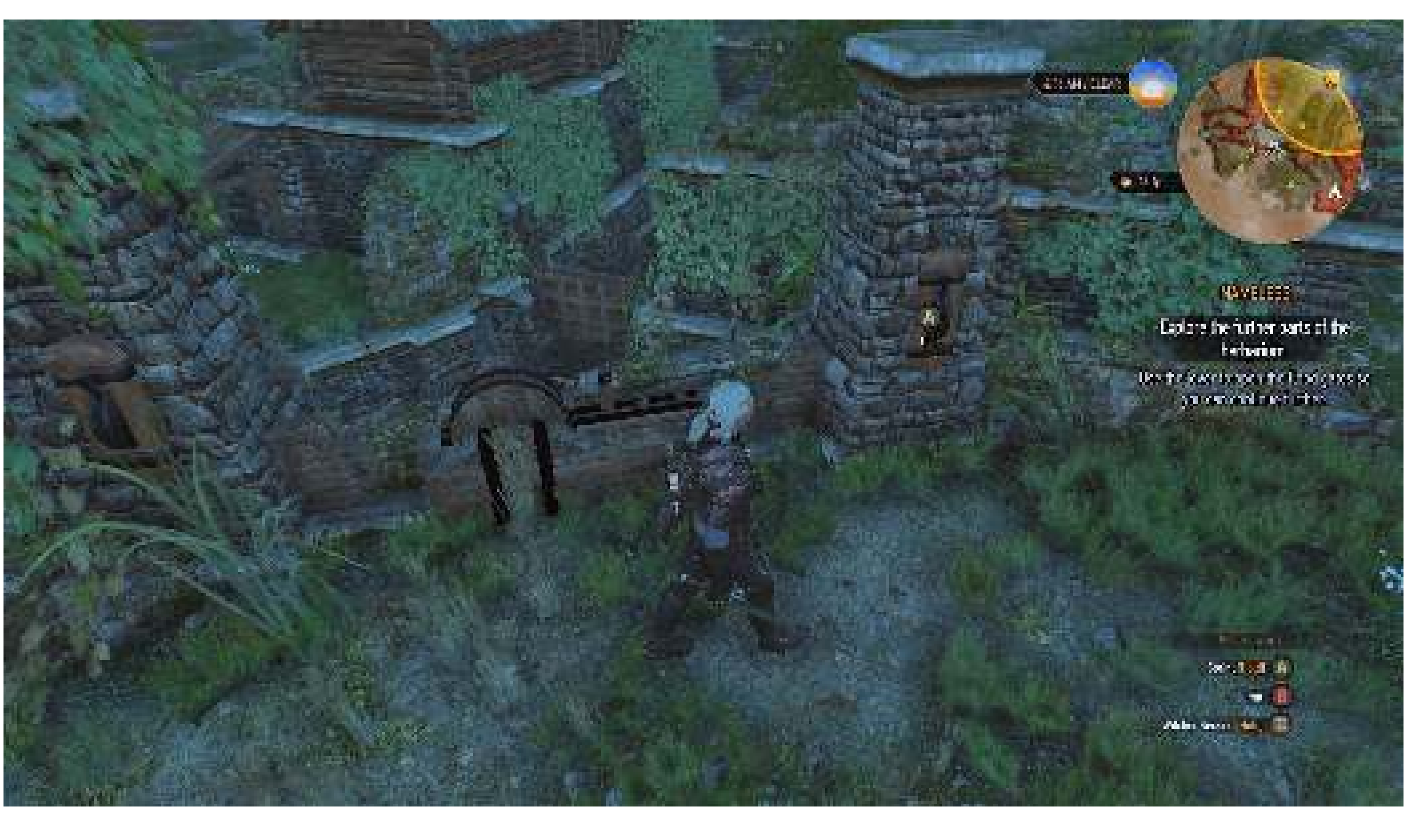


Climb the wall to the right and explore the structures further into the gardens, but make a mental note that your path eventually leads you to the arched door to the right of the wooden wall. To reach there, sprint past Yennefer at the sacred tree, drop down heading northeast, and travel up some stone steps and into an overgrown stepped courtyard where there's a wolf to cut down. Move to the edge of the raised garden and look down onto a lean-to and small canal. Drop down from the lean-to and check the following with your Witcher Senses:

- There are many prints both old and new. Morkvarg's lair is close.

OBJECTIVE:

- Use the lever to open the flood gates so you can continue further.



Climb the stone ladder embedded into the wall, and clamber onto the higher ground overlooking a sluice gate and two levers. There is a ruined bridge in this area with a locked gate on the other side. You can't reach that to continue, so inspect this area closely. Utilizing both levers should allow you to open the flood gates. Save your progress, and start yanking those levers!

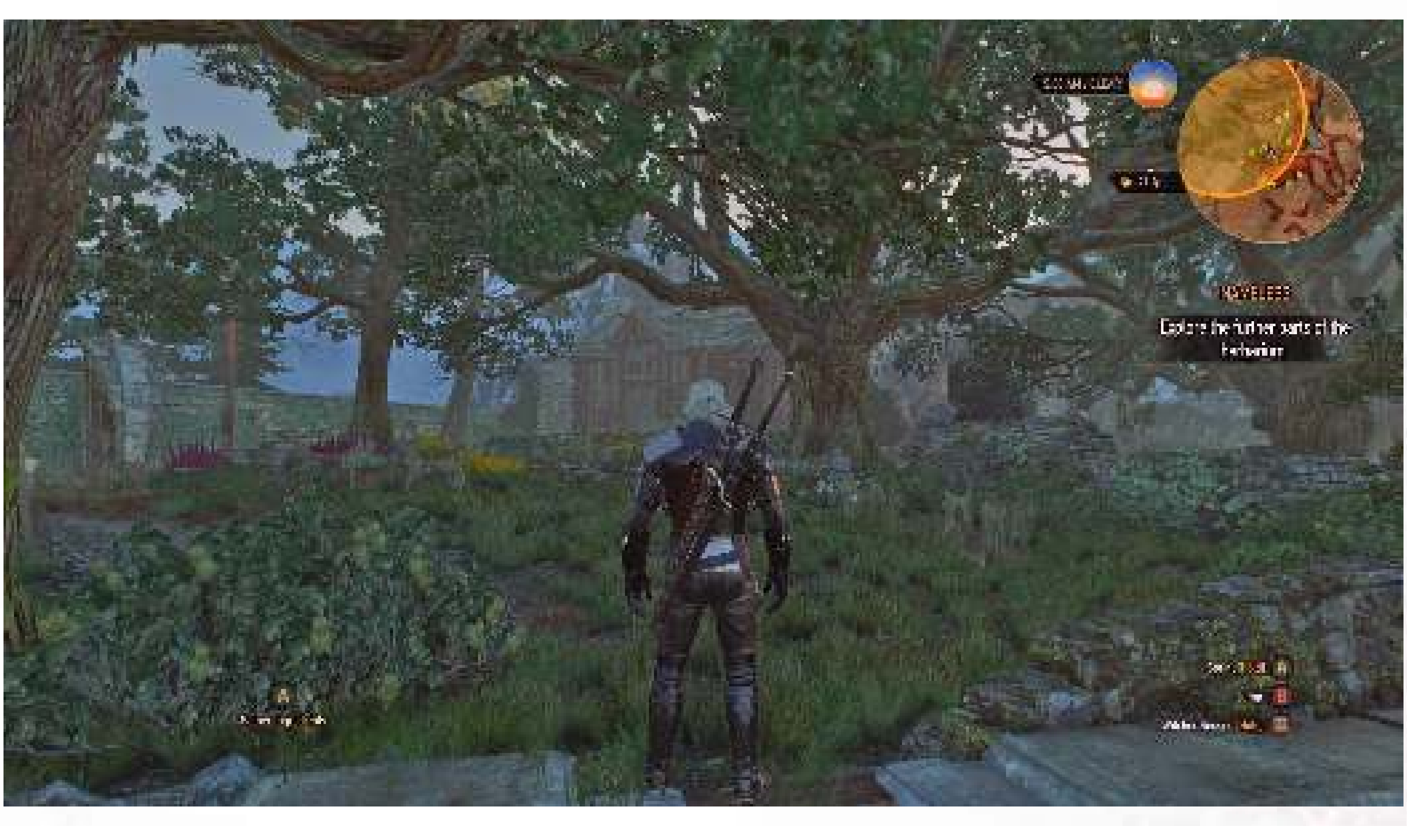
- The left lever changes the gears of the mechanism to lift up one of the three sluice gates. You can see which gate is able to be lifted by watching the three wooden mechanism dowels that move up and down between the two levers. Simply use the left lever until the sluice gate you want is ready to be moved.
- The right lever moves the actual sluice gate you have chosen. There are three gates.
- The left gate opens a watery exit outside, and out of Freya's Garden, if you wish to leave easily.
- The middle gate allows access to the further part of the gardens, where both a well and a secondary structure are accessible; to further this quest.
- The right gate is under the waterfall, leading to an underwater cave where a key can be found. However, this is only useful during Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing.

Once the middle sluice gate is open, you can continue.

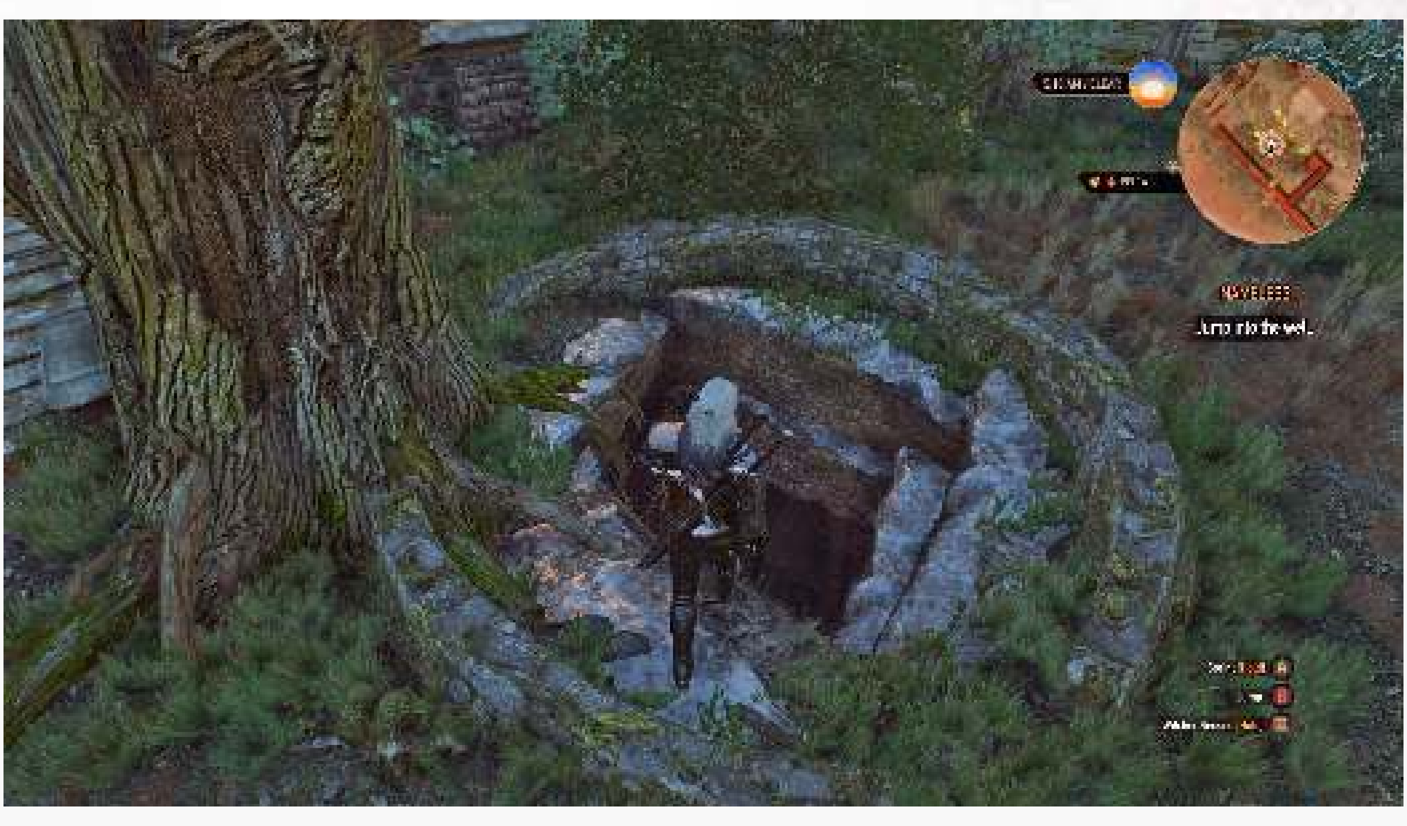
SLAYING THE ULFHEDINN (WEREWOLF)

If you're interested in slaying the werewolf, its cave is just north of the two sluice levers. Refer to Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing for advice.

Dive into the canal, swimming through the open sluice gate, and climb the stone steps to the right, and up onto the higher garden ground you couldn't access from the broken stone bridge earlier. Turn northwards and run up the stepped garden to a large hall structure. Use your Witcher Sense to uncover claw marks on the splintered door. Morkvarg smelled something beyond here.

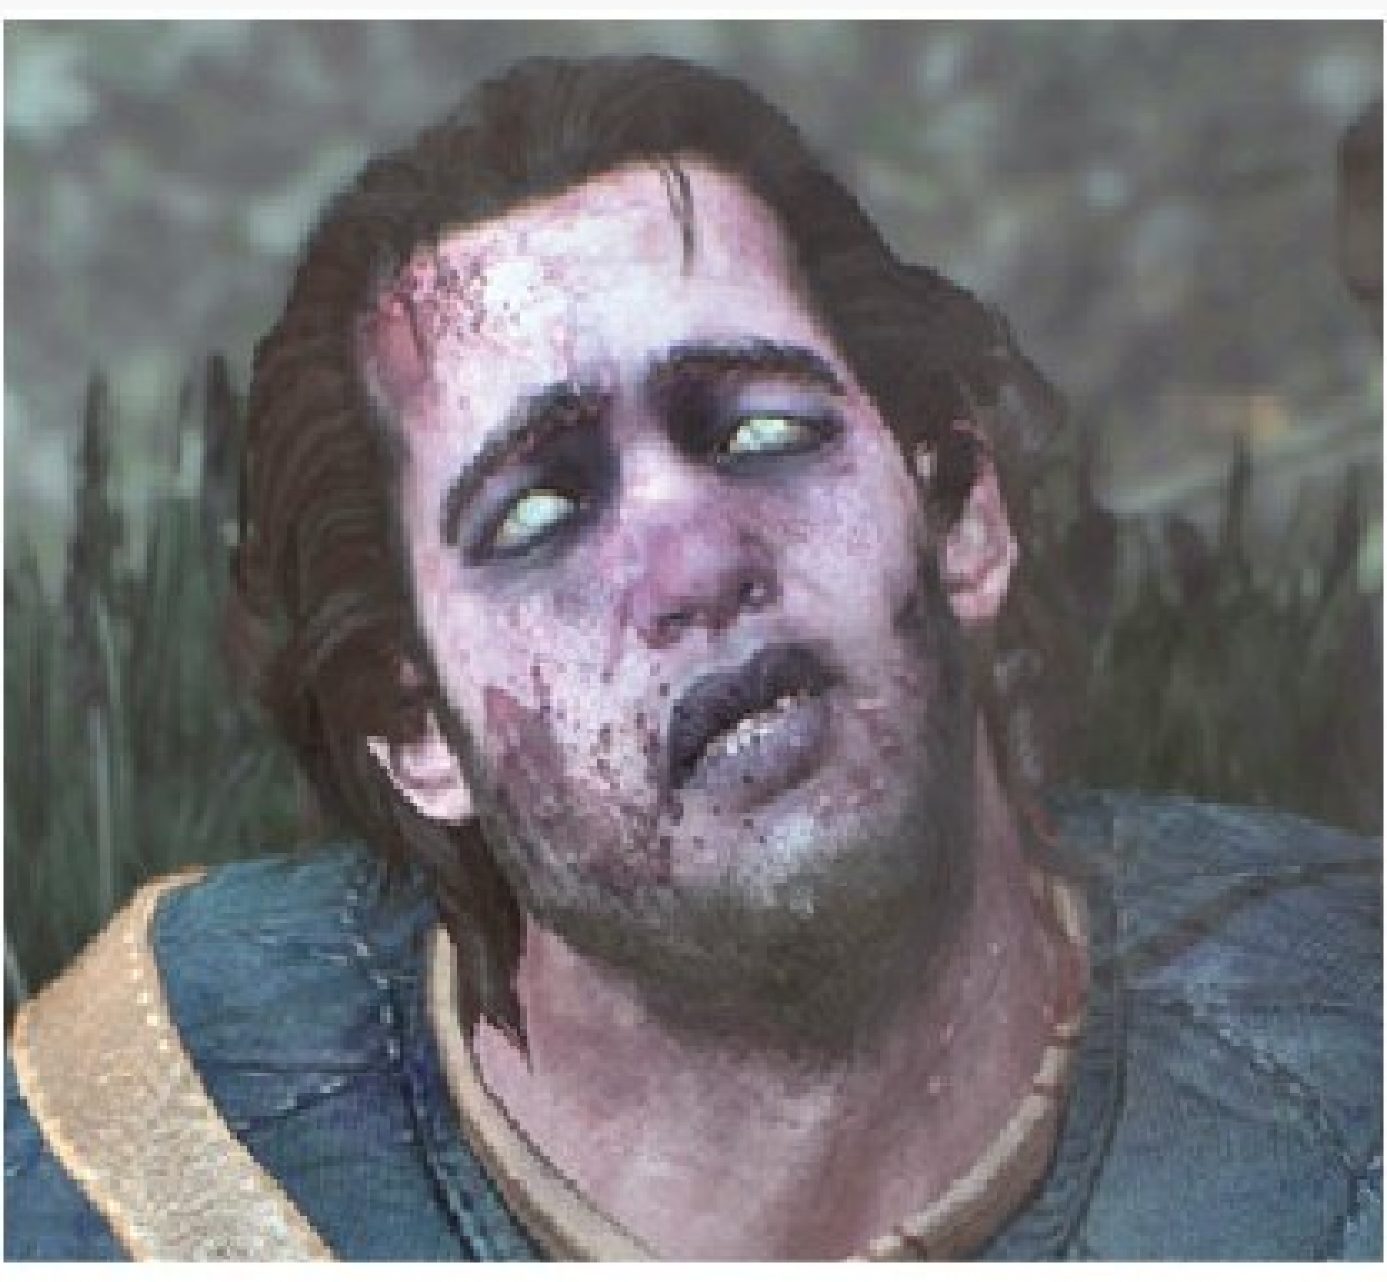


Inside the hall is a crudely constructed symbol of Freya on the ground, where the werewolf was lured. This structure isn't relevant to Main Quest: Nameless, so only use your Witcher Senses to inspect it if you're solving Secondary Quest: In Wolf's Clothing.



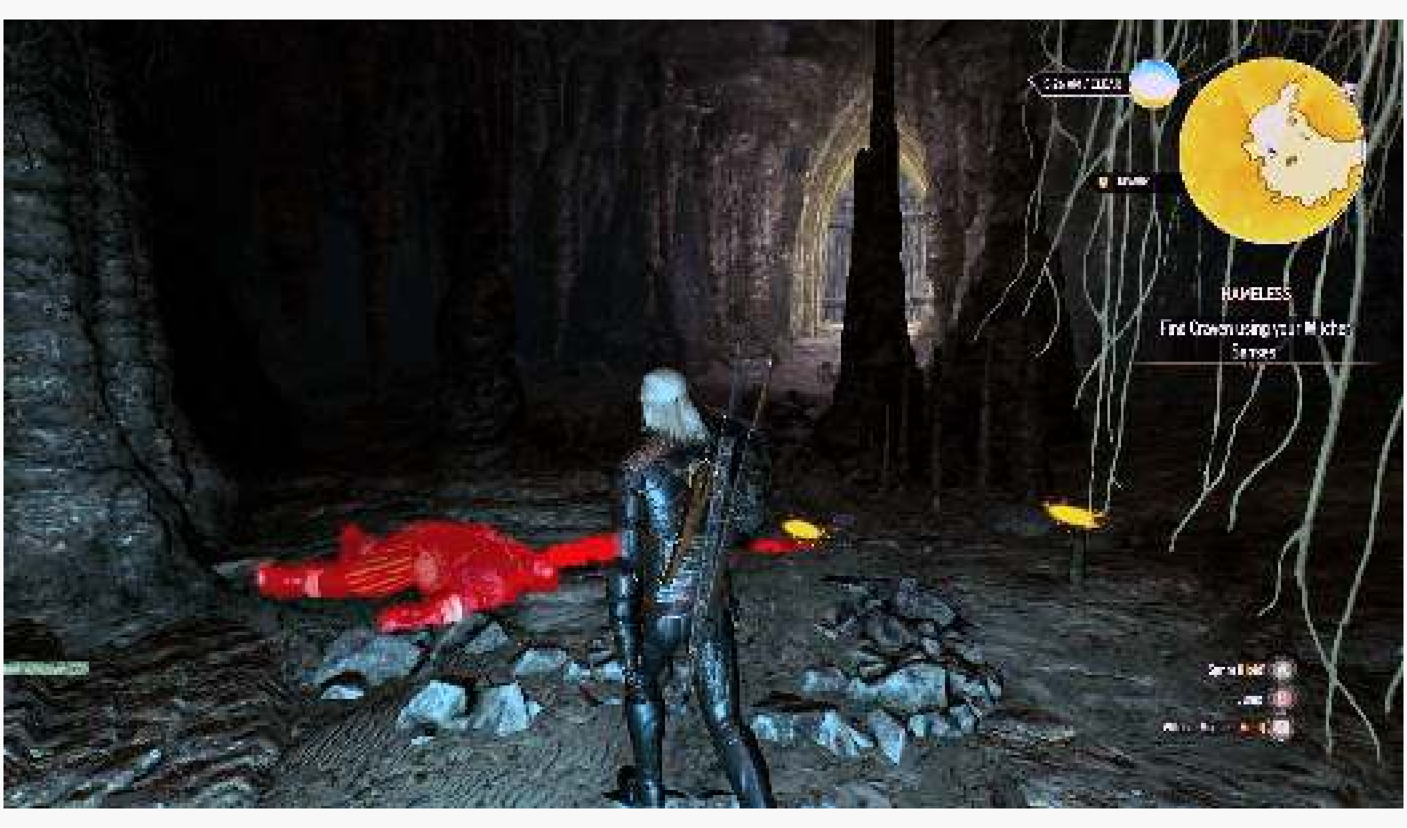
Return to the exterior gardens, and head down toward a well by a tree, on the other side of the door you couldn't navigate through earlier. There are tracks here indicating Craven entered this well. Drop down yourself, and maneuver through the tunnels until you reach a small burrow, and immediately inspect the corpse lying here. You've found Craven, or at least, what's left of him. There is a key that opens the archway exit back into the gardens, too.

ITEM: Quest Item: Key to the Burrow



Skjall (Craven) (Corpse form)

After an unpleasant task hauling of the corpse up to the sacred tree, Yennefer inspects the corpse. Although putrefaction has set in, Craven's vocal chords are intact. After a spot of necromancy, the corpse wakens and begins to tell its tale. Main Quest: Nameless halts, and Main Quest: The Calm Before the Storm begins.



Secondary Quest: The Last Wish

Dangerous Sometimes. Malicious All the Time

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: THE LAST WISH

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Nameless
LOCATIONS : Freya's Garden (Hindarsfjall), Larvik, Ingdalen Isle, Northern Mountains (Ard Skellig)
CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Amos var Ypsis
ENEMIES : Sirens, Drowners, Djinn

OBJECTIVES:

- Go to Larvik's harbor with Yennefer, or Meet Yennefer in Larvik.
- Talk to Yennefer.
- Go to Larvik's harbor with Yennefer.
- Get on the boat with Yennefer.
- Nearest Signpost: Larvik.

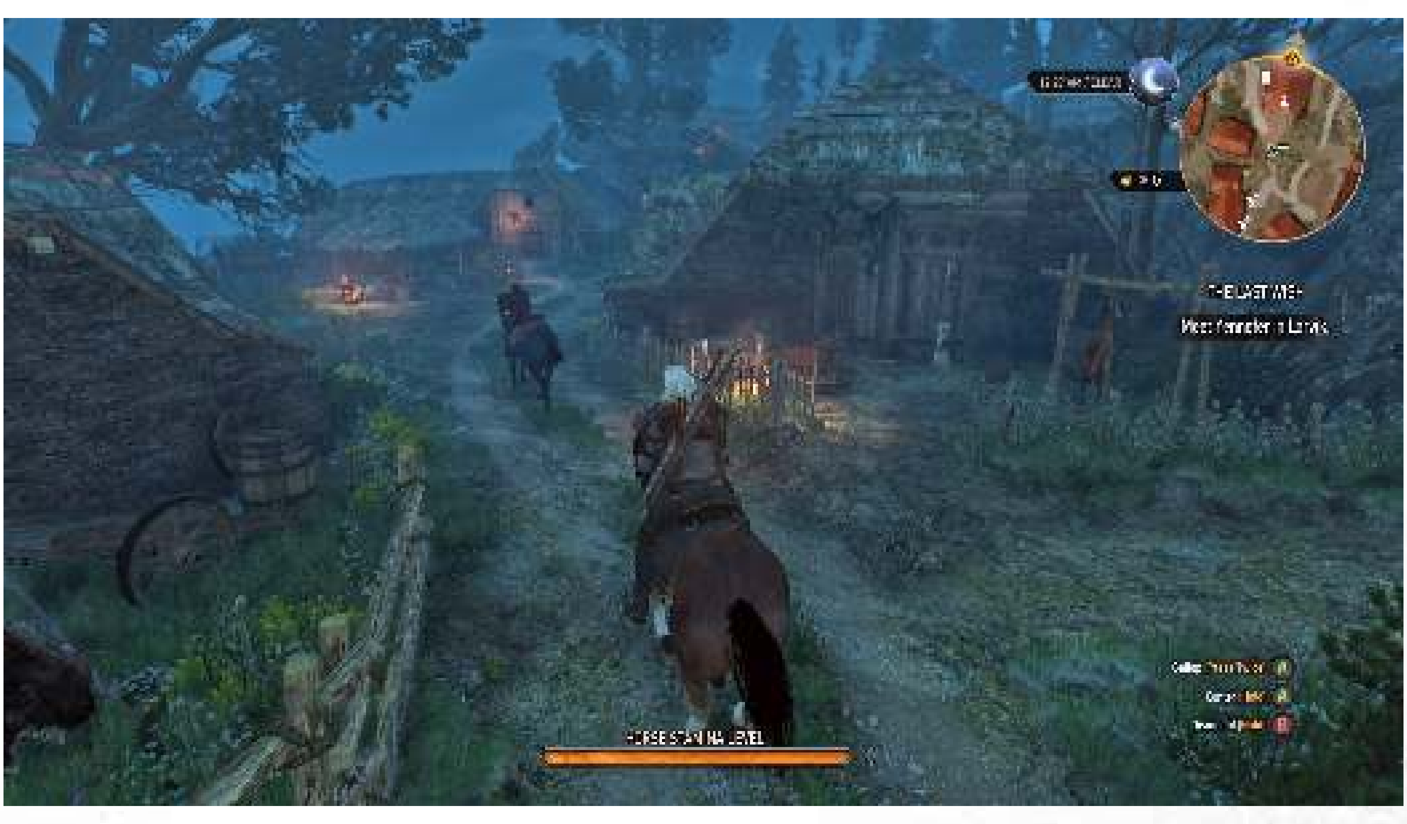
QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest begins at the conclusion of Main Quest: Nameless.

Yennefer of Vengerberg

After finding the Craven in the well of Freya's Garden, and speaking about locating (and finding) Ciri, Yennefer requests you meet her in Larvik, at the warrior's hall. She has something important to tell you. You can accompany her to Larvik immediately (on horseback), or agree to meet her there later (so you can prepare or finish other quests first).

Enter the warrior's hall, where Yennefer is gaining the upper hand on some unruly yokels. Speak to her, and she mentions a man named Amos var Ypsis, a specialist on djinns. She tells the story of his disappearance. Answer how you wish. She wishes to know what became of him, but she's particularly interested in his djinn. Feel free to ask more about these mystical creatures, before agreeing to help.



The harbor is a short jog from the warrior's hall, down the hill to where her vessel is moored. Speak to her again. She tells you of an incantation on her boat, allowing you to see if there are any wrecks on the seafloor. Yennefer takes the helm. You sit at the bow of the boat.

YEARNING FOR YENN

If you decide not to help, Yenn leaves on her own, and she cannot be considered a romance option from this point.

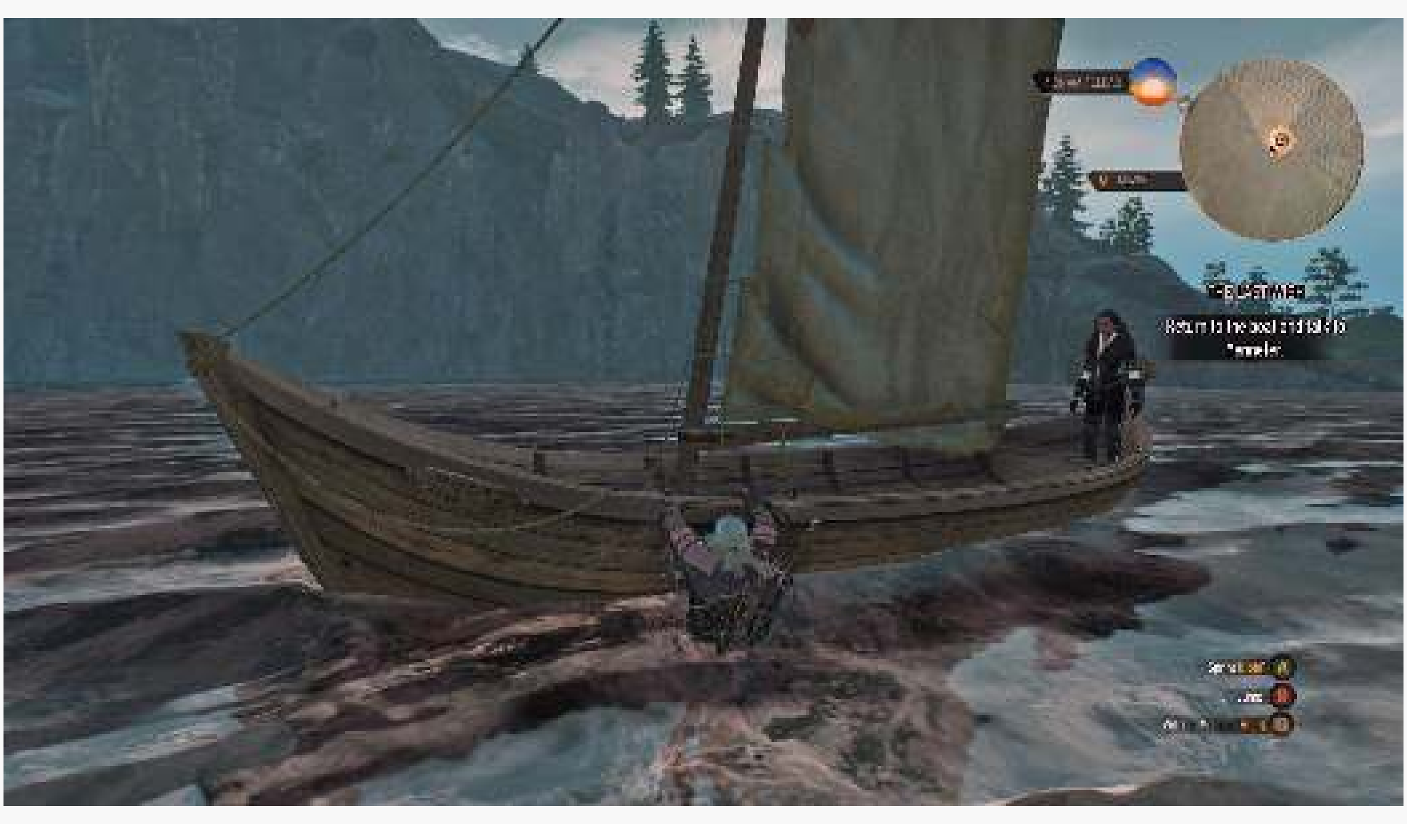
OBJECTIVES:

- Help Yennefer find the djinn (3).
- Search the bottom of the bay using your Witcher Senses (3).
- Return to the boat (3).

You set sail into the ocean waters, talking of past adventurers. Eventually you reach an area that Yennefer wishes to search. She casts a spell to slow your heart, allowing you more breathing room. Leap into the frigid waters, and dive directly below the boat. If any sirens are in the vicinity, shoot them with your crossbow or magic before you go.

Below are the remains of a longship, and a few swimming drowners. Avoid them as you find the entrance to an underwater cavern, or use your crossbow and remove them as a threat, and swim inside (roughly east). Use your Witcher Senses on the small half-buried vessel—it sports a Clan Drummond figurehead. This isn't the correct boat, so swim back to the surface.

Yennefer sails roughly northwest, crossing the ocean toward a pair of small, odd islands of thin fur trees and rocks. Before you reach there, watch for the white whale if you wish. She then stops and finds another wreck. Dive down and discover a variety of chests and barrels. By the rocks and ship's deck, you find a war horn bearing the Clan Heymaey symbols. Check for further chests, and gather all the war booty you can from them. There's also a Skelliger's buckler from ages past. But this isn't Yennefer's boat. Return to the surface.



SUNKEN TREASURE

Make sure you attempt a lengthy sweep and open any chests and crates; there are a variety of items to gather as you search each wreck.

Yennefer continues to travel towards the two islands that make up Ingdalen Isle. As she passes between the rocks, she senses something odd. Dive down under her boat, and you're astonished to discover a huge crater! However, when Yennefer uses your eyes to see this unnatural seafloor, she informs you this anomaly is the effect of teleportation. Now swim toward a collection of chests and crates (which can be looted), before finding the remains of a boat. Near here is a basket cut exactly in half. Close to the boat is something more. A broken seal! Yennefer orders you to the surface.

OBJECTIVES:

- Ask Crach an Craite about Hjalmar.
- Nearest Signpost: Bridge to Kaer Trolde.

Locate Crach on the exterior battlement crenelations overlooking the gorge. Ask him about Hjalmar, and his venture. He reckons you should ask some Clan Torrdaroch survivors down in the New Port Inn about Undvik and the giant that must be slain there.

OBJECTIVE:

- Ask around at the New Port Inn about Undvik and the ice giant.

Tante the Navigator

Axel the Survivor

Leave the Kaer Trolde Keep, and descend to the bottom of the mountain, all the way to the harbor, before working back (north) toward the New Port Inn where Yennefer is staying. Enter the main tavern, where rowdy drinking and merriment abounds. Hjalmar recruited his crew here, so there are three fellows to speak with:

- The Innkeeper, who recalls how Hjalmar cajoled his crew into undertaking a mission to cut off "that bloody giant's head." They wanted to take back the forge, where the best blades on the islands are crafted. He also points out the other two fellows to talk to.

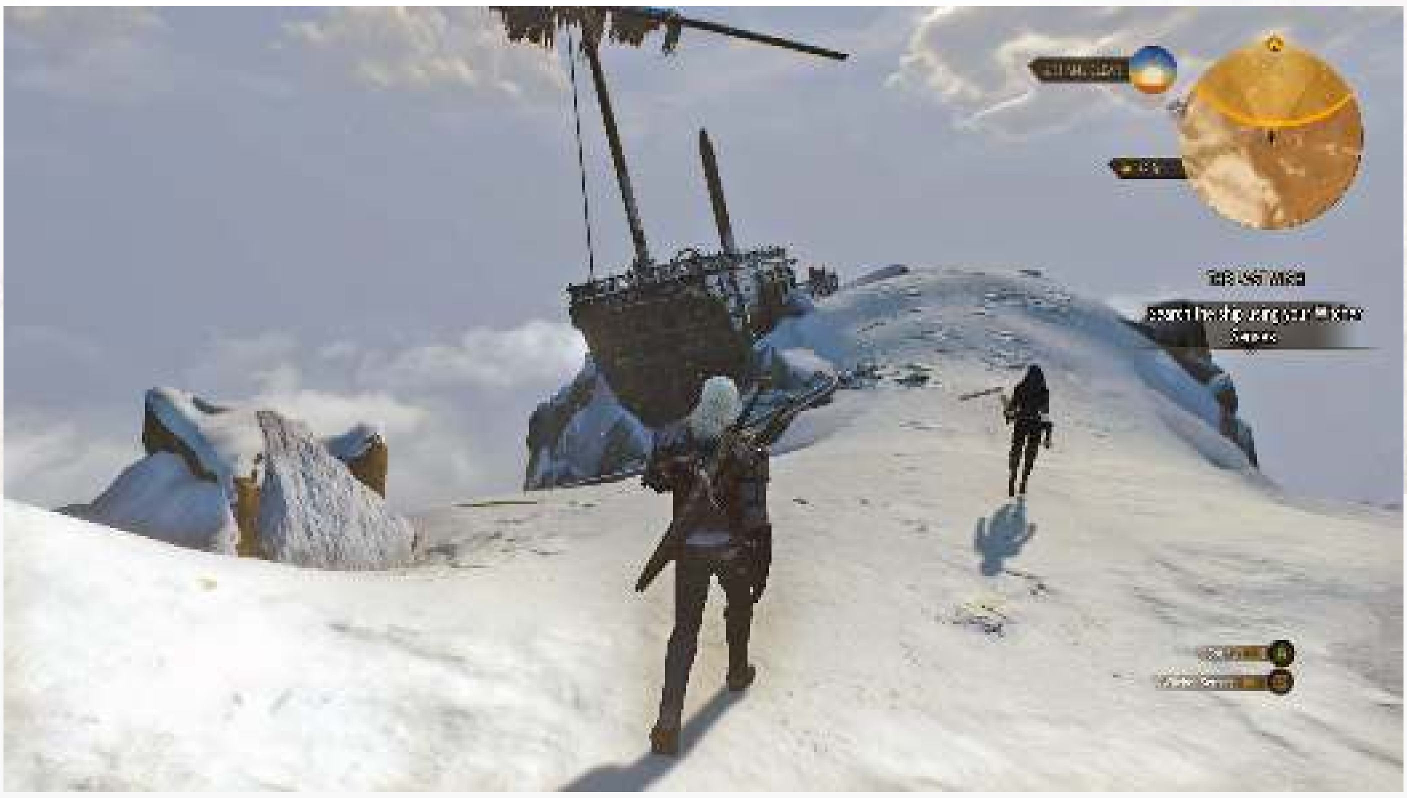
Secondary Quest: The Last Wish

Too Much Studying Can Kill You

OBJECTIVES:

- Return to the boat and talk to Yennefer.
- Search the ship using your Witcher Senses.
- Follow Yennefer to the top deck.

After examining the broken seal, Yennefer opens a portal and teleports you both to within a dozen yards of the other half of the seal. You appear atop a snow-covered mountain in Ard Skellig. Before continuing, quiz Yennefer regarding exactly why she wants a djinn. Choose either conversation. The topic soon changes to the link you and Yennefer share. She reminds you of the time you asked a djinn to bind you both together. Yennefer wants to ask this one to take that wish back.



Agree or don't. Yennefer wants to know if there's any magic left between you. Take that comment as you wish. You then head towards a ship, left atop the mountains of northern Ard Skellig, northwest of Yustianna's Grotto. Approach the wrecked vessel, looting the captain's cabin of treasure if you wish. Then continue down into the hull for more chests. The place looks like a laboratory. Gather some rare books, then inspect the following:

- A trail of blood from a pair of shoes. They lead to a bookcase. Interact with it, and you lift it up, revealing the crushed and bloodied remains of Amos. An unfortunate accident? Tell her you must search the body. You produce the other half of the seal. Head back up on the top deck.

ITEM: Quest Item: Broken Seal (2 of 2)

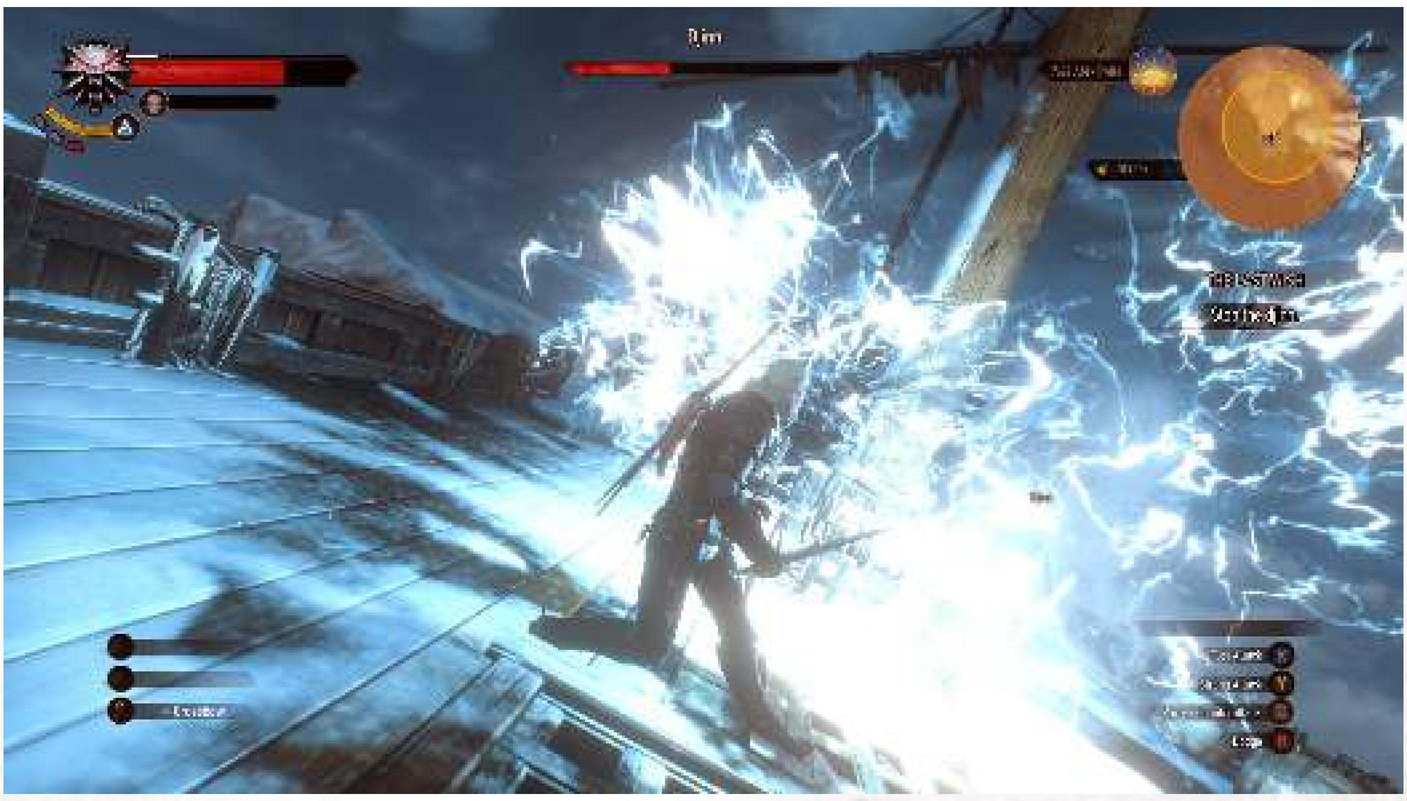
Secondary Quest: The Last Wish

The Spirits of Skellige Favor You

OBJECTIVE:

- Stop the djinn.

Up at the ship's wheel, Yennefer aims to conjure and tame the djinn. It appears, but is too powerful to control! Leap down to the deck and attack the djinn, rolling in and using the central mast to avoid its electrical discharges. Whittle its health down until it weakens.



VULNERABILITIES: WIN AGAINST THE DJINN

When you've read up on its weakness, using this guide's Bestiary, this battle becomes a little less fraught. The djinn is vulnerable against the following:

Dimeritium Bomb, Elemental Oil

Yennefer captures the djinn, and bargains with it to remove the magic coupling you both in return for its freedom. It obliges. Afterwards, you both sit, and contemplate your triumph. You can:

- Comment using language that is friendly and pleasant.
- Answer using words that are more standoffish.

Yennfer tells you she was expecting to feel different. But nothing has changed. Answer:

- Agree, telling her you love her. You embrace and kiss on the boat. Just like your first. Then you watch the mountains. Afterwards, you return to Yennefer's bedroom in Kaer Trolde.
- Disagree, telling her you don't want to be with her any more. Yennefer is shocked, and you agree to a more formal friendship instead of romance.

Afterwards, it is agreed that Ciri should be found, but you aren't happy at Yennefer's insistence that the emperor should receive a report. Agree or disagree with her request—it is decided either way. If you have completed your searching of Velen and Novigrad, you decide Uma is important, and you must now head to see the Baron, collect Uma, and ride for Kaer Morhen. Your paths will intertwine again, as this quest concludes.

Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

Short on Nails and Twine

OBJECTIVES:

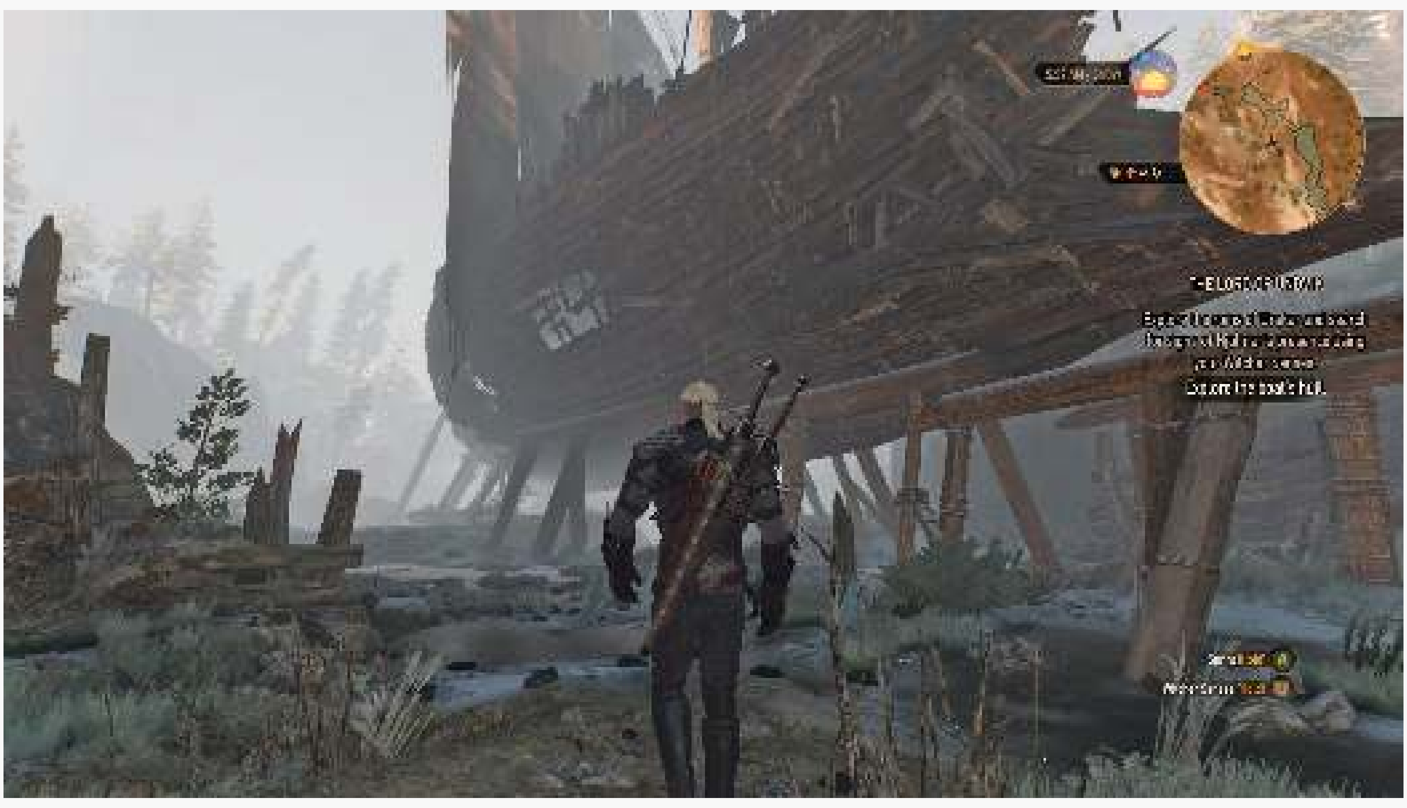
- Explore the boat's hull.
- Talk to the stranger.

Harald Houndsnout

Quietly slipping behind a rock, you peer out at a gigantic galleon, seemingly in mid-construction. Sirens flitter from the prow and bow of the immense vessel. A terrifying thudding sound announces the arrival of the ice giant. A behemoth carrying a bowl of offal which he slings at the sirens. He places one dollop of flesh onto the deck, and departs.

Step out from behind the rocks, and begin to explore this strange ship. Be aware of the four sirens darting about—deal with them first. Use your Witcher Senses to uncover:

- Giant tracks by the ship's hull. He frequents this place.
- Drag marks indicating a litter (a type of stretcher) was dragged through here.
- Marks close to cliffs behind the ship to the southeast, blocking your path and meaning that another way into the island must be found.



As you're exploring the area around the ship, and plunging your silver sword into the last siren, you hear the sounds of a strange lament. A man with a thin voice, singing a sad song. It is coming from the deck of the ship. Move to the makeshift ladder where the giant threw in some meat, and climb aboard. You find a gaunt man with sunken haunted eyes, sitting against a strut and surrounded by skulls on stakes.

Converse with him, and you discover the following:

- He's actually Harald Houndsnout, Jarl of Undvik, and now captive of the ice giant.
- He's been subsisting on his crew's flesh, and converses with their skulls as if they were alive.
- He's been spared by the giant to build him a massive boat. But they are short on nails and twine. And he's mad as a Nilfgaardian wild dog.
- You're fortunate that he reveals Hjalmar made camp nearby at an old tower, and some of his crew escaped with him. You vow to help the Jarl out later, and bid your farewell to this addled madman.

Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

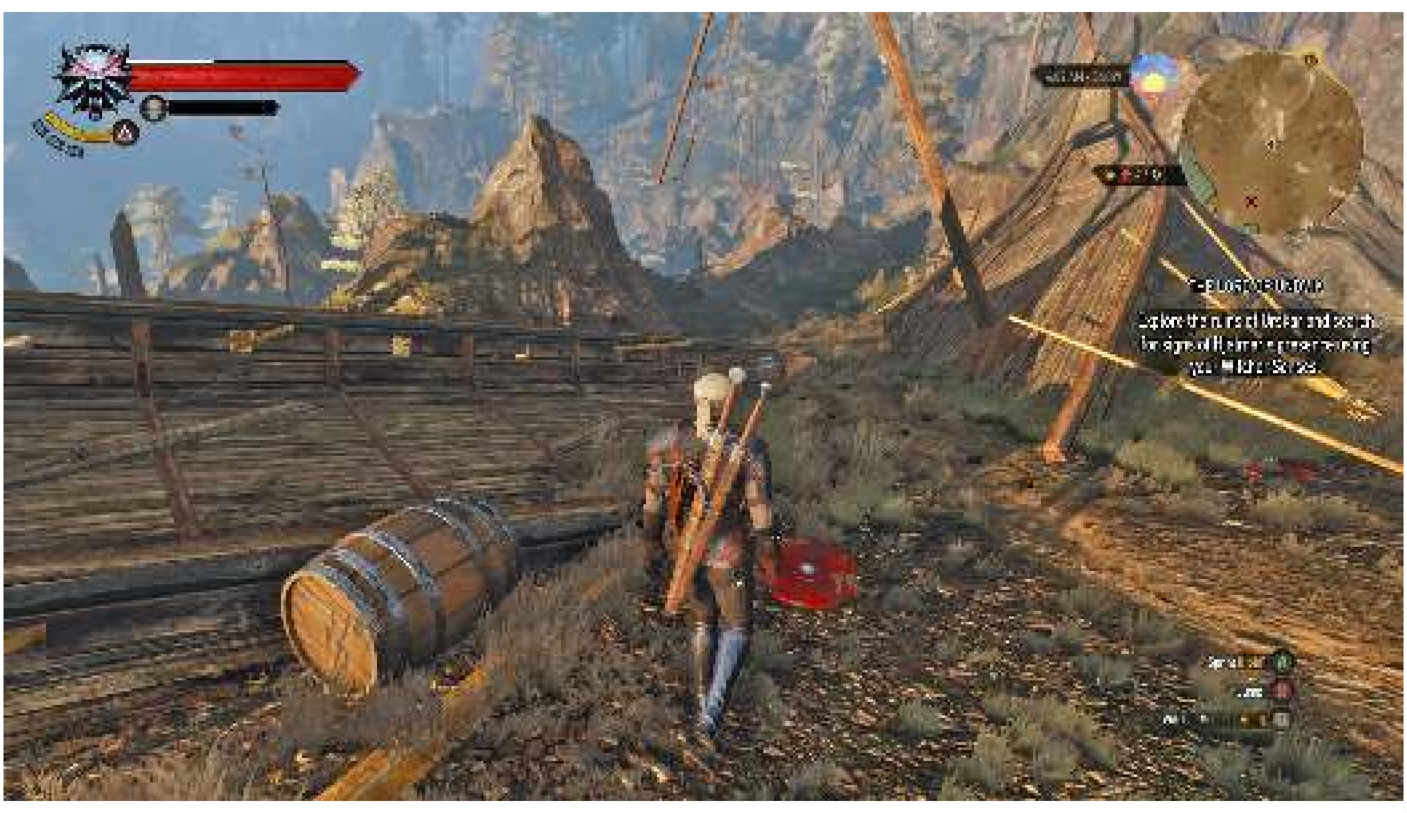
Round the Rugged Rocks the Ragged Rascals Ran

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the ruins of Urskar and search for signs of Hjalmar's presence using your Witcher Senses.
- Nearest Signpost: Marlin's Coast.

As you close in on the masses of jagged rocks the navigator back in Ard Skellig warned you about, you should inspect the multitude of ships wrecked here over the decades. So plentiful is the wreckage that it blocks the way from the beach inland to other parts of the island. Disembark from your boat at Marlin Coast (signpost), and comb the beach, using your Witcher Senses to uncover the following:

- A massive barrier sealing the valley where the ruined wharf is located (see picture). This wasn't merely the flotsam of countless abandoned vessels—the giant erected this barricade!
- Sea graves (how the islanders bury their fallen) under some pretty weighty stones with a simple wooden marker.
- A half-buried shield bearing the symbol of Clan an Craite.
- A great number of footprints going in all directions, close to a wrecked ship. Judging by the condition of the hull, this was a recent wreck, and was the ship Hjalmar used to reach these Freya-forsaken parts.



BEACH-COMBING AND ALTERNATE ROUTES

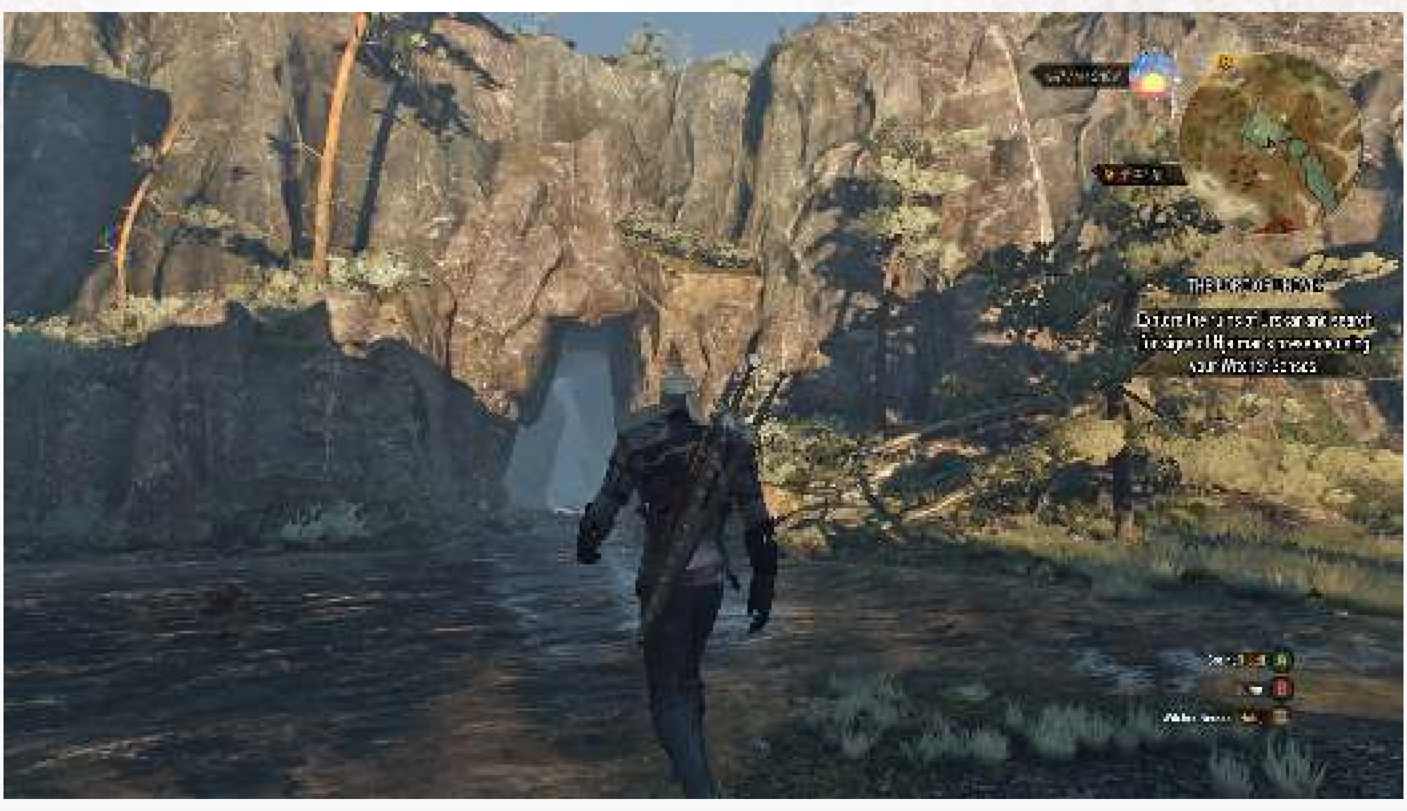
Remember that you can continue your beach-combing on horseback. Roach is available to cover ground more rapidly. There are other routes you may take when exploring this island, but the following is optimal, and introduces you to the most clues regarding the ice giant and Hjalmar's whereabouts.

INTO THE SIRENS' SCREAMS

Stray too far southwest along the coast, and you risk incurring the wrath of a group of ekhidna. It is possible to simply roam the island, and pick up this quest much later into the exploration of Undvik, if you wish.

Close to Hjalmar's shipwreck is a trail that leads up (roughly southwest) into the granite mountains. Follow this precarious path. Pass across a gorge, which you can drop into and clamber out of if you wish. Bodies of islanders killed in a rock slide lie strewn about here. You may follow the deep ravine (accessed from the shore near Marlin Coast) farther on, or continue on the high road.

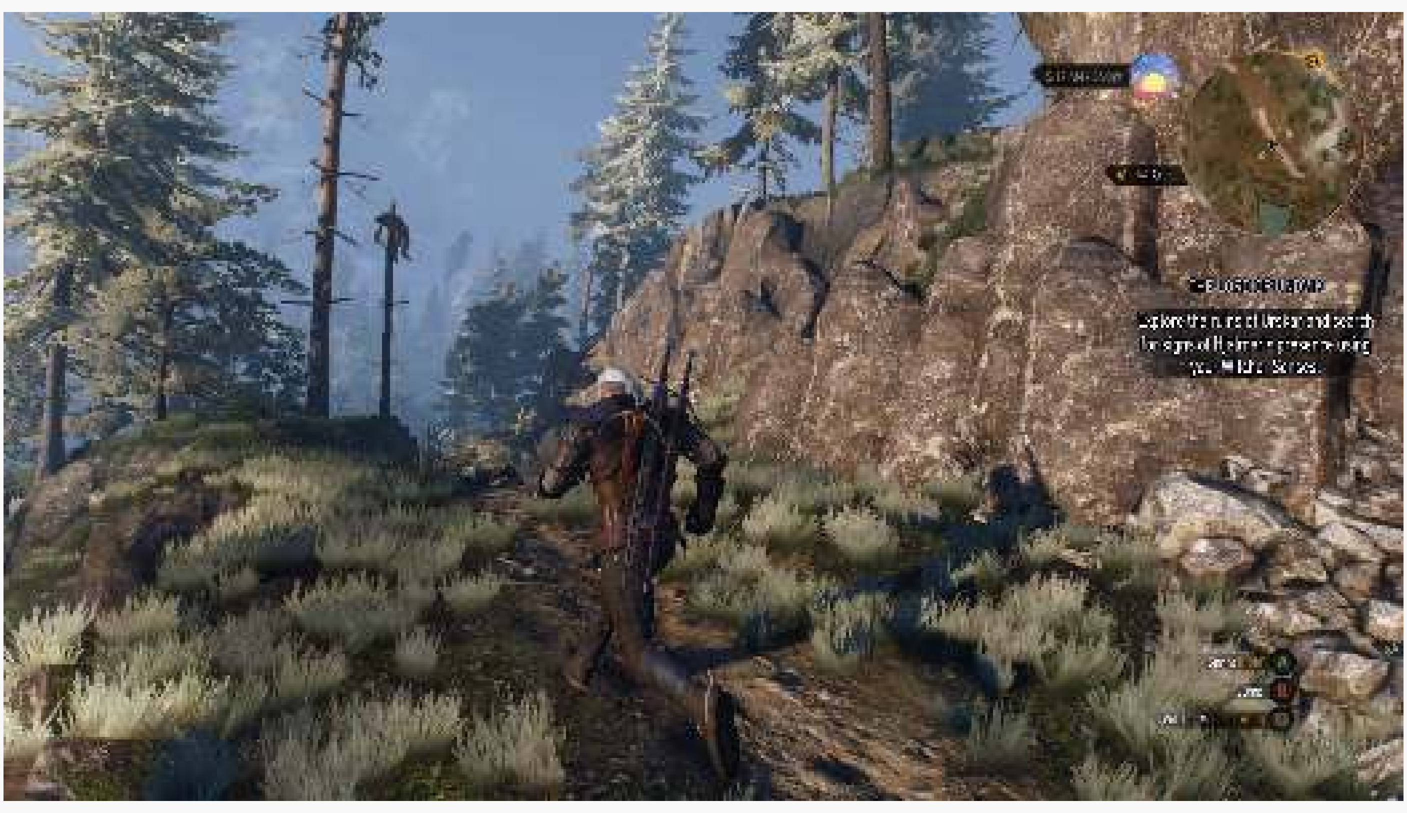
Ravine Route—southwest of the village of Marlin Coast, along the shoreline, is this cave opening (shown). Head through the gap, into the ravine where the rock slide has occurred. Pick your way up and over the strewn corpses of Hjalmar's rotting crew. Then follow a narrow and sharply winding path up and onto the high road.



High Road Route—stay on the high road, and trek past a soldier impaled on a pine tree; this hapless fellow must have been skewered by the giant.

Continue along the precarious path, ascending and crossing a very narrow wooden bridge (as shown) with the gorge below you. Prepare to fight off a couple of sirens as you pass the corpse of one of Hjalmar's men, slumped close to various provisions and baggage that was quickly discarded.

Follow the winding trail until it leads you into a ravine with almost sheer rock walls either side of you. Continue roughly northwest as you reach the far end of this fissure. It is here that you spot your first glimpse of the terrible Giant of Undvik…



Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

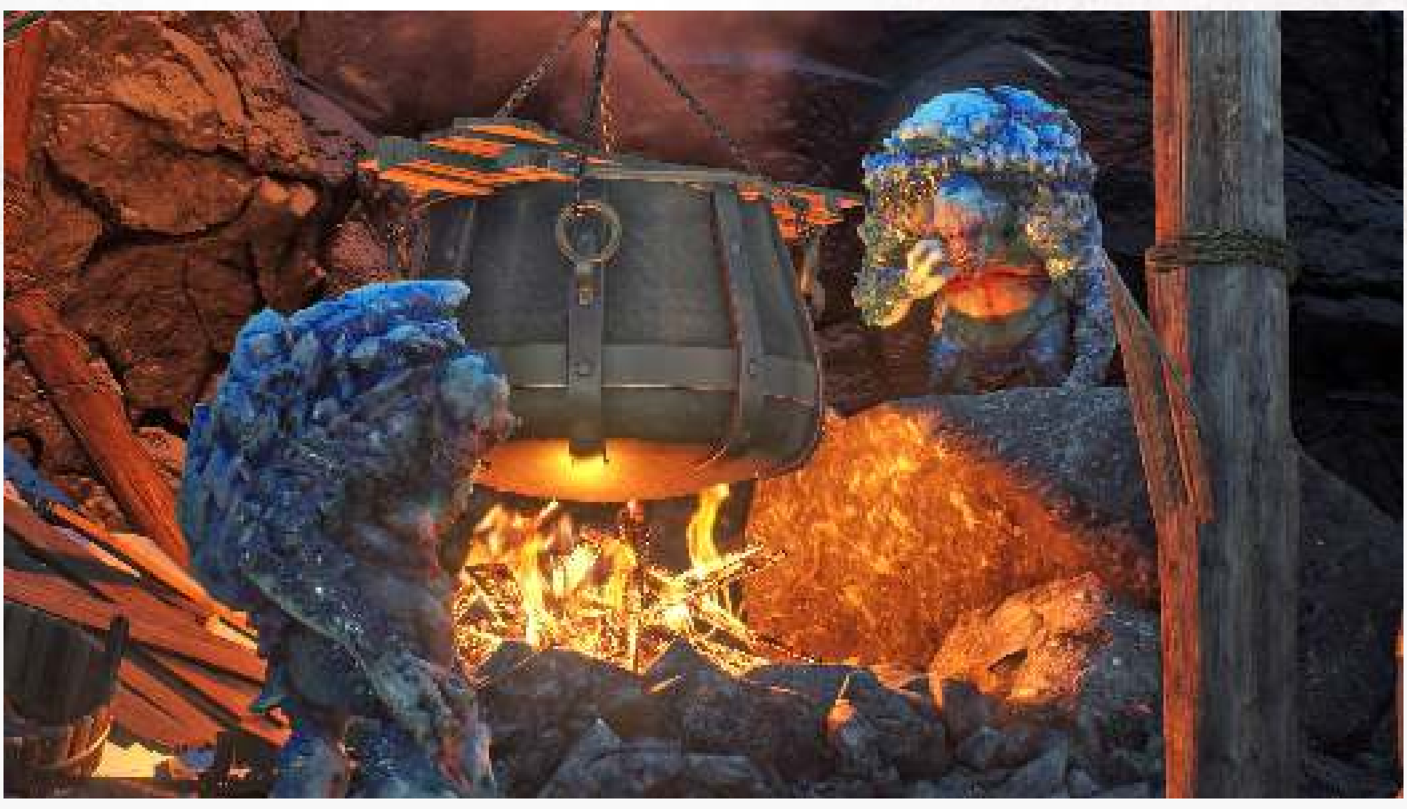
Rescuing Folan from the Pot

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the man the trolls captured using your Witcher Senses.
- Help the man in the cauldron.

Folan

Enter the cave and follow the intermittent trail of blood from the archer. At the first fork in the cave tunnel, head left, to a large cavern with a massive pile of fallen rocks. Engage an ice troll in combat. This chamber has two exits. Follow the path to the right, then left up a ledge path. The smell of cooking pierces your nostrils. Climb the ledge, and follow the path upward (and westward), into a troll's kitchen.



This rough cavern houses a giant cooking pot, two ice trolls, and a protesting Skellige man named Folan (son of Ulf). You approach the troll with your sword sheathed, as it is possible to free Folan without anyone dying (or boiling). The trolls claim they won Folan from Myrhyff (the giant), but they are prepared to let him go, providing you can solve their riddle. A troll's riddle? You'd be embarrassed if you failed at this… You can:

- Tell them you've had enough, and engage both trolls in battle.
- Tell them you'll play for Folan, and the riddles begin.

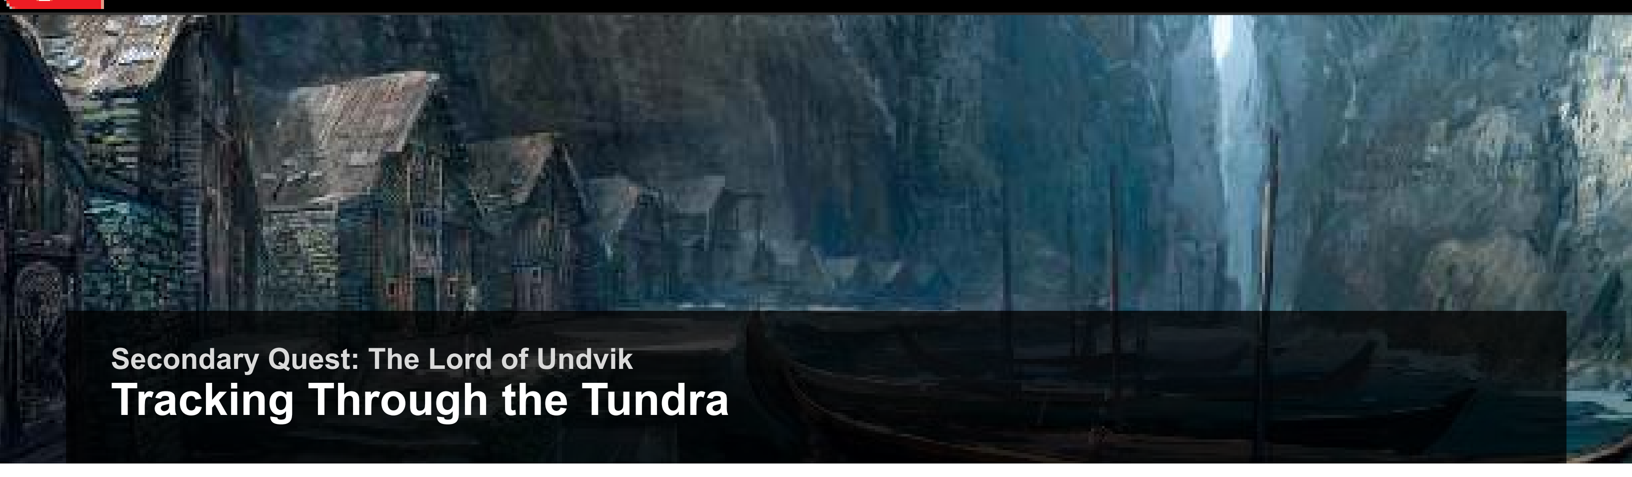
Riddle #1: "Lots there swim. Not soup, has no fins." The answer is "the sea."

You reply with your own riddle, which easily flummoxes the trolls. They angrily stomp off, but don't offer any resistance.

BOILING POINT

Be quick when fighting or riddling with the trolls. If you wait more than ten seconds, Folan boils alive, and your rescue attempt fails (simply leave the cave and complete the remaining objectives on your own). If you fail to answer the first riddle correctly, the trolls ask you a second one, but by this time, Folan has boiled to death.

Once the riddle (or battle) is over, immediately rush up the rocky ledge and access the cauldron lid, prying it open and freeing Folan. You speak with him at the cave entrance. Folan is grateful, but once you tell him you're looking for Hjalmar, he gets suspicious. This is shortlived though, and he reveals everything about the expedition if you ask him the following: You can ask him how he was separated, the expedition, that Crach sent you, about the ice giant, or tell him you know everything (after which, he follows you).



Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

Tracking Through the Tundra

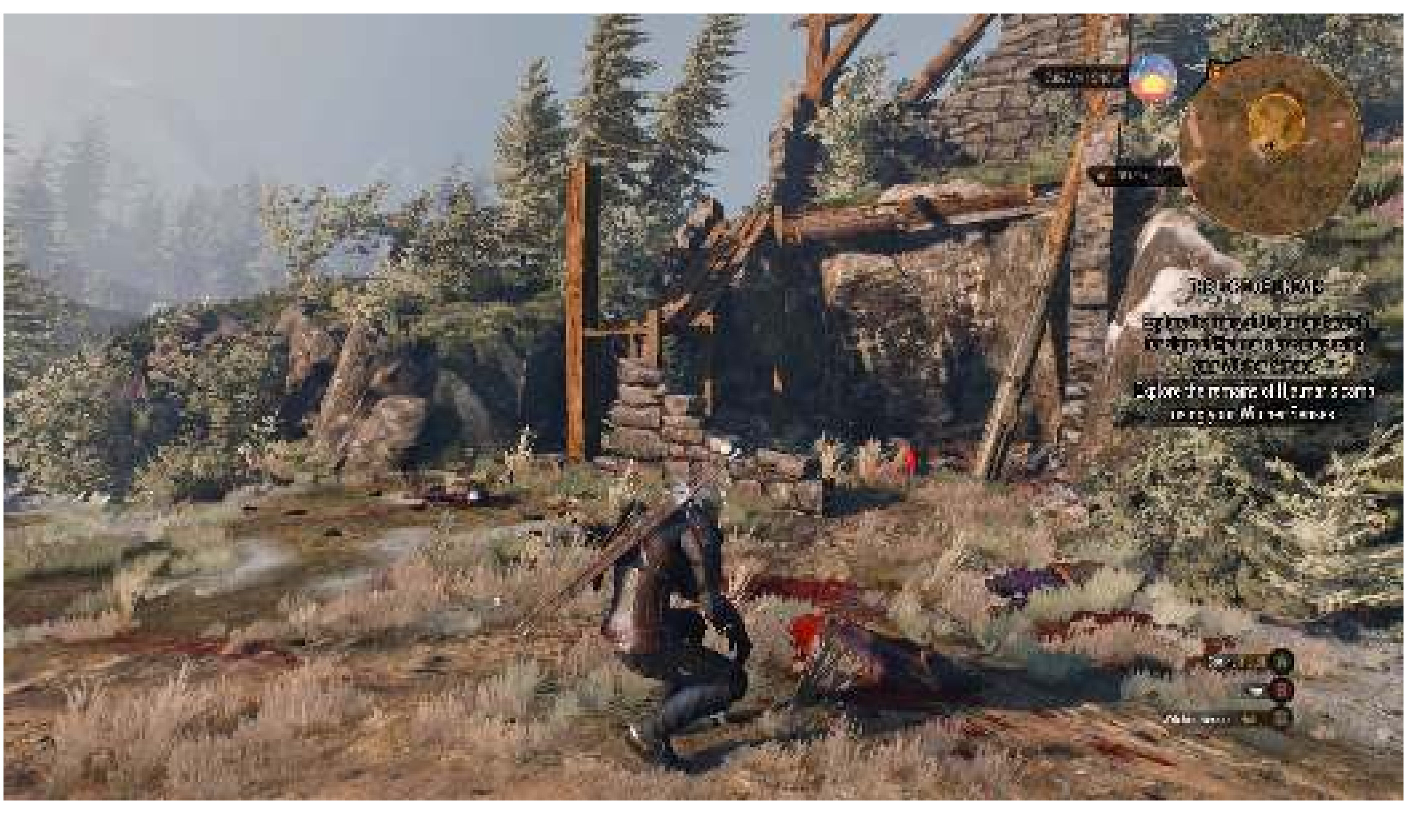
OBJECTIVES:

- Find Hjalmar's camp.
- Explore the remains of Hjalmar's camp using your Witcher Senses.
- Use your Witcher Senses to follow the tracks of those who fled the camp before the attack.
- Nearest Signpost: Abandoned Village

Follow the marks and look along a rough pathway to the west. Ahead are the remains of an old wooden guard tower, built against the cliffs. Hjalmar was attacked, judging by the evidence on the ground. Make sure you use your Witcher Senses to uncover the following:

- Hjalmar's men were taken by surprise, but fought off the attack.
- One corpse has a broken back, as if he fell from a great height.
- One body is covered in wounds, and must have fought for a long time.
- A felled man fought barefoot after sirens caught him off-guard.
- Two people came through here. Separately. Scavengers most likely.
- One man didn't even manage to draw his sword. Another bled to death in seconds. A third had his throat torn open by sirens.

Two trails of footprints lead up a hill to the west, and then turn to the south. There is also evidence of a track made by a boat being dragged in the opposite direction (northward). The human sets of footprints indicate one man (an archer) was determined to kill the other.

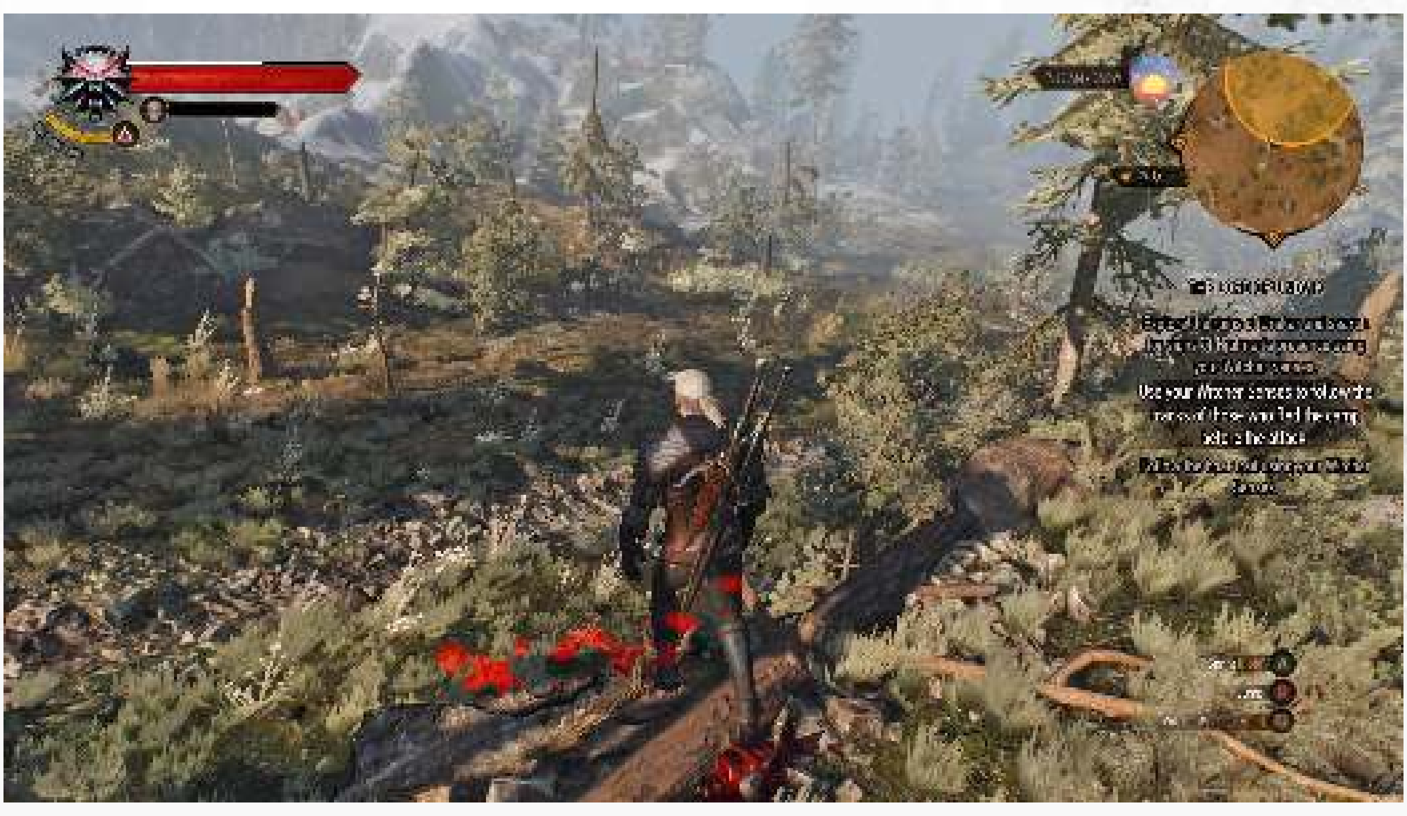


EVIDENCE AT URSKAR

You can follow the track of the dragged boat if you wish, which leads to evidence of bloodshed on the lake across from Urskar village. But the optimal path is to find one of Hjalmar's men first, gain further knowledge, and then return to this boat-dragging trail.

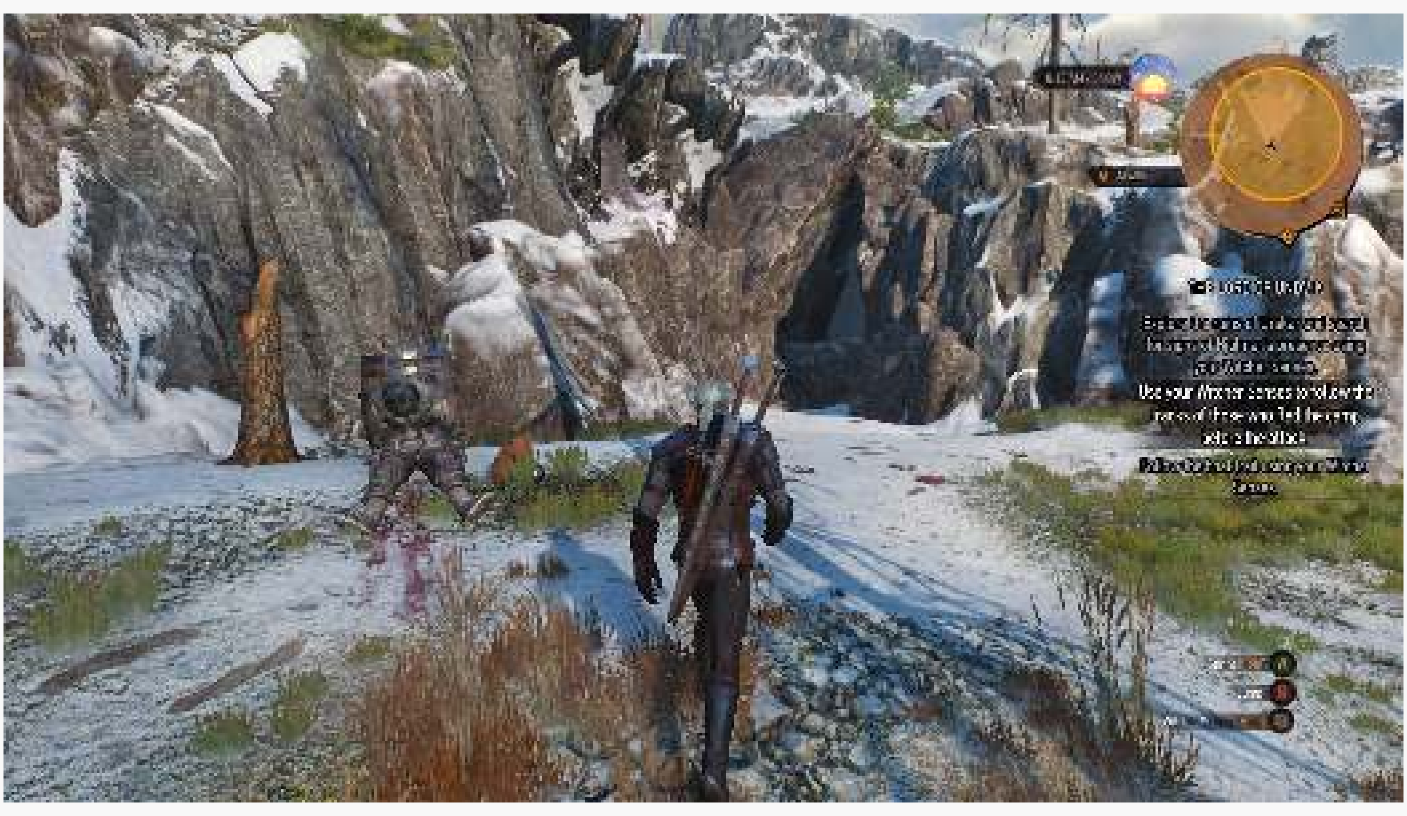
Follow the footprints carefully across the tundra and the most vague of paths, towards a fallen tree overlooking a stream.

- It seems one man had to fight off nekkers, and crossed the stream—do the same.
- One of the men didn't come back for his arrows. He was harried.



Head west across the stream, and head up the large sloping hill ahead of you. There are more arrows in the ground.

- Further up the slope are nekker corpses. They pursued the men. Check the corpses and evidence near the barrels.



Close to the upturned log on the outskirts of the Abandoned Village (signpost) is evidence an archer was determined to kill. The other used this log as cover. Adjacent is another set of tracks—these lead off to the northwest. Follow them:

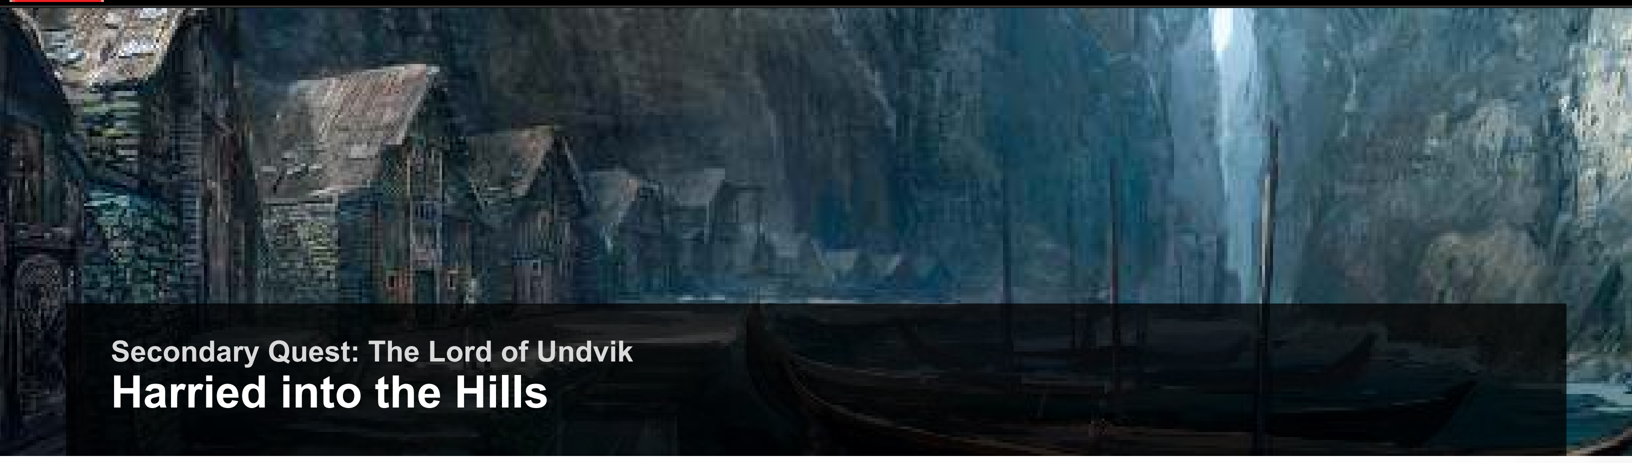
- With the tracks are splatters of blood on the ground and rocks—a lot of it, indicating the wounded man couldn't have gone much further.
- The trail of blood and prints leads you to a cave entrance, where one of Hjalmar's men is pincushioned with arrows. Close by is a horn that is said to drive away sirens. Take it and save it for later.

ITEM: Quest Item: Horrval Horn

SIREN SOUND

Having problems with those terrors from the skies? Then blow the Horrval Horn when you're being attacked by sirens; the horn causes these airborne foes to drop to the ground, making them easier to slay.

The archer was still alive, but troll tracks at the mouth of the cave indicate the man was dragged inside. Blood marks deeper into the cave entrance indicate the man was wounded. Head into the cave.



Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

Harried into the Hills

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow the boat trail using your Witcher Senses.
- Cross the lake.
- Find out what happened to Hjalmar's crew in the caves.
- Find Hjalmar.

FOLAN ABOUT

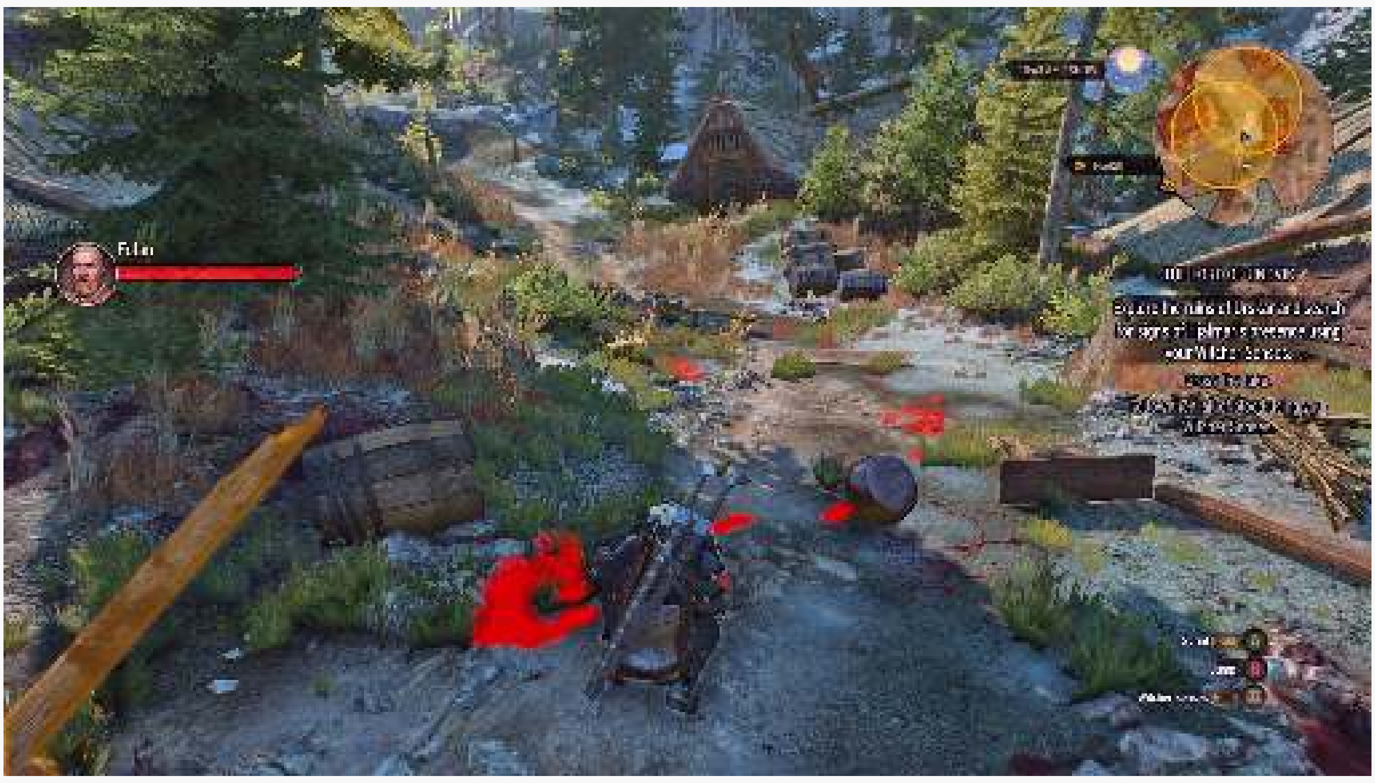
This objective can be undertaken with or without Folan, and can occur before or after you rescue him. The optimal time to attempt this is after successfully freeing Folan from the trolls' cooking pot.

After optionally talking about inter-clan animosities with Folan, set off to the location close to the ruined guard tower where Hjalmar made camp. Use your Witcher Senses to find the tracks showing several men dragging a boat northwards. Follow this trail, but head in a roughly southerly direction, towards the village of Urskar, to a small lake and wooden jetty. Use your Witcher Senses and uncover the following:

- One of Hjalmar's men who bled to death trying to escape, near the waterfall. Cross the lake, and uncover signs of a battle.
- The men attempted to run to some nearby caves. The giant chased them. There is a trail of blood heading uphill.
- Scuff marks farther up the path to the south, just after the huts, shows that someone tripped and fell, but managed to get away.
- There's lots of blood patches up the trail. It leads to a slit-like cave opening.
- Large claw marks at the cave entrance indicate the giant couldn't squeeze into the caves, and gave up the chase.

Head down the sloping cave tunnel. There are more blood pools along the way. The sloping path leads to a gigantic grotto, and no way onwards… except downwards! Dive off the cliff ledge, into the pool below.

Swim northwards out of the pool. There's blood on the stone shore, and a corpse of one of Hjalmar's men by a ledge. Examine the corpse, then climb the ledges. Follow the splatters of blood across a small wooden bridge, to more ledge near a second corpse. Climb up, run along a ledge, through a small cave opening on your left, to a large upper promontory above the pool, with an oak tree at the edge of the precipice.



Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

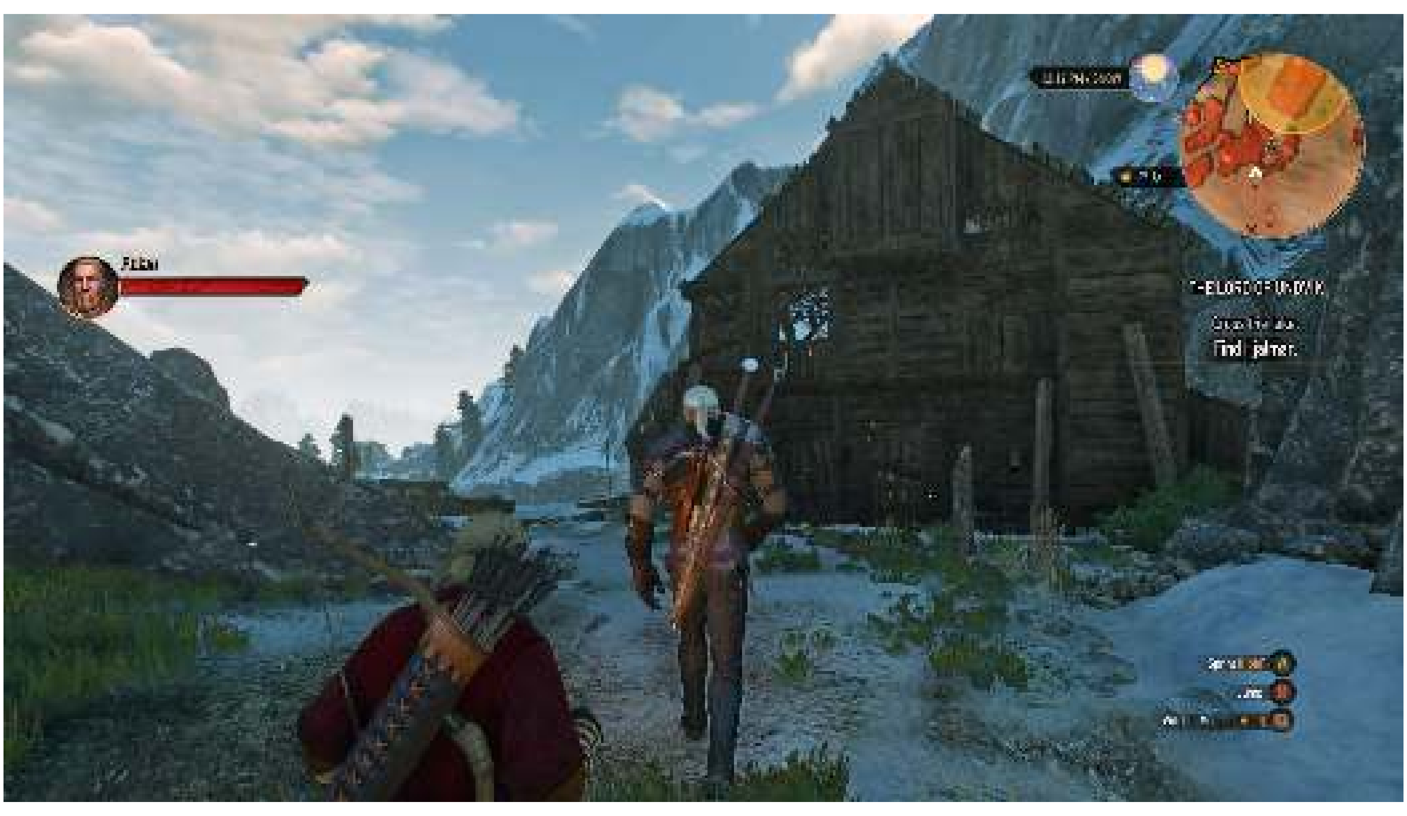
The Craite Escape

OBJECTIVE:

- Help the stranger drive off the sirens.

The exterior view over the Isle of Undvik is as beautiful as the interior of the forge is grotesque. Open the main door into the forge, where more than twenty of Hjalmar's men are butchered and hung like sides of beef in this giant's pantry.

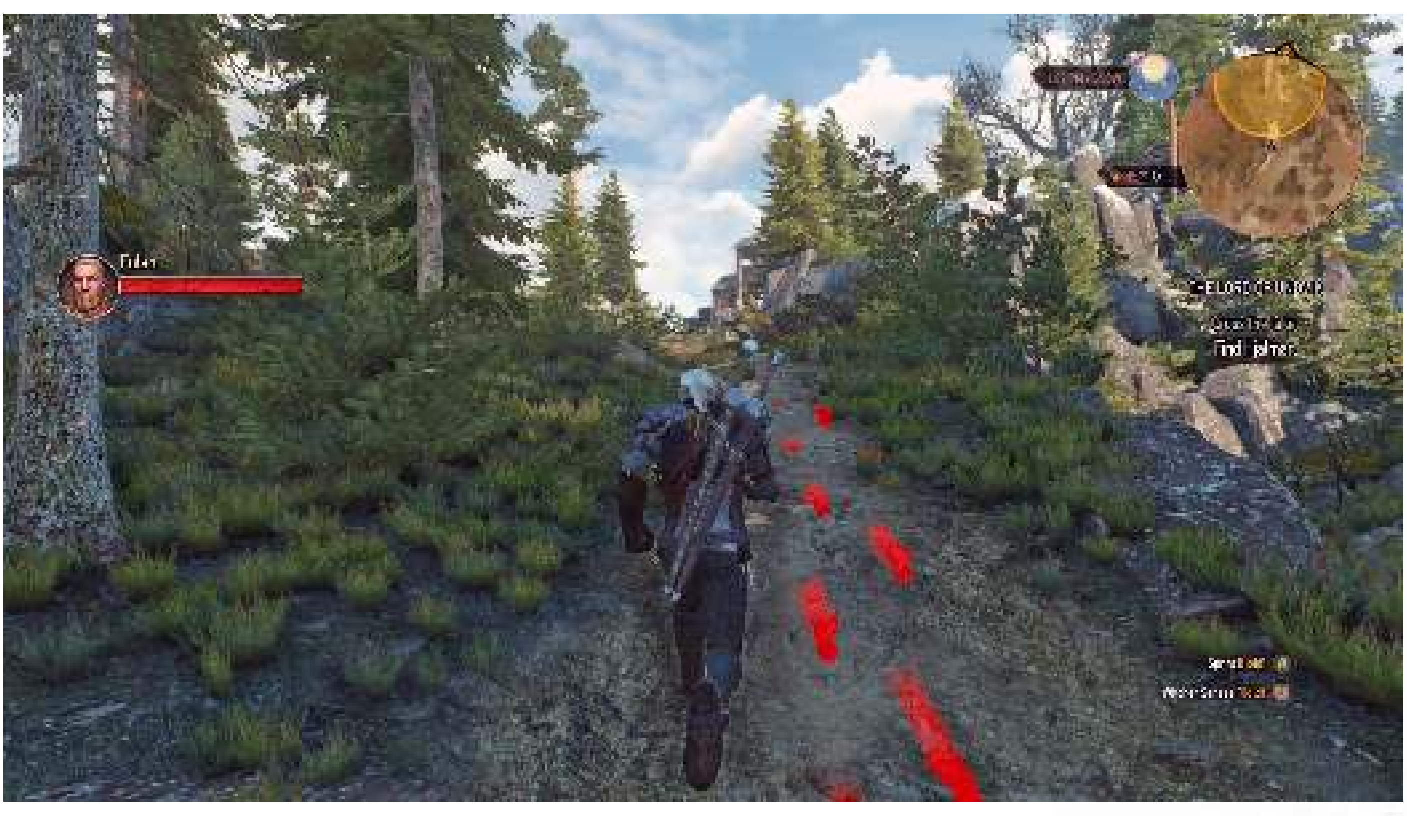
- If Folan is with you, he remarks on this horror.



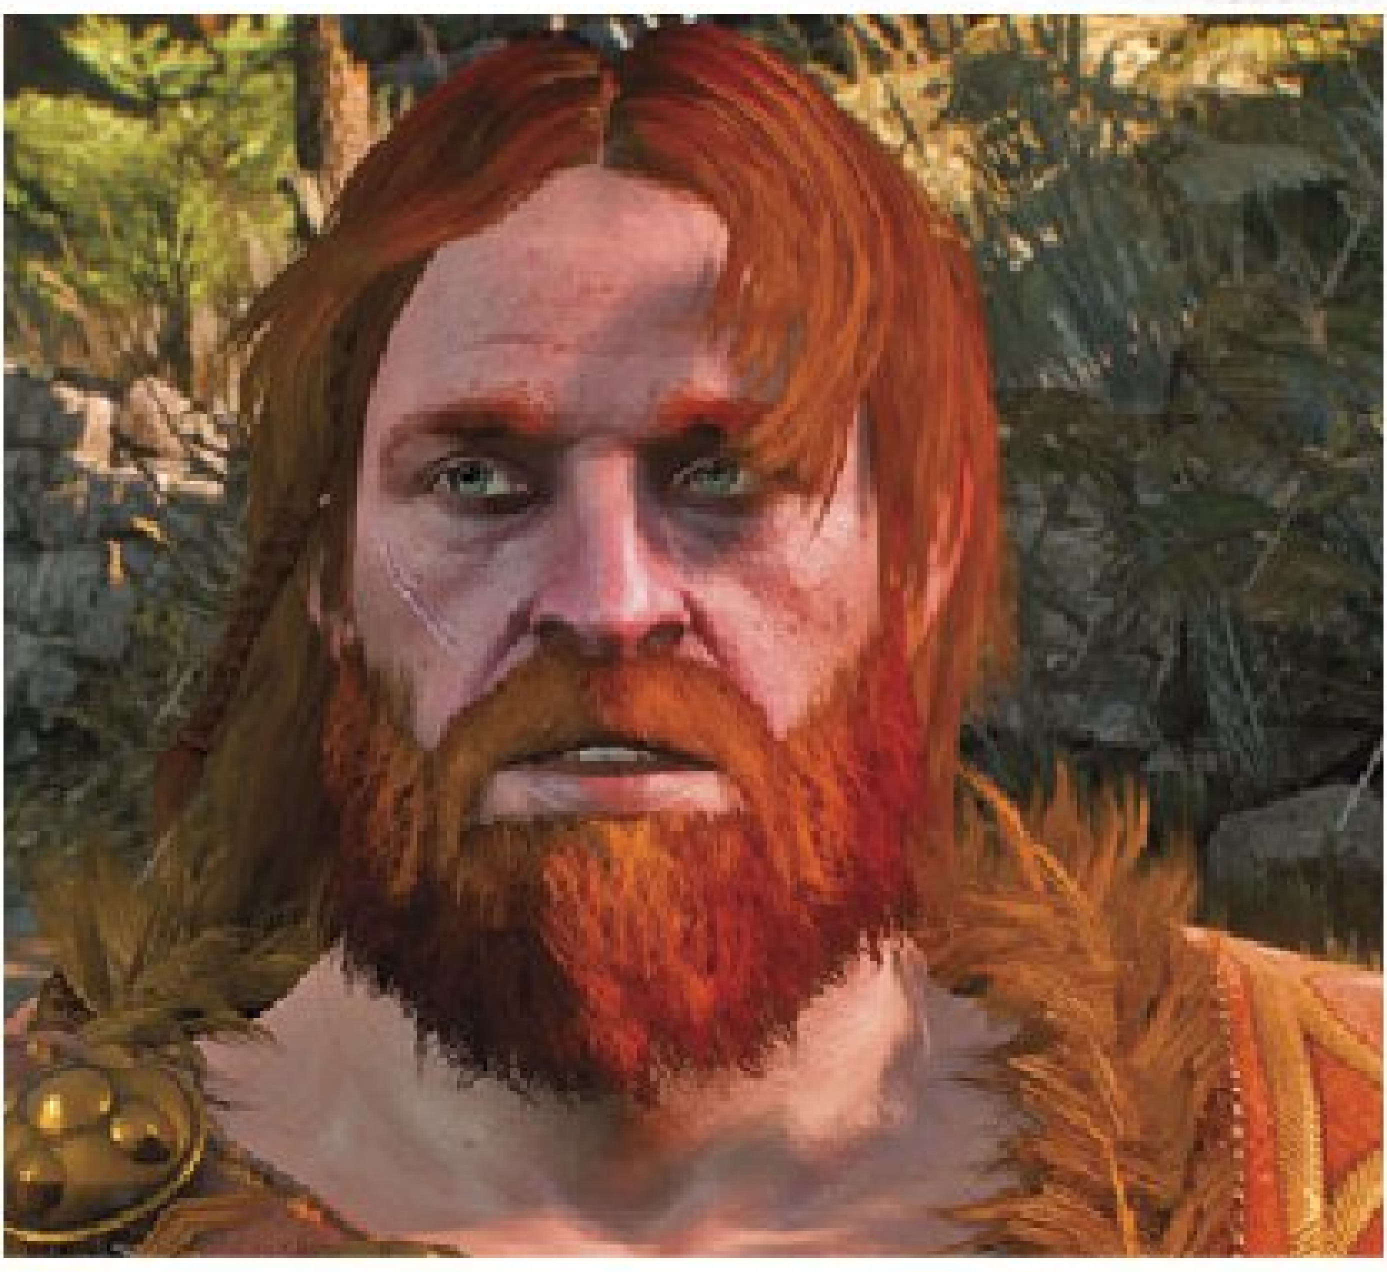
The horror is further exacerbated by an ambush from three rotfiends (devourers) bursting from a side chamber to the north. Cut them down (or better yet, lob a bomb into the enclosed antechamber they spring from, before they spread out), then exit the building to the east. Use your Witcher Senses:

- There are a number of old tracks; the giant comes here often to feed.

Follow the trail of giant footprints down the pathway from the forge, across the gully and northeast to a cliff you aren't able to climb. You need to find another way around.



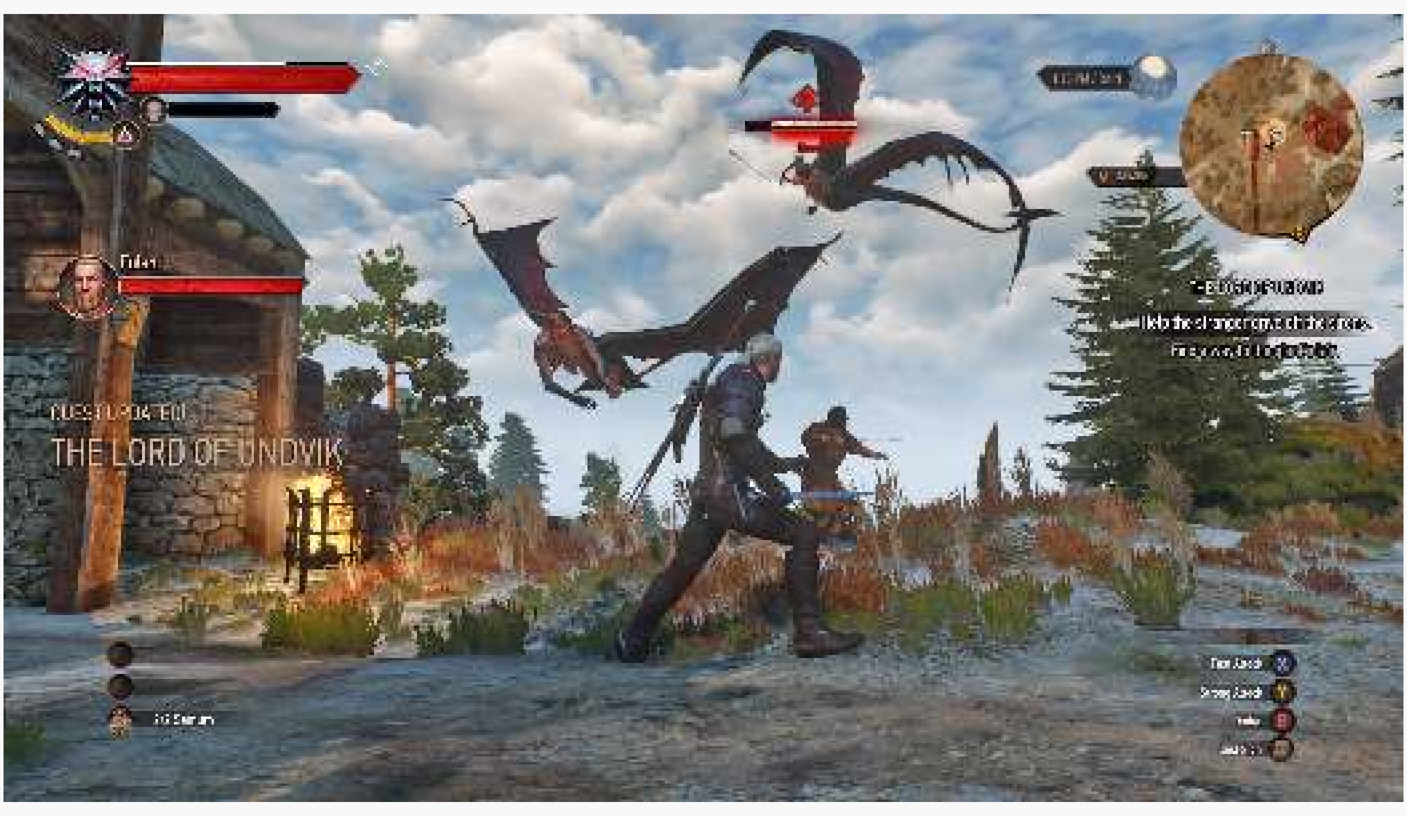
Step back to the path, then head downhill (northwest), following the path down toward the lake, passing some human-sized footprints along the way. Run past the lake (on your left), between a fishing hut and small boathouse, and begin to climb a wooded hillside gully. The footprints lead up the hill path, toward what was one of the main villages on Undvik—the Dorve Ruins.



Hjalmar an Craite

Head through the village threshold gate, and you encounter a Skelliger battling against some sirens. Help the fellow see off two of these flying foes, after which you're introduced to Hjalmar himself. He knows of your adventures, and you can speak about your task (to help him), and quickly check on his crew-mate (who sadly didn't survive the siren attack). After that, the bull-headed Hjalmar decides a dash up to the Giant's lair is in order.

- If Folan is with you, he and Hjalmar speak about Cerys' decision to head to Spikeroog alone. They also banter back and forth as you climb the hill to the giant's lair.



NAILS FOR HOUNDSNOUT

Did you find some nails in Dorve Ruins, during or after talking to Hjalmar? Then you can bring them to Jarl Houndsnout, who uses them on his crew. The man's crazier than Lugos!

ENEMIES : Drowners, Sirens, Hym

RECOMMENDED ITEM : Axii Delusion Level 2

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest becomes available automatically, once Main Quest: The King is Dead—Long Live the King concludes. It is purely optional.

THE TIME TO ACT IS NOW!

If you don't attempt this quest, and continue your adventuring to the point where Act III: Battle Preparations begins, Svanrige Bran becomes King of Skellige. A pity.

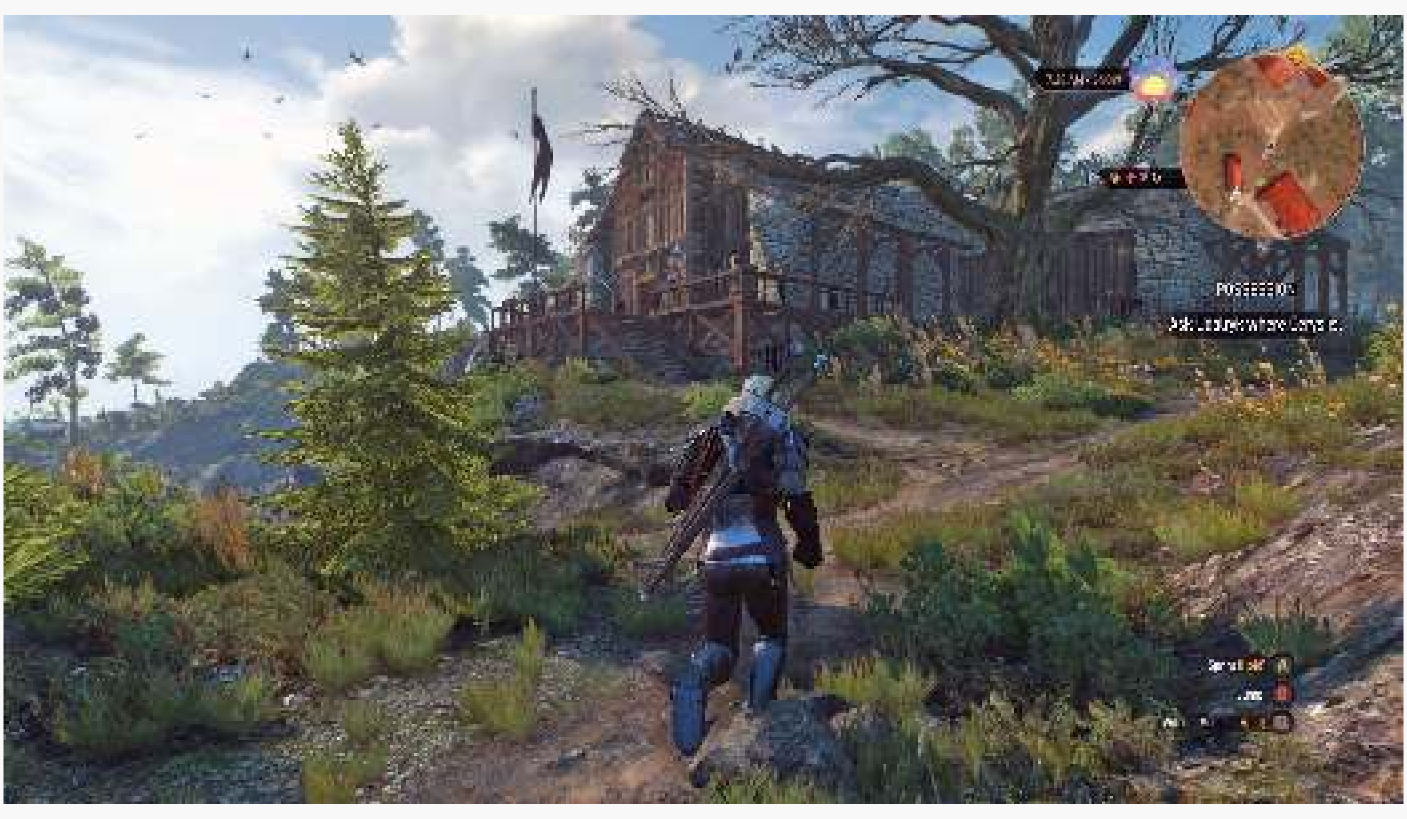
OBJECTIVES:

- Ask Udalryk where Cerys is.
- Nearest Signpost: Svorlag.

Locate Crach on the exterior battlement crenelations overlooking the Kaer Trolde gorge. Ask him about Cerys, and her adventure. He tells you she's sailed there in order to help cure Jarl Udalryk's mysterious affliction. You'll find further information out by sailing northwestward to the isle of Spikeroog.

Hjort

Jarl Udalryk

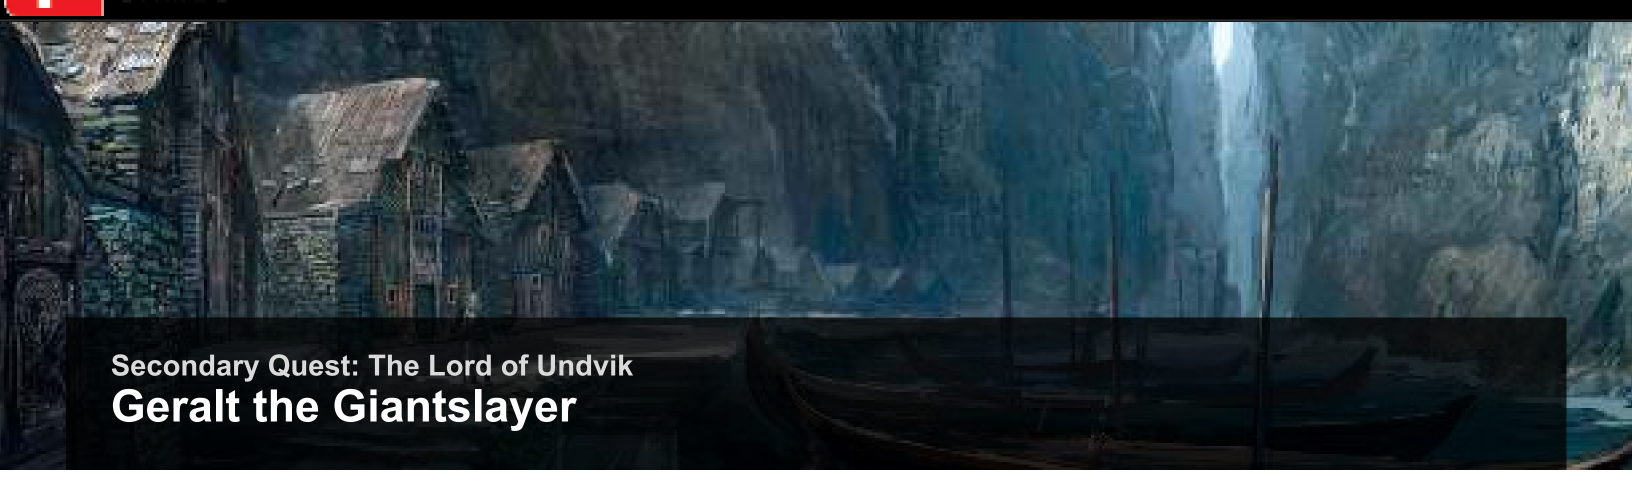


Leave Kaer Trolde Keep, and head south toward the port, where you can locate a boat. It should appear on your minimap, and allows you to captain a vessel across the unforgiving seas, heading in a roughly northwesterly path towards the Isle of Spikeroog, from Ard Skellig. Your voyage is relatively smooth sailing:

Travel directly towards the large inlet harbor surrounding the main settlement of Svorlag.

Once you disembark on Svorlag's shore, bound up the wooden steps to the Jarl's longhouse in the southwestern area of the village. Along the way, you may hear townsfolk speaking about the Jarl's erratic behavior. You are met by two guards from the clan Brokvar, who let you into this darkened great hall. Udalryk and his seer Hjort are talking about visions the Jarl is having. Speak to Udalryk about the location of Cerys. All you receive is confused mumblings and shouts, after which the Jarl retires to bed. Hjort suggests you look to the villagers for more information.

- If you specifically ask Hjort where Cerys is, he explains she went to the Abandoned House on the top of the mountain. Now you need not speak to any of the villagers.



Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik

Geralt the Giantslayer

OBJECTIVES:

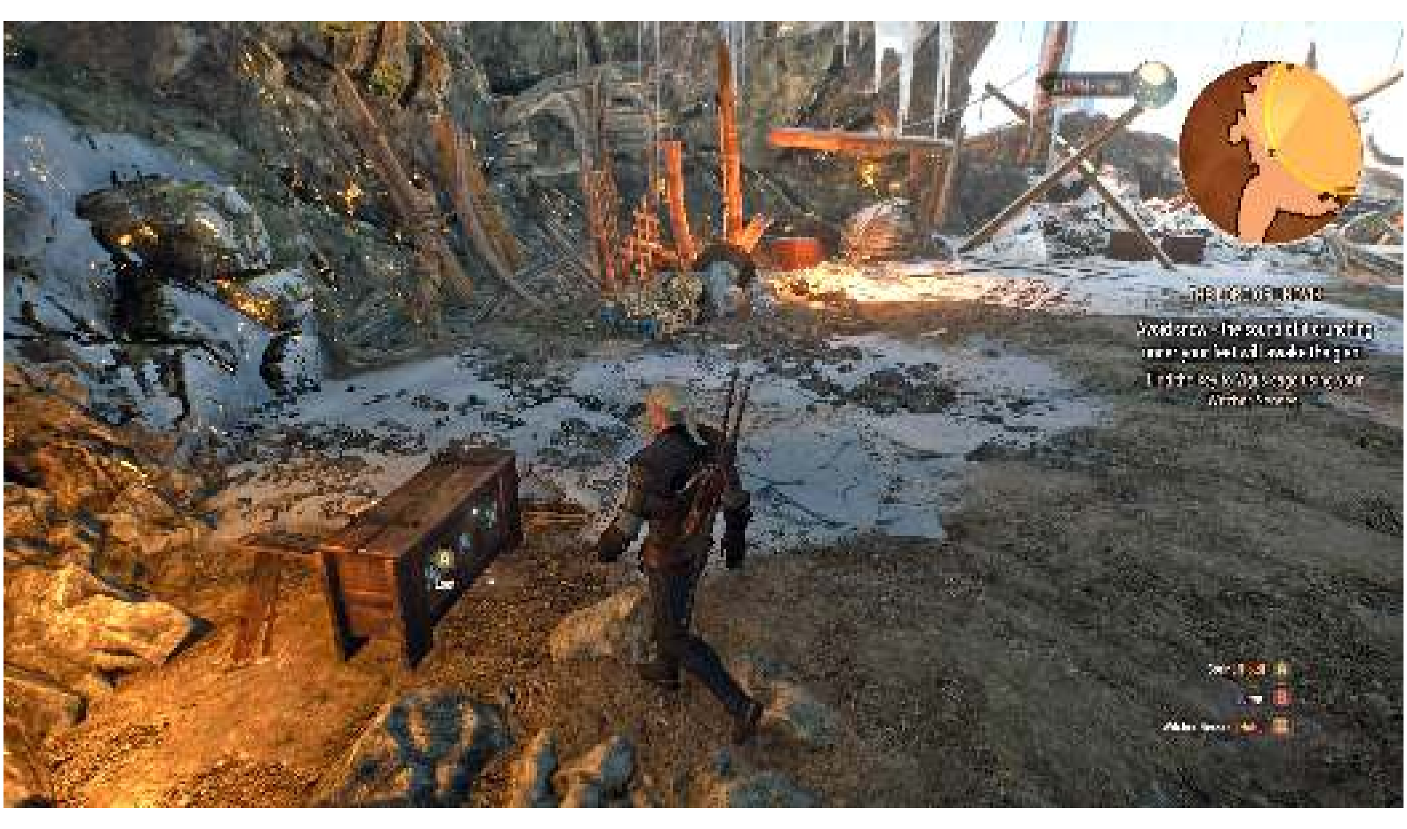
- Find a way into the giant's lair.
- Find the key to Vigi's cage using your Witcher Senses.
- Avoid snow—the sound of it crunching under your feet will wake the giant.
- Kill the giant.

Vigi the Loon

As you set off up the hill with Hjalmar, use your Witcher Senses to uncover more evidence:

- At the start of the run, check the ground; the giant came down the mountain, barged into the village, and kicked the gate down from the inside.
- Further up the slope there are skeletal remains of the Undvik massacre. The sheer number shows that the records are no exaggeration.

Continue to follow Hjalmar up between the rocky slopes to the cave entrance into the giant's lair. It is blocked by fallen rocks and scree. Speak with Hjalmar and agree to help him remove the blockage. Then enter the cave.



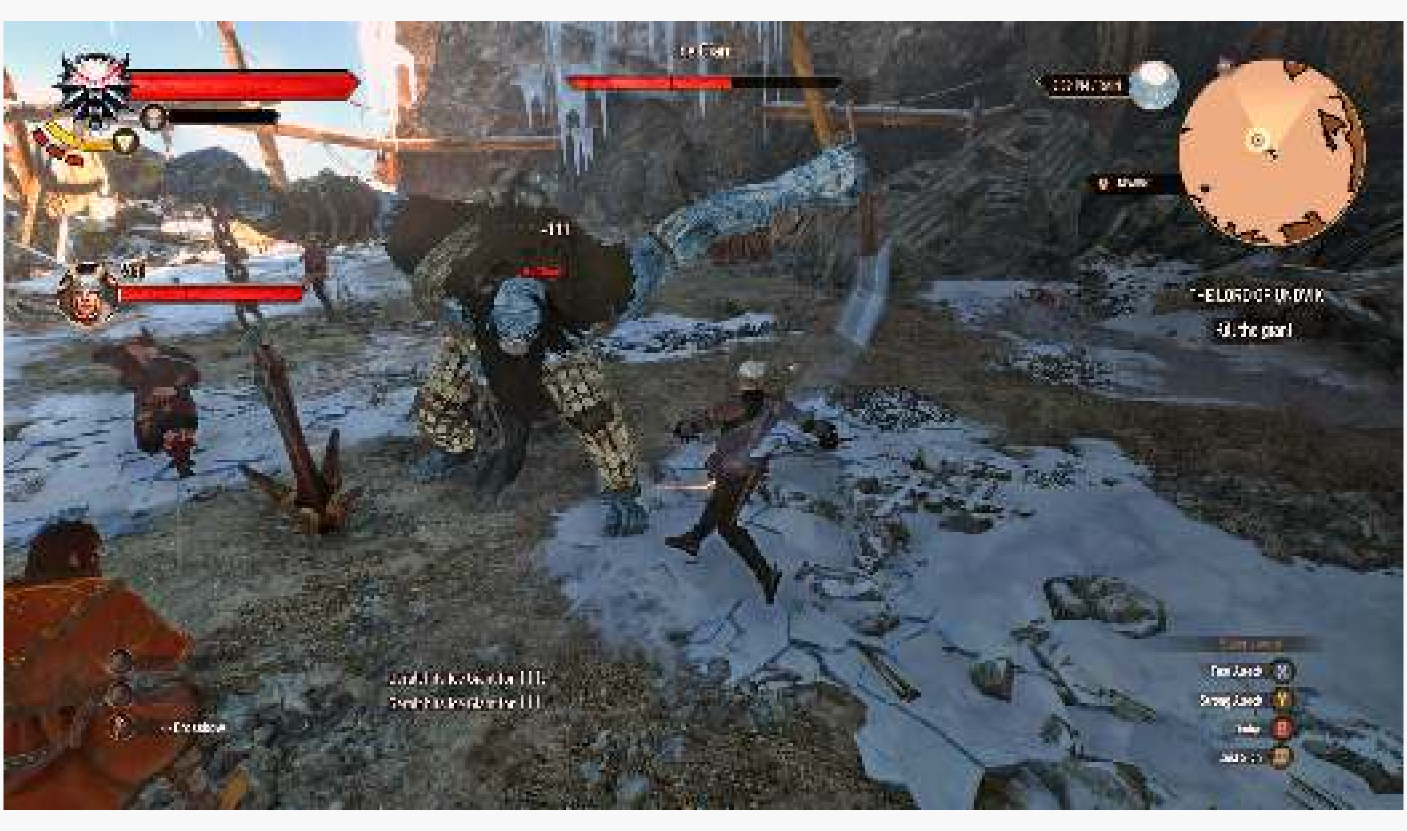
A COLD RECEPTION FOR THE UNDER-PREPARED

Myrhyff the ice giant is a formidable opponent. This is the only occasion where you'll face an ice giant, and you don't want it to be your last. Be sure you meditate and prepare potions.

Myrhyff the Ice Giant

After a short path to the right, around the roots and pieces of ships' masts, you can nimbly enter the ice giant's lair, where he is sleeping (along the southwest wall). A muffled voice from a makeshift cage of boat parts pleads with you to be let free. This is Vigi "the Loon," and Hjalmar warns you to keep him imprisoned, lest he live up to his name. Agree, or seek the key to free him while the giant sleeps.

- If Folan is with you, he's insistent that Vigi shuts up, or gets them all killed.
- If Folan isn't with you, and you haven't visited him yet, this is the point when the Ice Trolls eat him; it's too late to save him at this point.



MYRHYFF'S WAKE UP CALL

Beware of your actions; the slumbering behemoth wakes up if you strike it, cast Signs, or step on the patches of ice that crack; leaving you little time to free Vigi.

If the giant is sleeping, you have a couple of options. You can:

- Find the key to Vigi's Cage. The key is in a chest along the southeast wall of the cave. Grab it, head to Vigi's upturned boat cage, and free the loon; who promptly yells a blood-curdling cry and launches himself at the giant. Combat immediately starts.
- Or you can ignore Vigi, advance on the sleeping giant, who wakens and combat starts.

ITEM: Quest Item: Key to Vigi's Cage

With the giant attacking, you have the benefit of Hjalmar attacking as well, (and Vigi if you freed him, as well as Folan providing support fire from his bow). Attack the giant, using mainly fire-based attacks. Free Vigi if you wish, but watch the giant's attacks too. You can only free Vigi before the combat starts.

When the ice giant has around a quarter of his health whittled away, he produces a large ship's anchor, and whips about its head. As well as being damaging, this is brought down with force on Vigi's cage. If he was freed already, this isn't a problem. But if he's still imprisoned, he's flattened and dies. Now fight on to the bitter end, until Myrhyff of Undvik is finally toppled!

VULNERABILITIES: ICE GIANT

Be sure you read up on additional combat strategies in this guide's Bestiary. Remember the ice giant is weak against the following:

ITEM: Oil: Ogroid, Sign: Quen

CONCLUSION: UNDVIK FOR SKELLIGE!

After commiserating or congratulating each other about freeing Vigi, you can stay here and loot the giant's corpse (and then meet Hjalmar on the beach), or return to the beach automatically (the Marlin's Coast signpost), where Hjalmar assures you that your prowess will be sung about by the skalds.

- Agree that your actions deserve to be included in Hjalmar's ballad, and you can obtain discounts from traders all across Skellige.

He aims to sail back to Ard Skellig to claim his title, though he's sure others have similar plans in mind. Remind him that his sister is one of them, and answer how you wish in regards to visiting Spikeroog to help her. The quest concludes with you receiving Hjalmar's favorite blade.

- You can complete this quest with or without Folan and Vigi, who are also on the beach. However, rescuing one or either of them results in them automatically accompanying Hjalmar to Kaer Morhen, if you request Hjalmar's help during Act II: Brothers in Arms: Skellige.

ITEM: Weapon: Eirlithrad (Sword)

JARL COME BACK NOW, Y'HEAR?

Harald Houndsnout is still talking to his skulls inside the giant boat. Return and try to talk to the madman, and you find he's too far gone to save, alas.

Secondary Quest: Possession

The Time Has Come to Get Cerys

OBJECTIVES:

- Ask about Cerys in the village.
- Talk to Bergthora.

Skellige Woman

Fisherman

Bergthora

Set about interviewing the villagers of Svorlag. Move to where the signpost is located, and begin a conversation with a Fisherman, who hasn't seen Cerys for a while. Nearby is a rosy-cheeked Skellige woman. She's surprised at all the guests from afar that have been visiting. She tells you Cerys was just here, and was meeting two townsfolk by the name of Bergthora and Eiric (a married couple and old friends of the Jarl who live at the east end of the village).

Bergthora is a little way to the east, by her modest stone cottage and plucking a chicken. She's a friendly sort, and tells you Cerys left to talk to Eiric on the beach located on the other side of the island.

Secondary Quest: Possession

A House of Dark Torment

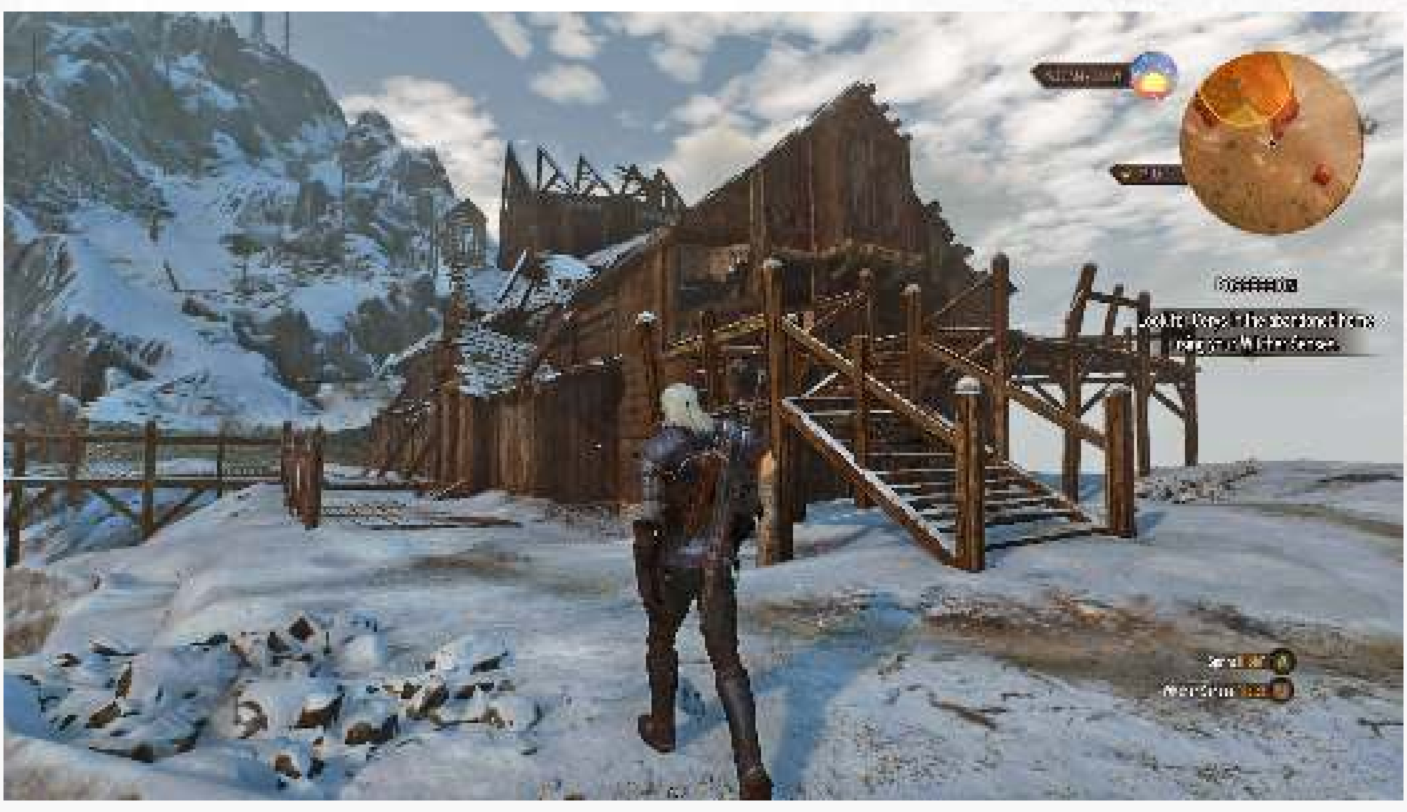
OBJECTIVE:

- Look for Cerys in the abandoned home using your Witcher Senses.

Cerys an Craite

The hill in question is roughly southwest of your current beach location. A direct climb up the sheer rock cliffs is difficult and dangerous, so take the path back towards Svorlag before heading southwest up a series of precarious cliff ledges partly covered in snow. Pass a small stone hut to reach the house where Udalryk lived with his parents as a boy. Enter via either of the doors.

An ill atmosphere has taken hold of this place. Use your Witcher Senses to uncover some fresh footprints that could belong to Cerys. Follow them around the corner to see her passed out on the wooden floor. You gather her up and she wakes with a terrible head pain. She was hit on the head, didn't find the sword she was searching for, but still isn't leaving.

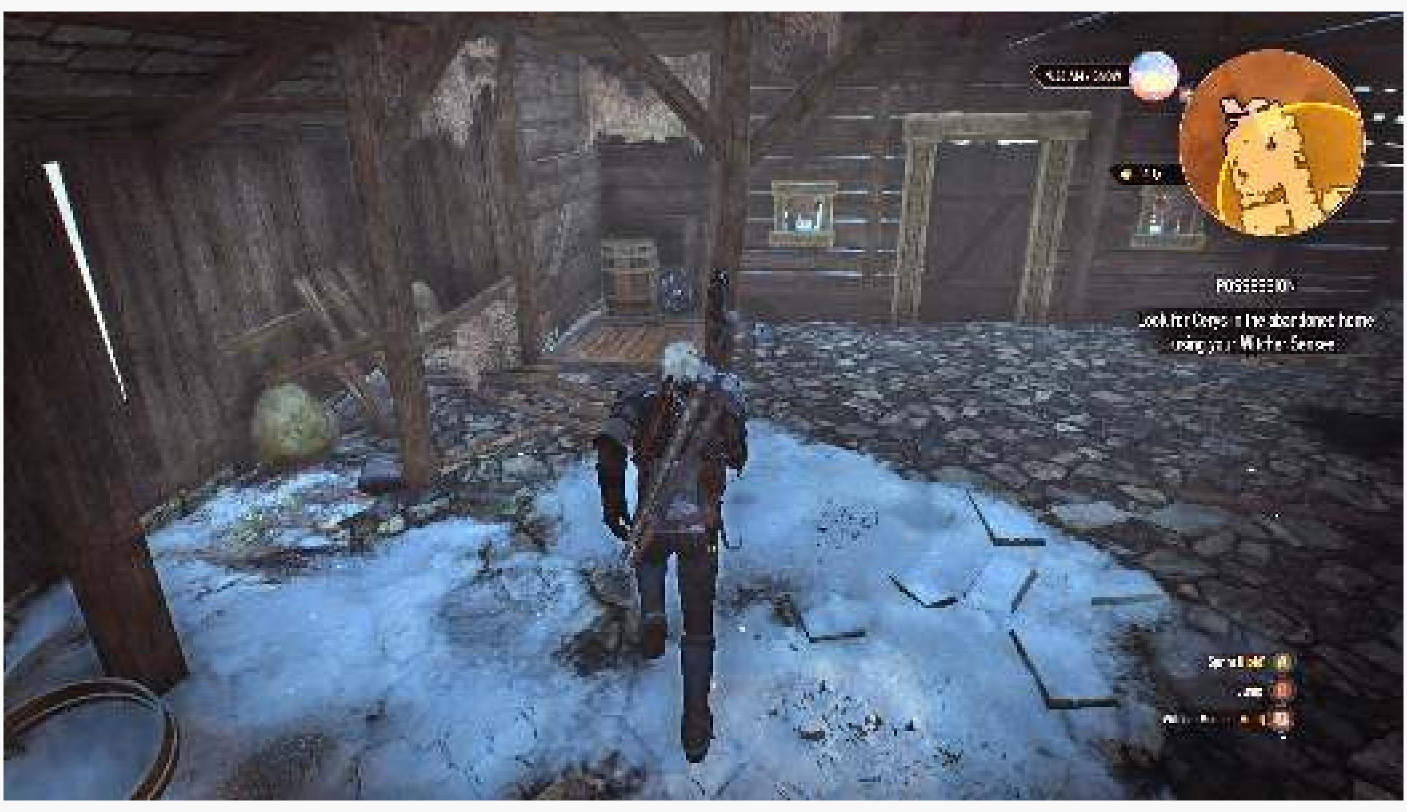


She tells you the sword is named Brokvar, the ancestral sword of Udalryk's clan. She needs it to lift the curse. She tells you the story of Udalryk and his brother Aki, who was given the sword despite Udalryk being the first-born son. Aki was killed during a fishing expedition, and Cerys reckons his ghost haunts this place. Though you don't necessarily agree with this hypothesis, you agree to help Cerys locate this blade.

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the sword named Brokvar.
- Tell Cerys you found the sword.

Enter the Abandoned House again, and inspect the middle bedroom. Something glittering catches your eye; it is a key to the cellar. Take it, and return to the main chamber with the fireplace. Head to the north corner and unlock the trapdoor here. Descend down the ladder into the stone cellar, and look for the table in the middle of the wall with the heirloom sword on it. Then head back up the ladder, and onto the large wooden deck outside where Cerys is waiting for you. Inform her your search was successful. ou can now pay Udalryk a visit.



ITEM: Quest Items: Key to Cellar, Brokvar

Secondary Quest: Possession

Dark Illusions

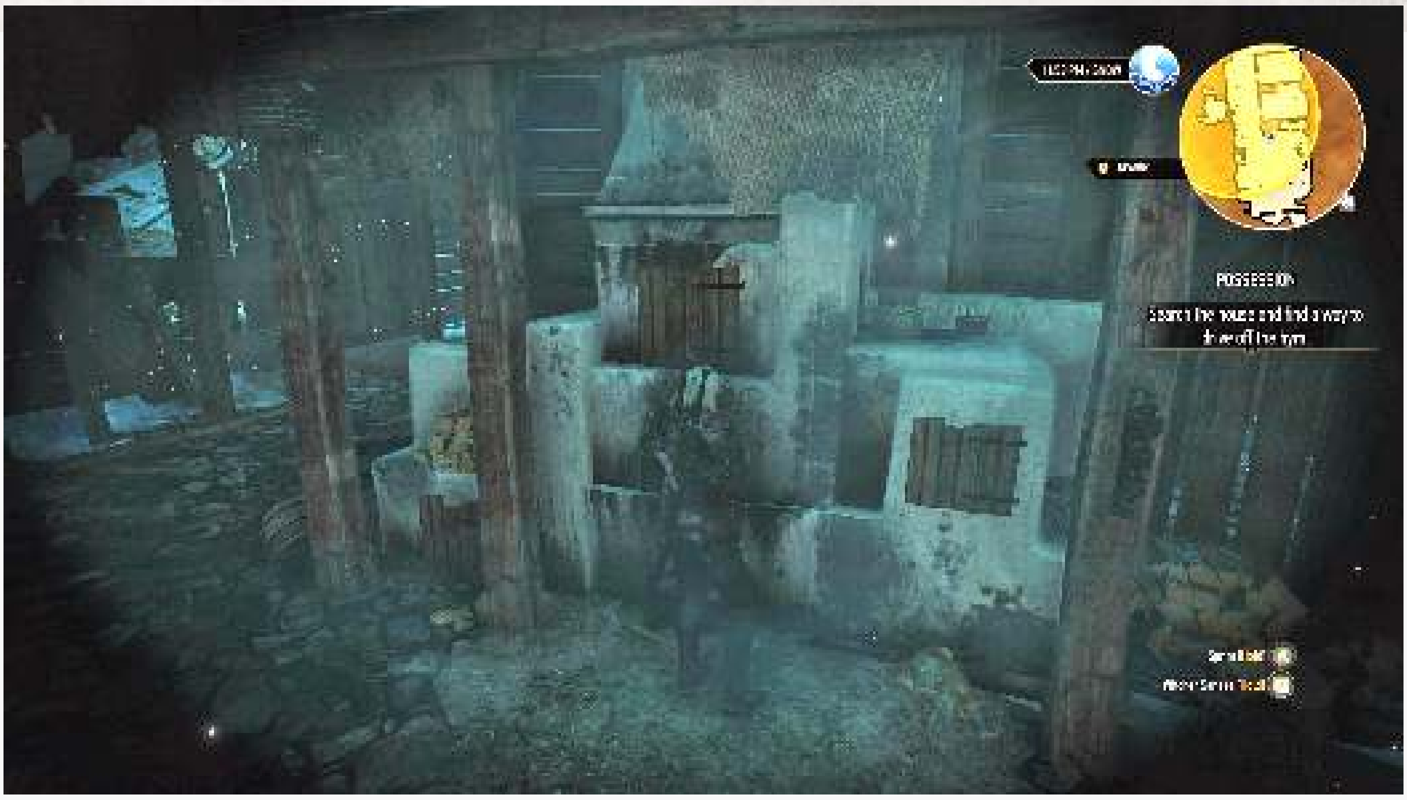
OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Cerys in Udalryk's old home.
- Search the house and find a way to drive off the hym.

Revisit the Abandoned House, and begin to search it thoroughly, using your Witcher Senses as you move from room to room.

- The main room fireplace has solid craftsmanship.
- The middle bedroom has Ciri lying face down on the bed! But this illusion is quickly dispelled, and the Hym must be scared to attempt to thwart him.
- The middle bedroom has a broken mirror—Udalryk must have been frightened of seeing the creature manifest behind him. It also is missing part of the wall, leading to a large chasm which looks dangerous.
- The far bedroom has an old cradle which must have belonged to Udalryk or Aki.

Cerys walks out and calls you. At this point, speaking with Cerys reveals she has a great idea to rid Udalryk of the Hym, but for the ruse to work, she isn't able to tell you about it. At this point, you can make a final decision: To trust Cerys or to try the fighting option.



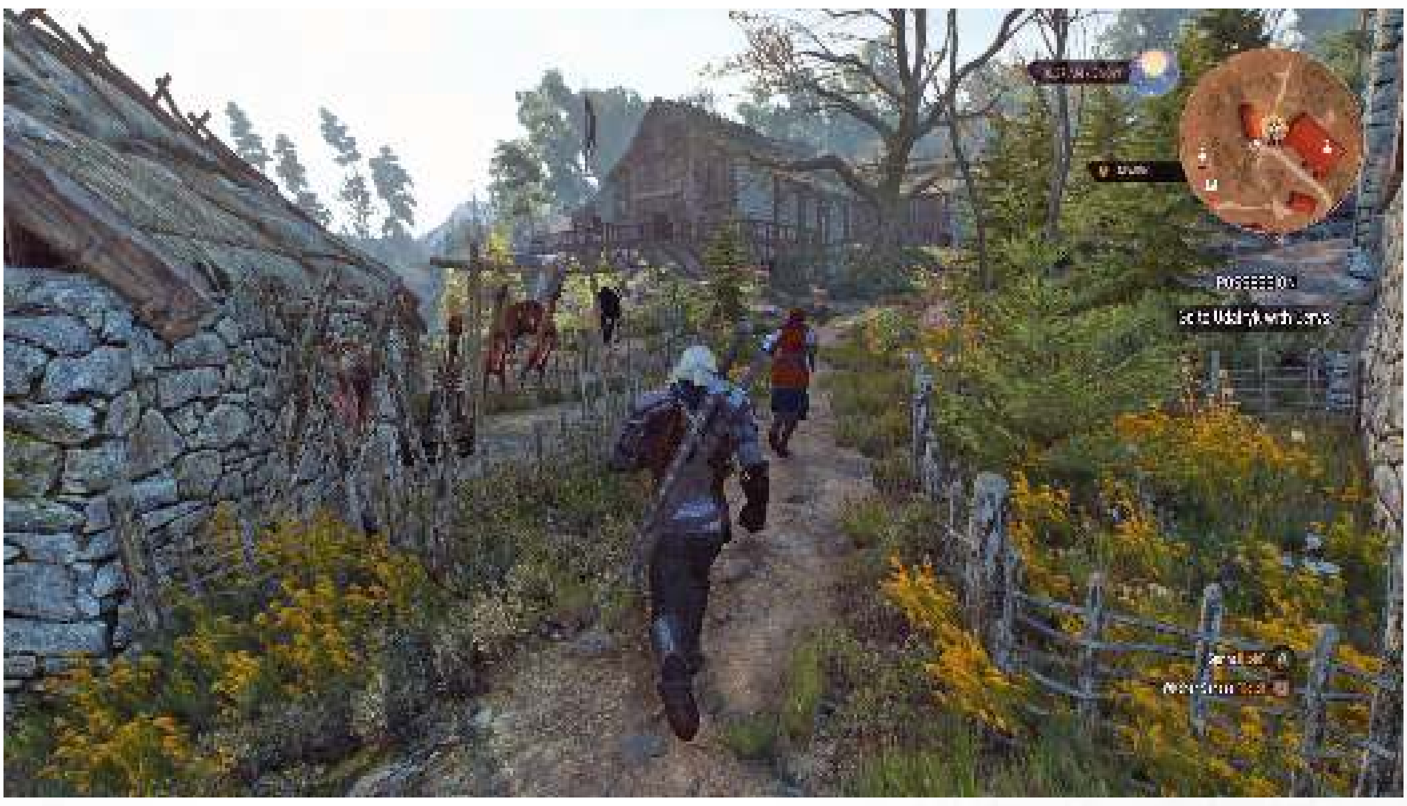
Secondary Quest: Possession

An Eye for an Aki

OBJECTIVE:

- Go to Udalruk with Cerys.

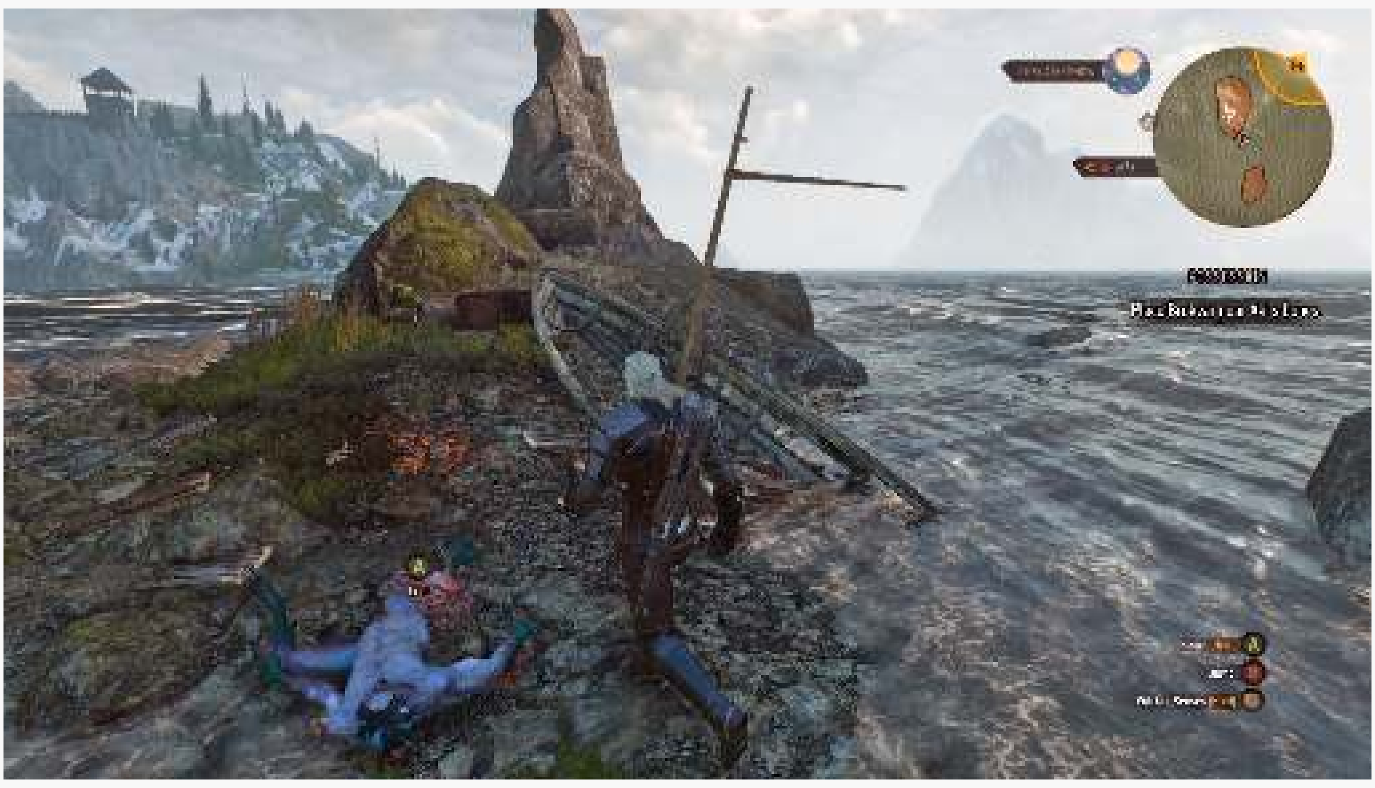
Follow Cerys down the mountain and into Svorlag, speaking to her along the way about Yennefer and a past falling out with Crach an Craite. Head back to the Jarl's longhouse. Udalryk is outside, nursing an arm wound, and Hjort is convincing him the fresh air is helpful to his demeanor. Udalryk doesn't know who you both are, telling you he hears the voices of the gods. Converse as you wish. You hypothesize that the voices are connected to Aki, and if the sword was returned to his brother, they would stop. Aki's remains lie off the shores of the island, in a treacherous area of waters. You agree to place the sword near the bones of Aki; you'll recognize them by the family ring the skeleton still wears.

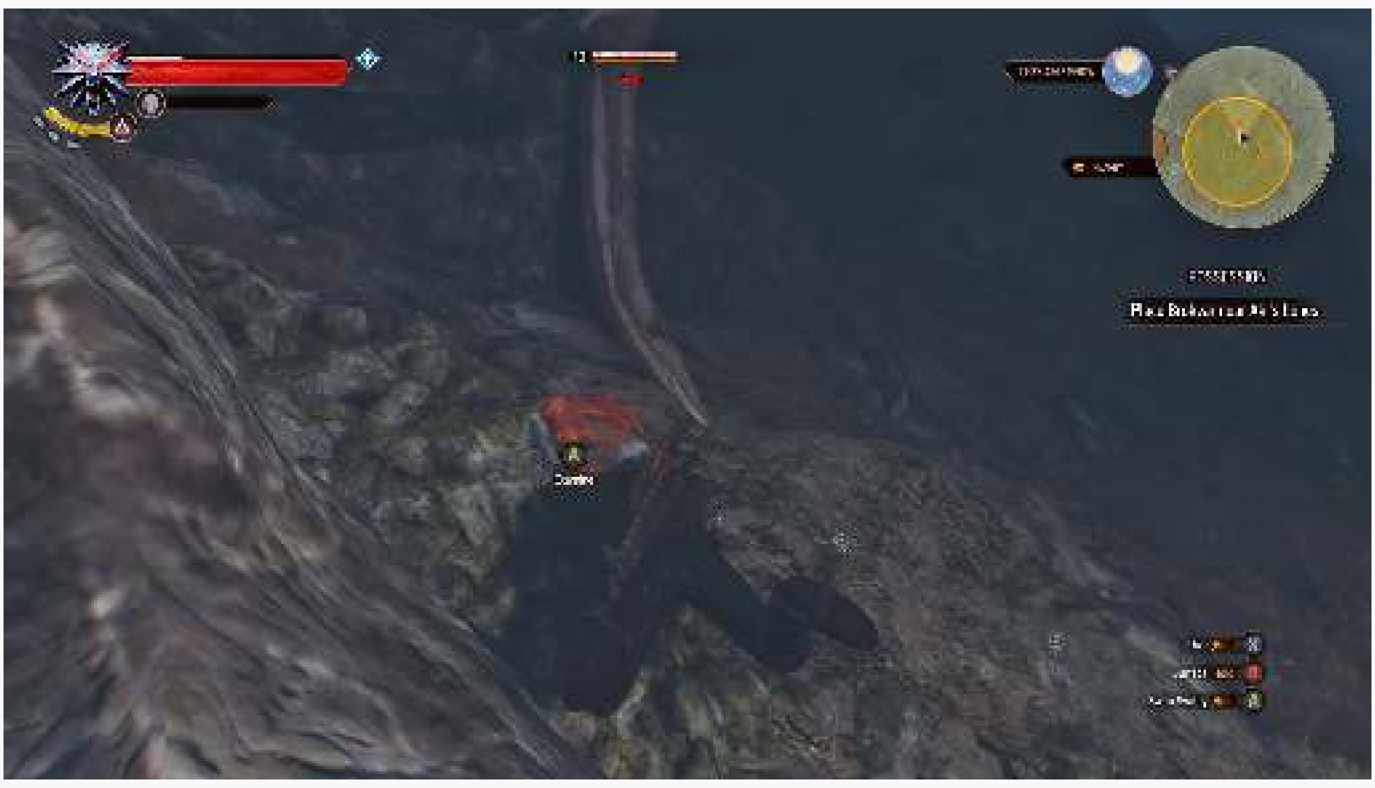


OBJECTIVE:

- Place Brokvar near Aki's bones.
- Return to Udalryk.

Run or swim southeast along the shore, to the small sandbank and islands at the mouth of the harbor. Three drowners are here to greet you close to the largest of the tiny islands, with a chest and dashed fishing boat on it. Slay the enemies, then take a plunge into the objective area. Look for the bones slightly northeast of the center of the area, optionally using your Witcher Senses to spot the pile of bones near a curved wooden plank and two angled rock formations. Despite the buffeting current, swim to the bones and interact with the corpse, placing the sword there.





Surface and quickly swim to the nearest tiny island so you can deal with any sirens that may have been attracted to your antics (except three). You don't believe this has solved the curse; an idea proved correct when you return to the jarl's

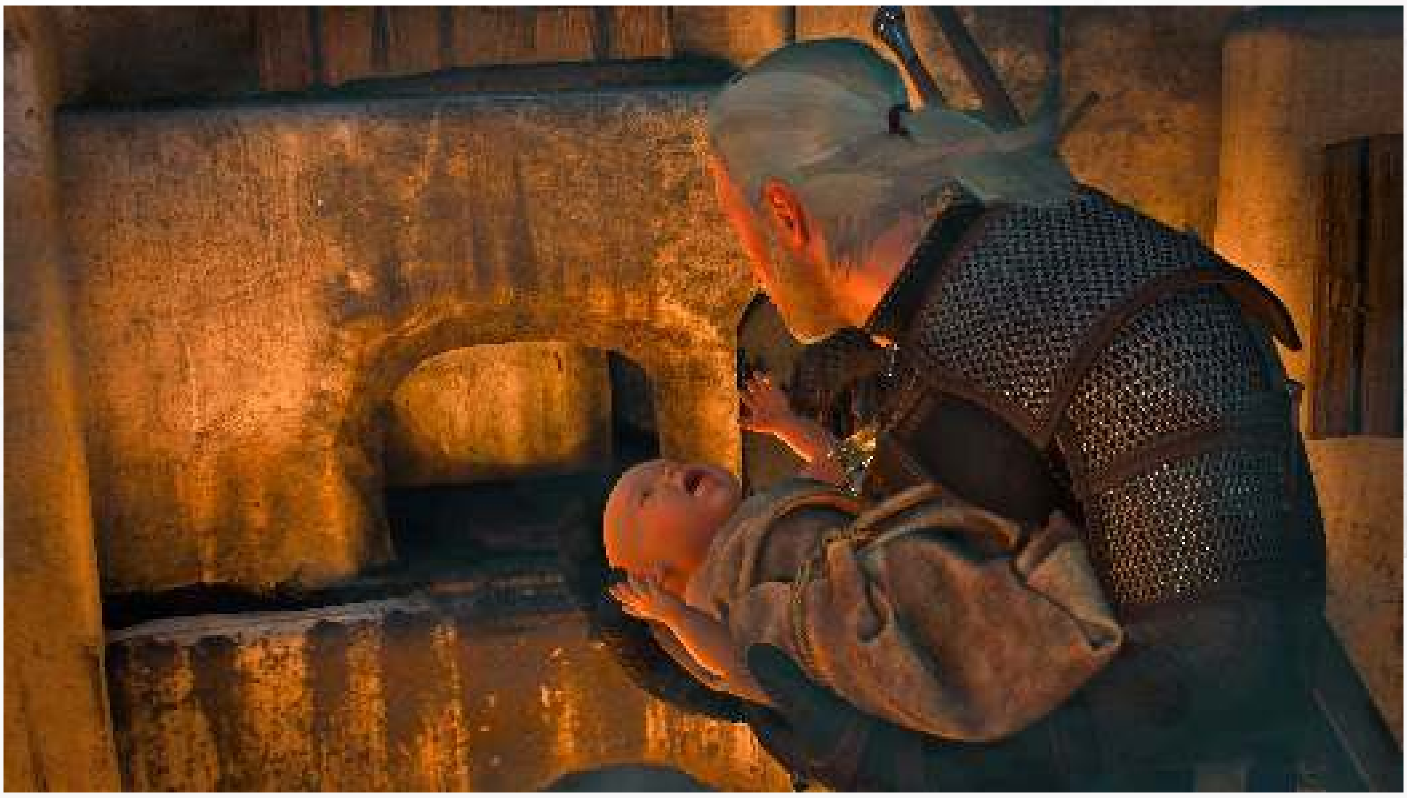
Secondary Quest: Possession

Trickery: Throw the Baby out with the Kindling

OBJECTIVE:

- Defeat Udalryk's warriors.

You wake from a slight doze near the stove to the sounds of footsteps running towards the house. Cerys bolts through the door carrying a baby in her arms. A moment later, Udalryk and his men burst through the door.



She throws the baby at you (as shown), yelling for you to toss the infant in the stove! Has Cerys taken leave of her senses too?! You can:

- Refuse, and the quest changes to the "Slaughter" option. The planning stage doesn't occur at the longhouse though. You figure everything out on the terrace of the Abandoned House.

- Comply, throw the baby into the fireplace, shut the door, and drag a screaming Udalryk back from rescuing the toasting bairn. Draw your weapon, and fight Udalryk's men. After defeating them, Udalryk tries in vain to open the stove door. At this moment, the Hym looms out of the shadows (as shown). Cerys now appears with the child gathered in her arms—she had cunningly pulled it out of the stove using the back door behind the oven. Having been tricked, the Hym is forced to depart.

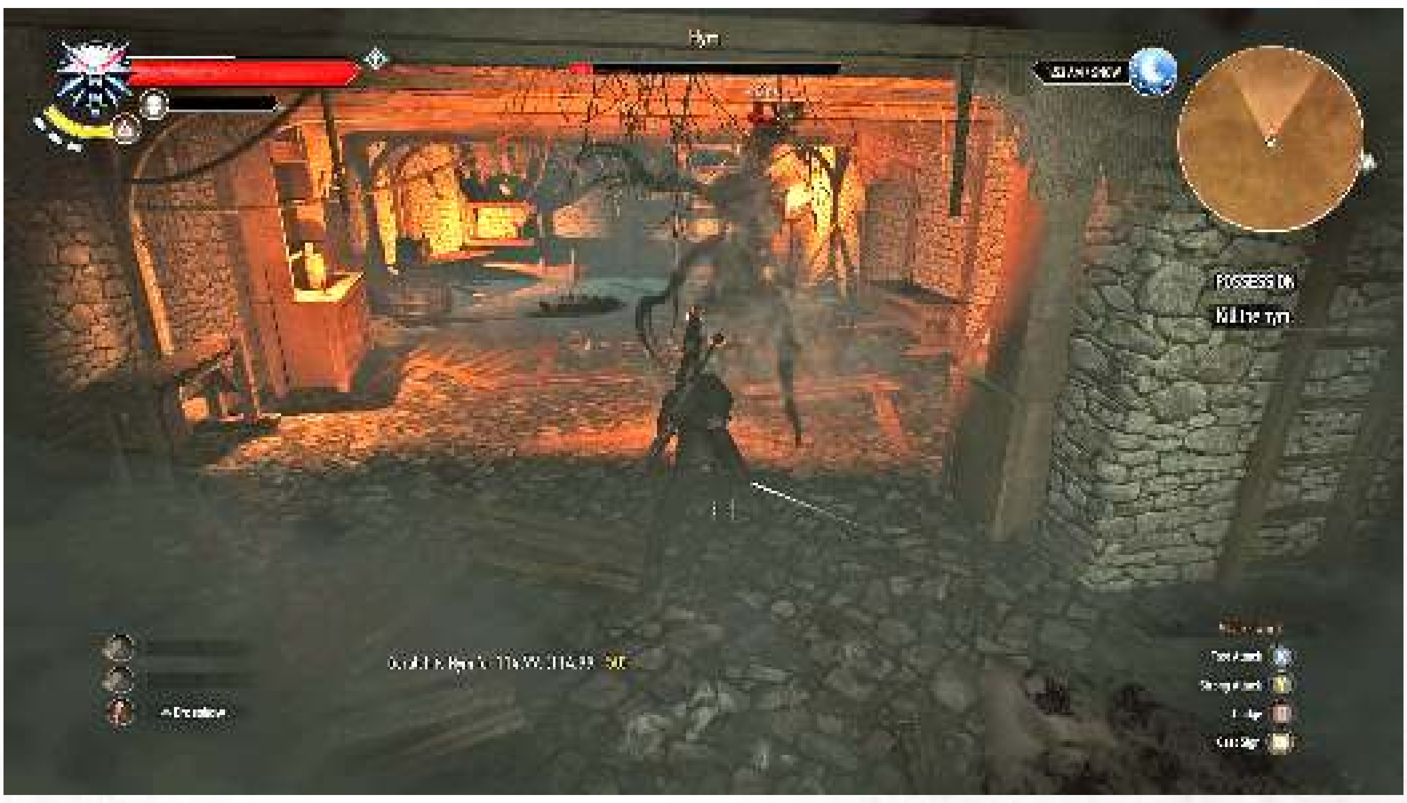
Secondary Quest: Possession

Slaughter: You and Hym

OBJECTIVES:

- Bring torches from the storage shed.
- Place the torches around the abandoned home (4).
- When you're ready, talk to Udalryk.
- Light the torches. Kill the Hym.

You walk back to the Jarl's longhouse with Cerys, and speak with Udalryk and Hjort, explaining that they are being tormented by a Hym, which must be forced out of the darkness. Udalryk must return to his abandoned family home, spend the night in the Hym's lair, and you gather some torches (from the outside storage shed) to lighten the ominous nature of the place. Return to the Abandoned House; Cerys and Udalryk are waiting for you there.



Place four torches inside the Abandoned House at the indicated locations. Return to Udalryk and tell him everything is ready. Udalryk's mettle returns, and he tells you this born and bred Skelliger is ready for battle! You tell Udalryk to instead think more pleasant thoughts or the Hym may drag him into feelings of guilt and despair.

Enter the house, light the torches to summon the Hym, and begin the fight. Focus your attacks on the Hym, ignoring Udalryk's panicked screaming. When Udalryk flees out of the main room, the Hym disappears. Use Axii to mentally calm Udalryk during these moments of insanity. When Udalryk returns to the room, the Hym reappears. After whittling the Hym's health down to around one quarter, it disappears from view. You realize it has retreated deeper into its lair; take the ladder down into the stone cellar and finish the foe. After the Hym is slain, lead Udalryk out of the house.

VULNERABILITIES: DEALING WITH DARKNESS

The Hym is an evil spirit with a variety of attacks and a few weaknesses to exploit. Find these out in the Bestiary.

ITEM: Bomb: Silver Dust, Oil: Specter, Sign: Igni

END: OUT OF THE SHADOWS

OBJECTIVE:

- Tell Udalryk it's all over.

You speak to Udalryk and tell him he will be tormented no longer. The voices in his head were caused by the Hym. Udalryk is still very confused, but you reassure Cerys (who is staying with Udalryk) that his mental strength will return. You depart on most friendly terms with Cerys, who has proved her worth as a warrior and a tactician. The quest now concludes.

CHARACTERS : Arnvald, Hjalmar an Craite, Cerys an Craite, Steingrim, Birna Bran, Crach an Craite, Halbjorn Black Hand, Holger Black Hand, Hjort, Madman Lugos, Donar an Hindar, Svanrige Bran

ENEMIES : Bears, Seamen, Halgrim, Artis

QUESTING DECISIONS

With your help, both Hjalmar and Cerys defied death, and improved their chances in the race for Skellige's throne. This quest becomes available automatically, once both Main Quests: The Lord of Undvik and Echoes of the Past are completed. It is optional.

- During Main Quest: Destination Skellige, if you killed Steingrim (the first islander, who found you washed up on the beach), you have no interactions with him at the feast hall.

THE TIME TO ACT IS NOW!

If you don't attempt this quest, and continue your adventuring to the point where Act III: Battle Preparations begins, Svanrige Bran becomes King of Skellige. The Craite Clan never recovers.

OBJECTIVES

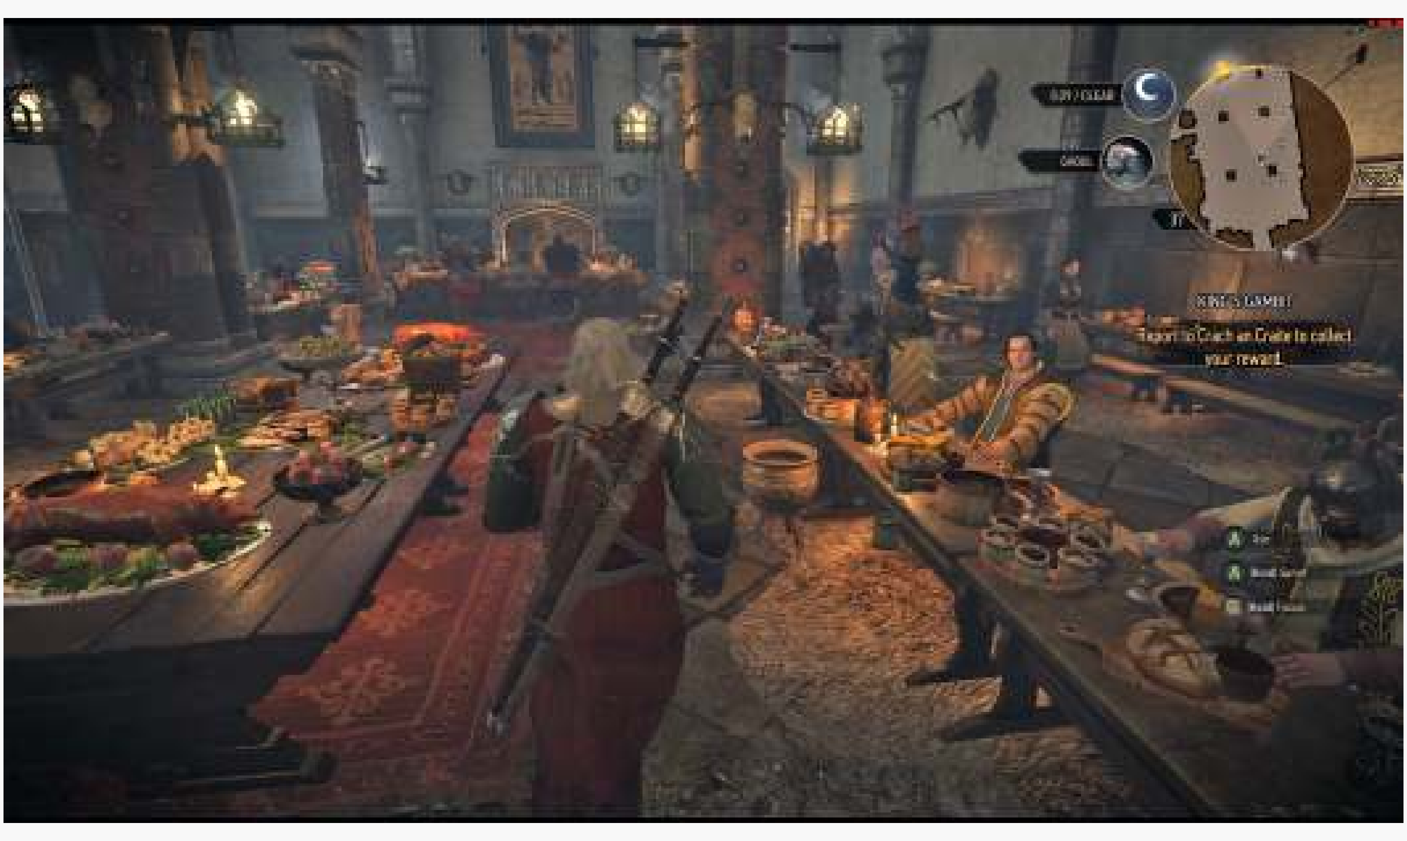
- Report to Crach an Craite to collect your reward.
- Nearest Signpost: Bridge to Kaer Trolde.

Arnvald

Cerys an Craite

Hjalmar an Craite

You are summoned to a great feast held by Crach an Craite in which mead would flow, and the achievements of his son and daughter would sway those islanders still undecided on who to crown the new ruler of Ard Skellig. Cross the bridge to Kaer Trolde Keep, where you are met by Arnvald. Normally the doors to the Keep would be closed during this ceremony, but Crach has made an exception; you are considered a son of Skellige! Head into the Keep, and down to the feast hall.



KING'S GAMBIT

Report to Crach an Craite to collect your reward.

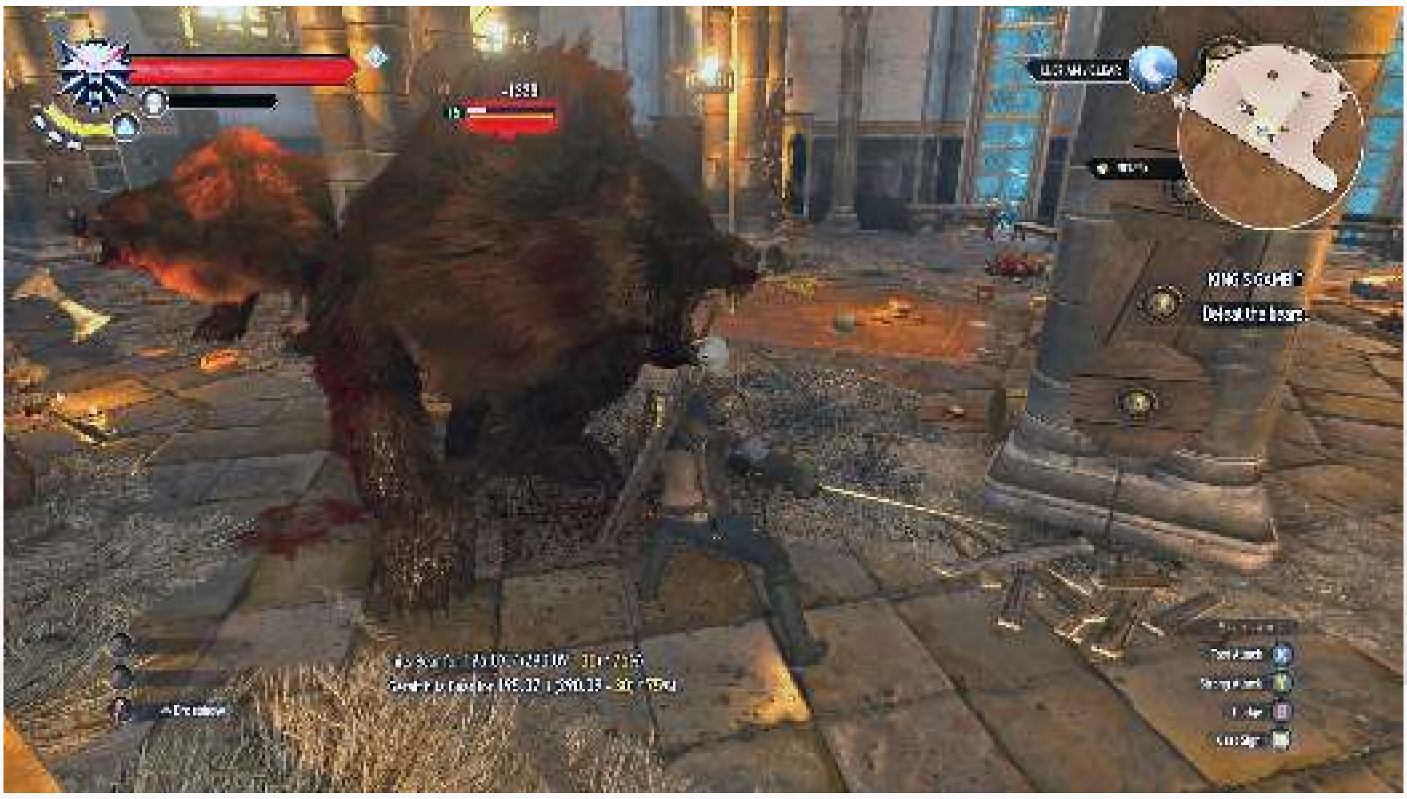
Secondary Quest: King's Gambit

Feast of the Bears

OBJECTIVE:

- Defeat the bears.

Race to the feast hall and a scene of bloodletting and chaos. Four gigantic bears are loose in the chamber, and are devouring soldiers and guests alike. Spring into action, and immediately battle the nearest bear, before rushing to the aid of the Skelligers still tackling the three other hairy behemoths.



Panic reigns. Halbjorn, son of Jarl Holger, howls as he succumbs to his wounds. Holger tries to revive him, but Hjort (Jarl Udalryk's seer) declares him dead. There is pushing and shoving. Madman Lugos accuses Crach of being responsible for the bears. Hjalmar takes this as an insult to his family. Crach and Lugos are about to come to blows when Jarl Donar simmers the tension and calls everyone to order. Crach is to find those responsible, and kill them, else his clan will be cursed for a hundred generations. Speak to Crach now, asking what you wish, as he orders Hjalmar and Cerys to investigate.

Stop for a moment to decide who you wish to partner with:

- "I'll help you, Cerys": You help Crach's daughter.
- "Going with Hjalmar": You help Crach's son.
- Or refuse to help anyone at all, stall the quest, and ignore the rest of the an Craite quests.

You may only choose one, and it influences the rest of his quest, and your adventure!

Secondary Quest: King's Gambit

Surreptitious Cerys: Cellar Smells Where a Traitor Dwells

OBJECTIVES:

- Examine the crime scene using your Witcher Senses.
- Examine the traces of wine around the crime scene.
- Find the source of the scent.

While Hjalmar races off to kill some Vildkaarl beserkers, you take a more measured approach with Cerys in the feast hall. Ask her who died (many; only her, Hjalmar and Svarige have claim to the throne), and what happened before the massacre. Then look around, using your Witcher Senses:

- One corpse has fang and claw marks, and broken bones. It is difficult to say what killed him. There are other corpses to examine, too.

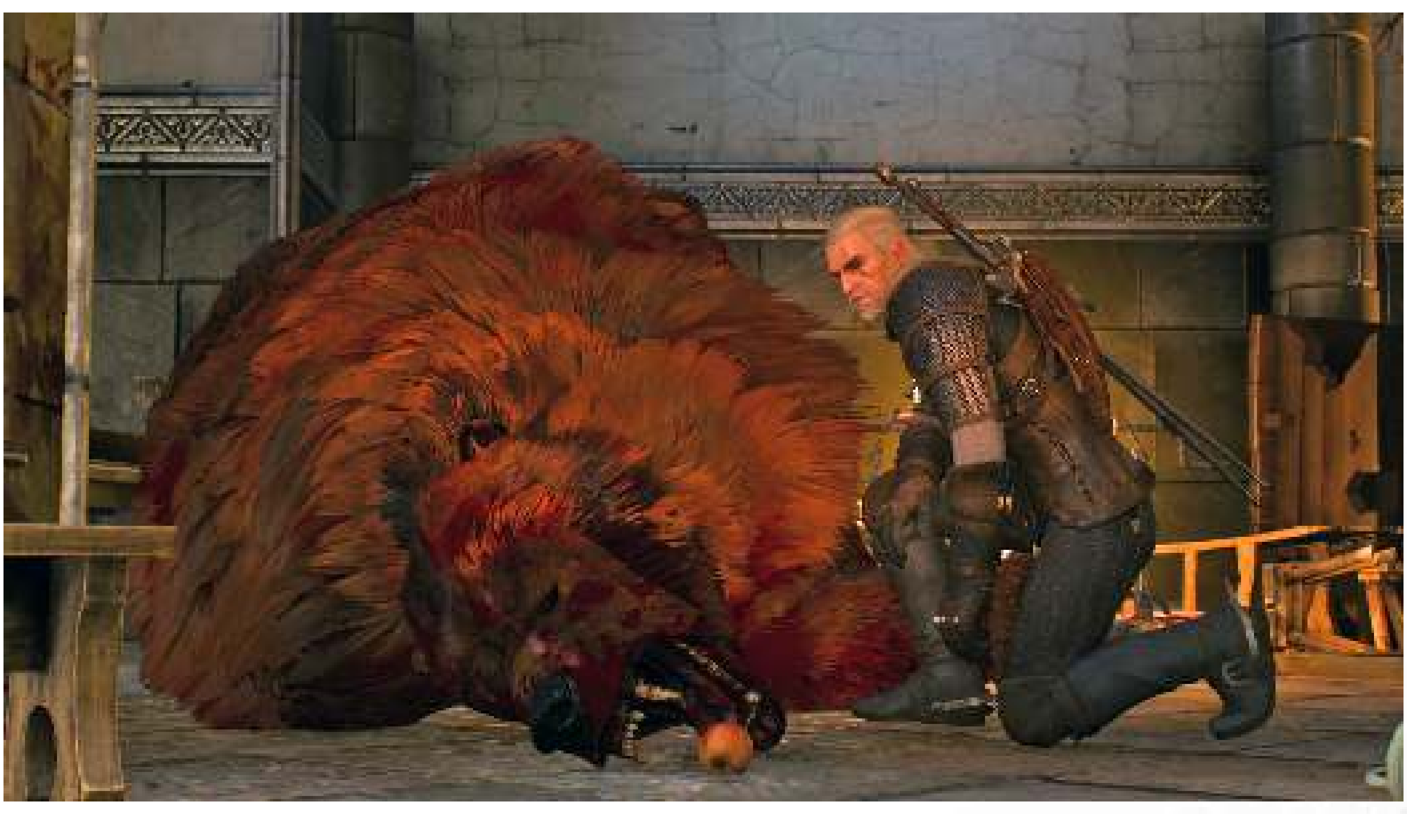
Head over to one of the bears, and examine it:

- (The Head) A bear's head, but a short tongue like a human's. The mouth smells of alcohol and earth.
- (The Torso) Under the fur is a tattoo in the shape of a paw.
- (The Limbs) Evidence of a sutured old scar.

This is a half-man, half-bear. But what caused the transformation? The mead is a clue; you should check the horns, tankards, and bowls.

- Mead horns are empty.
- A bowl has the whiff of… mushrooms?
- Another bowl—one at each table—contains mead and only mead.

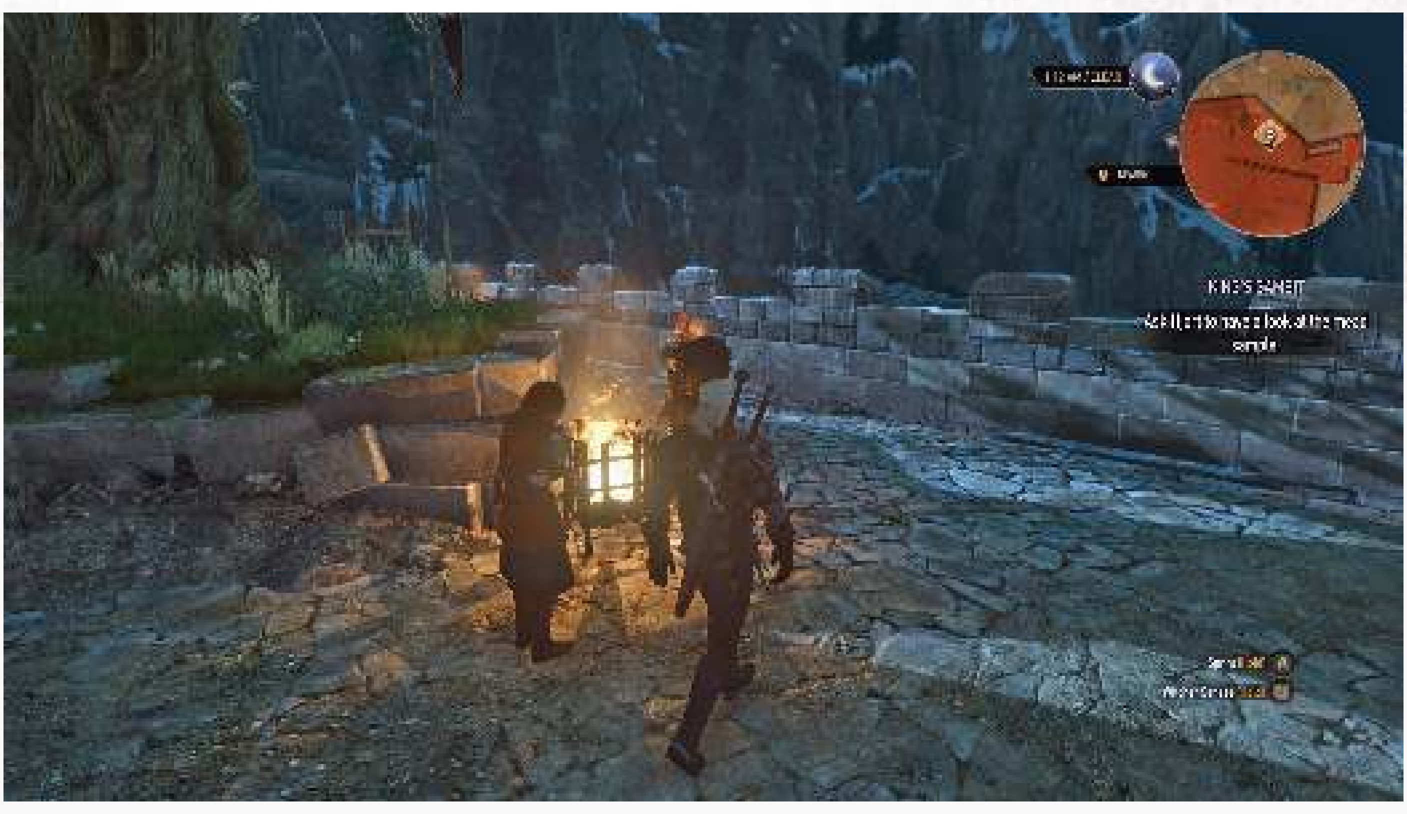
The scent of mead and something earthy fills your nostrils. Head north to the open door, and examine the small table to the left of it. You call over Cerys, who confirms you are dealing with werebears—known colloquially as beserkers. You reveal the beserkers' mead was spiked with what you think is blood. Cerys suggests Hjort might be able to help.



OBJECTIVE:

- Ask Hjort to have a look at the mead sample.

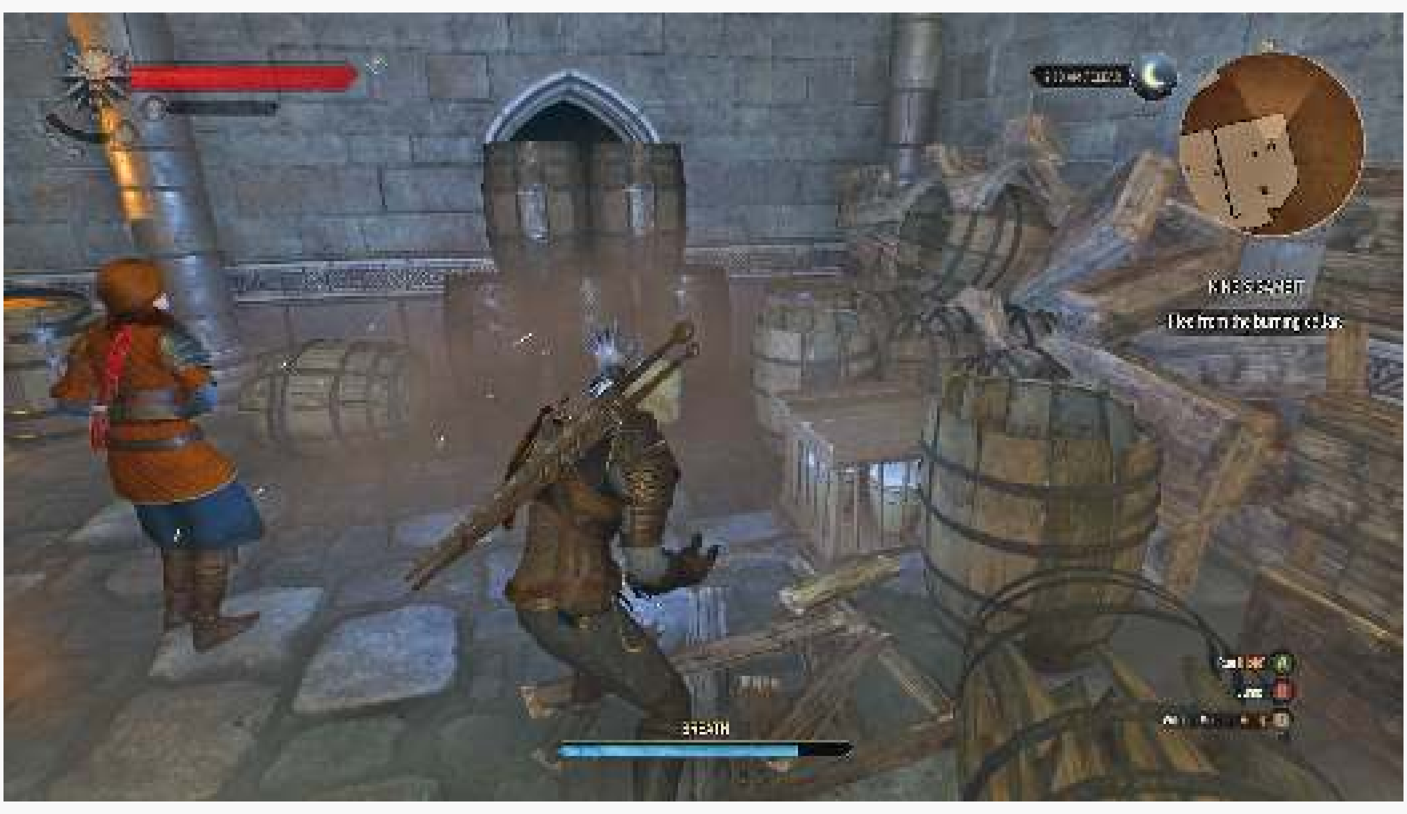
Head east from the feast hall, onto the exterior battlements where the remaining Jarls are raising their voices about what happened. Listen and speak to them too, if you wish. Hjort is praying to Freya. Interrupt him, and hand him the mead horn. He immediately recognizes the smell as the mushroom "mardroeme" (or "psilocybe"). It causes hallucinations in humans, and eases pain in small doses. But how was it slipped into the wine? Away from the feast in the cellars; that's where!



OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Cerys to the cellar.
- Examine the cellar.
- Examine the mead in the open barrels.
- Flee from the burning cellar.

Dash after Cerys through the feast hall to the entrance, across to the north corner exit, down past the smithy, into a series of descending corridors that end at the cellar entrance to the south. Cerys wants to show you where the poisons are kept. She walks to some steps, and down to a lower area of the cellar. Cerys reckons the stench is revolting, but it's from some Mahakaman spirit. Use your Witcher Senses to inspect the various barrels until you reach the one in the southeast corner that looks different. This is the brew that caused the berserkers' transformation. Someone tosses a torch into the cellar, and the high-proof spirit goes up in flames. There's no way back. Only into a secret passage on the northeast corner of the cellar, blocked by barrels. Use Aard to destroy the barrel blockage and sprint into the tunnels.



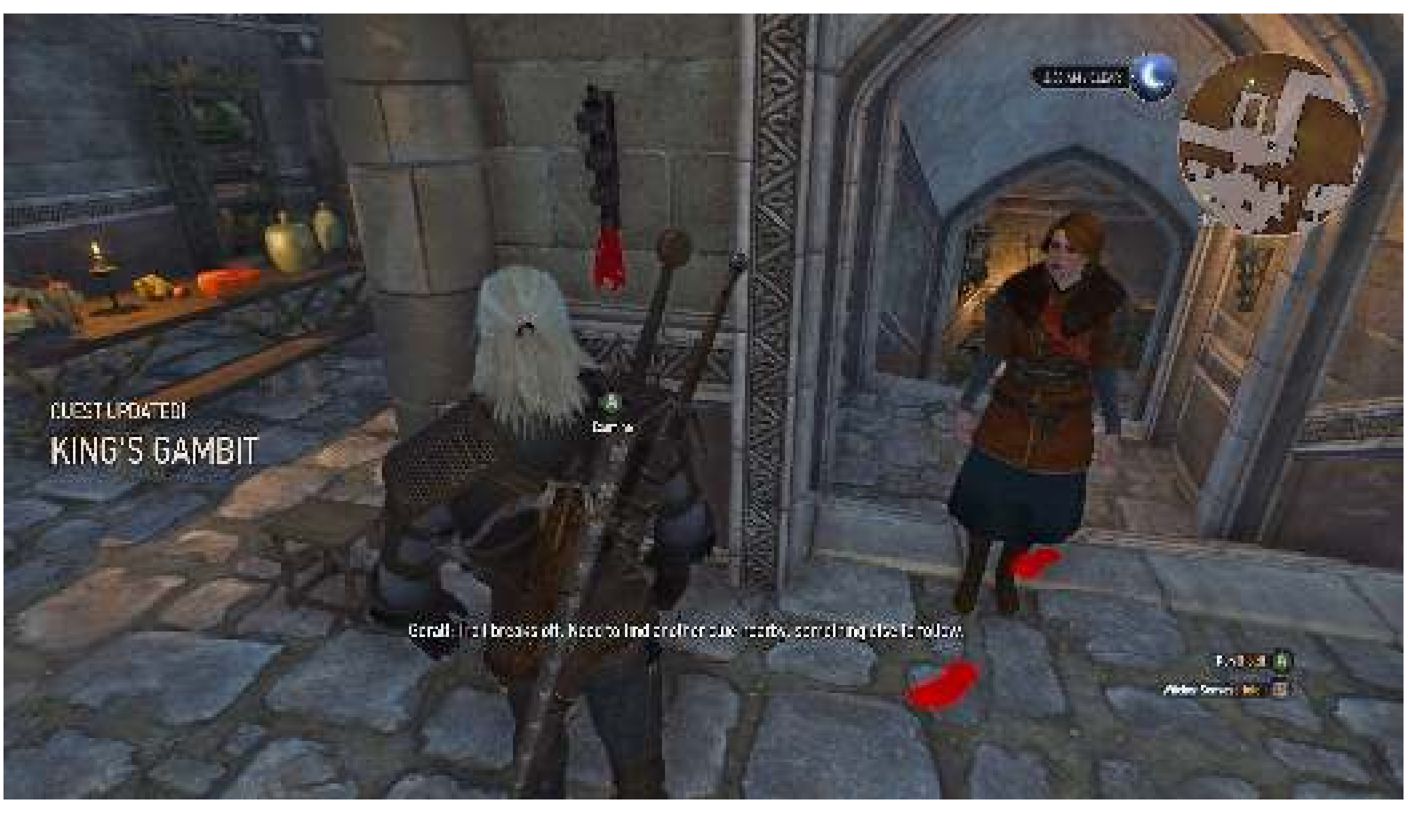
Secondary Quest: King's Gambit

Surreptitious Cerys: Bran-Dishing Evidence

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Cerys through the tunnel.
- Look for tracks around the cellar door using your Witcher Senses.
- Follow the footprints.
- Look around for a clue.
- Catch Arnvald.

Follow Cerys and emerge from the tunnels without incident. You decide to revisit the cellar entrance to look for evidence of the culprit.



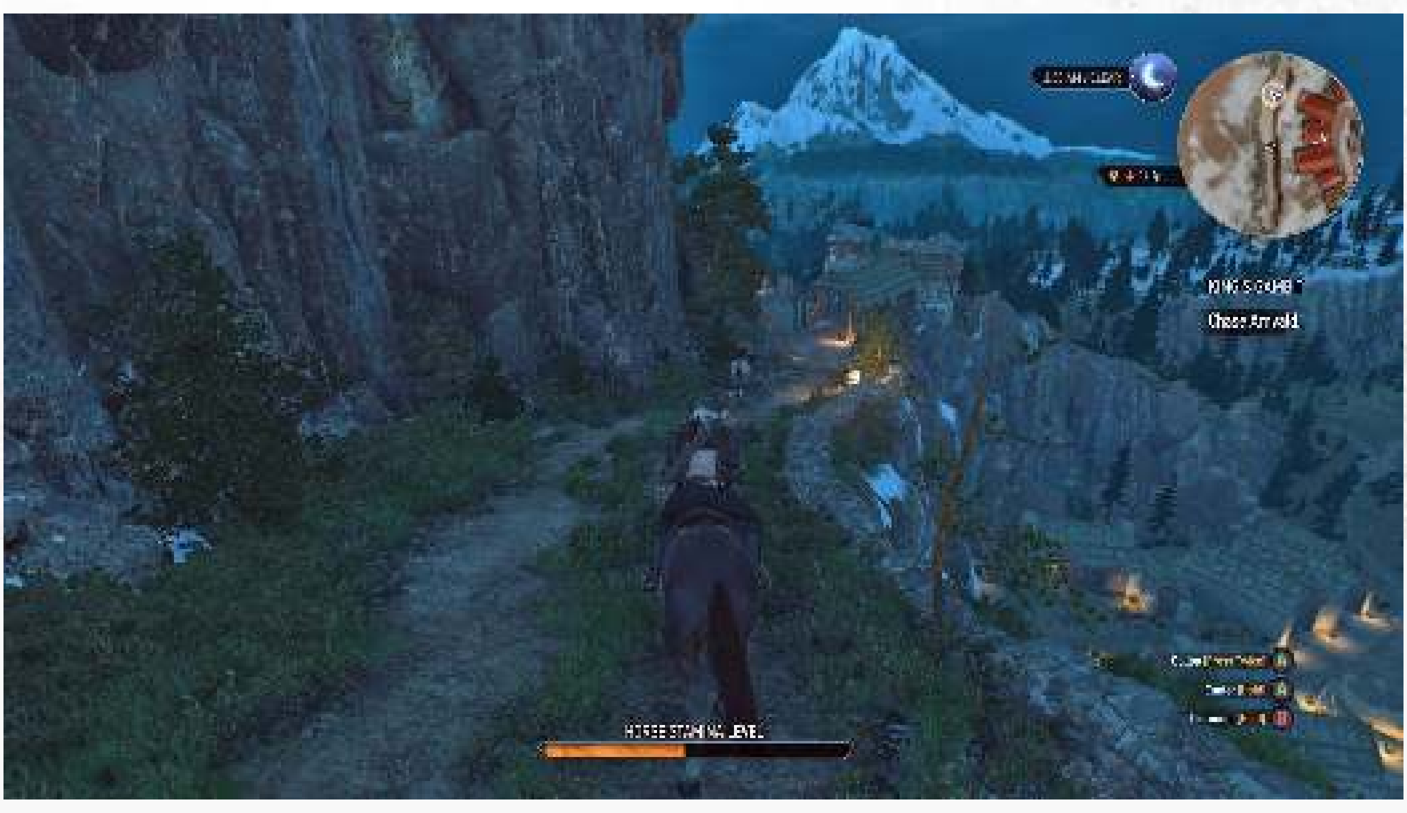
Head south up the steps, and examine a set of footprints (using your Witcher Senses) at the cellar door. Someone walked through spilled mead. Now turn and follow the footprints up the main stairs back up towards the smithy. On a landing, examine a wall torch: There is a scrap of cloth on it. Cerys is shocked; only Arnvald wears this fabric! Race up and out of the cellar corridor, across the exterior battlements and smithy, and up into the Keep entrance. You see Arnvald leap on a horse and race off.

OBJECTIVES:

- Chase Arnvald.
- Save Arnvald.
- Search Arnvald's body.
- Search for evidence in Arnvald's room.

Arnvald's guilt is unquestionable, but bringing him to justice is tricky. Gallop after him, following the route down the cliff path and tunnel, out of Kaer Trolde, and along the road heading roughly south. He bears right twice; first at the parked caravans, and second at the fork in the road, and heads directly to a group of bandit seamen; wearing Clan Tuirseach colors and waiting for him at the beach. You can end the chase in a number of ways:

- (Crossbow) While riding, produce your crossbow and knock Arnvald off his horse. You're commended by Cerys, and Arnvald is usually alive.
- (Aard or Igni) While riding, use either Aard or Igni to remove Arnvald from his steed. Cerys is impressed, and Arnvald is usually alive.
- (Beach Fight) Should Arnvald reach the beach, he is expecting to be smuggled out of Ard Skellig by these seafarers loyal to his cause. But you can never trust these bandits; Arnvald's usefulness has expired, and they attack him. Battle five of them, moving to Arnvald's proximity and drawing attacks away from him. If you don't, he is easily slain.
- (Losing the Trail) If you aren't quick enough in tailing Arnvald, head towards the beach area in your own time. You discover Arnvald's corpse on the sand.



After the tumble from his horse, or bandit fight, Arnvald is either dead or alive:

- (Arnvald is alive) He moans on at his hatred towards the an Craites, but agrees to implicate Birna Bran and the berserkers at a trial.
- (Arnvald is dead) Cerys is shocked at the betrayal. You decide to search Arnvald's corpse, and find a small key. Cerys sees the tartans the bandits where wearing, but you tell her not to jump to conclusions.

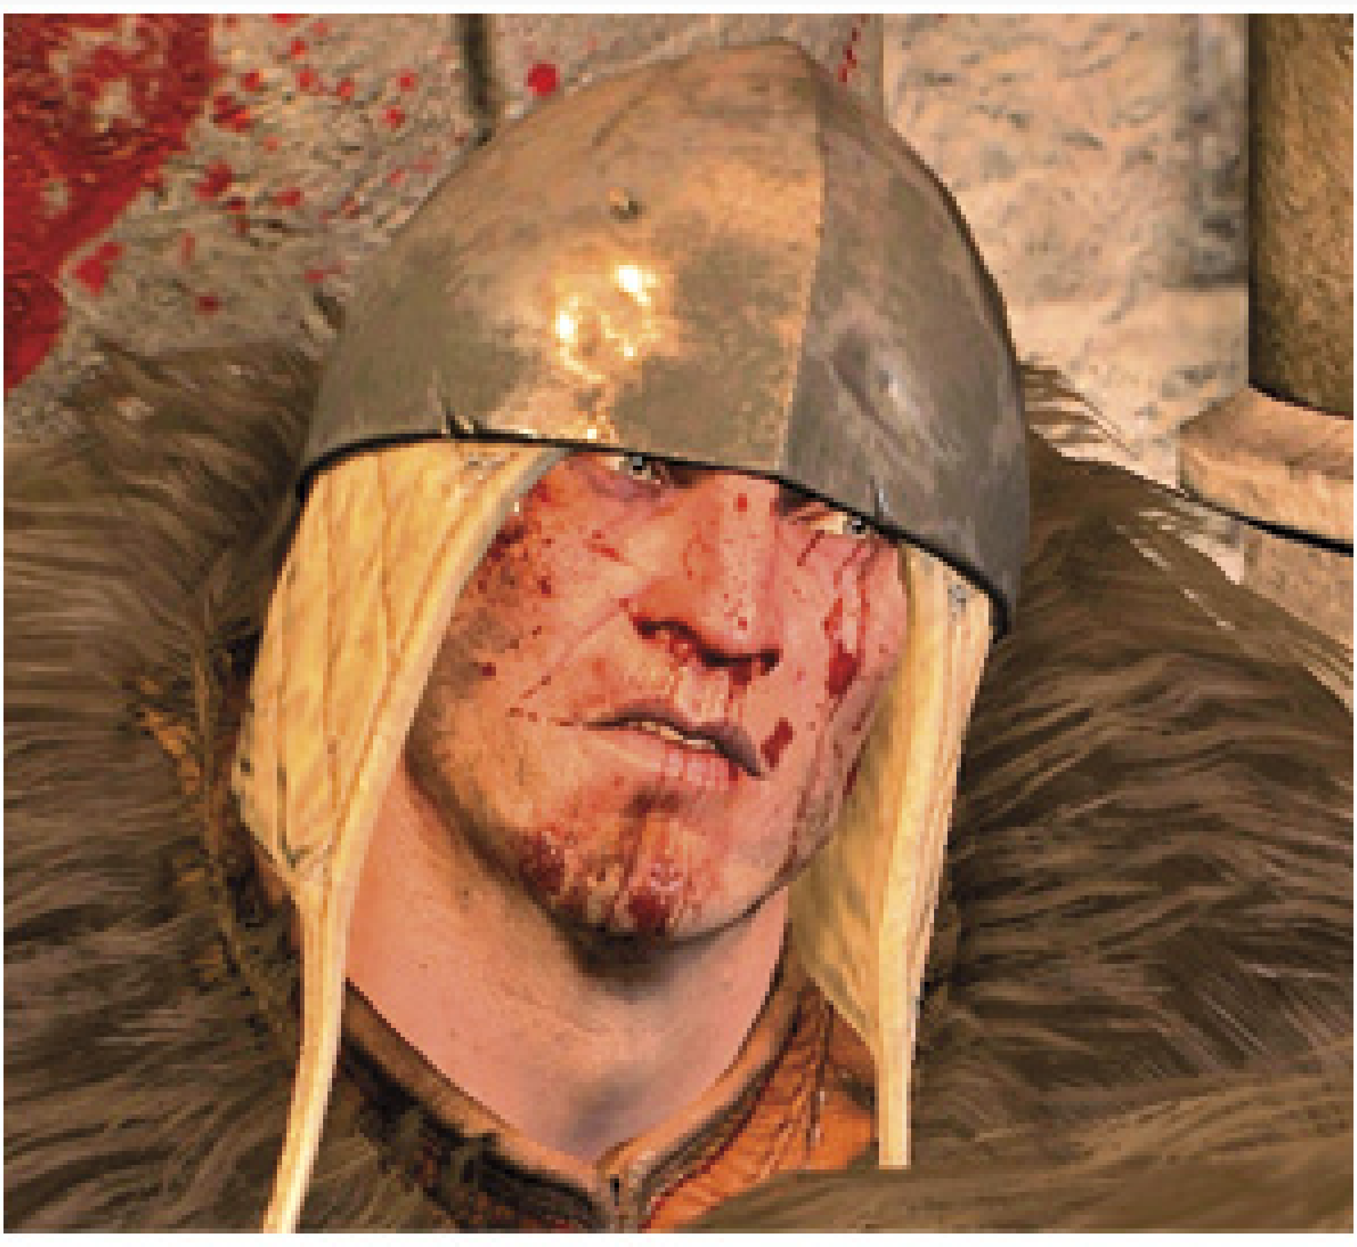
ITEM: Quest Item: Arnvald's Key

Back at Kaer Trolde Keep, use your Witcher Senses to thoroughly search Arnvald's room:

- There are strewn clothese everywhere, and a missing shoe.
- The other shoe is under a small table. Check inside the shoe for another key.

ITEM: Quest Item: Key to Arnvald's Chest

Close to his bed is an envelope with a particular smell attached to it. Follow the scent to a hidden compartment in the northeast corner of the room. Use the key to unlock it; inside is a letter. The perfume is Birna's! The letter isn't signed, but the evidence is enough. Read on to "Cerys' Conclusion", below.

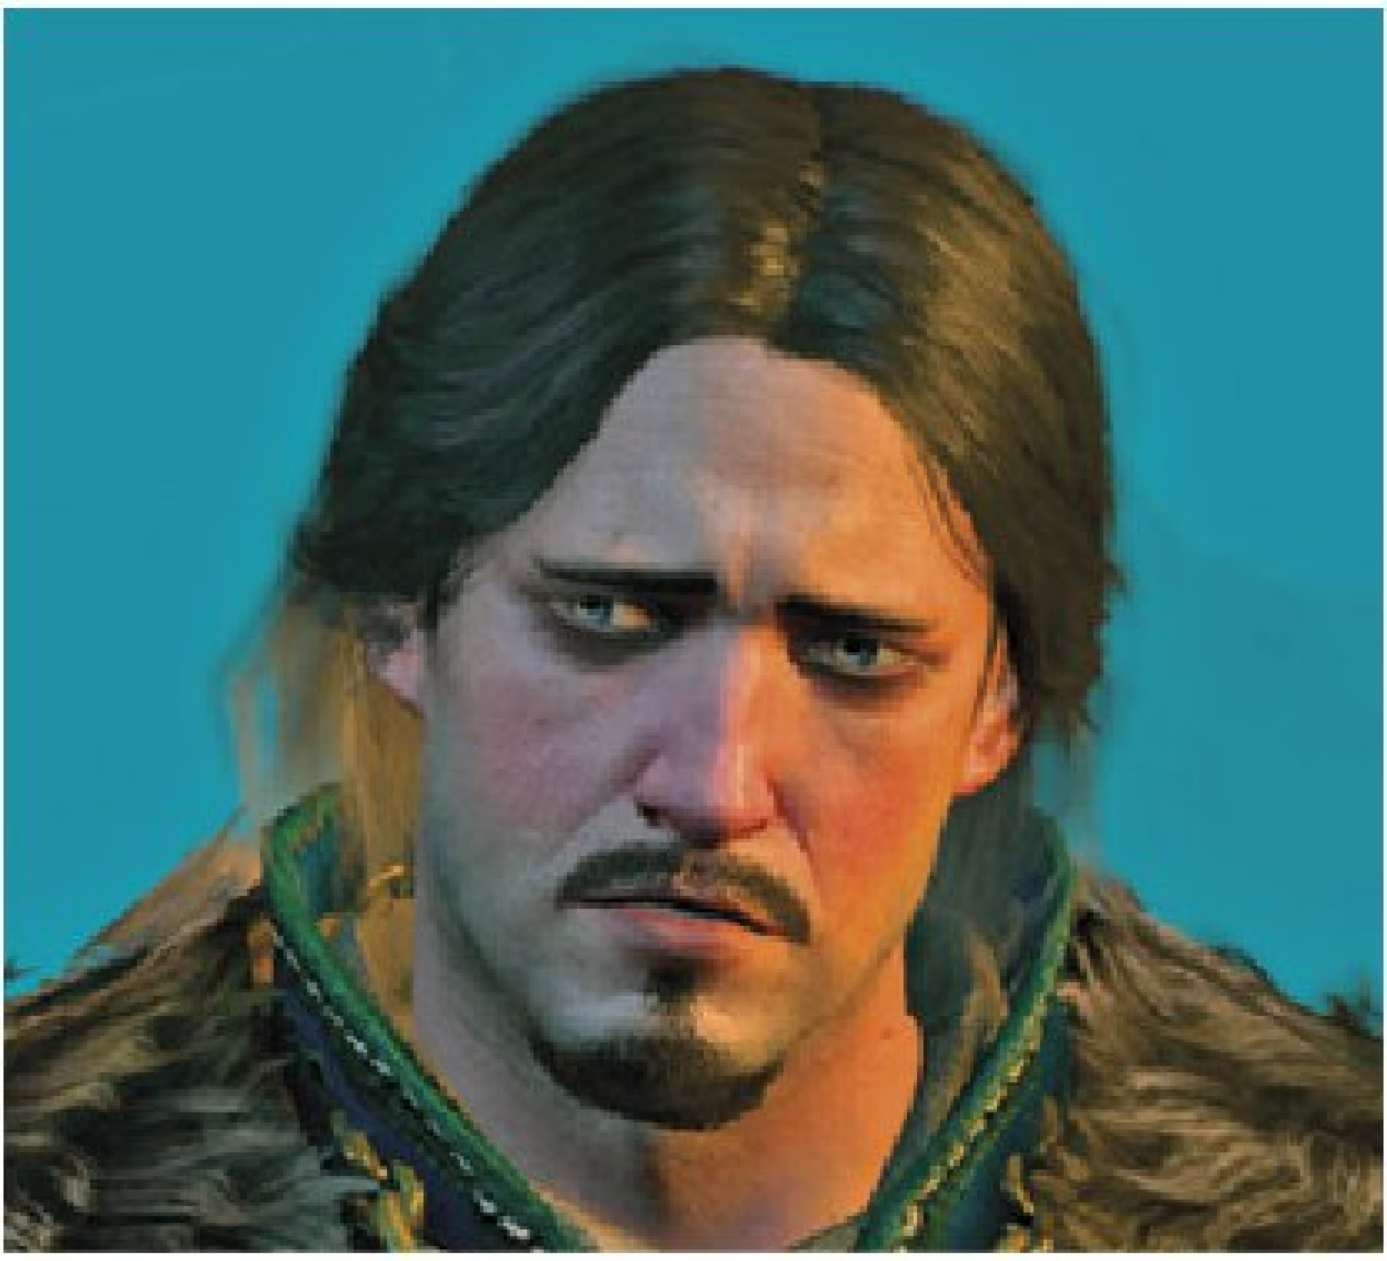


Halbjorn, son of Holge

Secondary Quest: King's Gambit

Cerys' Conclusion: Whose Hand Does the Blood Stain

Jarl Donar an Hindar calls a meeting of the Jarls together. Lady Bran is accused by Cerys. Birna is indignant and refutes the accusation.



Svanrige Bran

- (Arnvald is alive) He is summoned and testifies against Birna Bran.
- (Arnvald is dead) Cerys explains how Arnvald acted on behalf of Bran.

Birna scoffs at such accusations until you produce the letter from Birna to Arnvald. This still isn’t enough for the Jarls, and they are about to retire and seek punishment against the an Craites when Birna’s son Svanrige turns against his mother! Birna is furious and dismayed, but Jarl Donar orders her chained to a rock to perish of hunger and thirst, with sea fowl pecking apart her remains. Svanrige will be banished.

Secondary Quest: King's Gambit

Headstrong Hjalmar: Brimming with Bestiality and Barbarism

OBJECTIVES:

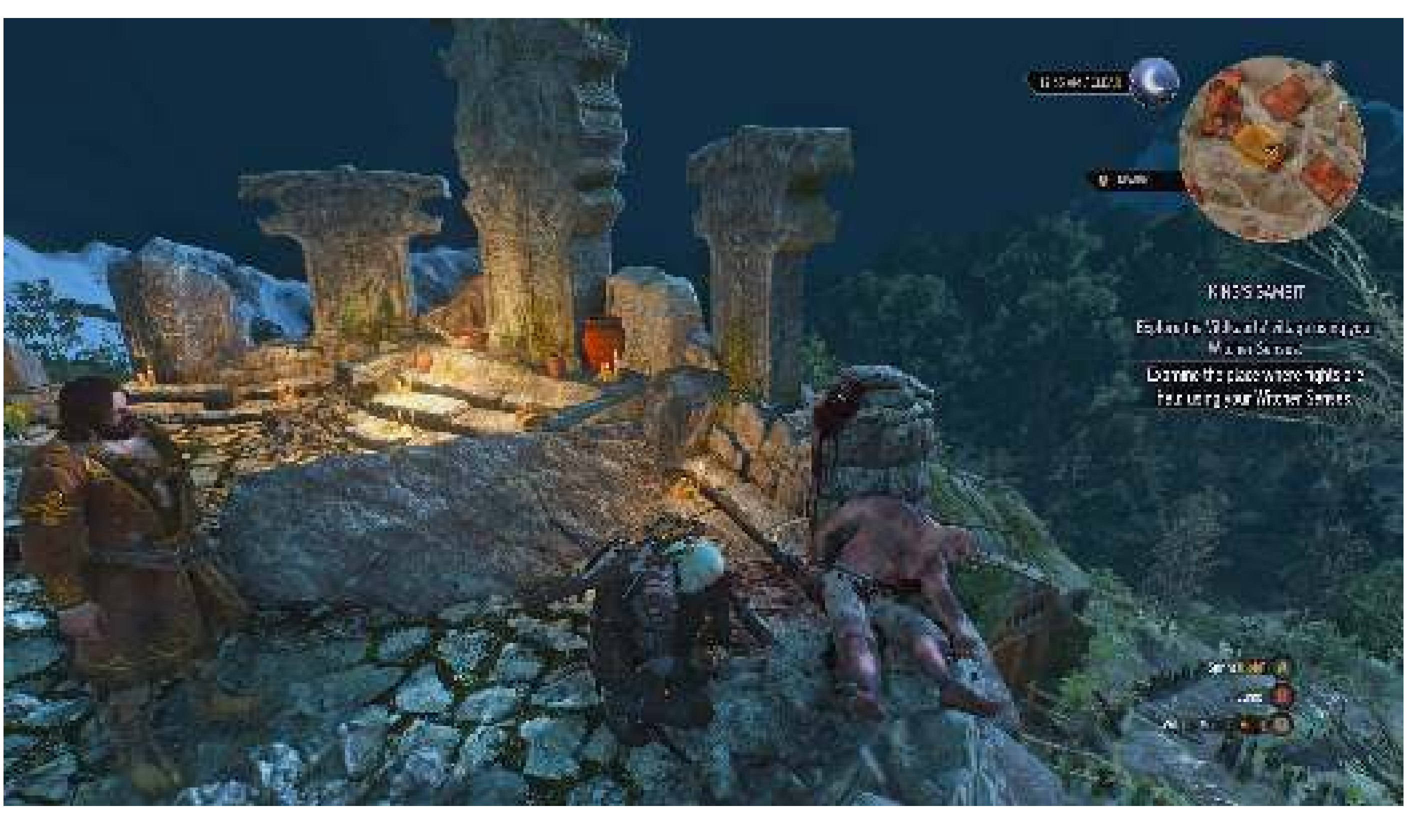
- Explore the Vildkaarls' village using your Witcher Senses.
- Use your Witcher Senses to examine the place Hjalmar pointed out.
- Follow the scent using your Witcher Senses.
- Follow the footprints.

Hjalmar knew you wouldn't turn down an adventure! He rides to Fornhala at a gallop. This is the village of the Vildkaarls. You arrive there automatically (the village is in southwest Ard Skellig). Question Hjalmar about this tribe, and he tells you he suspects they are warriors that transform into bears.

He seeks vengeance. You can point out that taking one alive would be beneficial, but Hjalmar insists witnesses and trials aren't needed for justice in the isles. Uncover the following:

- Head up the hill and Hjalmar points out a corpse near some kind of candle-lit shrine. Along the way, discover dead bodies, blood stains, massacred corpses, but no women or children in the village.
- At the shrine, you discover clothing from six men. There's a corpse from a man not part of the Vildkaarls. A bowl with an odd smelling substance inside, like incense or bear bait.
- The shrine has carved runes in the language of Hjalmar's forefathers. It is a dedication to Svalblod. A deity who demanded human sacrifices.
- A wafting scent from above. Follow it up more steps; there's evidence of blood and bile, a slumped body with a broken neck, and a body still warm.

The trail ends at a longhouse atop the hill. Head inside, and discover dried mushrooms; a variety called psilocybe. There's also trapdoor under a bearskin rug. Classic.

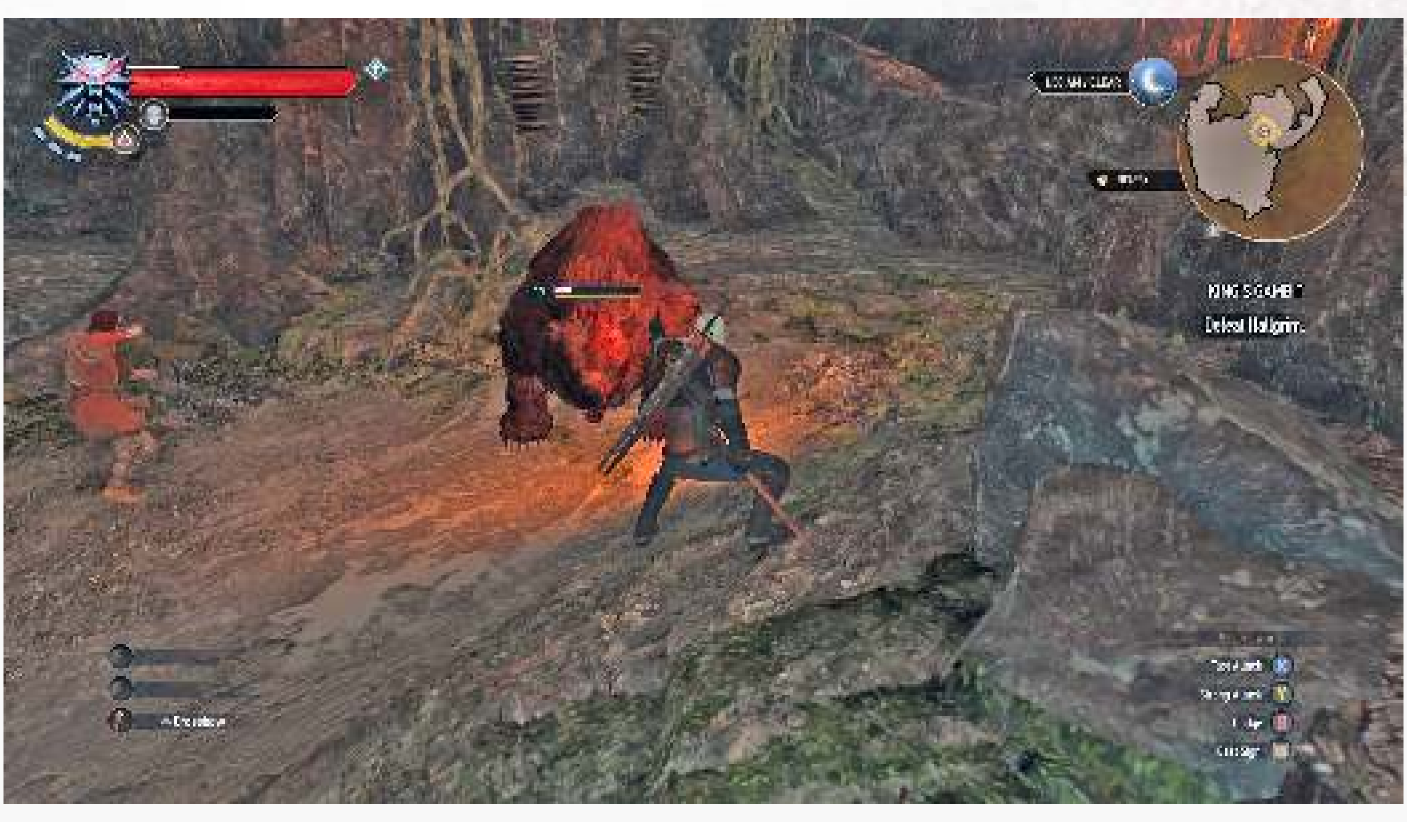


OBJECTIVES:

- Explore the cave.
- Defeat Halgrim.
- Venture further into the cave.
- Interrogate the druid.
- Defeat the druid and the berserkers.

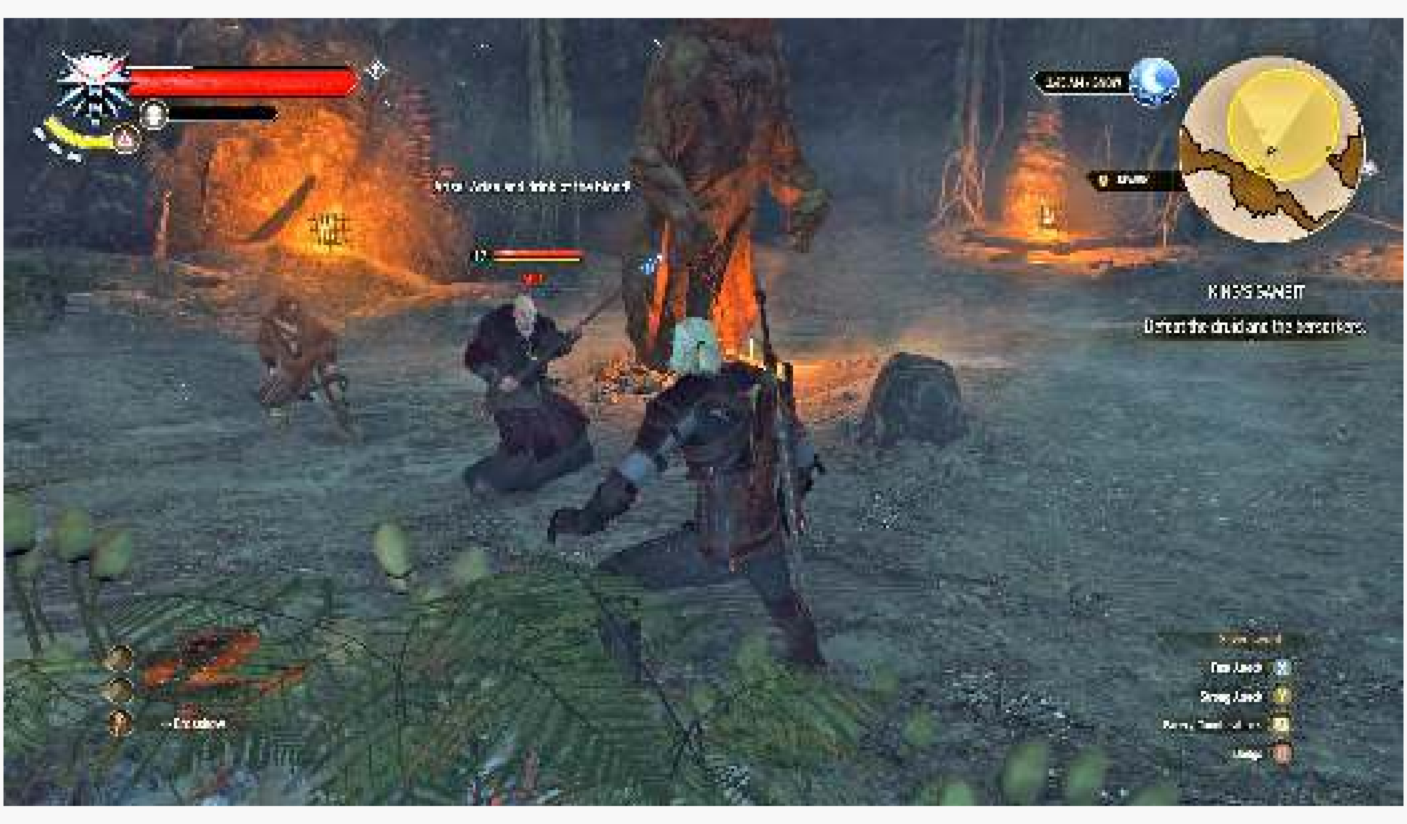
Halgrim

Descend the ladder, and explore an entrance cave leading into a larger cavern, where you are met by a hulking great Skelliger named Halgrim. He scoffs at the "weak bloods," and although they didn't set out to start a massacre at Kaer Trolde, they bear no guilt. Hjalmar quickly grows weary of the conversation, and charges in to attack. Face Halgrim, tackling him with your steel sword until he stops and tranforms into a massive bear. They bring down the hairy animal using your silver sword.



Artis

There are more voices further into the caves. Hjalmar isn't taking your advice, so progress deeper into the tunnel, heading south to a second cavern. You watch as a group of three Vildkaarls take a mushroom from a druid's bowl. A shocking transformation takes place. After the ritual, head into the chamber and speak to Artis the druid. As expected, the conversation turns to violence. Back Hjalmar up and slay the druid, including any bears he summons (he brings one at a time, so concentrate on defeating him unless you wish a constant incursion of bears). Afterwards, you discover a letter on the druid's body. It seems Artis was to become advisor to the new king of Ard Skellig. But the letter isn't signed. Hjalmar decides to return to Kaer Trolde and inform the Jarls.



Hjalmars Conclusion: Washing Away Disgrace with the Blood of Foes

- Jarl Donar an Hindar calls a meeting of the Jarls together. Hjalmar offers a perfunctory explanation regarding the Vildkaarls' responsibility. Madman Lugos isn't impressed. You step in and vouch for Hjalmar. You also hand over the letter you discovered as evidence of a conspiracy. Lady Bran mentions the culprits haven't been identified. But Jarl Donar has heard enough. Hjalmar has cleansed his clan's name through bloodshed.

END: AN INVITATION TO A CORONATION

The quest concludes with you and Crach talking about who will be crowed the new ruler of Ard Skellig. The coronation is about to begin. Join them immediately, or later. Either way, Secondary Quest: Coronation becomes available.

ENEMIES : None

QUESTING DECISIONS

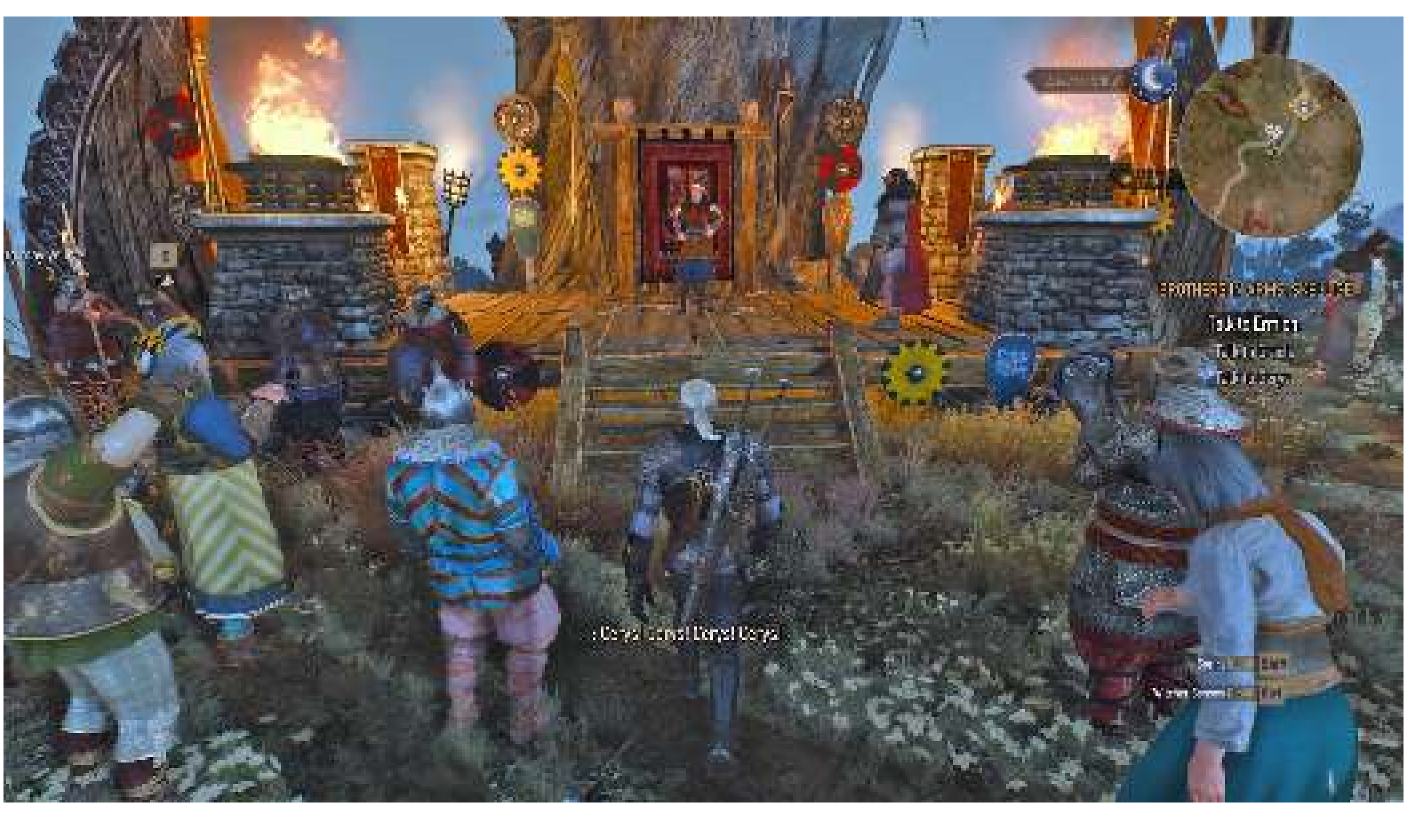
This quest begins automatically after the conclusion of Main Quest: King's Gambit. It is purely optional.

- If you helped Cerys during Secondary Quest: King's Gambit, she is crowned Queen of Ard Skellig.
- If you helped Hjalmar during Secondary Quest: King's Gambit, he is crowned King of Ard Skellig.
- If you ignored this line of quests, didn't help either Cerys or Hjalmar during Secondary Quests: The Lord of Undvik or Possession, you cannot complete this quest, and Svanrige Bran is crowned King of Ard Skellig.
- The druid Ermion is present at this coronation only if you completed Main Quest: Echoes of the Past.
- If you start this quest during Act II, during Secondary Quest: Brothers in Arms: Skellige, you can request Clan an Craite's help under the sacred oak, after the coronation.

OBJECTIVES:

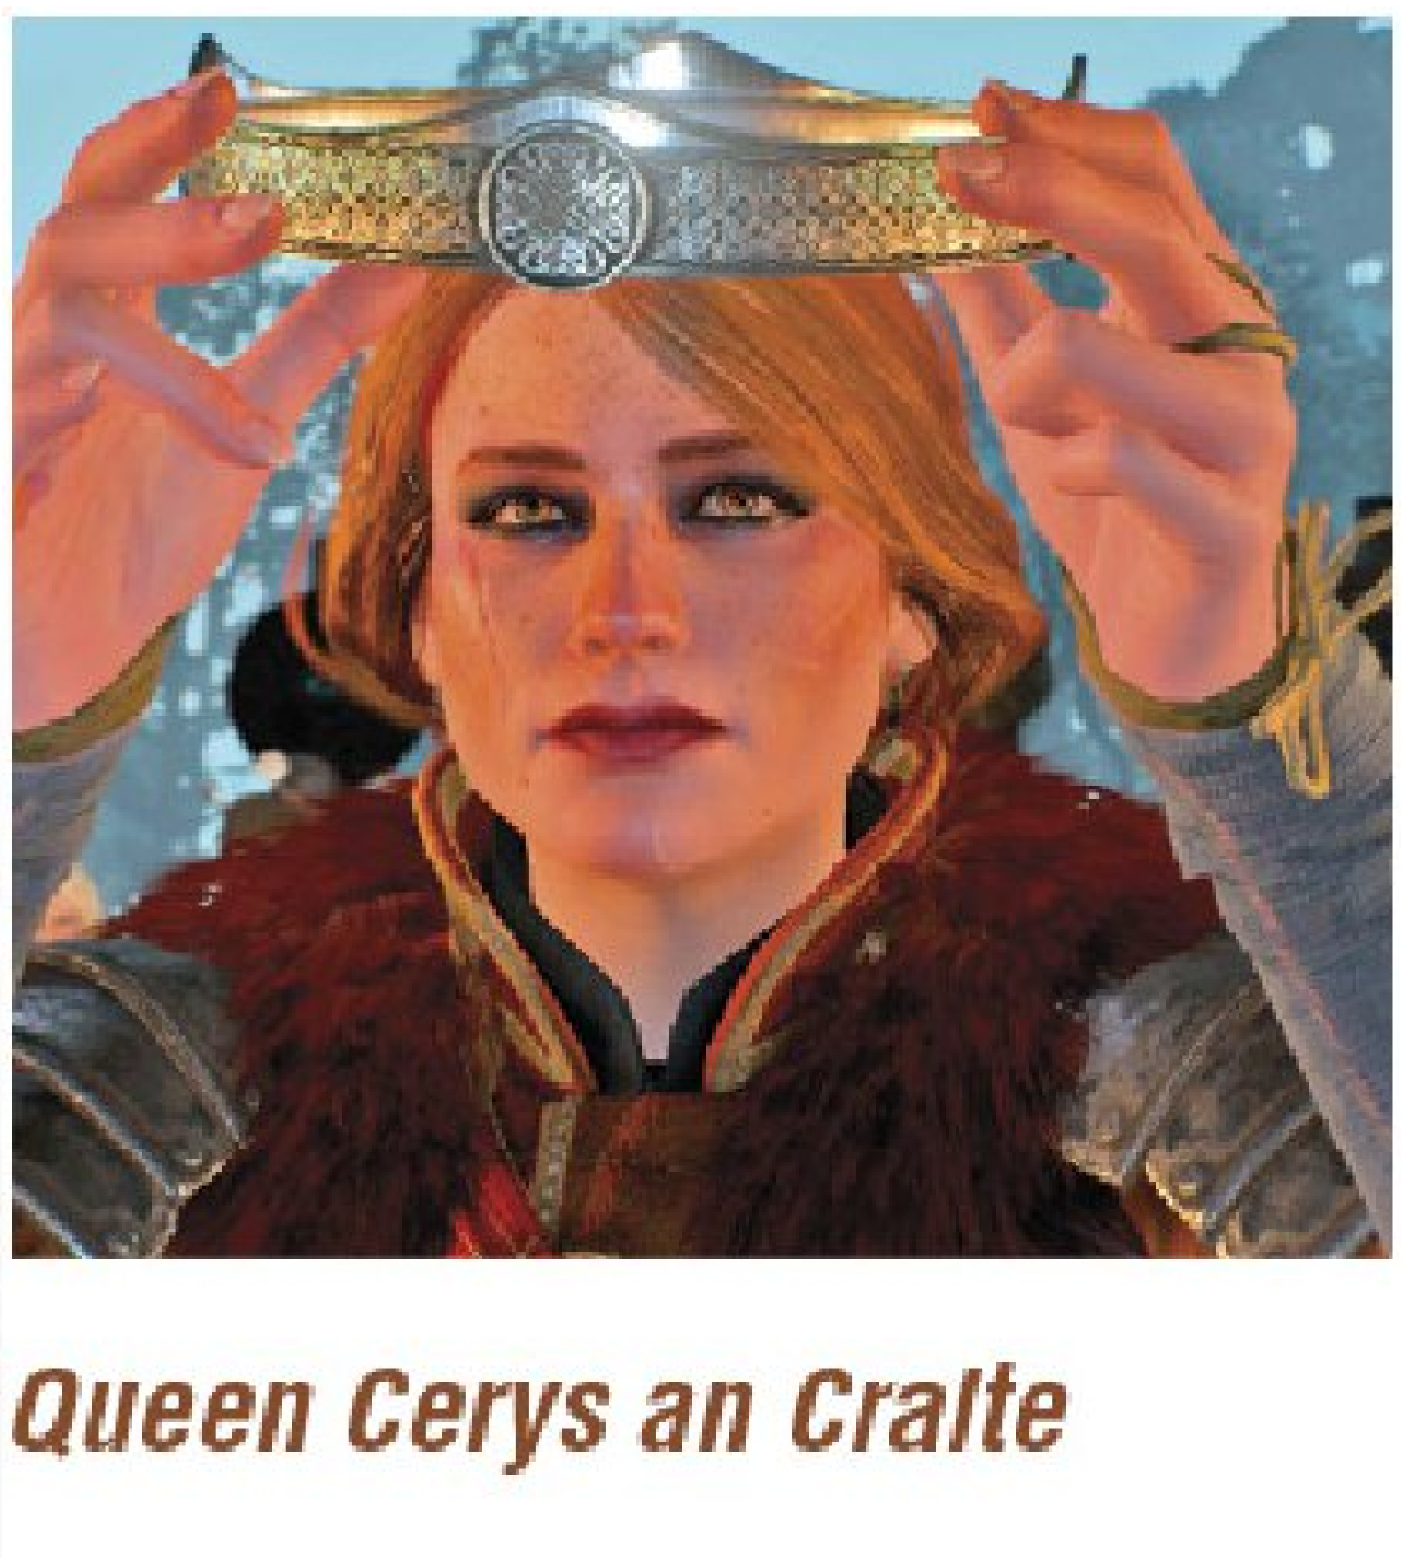
- Attend the coronation under the sacred oak.
- Nearest Signpost: Gedyneith.

Head to the sacred oak of Gedyneith. The coronation starts under the branches of this venerable oak. Jarl Donar declares an end to the mourning, and welcomes a new ruler of Ard Skellig, commanding power over all the isles of Skellige.



QUEST CONCLUSION: ALL HAIL QUEEN CERYS!

- Cerys thanks those that stood by her side and pledges to be a good queen, seeking peace and prosperity for all. Jarl Udalryk peers up at her proudly (with his one good eye).

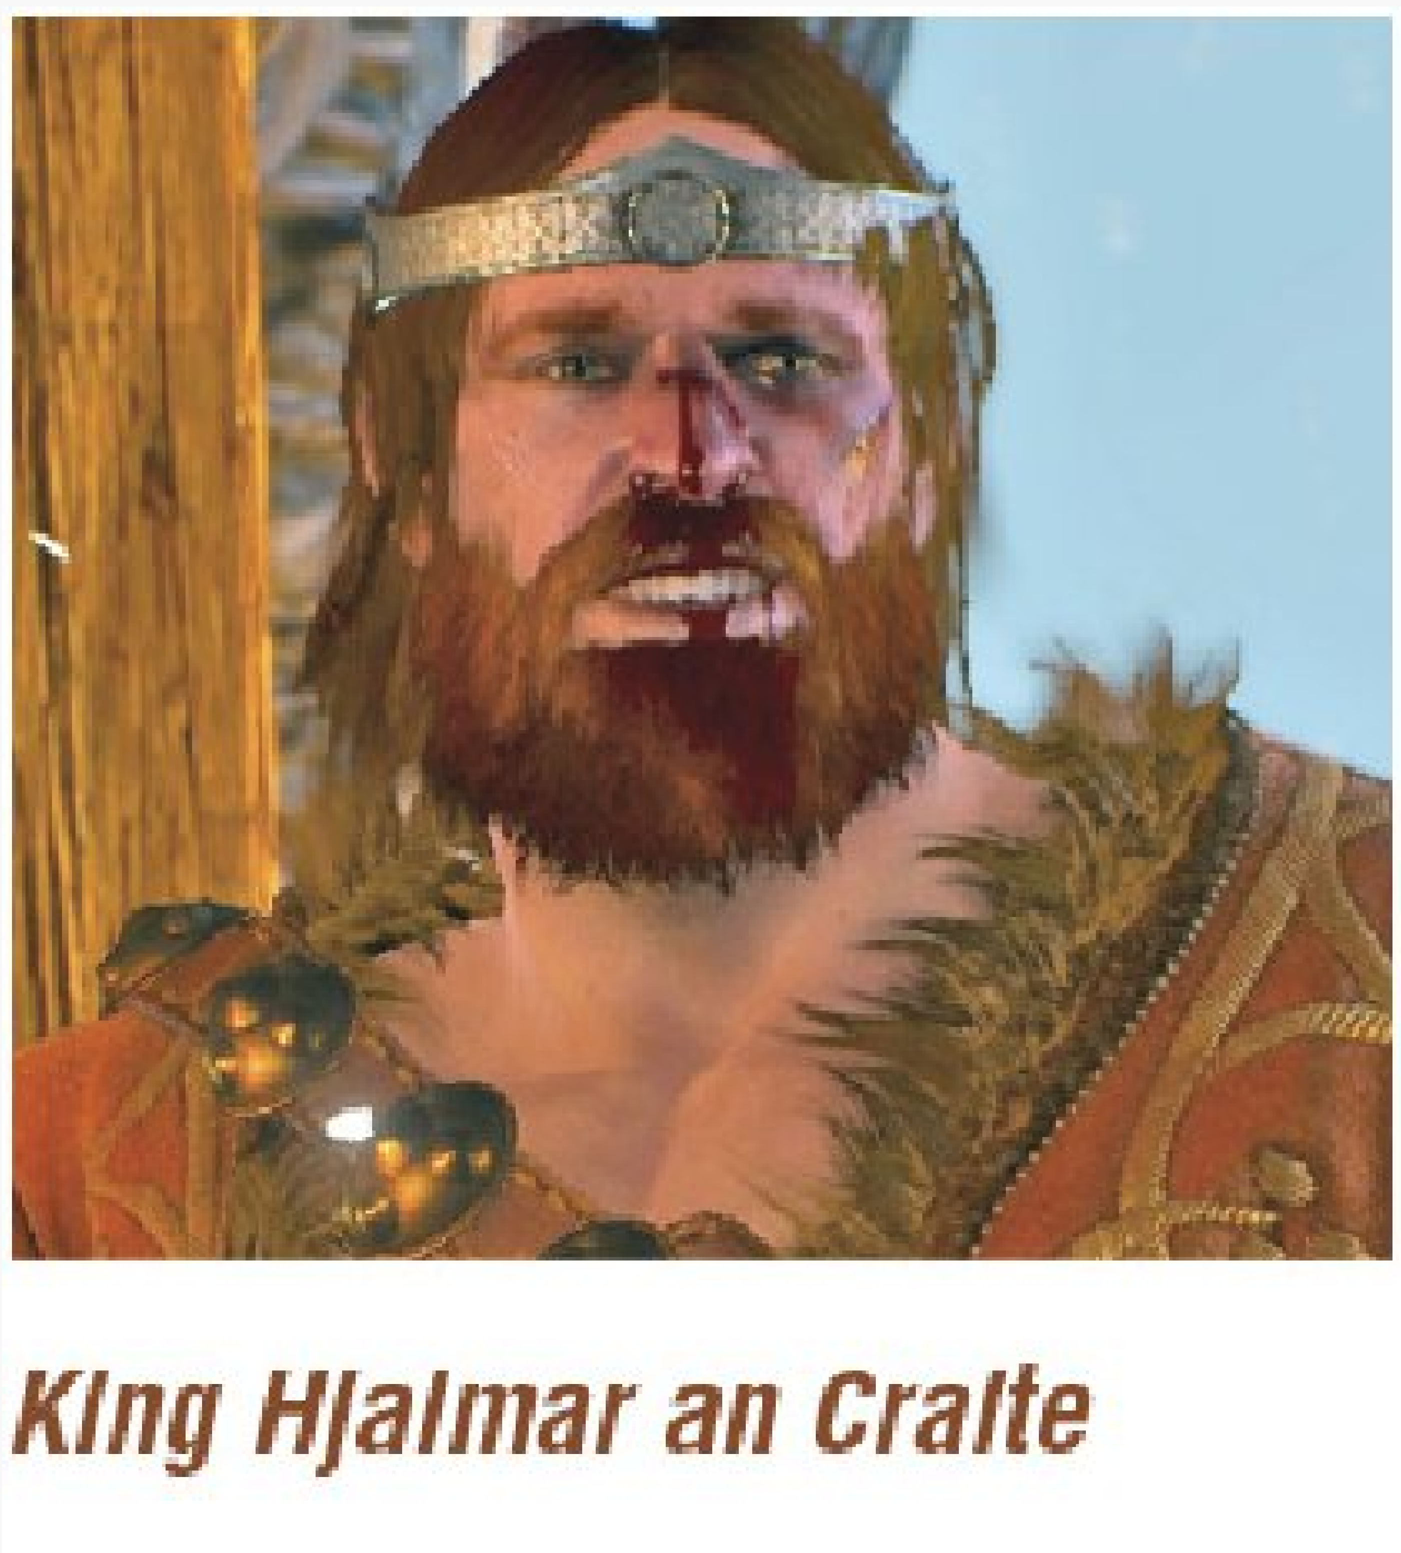


After her speech, you can speak to Hjalmar, who is a little dejected, but secretly proud of his sister. He's happy to show up Madman Lugos though.

Speak to Queen Cerys, and she tells you she plans to rule by listening, learning, and listening again. This measured approach should unite the clans, and although she'd prefer to avoid war, they will repel Nilfgaard together.

QUEST CONCLUSION: ALL HAIL KING HJALMAR!

- Hjalmar knows many here have long awaited this day; with fist raised, he pledges to strike at Nilfgaard. The crowd seems divided on the merits of this rather impetuous plan.

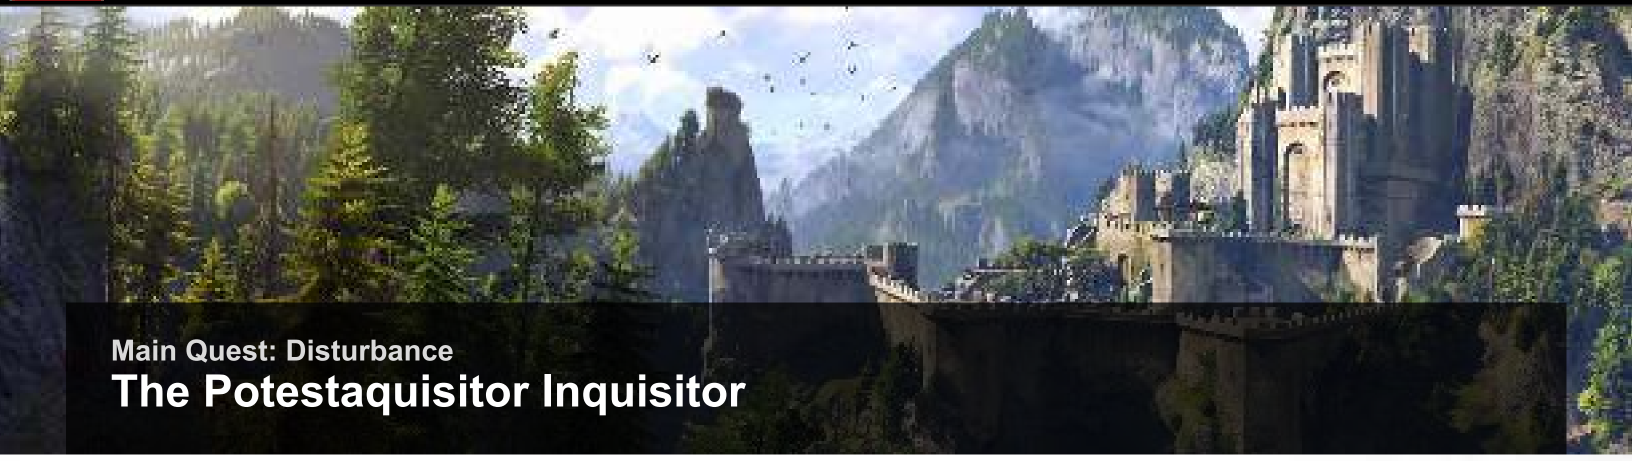


After his speech, you can speak to Cerys, who is prideful of her charismatic brother. They share the same blood which is what really matters.

Speak to King Hjalmar, and he tells you he'd rather have beat a bugger like Blueboy Lugos instead of his sister. He vows to go at the Black Ones, and grind them to dust. They will be driven south, limping and wailing.

A PROUD FATHER

Finally, speak with Crach, who is almost bursting with pride. He will always be loyal to Cerys and Hjalmar. Feel free to speak to Jarl Donar, Udalryk, and Hjort too. Listen to Holger, and other islanders' mutterings if you wish. The Skelligers celebrate with a bonfire and crackling pig. The quest concludes.



Main Quest: Disturbance

The Potestaquisitor Inquisitor

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: DISTURBANCE

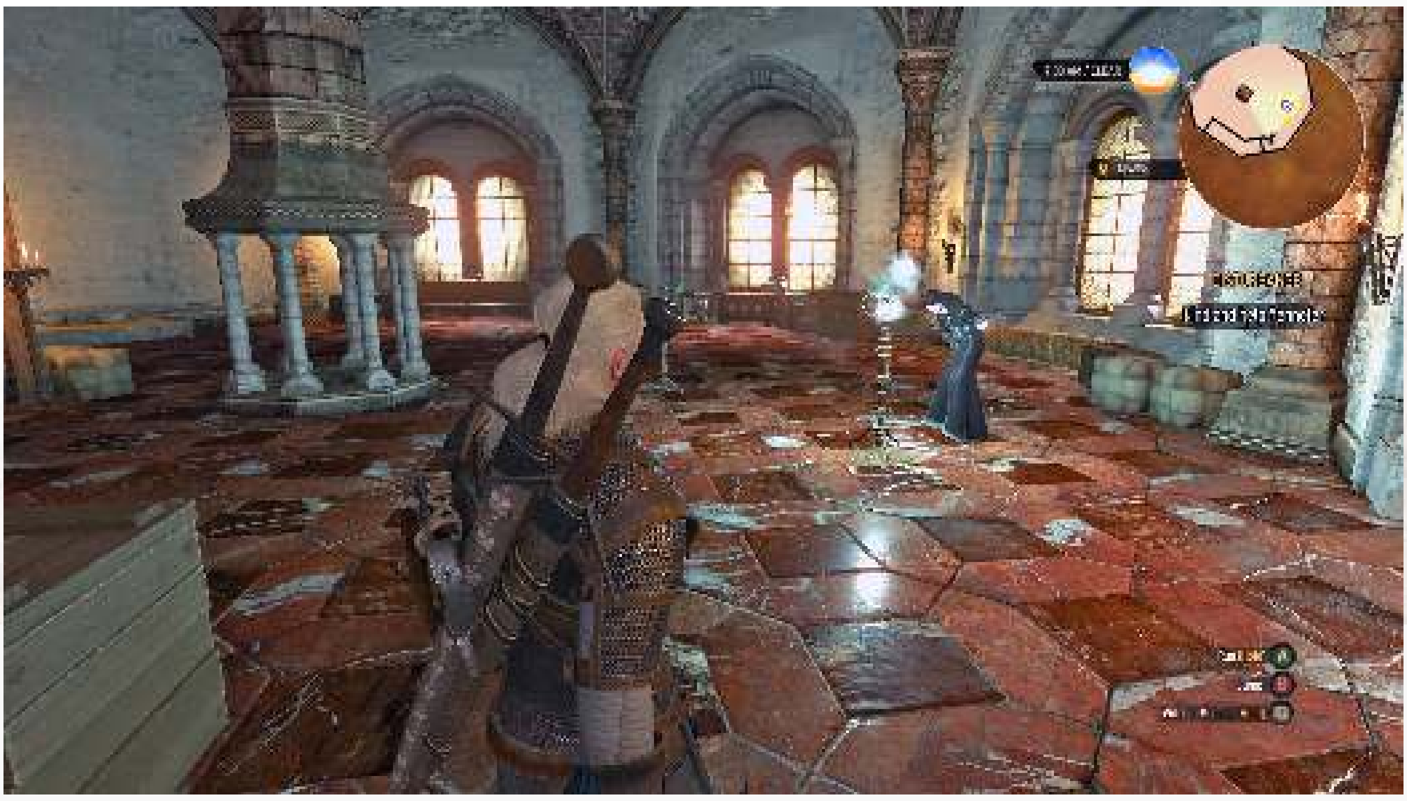
CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Vesemir, Uma

ENEMIES : None

RECOMMENDED ITEMS : Potestaquisitor (given during quest)

OBJECTIVES (UGLY BABY):

- Help Yennefer fix the megascope.
- (Disturbance): Find and help Yennefer.

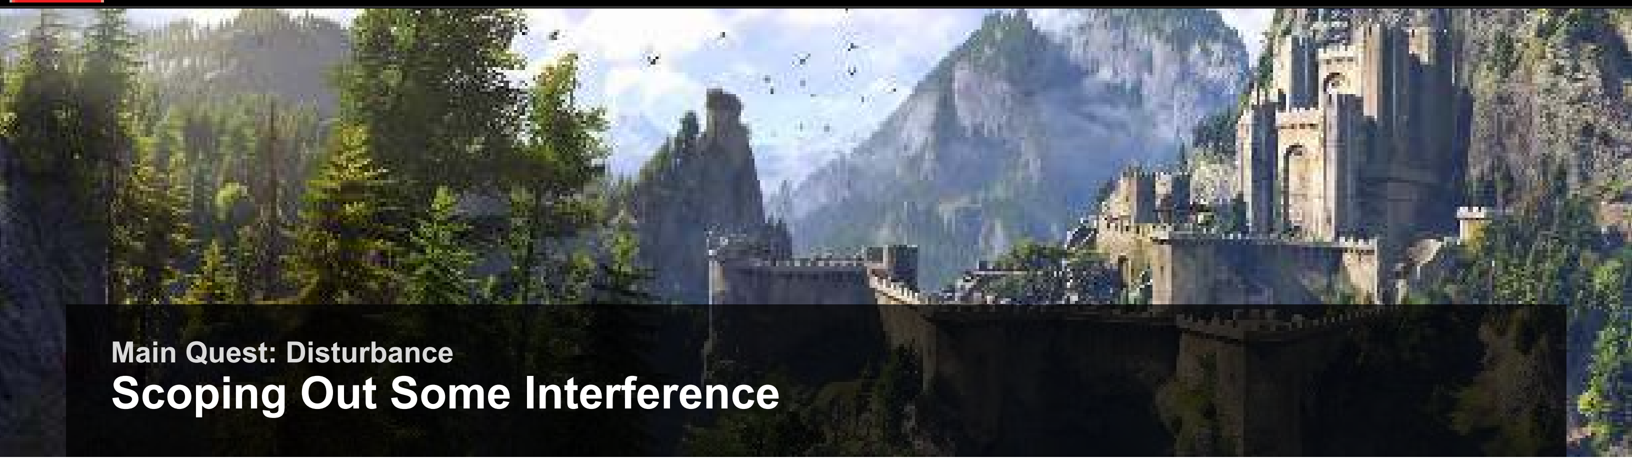


Enter the main fortress interior of Kaer Morhen, and head to the southeast tower through the banqueting hall. Up the large spiral steps, you eventually reach a large circular room and Yennefer exploding both magically and verbally. It seems her megascope is extremely broken. Speak to her how you wish, as she explains her frustration with the other witchers. She tells you she will reveal all in time. You can:

- Ask what she needs you to do, which continues the quest.
- Tell her you heard what she did with the bed (toss it out of a window), and she fumes about you and Triss being together. You may either apologize or pretend you had memory loss, resulting in a further angry outburst, and Yennefer tiring of the conversation by teleporting you over the lake at the foot of the mountain! After a swim and trek back up to the fortress, you can continue this (or any other active) quest.

Your tasks are to help both Eskel and Lambert, but also attend to the broken megascope. Yennefer reckons an energy source nearby is generating disturbances, and must be neutralized. She needs to contact a sorceress urgently, and hands you an odd-looking contraption known as a potestaquisitor. You must use it to find the energy source.

ITEM: Quest Item: Potestaquisitor



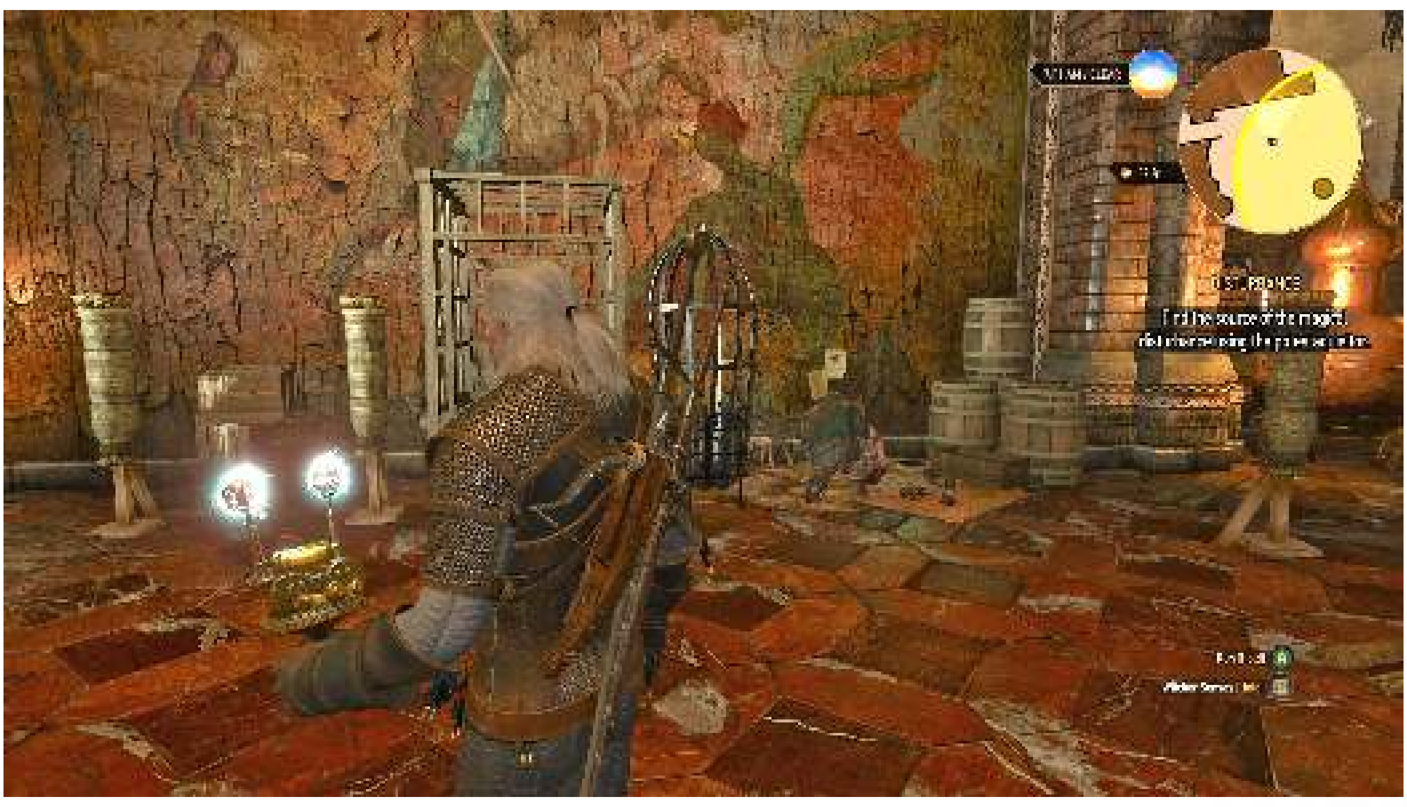
Main Quest: Disturbance

Scoping Out Some Interference

OBJECTIVE:

- Find the source of the magical disturbance using the potestaquisitor.

Be sure your potestaquisitor is a selected item, which you can whip out manually at any time. Then begin your search for this strange energy concentration. Head down the stairs, back into the grand hall, close to where Lambert is tinkering. Begin your sweep with the potestaquisitor at this point, moving towards Vesemir and Uma.



DISTURBANCE
Find the source of the magical disturbance using the potestaquisitor.
Witcher Senses

UMA? UMA. THOUGHT SO.

Vesemir and Uma have moved into the grand hall as well, and you can have an optional, and completely meaningless conversation with the cursed specimen. Talk of Ciri, universals existing as real and distinct entities, and other posits are answered with one-word, gargled variations on "Uma!"

Just to the left of Vesemir is a large steel cage, and to the left of that are a stack of old crates. The energy seems to be coming from these boxes—inspect them, then ask Vesemir what's in them. Dimeritium bombs. Vesemir offers to remove them while you have a one-sided talk with Uma.

QUEST CONCLUSION: A SORCERESS SPEAKS

OBJECTIVE:

- Let Yennefer know you removed the source of the disturbance.

Ida Emean (via Megascope)

Return to Yennefer, explaining the interference issue has been solved. She summons her sorceress friend Ida Emean to talk about the elvish curse Uma seems to be suffering from. Ida is taken aback as she has only heard about this curse in legends. Ida offers advice on lifting the curse, and tells you that Ciri's blood is likely to be needed to stop an impending end of worlds. Answer how you wish, offering more measured responses if you're on better emotional terms with Yennefer. After a short history lesson about the Migration, this quest concludes. If you've already completed the two other quests (with Eskel and Lambert), Main Quest: No Place Like Home begins.

LOCATIONS : Crow's Perch (Velen), Vizima Royal Castle, Kaer Morhen

CHARACTERS : Uma, Nilfgaardian Cavalry, Emhyr var Emrels, Yennefer of Vengerberg, Vesemir

ENEMIES : None

OBJECTIVES:

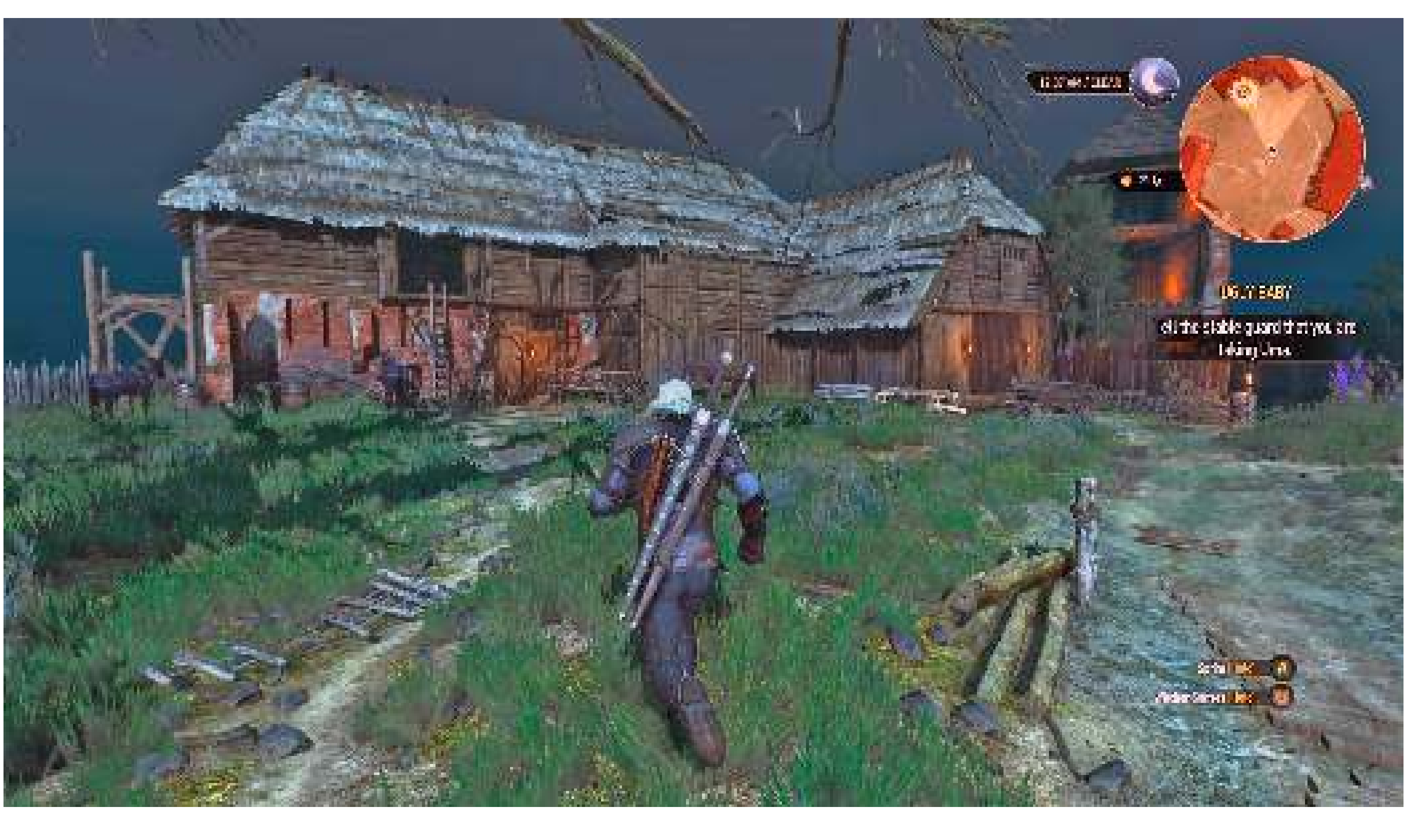
- Tell the stable guard that you are taking Uma.
- Collect Uma.
- Nearest Signpost: Crow's Perch.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest begins automatically only after the following Main Quests have been completed: Main Quest: Family Matters, Main Quest: The Ladies of the Wood; Main Quest: Nameless; and Main Quest: The Play's the Thing.

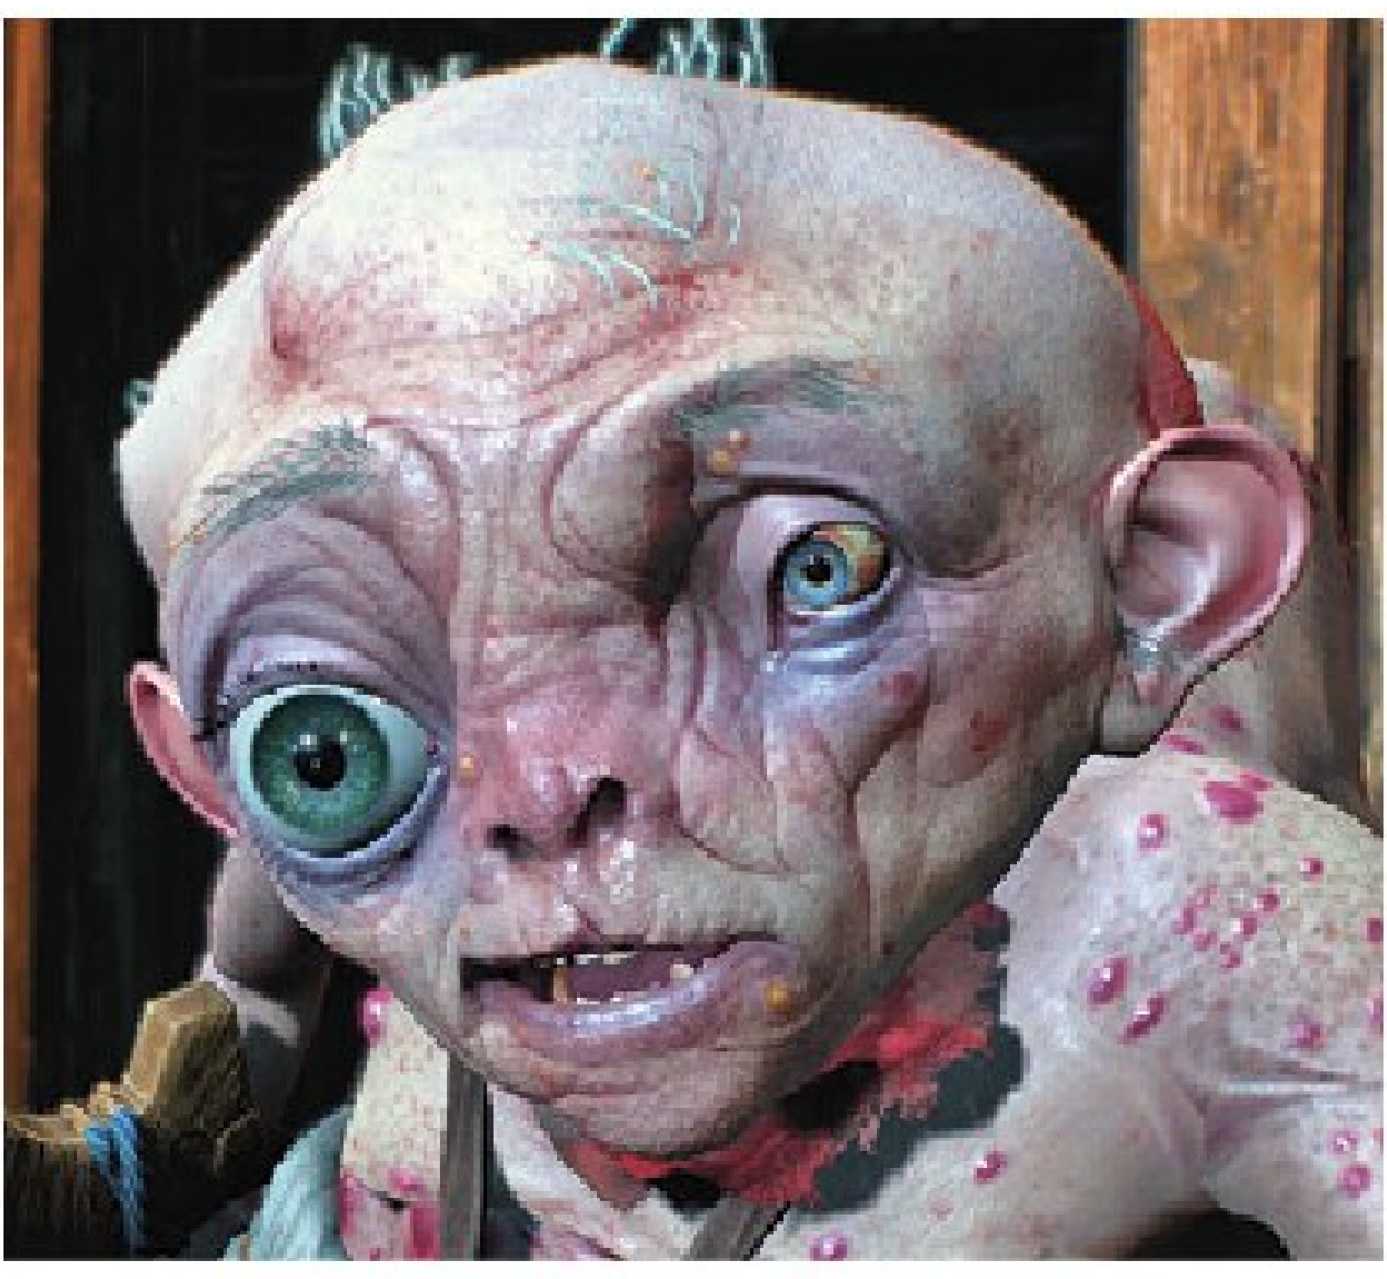
- If you completed Secondary Quest: Last Wish, and told Yennefer you wanted to be with her, then you have additional romance options during Main Quest: No Place Like Home.

Main Quest: Ugly Baby is a tracking quest that occurs throughout the entirety of all the Sister Quests listed previously. It simply tracks when each of them are completed.



Return to Crow's Perch in Velen.

- If you haven't completed Main Quest: Family Matters, you must head to the Baron's study, and tell him that obtaining Uma may be the key to finding Ciri. You are directed to the stables.
- If you have completed Main Quest: Family Matters, you head to Crow's Perch and speak with the sergeant who took over the Baron's position in the castle. He directs you to the stables.



Uma (Ugliest Man Alive)

Head to the upper courtyard where the stablemaster resides. Tell him (in no uncertain terms) that you're here for Uma. This occurs without incident. You coax the malformed little man towards your horse Roach, grab him by the scruff of the neck, and ride off.

You are stopped while riding through a Velen forest by a group of Nilfgaardian cavalrymen. It appears the emperor is displeased with you, and requires you ride to Vizima. You oblige.

NOT AN EXCHANGE OF COURTESIES

You arrive at Vizima, where the emperor is finishing a plan of attack with General Voohris. After dismissing him, Yennefer enters the emperor's chamber, and he orders you to report. Answer how you wish (a flippant approach leads to the emperor threatening to call his guards). You tell him Uma is the key to finding Ciri. When he demands more answers, tell him about your adventurers, and then that Uma might actually be his daughter in a cursed form. Emhyr asks if the curse can be lifted, and Yennefer attempts to utter the curse, with no effect on Uma. You're given half your prize, with the other 2,000 crowns when Ciri is returned. You can tell the emperor you don't intend to bring Ciri back, or agree. The emperor leaves.

ITEM: Crowns: 2,000

You take a moment to speak with Yennefer, pondering how the curse can be lifted. Yennefer tells you it must be done at Kaer Morhen, but she cannot teleport you both. You seem happy to ride there. Your conversations with Yennefer are fraught.

ORDERS FROM VENGERBERG

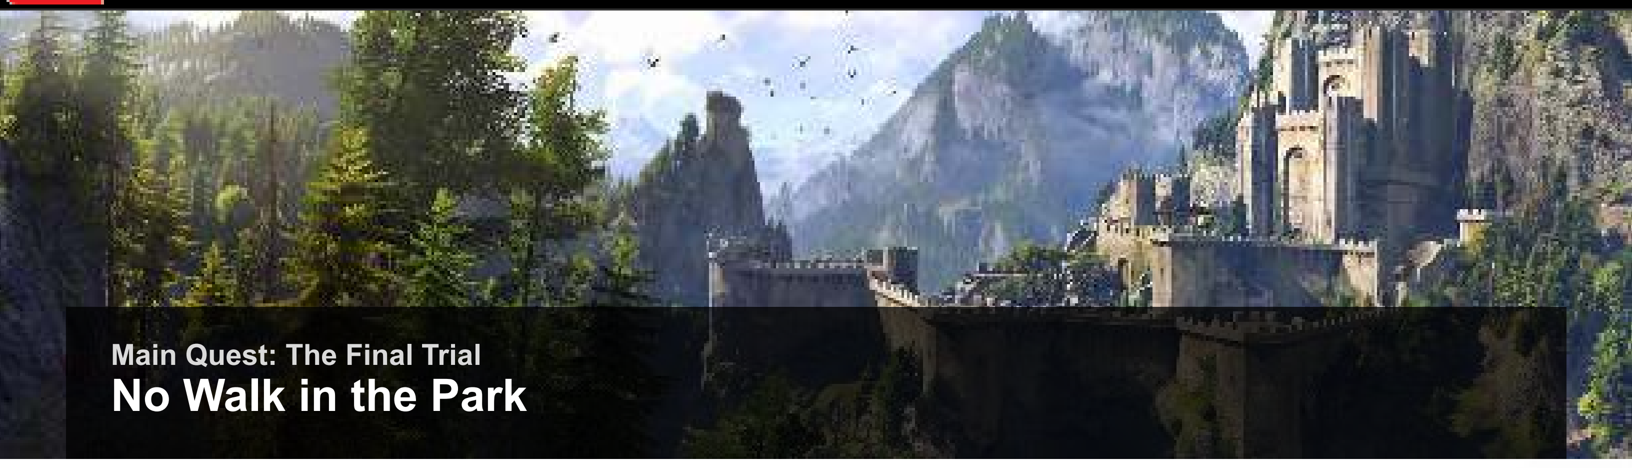
You arrive in Kaer Morhen, and Vesemir welcomes you home. He looks Uma up and down, and agrees with Yennefer. This is one ugly homunculus. Yennefer is already here (Vesemir remarks she could do with some manners), and he rattles off the jobs she's ordered the rest of the Witchers to undertake: Eskel is hunting Forktails for their ingredients. Lambert is preparing to fill a phylactery with elemental energy. Yennefer herself is assembling a megascope. You can defend her, or agree that she's up to something suspicious.

- You can comment on Yennefer throwing a bed from the window (ask Vesemir about this on a subsequent occasion during this quest, and he mentions Triss always liked that bed—which might be why it was dashed on the battlements below!). You can also head to the main courtyard in Kaer Morhen (left from the main entrance), and locate the remains of the bed Yennefer threw away. Use your Witcher Senses to find one of Triss' earrings. Take it and you can give it to Triss when you see her next.

This quest now concludes, and three other quests open up under the Main Quest: Ugly Baby.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

Main Quest: Ugly Baby is simply a tracking quest, updating Main Quests: Disturbance, To Bait a Forktail…, and The Last Trial. It also continues after all three of these conclude. You may now begin any of the three quests in any order. Start by crossing the ruined battlements, and entering the fortress interior first.



Main Quest: The Final Trial

No Walk in the Park

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

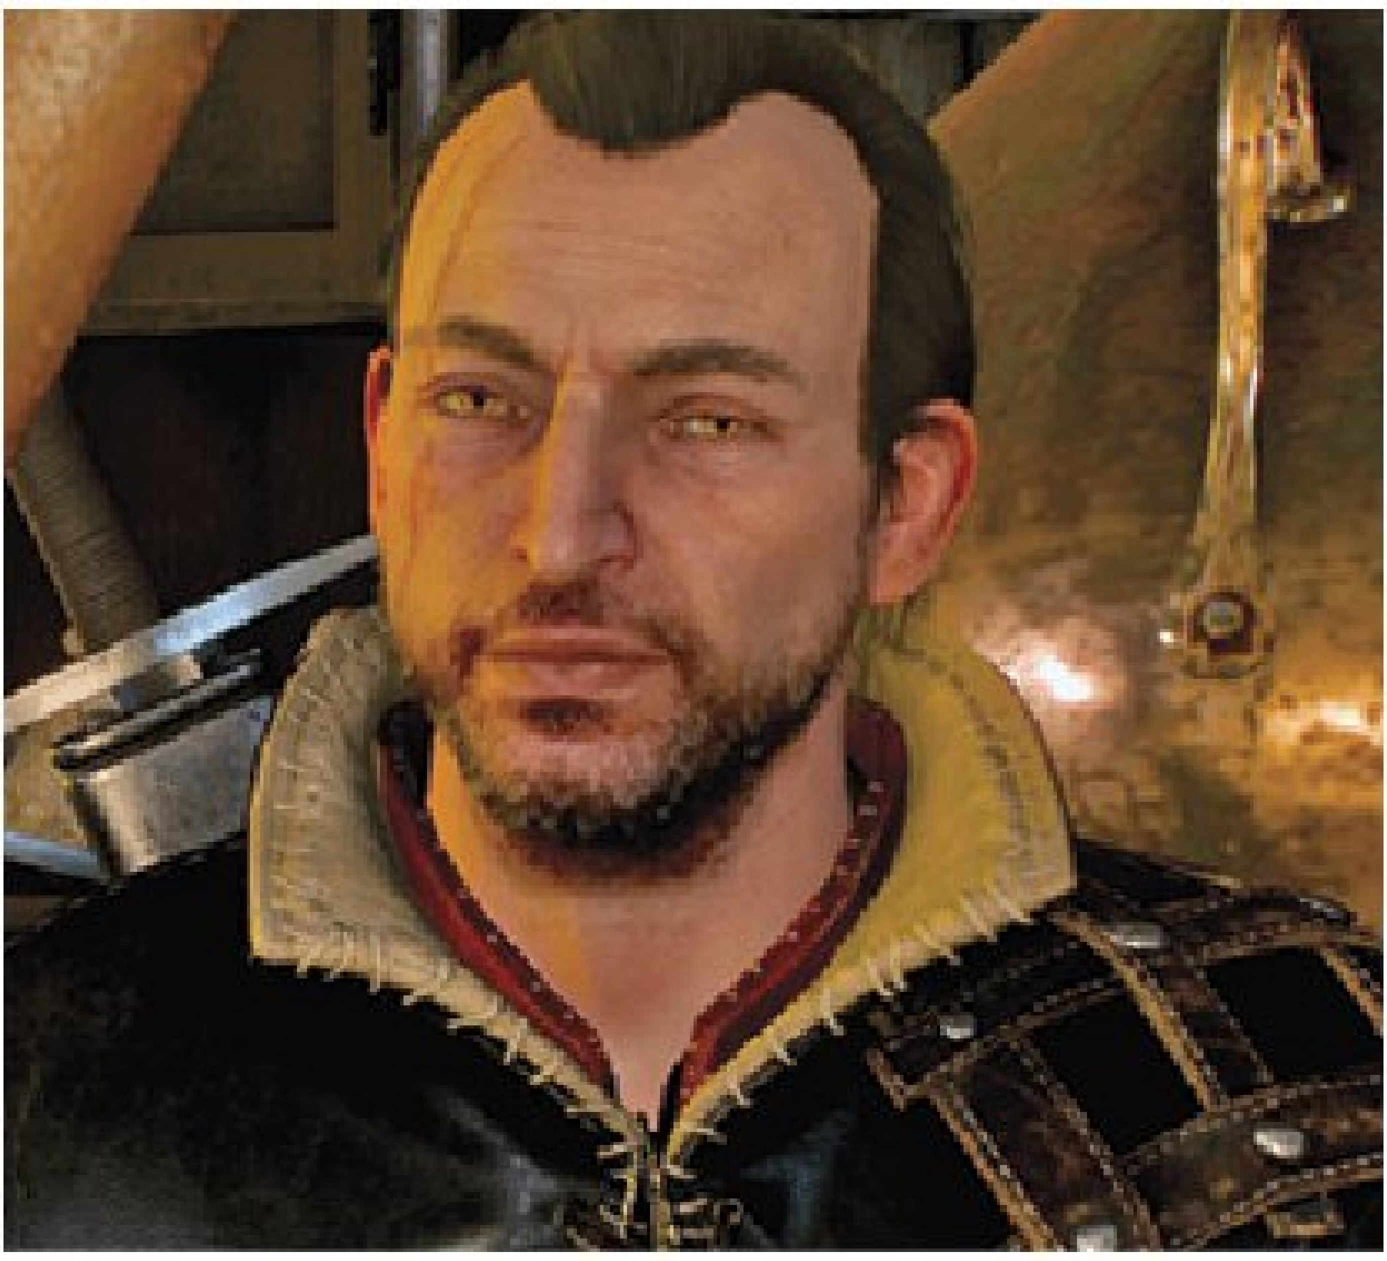
MAIN QUEST: THE FINAL TRIAL

LOCATIONS : Kaer Morhen, The Boathouse, Old Speartip's Cave, Circle of Elements
CHARACTERS : Lambert
ENEMIES : Harpies, Drowners, Water Hag, Bilge Hag, Harpies, Foglets, Old Speartip (Cyclops), Rock Trolls
RECOMMENDED ITEMS : Phylactery (given during quest)

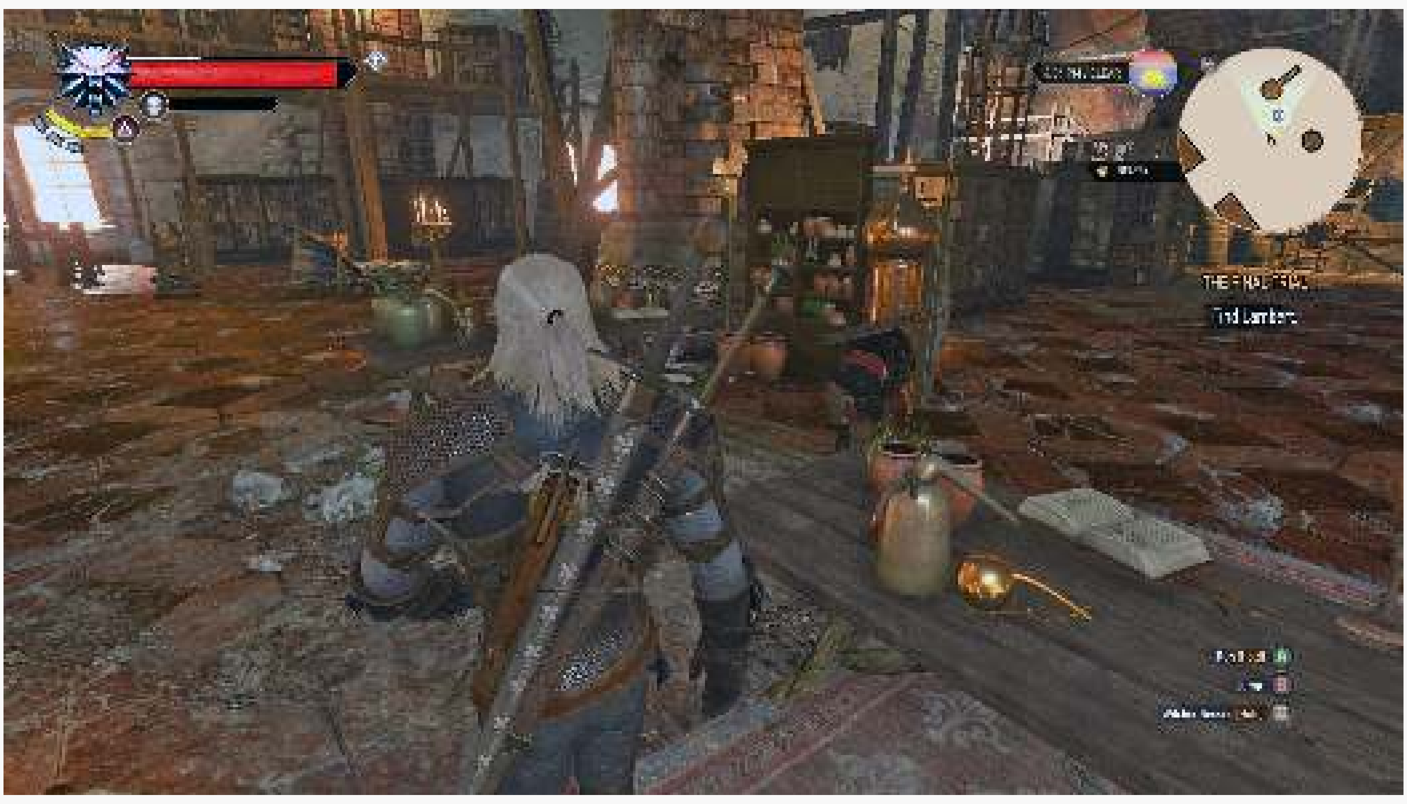
OBJECTIVE (UGLY BABY):

- Talk to Lambert about journeying to the Circle of Elements.

Enter the Kaer Morhen fortress, and locate Lambert in the great hall, close to a table with a dead ekimmara on it. He's tinkering with a brewing vat, and tells you he's irritated after being charged with fortifying the phylactery (a small golden box Lambert shows you) with power from the Circle of Elements.



Lambert



Answer how you wish, dealing with Lambert's bluntness until you tell him you're ready to accompany him on his task.

ITEM: Quest Item: Phylactery

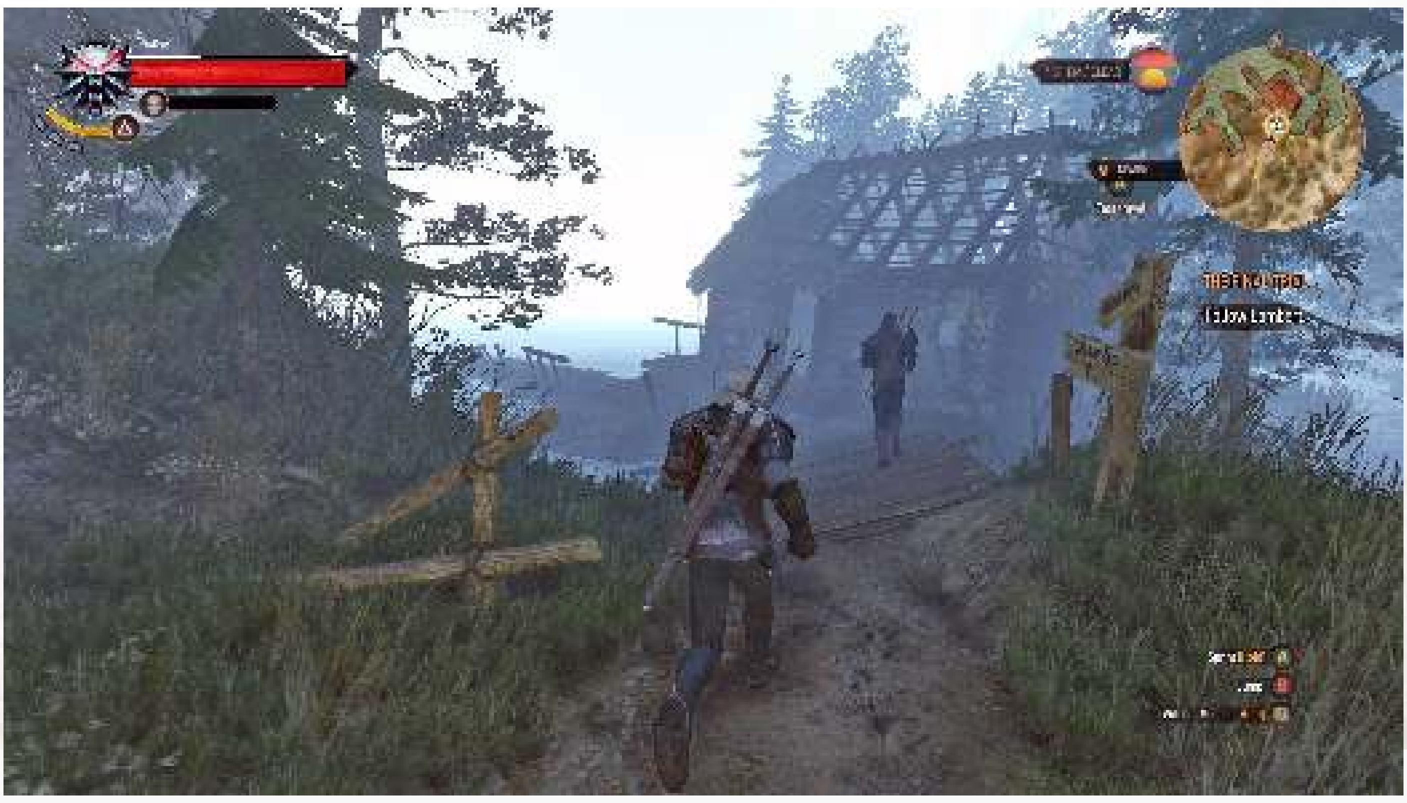
Main Quest: The Final Trial

Fogs Thick as Curdled Milk

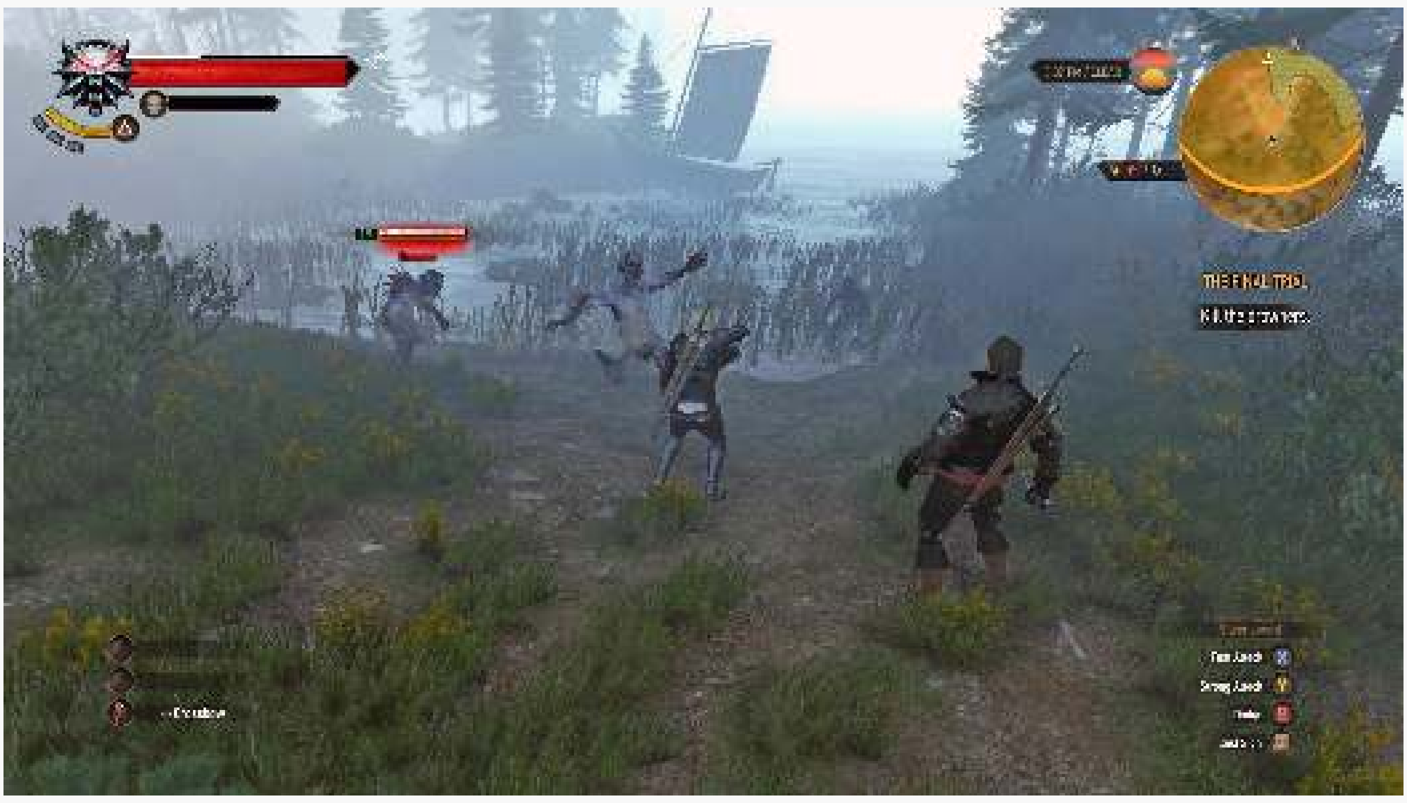
OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Lambert.
- Find the boat.
- Kill the drowners.
- Kill the water hag.
- Get in the boat.
- Sail across the lake with Lambert.

When you're ready, set off out of the fortress by following Lambert. He tells you a rockslide has blocked the mountain path to the Circle of Elements, so a pond side approach is called for. As you depart from the battlements, you chat with Lambert about his impression of Vesemir. The view down this treacherous series of rocky ledges you clamber down is spectacular. As you descend, show off your crossbow skills by bagging a flock of harpies. Lambert is impressed by your prowess. Cross two rickety bridges, turn and follow a rough path along a gushing stream, all the way down to a ramshackle boathouse where Lambert has moored his vessel. Except it isn't there.



You surmise the wind has carried the boat westward. Head in this direction along the grassy mounds and marshes at the edge of the "pond," until you both encounter a group of drowners. Expect around five to cull. Next, a water hag appears (it may also be a bilge hag). Remove this sagging crone with Lambert's help, before you agree to sail across the pond. Lambert remembers his previous adventures in the caverns you're about to sail to. Ask if this bothers him, if you like. Jump in the boat, and let Lambert take the tiller.



Main Quest: The Final Trial

Step Softly or Youll Wake Old Speartip

OBJECTIVES:

- (Optional) Check where the boy's voice is coming from.
- (Optional) Kill the foglets.

You disembark, and remark on either Lambert's prickly wit or that a beast named Old Speartip is still roaming these parts. Your chat is interrupted by the plaintive cries of a young boy. You both are convinced this is an illusion. You can:

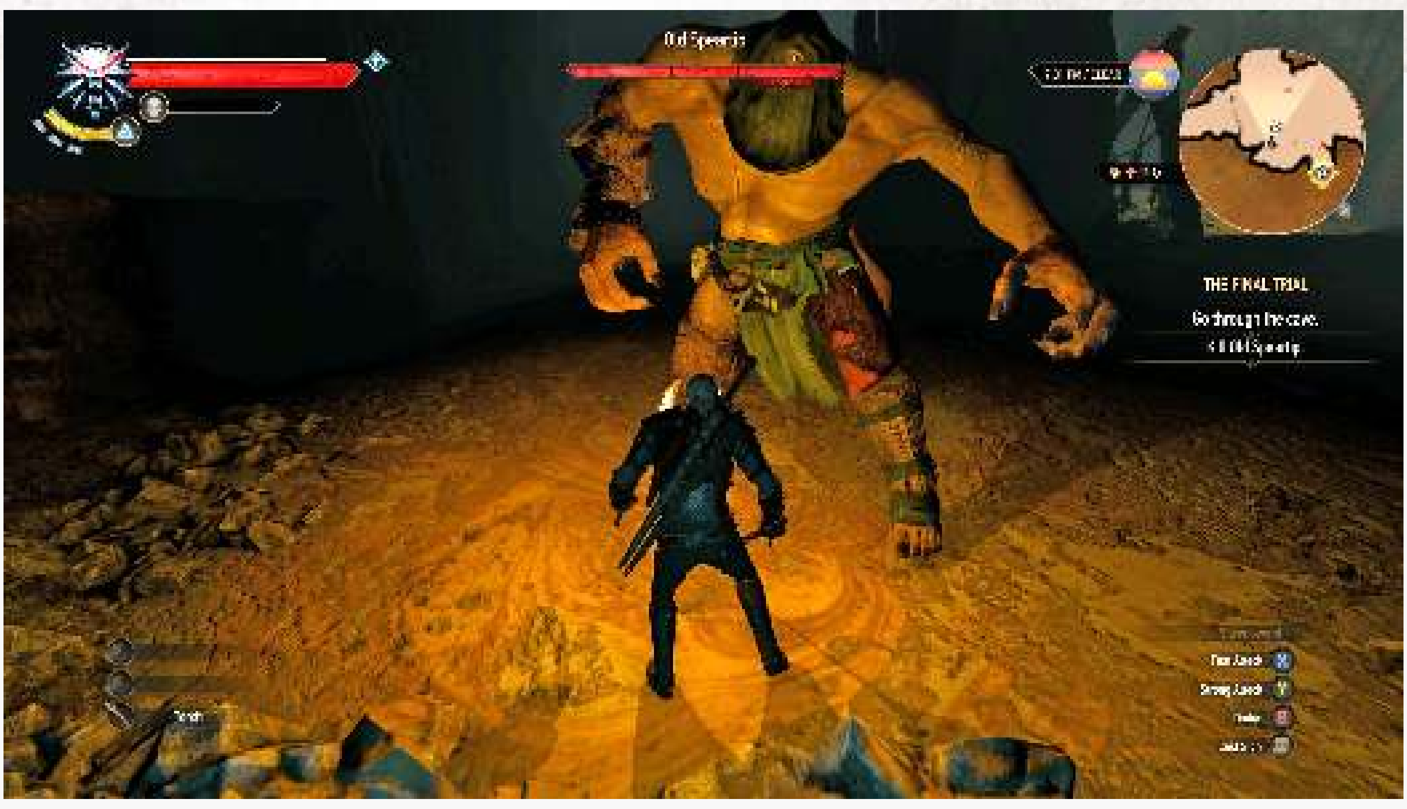
- Investigate the voice, starting this objective (previously).
- Or simply head into the cave.

Head west along the shoreline, and you spy a frightened boy. If you walk up to him, he slowly dissolves and three vicious foglets appear. This was an obvious trap. Lambert half-jokingly threatens to tell Dandelion about how you were duped. Answer how you wish. The boy was one of the witchers' tykes who drowned during his trial.

OBJECTIVES:

- Enter the cave.
- Go through the cave.
- Kill Old Speartip.

Enter the cave by Lambert's moored boat. As usual, a Cat Potion helps your vision. When you reach a ledge too high to climb, you both help each other up. Head roughly north, climbing another ledge, and use Aard to clear some fallen rocks. Continue along the winding cave tunnel, into a large cavern. Ignore the upper ledges and continue forward, trading witticisms. Climb a long slope until you reach a large cavern with a massive central column.



If you avoid using Aard on the rocky obstacles along the way to the central cavern, and don't make too much noise in the cave, you can avoid waking Old Speartip. Feel free to attack him whatever you decide—those killed by this ancient cyclops must be avenged!

You must walk forward, but if Lambert's noisy footsteps awaken Old Speartip himself; a huge hooded cyclops with a nasty pair of huge fists to pummel you with shows up. After a protracted battle, Lambert spits on the corpse for Voltehre, one of his fallen.

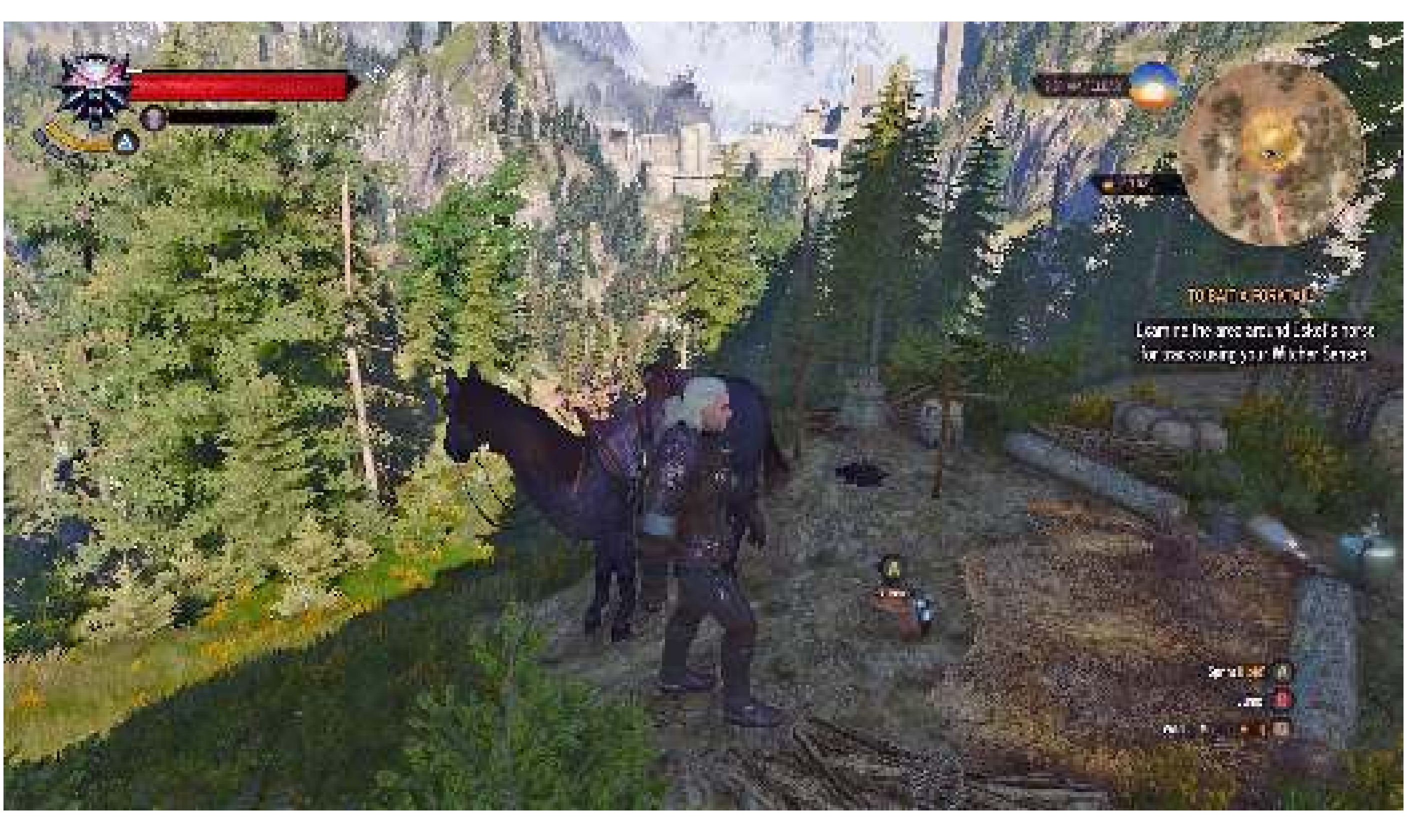
CHARACTERS : Eskel, Scorpion
ENEMIES : Forktail

OBJECTIVES (UGLY BABY):

- Find Eskel and help him hunt the forktail.
- (To Bait a Forktail…): Search for Eskel's tracks near the entrance to Kaer Morhen.
- Follow the tracks left by Eskel's horse.
- Examine the area around Eskel's horse for tracks using your Witcher Senses.

Exit Kaer Morhen, and examine some hoofprints at the south gate using your Witcher Senses. Whistle for Roach, and follow the horse tracks down the road to the river. Cross the ford heading south, and up the hill, before peeling off to the left (southeast) to an old training folly and treasure chest. A little further up the grassy hill is Eskel's horse, named Scorpion, standing by a small camp. Inspect the bottles if you wish. Then search the vicinity for Eskel's footprints, and those of a goat.



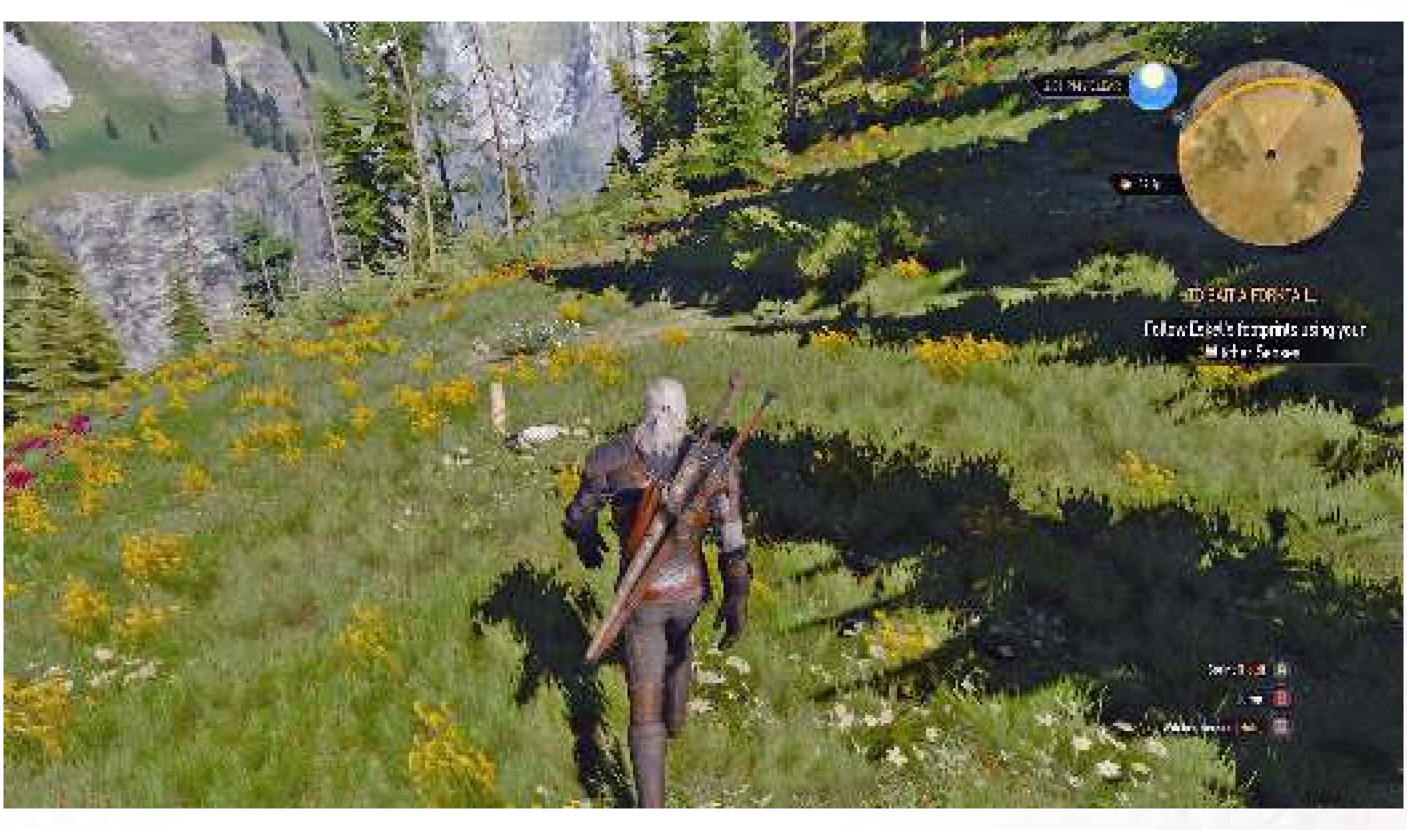
TO BAIT A FORKTAIL...
Examine the area around Eskel's horse for tracks using your Witcher Senses

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Eskel's tracks.
- Look around for more tracks left by Eskel.
- Follow the smell.
- Follow Eskel's footprints using your Witcher Senses.

Eskel

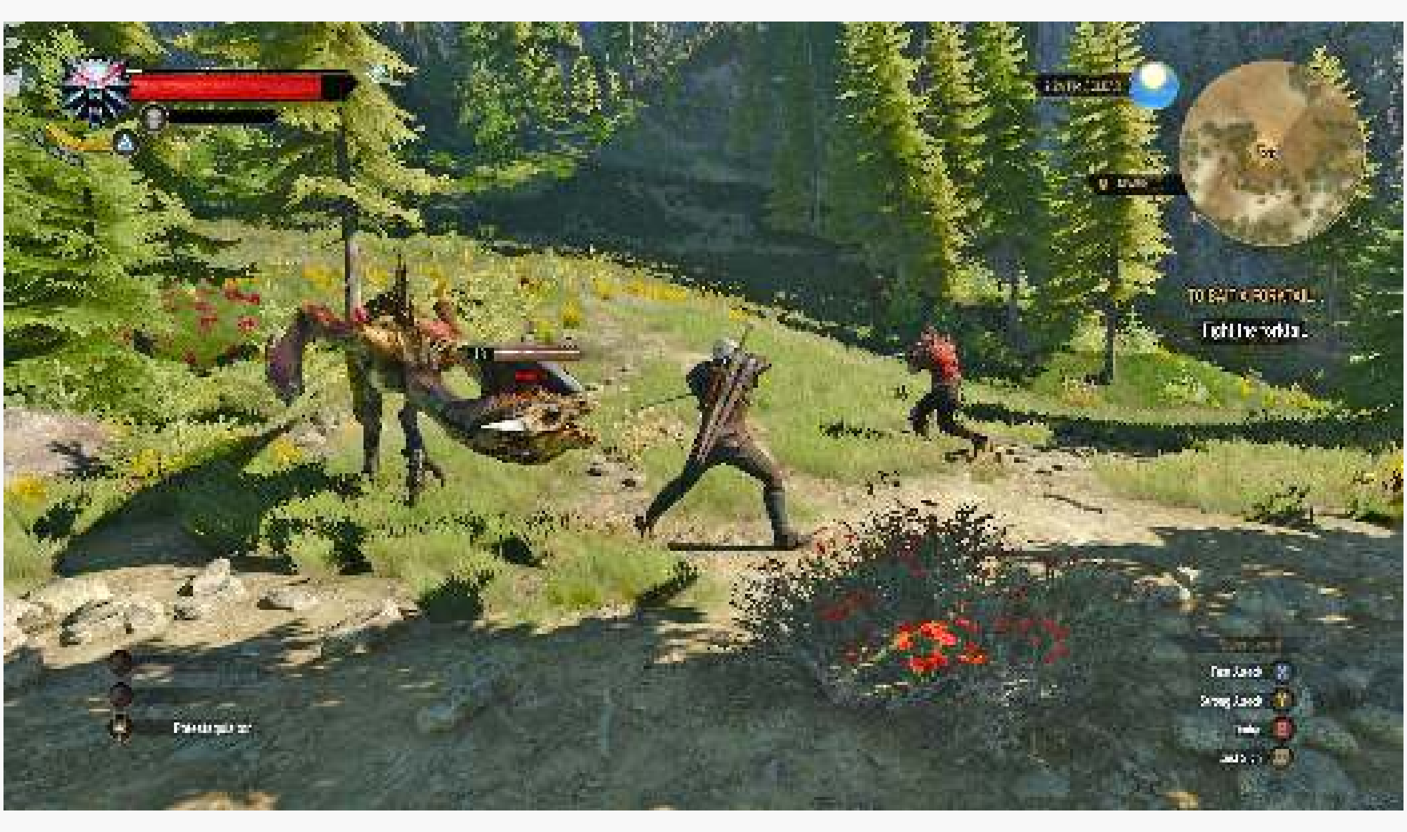
Follow the path roughly southward from the camp, checking periodically as you view the tracks in front of you. They stop almost immediately, but inspect a nearby fir tree to find evidence of a goat rubbing itself against the bark. Track the smell along the path that winds up the steep mountain. You pick up Eskel's prints again, and the soft bleating of his goat. It is tied to a stake in an open grassy promontory to the northeast. Eskel appears, quoting from Adalbert's book, and greet you warmly. Continue your friendly banter (answer how you wish) until Eskel hears the sounds of an incoming forktail.



OBJECTIVES:

- Fight the forktail.
- Chase the forktail.
- Follow the forktail's blood using your Witcher Senses.
- Find and kill the forktail.

A forktail lands close to the goat, and you must both tackle it in combat. After it loses around a third of its health, it manages to get airborne. Optionally plug it with a couple of crossbow bolts, before watching it disappear up a steep mountain gully. Sprint up this gully (heading roughly southeast), climbing a couple of rock ledges as you talk to Eskel.



FORKTAIL VULNERABILITIES

Need help clipping the wings of this airborne beast? Consult the Bestiary entry on forktails.

Potion: Golden Oriole

Bomb: Grapeshot

Oil: Draconid

Sign: Aard

When you reach the crest in the gully, start descending slowly and use your Witcher Senses to pick out the following:

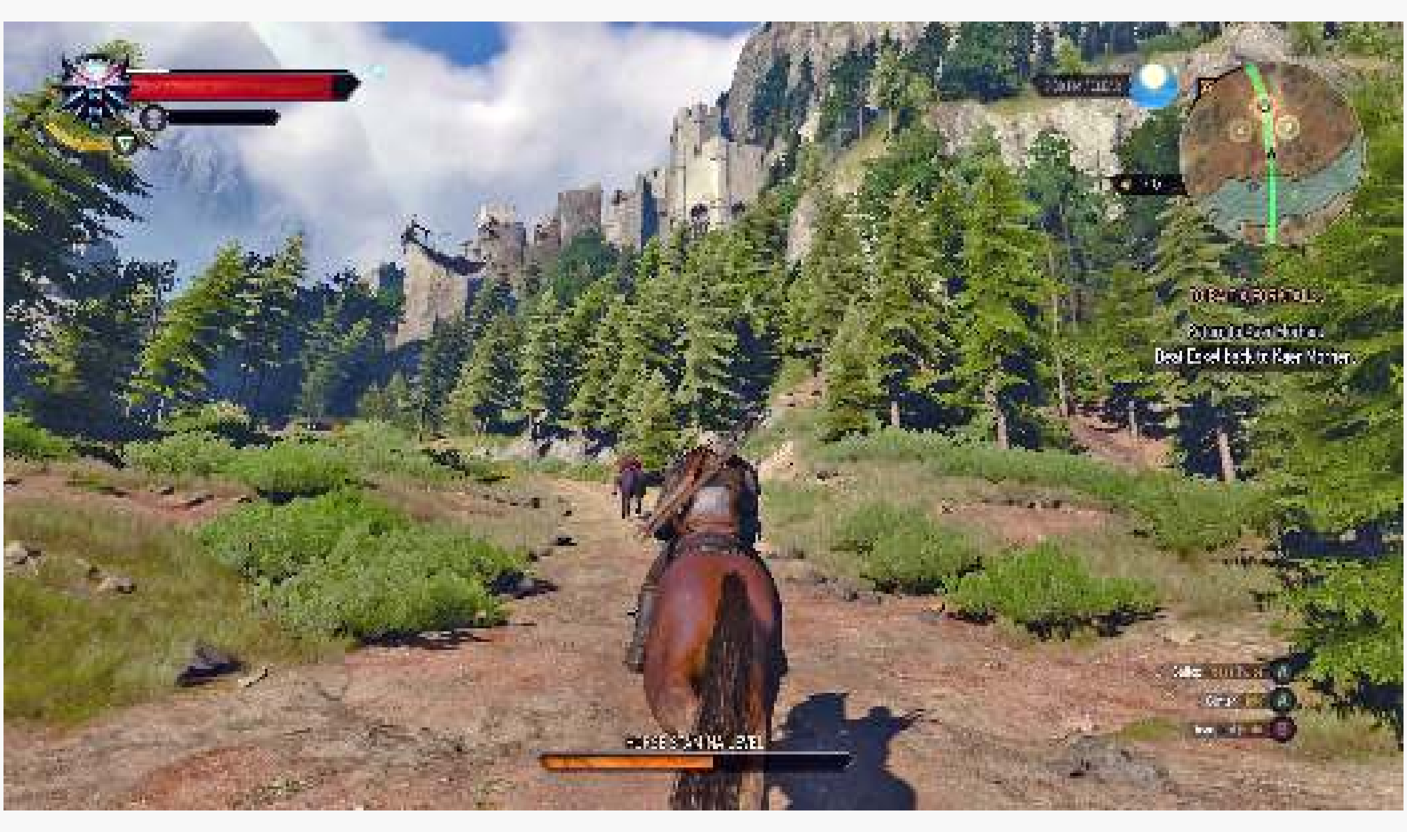
- Splashes of forktail blood.
- A set of prints and blood on a grassy ledge. This leads into a narrow tunnel—the forktail's lair.

Head inside, following more splatters of blood, and following the rough tunnel up a natural slope, and around to where the forktail is nursing its wounds. Time to finish it off!

QUEST CONCLUSION: A GALLOP BACK TO KAER MORHEN

OBJECTIVES:

- Return to Kaer Morhen.
- (Optional) Beat Eskel back to Kaer Morhen.



After the beast is slain, Eskel instructs you on the method of retrieving the spinal fluid. Answer how you wish, even when the conversation turns to Yennefer's trust issues. Then gather the fluid and depart. Once outside the forktail's lair, Eskel challenges you to a race. You can:

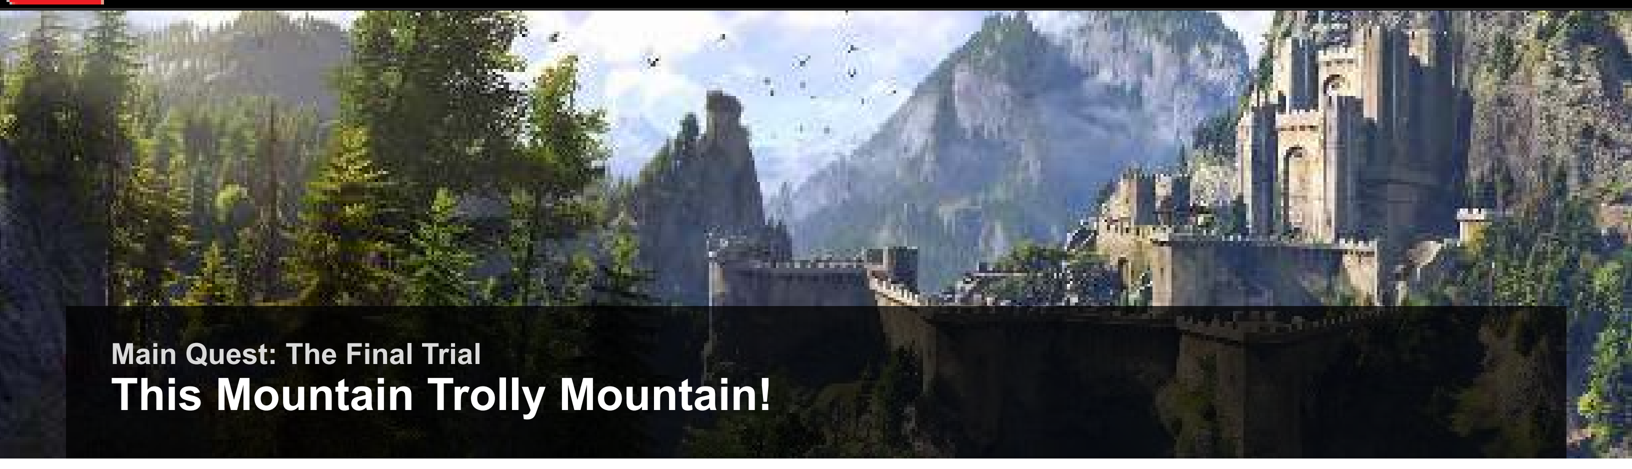
- Accept, and make well-timed use of Roach's gallop and follow the main path down the mountain (northwest), then north along and across the river, and up and around to the south gate of the castle. Stop galloping just after the river ford, then gallop again a few seconds later, and you should beat Eskel, and more than bragging rights are available if you win.

▶ Win the horse race to receive additional XP and alchemy recipes.

▶ Decline, and make your way back to Kaer Morhen in your own time.

After you reach the south gates of Kaer Morhen, this quest concludes. If you've already completed the two other quests (with Yennefer and Lambert), Main Quest: No Place Like Home begins.

ITEM: Quest Item: Forktail Spinal Fluid



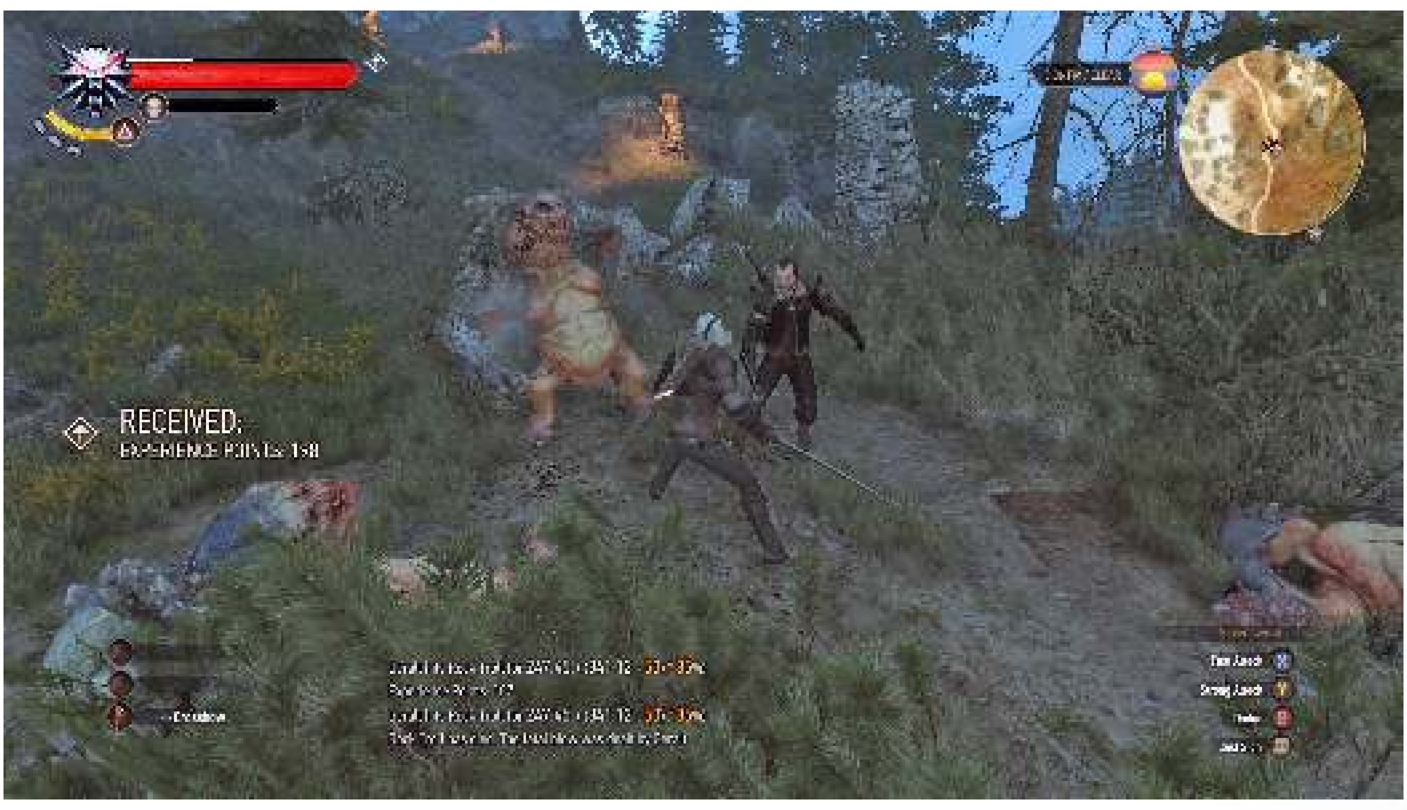
Main Quest: The Final Trial

This Mountain Trolly Mountain!

OBJECTIVES:

- Get to the Circle of Elements.
- Seek shelter in the tunnel.
- Get past the blockage.
- (Optional) Kill the trolls.

Head to the northeast wall, climb a couple of ledges, and turn east to reach an upper tunnel out into the open. Lambert seems intent on a combat-driven romp through this territory of trolls. Question him how you wish. Then turn left (east), and immediately follow the path curving to the left (north) up a deep mountain gully. Up ahead, a troll flees from you. You remark this is an odd behavior. A few moments later, two rock trolls appear on a high ledge, telling you this is their mountain. You can offer a measured or threatening response. Try the former, and Lambert interrupts with some unwanted threats of his own. Either way, large boulders pelt you both. Immediately sprint northwards towards a tunnel entrance.



DANGER: FALLING ROCKS

Standing and fighting is a bad idea, since you receive nasty damage from thrown rocks, and the trolls are perched on a ledge you can't physically reach. Time to go!

Once in the tunnel, your way is blocked by boulders. Use Aard to clear a path, climbing up a ledge and into a higher ravine where three rock trolls stop you. You can:

- Stop Lambert from ending this conversation violently, and negotiate a way to the Circle of Elements by removing and placing your swords on the ground. Lambert is understandably reluctant, but the situation is resolved peacefully.
- Agree with Lambert, and three rock trolls must be faced in combat.

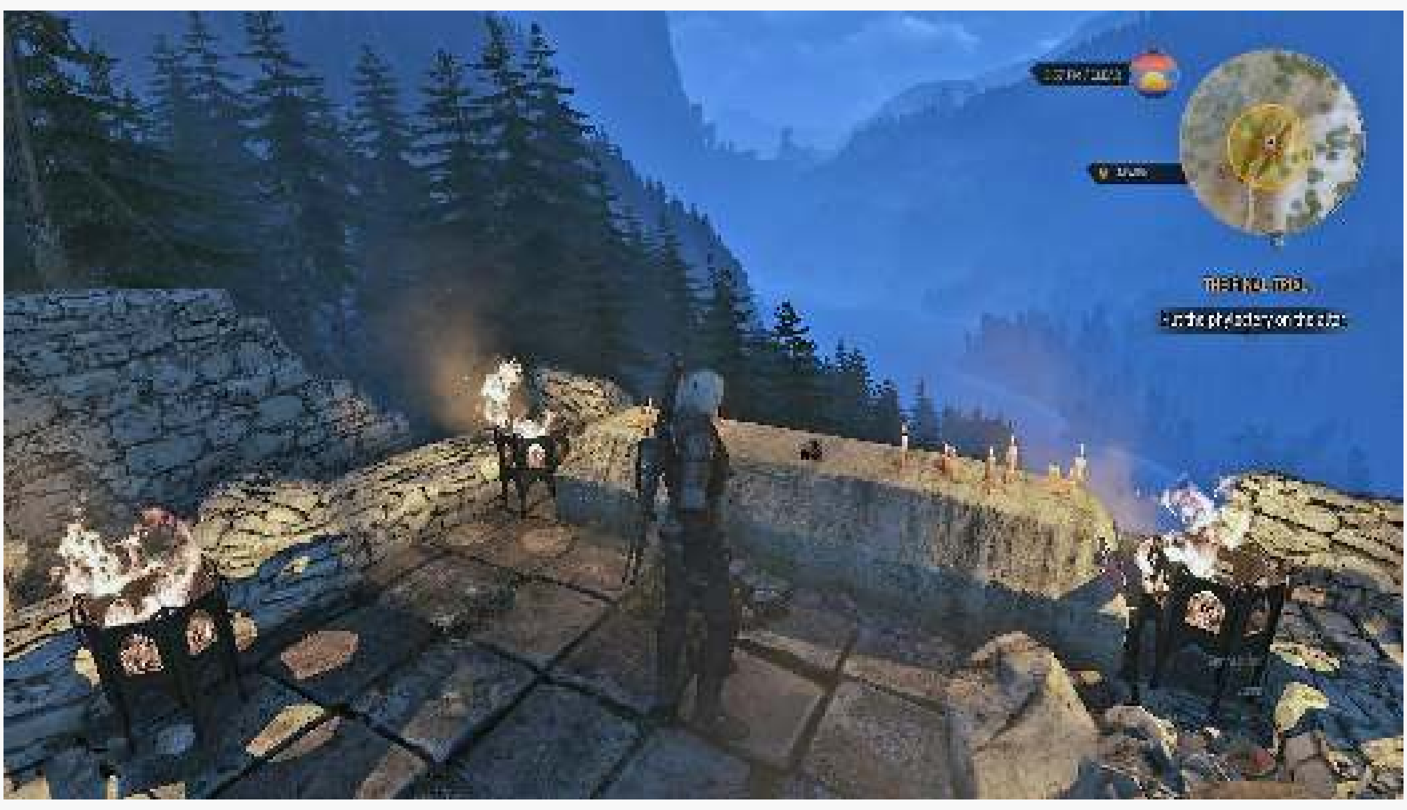
After more witty banter, and heading south up the rough trail to the ancient Circle of Elements, you reach your destination. Soak in the view, then listen and follow Lambert's instructions:

QUEST CONCLUSION: A TROUBLED SOUL

OBJECTIVES:

- Light the torches around the altar.
- Put the phylactery on the altar.

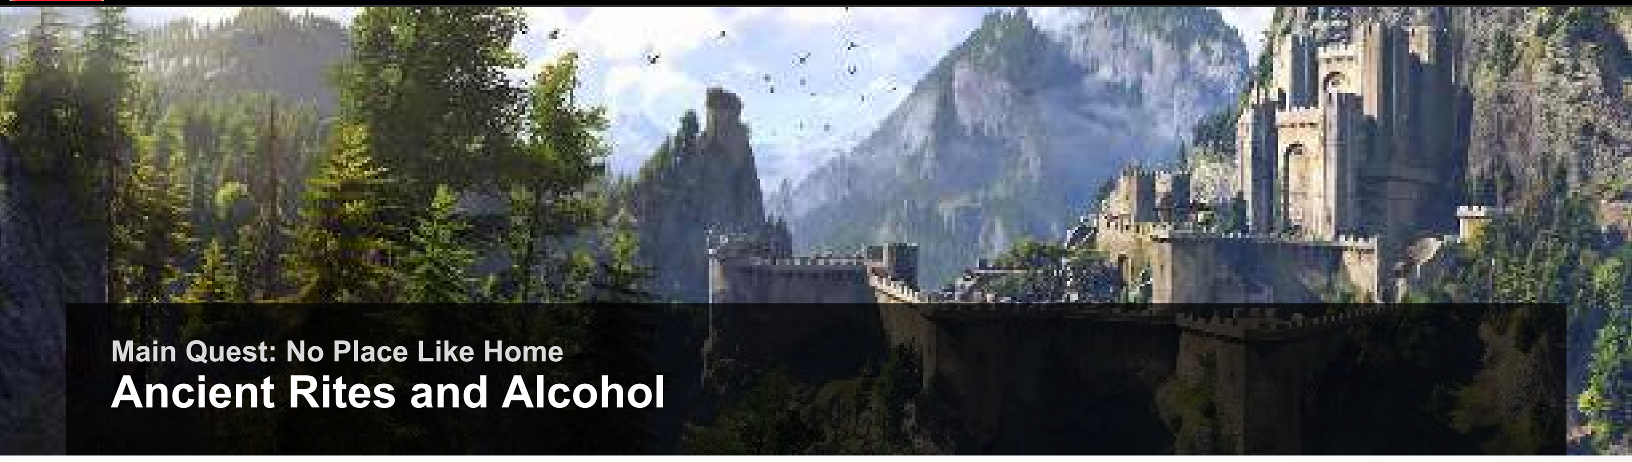
Move to each of the unlit torches, and use Igni to quickly light them. Then place the phylactery on the smooth stone altar. You wait, and Lambert asks how you dealt with trolls during your own trial. Answer how you wish.



A lengthy chat about Axii, bandits, and Lambert's troubled childhood occurs, after which you begin to understand why Lambert is so bitter. You gather the phylactery again, return to the troll guarding your swords, and take your equipment. You can:

- Follow Lambert and return (automatically) to the fortress.
- Elect to stay here and explore this wilderness.

If you've already completed the two other quests (with Yennefer and Eskel), Main Quest: No Place Like Home begins.



Main Quest: No Place Like Home

Ancient Rites and Alcohol

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: NO PLACE LIKE HOME

LOCATIONS : Kaer Morhen

CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Vesemir, Uma, Lambert, Eskel, Cyrus Hemmelfart

ENEMIES : None

OBJECTIVES:

- (Ugly Baby) Spend the evening with the other witchers.
- (No Place Like Home): Proceed to Kaer Morhen's main hall.

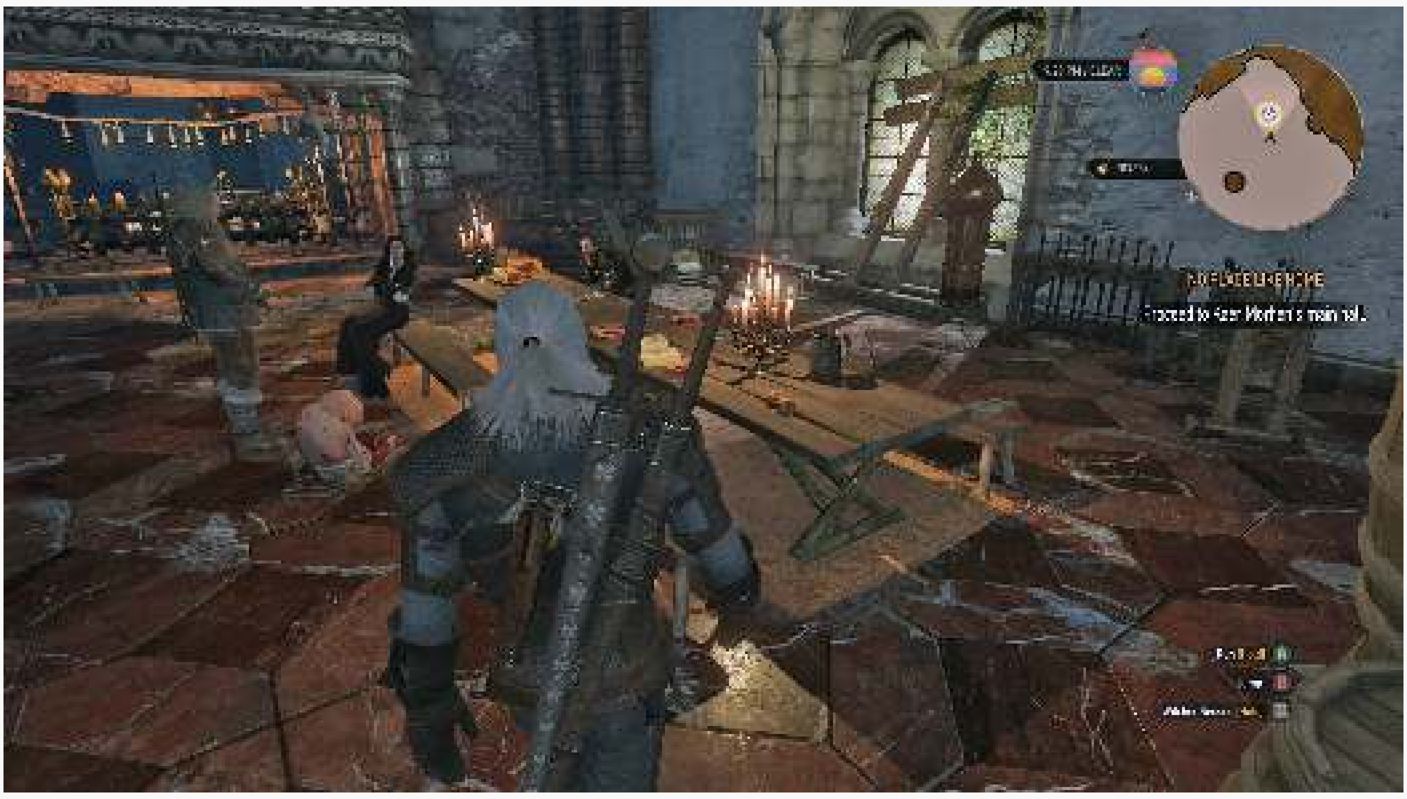
QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest is available once the previous three quests conclude. Main Quest: Ugly Baby also updates.

Enter the sprawling Kaer Morhen fortress, enter the main hall, and continue to the large dining table where your brethren are assembled. Yennefer orders Eskel and Lambert, but Vesemir interrupts her, reminding her who is in charge here. Vesemir has already figured out Yennefer's methods of freeing Uma aren't safe. He wants to try a less invasive method.

- Answer how you wish for all conversations during this reunion.

Vesemir wants to attempt an ancient rite. Yennefer scoffs at this primitive nonsense. He takes Uma, leaving you with Yennefer, Eskel, and Lambert. The conversation around the table is strained. After alcohol is introduced, the mood lightens up, and the conversation at the dining table continues anew. Eventually, Eskel asks if you'd mind raiding the kitchen. Oblige him. You return shortly.



Main Quest: No Place Like Home

Snacks Appeal, or Sex Appeal

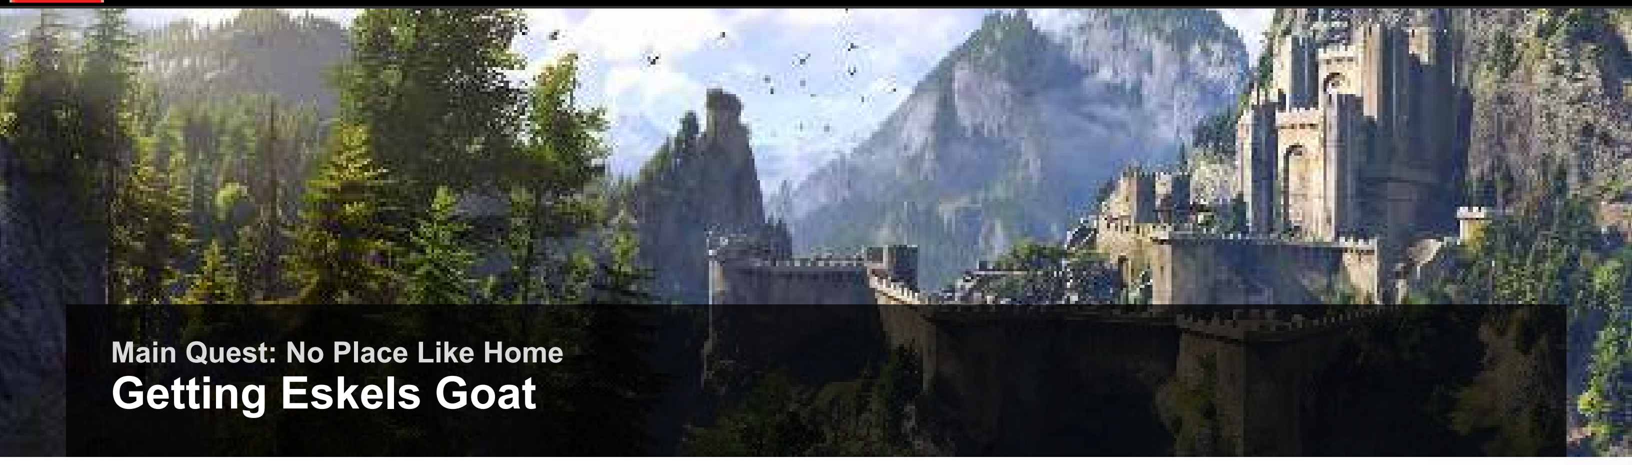
Yennefer excuses herself. However, you can stop, and speak to her at length about her time with the Wild Hunt, what happened in Nilfgaard, why she didn't look for you, and other, more personal chatter:

- If you're romantically involved with Yennefer, she requests to speak to you. You head upstairs where you're propositioned. Agree, and you're able to lie with Yennefer for a while. When you return, your fellow witchers are more relaxed due to alcohol consumption.

- If you're not romantically involved with Yennefer, it is suggested that everyone get drunk. After unanimous agreement, the mood becomes more relaxed due to alcohol consumption.

♥ Carnal Knowledge: Yennefer of Vengerberg (Second Occasion)

You return to the table and speak to Lambert. You speak about Eskel's conquests, your relationship with Yennefer, and other matters. You can also choose to play Gwent with Eskel. Lambert leaves and returns with a fancy hat sitting on his head at a rakish angle. You play a drinking game (choose to skip or drink as you wish). Eskel leaves. There's more drinking.



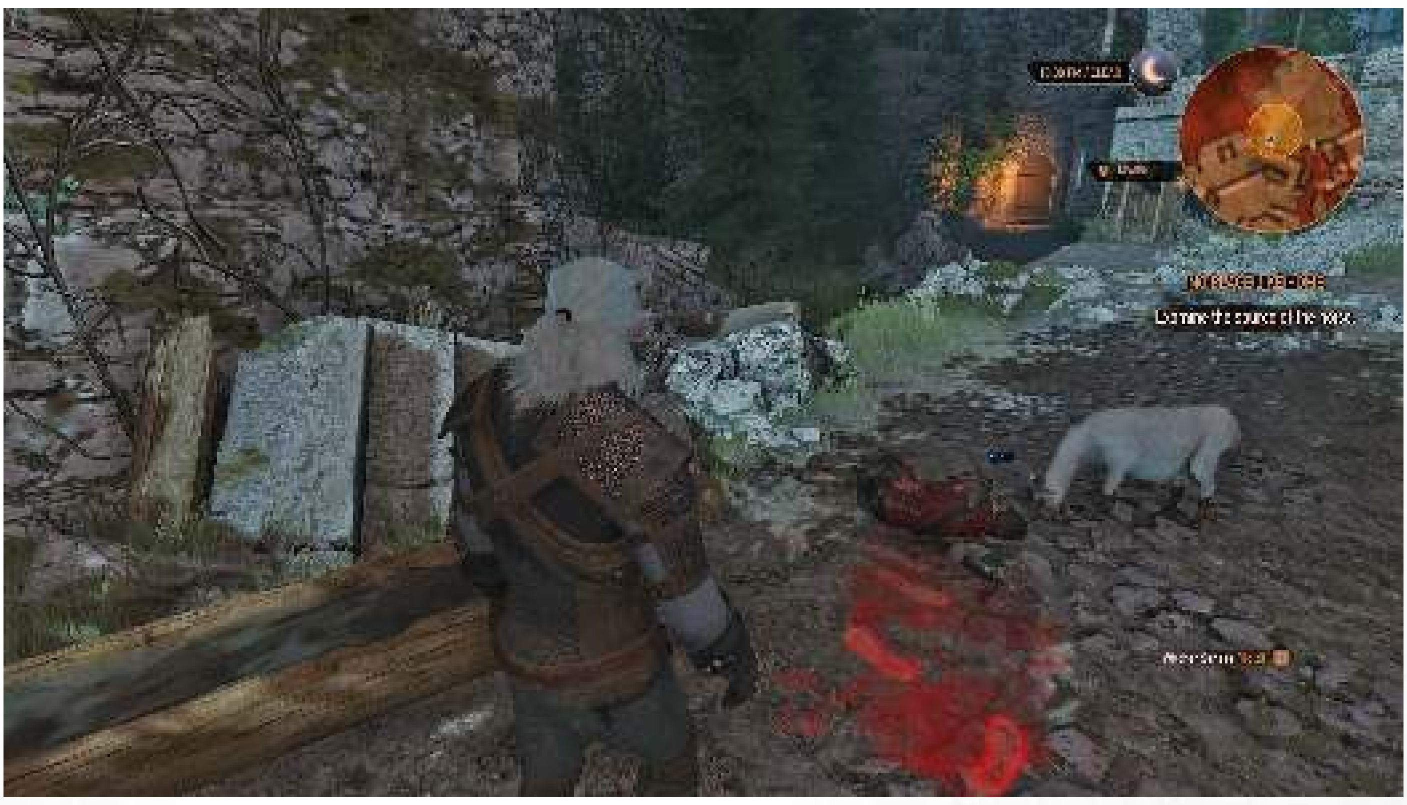
Main Quest: No Place Like Home

Getting Eskels Goat

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Eskel using your Witcher Senses.
- Examine the source of the noise.

Eskel stumbled off in a stupor. Use your Witcher Senses to uncover the following:



- Some spilled wine Eskel crawled through.
- Follow the prints past the dead ekimmara on the table, towards the exit to the west. Step outside. There are sounds. Of a wounded wyvern?
- There's blood on the ground.

Head south, to Eskel's sleeping form. The sounds were from a snoring Eskel. You wake Eskel up. Then Lambert has the exceptional idea of turning on the megascope, and communicating with that sorceress for some female company. You can:

- Tell him he's a genius.
- Tell him he's had his last drink. If you choose not to fiddle with Yennefer's megascope to call for "female company," you fall asleep, and this quest concludes now.

END: WHO'S WEARING THE TROUSERS?

OBJECTIVE:

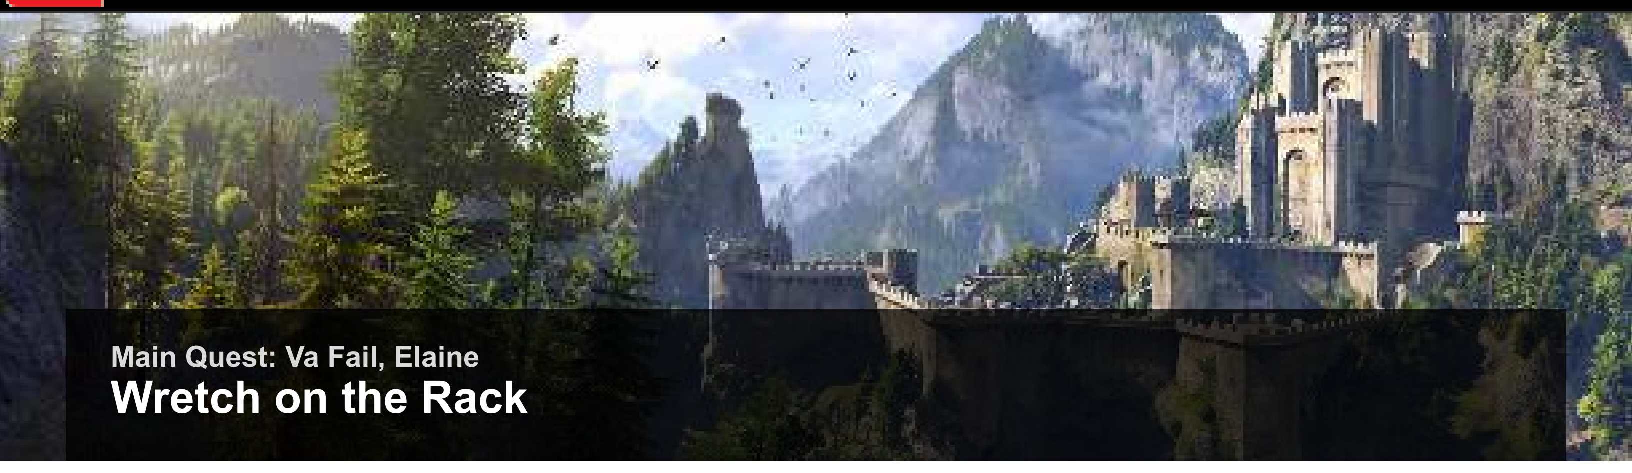
- Search Yennefer's trunks.

You now stagger up to Yennefer's scrying chamber, and attempt to use the megascope. No matter your protests (or agreements), Lambert reckons that the lovely Ida would be thrilled to speak to you three drunks. But in order not to scare her during initial contact, he decides everyone must pretend to be Yennefer, by dressing up as her. This sound plan seems to have no drawbacks (aside from a zero possibility of working), and can check Yennefer's trunks for appropriate attire.

Find a "glimmering" one, and take Yennefer's trousers. Then put them on in your Inventory Menu. You may also choose to use the megascope without playing dress-up.

ITEM: Quest Item: Yennefer's Trousers

The three of you look slightly inelegant to put it mildly. Still, you jabber something incomprehensible and not even close to being elvish, and the device starts to shimmer. You make contact! Though it's with Cyrus Hemmelfart, the hierarch of Novigrad. He appears to be on the latrine. Shouting for guards, your "conversation" is curtailed by Yennefer. You're ordered to bed. The quest then concludes.



Main Quest: Va Fail, Elaine

Wretch on the Rack

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: VA FAIL, ELAINE

LOCATIONS : Kaer Morhen

CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Vesemir, Uma, Lambert, Eskel,

ENEMIES : None

OBJECTIVES:

- (Ugly Baby): Remove the curse afflicting Uma.
- (Va Fail, Elaine): Gather the necessary ingredients and prepare the Potions of the Grasses.
- Brew the potions needed for the Trial of the Grasses.

Avallac'h

You wake the next morn with Vesemir already back at the fortress. Uma is tied to Sad Albert, a torture table. Although his ritual was ineffective, he did notice Uma behaved differently under relaxed consciousness. Yennefer startles you by actually apologizing to Vesemir. He's found out something critical about Uma. Now potions must be brewed in preparation for Yennefer's spellcasting. You're on ingredient-finding duty:

You receive the formula from Yennefer. Head to the nearby table and gather the forktail spinal fluid, as well as all the other ingredients for the potions.

Then access your Alchemy menu, choose the formula grass extracts, and quickly brew the potion from the following components:

Ingredient	Amount
Bryonia	(1)
Ribleaf	(1)
Mandrake Root	(1)
Forktail Spinal Fluid	(1)
Manticore Poison Gland	(1)
Albino Bruxa Tongue	(1)

ITEM: Quest Item: Decoctions of the Grasses

Return to Yennefer, who takes the potions, and feeds them intravenously into the poor wretch on the rack. When prompted, administer the Mother's Tears, Wildrye Juice, and Speargrass Sap. Telling Yennefer this is a bad idea simply stalls the progression of the trial. After the potions are administered, Uma vomits all over Yennefer. You're on clean-up duty.

You scrub the floors with Eskel, who moans about Ciri being harmed if this trial goes wrong. You put your trust in Yennefer.

END: BACK ON TRACK

The trial continues well into the night. Yennefer urges you to keep her from falling asleep. Choose either story in conversation to tell her. Then Uma begins to wake up. Yennefer unleashes her magic, yelling at you to open the phylactery. The matter is caught within the box. Uma transforms. The curse is lifted. You stare into the face of Avallac'h—the Aen Elle elf sage who helped Ciri. You hear Avallac'h murmuring something about the Isle of Mists in Skellige. He summons a strange orb of light. It shall guide you across the seas to this mysterious isle, where Ciri's fate may be sealed. These quests now all conclude.

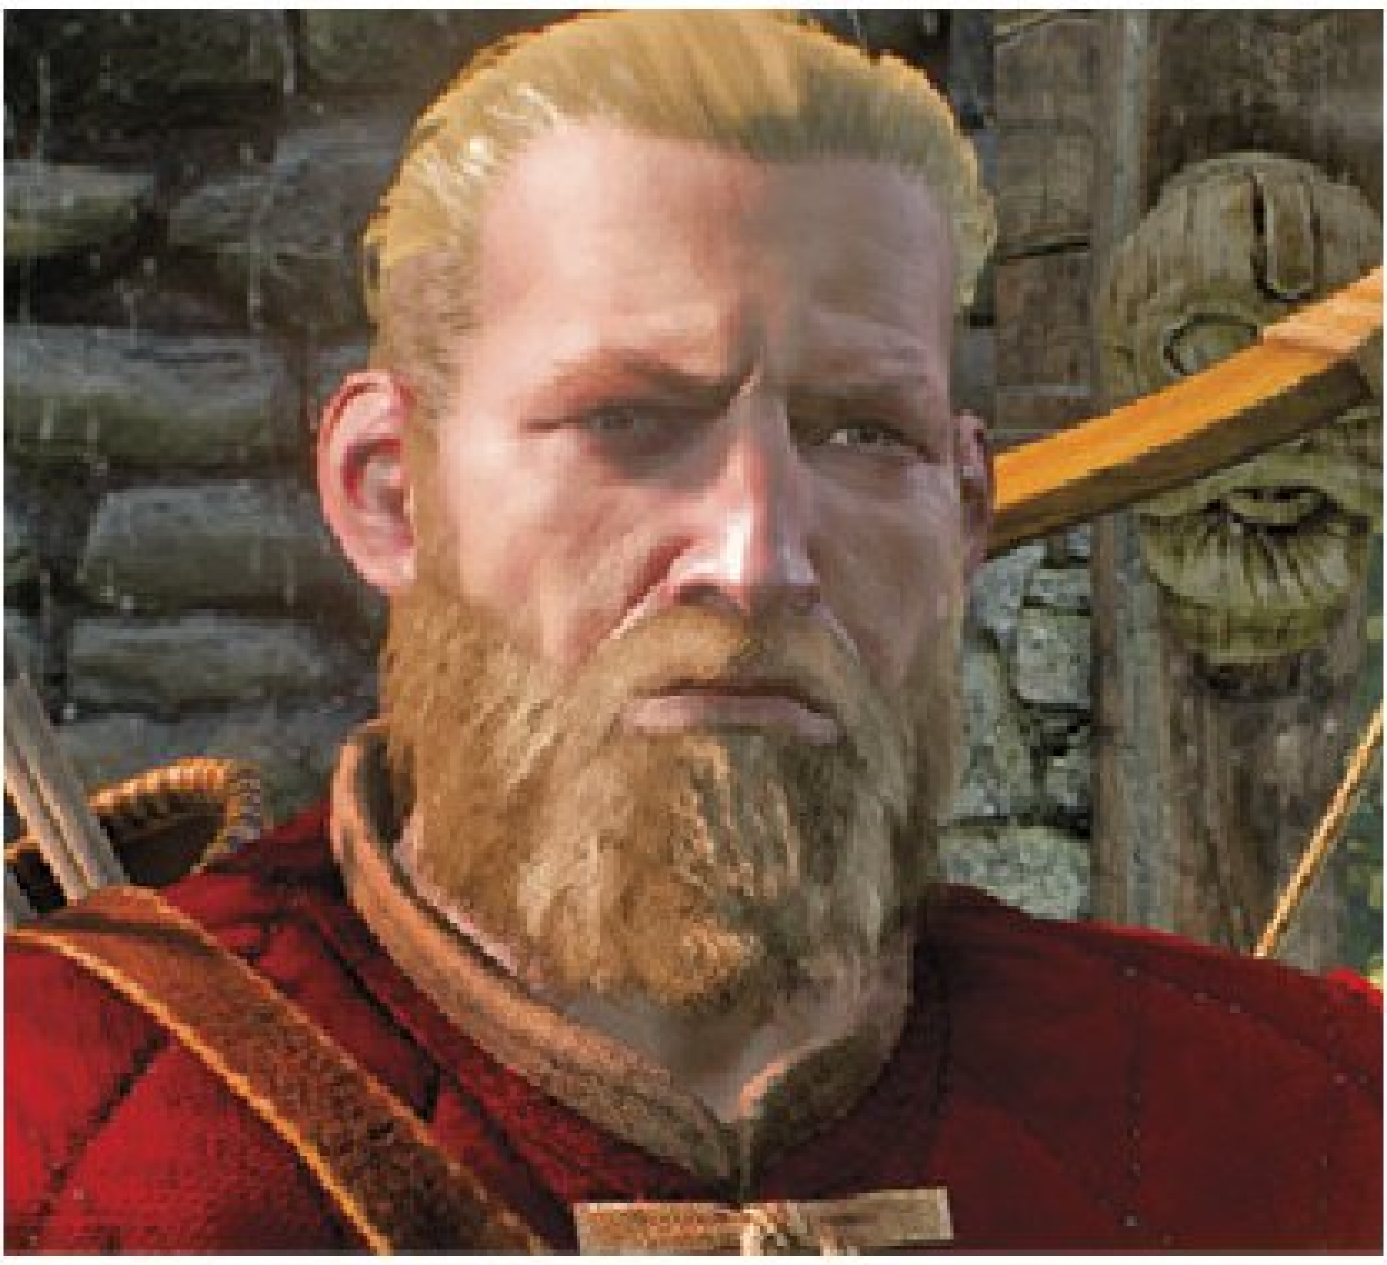
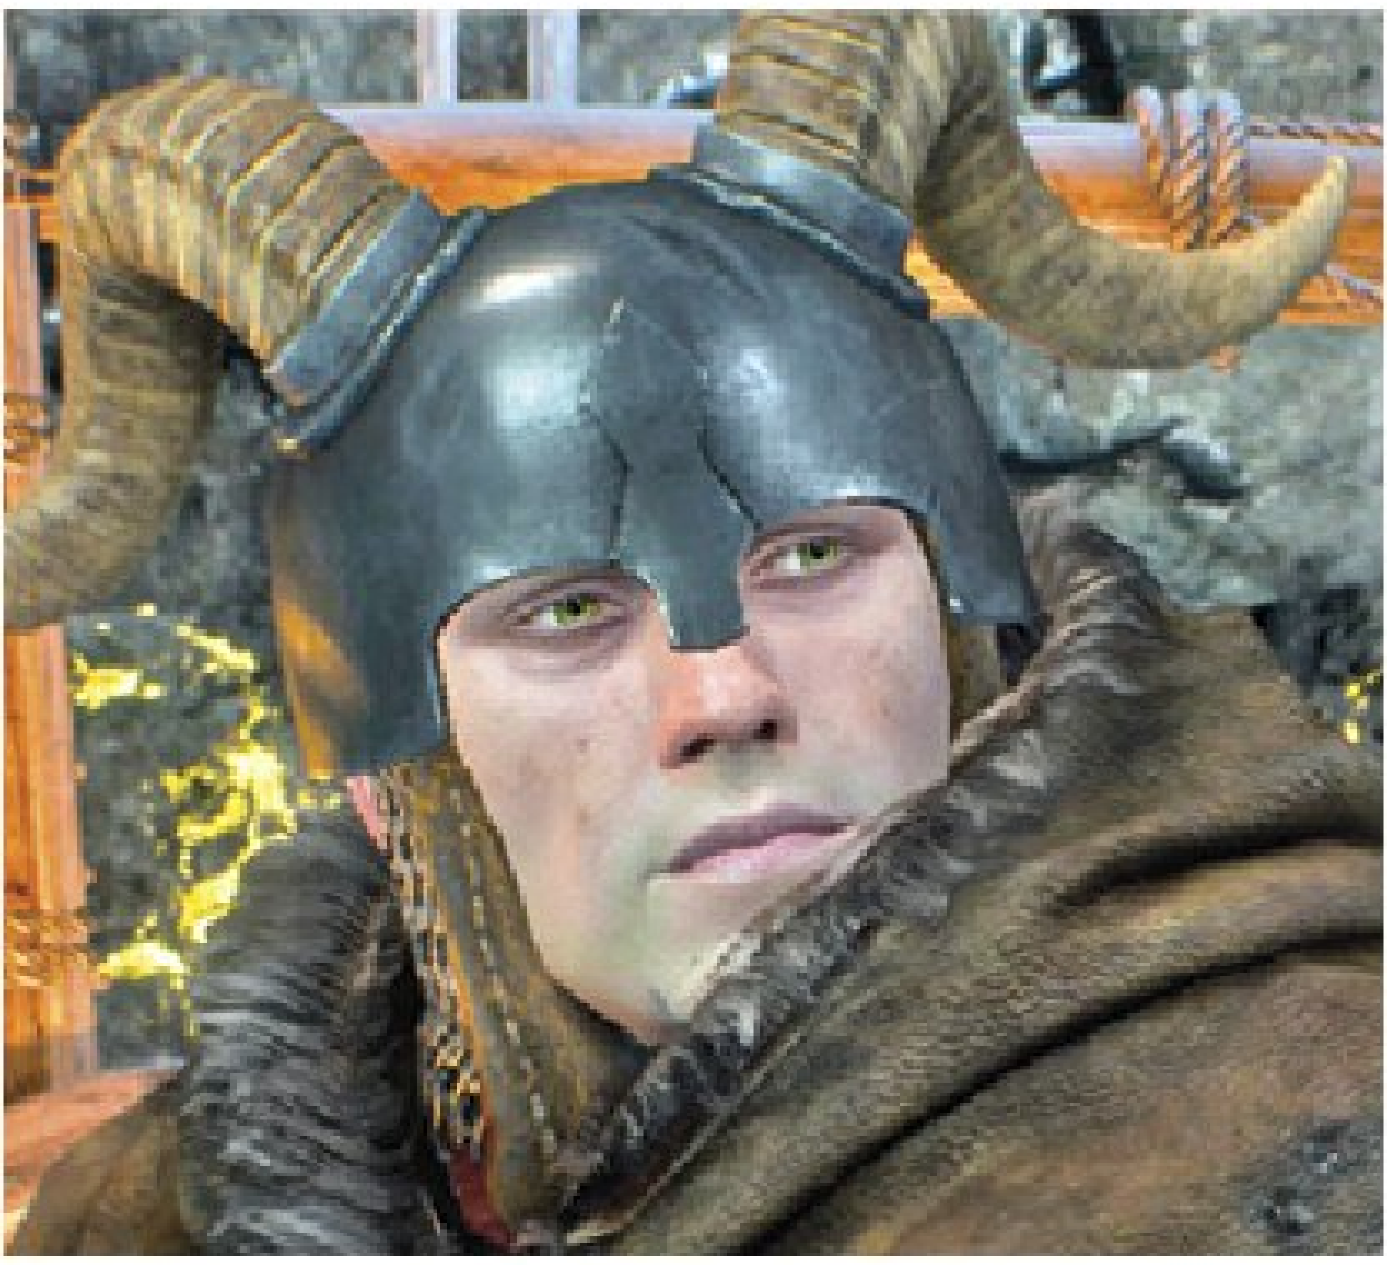
Folan and Vigi



Folan



Vigi

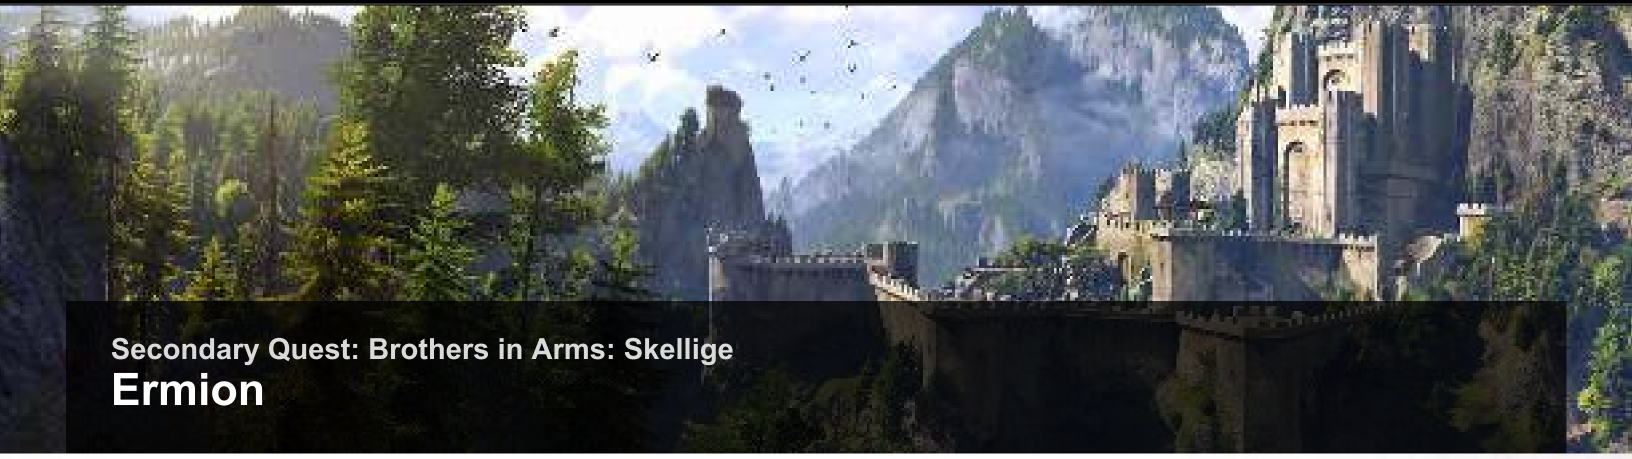
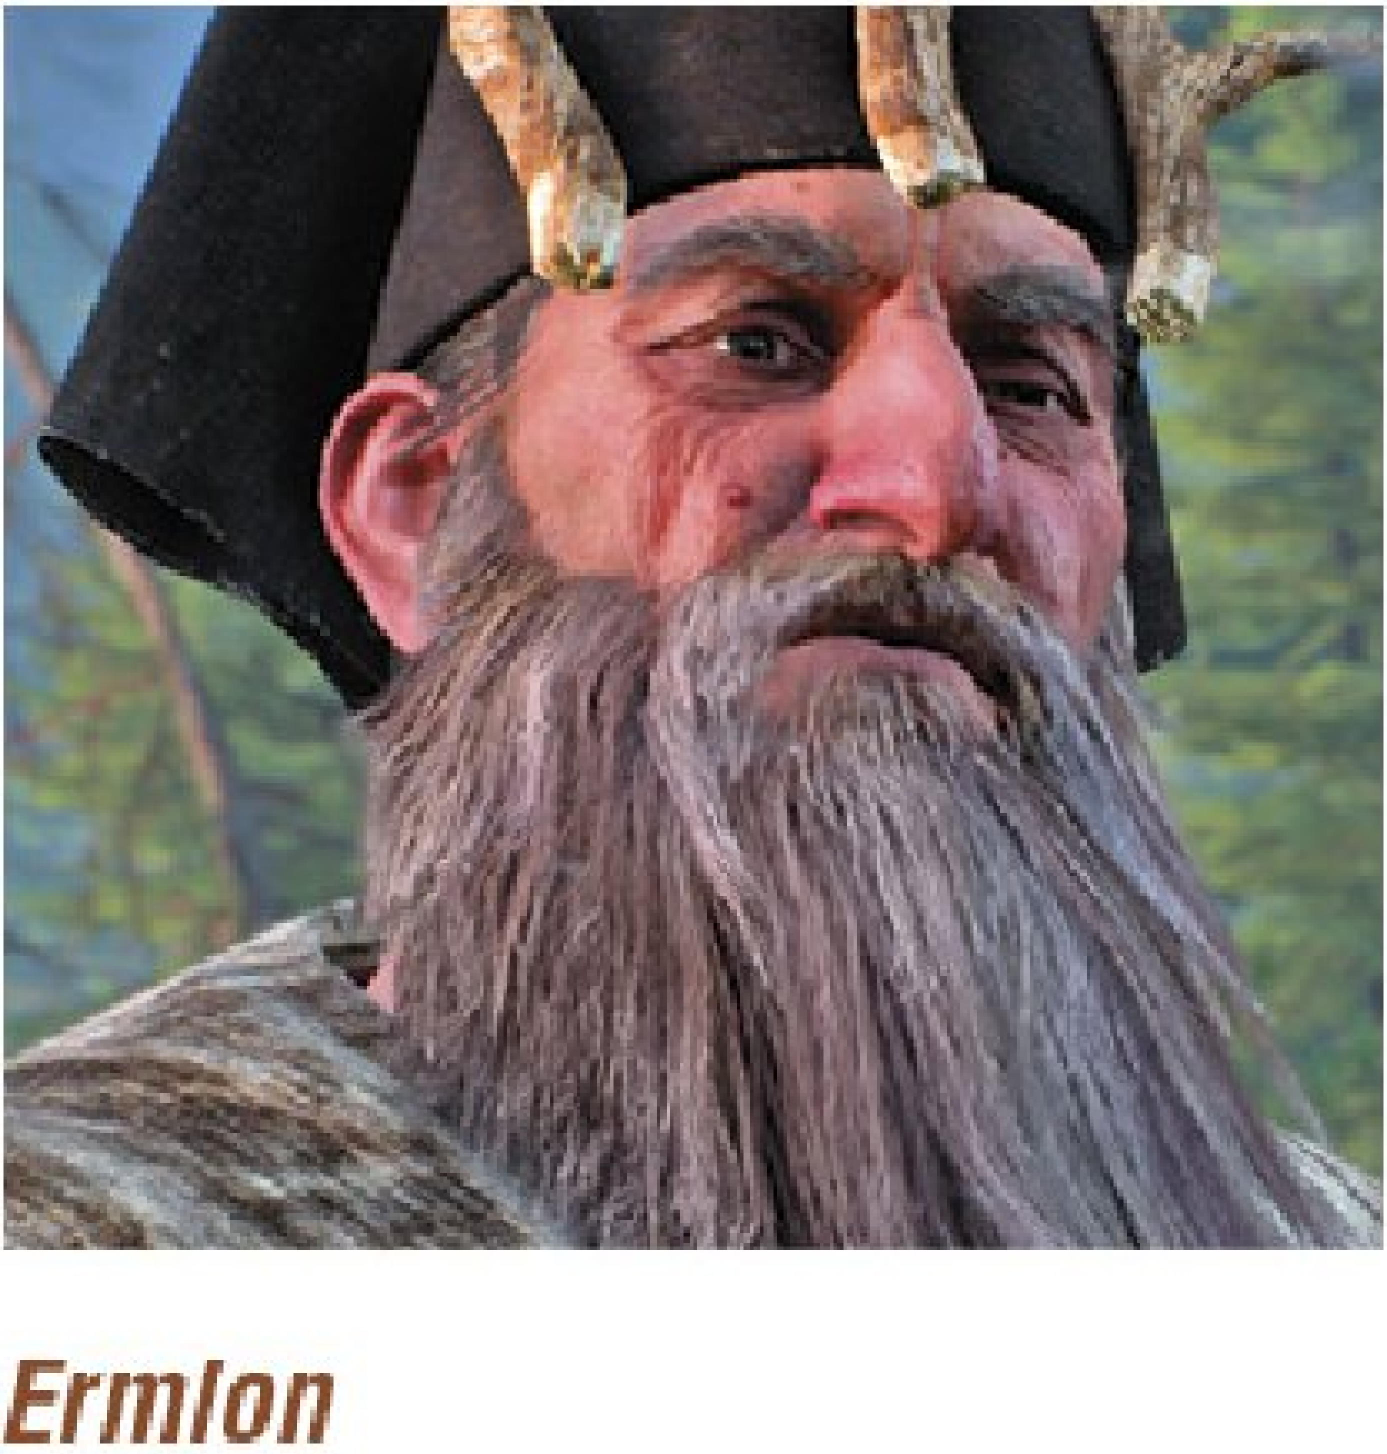
Don't forget about these two lunatics! Assuming you met and helped them, both Folan and Vigi provide an almost animal-like ferocity to the forthcoming battle, and will already have made the journey to Kaer Morhen (so you don't invite them personally during this quest; just expect them to accompany Hjalmar when you invite him). To ensure they help out, you must complete the following:

- Secondary Quest: The Lord of Undvik saved Folan from the rock troll's cauldron, and saved Vigi from his prison during the battle with the mountain giant.



Secondary Quest: Brothers in Arms: Skellige

Ermion



LOCATION: KAER TROLDE (ARD SKELLIG) OR GEDYNEITH (DURING SECONDARY QUEST: CORONATION).

Main Quest: The Isle of Mists

It's Off to Work You Go

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE ISLE OF MISTS

LOCATIONS : Kaer Trolde Harbor (Ard Skellig), Undvik (Island), The Isle of Mists (Island)

CHARACTERS : Ivo, Ferenc, Gaspard, Cirilla

ENEMIES : Sirens, Harpies, Foglets, Wraiths, Bilge Hags, Fiend

ARMED UP, READY TO GO

Beware! Don't venture into the Isle of Mists until you're happy with the decisions you made in gathering your alliance members for the Battle of Kaer Morhen, since that quest begins automatically at the conclusion of this one!

OBJECTIVES:

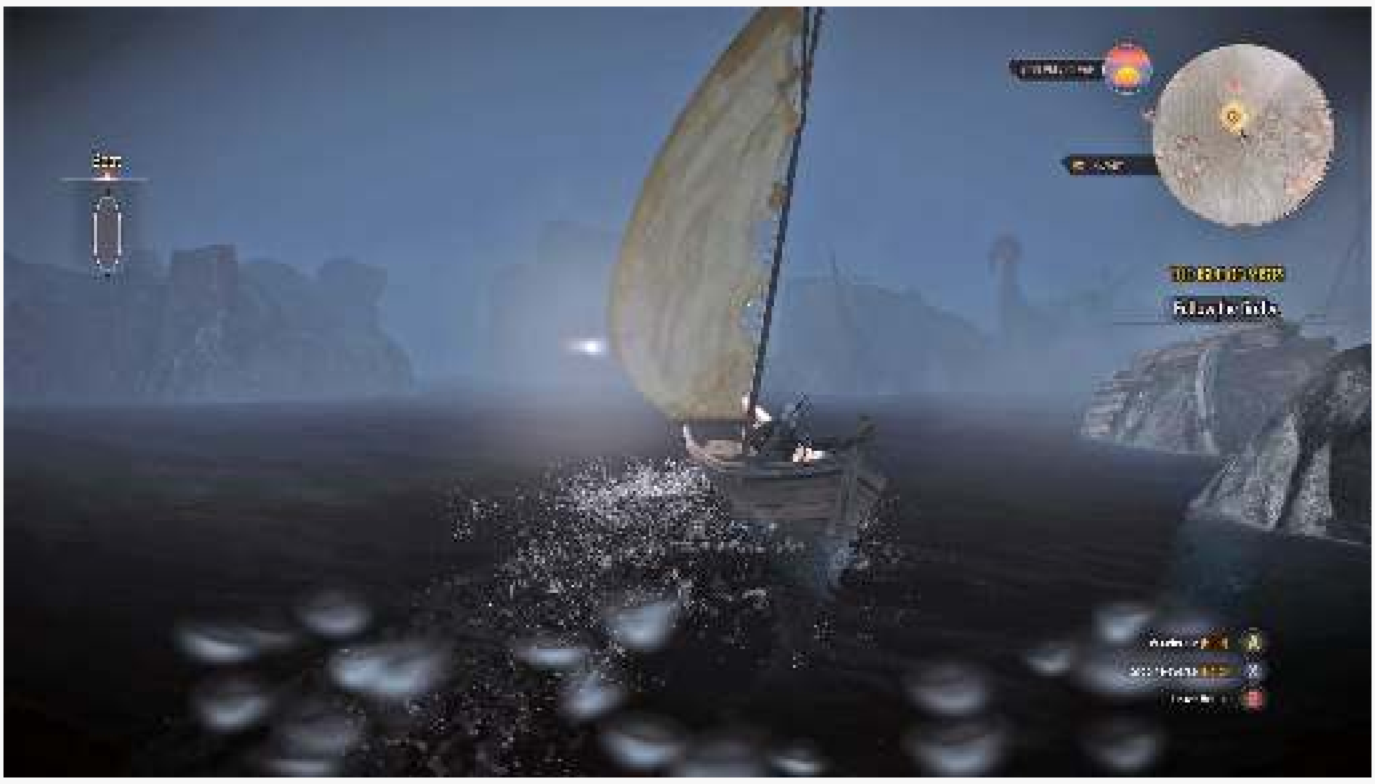
- Follow the firefly.
- Check what's in the hut.

Avallac'h has summoned a small bright orb to aid you in your travels across Skellige. From your chosen port (Kaer Trolde), navigate across the ocean to the strange mists off the coast of Undvik, where you're teleported to the still and eerie waters close to the Isle of Mists. Take care not to scrape your boat against numerous jagged islands, outcrops, and the rotting skeletons of longships long abandoned. Deal with any sirens by stopping your ship and firing at them or using Signs.

You're heading into a place not seen on any map. A mystical island with a rugged sandy shore, and a wharf to clamber onto.

Once ashore, the firefly bobs onwards up a slight incline. Follow it, watching for a couple of (what else?) foglets appearing. Dispatch them, before running up along a rocky path, with a strange little cottage built into the stone hillside, close to a gnarled tree. Knock on the door. There's no answer. Except for a sneeze. A gruff voice asks what you want. Tell him about your search for the ashen-haired Ciri. Your questions are met with obfuscation, until another voice pipes up. There's a group of fellows in this hut—survivors of a shipwreck. Answer how you wish, but that door is remaining closed.

Frustrated, tell them you'll look for the group's lost mates. There are three missing: Ivo, Gaspard, and Ferenc. It's worth asking where each of them was last seen, before you go. Start your search for the dwarves in any order you like.



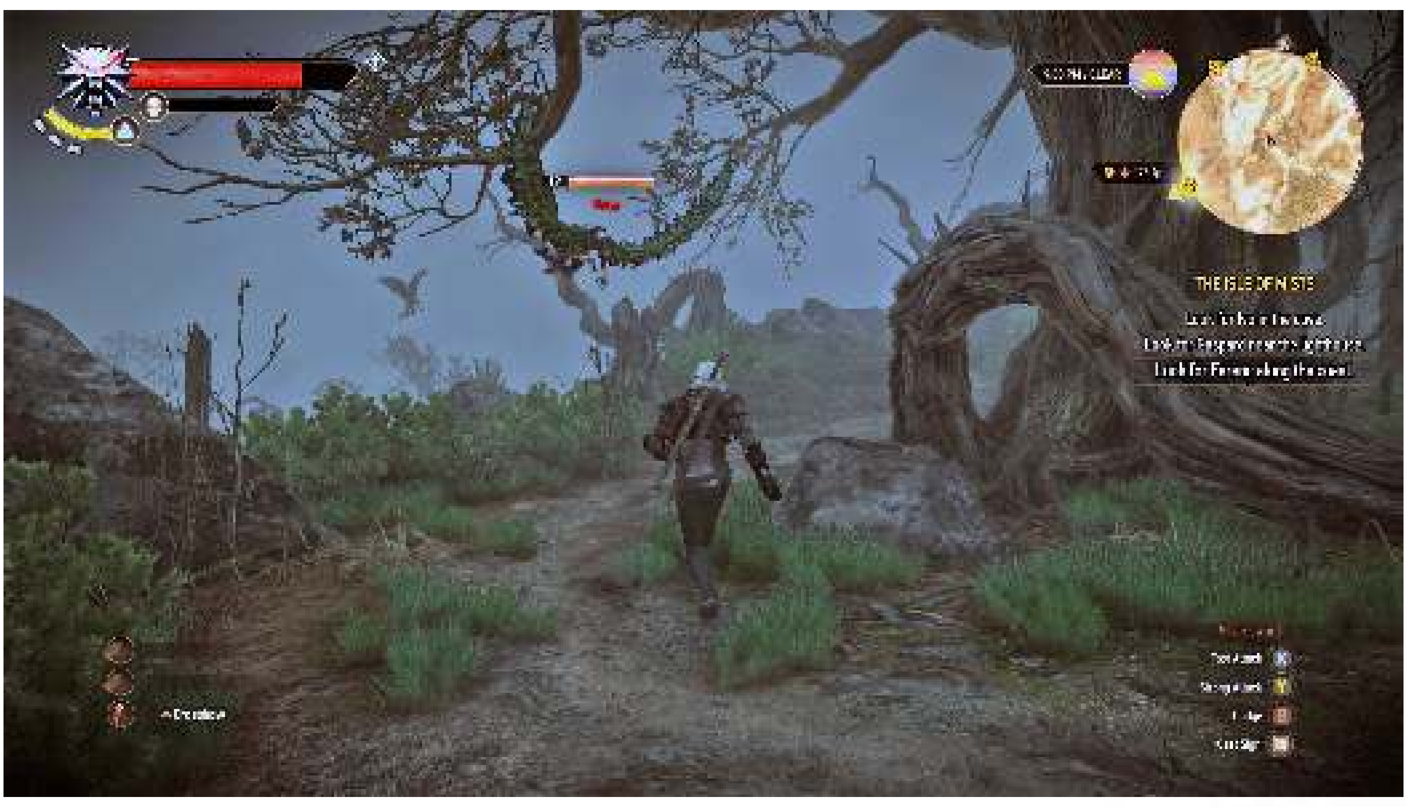
Main Quest: The Isle of Mists

A Long Walk Off a High Column

OBJECTIVE:

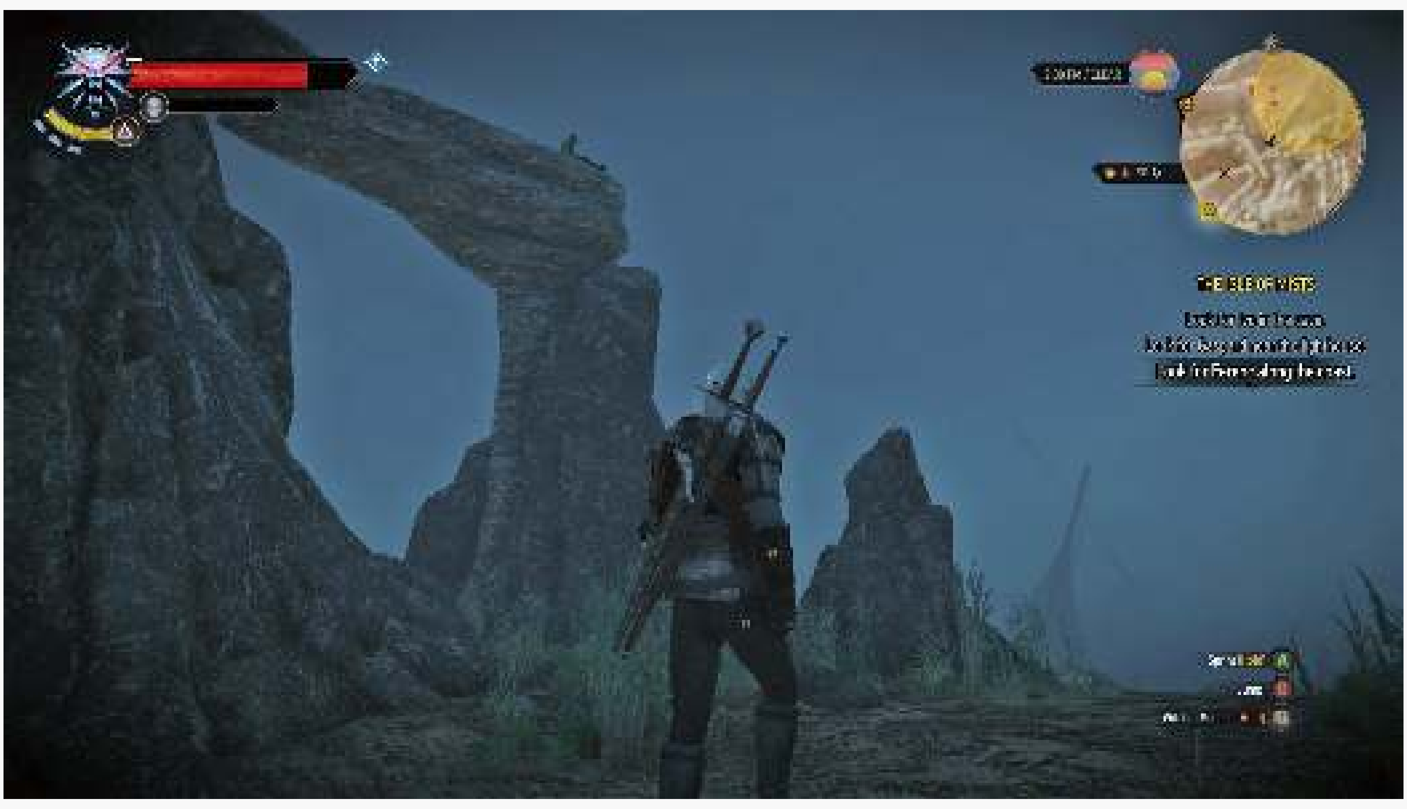
- (Optional) Find Ivo.

The isle of mists is a strange, gloomy place. Begin by heading down the path, then sprint roughly northwards across the grass and strange twisted trees, fighting off harpies. Run slightly northeast, toward and through a rocky arch, and onto a lonely beach, then jump the gap in the path down to the sand dunes. The coast is littered with flotsam, jetsam, and bedraggled longship wrecks. Expect a couple of bilge hags to attack, close to a strange rock column.



Ivo

Wait! Did you hear a plaintive call for help? Yes, it's coming from a dwarf stuck atop a tall rock column further up (west) along the shore. Run to the little fellow, and tell him you've talked to his friends. He's safe from monsters and can come down. The chap is delighted, but slips on the way down, and plummets to his death. What a dope.



Main Quest: The Isle of Mists

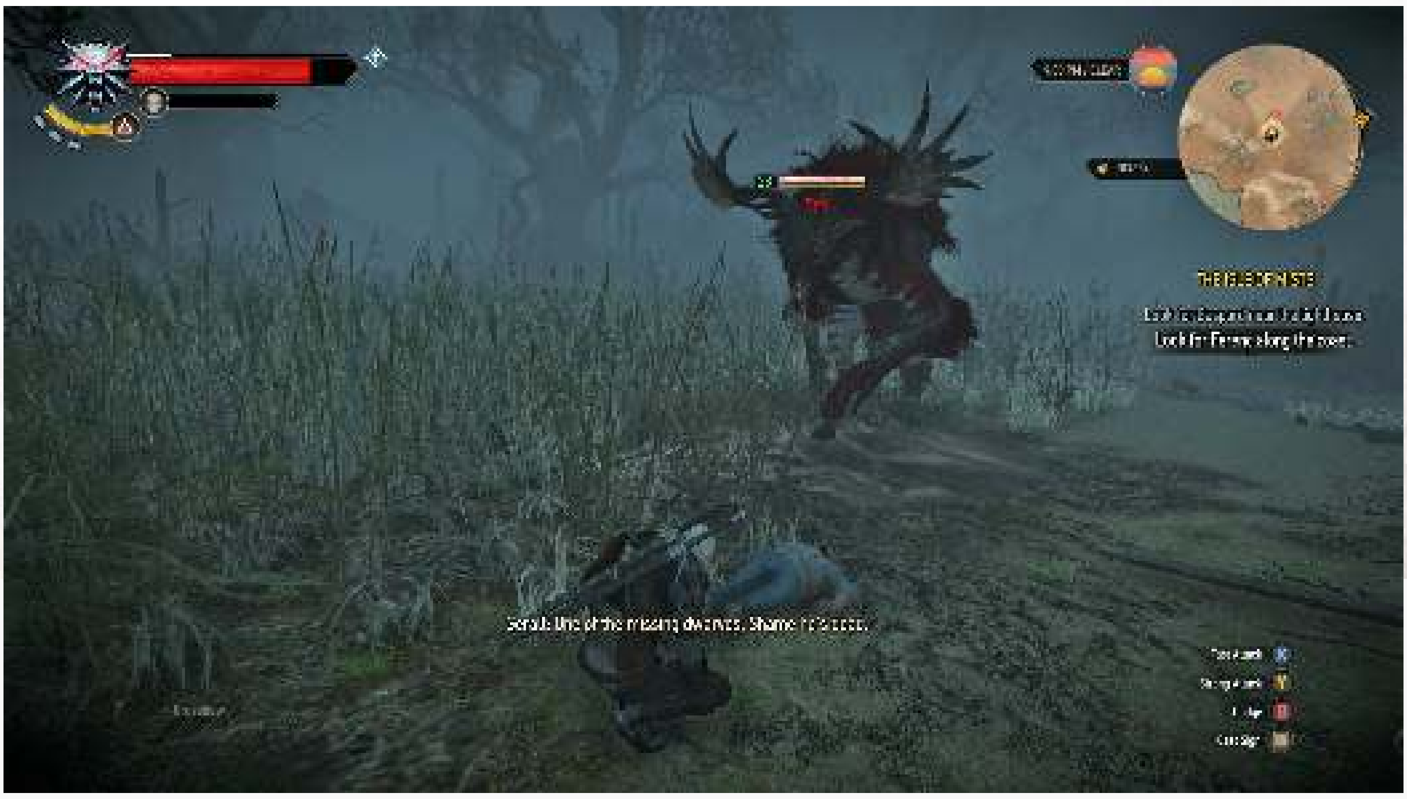
Ferenc Flattened by a Fiend

OBJECTIVE:

- (Optional) Find Ferenc.

Cross the island heading roughly south, watching for foglets and weaving through strange shrubbery and grotesque woodland, slowing as you reach a flatter area. Something large is moving near a large tree. It's a fiend.

Batter it to death with Signs and swords, then inspect the diminutive corpse nearby. Alas, it is Ferenc, all bashed and full of fiend claw marks.



FIEND VULNERABILITIES

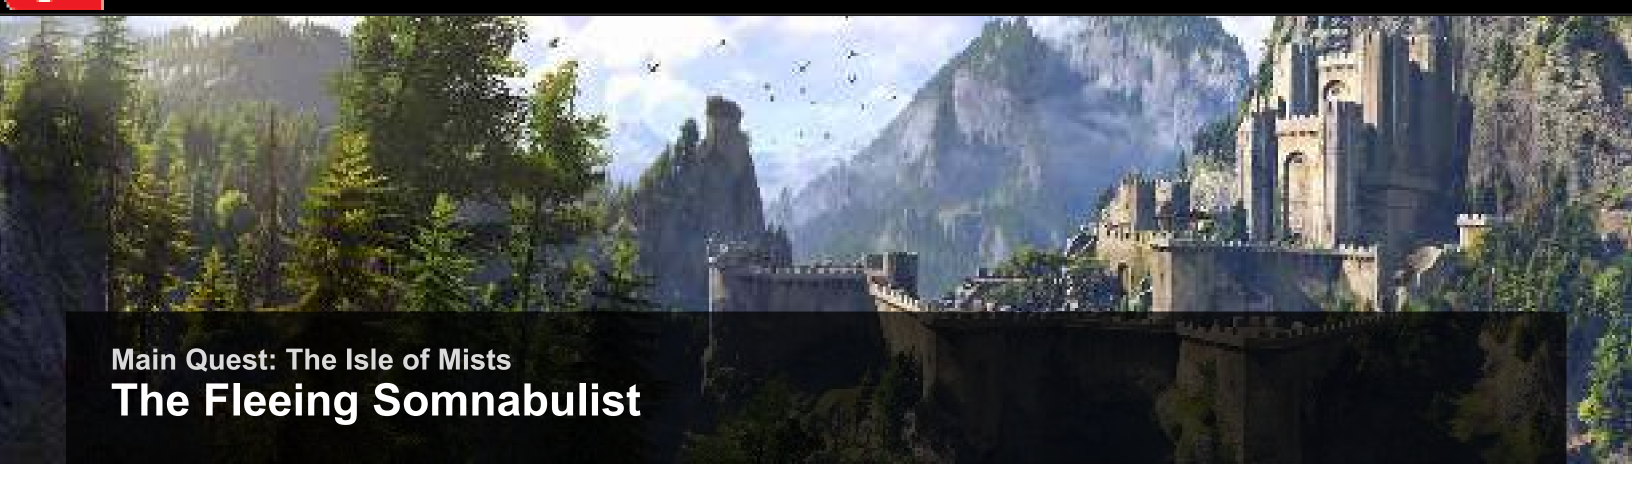
The fiend is vulnerable against the following:

Bomb: Samum

Bomb: Devil's Puffball

Oil: Relict Oil

Sign: Igni



Main Quest: The Isle of Mists

The Fleeing Somnabulist

OBJECTIVES:

- Find Gaspard.
- Bring Gaspard to the hut.
- Wake up Gaspard.

Gaspard

Let's hope for better luck with the last dwarf. Sprint northward from the corpse, through the mangled woods, across the debris-strewn inlet shore, and passing more twisted and gnarled trees. In the distance is a partly derelict lighthouse. Head inside and climb the three ladders to the fire burning at the very top. Also present is a snoozing dwarf named Gaspard. Hey, wake up sleepyhead!

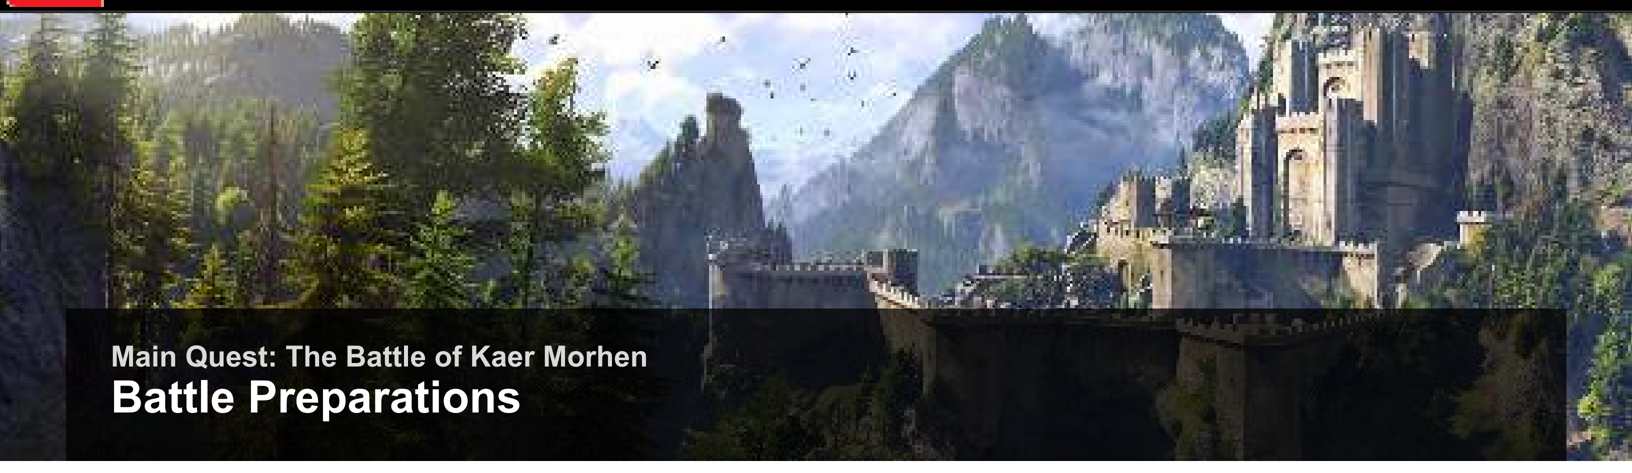
Stoop down and speak to the narcoleptic dwarf. Speak about Ciri, his friends, and feel free to leave him here and explore more of the island if you wish. But to rescue Gaspard, tell him his friends told you to find him. Run over to him and interact with the dwarf to shake him awake. Then venture onwards, into a thicket of foglets. Defeat around three of them, before patiently chaperoning Gaspard all the way back to the hut.

THE ISLE OF MISTS
Look for Gaspard near the lighthouse.

END: A MIST OPPORTUNITY

Cirilla

Upon your return to the hut, Gaspard gives the all-clear, and you explain the fates of the two remaining dwarves. You push past them after they tell you they fear the ashen-haired woman is dead. In fact, it is a magically-induced coma. You embrace as she wakens. Speak to her about Avallac'h, whom she trusts. She tells fantastic tales of other worlds. She speaks of visiting the Baron, dealings with Whoreson Junior, Dandelion, her journey to the shores of Skellige, the cataclysm of magic, the Wild Hunt almost capturing her in Lofoten, and her final retreat, into the Isle of Mists. Finally, you leave, but the dwarves have stolen your boat. Though the Wild Hunt will know your position, the only choice is for Ciri to open a portal, and flee to Kaer Morhen. This quest then concludes.



Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen

Battle Preparations

You address everyone before the Wild Hunt attacks. Ciri explains how the Wild Hunt chases her, and a counter-attack strategy is agreed upon by the assembled friends. Preparation is required. Choose any talking point you wish.

You will ride out to attack foes in the woods with Lambert and Letho. Lambert's dimeritrium bombs, and the Yrden Sign, should help close the navigator portals the Wild Hunt will use. Yennefer hands out amulets that will make all of the hunting party invisible. Triss is to provide potent fire magic when called upon.

You agree that Ciri is the most important, after which Roche offers to dig some trapping pits to waylay the Wild Hunt. Zoltan offer his sticky, flammable Mahakaman mix, and Ermion will make use of the natural gas pockets the keep sits on, but only if you invited these fellows along for the battle. Vesemir mentions the workshop and laboratory, and that one type of weaponry can be crafted at each location. Vesemir will continue brewing potions at the laboratory. Or Eskel can prepare more witcher traps. Make your choice:

- Choose the potion, and you receive Superior Swallow. If you completed Secondary Quest: Following the Thread with Lambert, you also receive Fortified Rafard's Decoction; both helping you survive the battle to come.
- Choose traps, you will see traps appear on all the yards of Kaer Morhen. When a foe walks into these traps, they explode. Therefore the choice between potions or traps is a tactical one; are you better at dealing a lot of damage (choose potions) or receiving a lot of damage (choose traps)?

Vesemir wants to fix the breach in a wall, but the same workshop tools are needed to clear a cave in at the armory, where some choice swords are available. Make your choice:

- Choose to patch up the wall, and Savolla's breach (from Witcher 1) is closed up, and the final stand-off has one fewer wave of enemies entering Kaer Morhen.
- Choose to clear the armory, there are some scenic changes and you gain access to a locked part of Kaer Morhen, where the armory was. Here you can obtain a superior silver sword and all the witchers in this fight receive weapons that deal more damage. The decision here is also a tactical one: Do you prefer to have more of the Wild Hunt to kill, but with a better sword, or fewer enemies and a lesser weapon (unless your own crafted sword is preferable...).

The preparations are completed, and Lambert readies for combat. Join him when you're ready. On the way, you speak to Ciri, impressing upon her the need to keep her safe. Then head west, out of the keep. Your comrades take up their positions. The Wild Hunt arrives, and Yennefer conjures her protective shield.

ALCHEMICAL ACCESS HERE!

Wait! Just before the battle starts, be sure to check Kaer Morhen for its excellent supply of alchemical ingredients; prepare them here and now, as this is the last chance before battle commences!

PLANS OF ATTACK

Use the following additional tactics during each part of the battle to come:

Before the battle

Replenish all your bombs and potions before leaving the keep, there will be no other occasions during the siege.

The Forest Rifts

Close all three rifts as quickly as possible; the fight has just started so save your bombs and potions for later stages. Remember that killing Wild Hunt warriors and hounds isn't necessary; removing the rifts from the sides, away from foes, and fleeing can be more effective than full-frontal attacks.

Running the Walls with Ciri

Use her Blink ability to move faster and to dodge enemy attacks.

Use her your Charge attack to kill group of enemies in relatively safe way.

The Main Courtyard Battle

Reach the keep from the forest as quickly as you can, or you may die quickly.Fight only when absolutely necessary; concentrating mostly on your objectives.

The Interior Courtyard Battle: At this point, all enemies must be slain, so start utilizing your bombs and potions; though it's always a good idea to save one Swallow or Rafard's Decoction for later.

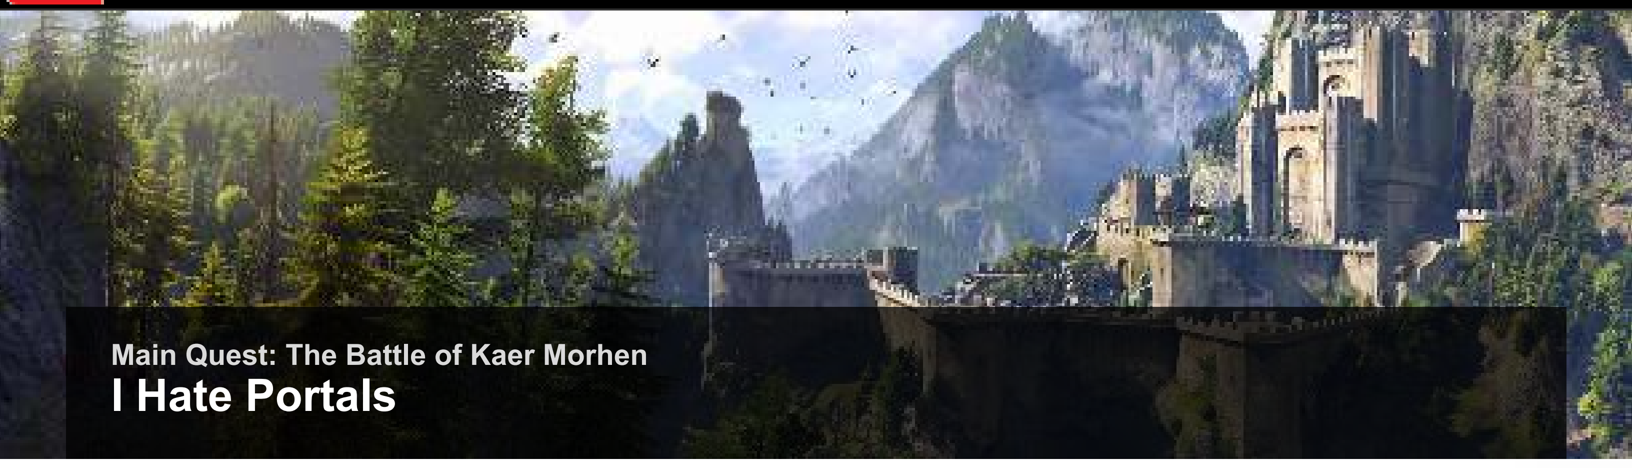
Be sure to use Igni to detonate the Mahalaman barrels (from Zoltan) and the rifts of gas (from Ermion); these devastate your foes. Use Aard to push your foes into the witcher traps, if you chose to build them.

Ciri's Second Battle

As before, use her Blink ability to move faster and to dodge enemy attacks.Use her your Charge attack to kill group of enemies in relatively safe way.If you are seriously wounded, attempt to hide and regenerate your health.

The Main Gate

Use Quen quickly, and then use Yrden on the rifts. If you're out of bombs and your stamina regeneration is slow, rely on the bombs to remove the enemy threats; there are additional bombs to take from chests along the battlements. Fight only if you have to; close all those rifts!



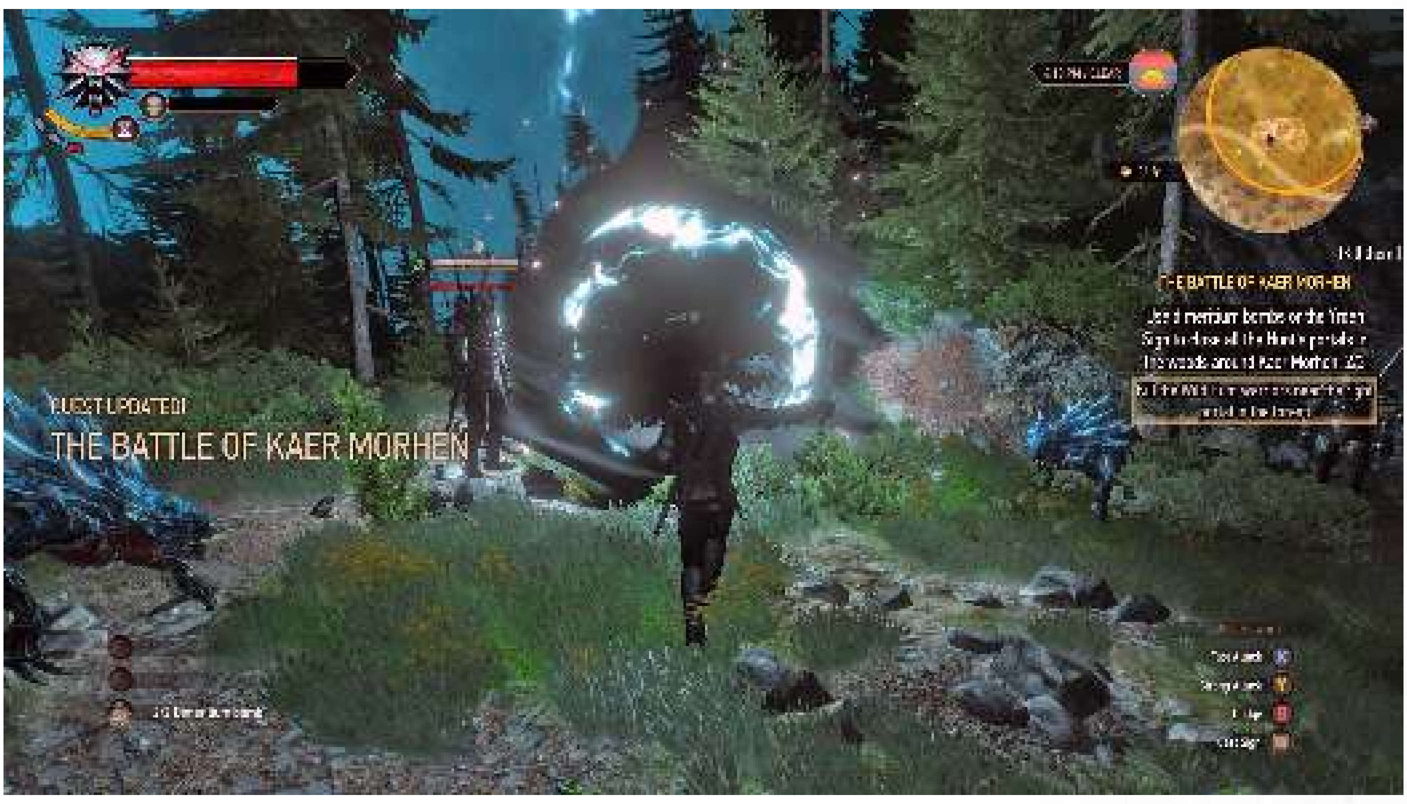
Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen

I Hate Portals

OBJECTIVES:

- Exit the keep and join Lambert when you're ready to face the Wild Hunt.
- Use dimeritium bombs or the Yrden Sign to close all the Wild Hunt's portals in the woods around Kaer Morhen (3).
- Kill the Wild Hunt warriors near the left, center, and right portal in the forest.

In the woods outside Kaer Morhen, Lambert instructs you to aim at the base of any Hunt portals you see, tossing his dimeritium bombs there with accuracy.



Head roughly southwards (southwest or southeast is fine, too), across the ford towards any of the three portals.

- If Roche has been summoned, he has already dug some nasty spiked pits in the vicinity. Don't worry about falling into them yourself; they take your weight! However, the Wild Hunt have already fallen prey to these traps; and each rift is now guarded only by two hounds and one warrior.

While still invisible, head to one of the portals, and simply lob a dimeritium bomb at its base. Or you can cast Yrden to dismiss the portal (which is especially handy if you're out of bombs). Afterwards, a group of Wild Hunt warriors and hounds (usually two of each) must be faced and cut down.

FORCE IN NUMBERS

Use Lambert (and Letho) to help bring down these foes. Be sure to rid the immediate objective area of enemies before moving on to the next portal, so you aren't swamped by too many foes. Go to the Bestiary for advice on slaughtering both the hounds and the warriors of the Wild Hunt.

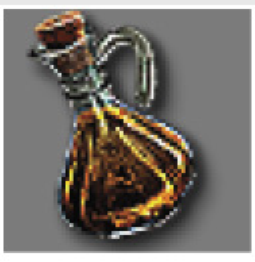
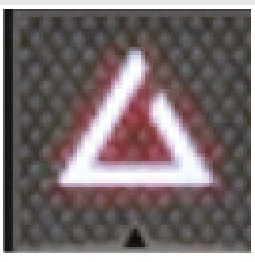
WARRIORS OF THE WILD HUNT: VULNERABILITIES

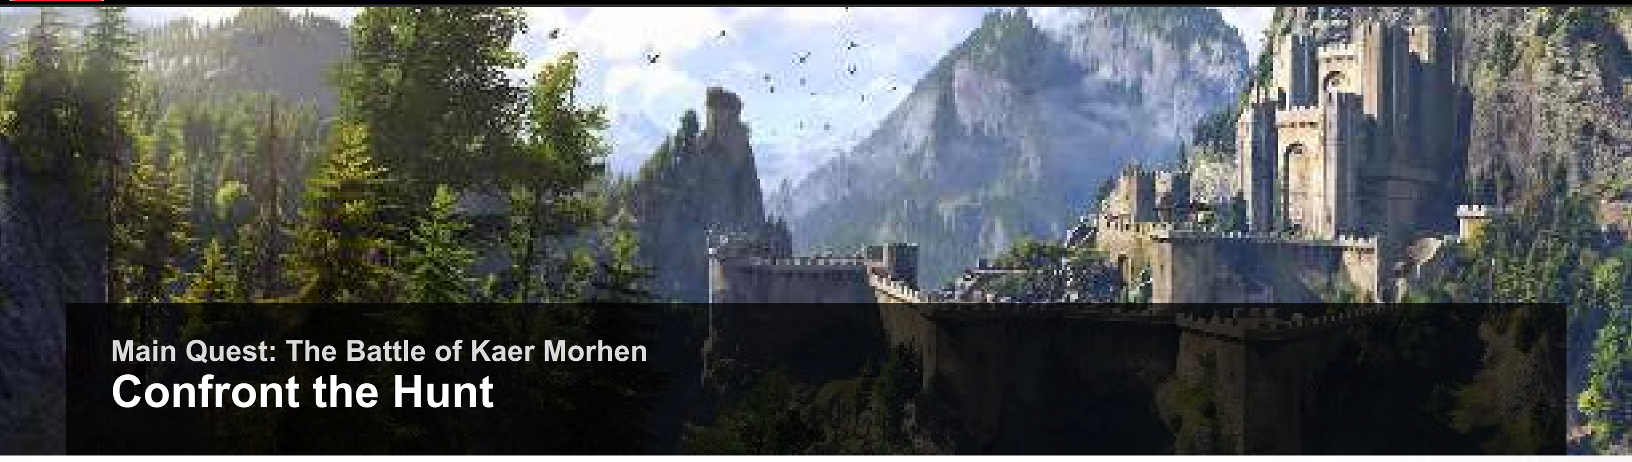


Oil: Hanged Man's Venom



Sign: Igni

With all three portals dismissed, and the Wild Hunt slain, you notice the commander striding through the woods, just as your invisibility wanes. Imlerith has arrived! You fire a flaming crossbow bolt as a sign for Triss. But no fire storm erupts.



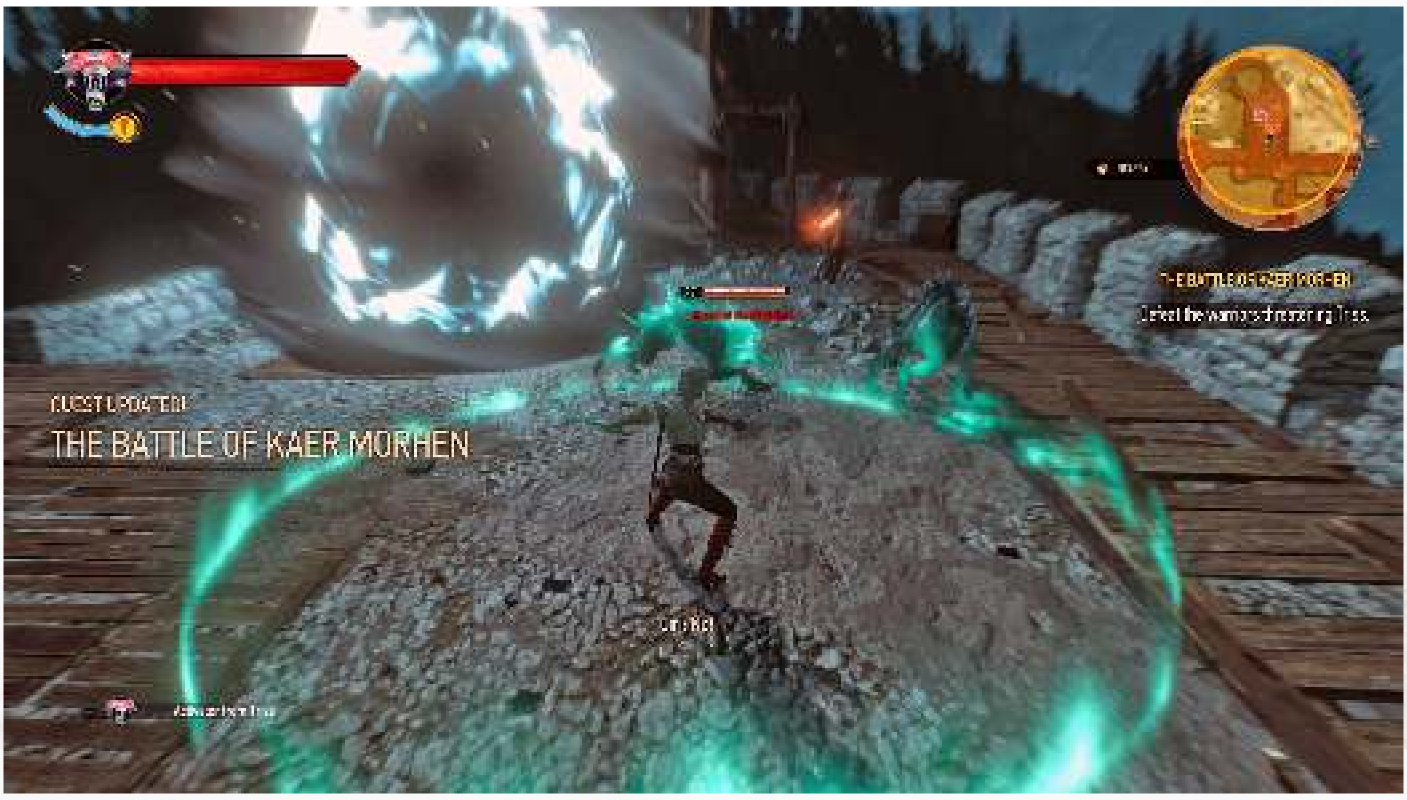
Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen

Confront the Hunt

OBJECTIVES:

- Run to Triss's aid on the battlements.
- Defeat the warrior's threatening Triss.

You are now controlling Ciri. The first ominous fall of snow signaling the White Frost appears. Vesemir hollers at you to wait inside. You can tell him you must confront the Hunt, or you want to fight, too. Either option leads to you running across the battlements, attempting to reach Triss.



QUEST UPDATED
THE BATTLE OF KAER MORHEN
THE BATTLE OF KAER MORHEN
Defeat the warriors threatening Triss.

SPILLING BLOOD WITH THE ELDER BLOODED

Remember, as Ciri you have a Magic Projectile, which can be used to further wound any foes you're battling in close combat (step back after casting so you aren't struck by this potent attack). You also have a Charge (hold the button for a greater area of effect to your attack), and an all-encompassing teleport and slash attack that requires a small delay to build up, but wounds multiple foes. Replenish your magic energy by attacking foes, and gaining small additional Energy reserves. Don't just rely on your swordplay, child of Elder Blood!

Run along the roof, striking down a Hound and four Warriors.

- If Zoltan is with you, he clings to a blade in the back of one warrior. Then he takes care of the warriors and hounds in the yard, and if you help him (as Ciri), he runs to the roof and helps Triss with the fight there.

Then run to where Triss is valiantly battling two warriors—step in and help out—slaying them, three hounds, and two more warriors and three more hounds from a second portal behind you. After Triss saves your life, she witnesses Geralt's request for help down in the woods.

This short quest commences immediately in the aftermath of Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen.

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Avallac'h about what to do next.

BLOOD ON THE BATTLEFIELD
Talk to Avallac'h about what to do next.

The funeral atop the mountains of Kaer Morhen is a chance to reflect, and to speak to the survivors of the battle, who you recruited earlier.

- Vernon Roche and Ves are heading back to Novigrad. Find them in the Partisan Temerian Camp if you wish to speak to them again.
- Letho agrees to stay on at Kaer Morhen once you invite him.
- Eskel will find somewhere else to winter instead of Kaer Morhen.
- Emrion bids you go in health, and leaves some medicines before he travels back to Ard Skellig.
- Hjalmar will head immediately back to Skellige to fight the Nilfgaard, but you have a strong ally for all time.
- Zoltan wants revenge, and commiserates with you on your loss.
- Keira Metz is about to leave with her new companion, Lambert!
- Lambert is his usual sarcastic self, whether Keira is here or not.

Walk northward down the hill toward the fortress, where Avallac'h, Triss, Yennefer, and Cirilla are meeting. Yennefer vows to reunite the Lodge of Sorceresses. Cirilla is angry that decisions are being made without her. Avallac'h tells you to leave her.

Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield

Letting Go in the Snow, or Drowning in Drink

OBJECTIVES:

- Don't let the snowballs hit you (8).
- Defeat Ciri in a snowball fight (8).

FATE OF THE SWALLOW

Choice #1 Ahead!

You are about to make one of the five most important choices in your adventure, and one that has direct consequences on the Ending, and the fate of Ciri! If you wish to know more, reference the Endings Section of the eGuide.

A few days pass after the battle, Ciri appears with Avallac'h, disheartened that she hasn't been able to put the thoughts of the battle behind her, and focus on her training. She asks how you manage it. Respond with:

"Think I know what might lift your spirits." Your "ancient" method for dealing with loss is to pelt Ciri with snowballs. Begin a small and entertaining fight using only balls of snow. Use the trees and battlement walls as cover, and don't worry about winning or losing. Ciri cheers up a bit. Afterwards, you can ask her about her travels between worlds, and how Eredin locates her.

Ciri's Fate (1 of 5): Positive Choice (+1)

"Relax, you don't have to be good at everything." You open some of Lambert's famous home brew, and drown yourselves in it. Ciri loosens up a little, but is still resigned to failure, especially after you drone on, lecturing her.

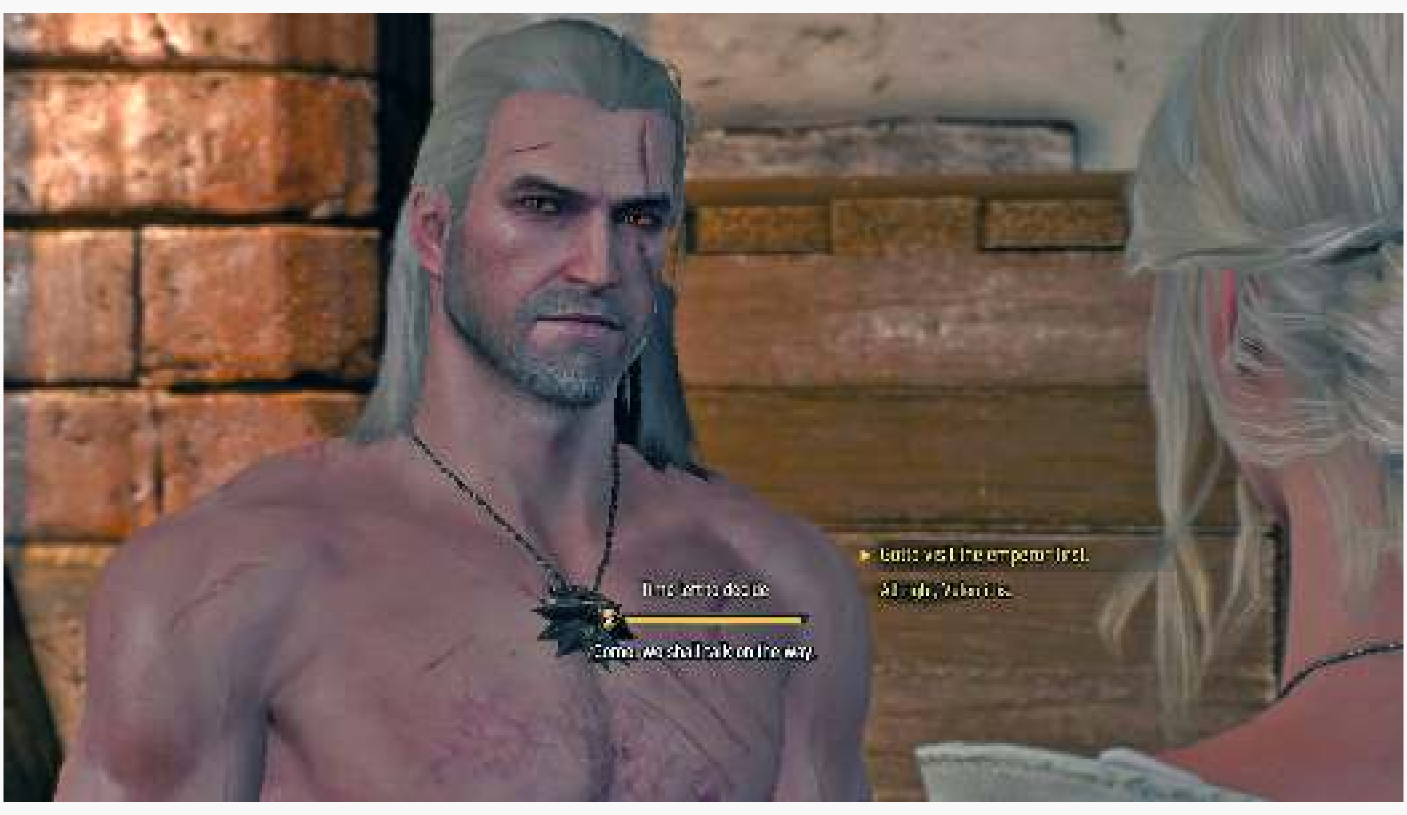
Ciri's Fate (1 of 5): Negative Choice (-1)

FATE OF THE SWALLOW

Choice #2 Ahead!

You are about to make another of the five most important choices in your adventure, and one that has direct consequences on the Ending, and the fate of Ciri! In this particular case, visiting the emperor allows you to add a positive or negative choice to your total (giving you a total of five choices, rather than four if you ignore visiting the emperor). If you wish to know more, reference the Endings Section of the eGuide.

You are awakened by Ciri early in the morning. She seems excited, has the horses ready and explains that you need to head into Velen, to the witches' Sabbath on Bald Mountain.



Gotta visit the emperor first.
All right, Velen it is.
Time left to decide
Come, we shall talk on the way.

The guest of honor there will be Imlerith. This is a perfect opportunity to slay him and avenge Vesemir. Before you agree, answer her how you wish, until you choose the following:

"Gotta visit the emperor first." You embark on the journey to Vizima.

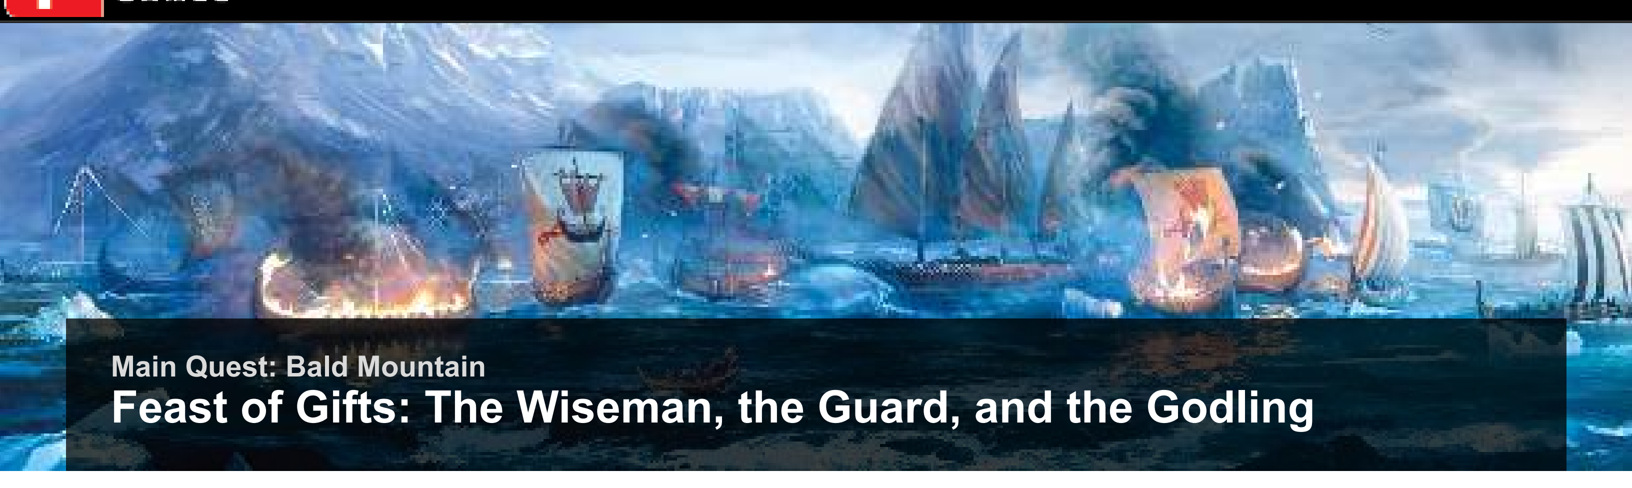
"All right, Velen it is." You head to Bald Mountain, and this quest concludes now.

FATE OF THE SWALLOW

It is important for the ending you wish to choose, that Ciri visits or ignores the emperor:

If she sees the emperor, she will become Empress, and this allows Epilogue: Something Ends, Something Begins (II) to be possibly accessed, with enough positive choices.

If she ignores the emperor, this allows Epilogue: Something Ends, Something Begins (III) to be possibly accessed with enough positive choices.



Main Quest: Bald Mountain

Feast of Gifts: The Wiseman, the Guard, and the Godling

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: BALD MOUNTAIN

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, Main Quest: Final Preparations

LOCATIONS : Road to Bald Mountain, The Witches' Cauldron, Bald Mountain

CHARACTERS : Cirilla, Johnny, Sarah, Marica, Thecla

ENEMIES : Drowners, Fiend, Fugas, Whispess, Weavess, Brewess, Imlerith

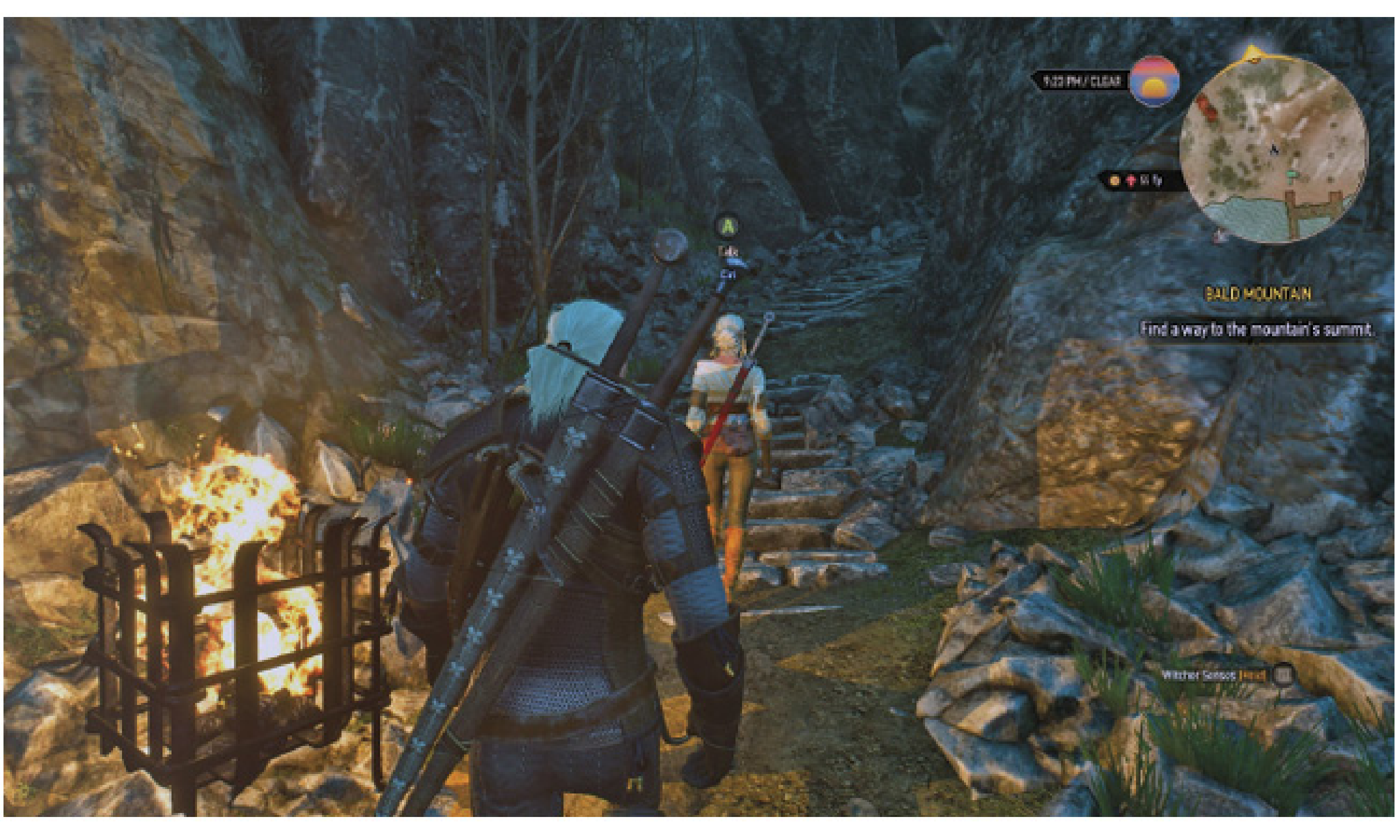
QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield concludes.

OBJECTIVES:

- Find a way to the mountain's summit.
- Nearest Signpost: Road to Bald Mountain

You disembark from the boat that took you to the foot of Bald Mountain—known as Aard Cerbin and home to the reviled Ladies of the Wood. Ask Ciri about her familiarity with this place, and her reasoning that Imlerith is here, before beginning your exploration. Walk along the road lit by torches that flicker eerily, as she warns you about the Aen Elle elves—who are in league with the Wild Hunt.



Atop the steps, a guard with a crossbow is stopped by a wiseman who beckons you to feast with them. However, you aren't allowed past this village. Sit down with them, and find out more about this ceremony:

- Ask about what the feast celebrates (blessings bestowed by the ladies, after which there's verbal evidence that human children are sacrificed in return for "magical acorns").
- Ask why the gates are closed (because only a "chosen" few see the ladies).
- Ask about the ladies descending to the village (they wait every year to see if they will appear).

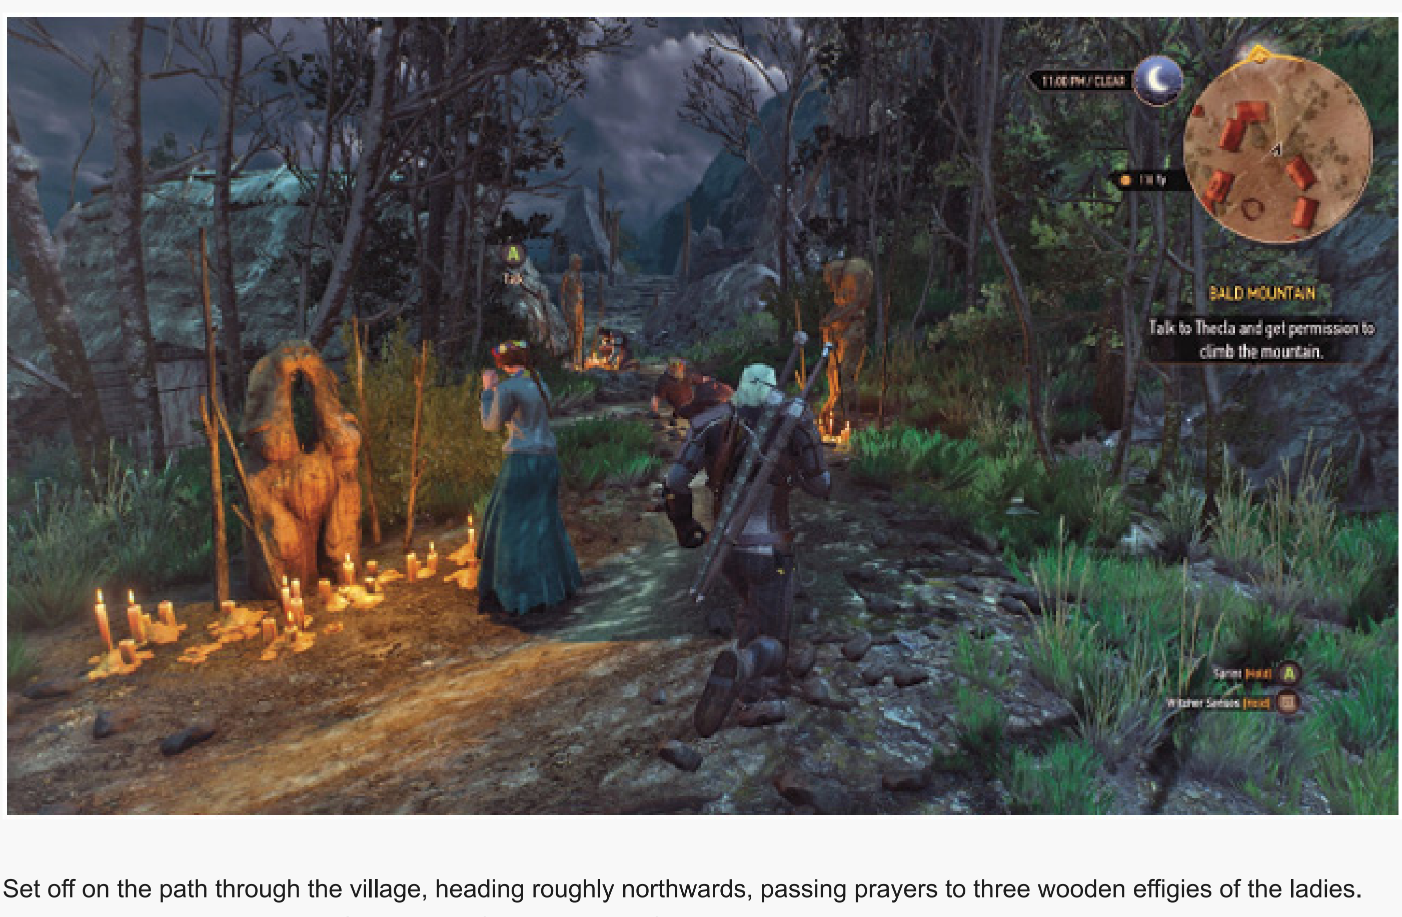
After your fireside chat, the wiseman instructs you to visit a woman named Thecla, who will judge you.

OBJECTIVE:

- Talk to Thecla and get permission to climb the mountain.

Johnny the Godling

Sarah the Godling



Set off on the path through the village, heading roughly northwards, passing prayers to three wooden effigies of the ladies. You meet up with Johnny, the Godling you followed in the Crookback Bog earlier in your adventures.

- If you removed Sarah the Godling from the "haunted" house during Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming, she is here too. Johnny asks you why you banished her. Sarah interrupts, saying it worked out well in the end, as she met Johnny.
- If you allowed Sarah the Godling to stay in the house, only Johnny is here.

Speak with Johnny. You can ask what he's doing here (he's heard the ladies smile nicely upon children during the sabbath). You can also learn that the only way up the mountain is by approval from Thecla, that she has a "guest" (Imlerith is here), and that a trial may be necessary to obtain a key to the mountain. Leave Johnny (and Sarah) and continue.

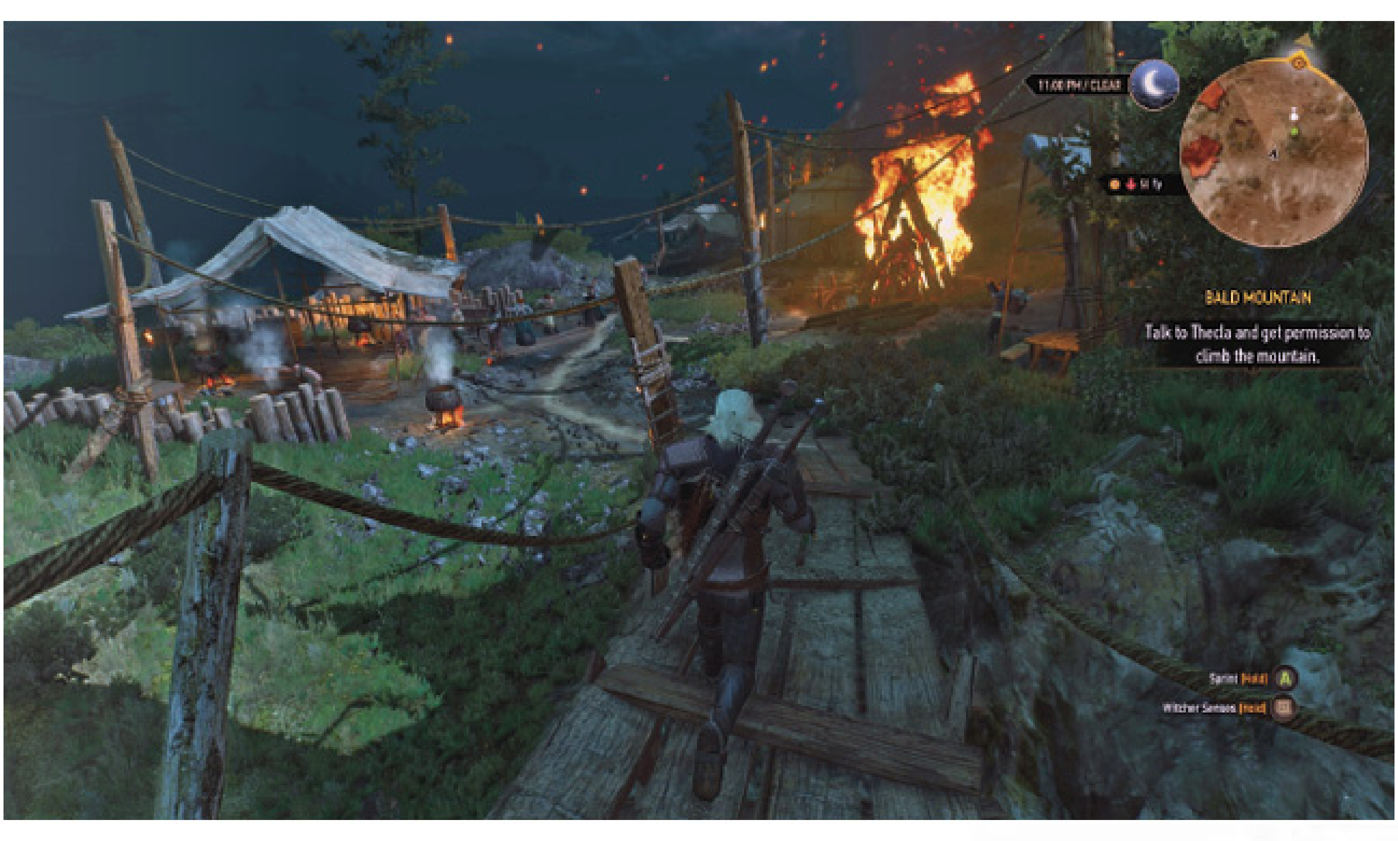
Main Quest: Bald Mountain

Feast of Gifts: Diving for the Defilers Oren

Marica

Thecla

Journey across the wood and rope bridge, passing a procession of peasants waiting for food, and enter a tent to your right, where an old, cloudy-eyed crone named Marlca is judging the merits of those that wish to climb the mountain. Her assistant Thecla is her eyes. They gladly accept Ciri as worthy, but not you. Appeal this decision by choosing any conversation topic you wish. It is agreed that you must complete a challenge to be deemed worthy. Agree to this.



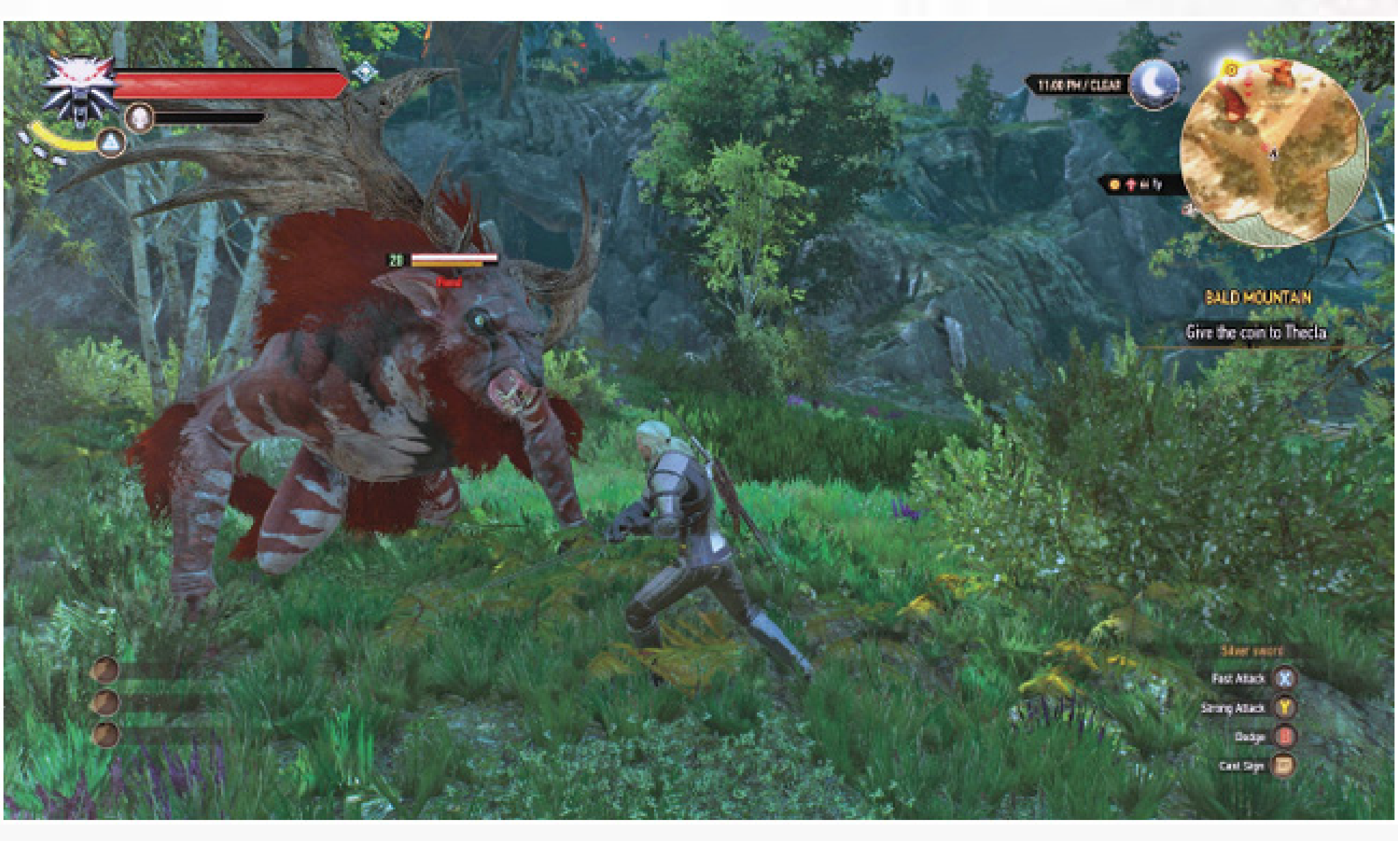
OBJECTIVES:

- Retrieve the coin Thecla threw in the water.
- Give the coin to Thecla.

You are lead to a wooden ledge, where a coin from days of yore is dropped into a small pool below. Dive off the ledge and swim into an underwater tunnel. Avoid the drowners flitting by you, or use your crossbow to remove them and make the search easier. Immediately use your Witcher Senses to scan the murky depths for the coin. It is close to the junction of the dead-end alcove, and the exit tunnels.

ITEM: Quest Item: Defiler's Oren

Now swim to the exit tunnel, and head westwards to the pool's exit. Once on dry land, be extremely careful as a fiend is prowling the woods here.



Defeat it, before scrambling over the rocks to reach a set of steep wooden stairs to the southeast, and ascend back to Thecla's tent. She deems you worthy and tells you to keep the coin; it is the key to climbing the mountain.

OBJECTIVES:

- Travel the path to the peak of Bald Mountain.
- Defeat Fugas in combat.

THE START OF THE SABBATH

Once you emerge from Thecla's tent, she announces the start of the sabbath, and the merriment begins. There is dancing and revelry. But concentrate on your task at hand, scaling the final section of Bald Mountain.

Fugas

The moon is large and low as you head back across the wood and rope bridge, before turning eastwards at the petroglyph rock, and approach the entrance to the mountain's interior. Marica beckons you through into a cavern lit by candles and adorned with skulls. A rotund but powerful sylvan, named Fugas, asks Ciri's name. He also tells you the coin you carry signifies a death sentence. He launches from his haunches at you, and combat begins. Utilize your sylvan-killing prowess, and defeat the beast.

SYLVAN VULNERABILITIES

Fugas is a sylvan; a relict that is susceptible to the following:

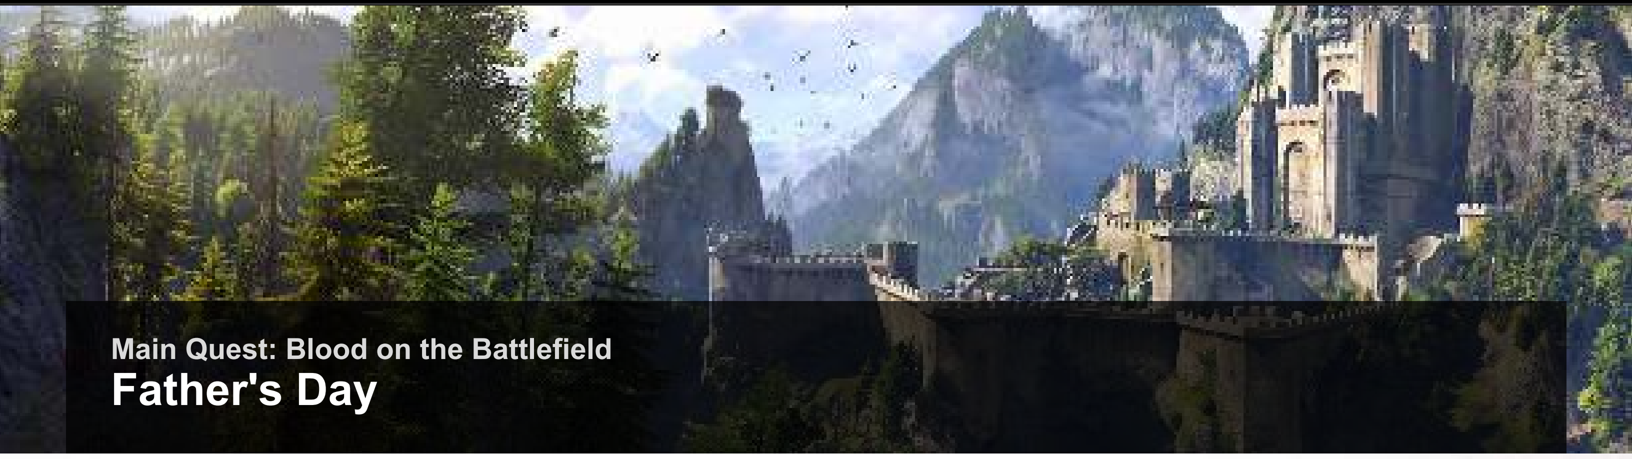
Bomb: Samum

Bomb: Devil's Puffball

Relict Oil

Sign: Igni

Once your confrontation with Fugas is over, you discuss which of you will face the crones, and who will slay Imlerith. Ciri suggests a game of rock, paper, scissors to decide. Ciri gets the Crones, but tries to argue into fighting Imlerith. You firmly tell her that she will face the Ladies of the Wood.



Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield

Father's Day

A week later, you arrive at Vizima, and are lead into the castle gardens where the Emphyr is waiting. Emreis greets Ciri with her full name—Cirilla Fiona Elen Riannon, Queen of Cintra, Princess of Brugge and Duchess of Sodden, heiress to Inis Ard Skellig and Inis An Skellig, and suzeraine of Attre and Abb Yarra—and tells you he didn't expect you to keep your word. Answer how you wish. A servant brings in a small chest brimming with coin. You can:

- Refuse to accept the coin on principle. Ciri is proud, happy, and loving to you, her adopted father.

- Ciri's Fate (2 of 5): Positive Choice (+1)

- Accept it, even though it has been presented in the most audacious way possible (to make you look bad in front of Ciri). Ciri now believes you weren't looking for her because she is precious to you, but because of the gold. Her world is shaken.

ITEM: Crowns: 2,000

Main Quest: Bald Mountain

Ciris Quest: Getting to the Root of the Problem

OBJECTIVE:

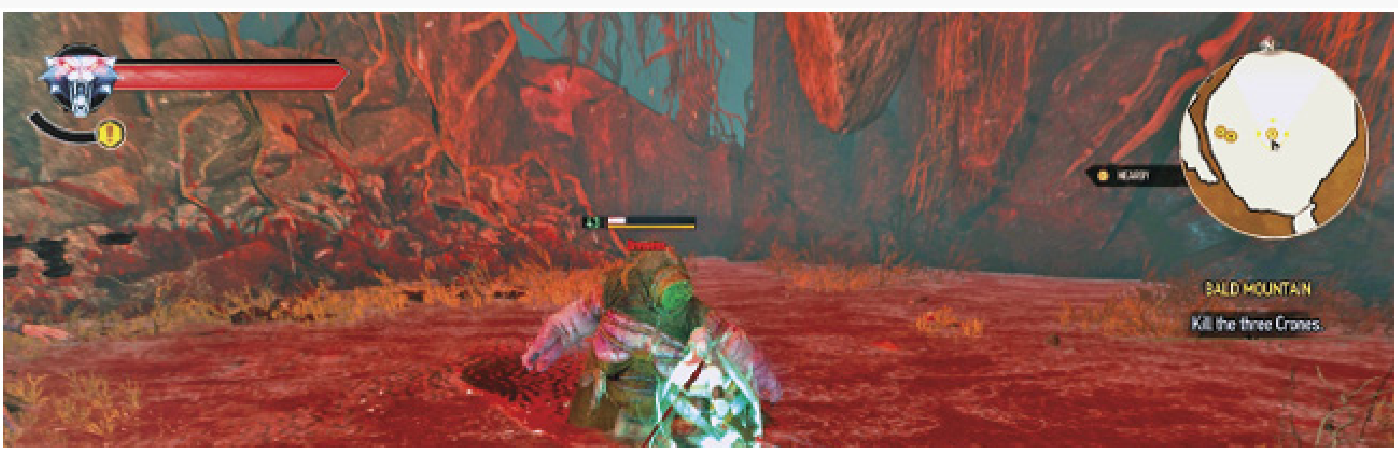
- Penetrate to the heart of the tree's roots.

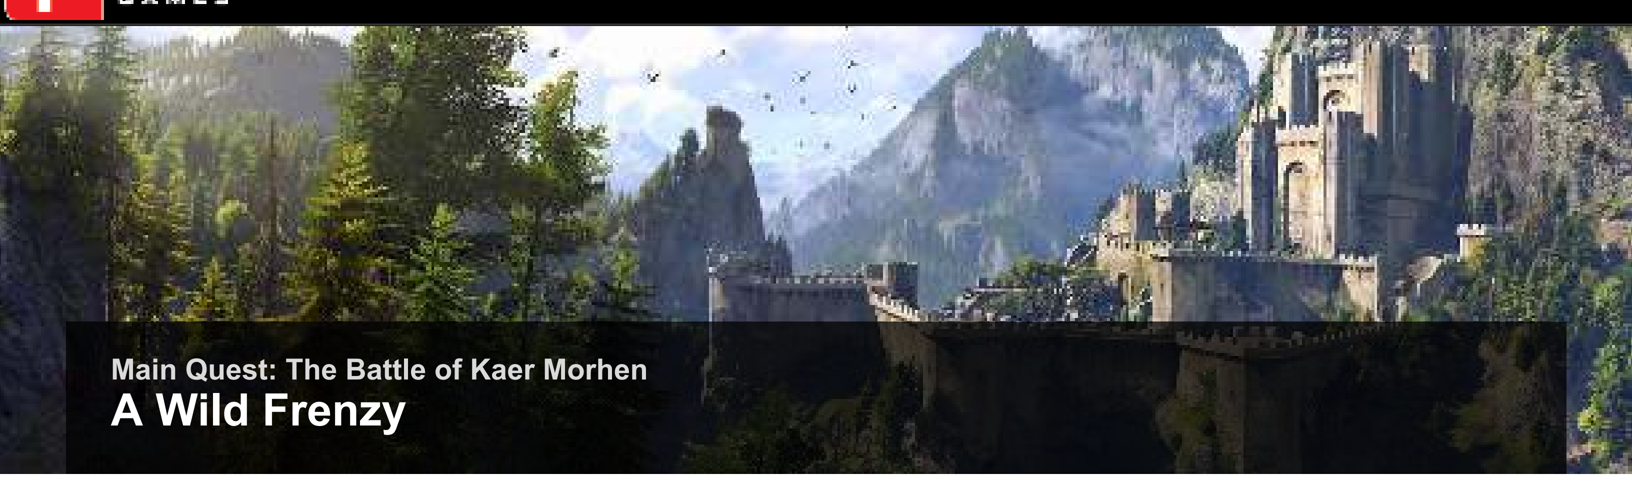
Whispess

Weavess

Brewess

You control Ciri. Head along the tunnel to a gap in the rocks leading to a pool. Dive in and swim roughly southwest and surface, climbing onto the bank of a tunnel, and heading up and into the crones' cavern. The trio of comely maidens are stirring a cauldron. It is a stew of sacrificial body parts.





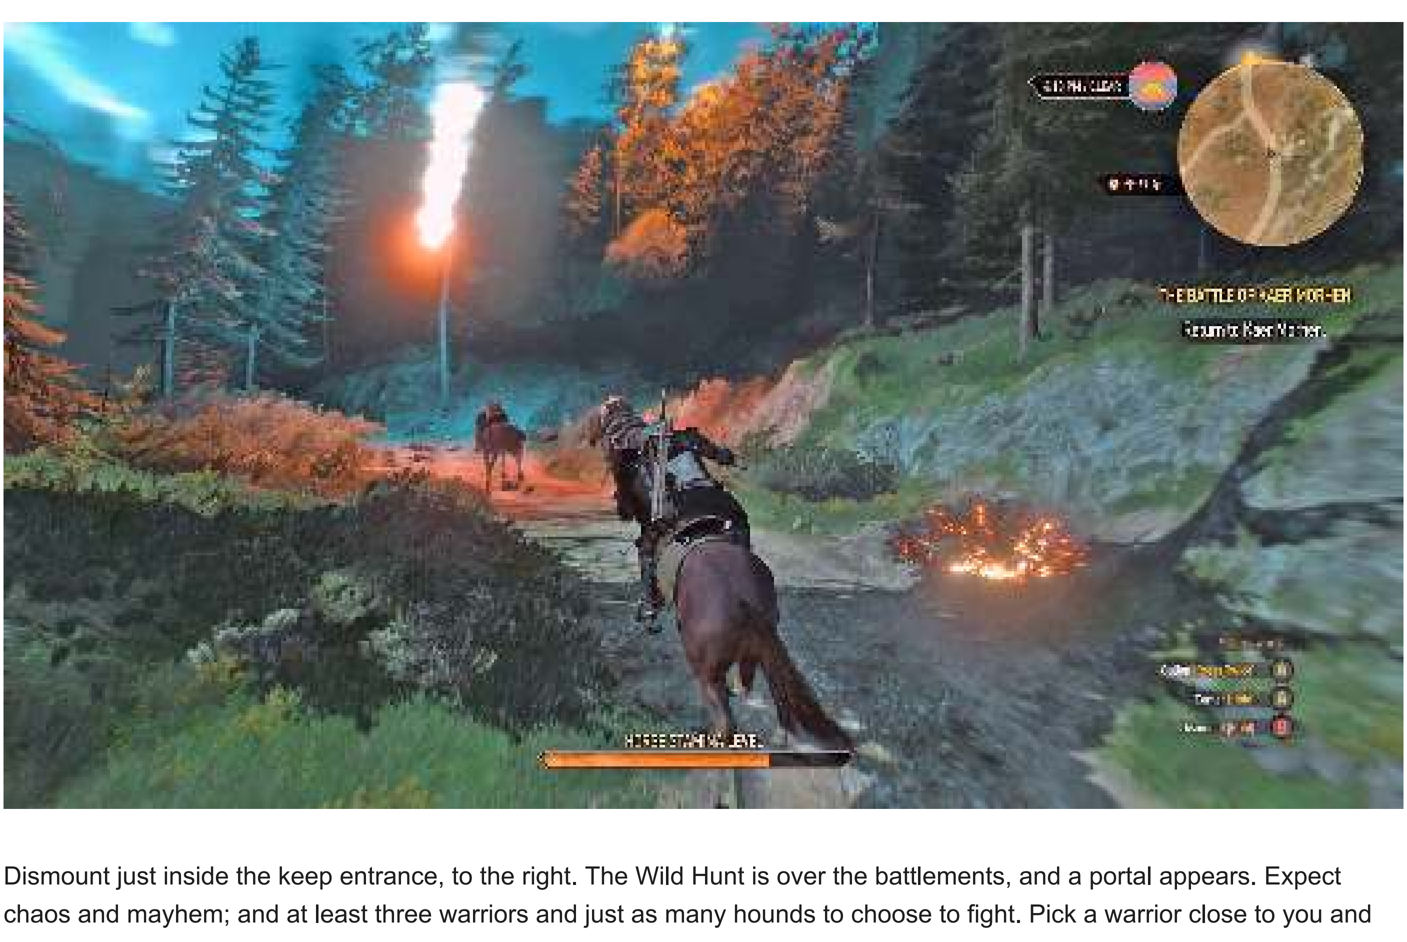
Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen

A Wild Frenzy

OBJECTIVES:

- Return to Kaer Morhen. Close the main gate.
- Help Lambert defeat the Hunt's warriors.

You are now Geralt. After a protracted battle, Triss finally rains molten death down from above. You seize this opportunity to flee back to the castle with Lambert (and Letho). Once on Roach, gallop quickly across the ford (roughly north), dodging any fiery missiles. Race to the fortress as Yennefer's power begins to falter, and the protective shield she valiantly has summoned starts to shrink, forcing this retreat.



Dismount just inside the keep entrance, to the right. The Wild Hunt is over the battlements, and a portal appears. Expect chaos and mayhem; and at least three warriors and just as many hounds to choose to fight. Pick a warrior close to you and concentrate on slaying him. Continue until Vesemir yells to close the gate.

Turn southward, climbing the wooden platform up to the main battlements and objective area. Vesemir is up here, battling the Hunt.

- Vesemir is attempting to close another rift. If you help him now, he turns back and races to the roof, to help Triss as well.

- Ermion is also on the crenelations, putting his staff to good use and slaying away.

Tackle any nearby warriors but make the gate mechanism—a lever along the upper wall to the west and north—your priority. Pull it!

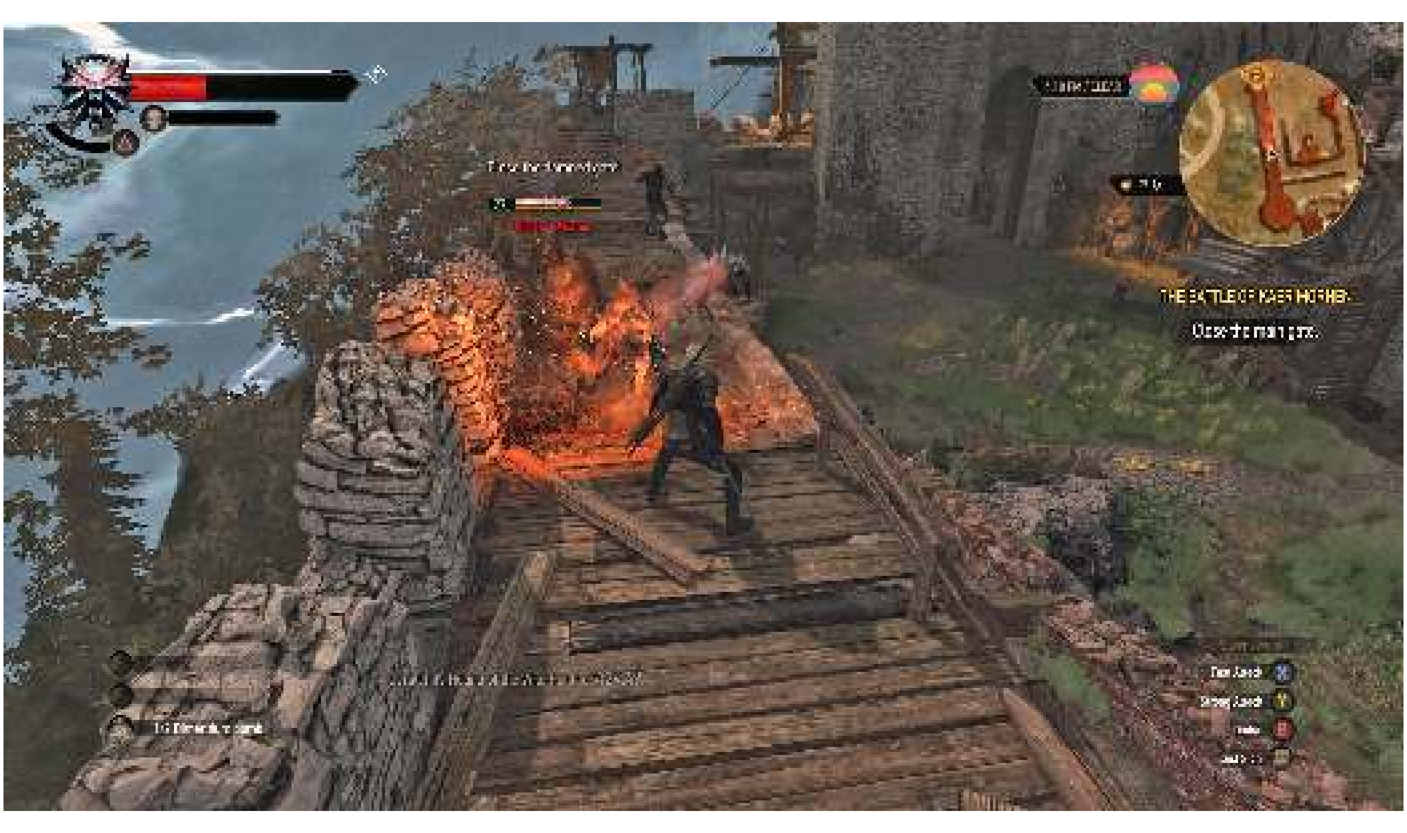
Return down to the courtyard, and expect at least five more warriors and just as many hounds throughout this carnage-filled combat. Bring down any foes to their knees, heading to help Lambert and finish your fighting in his vicinity (near Letho and Vesemir as well). Check on Lambert's health and ensure he doesn't die.

- If Keira Metz is with you, she summons a large protective circle, repels the Wild Hunt warriors, and saves Lambert. Afterwards, she continues to patrol the side yard (alone if you didn't help her).

OBJECTIVES:

- Retreat to the Middle Courtyard.
- Defeat your opponents and retreat behind the main gate.
- Get to Triss.
- Save Triss and close the Wild Hunt's portal.

Yennefer's strength is waning. Retreat by heading the way you moved at the start of this quest, east and north up the ramparts, then west and finally north, where Vesemir drops an archway on your pursuers. Remain in the initial courtyard and tackle any foes stopping your friends from escaping. Expect at least six warriors and hounds to bring down, along the way. Use bombs or Yrden on every portal that appears, gradually making your way up the steps. Pass the ballista crossbow, looking for further portals to close. Then battle up the steps, slaying stragglers, and reach the main doors to the keep. Eskel hasn't opened these yet!



- If Zoltan was invited, he has placed his explosive barrels across the fighting area from this point onwards; ignite any and deliver an explosive death to any foes nearby. Why not try to blow up a barrel close to where Ermion (if invited) has released some flammable gas? The explosive is even more devastating!

- If you invited Roche and Ves, they welcome you from the walls, shooting burning arrows and bolts at your enemies. If you brought Zoltan along too, Roche and Ves also aim for the dwarf's exploding barrels.

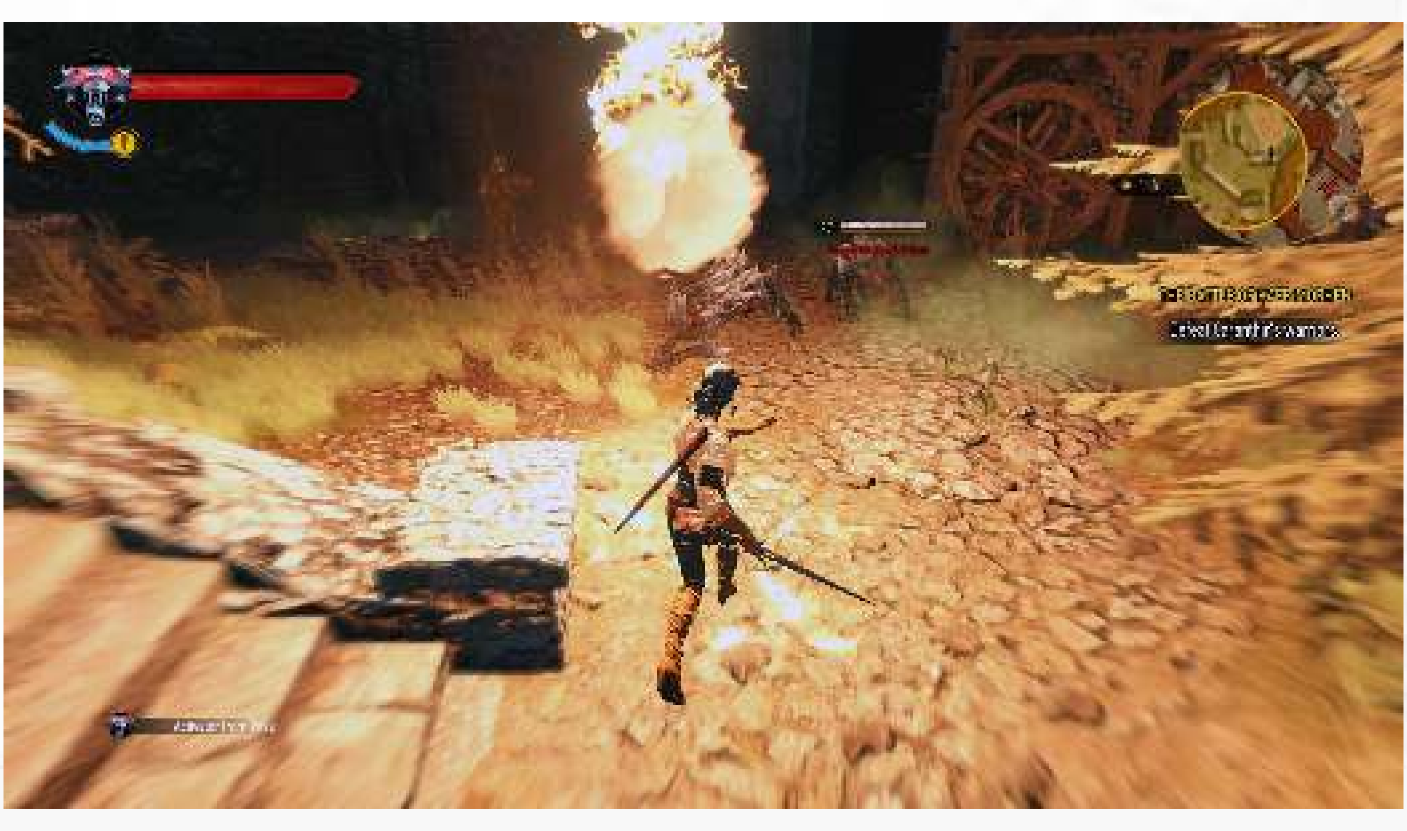
Head back down the steps, then northeast towards Triss' location. Ignore the fire raining down and instead sprint at the portal, and close it with bombs or Yrden. Turn on at least three more warriors and hounds, cutting them down with Lambert's (and Letho's) help. Now look for any remaining foes and bring them down with keen sword and sign strikes. After the fight, Ciri appears atop the battlements, and agrees to find Eskel.

OBJECTIVES:

- Defeat Caranthir's warriors.
- Open the gate to Kaer Morhen's inner courtyard.

You are Ciri again. Caranthir strides through the keep, stopping to face Eskel in combat. The witcher is nimble and cunning, but Imlerith is vicious and quicker. You jump into the fray, saving Eskel, and face Caranthir, who stops as a mighty horn sounds in the distance. He departs, leaving you to fight his minions. Perfect your Charge and missile strikes as you whittle down four warriors, and listen to Eskel complaining.

Move to the next objective area. Slay two warriors and two hounds from the portal, and then descend to the lower courtyard where three warriors and hounds must be faced. Next, move to the large wooden wheel mechanism, and use it to unlock the gate.

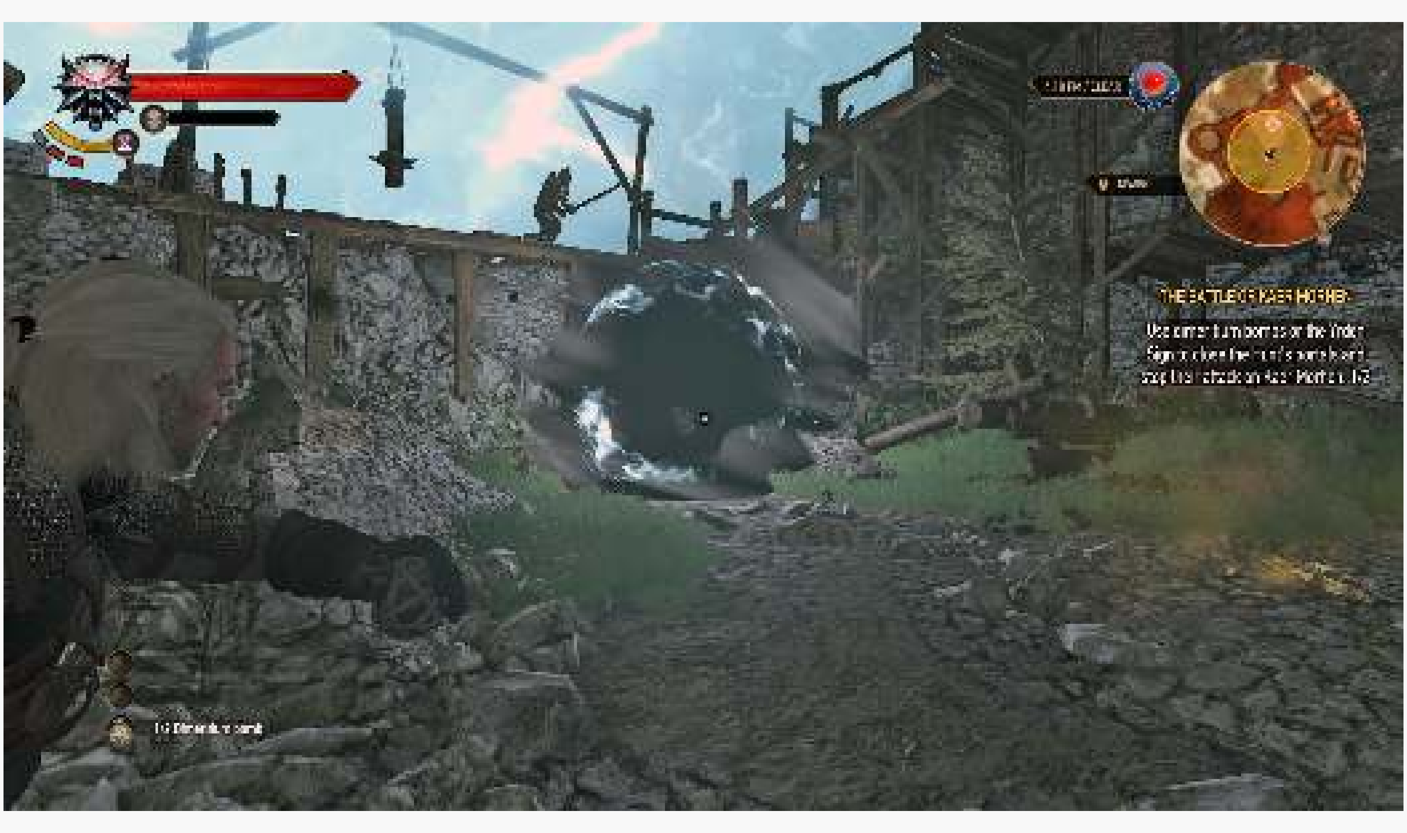


MAELSTROMS IN THE COURTYARD

OBJECTIVES:

- Use dimeritium bombs or the Yrden Sign to close the Wild Hunt's portals and stop their attack on Kaer Morhen (2).
- (Optional) Equip yourself with dimeritium bombs from Vesemir's supplies.

You are Geralt again. Still the Wild Hunt comes! But with the gates open, you can access the central courtyard, and stop further Hunt incursions via the portals.



Temporarily stop your slaughter of warriors and hounds, and instead race immediately to the nearest portal, banishing it with Yrden or dimeritium bombs (if you run out, find more in crates along the walls).

- If Hjalmar is with you, he leaps into a portal, shrugging off the White Frost, and reappears a moment later, fill of vim and vigor, helping you remove one of the portals.

GATHERING EXPLOSIVES

Dimeritium bombs appear as objective dots on your minimap.

OBJECTIVES:

- Help Eskel defend the upper courtyard.
- Help Ciri defend the upper courtyard.
- Help Triss fight the Wild Hunt by the gate to the central courtyard.

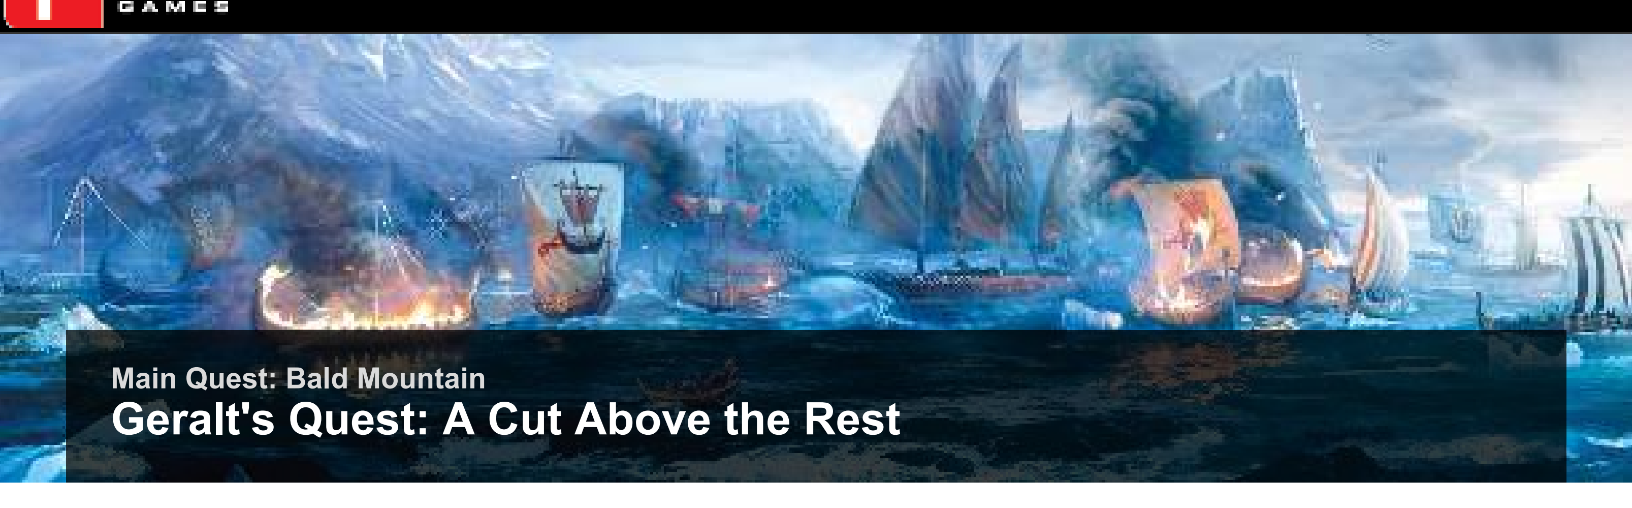
When no more immediate portals are visible (there are usually three to dismiss), fight any foes close to your location. When Eskel yells that the Hunt is coming through Savolla's breach, ascend the steps and head northeast. Find and remove three more portals in the upper courtyard. Then Ciri shouts for help.

Rush southwards towards the opposite end of the upper courtyard, where Hjalmar launches an attack on a warrior, before a new portal opens. Dismiss the portals quickly. Triss yells for assistance now. Dash northwestward and down to the main gate.

END: THERE IS NO BLAME. JUST GRIEF.

The main gates burst open as Yennefer falls. You are frozen as the White Frost envelopes the castle grounds. The Wild Hunt strides in, with both generals and including Eredin himself! Knocking Vesemir from his protected stance near Ciri, the old witcher saves her life, but at a great forfeit. Overcome by rage, Ciri loses control of her powers, uttering a magical scream that forces the Wild Hunt back, and then to banishment. Avallac'h appears, siphoning her power. She falls to the ground.

- After reaching out to Ciri, speak to her as you wish. Preparations are made to say farewell to a friend, as this quest concludes. Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield begins automatically.



Main Quest: Bald Mountain

Geralt's Quest: A Cut Above the Rest

OBJECTIVE:

- Find Imlerith.
- Kill Imlerith.

You control Geralt. Follow the path up Bald Mountain. The area is blasted and dead, with only a massive gnarled tree dominating the peak. Take the wooden bridge, and climb the series of rock ledges lead up to a large bonfire, and a confrontation with evil.

Imlerith

As his succubi slink away, Imlerith asks where Ciri is.

- You can lie (which Imlerith sees through immediately).
- You can admit she is here (angering Imlerith who demands to see her).

GERALT THE STONE COLD KILLER

You would be wise to prepare potions and meditate just before you reach the bonfire and the final confrontation with Imlerith. Imlerith is vulnerable to the following:

Potion: Golden Oriole

Bomb: Grapeshot

Oil: Draconid

Sign: Aard

DEFEATING IMERITH OF THE WILD HUNT

Combat now begins. Imlerith's heavy armor, war mace, and shield all serve to make him look intimidating and slow. That illusion should be forgotten as soon as the monstrous Wild Hunt commander teleports behind Geralt at the start of the fight and swings for his head with that massive mace. As soon as you can, make use of any potions that can boost your survivability, Tawny Owl, Swallow, Full Moon, and Blizzard are all good choices. Players confident in their ability to keep damage to a minimum can imbibe Thunderbolt to make each strike count.

The mace cannot be parried or countered, only dodged or rolled away from. Stay relatively close to Imlerith, dodging his swipes and jabs of the mace. The goal initially is to flank him so you can strike at the huntsman behind the shield.

Imlerith
BALD MOUNTAIN
Kill Imlerith.
Fast Attack
Strong Attack
Parry / Counterattack
Dodge

Imlerith's shield stops everything you can throw at it, bombs, explosive bolts, even Signs. He will occasionally use the shield in the middle of melee combinations to knock Geralt to the ground.

Attacking Imlerith is about taking advantage of openings. You can either evade, then strike, or you can catch him in between his own attacks with a fast attack of your own. The latter strategy can go very poorly if your timing is at all off.

When Imlerith teleports, he gains a frost coating and aura on his armor. You can burn that off with Igni.

Repeated strikes against his shield causes it to warp and bend, eventually making it possible to knock it aside and possible leave an opening for an attack.

At roughly 20 percent of his Vitality, Imlerith throws down his shield in a fury, abandoning defense for an all out assault. He begins swinging the mace wildly, interspersing his attacks with teleports behind Geralt. Again, do not attempt to parry or counter these attacks.

In this final phase of the fight, focus on dodging and rolling to keep Geralt out of harm, until Imlerith takes a massive overhead swing that gets the mace stuck in the ground. That is the opening to score a heavy strike on the general. He recovers the instant you strike him, so be prepared to evade another attack from behind when he teleports.

Above all else, remain patient. Imlerith cannot be interrupted from his furious swipes and teleports in the final phase, so wait for him to make himself vulnerable before attacking.

DEFEATING IMLERITH: THE BEST BATTLE TACTICS

Eredin attacks with the following:

The Mace: Imlerith is a big and brutal warrior, relying on his physical strength and using magic only for short-range teleporting. His mace and shield give him a deadly combination of offensive and defensive prowess.

Heavy and Quick: Despite his size, he can perform fast attacks chained into combats, often preceded by a teleport behind your back.

Ice Armor: Every time he teleports, ice armor coats his form, offering extra protection from you.

After Damage: Once he receives major damage, he changes his battle style; with vivid and rapid strikes; at this point dueling is impossible.

Weaknesses: Imlerith's biggest shortfall is his vanity; he concentrates much more on impressive flourishes to his strikes than effectiveness; many of his attacks leave him unguarded, or can be easily dodged. Though his shield gives him good protection, flank him from the left to reach his right arm and back, and push your attack through.

Signs: Use quick Igni to melt his ice armor, or channel Igni to allow you to better position yourself when Imlerith hides behind his shield. Yrden, Aard, and Axii aren't very effective; use mostly Igni and Quen. Channel and also use quick Quen to increase your defense.

Bombs: Blind him for a moment with Samum bombs, giving you extra time for positioning. Well-timed (and aimed) Dancing Stars or Grapeshots also work well to break a combo and deal damage.

Without a shield: When he drops his shield, concentrate on defending yourself. After a few charges, Imlerith gets exhausted, and this is the only time you are able to perform a counter-strike.

Skills: Fleet Footed skill mitigates damage if you're struck while dodging.

Alchemy: Heal your wounds with Swallow or White Raffard's Decoction.

Advanced Tactic: Use Thunderbolt and Tawny Oil interchangeably to maximize your effectiveness; you can cast Quen more often, and therefore have more occasions to utilize heavy attacks enhanced with Thunderbolt.

Advanced Tactic: Samum bombs are a great combo starter. When Imlerith is blinded, go behind and attack his back, channel Axii, and you have a few extra seconds before he can block your spell again.

Teleports: Reduce their effectiveness by trying to jump into his direction, just as he begins to conjure the rift.

END: COMPLEMENTS, CONTEMPLATION, AND THE ACORN

Ciri joins you on a bluff overlooking Velen. With two witches dead, Ciri is disappointed that the third escaped. You can praise her or tell her she avenged Vesemir, or let her know how lucky you both were. You both sit quietly, Geralt contemplating what to tell Yennefer. Ciri wonders if the other sorceresses have been found. They should join Yen and Triss in Novigrad.

- Remark "yeah, let's go", and set off now. You immediately meet two villagers on the descent.
- Tell her "not quite yet", and you are able to walk around Bald Mountain, and search Imlerith's corpse. Aside from the following, you uncover a strange acorn. If you've been listening to the villagers, this seems to be an important seed (especially as the ancient oak atop the mountain is now dead).

ITEM: Magic Acorn

As you descend, two villagers stop and ask you about the acorn. You can:

- Tell them you don't know or will have to live without the acorns (the only option if you didn't search Imlerith's corpse.
- Give them the acorn, with your blessing, so another sacred tree may grow.
- Keep the acorn, and eat it yourself to obtain two additional Skill Points.

The quest then concludes.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Bald Mountain concludes.

▶ During Secondary Quest: Now or Never, did you decide to be romantically involved with Triss? Also, during Secondary Quest: Last Wish, did you decide to be romantically involved with Yennefer?

If you answered yes to both, Secondary Quest: Three to Tango is available during this set of quests.

If you answered "yes" to one of these, or "no", then Secondary Quest: Three to Tango, is not available.

▶ During Main Quest: Get Junior, did you kill Whoreson Junior?

If you did, you speak with Dudu the doppleganger during this set of quests.

If you didn't, you speak with Whoreson Junior during this set of quests.

▶ During Secondary Quest: For the Advancement of Learning, did you convince Keira Metz to travel to Kaer Morhen, or did you let her go to King Radovid?

If you chose to ask her to Kaer Morhen, she has already departed from Kaer Morhen on adventures with Lambert.

If you chose to let her visit Radovid, she has been executed and impaled by the witch hunters, and is now on display in Novigrad. Secondary Quest: A Final Kindness is available during this set of quests.

▶ In Witcher 2, did Sile de Tancarville survive?

▶ During Secondary Quest: Reason of State, did you help with the plot to assassinate King Radovid?

If you did, this questline continues after talking to Dijkstra during Main Quest: Blindingly Obvious.

Zoltan Chivay

PRIMA GAMES

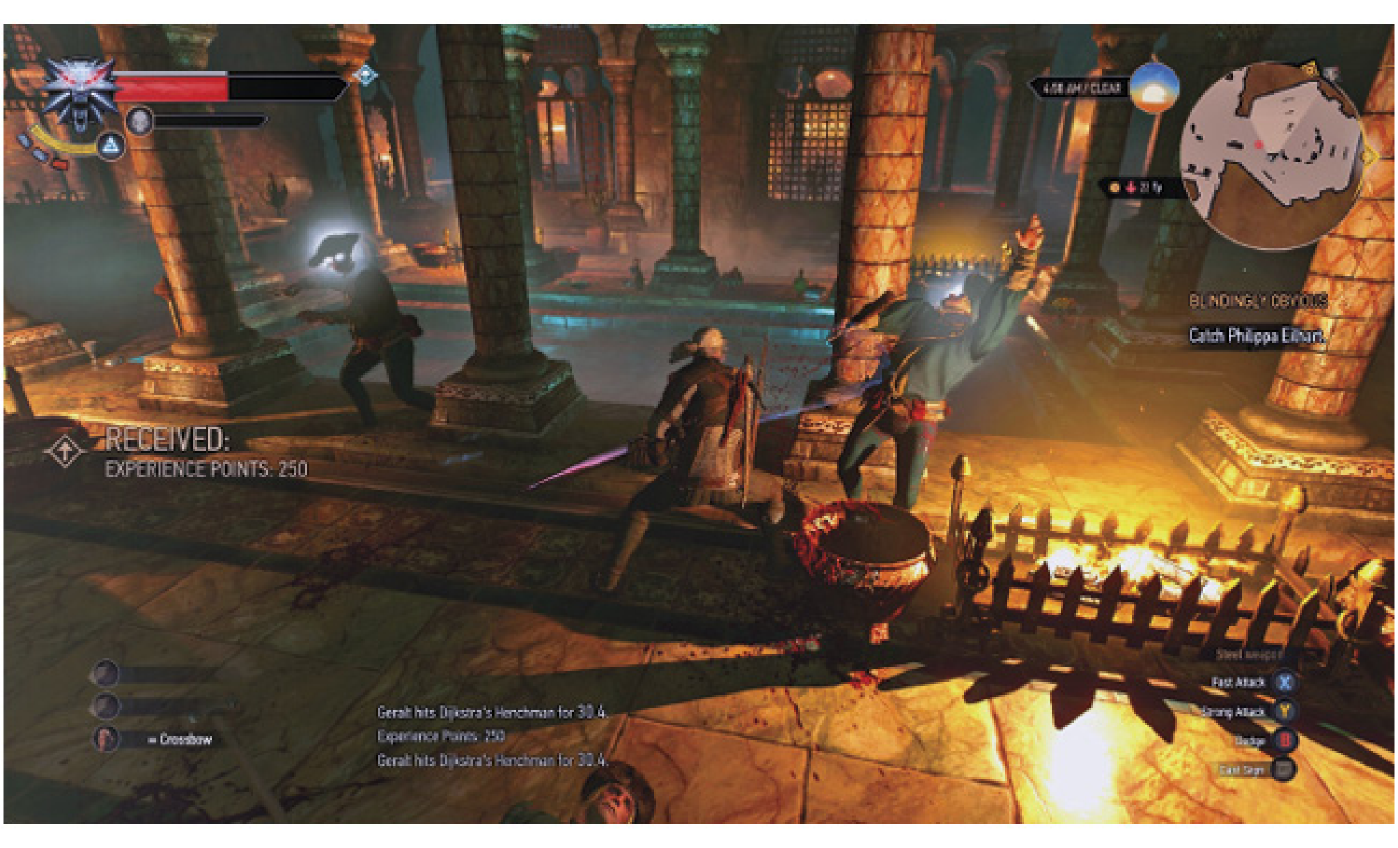
Main Quest: Blindingly Obvious

Philippa Doesnt Give a Hoot

OBJECTIVES:

- Look for Philippa in the bathhouse.
- Catch Philippa Eilhart.

You meet Triss at the fountain, and she utters and incantation, viewing scenes from Dijkstra's Bathhouse. This isn't good. Triss hopes he hasn't hurt her.

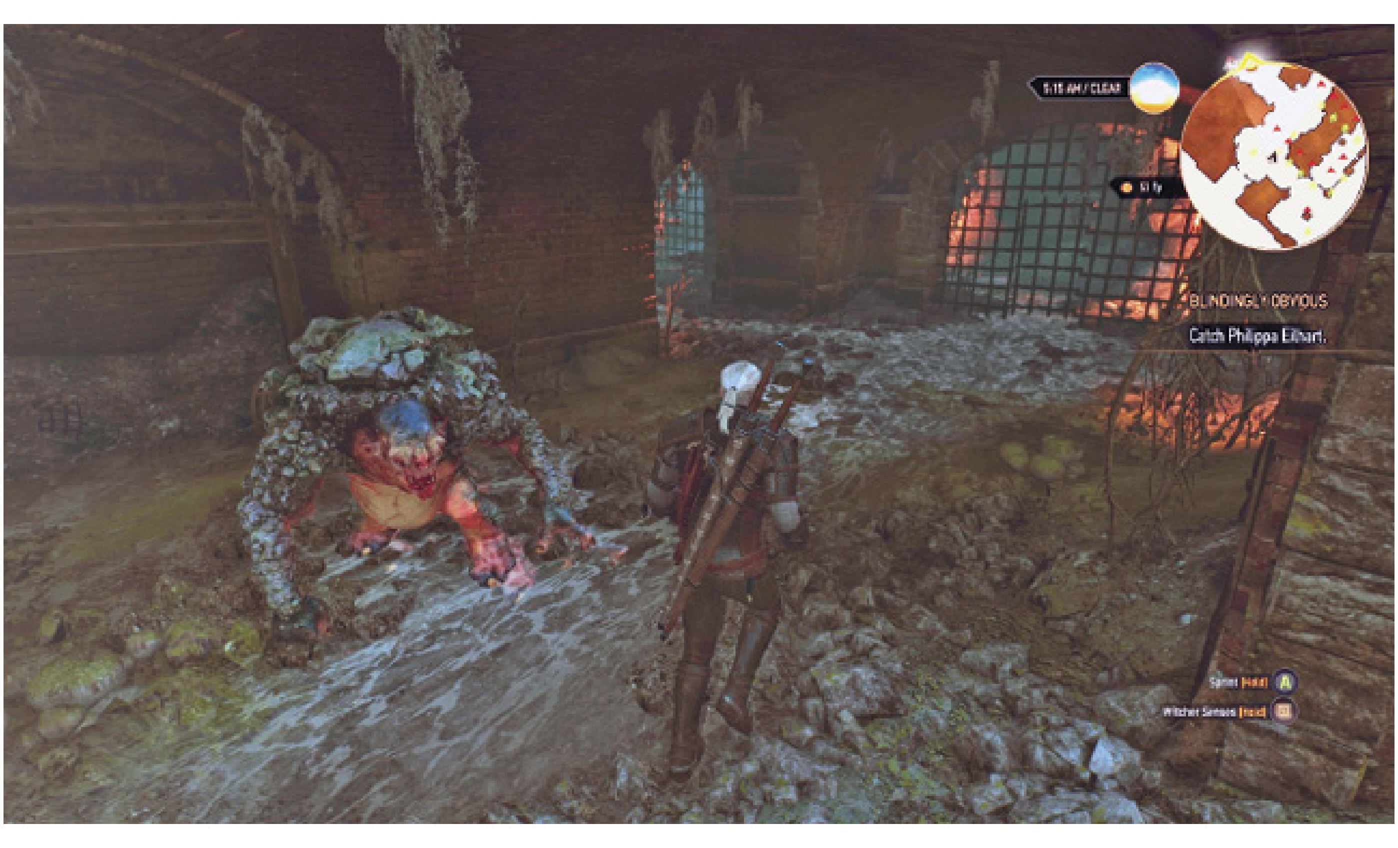


If you convinced Triss to stay with you after Secondary Quest: Now or Never, and didn't ask Yennefer to be with you during Secondary Quest: Last Wish, Triss will "fudge" the divination a little, showing a House in Kovir. After some verbal prodding from you, she confesses that the King of Kovir offered her a position as the head of the Lodge and Council, and she hopes you might join her there. Choose an answer as you wish. Triss will attempt anything to ensure you have a place to come home to.

Jog with Triss roughly southwest, passing St. Gregory's Bridge, down the cobblestone battlements, and around to the bathhouse underneath. As you arrive, Dijkstra's men are fleeing the entrance, amid the muffled sounds of explosions.

Bart the Rock Troll

Head inside, and shout at Dijkstra, who is hiding behind the one wall Philippa isn't about to disintegrate. He's adamant no more sorceresses should be prowling his establishment. Answer how you wish (Triss stays by him), and leap over the shattered wood-screen wall into the main bathing area. Philippa has addled the brains of Dijkstra's henchmen. There's little you can do except fight the three of them (though fleeing is an option).



Run east, into the hexagonal steam bath chamber, and drop down the drained pool, into the cellar where you met Bart the rock troll back in Main Quest: Get Junior. You are waylaid by two more henchmen that drop. Move to the hole in the wall, now guarded by Bart the rock troll, who is even more brain-addled than usual. You can:

- Choose to demand the troll let you pass. This leads to combat with the creature.
- Decide to try and convince the troll that you want to help Philippa, and Bart grudgingly lets you pass. Bellyaches are the worst, after all.

Head north and east down the effluent tunnel, then around to the west to a large chamber with a balcony, upon which Philippa is standing.

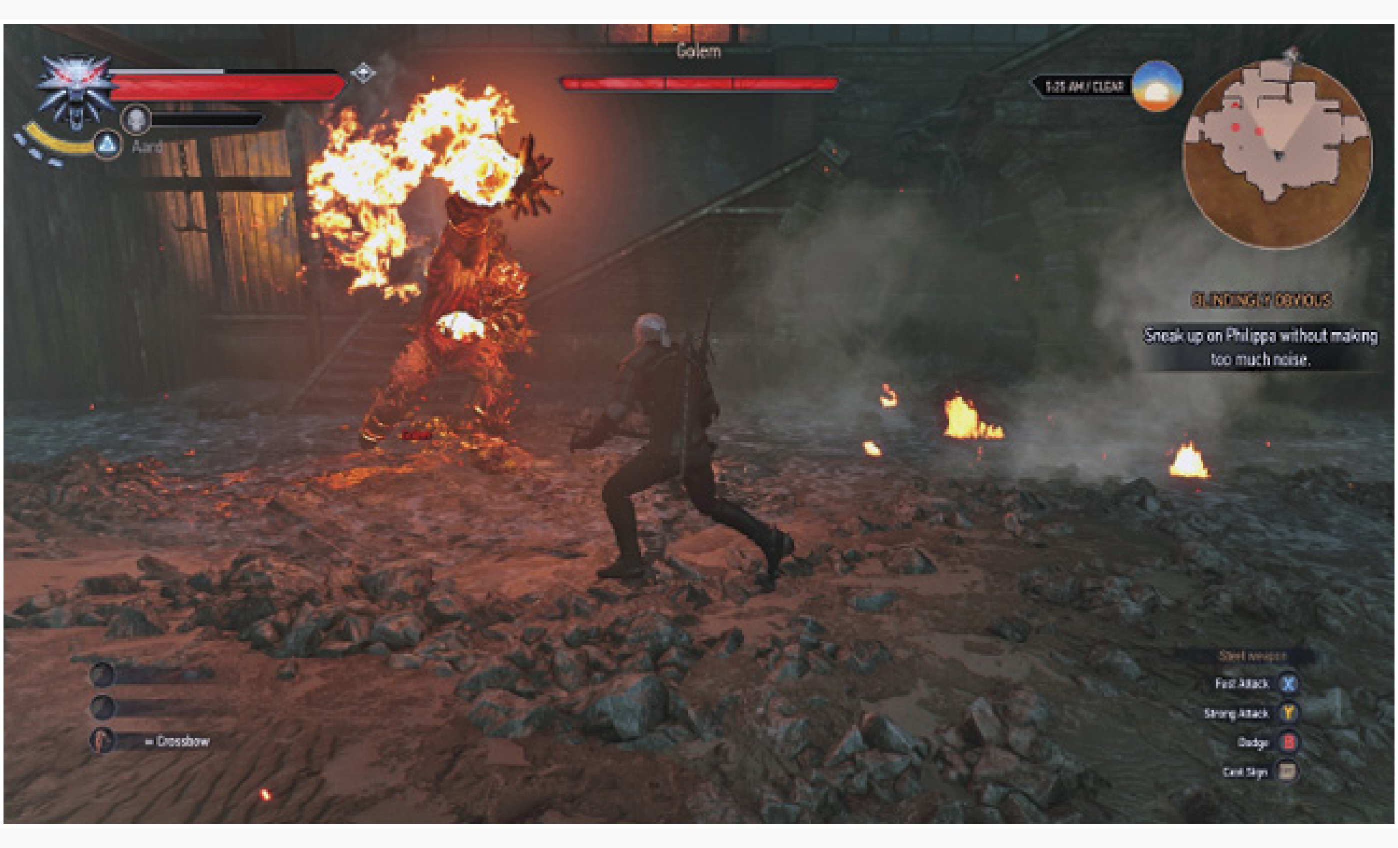
OBJECTIVE:

- Sneak up on Philippa without making too much noise.

Philippa Eilhart

Sigismund Dijkstra

She doesn't believe you want to help her, and to prove this point she summons a club-fisted golem to pummel you. Deft dodging and multiple Signs are needed to supplement your swordplay as you whittle this foe's energy down, while avoiding the purple columns of energy Philippa also summons to hurt you with.



Once the golem is gone, you realize Philippa "sees" using magic, but her vision isn't foolproof, and she relies on sound to spot you. So, head up the stone steps towards the upper balcony where Philippa is mocking you. Leap the gap across the steps, and walk clockwise around the balcony. Move at a quicker pace than a walk, and she hears you. You're promptly struck and must begin this sneaking again. Continue around the balcony, until you're close to her. Then you leap and bring her to the ground.

WITHIN EARSHOT: CLOSING IN ON PHILLIPA

As long as you move quickly, you can avoid her attacks. Be aware of the rubble on the upper floor and the chains dangling from the ceiling. If you hit those, Philippa knows where you are and attacks accordingly.

END: BREAK A LEG

OBJECTIVE:

- Sneak up on Philippa without making too much noise.

You convince Philippa to meet Triss outside, but your exit is halted by a furious Dijkstra, who isn't best pleased about the assassins Philippa sent to kill him.

Tell Dijskra to back off (pleasantly or otherwise):

- Be pleasant, and reveal that Ciri has returned, and Dijkstra lets you through. If you previously helped in the plot to assassinate King Radovid (Secondary Quest: Redania's Most Wanted), Dijkstra now tells you there is a great need to continue with this plan, but not with Philippa present. He tells you to meet him later. This begins Secondary Quest: Reason of State.
- Be unpleasant, violently shoving Dijkstra—with a kefuffle ending in you breaking his other leg!

Triss meets you at the bathhouse entrance, conjures a portal, and removes Philippa (who stays at Dandelion's place from this point on if you want to chat to her). This quest concludes.

Main Quest: Blindingly Obvious

Hydromancy at the Passiflora

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: BLINDINGLY OBVIOUS

LOCATIONS : Rosemary and Thyme (Novigrad), Passiflora Fountain, Dijkstra's Bathhouse
CHARACTERS : Triss Merigold, Sigismund Dijkstra, Bart the Rock Troll, Philippa Eilhart
ENEMIES : Dijkstra's Henchmen

OBJECTIVES:

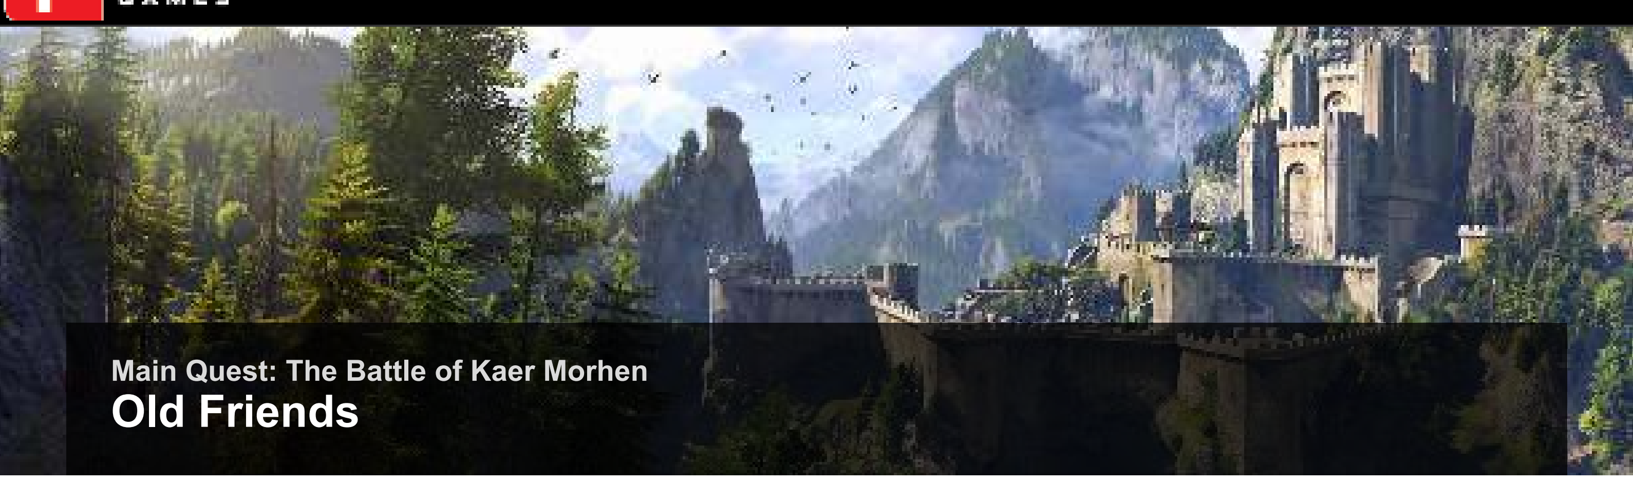
- (Final Preparations): Talk to Triss.
- (Blindingly Obvious): Go to the bathhouse with Triss.

Head upstairs to the first landing, open the door and step into the hallway, and open the next door on your left. Triss isn't pleased. She scolds you for potentially putting Ciri in danger while facing down Imlerith. Answer how you wish, before changing the subject to her success in summoning members of the Lodge (or optionally, the state of Novigrad). All of the sorceresses are otherwise engaged, except for Philippa and Margarita.

While Yennefer finds Rita, Triss has been tasked with searching for Philippa. Choose the long or short version of the clues to Philippa's whereabouts:

- She sought help in Novigrad from a former lover—the sorcerer Arthur de Vlesster. He convinced her to transform into an owl for her safety, then attached a dimeritium band as revenge, so she couldn't transform back. Vlesster was slain during the mage hunts, his estate auctioned, and as fate would have it, Zoltan bid on the owl. Of coure, Zoltan lost the owl in a card game a few days ago. But Triss does have one of Philippa's feathers. She plans a spot of hydromancy to find her. For that, a fountain must be found. You suggest the area outside the Passiflora. Head there immediately to continue the quest, or meet later to stall it.

▶ If you let Keira Metz go to Radovid during Main Quest: For the Advancement of Learning, a sorrowful Triss also informs about the sad fate of Keira at Radovid's hands. Over-confident in her persuasive powers, she was confronted with the truth that Radovid did not care for any sorceress. He had her impaled and made an example of, watching her die a slow and painful death at the stake in Hierarch Square. Triss begs you to help her take Keira's body off that spike so she may give her friend a last farewell. This activates Secondary Quest: A Final Kindness (detailed after this one).



Main Quest: The Battle of Kaer Morhen

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE BATTLE OF KAER MORHEN

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: The Isle of Mists, Secondary Quests: Brothers in Arms, Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield

LOCATIONS : Kaer Morhen

CHARACTERS : Vesemir, Cirilla, Yennefer of Vengerberg, Triss Merigold, Hjalmar an Craite, Folan, Vigi, Zoltan Chivay, Ermion, Lambert, Eskel, Vernon Roche, Ves, Letho, Keira Metz, Avallac'h

ENEMIES : Hounds of the Wild Hunt, Warriors of the Wild Hunt, arachas, Imlerith, Caranthir, Eredin

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest begins automatically once Main Quest: The Isle of Mists has been completed. The number of allies you have for the carnage to come are based on your previous actions (all of them detailed during Secondary Quest: Brothers in Arms). Meet your comrades as you walk the ruined battlements of Kaer Morhen.

OBJECTIVE:

- Enter Kaer Morhen Keep and begin the council.

You return to Witcher Keep, on the banks of the Gwennlech, bringing great joy in the form of Ciri to Vesemir, Triss, and Yennefer.

- Yennefer embraces and kisses you, whether you are romantically involved with her or not.
- Triss exchanges pleasantries with you, more knowingly if you are romantically involved with her at this time.
- Triss and Yennefer look at each other if you've decided to court both ladies, and not chosen a romantic interest.

Vesemir informs you that everyone you requested help from has arrived, though Avallac'h is resting in the tower. You are to hold council within the keep. Begin your walk behind the ladies. Feel free to stop and greet those that journeyed to your aid, along the way.

ACCESS AND ALLIES

Remember, these pauses in conversation with those you have summoned are optional, and whether or not most of these individuals are here (those flagged with this symbol) depends on your previous actions—as explained in Main Quest: Brothers in Arms.

- You're greeting by Hjalmar, and (if you saved either or both of them) his kinsmen Folan and Vigi. They are all ready for Ragh nar Roog.

- Zoltan is busy preparing some huge barrels of "Mahakaman Mix"; some potent explosives. He's able to craft items for you now, if you wish.

- In the next courtyard, Vesemir and Ermion are studying an alarming crack in the stone ground. Ermion has summoned gas, and aims to detonate it and incinerate some of the Wild Hunt's riders.
- If you didn't invite Ermion, Vesemir is here alone. He took a number of old weapons from Kaer Morhen, and is sharpening them, as well as practicing in the yard.

Head up the ramparts, and you pass Lambert tinkering with a giant ballista crossbow. As expected, he's not in the best of moods, and the machine isn't working properly.

- If you didn't invite Roche and Ves, but Letho is present, then Lambert isn't fixing the ballista, but is on the main yard with Eskel, talking to Letho.

Eskel is meditating on a higher elevation along the ramparts. He's preparing and requests some peace. Continue onwards into the inner courtyard.

- If Roche and Ves weren't invited, but Letho was, you'll find Eskel and Lambert talking to Letho in the main yard, instead.

- Roche and Ves are testing her archery skills here. Should Letho have been requested to join you, the conversation becomes terse due to Letho's past "acccomplishments." Answer Ves how you wish, before continuing.
- If Roche and Ves were invited, but Letho wasn't, then you'll speak to Roche and Ves close to where Eskel is meditating, instead.

Continue up towards the main doors of the keep. If you continue southward instead, to the training yard where you first faced Vesemir, Ciri is here on the battlements, reminiscing. Optionally speak to her about her astral travels and Eredin, if you wish.

- Enter the Keep. Before you reach the grand hall, Keira Metz can be found combing her hair in preparation for looking her best at the site of battle. Exchange pleasantries, before entering the Keep. Have you tried to dispel Keira's illusion bubble using the Eye of Nehaleni?

SHOP BEFORE YOU DROP

Be sure you speak to Keira (if you invited her), as she has some wares you can buy, or sell your unwanted items, stocking up before the battle to come.

MAIN QUEST: THE GREAT ESCAPE

LOCATIONS : Crippled Kate's (Novigrad), Rosemary and Thyme, Novigrad Gate (Oxenfurt), Deireadh Well, Deireadh
CHARACTERS : Yennefer of Vengerberg, Abbé Faria, Margarita Laux-Antille, Sile de Tancarville
ENEMIES : Grave Hag, Drowners, Ghouls, Necrophage, Witch Hunters, Redanian Soldiers, Redanian Commander
RECOMMENDED ITEMS : Superior Swallow

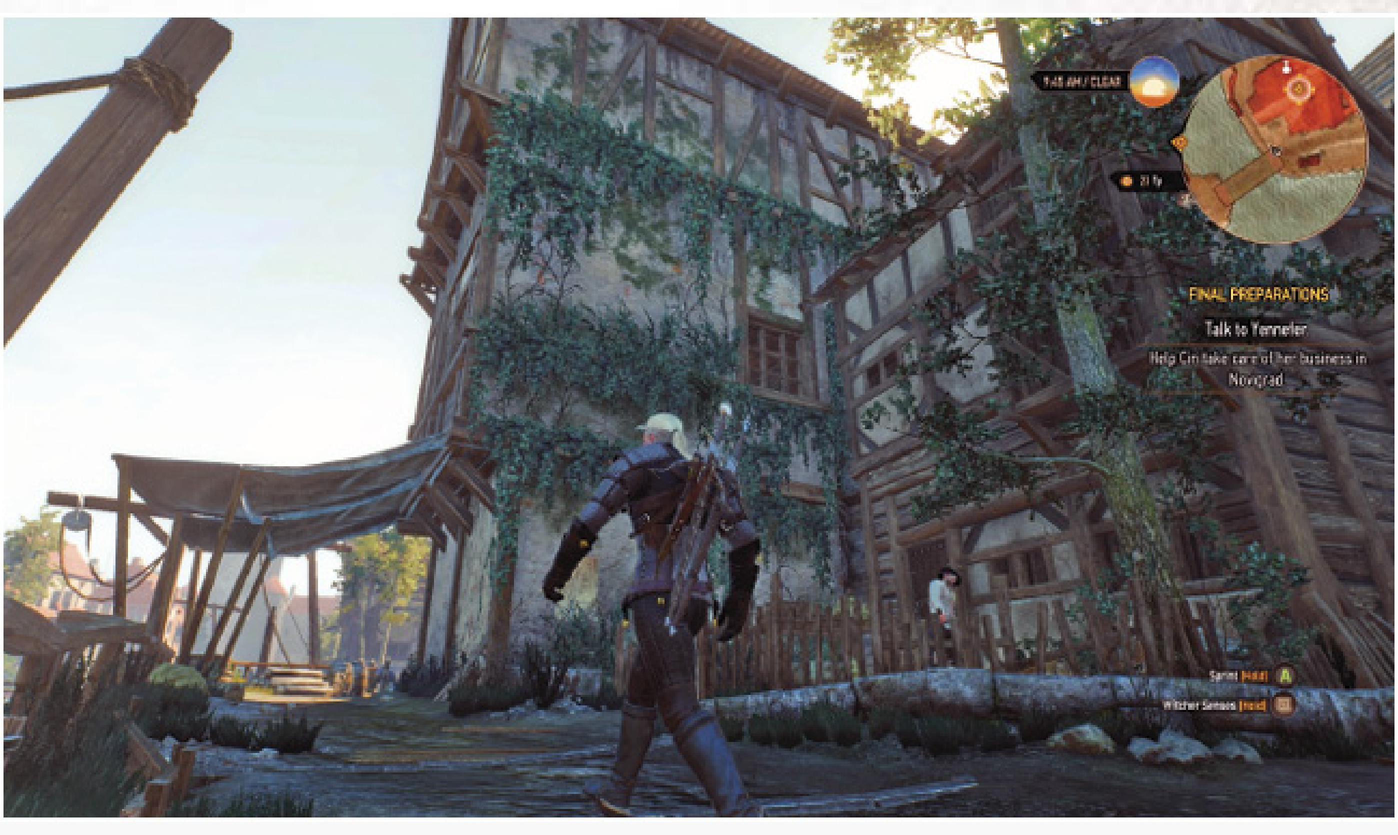
OBJECTIVES:

- (Final Preparations): Talk to Yennefer.
- (The Great Escape): Catch the runaway.

Yennefer of Vengerberg

Abbé Farla

Move across Novigrad to the Lacehalls brothel District, and search out the seedy brothel known as Crippled Kate's. A cowled Yennefer is sitting at one of the tables. She asks whose idea it was to kill Imlerith. Answer how you wish; she's happy you were there by Ciri's side. Talk turns to locating Margarita's whereabouts—a prison called Deireadh in Oxenfurt—and the identity of a man who escaped from there. Abbé Faria.



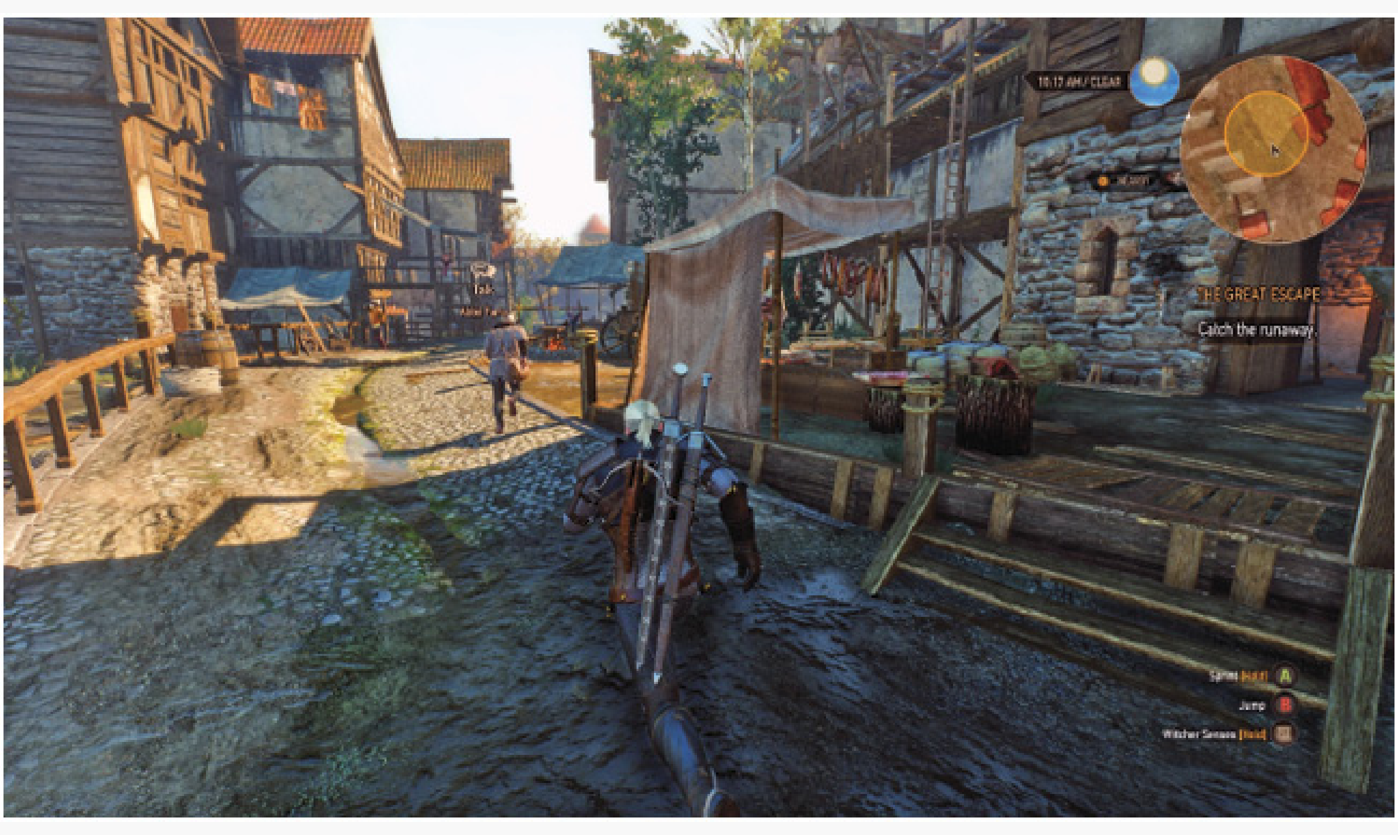
The weatherbeaten man enters the brothel.

Alas, after you start asking him questions, he flees from here just as quickly.

Quickly exit Crippled Kate's via the canal side and sprint eastwards along the edge of the canal. There are ways to capture this fleeing suspect:

- If you're able to run in a straight line, and grab him when you're close, you're able to tackle Faria in about five seconds.
- (Aard) If you're quick and cast Aard on him, he trips and falls, making capture easy.
- If he's too far away, he rushes to a ladder and begins climbing a nearby set of wooden scaffolding, and up onto a roof. Follow him until Yennefer stops him with her magic.

After Yennefer convinces him you're not bandits, you return to Kate's. You tell Faria you need to enter the prison he just escaped from. Quiz him about the prison—the pile of corpses thrown into a sewer pit, the torture going on, and the blind drunk guards on certain holidays. Yennefer also mentions some elven ruins that might allow secret access into the jail. Faria bids farewell, and Yennefer tells you to meet her at the bridge to Oxenfurt.



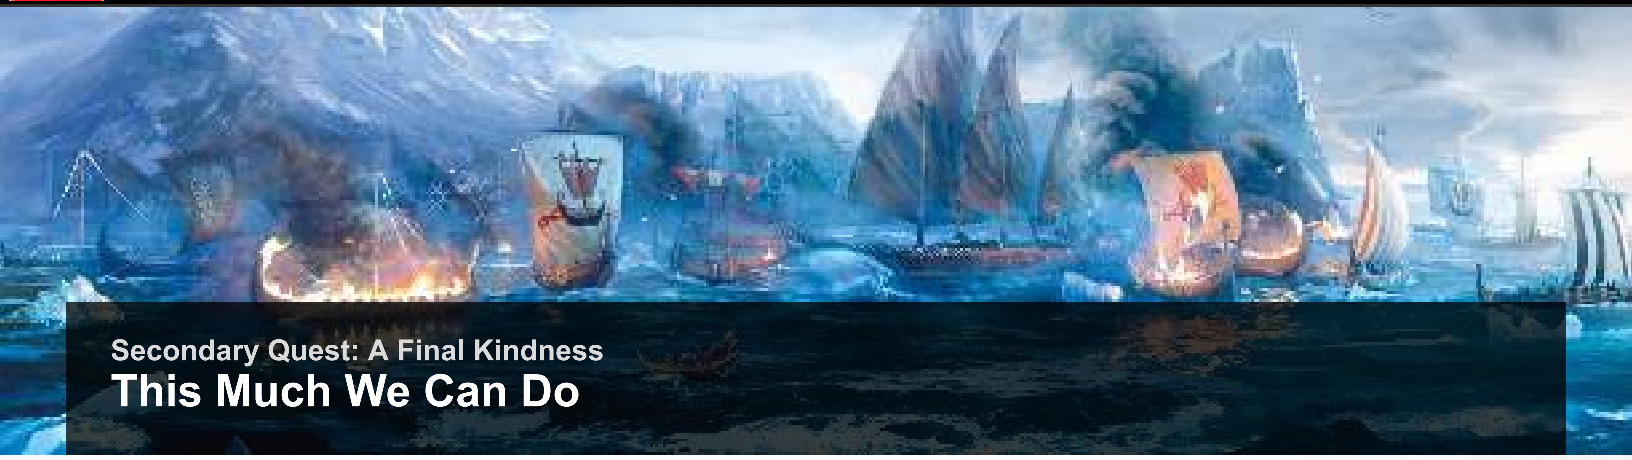
ROLL OUT THE BARREL

OBJECTIVE:

- (Optional) Ask Zoltan for help.

Before you rendezvous with Yennefer, you may wish to return to the Rosemary and Thyme, and speak to Zoltan. Tell him you're after some beer for the prison break.

- If you helped the mages escape Novigrad during Secondary Quest: Now or Never, Zoltan convinces you that it isn't a good idea for nonhumans (like him) to hang around near the prison—a hotspot for witch hunters.
- If you didn't help the mages escape, he agrees to load a cart of beer and head to Deireadh. Once there, Yennefer will give him a signal to drive through, and ply the guards with alcohol. He's happy to help.



Secondary Quest: A Final Kindness

This Much We Can Do

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: A FINAL KINDNESS

OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Triss on the main square at midnight.
- Get rid of the guards.

You meet Triss at Hierarch Square where you can already see Keira on display, guarded by two of Novigrad's "finest". Triss tells you she is worried they might recognize her easily and asks you to take care of the guards.

Approach the guards and talk to them. Ask what crime this woman committed to hear their warped version of justice. You can deal with them in whatever way you wish. If you choose to fight them, keep the fighting contained to the main square. Once you have either convinced or defeated the guards, Triss will take Keira's body down and take her away. You receive an additional XP reward for your troubles.

It's a reasonably short ride southeast along the Pontar river to reach the outskirts of Oxenfurt. Follow the road for best results, locating and riding across Novigrad Gate (the confusingly-named eastern entrance to Oxenfurt). Yennefer is just beyond.

- If you didn't help the mages escape during Secondary Quest: Now or Never, you ride or walk past the impaled bodies lining the streets into the city. Yennefer laments the grotesque displays of sorceresses on spikes.

Next, you speak about entrances to the prison. Yennefer has found several. You can begin now, or stop and return to Zoltan for help. If this has occurred already, you tell Yennefer the dwarf is ready with the beer.

OBJECTIVES:

- Enter the prison through the well.
- Search the ruins.
- Find the missing part of the mechanism using your Witcher Senses.
- Repair the mechanism and open the doors.

Follow Yennefer across town, until you reach the well in question. It seems you're the only one getting wet. She hands you a device that you can activate when you find Margarita. Then take the plunge and drop down into the well.

Fading Memories: Whoreson Junior

DANGER ALERT SPOLER ALERT

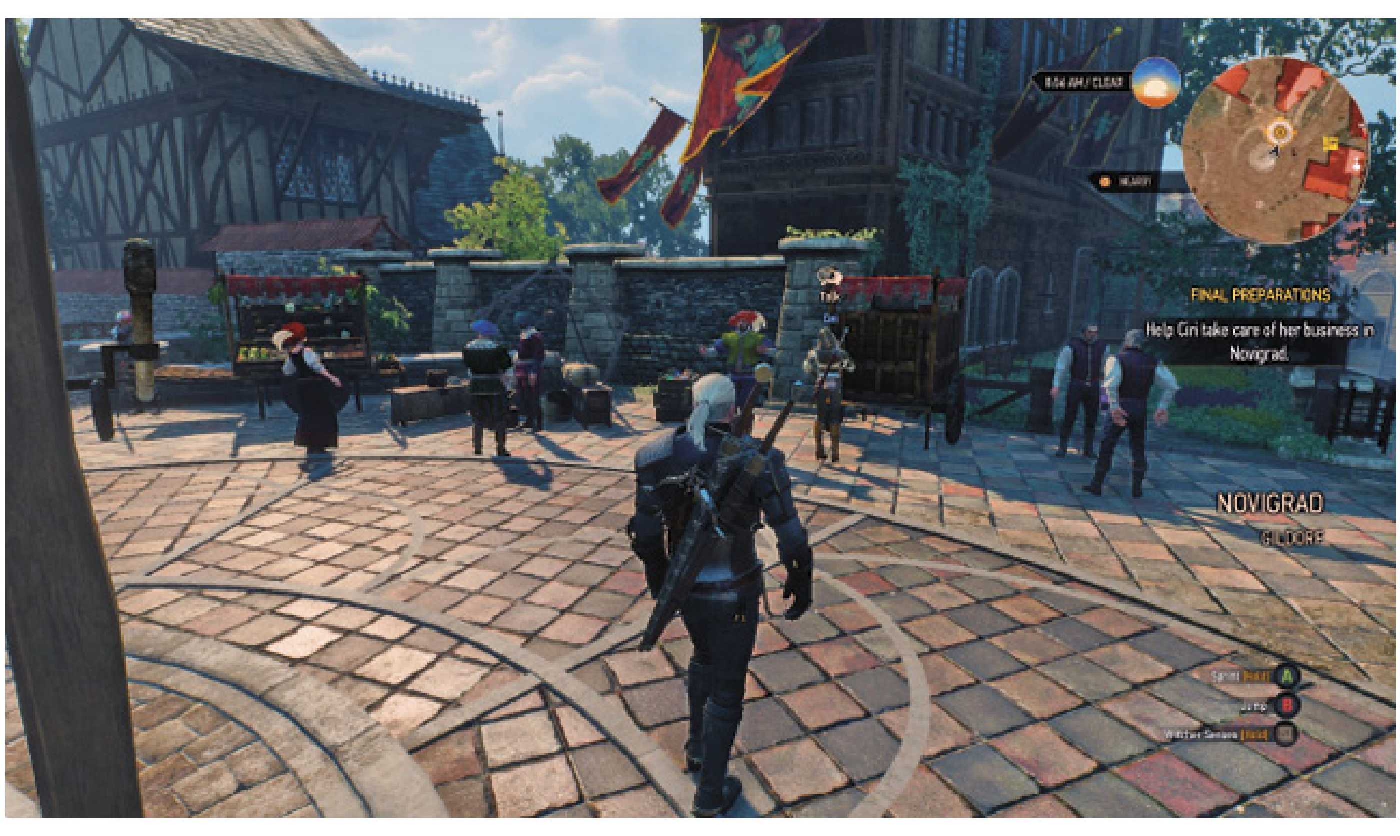
MAIN QUEST: PAYBACK

LOCATIONS : Gildorf Square, The Bits, Temple Isle, The Golden Sturgeon, Farcorners Juggler Camp, Novigrad Stables
CHARACTERS : Cirilla, Cyprian Willey (Whoreson Junior), Dudu (Whoreson Junior), Bea, Valdo, Aegar
ENEMIES : Whoreson's Henchmen, Thugs, Novigrad Guards

OBJECTIVES:

- (Final Preparations): Help Ciri take care of her business in Novigrad.
- (Payback): Follow Ciri to find Whoreson Junior.

Ciri can be found over at the Gildorf Square, where she is purchasing a trinket. She wishes to find the people who helped her in the past. Tell her to lead the way if you wish to continue this quest. Your first memory from the past—Whoreson Junior!



If you killed Whoreson Junior in Main Quest: Get Junior, follow Ciri to Temple Isle, where she reveals that you are to see Whoreson Junior. You can object, knowing you put a sword through him, but Ciri wishes to check regardless. At Whoreson's headquarters, you're greeted by two of his henchmen at the door.

Whoreson Junior (Dudu)

You can:

- (Axii Delusion Level 3) Convince them to let you through without incident.
- (Fight) Or draw a weapon. During the kerfuffle, Ciri warns you of an incoming attack, and as soon as she calls you "Geralt", the henchmen suddenly stop attacking. They claim this was a horrible misunderstanding, and let you through.

Whoreson Junior (Cyprian Willey)

QUEST UPDATED!
PAYBACK

Follow Ciri to the top floor of the building, where you find… Whoreson Junior! You know this man cannot be the thug you executed! But this disgusting specimen throws insults at you both with the best of them. Ciri reckons you should finish what you started, when suddenly the man claims to be Dudu in disguise! You may not believe him, reciting a story known only to you.

But why would your doppler friend use this pitiful bag of bones to impersonate? Because of his previous predicament. Dudu now runs Whoreson's empire, changing it to legitimate businesses. He's confident the ruse won't be rumbled. Bid him farewell and continue on after a bit of catching up with the doppler.

- If you let Whoreson Junior live in Main Quest: Get Junior, follow Ciri into The Bits district, passing a shrine to the Eternal Fire, as she searches for the wretch to failed to help her. Stroll down a narrow alleyway (there may be henchmen in the vicinity to slay), and you spot a group of children harassing a drunkard. You recognize the accent in those slurred curses. It's Whoreson! But this woeful tramp is slumped at the side of an alley. He hasn't lost his knack for spitting verbal bile, but it lacks the bite when small urchins are throwing stones at him. Ciri deems it unnecessary to kill Whoreson. His current predicament is worse. Bid him farewell and continue on.

Main Quest: Payback

Fading Memories: Bea the Waitress

OBJECTIVE:

- Follow Ciri.

Bea

Follow Ciri eastwards, winding through the alleys until you reach the Golden Sturgeon. Enter the tavern, where a trio of thugs are harassing the poor waitress. Step in, and face some verbal abuse. Then speak:

- “Leave on your own” you tell them, with Ciri backing up your story as a witcher of ill repute. The thugs beat a hasty retreat.
- “Or I’ll throw you out” you threaten them, leading to a short and violent confrontation with them. Defeat them easily.

Ciri speaks to Bea, who seems rather taken with you. But not as much as Ciri might be with the waitress. Answer how you wish. Ciri gives Bea a trinket, but you refrain from a meal of slaughtered piglet.

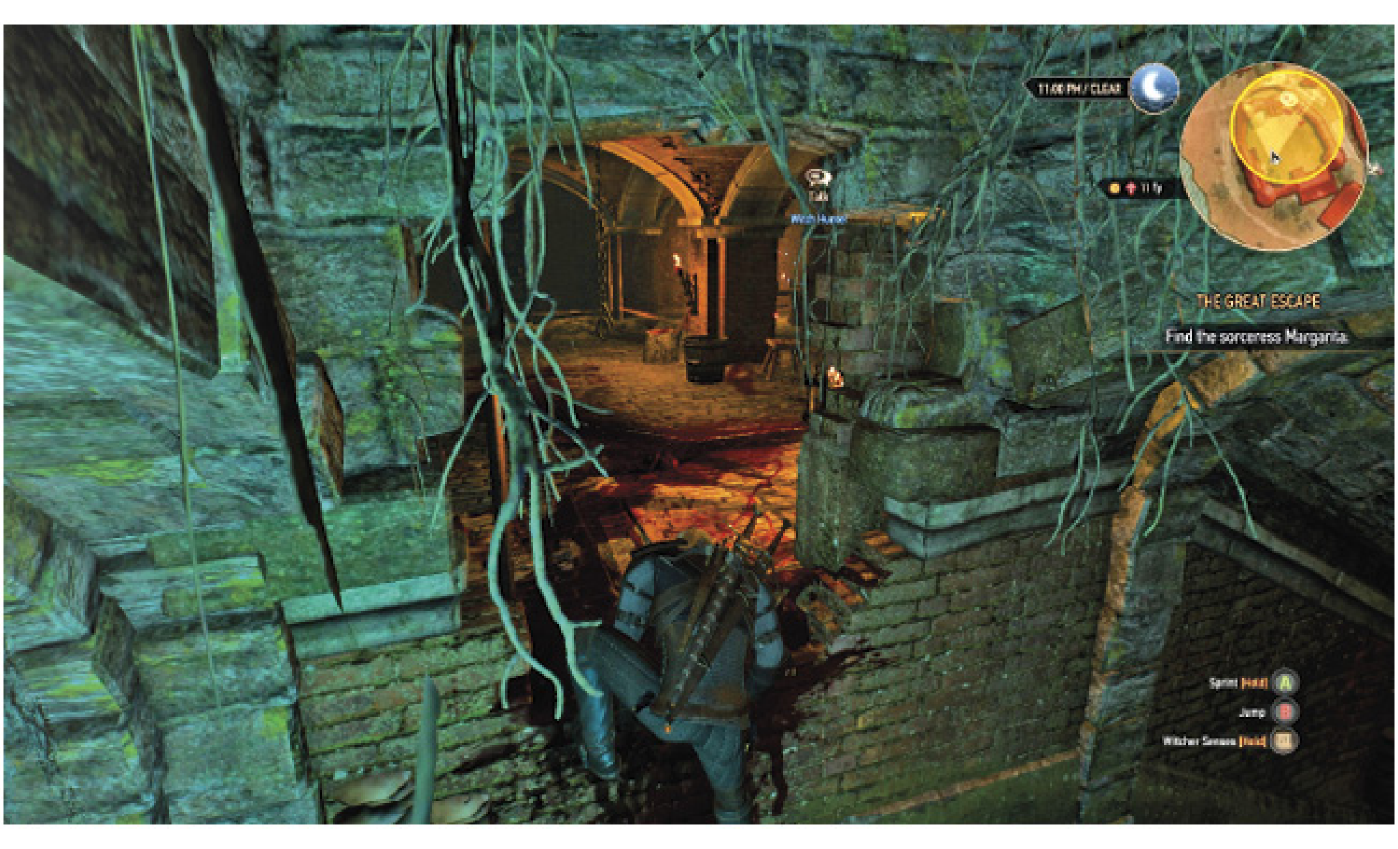
Main Quest: The Great Escape

Slaughter for the Sorceresses

OBJECTIVES:

- Enter the sewers.
- Find the sorceress Margarita.

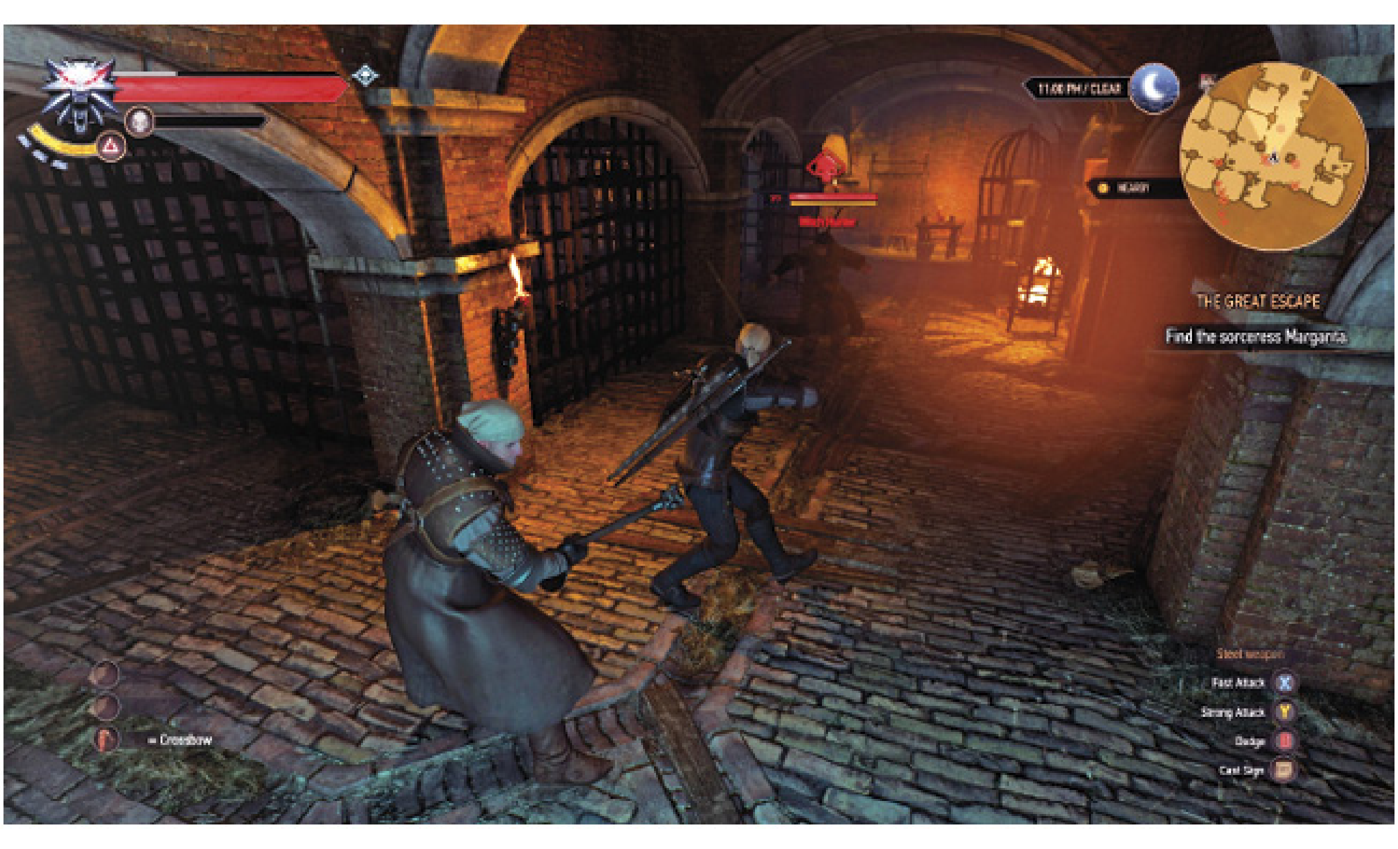


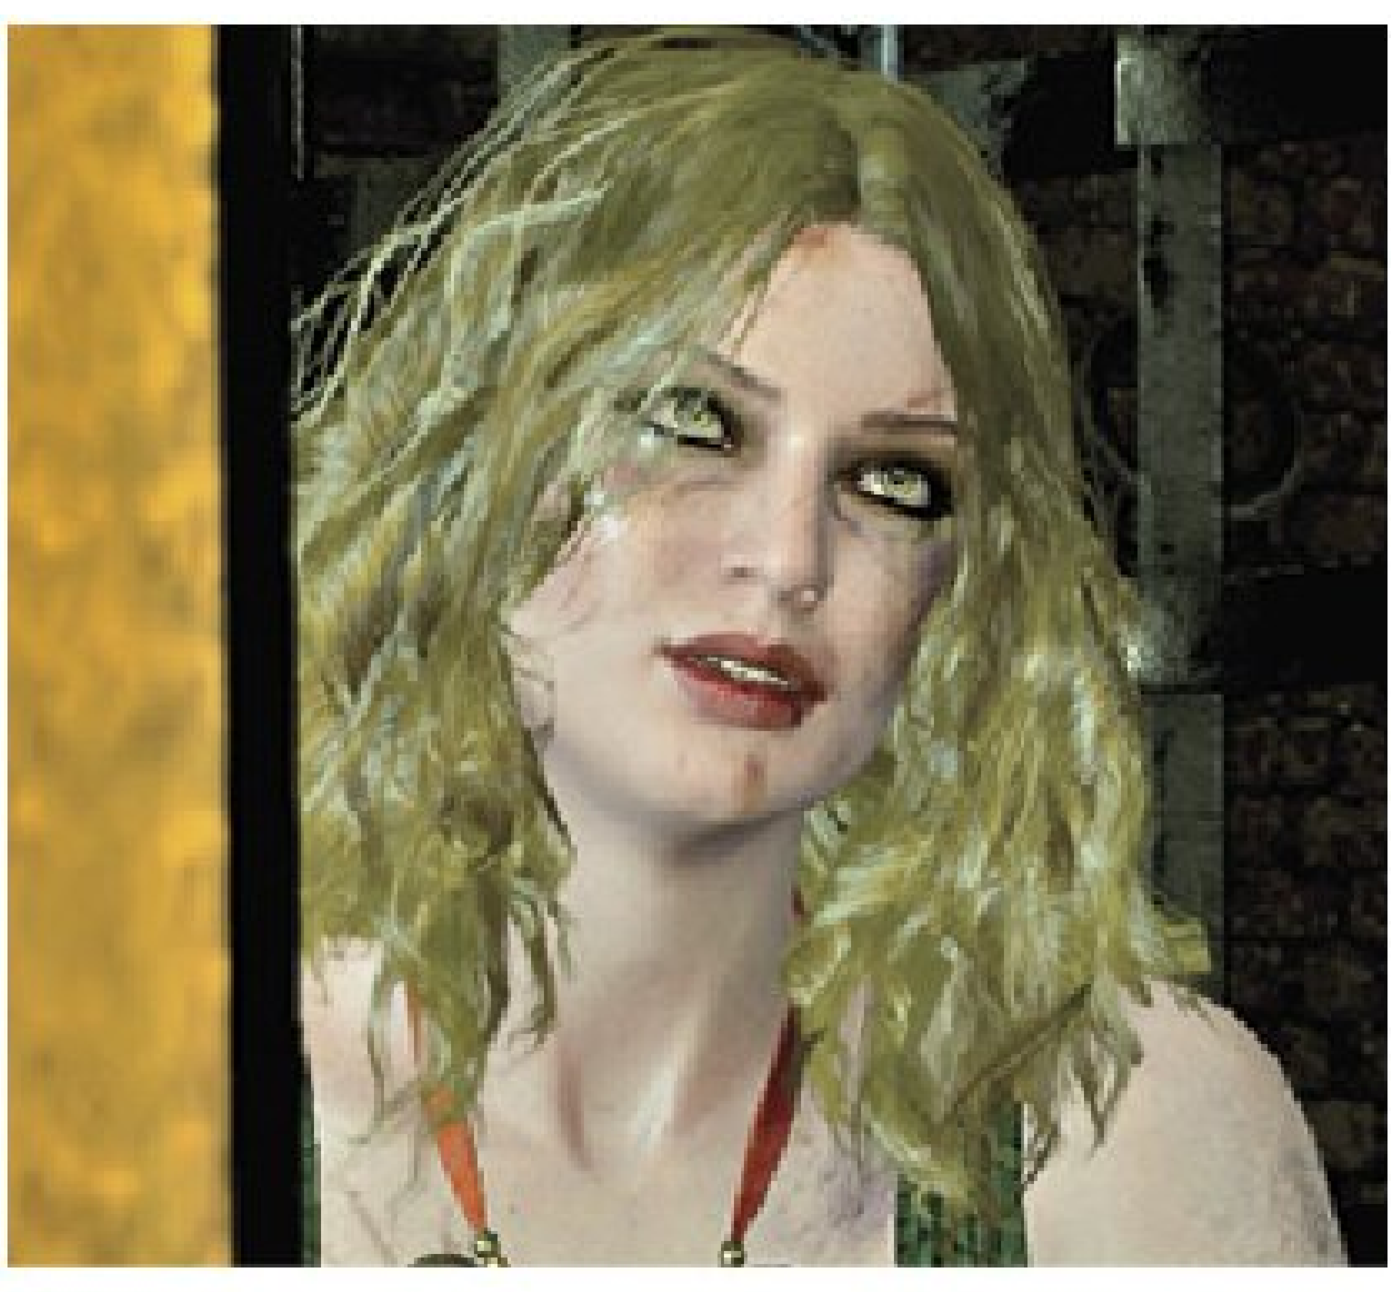
To your right is a half-submerged cavern. Turn left and jog towards a brittle-looking brick wall. A short shove with Aard, and it falls apart, allowing access into the sewers, and a battle against three ghouls and a necrophage. The grated tunnel is a dead-end, so head roughly east and northeast, upstream through the effluent. Turn right and enter the sloping tunnel of dirty water to the south. This must be the body chute. You soon spot a corpse and a bloodied ledge to climb up. You emerge in a torture chamber.

- If Zoltan already arrived with the alcohol, there is no one in this chamber.
- If Zoltan didn't help, there are two witch hunters surprised at your entrance. Quickly slay them.

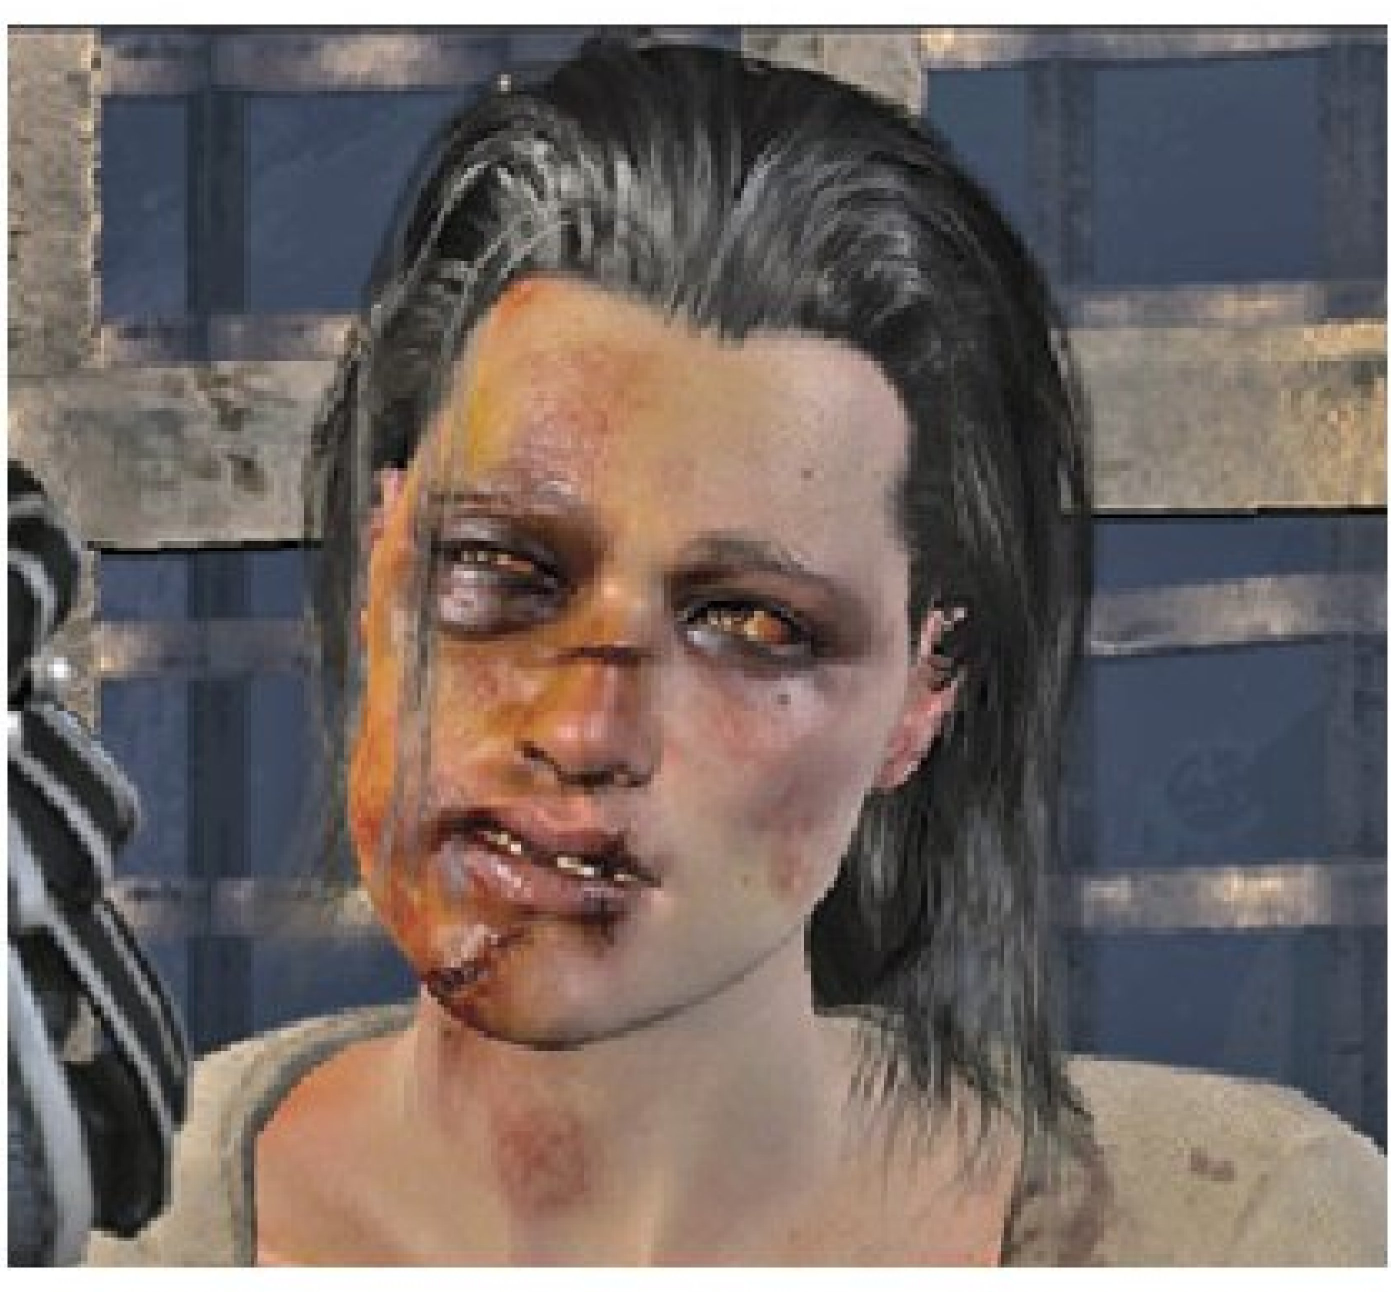
THE DRUNKARDS OF DEIREADH PRISON

Prepare for a battle with a number of witch hunters. The following gives you the larger of the numbers to expect. However, if Zoltan plied them with alcohol, expect there to be fewer enemies, and a number of them sleeping in a drunken stupor.





Margarita Laux-Antille



Sile de Tancarville

Push the southwest door open. Climb the wooden stairs and through another door, and into the main prison level. Prepare to bring the hurting to three witch hunters. Defeat them before exploring further into this cellblock. Access the grating along the main corridor, just across from the door you entered from. Margarita looks up from her cell. Is she hallucinating? No, you tell her. But you can't free her without the warden's key.

- If Sile de Tancarville survived during Witcher 2, she is also with Margarita.

OBJECTIVES:

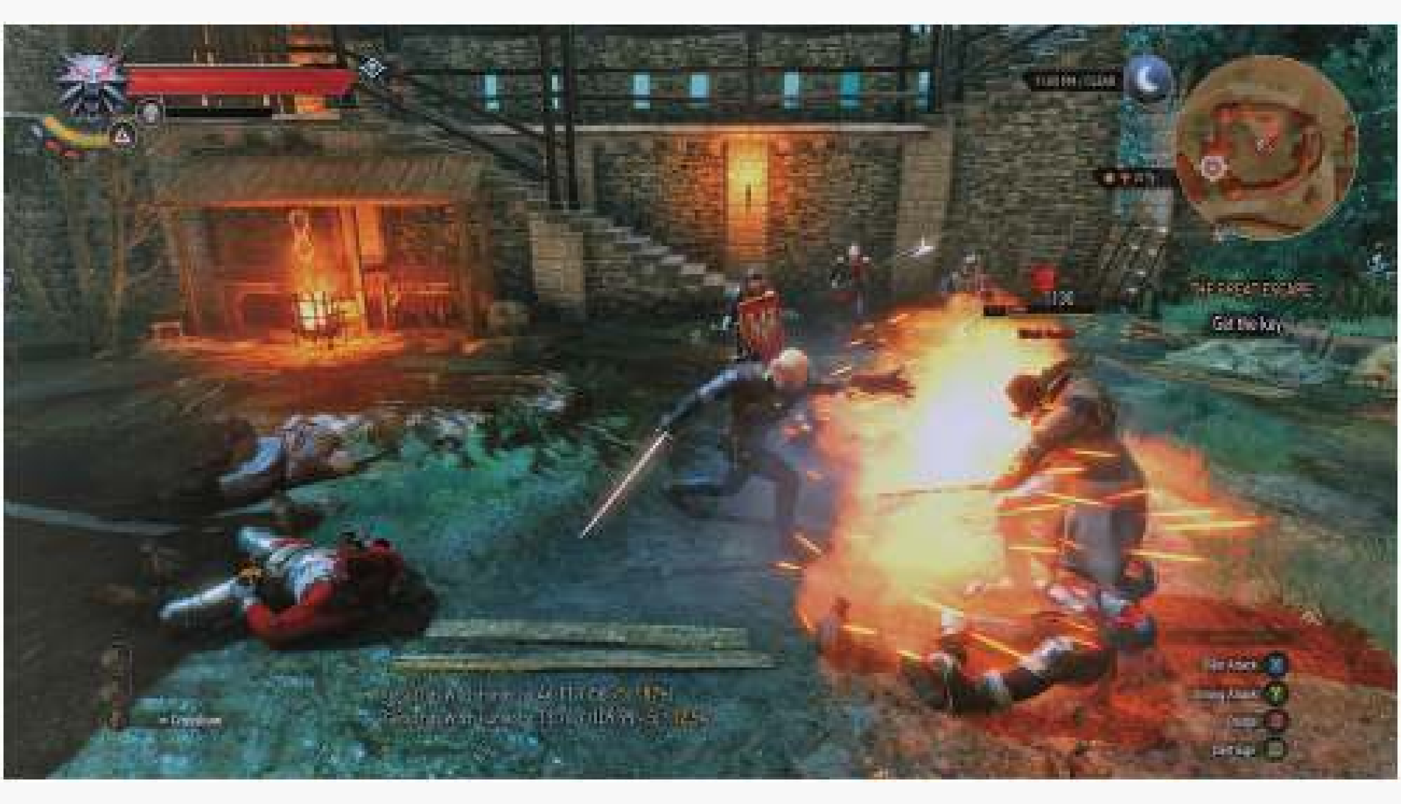
- Get the key.
- Search the commander's body and find the key to the cell door.
- Open the cell.

Head to the northeast exit door, and up another wooden stairwell. Peer outside to the prison grounds.

- If Zoltan helped you with the hooch, you find a number of guards standing in drunken celebration. You can simply move past them, as long as you don't venture too close to them. Sneak up the stairs and ascend to the Prison Commander's Office. Dispatch him quickly to retrieve the key from his body. Of course, you can simply start fighting the drunk guards at any time, if stealth isn't part of your plans.
- Without Zoltan's help, there's around eight well-armored Redanian soldiers here. Don't head there yet. Instead, enter the adjacent stairwell, ascend to an upper room and deliver some punishment to a pair of witch hunters (so they don't outflank you in a moment). Then descend, head outside, and start the mother of all battles against the cream of Oxenfurt's prison guard! Expect a further six reinforcements along the battlements, and a couple of crossbowmen on the roof.

THE BATTLE OF DEIREADH PRISON

Is this battle getting out of hand? Retreat into the prison where you came from (or up onto the crenelations), use your crossbow to drop the Redanian soldiers from distance (especially those carrying ranged weapons), and then battle your foes one or two at a time using the stone walls as cover. Or you could try climbing onto a shed roof and using ranged weapons, which is foolish but sometimes effective.



Afterwards, search the corpse of the Redanian commander for a cell key. Grab it, retrace your steps, and unlock Margarita's cell. You pull out your summoning device, and Yennefer arrives by portal. Yennefer gathers up Margarita, and teleports away, leaving you to mop up.

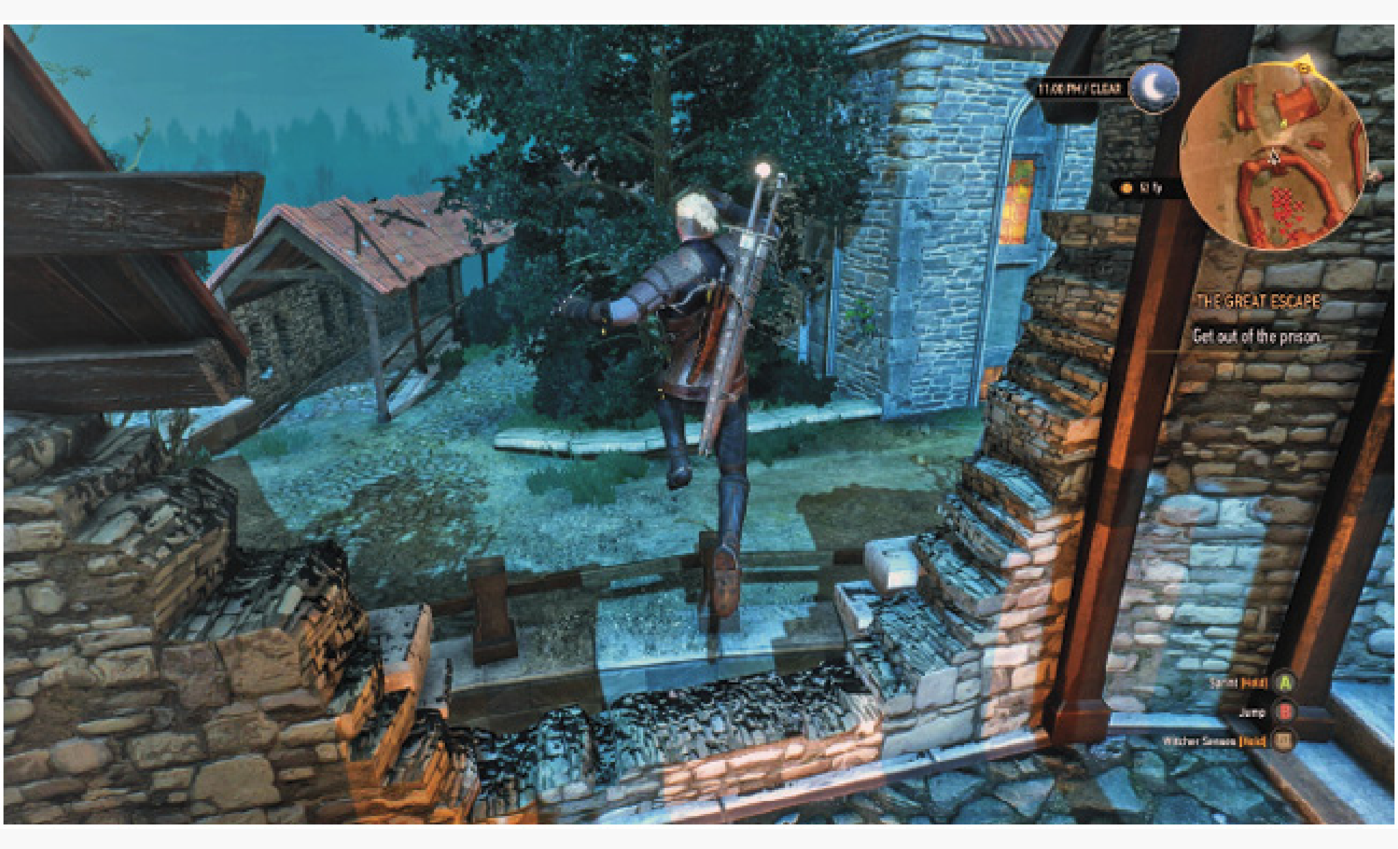
- If Sile de Tancarville survived during Witcher 2, she pleads with Yennefer for a quick death. You can choose to administer this, or leave Yennefer to do it instead.

QUEST CONCLUSION: PRISON BREAK

OBJECTIVES:

- Get out of the prison.
- (Final Preparations): Wait for daylight.

Retrace your steps back up to the courtyard, and bring a quick death to any foes that remain. Or, if you're encountering drunks everywhere, simply sneak past them along the battlements to the breach in the wall.



- If you requested help (and beer) from Zoltan, he is waiting in the courtyard (complaining how the plan went south if you interrupted the reveling witch hunters and killed them instead), and he had to kill a great many guards. Some are inebriated, making them more straightforward to slay. Afterwards, Zoltan offers you a ride back to Novigrad. Accept to conclude this quest. You receive more XP if you got the witch hunters drunk and snuck by them.

When the coast is clear, run along the battlements and up into the warden's office, where you can inspect a list of prisoners if you wish (on the bedroom table). Return outside. The main gates (to the northwest) are barred shut. Run around the battlements until you reach a broken section of the western wall. Leap out onto the main street, and this quest concludes.

Alternatively, you can trace your steps back into the sewers, to the torture chamber, where you can find a key that opens the doors in the sewers that were previously locked. Travel along the tunnel to a second door, pass it and turn right to enter the cellar of a nearby house. Then climb up into the house and leave it inconspicuously.

Now leave Oxenfurt if you wish, but be sure to wait for daylight (meditating or manually waiting) to continue.

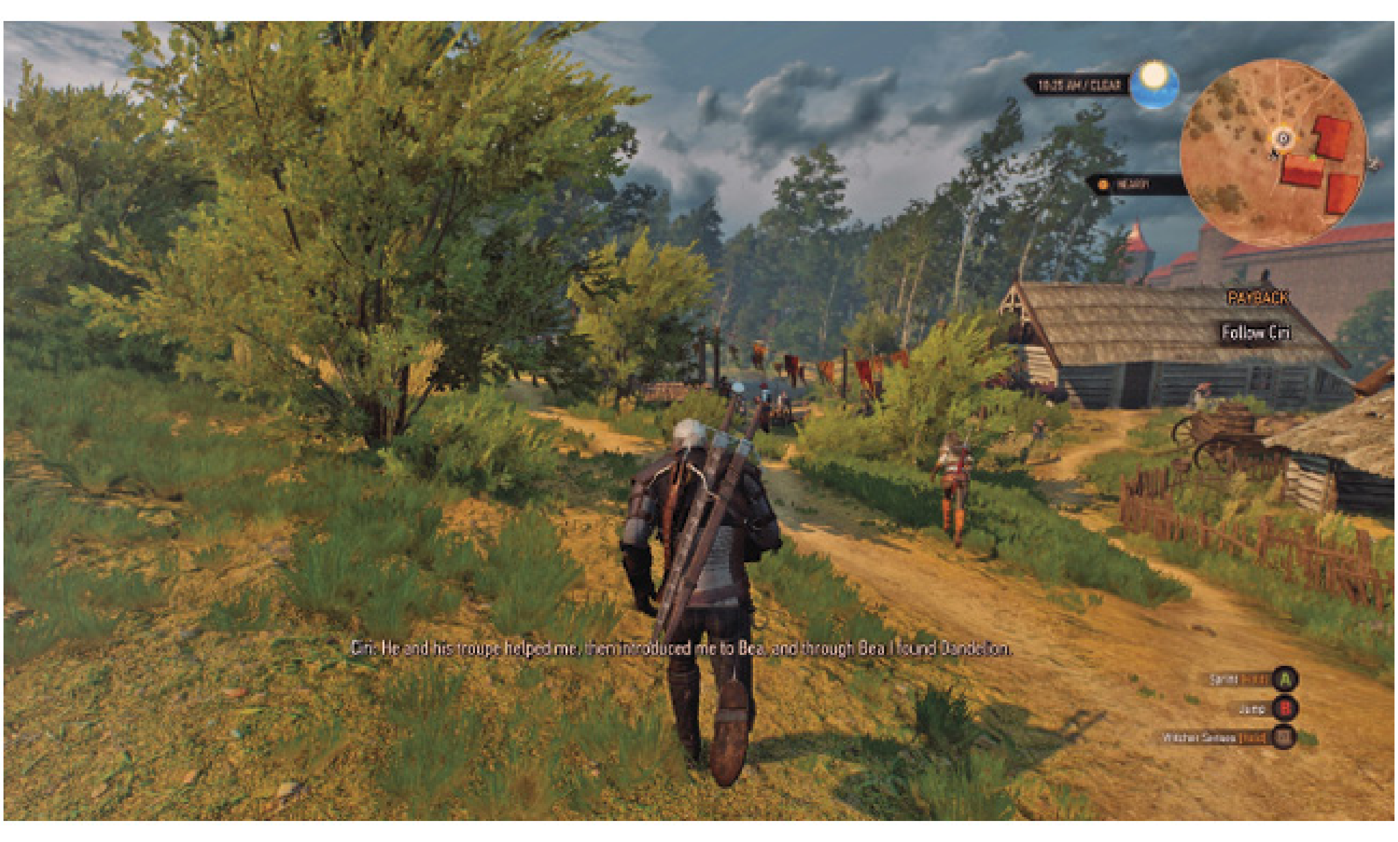
Fading Memories: Valdos Troupe

OBJECTIVES:

- Follow Ciri.
- Talk to Valdo.



PAYBACK
Follow Ciri
Ciri: He and his troupe helped me, then introduced me to Bea, and through Bea I found Dandelion.

Follow Ciri in a roughly southern direction as she recalls her past hardships. You leave Novigrad via the Portside Gate, making a quick turn to the right (west), looking for a small carnival camp of nonhumans among the small huts along the Pontar river. She spies Valdo, and runs in to see him and another elf named Aegar. After an amusing introduction, Ciri is greeted warmly. Answer how you wish. You pick up slight tension between the two elves as Aegar leaves to trade for horses.

Aegar

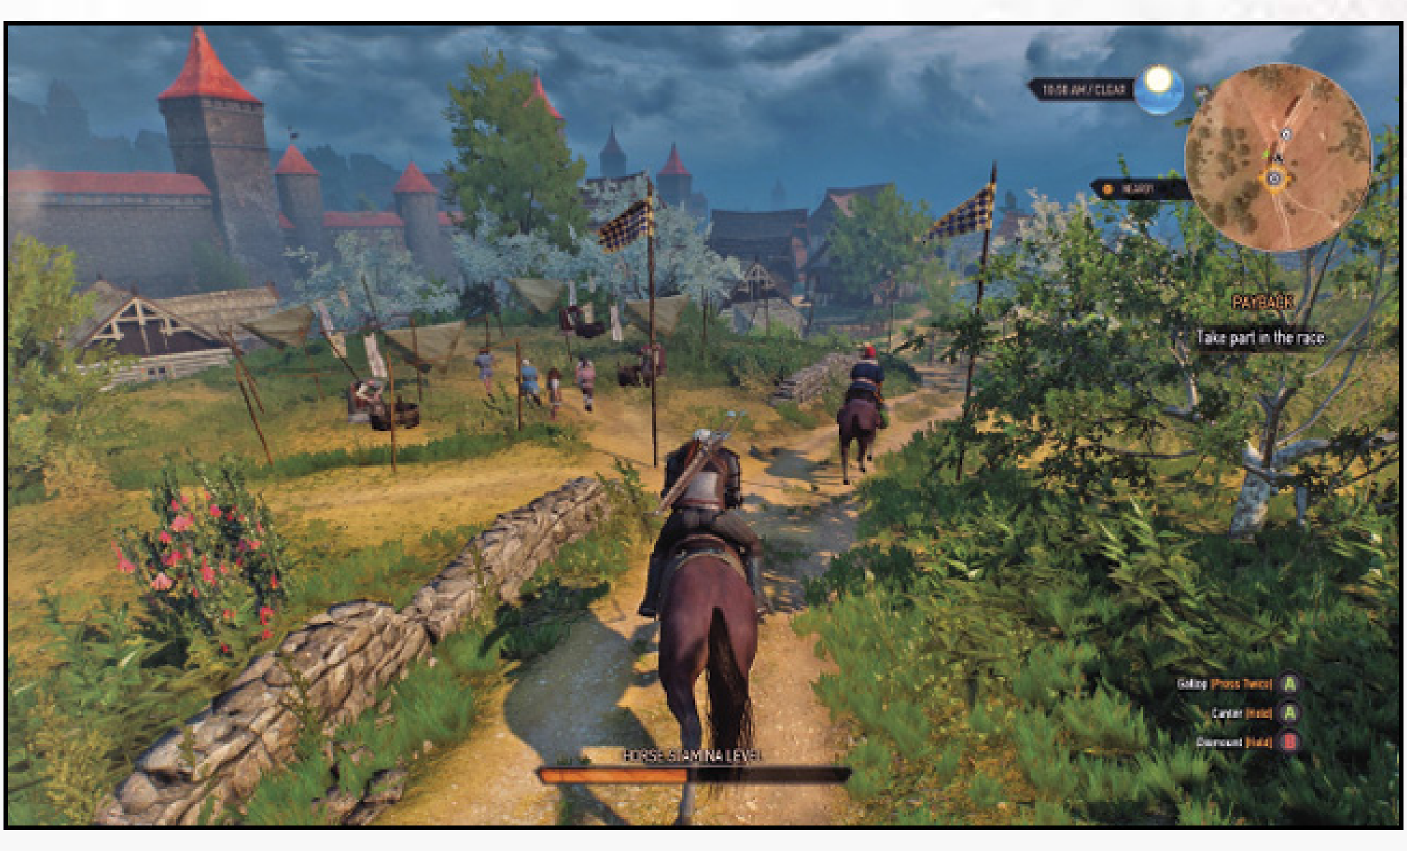
Valdo

- Speaking of which, Valdo refuses Ciri's coin and instead wants to know if you're ready to race? The coin goes to the winner! Accept (and begin the race) or decline (and skip the race).

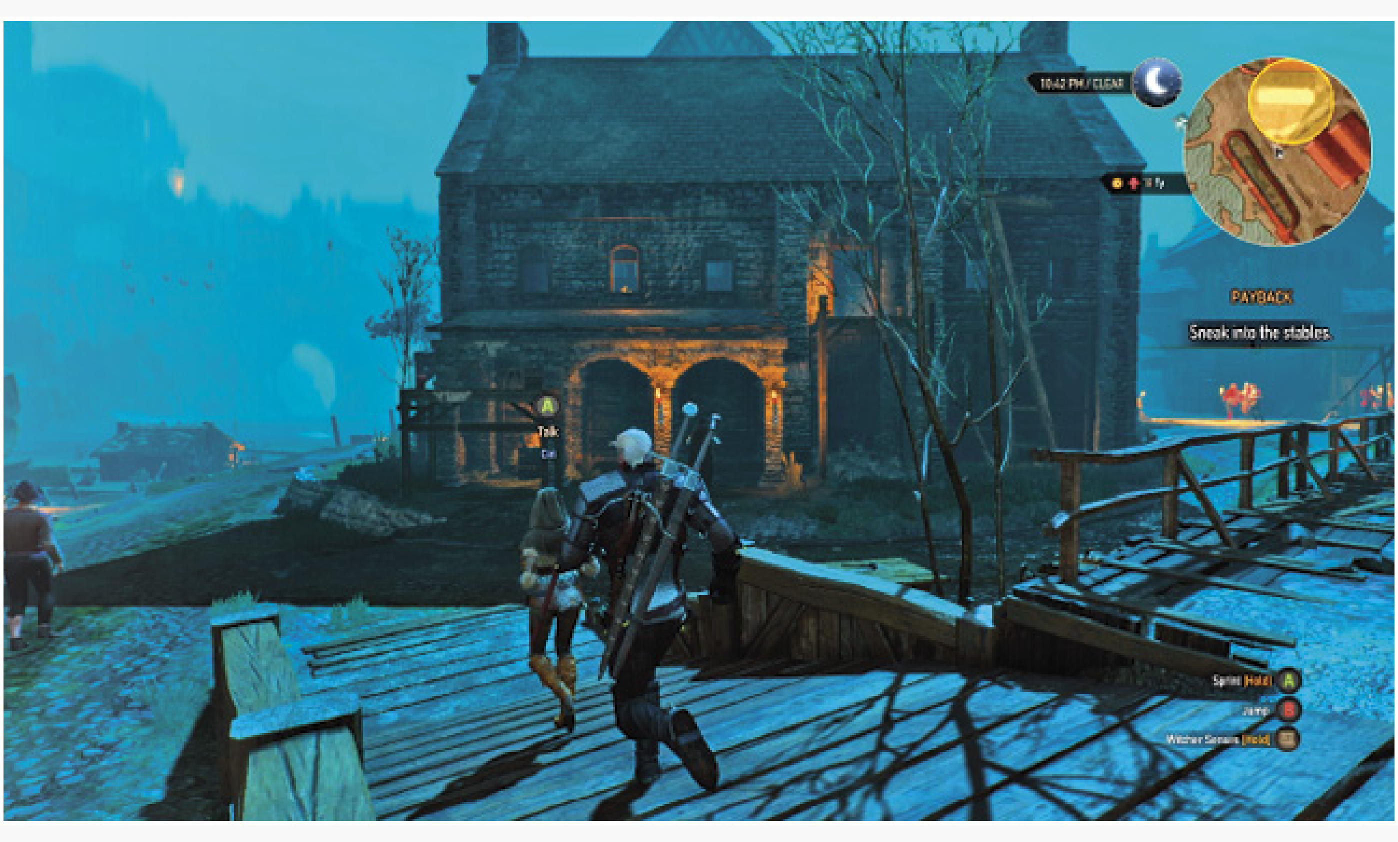
OBJECTIVE:

- (Optional) Take part in the race.

The race takes place along the Pontar, then the track heads east, up through the woods, passing Lucian's Windmill, and ends back at the camp. The entire run takes about 40 seconds if you're constantly galloping. Press your horse into a gallop at the start, ease off at the windmill, and gallop to the finish to beat Valdo, who is an exceptional rider. However, even if you win, Ciri insists the money goes to Valdo.



Valdo begs you stay for some wine. A few hours pass and evening falls. You feel rested and charmed by these elves, despite one being a juggler. Converse with Ciri about her life, answering as you wish. After a long chat about her life, Aegar returns with a face like a zebra's slapped arse. He's been unable to secure any horses. Perhaps you'd help them steal some?

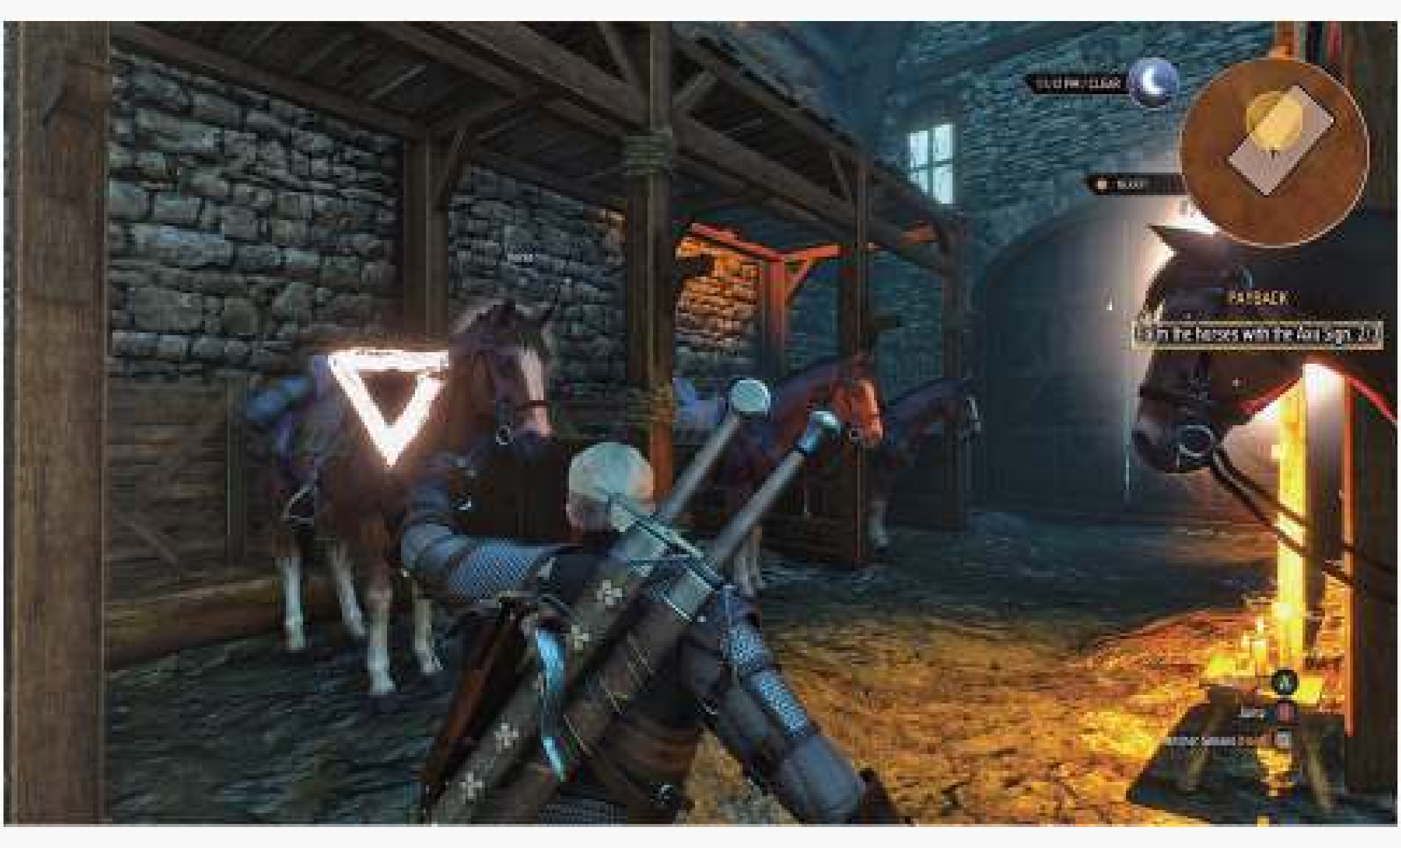


You can:

- Agree to steal some horses. Ciri seems giddy at the plan. You automatically arrive at the stables in Novigrad.
- Refuse completely, and Aegar's demeanor darkens to anger. You're challenged to a fistfight. Win or lose, you're both banished from camp. You both head back to the Rosemary and Thyme, in Novigrad.

OBJECTIVES:

- Sneak into the stables.
- Use your Witcher Senses to find a way to open the stable doors from the inside.



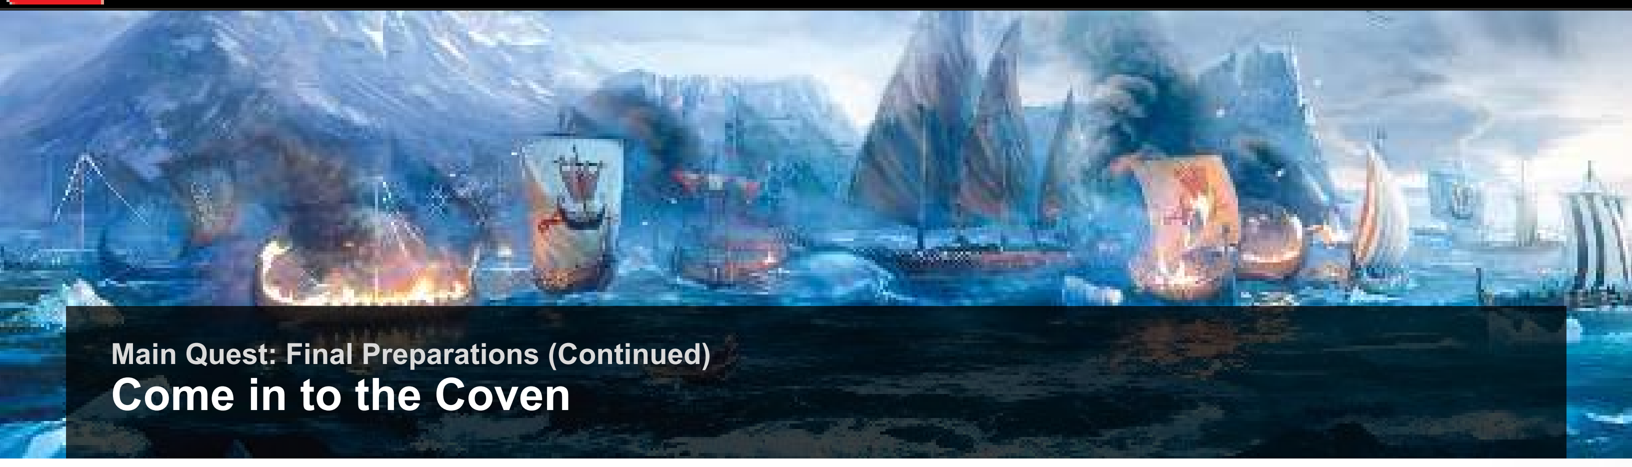
While Aegar keeps watch, climb the small shed,onto the roof overhang, onto the small platform, and into the stables. Peer down at the horses, then climb down to the ground, near a sleeping Novigrad guard. The door to the north is locked. However, the keys are in the horse stall to the southeast. Grab them.

ITEM: Quest Item: Stable Key

OBJECTIVE:

- Calm the horses with the Axii Sign (3).

If you make too much noise while inside the stables (jumping, throwing bombs, dropping to the ground, or other similar sounds), the horses panic and the guard wakes up. Knock him down with some punches. Then, quickly use the Axii Sign to calm the three nearest horses. Once done (or immediately, if the horses are calm to begin with), Ciri and Aegar quickly enter the stables, the main doors burst open, and you ride the horses out and away from the hapless guards, who give up pursuing. Ciri seems gleeful and excitedly recalls the exploits back at the camp. You can agree or disagree with this horse rustling. With that, Ciri tells you she'll meet you back at Dandelion's inn. This quest concludes.



Main Quest: Final Preparations (Continued)

Come in to the Coven

OBJECTIVE:

- Meet Yennefer and the Lodge of Sorceresses at Dandelion's Inn.

FATE OF THE SWALLOW

Choice #3 Ahead:

You are about to make another of the five most important choices in your adventure, and one that has direct consequences on the Ending, and the fate of Ciri! If you wish to know more, reference the Endings section of this strategy guide.

Return to the Rosemary and Thyme. Ciri is waiting atop the first flight of stairs, and seems agitated. She says the sorceresses wish to speak to her. Answer how you wish, then choose whether to go with Ciri or let her speak to them alone:

Choose to remain on the landing, and you spend time spying through a keyhole, without backing Ciri up with conversation. This confirms your belief that Ciri can handle herself, and improves her confidence.

Ciri's Fate (3 of 5): Positive Choice (+1)

Accompany Ciri, and you can help back up her thoughts during the subsequent conversation. This unfortunately undermines her confidence, as you speak for her throughout the meeting with Philippa and Margarita.

Ciri's Fate (3 of 5): Negative Choice (-1)

The sorceresses extend an invitation for Ciri to join the Lodge, as a partner. There are downsides (this is a criminial organization, and there's a hierarchy), but Philippa tells Ciri she could achieve greatness, and that her powers could be honed. Ciri tells them Avallac'h is responsible for her magical advancements. But can the elf be trusted? Confused and a little dismayed, Ciri leaves the meeting. Then Yennefer arrives. She tells you to check on Avallac'h. Main Quest: Final Preparations continues to track your progress, and Main Quest: Through Time and Space begins.

Secondary Quest: It Takes Three to Tango

I'm a Little Tied up at the Moment

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: IT TAKES THREE TO TANGO

LOCATIONS : Rosemary and Thyme (Novigrad), The Kingfisher Inn

CHARACTERS : Triss Merigold, Yennefer of Vengerberg, Dandelion

ENEMIES : None

RECOMMENDED ITEMS : 150 Crowns

OBJECTIVES:

- Bring some good wine to your rendezvous with Triss and Yennefer.
- Meet Triss and Yennefer in the Kingfisher.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

During Secondary Quest: Now or Never, did you decide to be romantically involved with Triss? Also, during Secondary Quest: Last Wish, did you decide to be romantically involved with Yennefer? If you answered “yes” to both these questions, Secondary Quest: Three to Tango is available.

After speaking with Ciri, you are approached by both Triss and Yennefer. You’re immediately suspicious, but they seem to be playing coy. They tell you there’s little point in them both fighting over you, they want to share you. While they prepare one of the rooms upstairs at the Kingfisher Inn for a rendezvous to remember, you’re to provide the wine. Head across Novigrad to the Kingfisher Inn, and speak to the barkeep. Ask to trade, and purchase a bottle of his finest—this is around 60 crowns. If the objective doesn’t update, buy a different vintage until it does. Then head up the first flight of stairs, along the landing, and open the door on the right (north).

NOVIGRAD
KINGFISHER

ITEM: Quest Item: Wine (Erveluce or Est Est)

You give the door a quick knock. Then push it open. You’re greeted by Yennefer, in some naughty night attire. She purrs and coos while Triss (also dressed in next to nothing) extracts the wine from your hands. You’re pushed onto the bed. Triss and Yennefer lightly stroking you. Hold on, what’s this? Manacles? Well, if it pleases the ladies…

Triss and Yennefer open the wine. You inquiry about getting yours. They reply that you’re about to get what you deserve. And with a wry smile and a cute smirk, Triss and Yennefer leave you chained to the bed, leaving you to ponder on how you should treat powerful sorceresses in the future.

Dandelion discovers you next morning. Feel free to try some idle threats during your chat, during which he says you’ve a lot to learn about the fairer sex. After putting on some pants, you decide to pay a visit to Avallac’h.

CHARACTERS : Avallac'h, Viceroy Ge'els, Cirilla, Corrine Tilly

ENEMIES : Sandcrabs, Hounds of the Wild Hunt

OBJECTIVES:

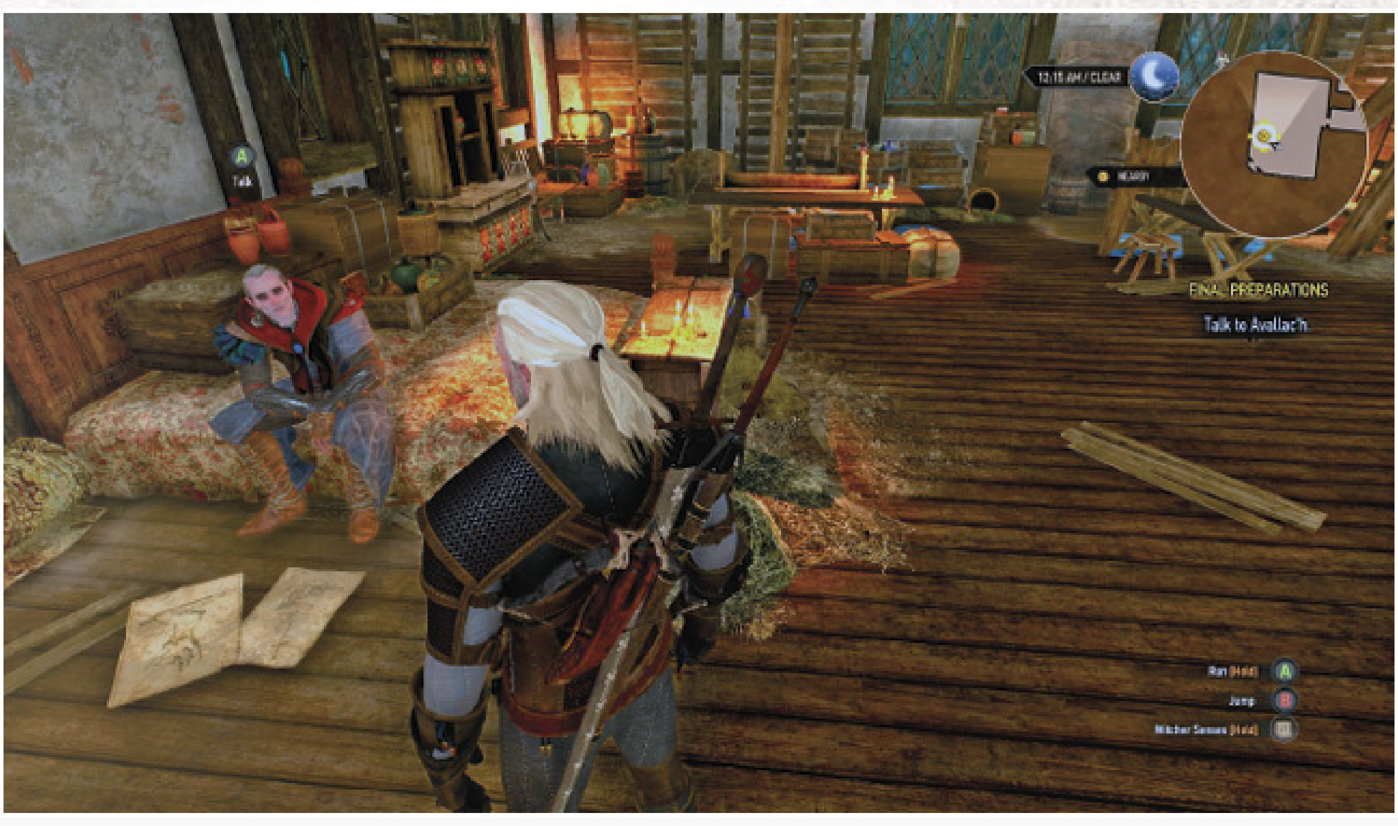
- Nearest Signpost: Hiearach Square.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts automatically once Main Quest: Final Preparations begins, once you arrive in Novigrad with Ciri.

Preparations are almost complete. But Avallac'h the elf must be spoken with. Find him up the stairs in the Ruby Suite of the Rosemary and Thyme. He's staring at some rather racy parchment sketches. A tense conversation occurs, until Avallac'h commends you on your adept elimination of Imlerith. Answer how you wish. Avallac'h speaks of a weakened Eredin, but two others remain. Caranthir the loyalist and Ge'els—a follower of Avallac'h's former king whom Eredin poisoned. Ask further questions, then choose whether you want to kill Ge'els or make a deal with him. Avallac'h has tracked Ge'els to the land of the Aen Elle. Getting there may be a problem, since you don't share Ciri's world-hopping abilities. But Avallac'h has hatched a plan, a passage to the Alder's World will open soon, located close by. You have a chance to prepare and meditate, or automatically head there now.

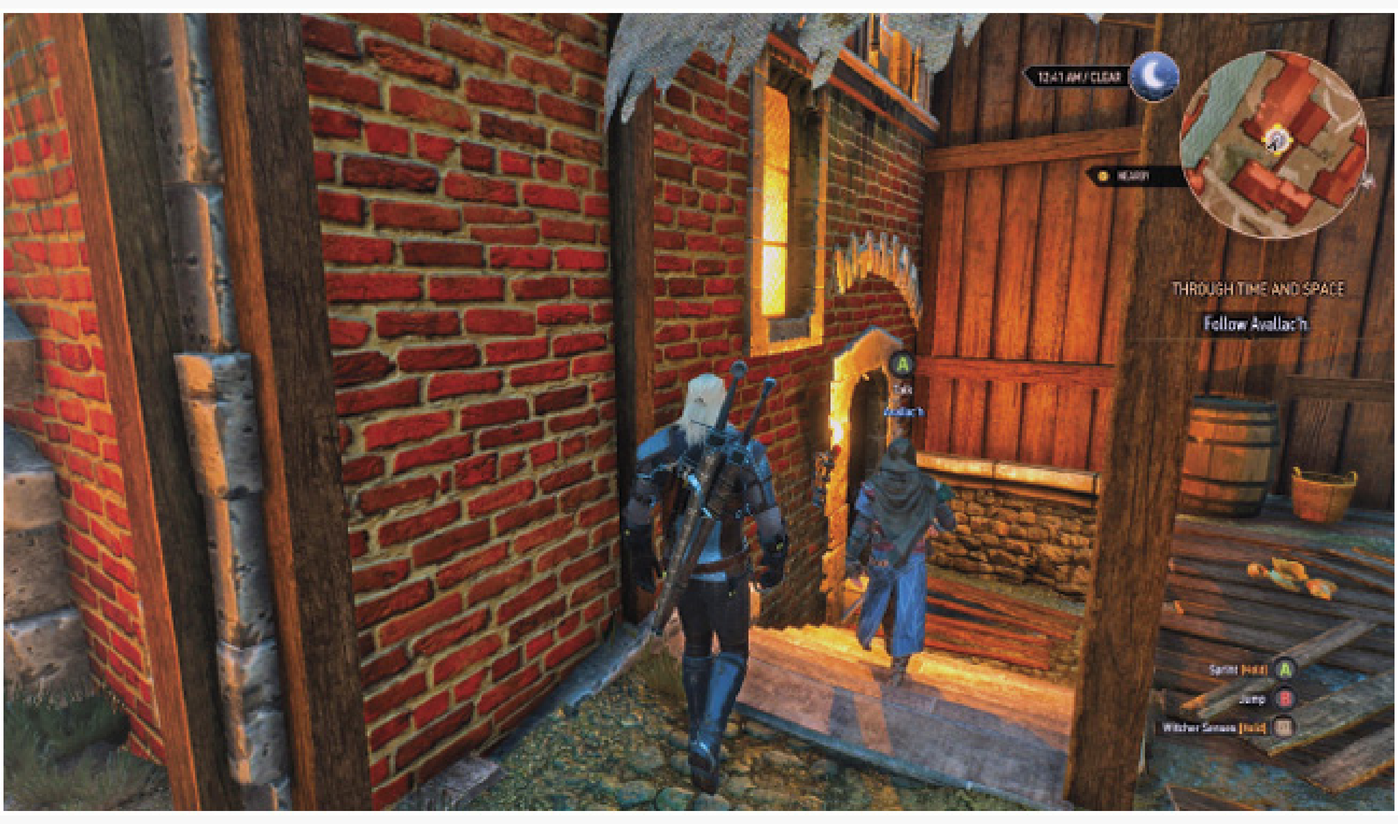
Avallac'h



OBJECTIVE:

- Follow Avallac'h.

Follow Avallac'h to a house you recognize. It is Rudolf de Jonkheer's dwelling, where Sarah the Godling held Corrine Tilly in a tizzy. Go into the property, locate the trapdoor ladder down to the cellar (and oven where you found Sarah), and use Aard to remove the crack in the wall leading into a sewer tunnel and the portal. There's no turning back. Enter when you're prepared.



▶ If Sarah the Godling was allowed to remain in this abode, during Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming, you may speak to both her and Corrine Tilly, who are living here together. However, this isn't required to complete this quest.

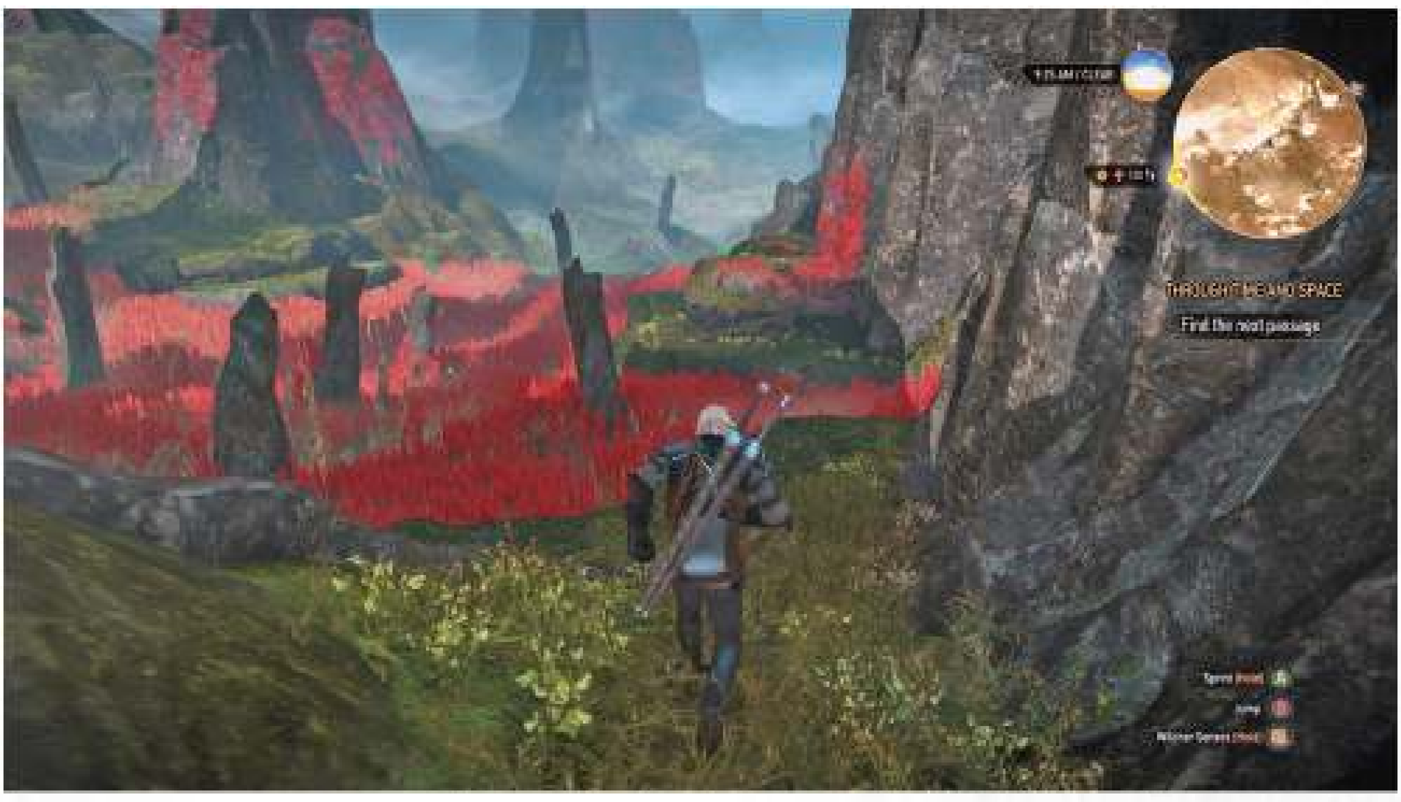
Main Quest: Through Time And Space

A Foul and Pestilent Congregationof Vapours

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the next passage.
- Nearest Signpost: Mysterious Dark Valley.

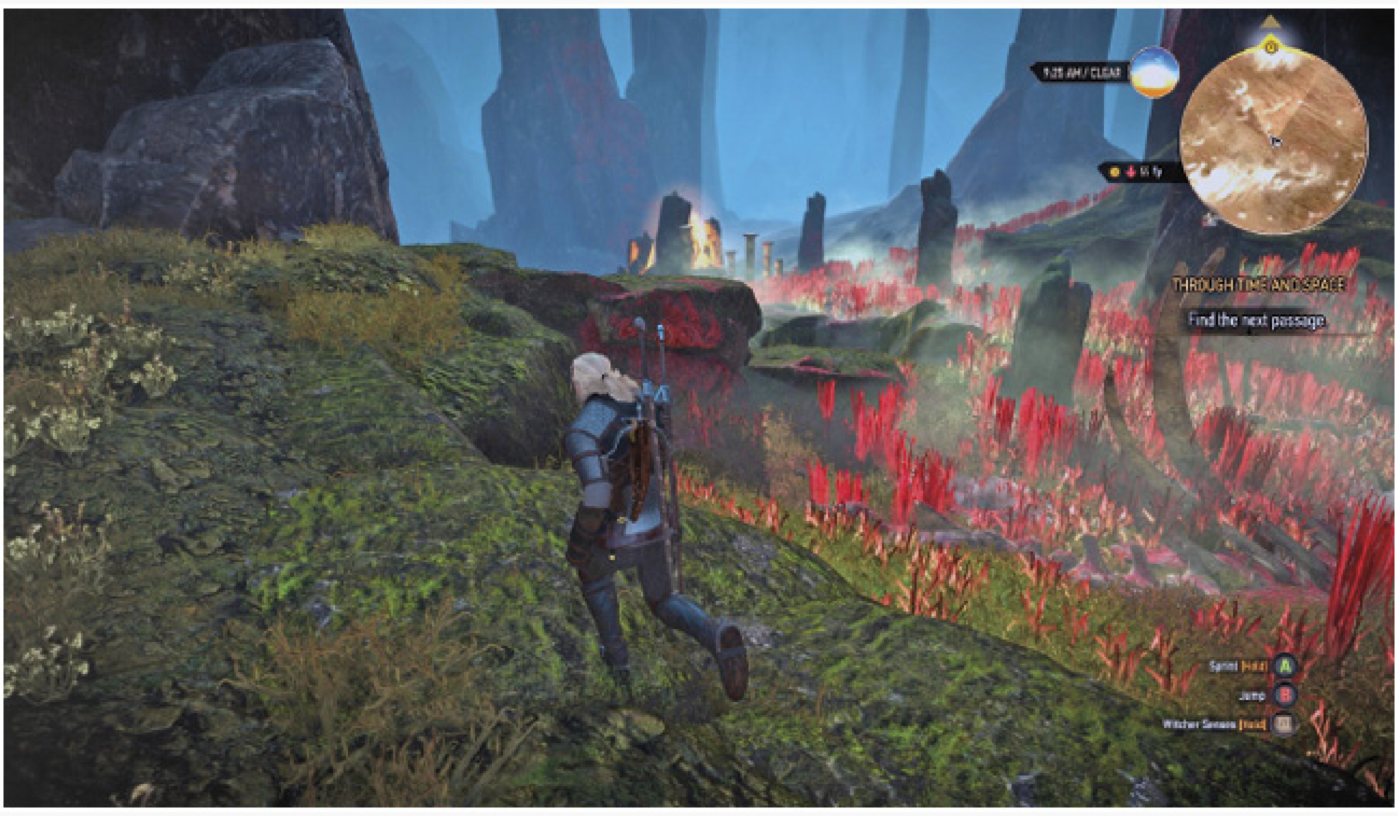
You appear in a strange world of mists, red lichen-covered rock, and large monolithic rock formations. Your elven companion didn't arrive with you, so you're on your own. Head along the ledge to the left, and you can see the next portal passage, almost due south of your current location. As a straight line there involves deadly plummets, a more convoluted route is necessary. Continue around to the left (east), climbing onto a mossy plateau. Drop down a "step", into an area of poisonous cloud. Run southeast, climbing up onto an upper ledge to catch your breath.



PUTTING YOUR BEST FOOT FORWARD

Dropping down or falling away from the described path is a deadly mistake. Don't make that mistake.

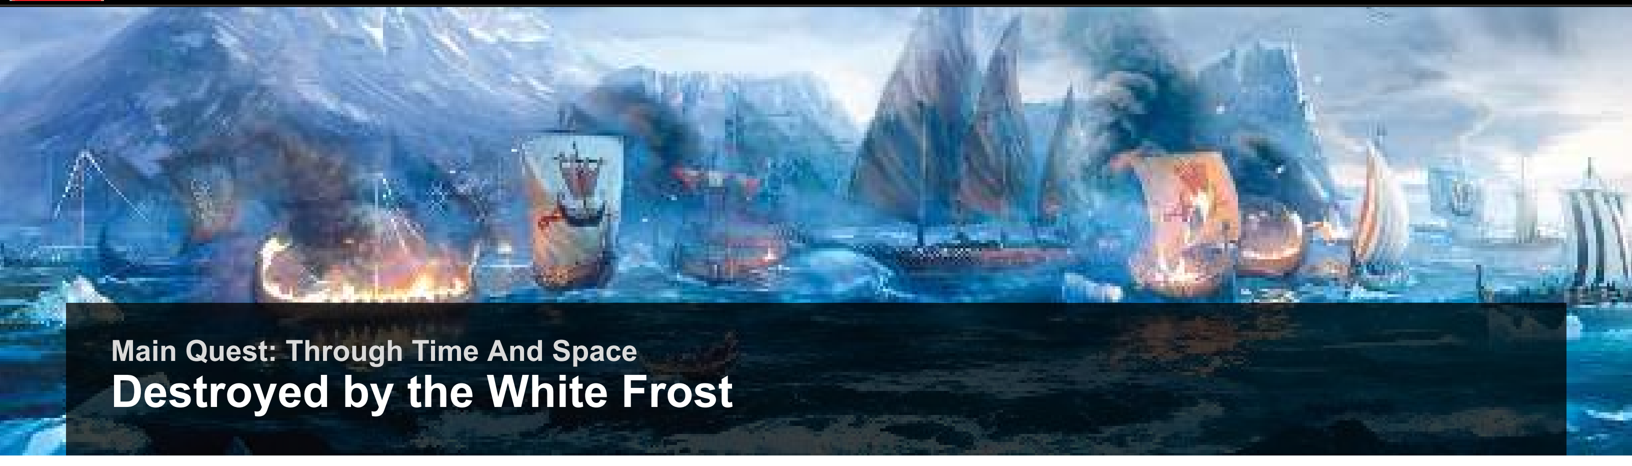
Run south (the portal is visible ahead) a few steps, then look for a slope down and to your right (west) leading to a mass of bright red reeds and jutting standing stones. Rush through the right edge of this area, climbing the other side to a mossy ledge overlooking this sea of crimson plantlife. Now turn southwest and sprint through the reeds, and climb the mossy ledge opposite. Catch your breath before sprinting upslope, through more red reeds and poison, and clamber up another three ledges as you turn to face the portal. Almost there! Simply rush for the portal, and climb directly into it, and out of this hellhole.



OBJECTIVE:

- Find the next passage.

You appear underwater. Since you're not a fish, it's important to swim directly to the portal opposite, before you run out of air. Go there immediately.



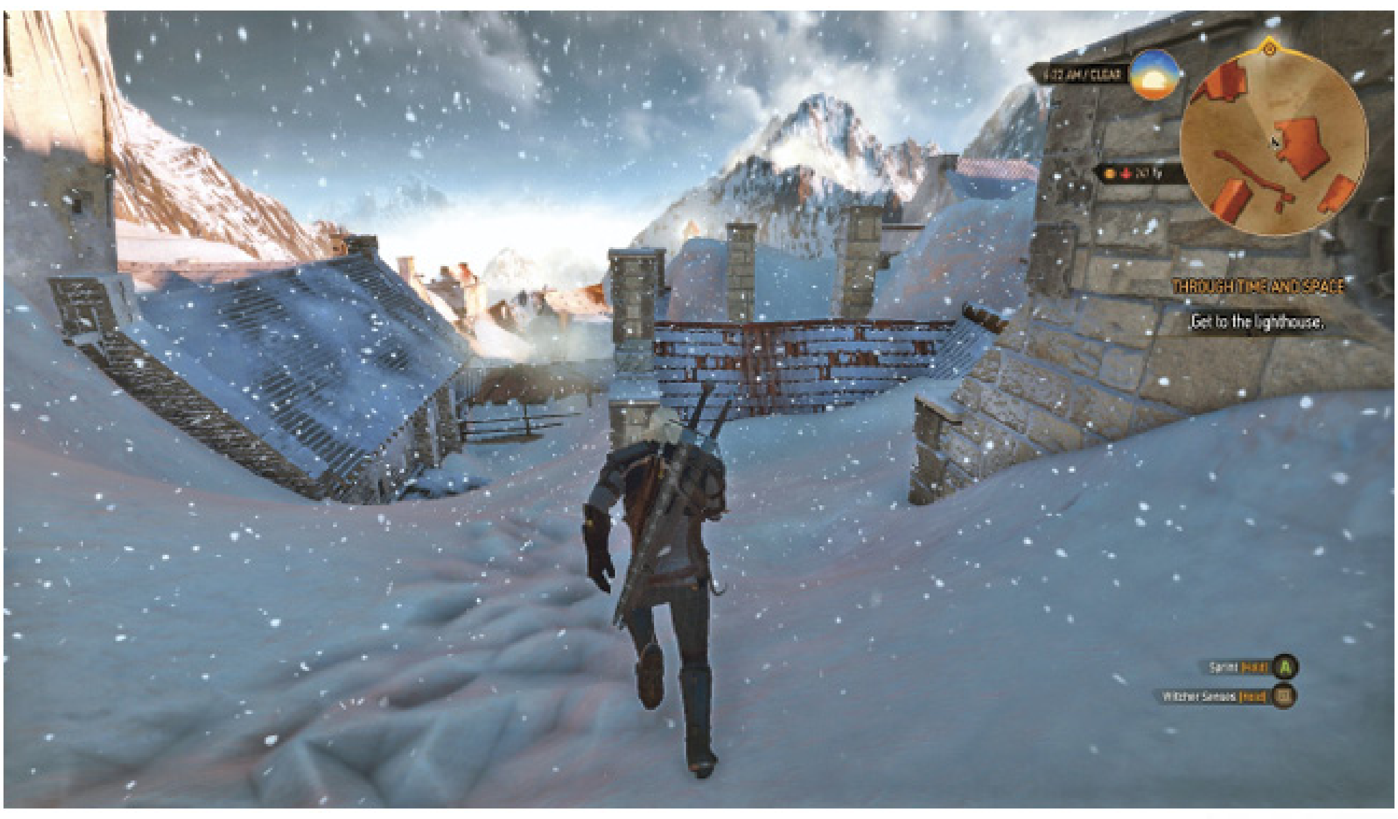
Main Quest: Through Time And Space

Destroyed by the White Frost

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the next passage.
- Nearest Signpost: Tedd Deireadh (Time of the End).

You appear inside an icy cavern. The wind is biting. Run directly out of the cavern, using Igni to melt the wall of ice blocking your path. However, once you're outside, the blizzard is tormenting and cold; damaging you if you remain in it. So you don't expire, sprint roughly northwestwards, to a rocky alcove with an "X" carved into the rock.



HOT STUFF: STAYING WARM IN THE BLIZZARD

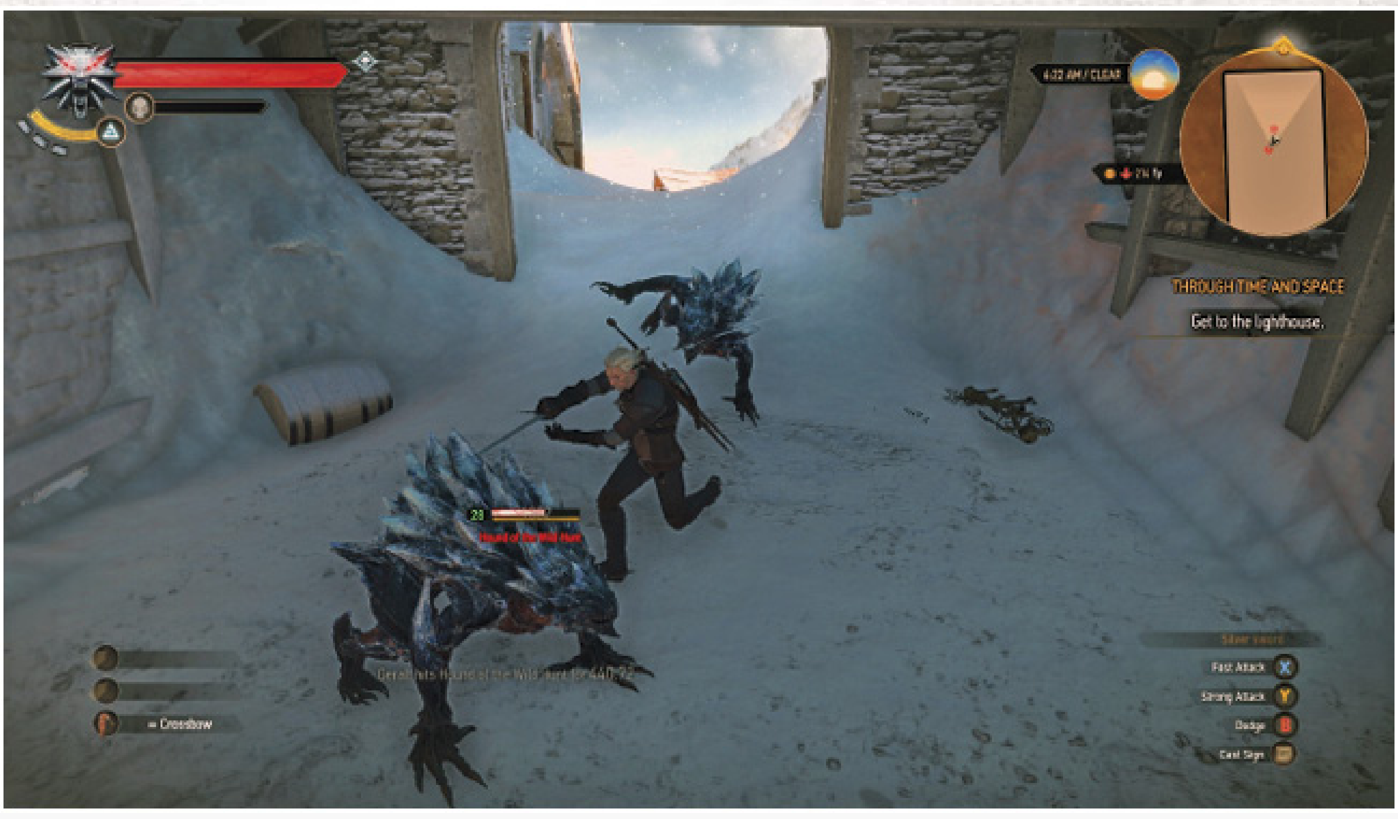
Can't find the "X"? Use your Witcher Senses. Freezing to death? Then light fireplaces, campfires, and braziers to heal yourself within the range of the fire. Try this when you're fighting the hounds of the Wild Hunt, especially near the lighthouse.

Sprint north to the next outcrop of rock, and shelter. Then around the corner to the left (north), to a ruined stone wall. Sprint east, across to some stone steps to another ruined wall section. Next, dash around the corner eastward, down a small slope to slide down, and a rocky bluff. Face north, and slide down into a half-buried village. Ahead, someone has lit the fire atop a lighthouse.

OBJECTIVE:

- Get to the lighthouse.

While muttering to yourself, sprint downward without delay, since none of the rooftops are wide enough to prevent you from taking damage for long. Find the open doorway to the left at the bottom of the slope, and enter the ruined barn building. Drop down to the collection of skeletons below, then remain inside the barn as you spot two hounds of the Wild Hunt. Deal death to them both (Igni is your friend here).



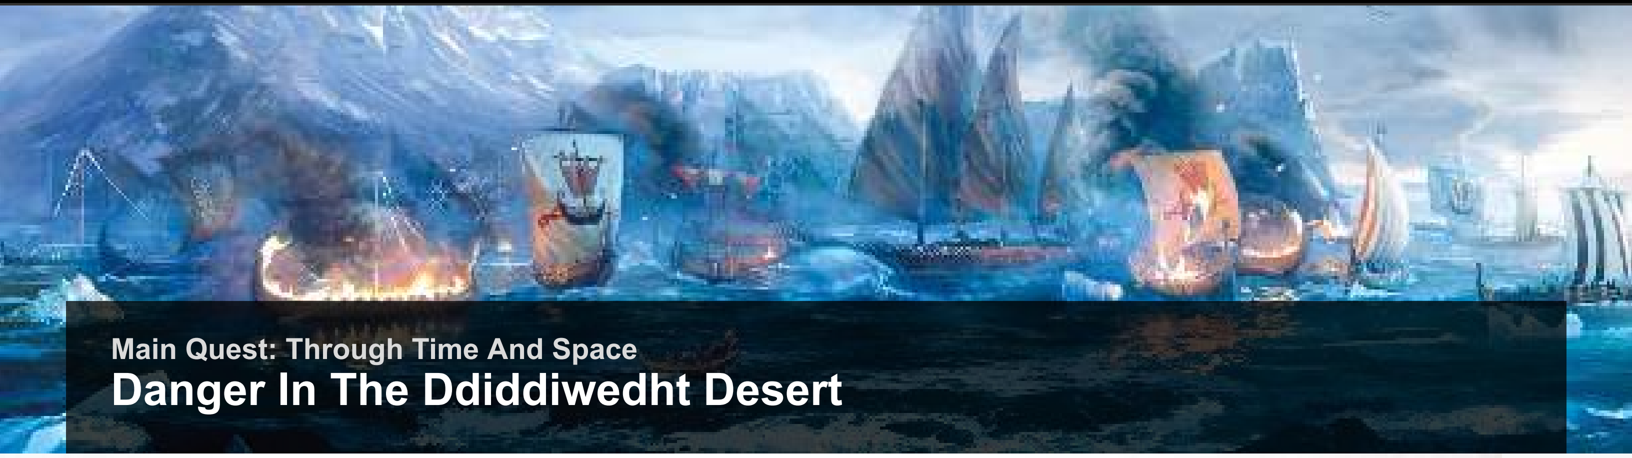
Once the fracas is over, head north and left (west) into the first open door to rest from the blizzard. Sprint out, northward, and into the open gable window of the building ahead and slightly left of you. Drop inside, and down some steps into a skeleton-strewn kitchen. Here, you find some notes from the long-dead Anna regarding the curse that befell these parts.

ITEM: Common Item: Anna's Notes

Sprint north again, across and up to the open doorway of the building ahead and left of you, through the porch opening. Then it's back for another sprint past a couple of dead trees, all the way to a half-buried stone wall and a set of steps to a guard tower. Head out the other side, after stooping to collect the diary by a skeleton. It makes for grim reading.

ITEM: Common Item: Ervyl's Diary

Step left through the gap in the wall, sliding down to the foot of the lighthouse, and ignite the three large urns there. You're attacked by three hounds of the Wild Hunt, so stay close to the fire and battle the foes until only the howling wind remains. Then it's time to head roughly northeast, across to the lower entrance beneath the lighthouse.



Main Quest: Through Time And Space

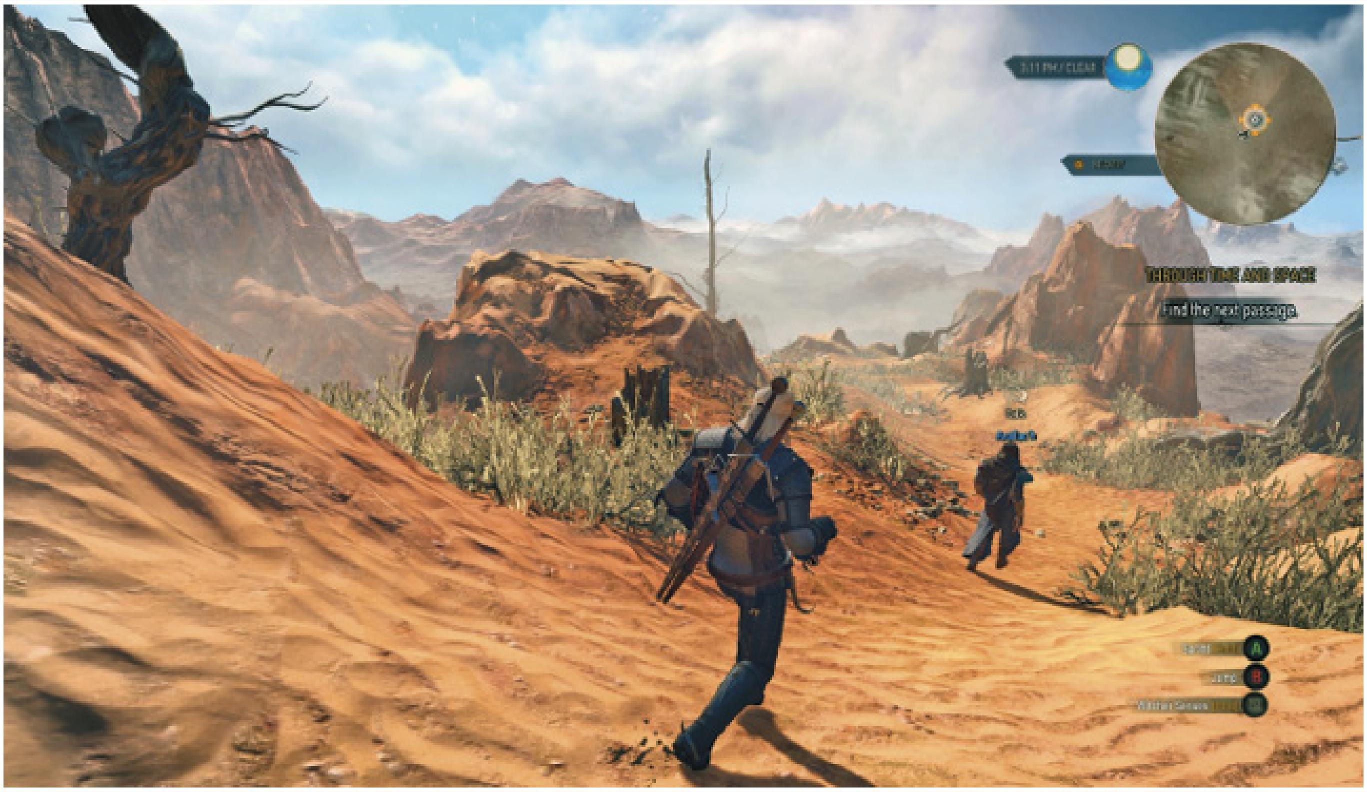
Danger In The Ddiddiwedht Desert

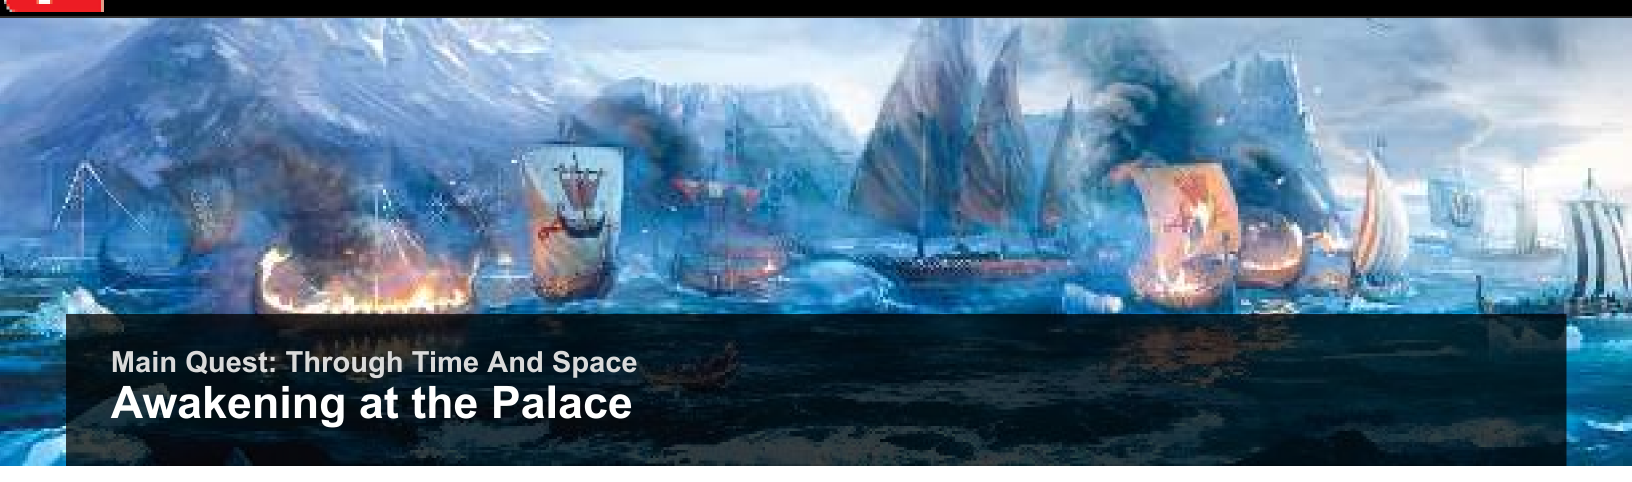
OBJECTIVES:

- Find the next passage.
- Wait until the passage opens.
- Kill the monsters.
- Nearest Signpost: Ddiddiwedht Desert

You step out into an otherworldly land of dry scrub and sandstone protrusions, the Ddiddiwedht Desert. Avallac'h informs you (as you walk behind him) that this place was pillaged by the another species, and was once a giant sea. You reach the next portal, though it looks more like a ruin. While Avallac'h waits for the portal to form, the ground begins to shake.

Sandcrabs! These foes act like endrega workers, except they appear in groups of up to four, and there's no end to them! This is a fight you cannot win, so utilize more defensive Signs and measures as you wait for the portal to open. As soon as you hear Avallac'h counting down to the portal appearing, head into it.





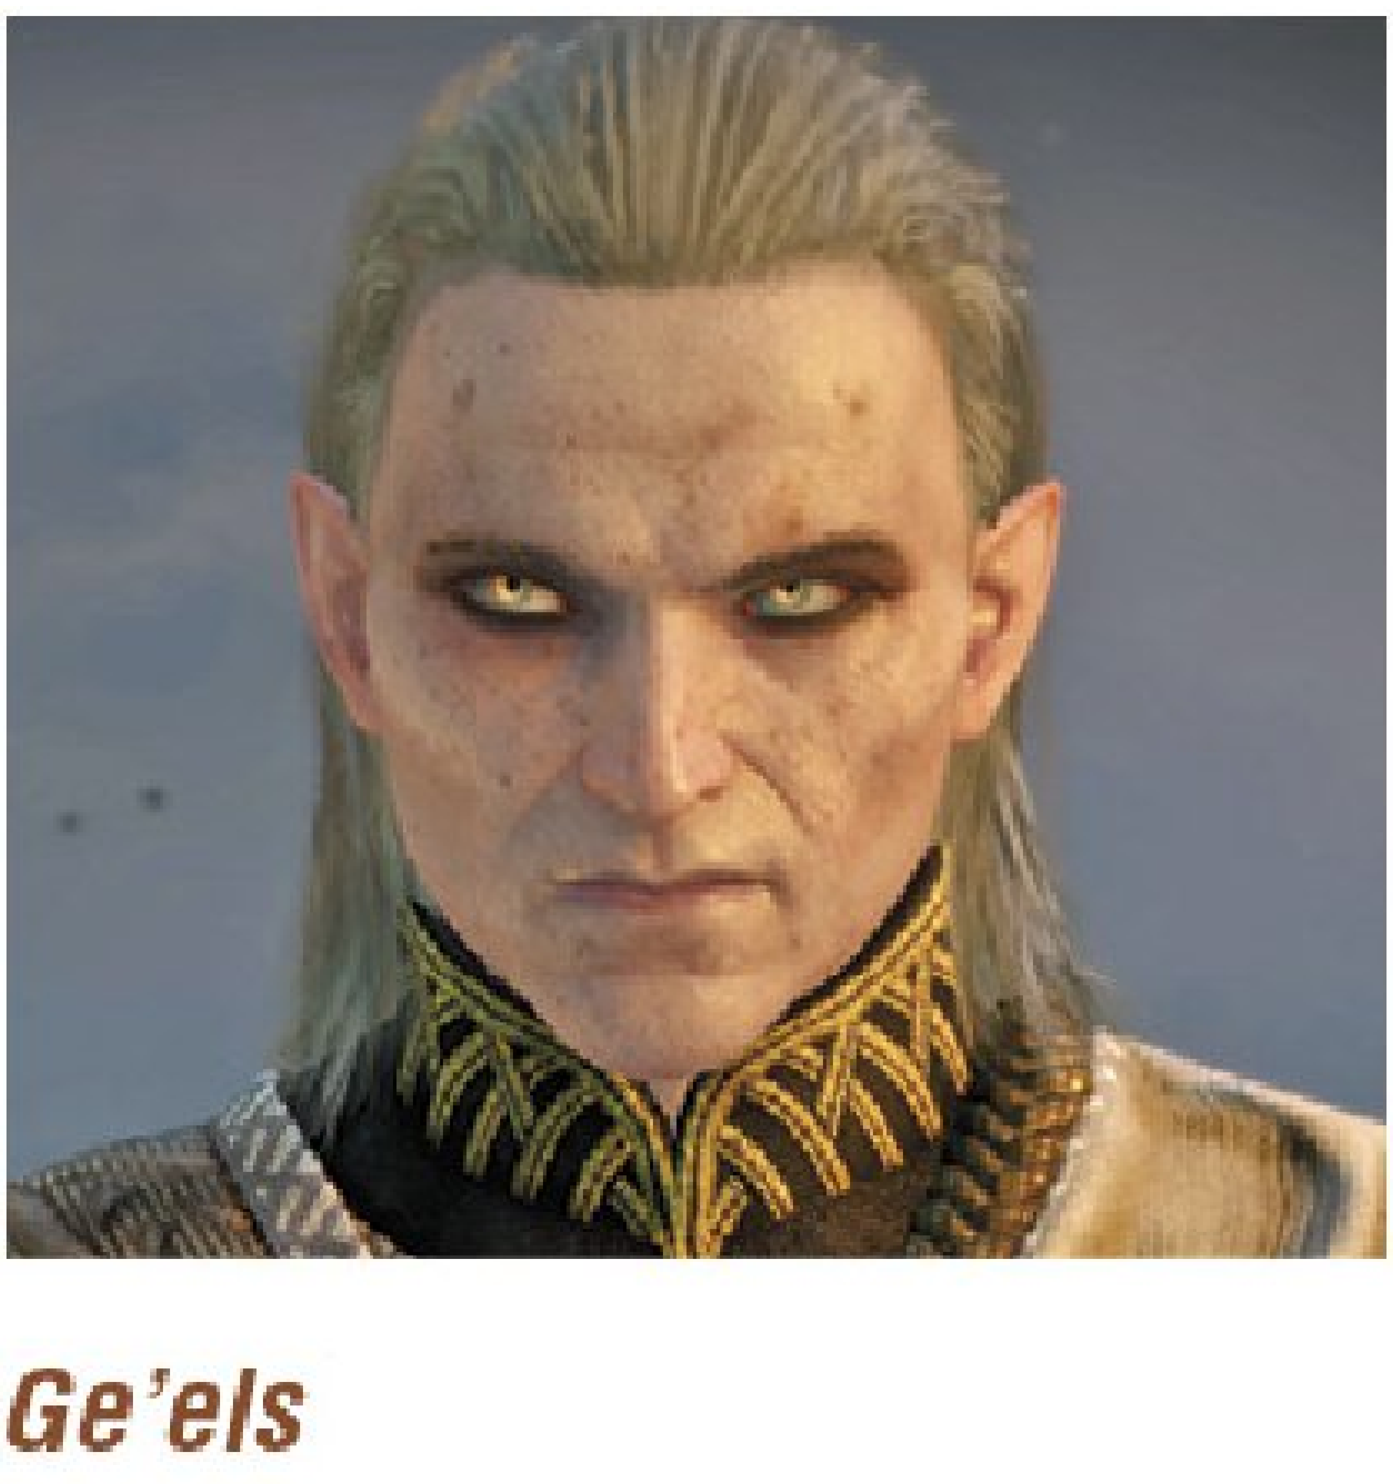
Main Quest: Through Time And Space

Awakening at the Palace

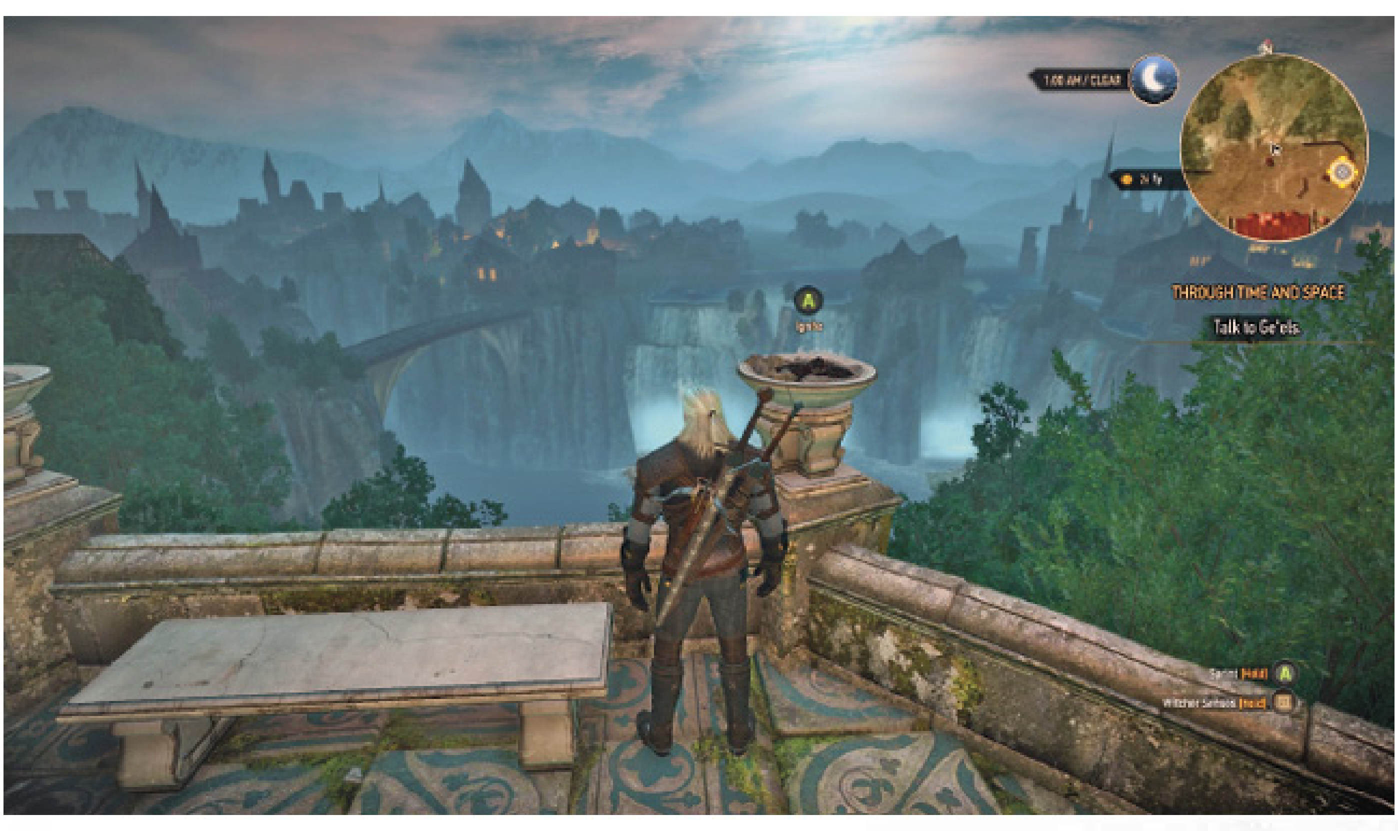
OBJECTIVES:

- Travel to the next world.
- Talk to Ge’els.
- Nearest Signpost: Tir Ná Lia

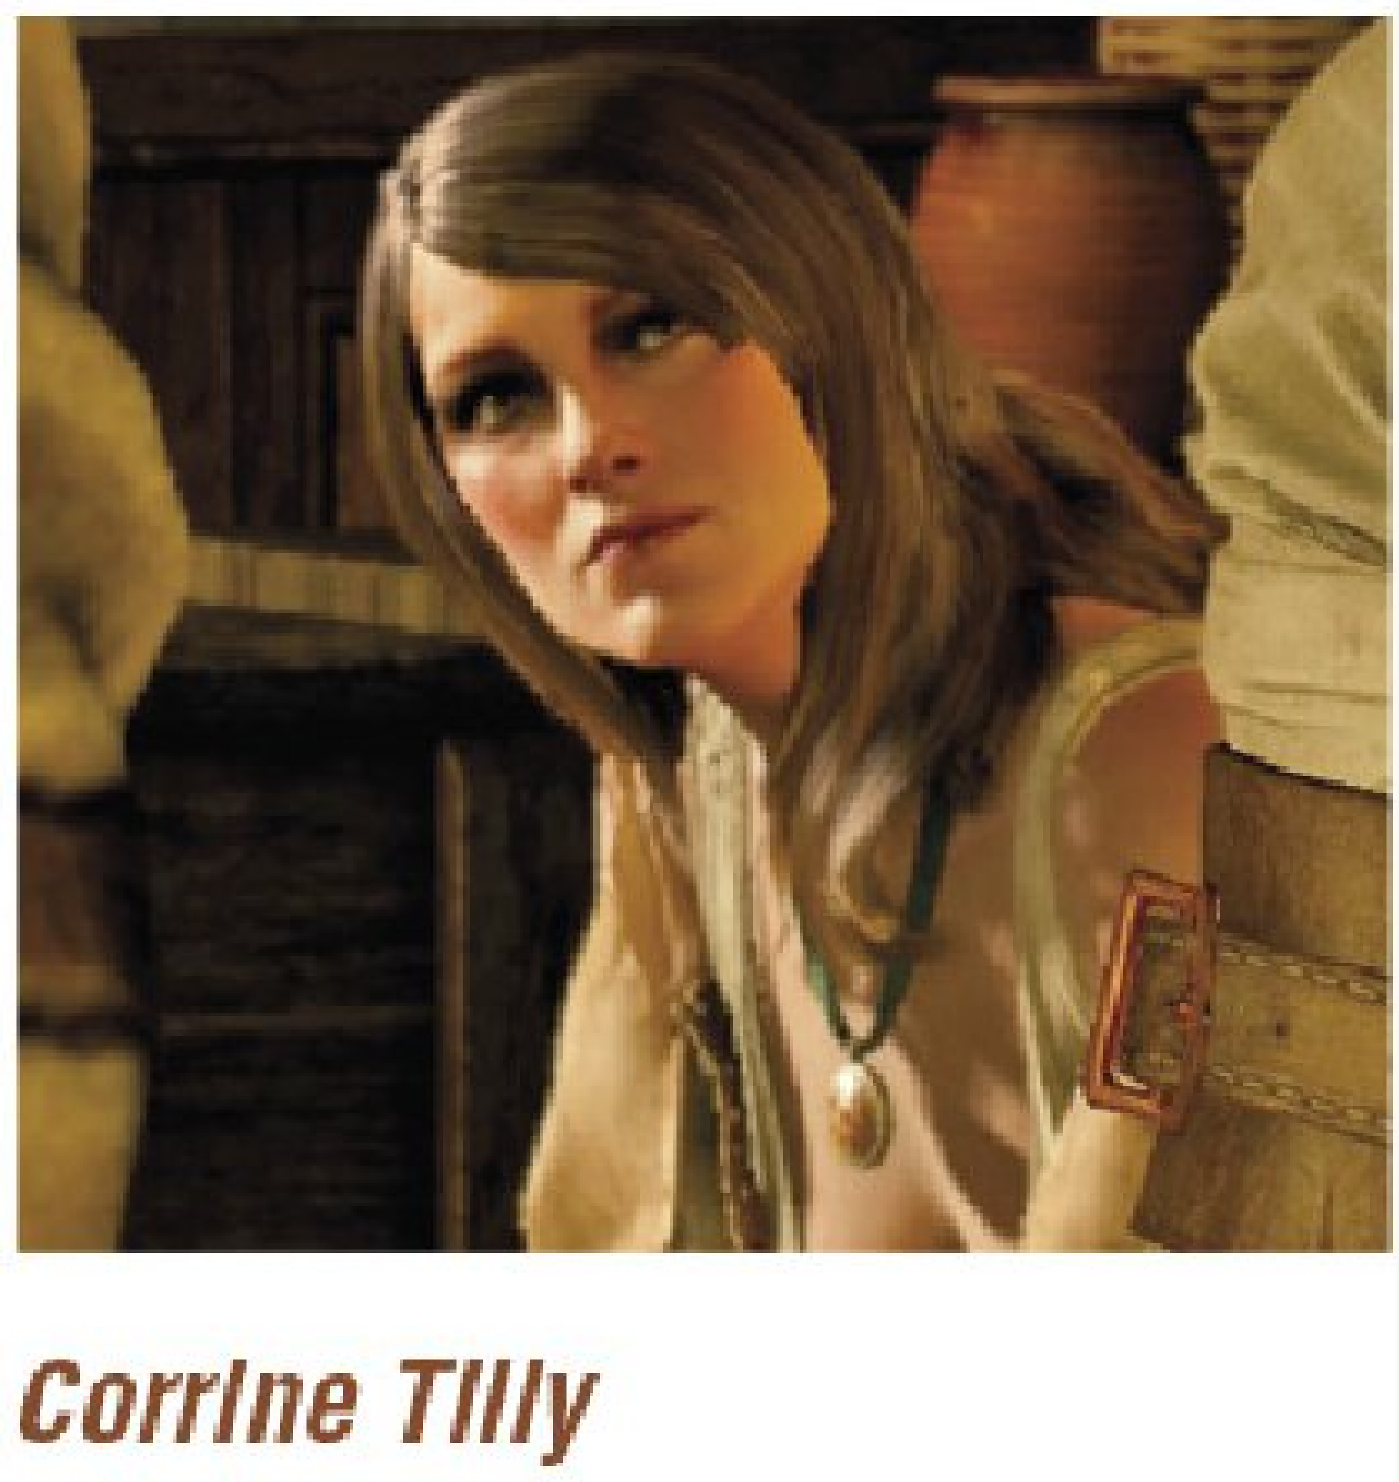
Avallac’h is waiting for you here, in a place familiar to you. Where you fought Eredin’s projection. There is talk of your time with the Red Riders, and revelations abound. If you have the time, there are plenty of questions to ask Avallac’h (the world you’re in, Ge’el’s importance, where Avallac’h’s journey took him, and the light on the peak). Then tell him it is time to go. Follow Avallac’h into the portal that appears.



A grand arched hallway awaits. This is Tir Ná Lia, the Palace of Awakening, where Viceroy Ge’els awaits. Stride out onto the beautiful (and ancient) formal gardens overlooking the spectacular city. Move to greet Ge’els, and interrupt his painting. Ge’els asks if you’d like a drink. Agree or refuse as you wish. Motioning to some members of the Wild Hunt walking the gardens, he asks if Avallac’h is honest. Answer how you wish, subsequently requesting Ge’els leave this place. You’re heading to the world of the Aen Seidhe (your world). He leaves his cubist nude painting behind.



END: THE KING IS DEAD. LONG LIVE THE KING.



Ciri waits at the Rosemary and Thyme, with Corrine Tilly. Ge’els attempts to sow the seeds of animosity between her and Avallac’h, but it fails. Then he seeks proof, and Corrine the oneiromancer is waiting to perform her skill in Ge’els’ dream. He asks what you wish of him after he awakens. Answer how you wish.

The vision is seen. The elven king dies at the hands of Eredin. When you wake, Ge’els stands pondering. He tells you to sail to Skellige, and find the Sunstone. With it, you shall summon the Naglfar, and Eredin too. Then Avallac’h leaves to return Ge’els to his own world. You worry he’s been dismissed too quickly, and when Avallac’h returns you can mention this (answer how you wish). Now it seems Avallac’h has hatched a plan—to gather the Sunstone with the help of the sorceresses, draw Eredin’s ship along the coast of Undvik, and lay a trap. The quest now concludes.

Secondary Quest: Reason of State

To Kill a King

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SECONDARY QUEST: REASON OF STATE

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Final Preparations

LOCATIONS : Novigrad, Portside Warehouse, St. Gregory's Bridge, Bridge to Temple isle, Madame Irina's Theater

CHARACTERS : Sigismund Dijkstra, Vernon Roche, Thaler, Philippa Eilhart, King Redovid V, Ves

ENEMIES : Hubrecht, Temerian Guerilla, Witch Hunter, Witch Hunter Officer, Redanian Soldier

OBJECTIVE:

- Meet Dijkstra, Roche, and Thaler in the portside warehouse.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest is available only after Main Quest: Final Preparations has occurred.

Now that you've fulfilled your obligations, and the various characters have joined in a pact to rid the lands of the hated King Radovid, join your compadres for a meeting to plan the attack. Dijkstra's warehouse is the scene for this clandestine operation. Travel to the Harborside District, and work your way to the southwest area of warehouses. Use the rear entrance (as shown), knocking on the door before you're shown upstairs to the meeting in progress.

Sigismund Dijkstra

Secondary Quest: Reason of State

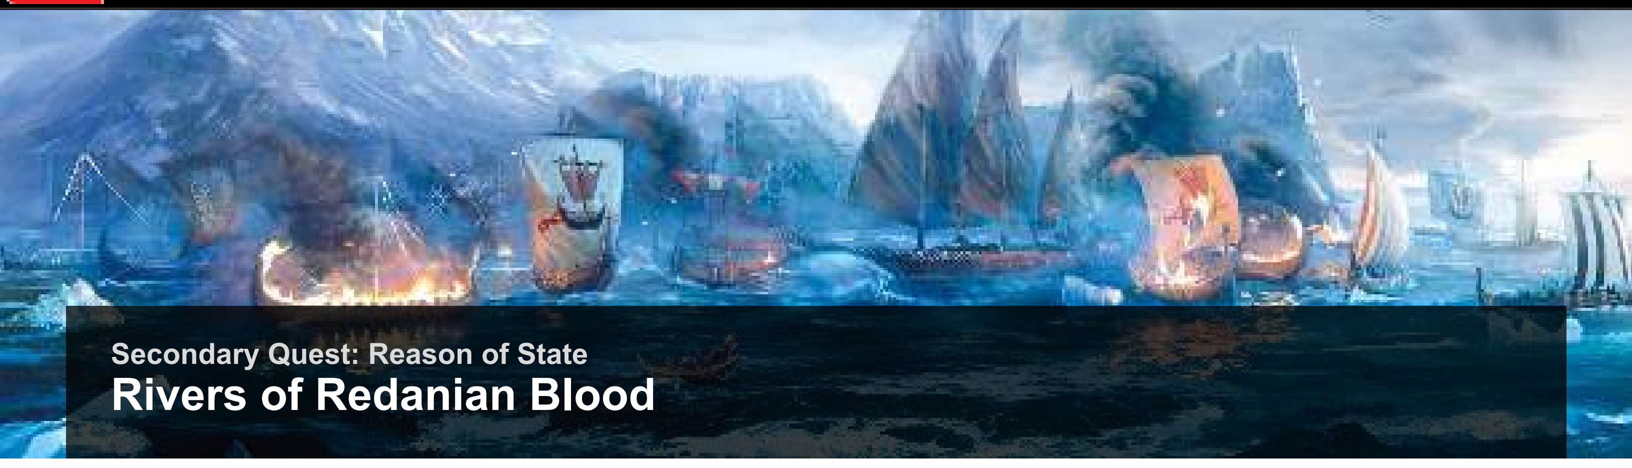
The Audacity of Monarchs

OBJECTIVE:

- Lure Radovid from his ship.

Exit the warehouse, and you run into the slightly insufferable Philippa, who has been eavesdropping on the plan. Answer her how you wish, and she hands you a ring. It belonged to Radovid's father.

Philippa Eilhart

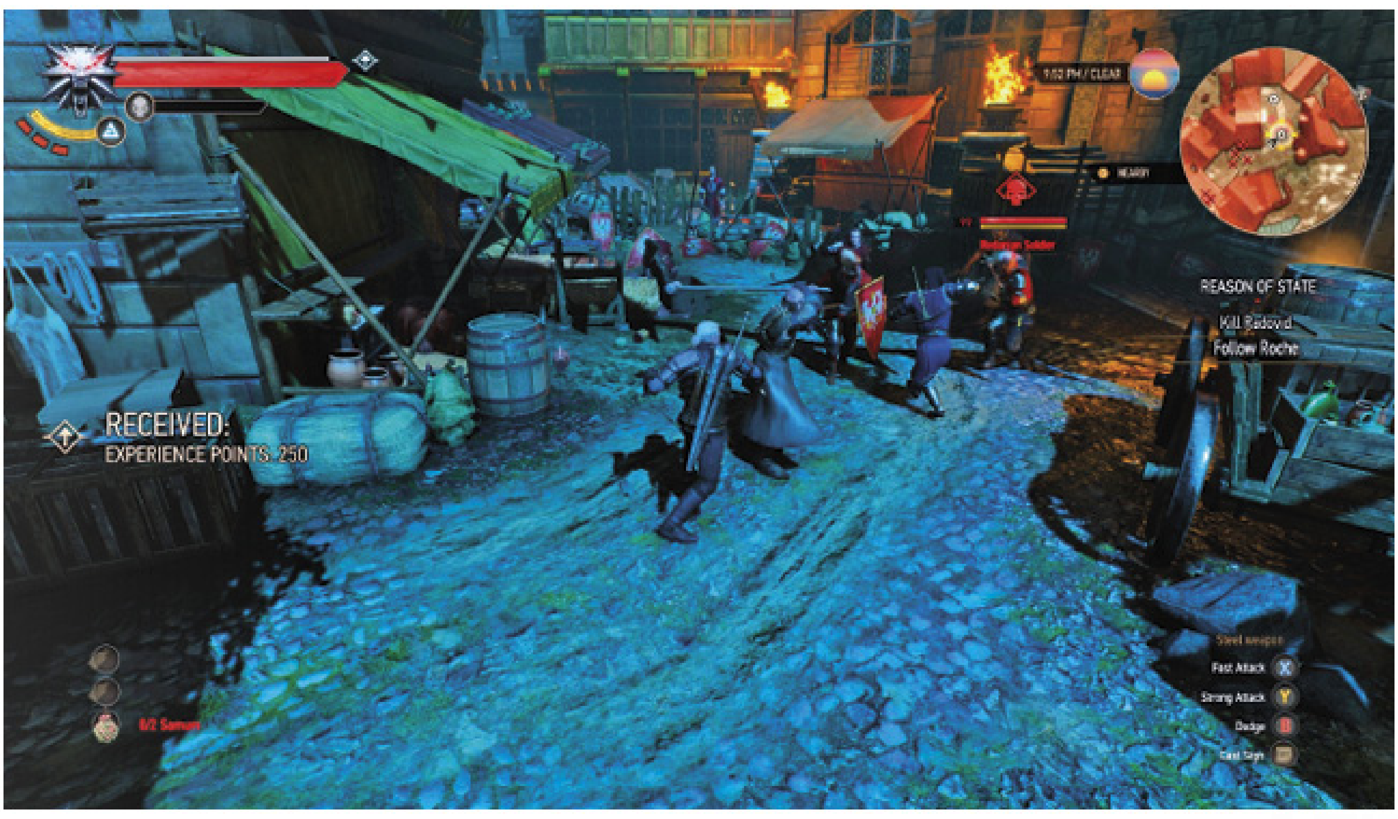


Secondary Quest: Reason of State

Rivers of Redanian Blood

OBJECTIVE:

- Kill Radovid.



Prepare to spill Redanian blood as you methodically battle your way northwards across the enclosed bridge, towards Temple Isle where Radovid disappeared to. Along the way, prepare for combat with the following foes:

- Around five Temerian guerillas who fight alongside you.
- A group of around five Redanian soldiers farther up the street, engaging the Temerian guerillas.
- Five witch hunters midway across the enclosed bridge. Four Redanian soldiers holding a shield wall formation are also here. A bomb or Aard helps remove this protection.
- Up to five additional Redanian soldiers as you reach the northern end of the bridge, and two witch hunter officers (one of which is the mighty Hubrecht, Radovid's henchman).

SLOW AND STEADY KILLS THE KING

Make your way slowly through the various combat opportunities—rushing northward simply gets you surrounded and usually killed. Instead, ensure all foes behind and to the sides of you are dead before you move north, and make slow and steady (rather than fast and foolhardy) progress.

After a hard-fought slog to the other end of the covered bridge, Radovid desparately claws at a door for an escape option. Instead, he receives a cloud of burning magic to the face, and a dagger up through the ribs, courtesy of Philippa (who was eavesdropping on your plans earlier, in the form of an owl). Roche isn't too happy about who ended Radovid's reign, but Ves (who is also fighting with you) wisely points out it is definitely time to leave (if she's alive to take part in this quest).

END: TO THE NORTH! TEMERIA!

OBJECTIVE:

- (Optional) Defeat Dijkstra and his men.

You reach the abandoned Theater of Madame Irina, where Thaler orders a toast to Temeria (which you can partake in or avoid). Thaler then reveals that a truce will occur the next day at noon; Emhyr will keep Aedirn and Lyria, in exchange for Radovid's head and a stop to guerilla activities, he will withdraw from Temeria.

Answer Thaler how you wish, until Dijkstra interrupts the conversation. It seems the power-hungry cripple wants more than the dregs of Novigrad to rule over, to the angry befuddlement of Thaler and Roche. These machinations aren't your concern, but they can be. You can:

▶ Tell Dijkstra you won't let him kill Roche, Thaler, and Ves. You are forced to fight six of Dijkstra's henchmen, before putting the sword into the double-crossing cur himself. Afterwards, Roche tells you to head to Vizima where you'll be received with honors. Nilfgaard eventually wins the war, Ciri may become Empress, AND:

▶ Ending: Something Ends, Something Begins (II) affected.

▶ Ending: Something Ends, Something Begins (III) affected.

▶ Side with Dijsktra, and you listen to the sounds of fighting within the Butcher's Yard theater, which lives up to its name. Roche, Thaler, and Ves are put to death. Dijkstra thanks you for your help, as he begins his attempts to rule as a bandit king, spreading his propaganda throughout Novigrad!

▶ Ending: Something Ends, Something Begins (III) affected.

▶ Fail to complete this quest, and Radovid eventually wins the war, fending off the forces of the emperor.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This series of quests begin once Main Quest: Through Time and Space has been completed. Expect some differences depending on your previous actions.

The new ruler of Skellige, and interactions at Kaer Trolde are different, depending on your previous actions:

- During Secondary Quest: King's Gambit, if you undertook the mission with Cerys, she becomes the ruler.
- During Secondary Quest: King's Gambit, if you undertook the mission with Hjalmar, he becomes the ruler.
- If you ignored Secondary Quest: King's Gambit, Svanrige Bran becomes the ruler.

The first part of Main Quest: Sunstone, plays out differently depending on whether an An Craite or a Bran sits on the throne.

There are no more flirtatious conversations between you, Yennefer, or Triss. However, if you attempted the threesome during Secondary Quest: It Takes Three to Tango (by romancing both women throughout your adventure to that point), you can speak to either Yennefer, or Triss, or both, about this embarrassing and failed tryst.

OBJECTIVES:

- Find the Sunstone.
- Pick Fringilla up on the emperor's ship.

It is a few days after the events of Main Quest: Through Time and Space, and you are arriving in Skellige with Ciri, Yennefer, Triss, Avallac'h, and a small coven of sorceresses. Yennefer releases a raven and uncovers the whereabouts of His Imperial Majesty—a battle fleet is moored off the coast! From various conversations, you uncover the following:

- Ciri wants to find the Sunstone immediately. This powerful artifact was created so the Mountain Elves could summon the vessels of the Aen Elle. However, the Sunstone could be anywhere on any of the Skellige islands. You deem it necessary to speak to Ermion, as he's likely to have clues to its whereabouts. This begins Main Quest: The Sunstone.
- Yennefer is keen on extricating a sorceress named Fringilla Vigo from the Emphyr's ship. She cannot teleport you aboard, and Triss' plan of a full frontal assault is untenable. But if you were to board the ship under cover of darkness, and hand him the letter Yennefer gives you, the sorceress could be bartered for. This begins Main Quest: Veni Vidi Vigo.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

Main Quest: Battle Preparations also continues. It is simply a tracking quest, updating both Main Quests: The Sunstone, and Veni Vidi Vigo. It finishes when both of these conclude. You may now begin either quest, in either order.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

Main Quest: Battle Preparations has additional objectives: These are flagged and described as you complete the related Quests later in this section.

Main Quest: The Sunstone

The Emperor's Treaty: Skellige Answers

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: THE SUNSTONE

LOCATIONS : Kaer Trolde Harbor, Holmstein Port, Kaer Muire, Bridge to Kaer Trolde, Arinbjorn, Eldberg Island
CHARACTERS : Donar an Hindar, Cerys an Craite, Hjalmar an Craite, Svanrige Bran, Udalryk, Crach an Craite; Ermion, Eyvind, Mattias Fish Lung, Philippa Eilhart
ENEMIES : Nilfgaardian Soldiers, Drowners

OBJECTIVES:

- (Optional) Ask Crach where Ermion is. Talk to Ermion.
- Nearest Signpost: Bridge to Kaer Trolde.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

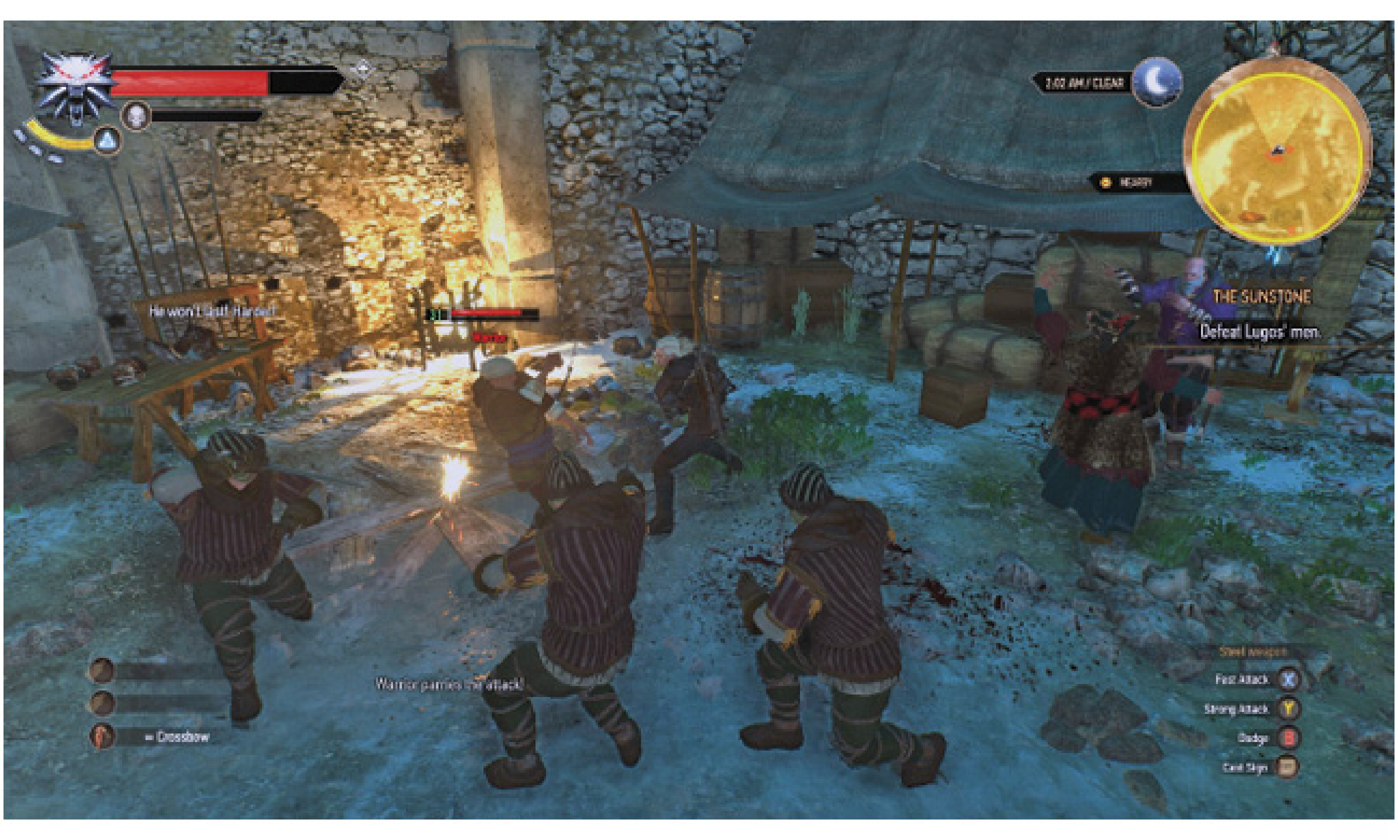
This quest commences in one of two ways:

- If either Cerys or Hjalmar an Craite are rulers of Skellige, Path 1 occurs automatically.
- If Svanrige Bran is ruler of Skellige, Path 2 occurs automatically.

PATH 1: THE FURY OF LUGOS

Travel to the lookout at Kaer Trolde Harbor, adjacent to where your ship is moored. Crach is here, looking for the "black dogs in their rickety tubs". When you ask where Ermion is, you're told he's visiting Madman Lugos to the south, as an An Craite on the throne is "chafing his arse." Set off (via horse or boat) to Holmstein's Port to the south of Ard Skellig.

"Madman" Lugos

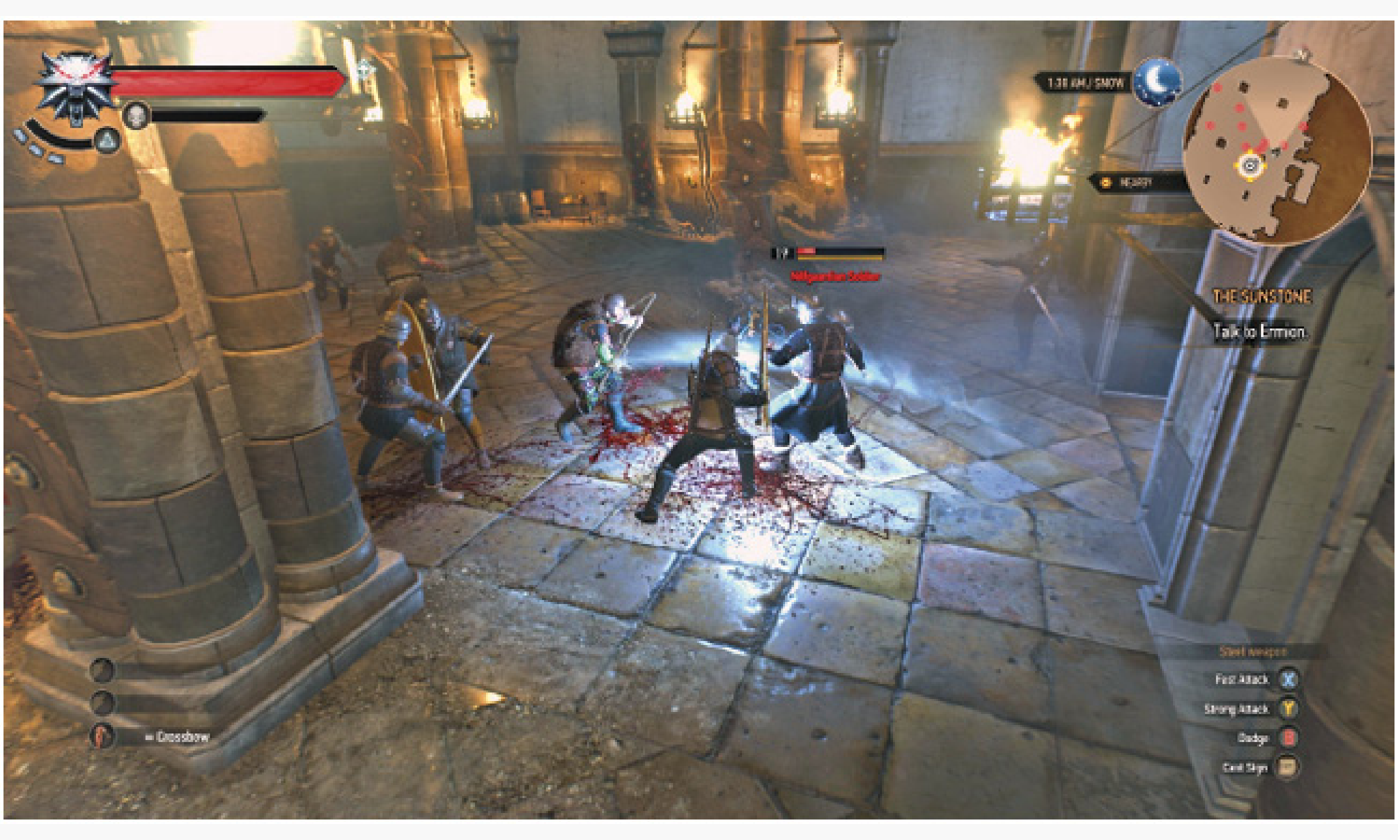


It is a long slog up the hill from the shore to Kaer Muire, where Madman Lugos and Ermion are having a furious argument. Whether you accuse Lugos of treason for siding with the Nilfgaard, or try a more diplomatic approach, the lunatic isn't listening to reason. He must be fought along with a group of his men, then other foes (usually alone) as you head to the gate. Stay close to Ermion (who helps out with some powerful magic), and methodically slay any Lugos warriors you encounter. Then slowly descend back down the mountain towards the safety of Holmstein (where there's no news of your fight), and speak with Ermion there.

PATH 2: THE BLOODY TREATY

King Svanrige

Travel to the Bridge to Kaer Trolde, and immediately cross it to the keep. You are met by an agitated Jarl Donar, furious about the state of negotiations between Skellige's ruler and the Emphyr's emissary. Ask him what is going on, or that you wish to see Ermion.



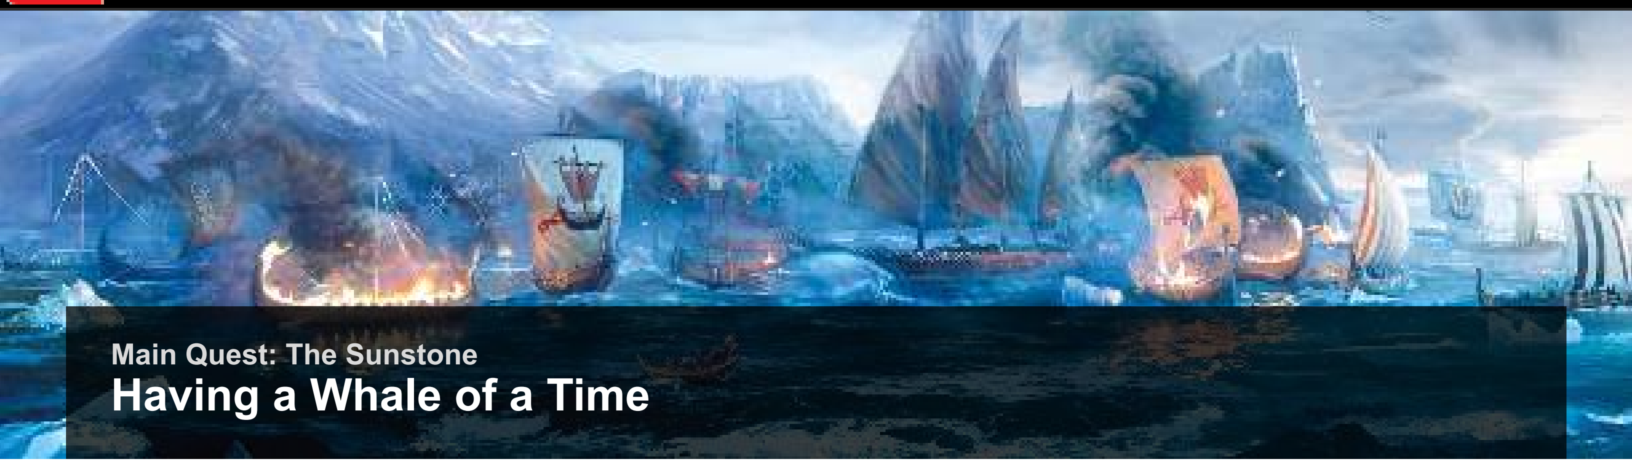
You head into the feast hall, where the imperial emissary, Lady Birna, and King Svanrige are meeting. Birna waves you away as unimportant. You stand near Crach, as Birna Bran says she wants to seal the treaty of surrender! A scowling Crach asks how much to take off her head. Answer how you wish. The emissary wants to hear the king himself surrender. Birna turns to her son, who steps over to the emissary, draws an axe, and cleaves the emissary through the chest with it. It seems the deal is off!

- Chaos grips the feast hall. Draw your weapon and immediately attack the emissary's bodyguards. There are nine Nilfgaardian soldiers to slay, though you have help from the Jarls and islanders.

MERGED PATH: TOP OF THE MOUNTAIN, BOTTOM OF THE SEA

Ermion

After the battle, you speak to Ermion. Ask about the Sunstone. Ermion has never found the artifact, but a skald named Eyvind who may help you, or a pearl diver Matthias Fish Lung. A visit to the area around Arinbjorn at the tip of the bay is your next plan.



Main Quest: The Sunstone

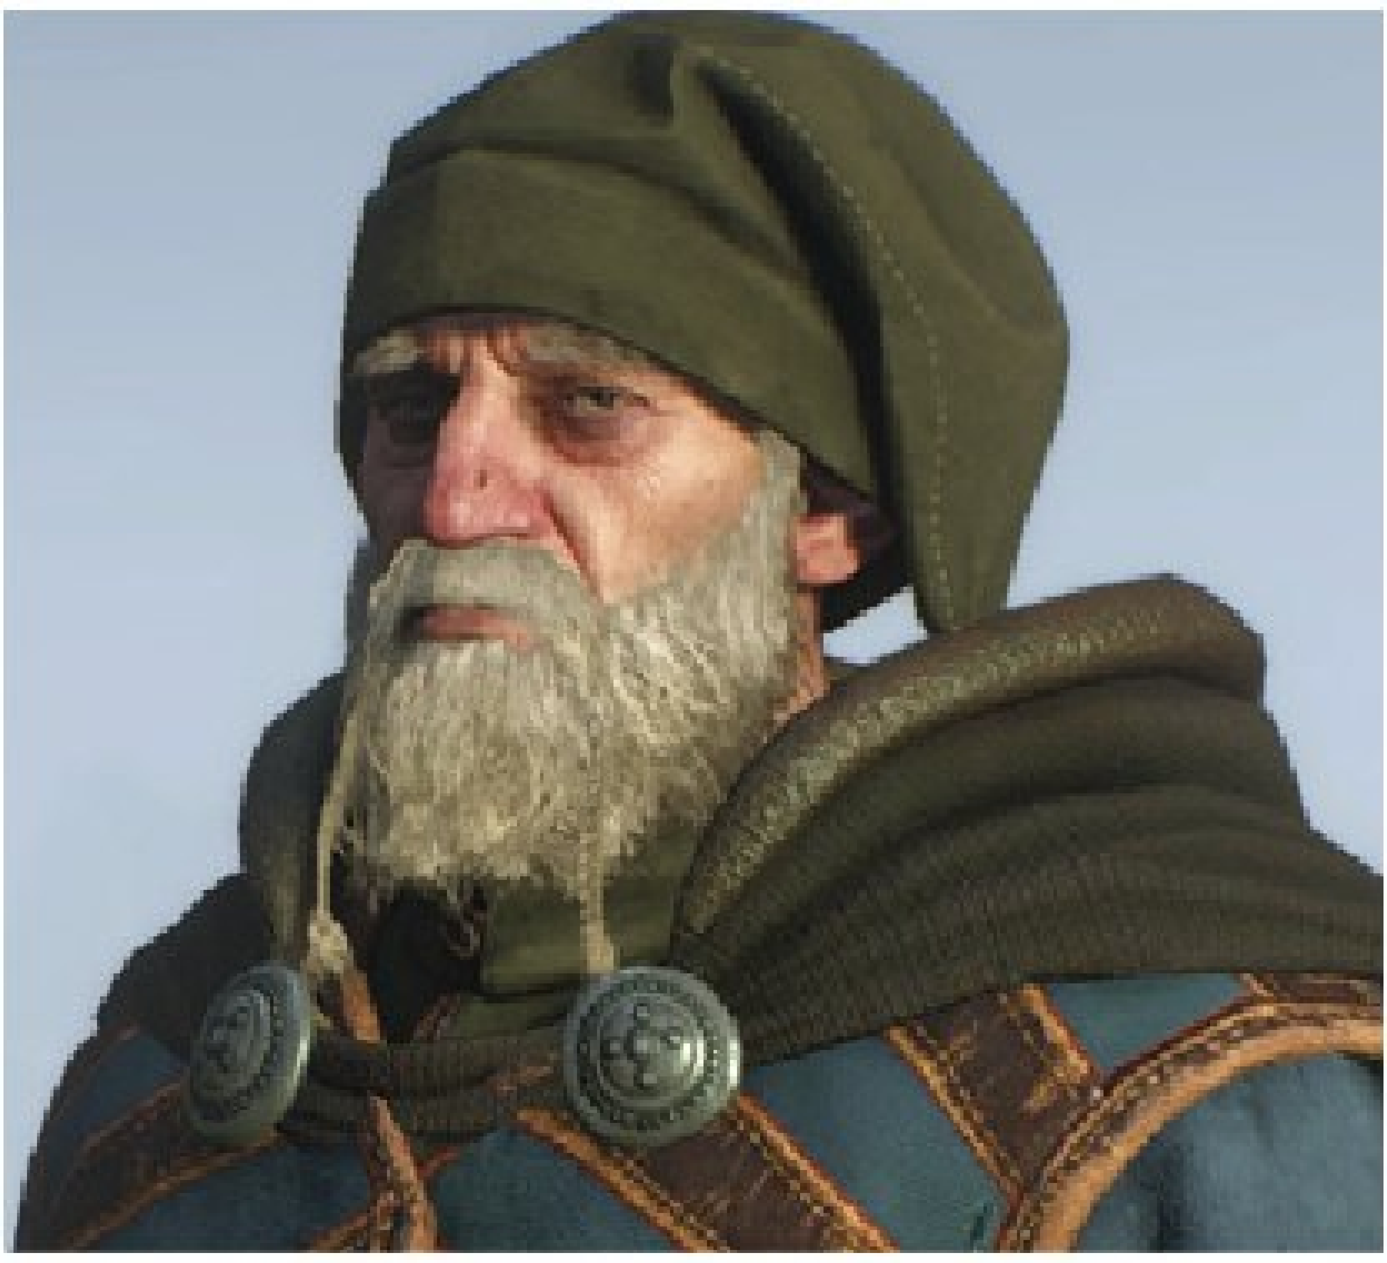
Having a Whale of a Time

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

The following two objectives can be completed in either order. They are presented in the order given.

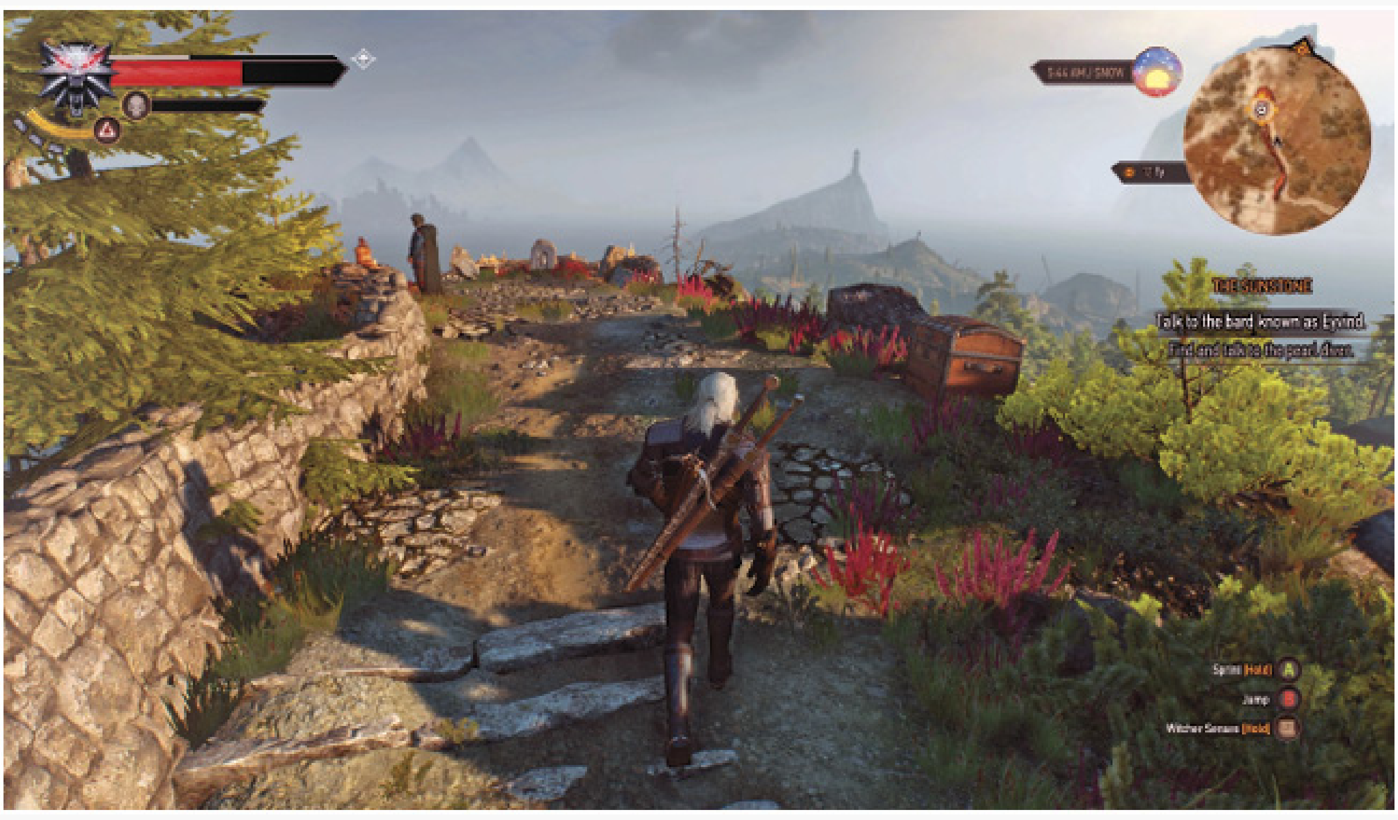
OBJECTIVES:

- Talk to the bard known as Eyvind.
- Return to Yennefer.
- Nearest Signpost: Arinbjorn.



Eyvind

Travel (by boat, horse, or Fast-Travel) to the western tip of Ard Skellig, just south of Eldberg Isle, close to the village of Arinbjorn. Eyvind can be found on the western outskirts, on a drystone-walled peak overlooking the ocean. Eyvind is staring out to sea—not looking for Nilfgaardian ships, but a fabled white whale named Gevorg. Agree to watch for the whale together, while you ask him about elven ruins in Skellige. During the chat, the whale surfaces! However, Eyvind doesn't see it. You can:



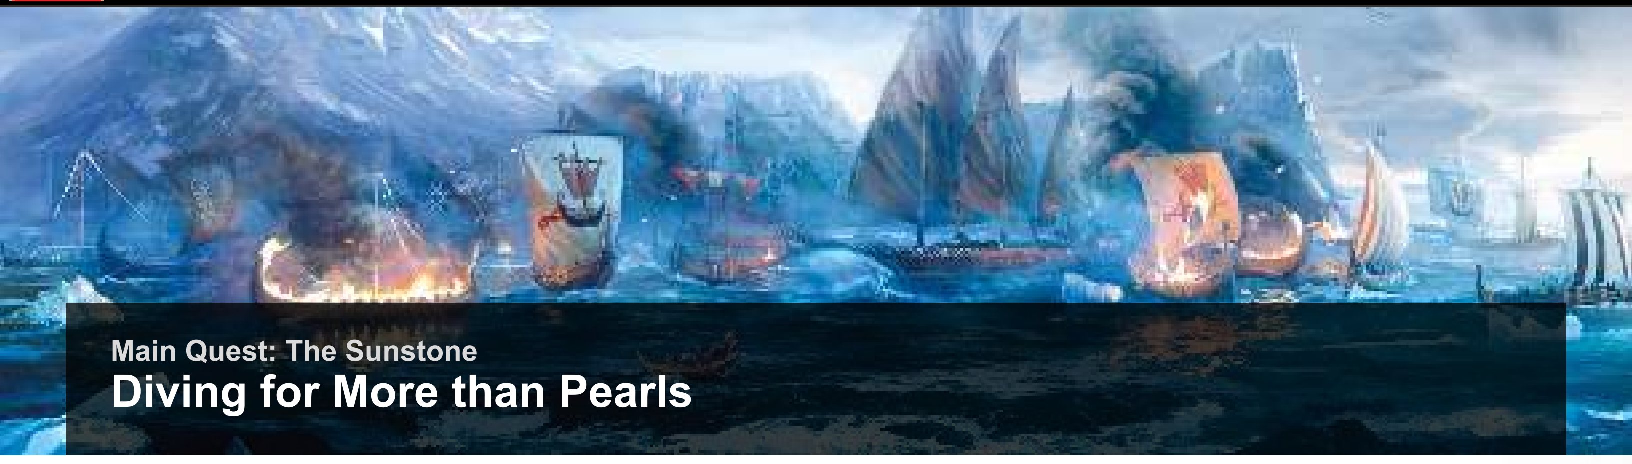
THE SUNSTONE
Talk to the bard known as Eyvind.
Find and talk to the pearl diver.
Sprint [Hold]
Jump
Witcher Senses [Hold]

- Try to tell him, but the whale disappears back into the ocean before he can gaze at the majesty of the animal.
- Don't tell him, and he never spots the animal.

You tell him the elven ruins you seek are in the name of research. These are for either:

- A treatise on the Aen Seidhe under Ermion's tutelage: Answer with this, and Eyvind distrusts both you and the druid, and refuses to give up the location of the ruins.
- Or an adventure novel: Eyvind becomes excited, and hopes you'll use one of his song translations. Agree to this, and the ruin's location is revealed (and you need not visit the pearl diver).

Time to leave, returning to Yennefer in Kaer Trolde Harbor if instructed, or find the pearl diver if you haven't been told the ruins location.

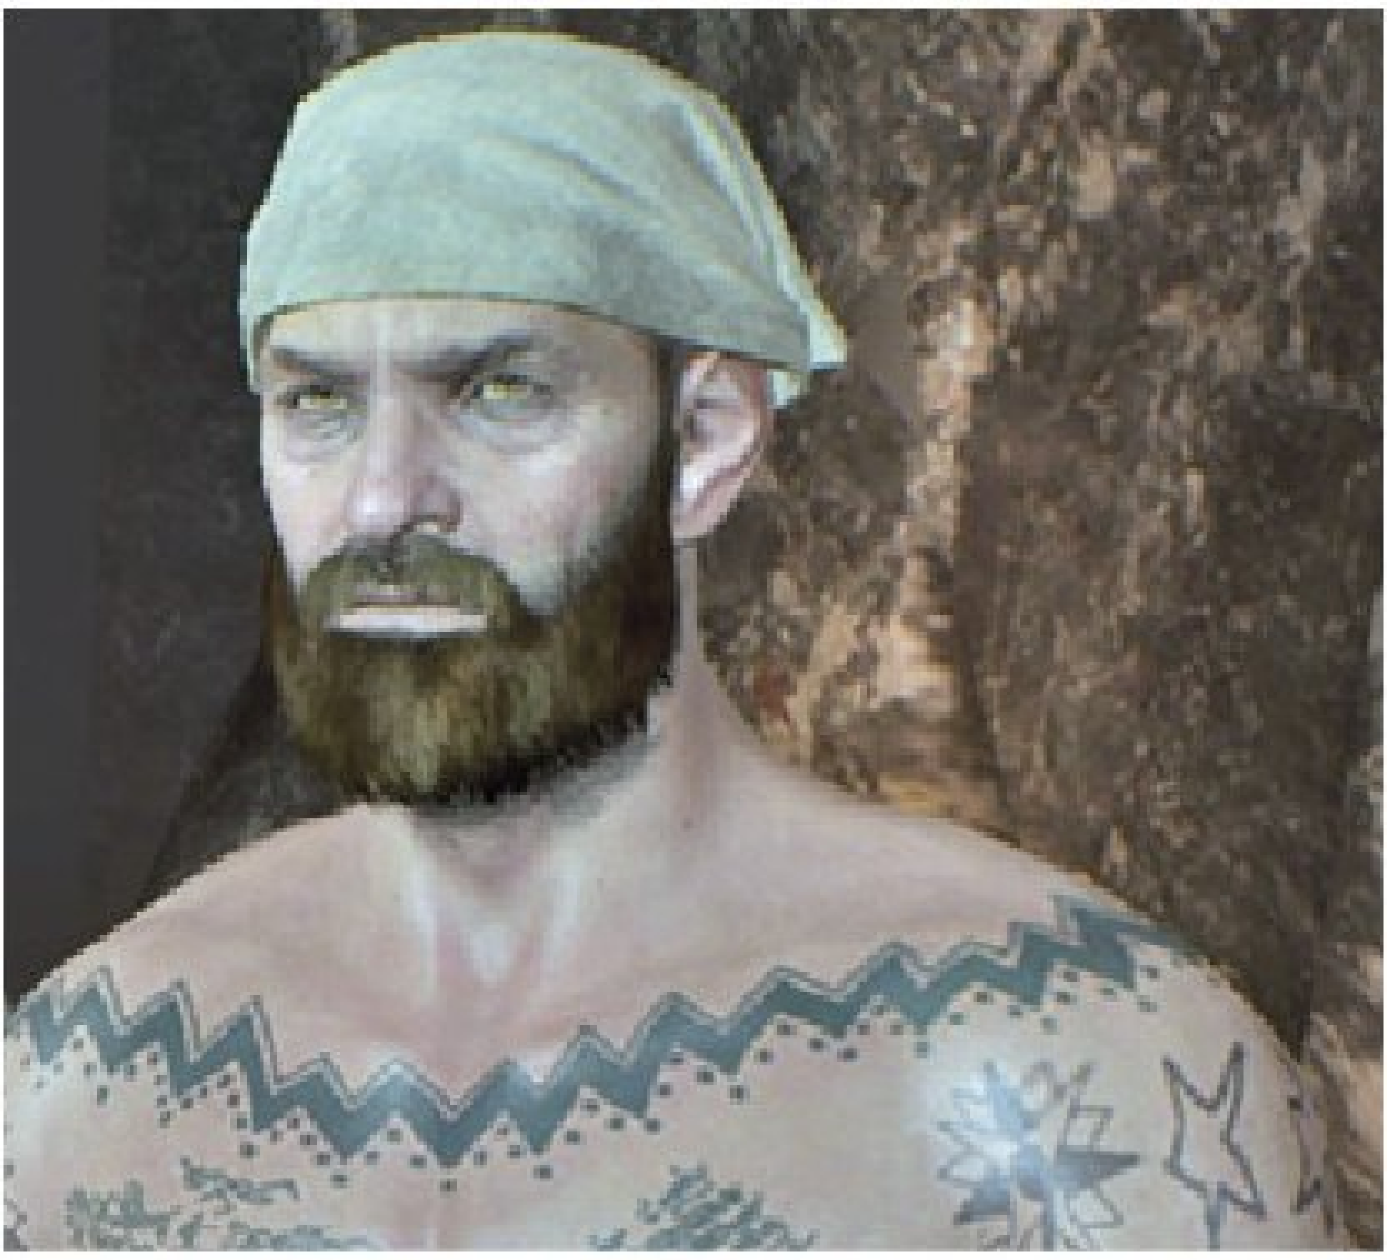


Main Quest: The Sunstone

Diving for More than Pearls

OBJECTIVES:

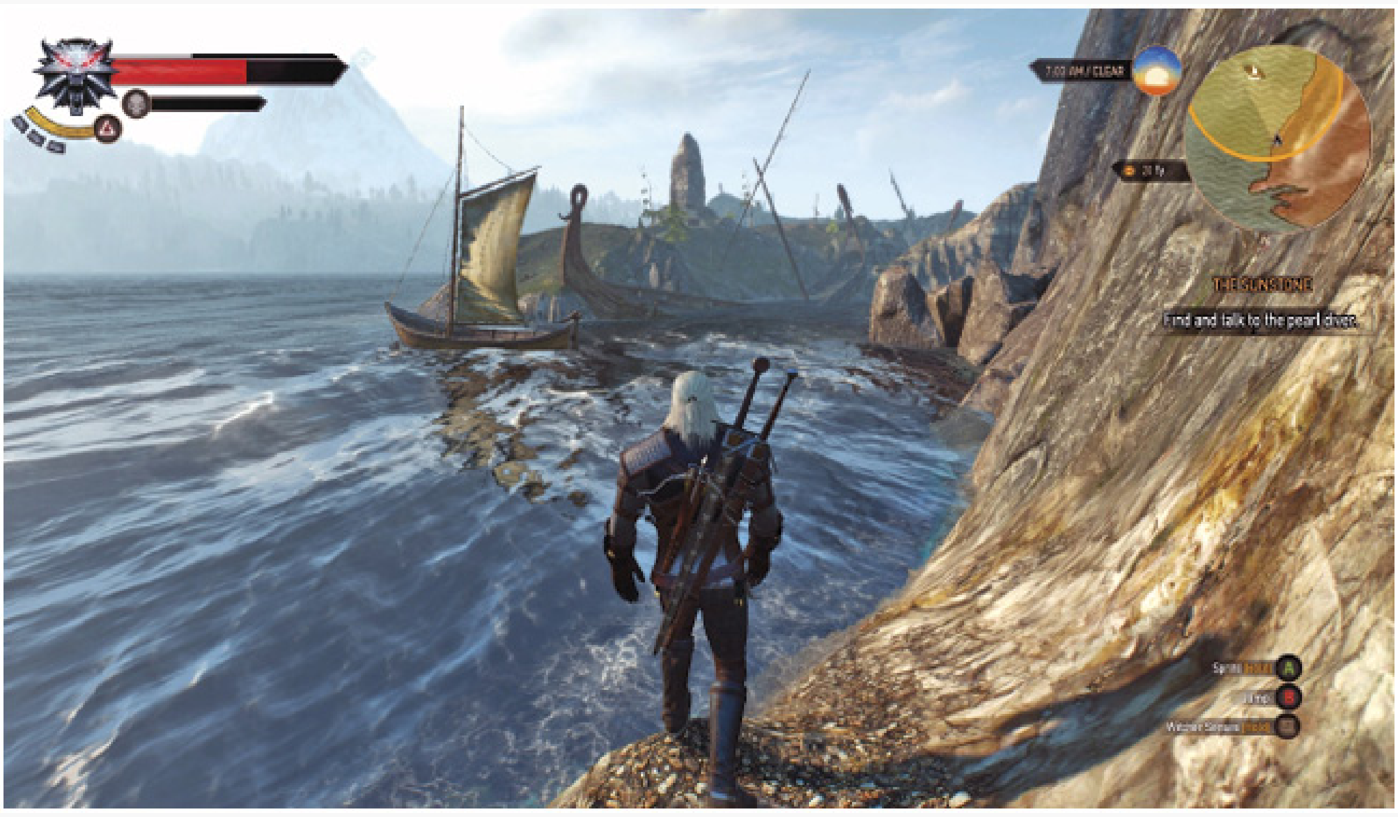
- Find and talk to the pearl diver.
- Return to Yennefer.
- Nearest Signpost: Arinbjorn.

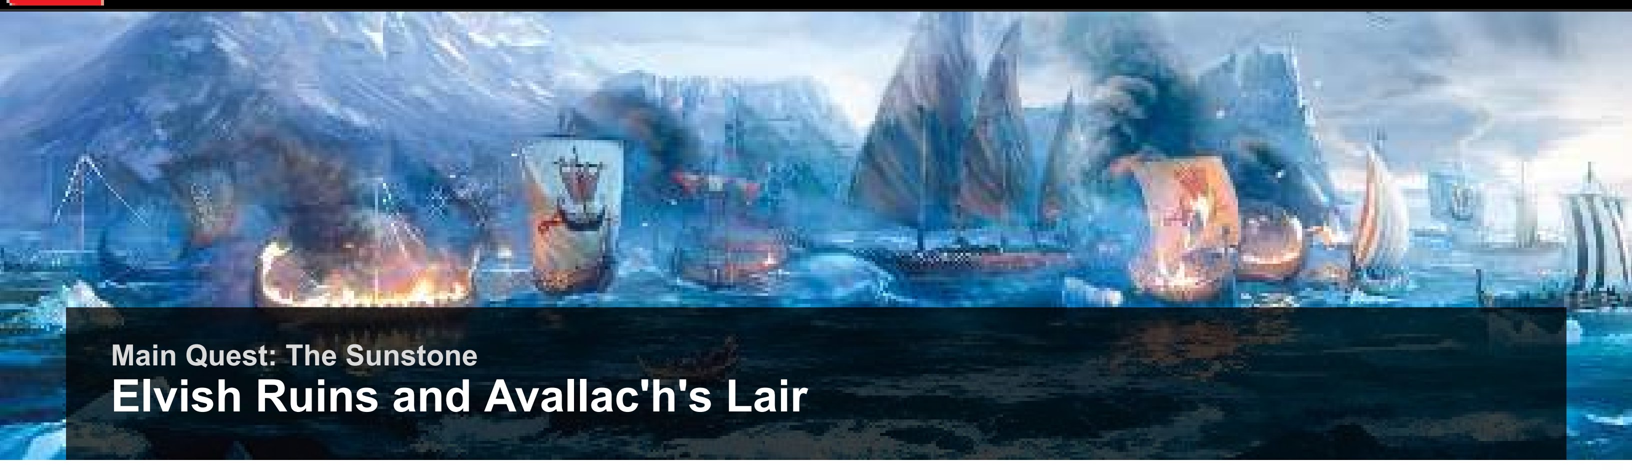


Mattias Fish Lung

Head to the cluster of promontory rocks making up Eldberg Isle, navigating across the ruined bridges (if traveling by land) and slaughtering a band of up to nine Dagr at camp you may stumble into. Or, if you're traveling by boat, moor it close to the upright stone obelisk on the eastern shore of the promontory. Anchored nearby is a small boat belonging to the pearl divers. Dive into the ocean yourself, and locate the jagged cave mouth underwater, swimming into a grotto.

It is disappointing to see Mattias looting the corpse of a bloated soldier, but they assure you they only rob the Nilfgaardian dead. Speak to them about the bodies, the dangers of the sea, but be sure to ask about the elven ruins. They explain where it is, and that it is only accessible from the sea. Your chat is interrupted by more bloated bodies; these belonging to a a few Drowners. Quickly cull them, and then return to Yennefer in Kaer Trolde Harbor.



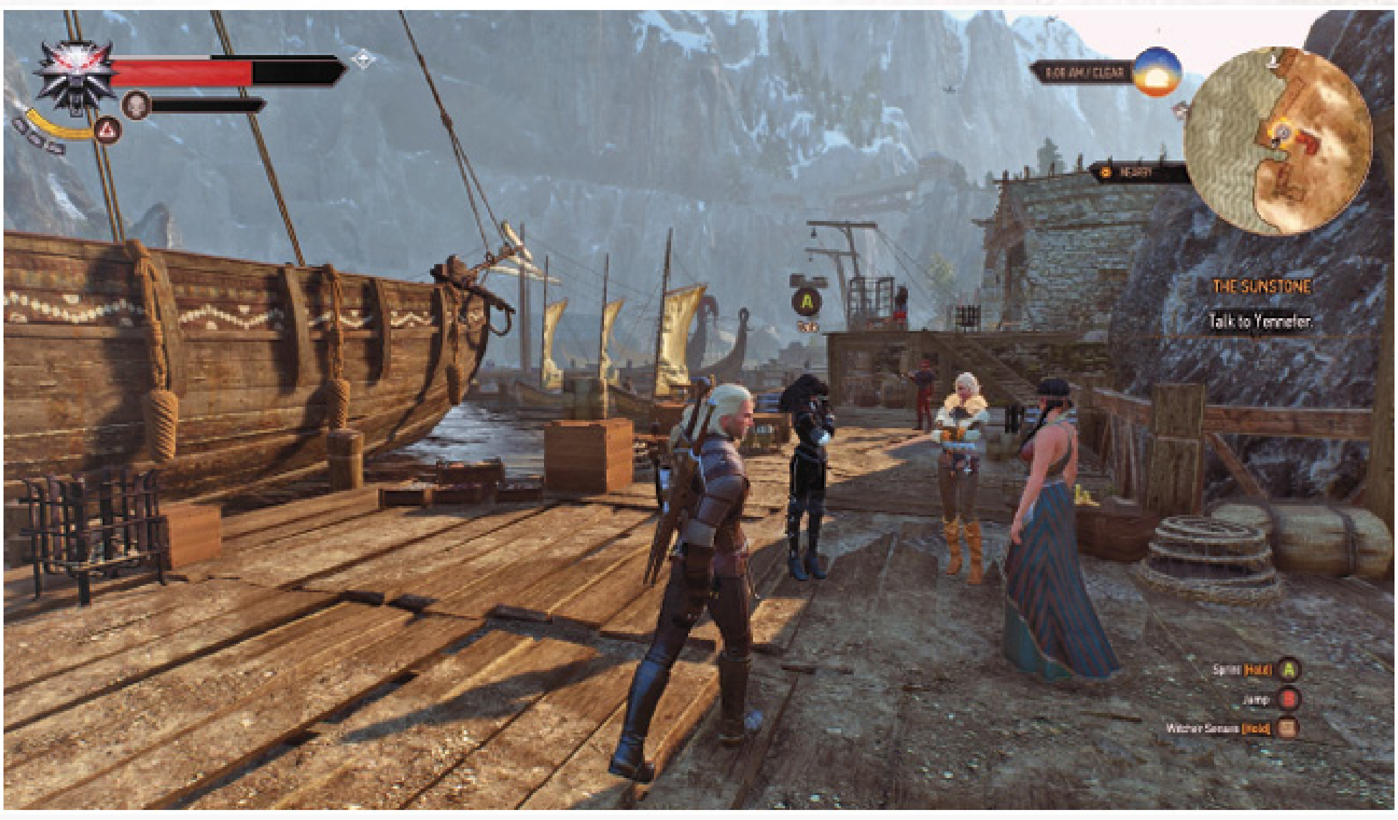


Main Quest: The Sunstone

Elvish Ruins and Avallac'h's Lair

Phillppa Ellhart

Return to Kaer Trolde Harbor where Yennefer, Triss, and Ciri are talking with the always obtuse Phillipa. Ciri reckons there's a site to find in Skellige, echoing your own investigations. It appears Avallac'h may be hiding something from you. You can agree (or not) that his failure to mention a laboratory when he was with Ciri could be deemed suspicious. The place is on a small isle between Undvik and Spikeroog. You tell them the Sunstone is on Ard Skellig inside a cavern along the coast. Philippa is more interested about the elven ruins and opens a portal, stepping through. Yennefer and Ciri set off to explore Avallac'h's laboratory. Triss stays in Kaer Trolde to keep an eye on Avallac'h. You now have the following objectives to complete as Main Quest: Child of the Elder Blood starts, and your current quests continue:



OBJECTIVES:

- (Battle Preparations): Find out if Avallac'h is hiding something.
- (Veni Vidi Vigo): Sneak onto the emperor's flagship under cover of darkness.
- (The Sunstone): Meet Philippa in the elven ruins.
- (Child of the Elder Blood): Travel to the island where Avallac'h's laboratory is located.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

At this point, you can attempt any of these objectives in any order. However, to prevent confusion, it is usually best to complete the quests that you've had running for the longest time. So, try the following optimal route:

Board your boat in Kaer Trolde Harbor, and quiz Avallac'h (Main Quest: Battle Preparations).

Then complete Main Quest: Veni Vidi Vigo.

Then complete Main Quest: The Sunstone.

Then complete Main Quest: Child of the Elder Blood.

Main Quest: Veni Vidi Vigo

Swimming, Sneaking, Surrendering

LOCATIONS : Kaer Trolde Harbor (Ard Skellig), Marlin Coast (Undvik), Emhyr var Emreis' Battle Fleet
CHARACTERS : Emhyr var Emreis, Fringilla Vigo
ENEMIES : Nilfgaardian Soldiers

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest starts just after you disembark from the boat after travelling to Ard Skellig with Ciri, Yennefer, Triss, and the sorceresses. It is also tracked by Main Quest: Battle Preparations. The best time to complete it is once you learn where the elven ruins are during Main Quest: The Sunstone, though it can be completed at any time.

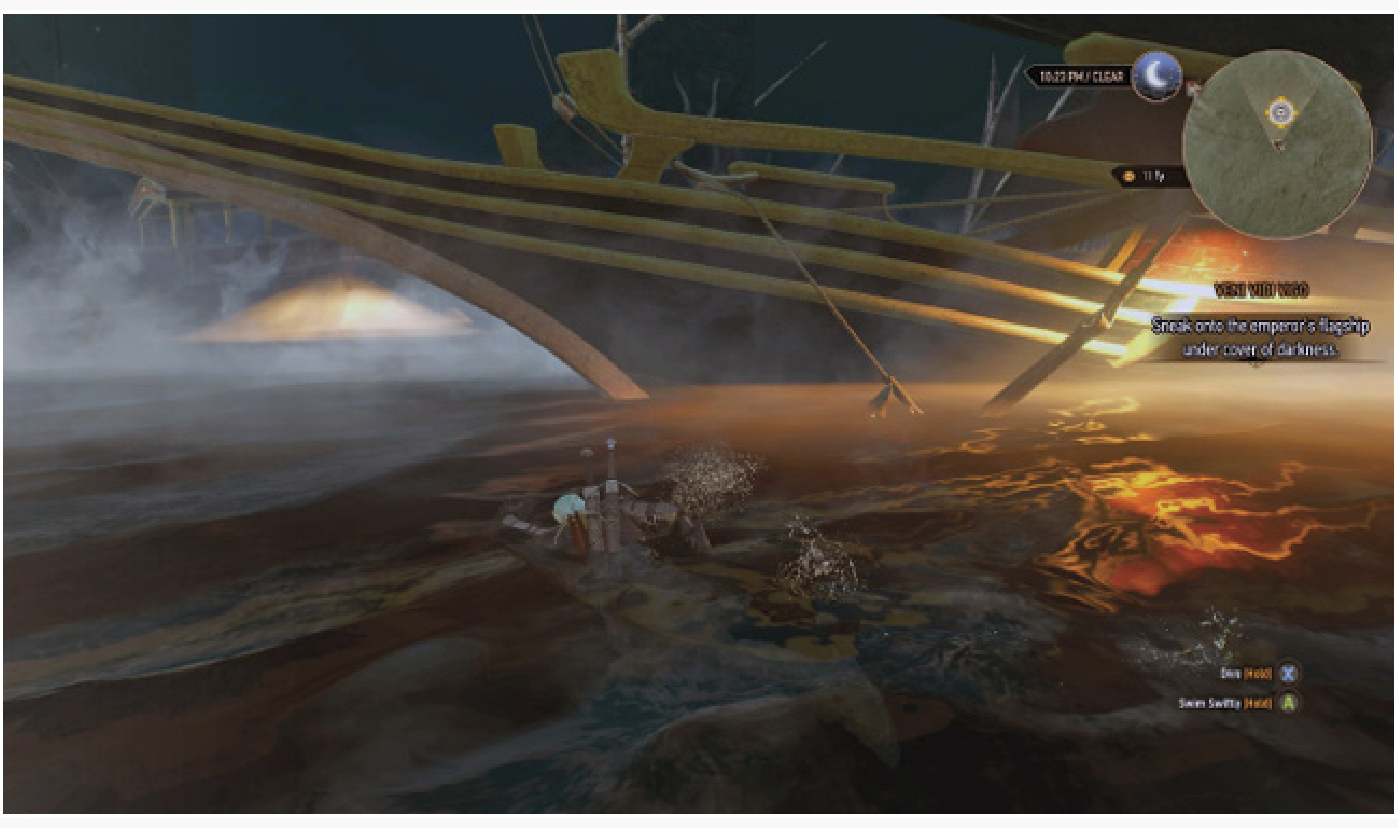
OBJECTIVES:

- Sneak onto the emperor's flagship under cover of darkness.
- Nearest Signpost: Marlin Coast (Undvik).

The Emhyr's battle fleet is moored off the northeast shores of Undvik Isle (southwest of Ard Skellig). Manuever your way to the village by the Marlin Coast signpost, avoiding the fleet by boating around the ships at a distance. Come ashore, then study the vessels from the shoreline. Meditate until after nightfall and begin your surreptitious swim.

Emhyr var Emreis

Fringilla Vigo

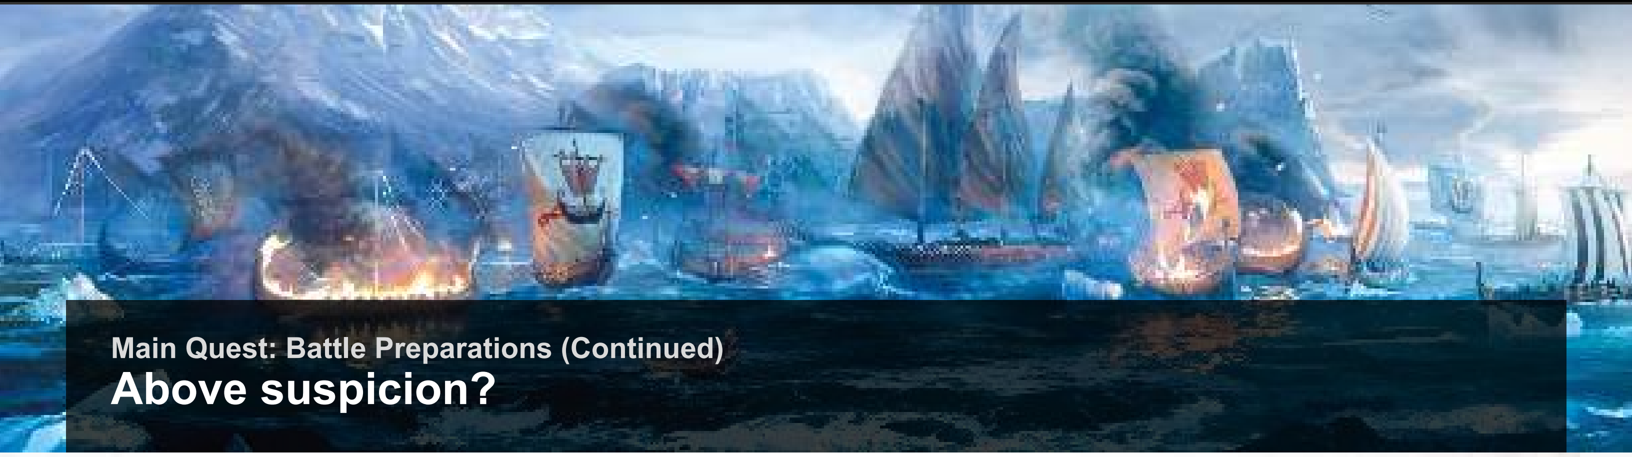


Stay on the surface and try to avoid lights. If you swim into the surface lights, you start to hear shouts from the soldiers, and crossbow shots into the water. Dive and swim under the boats.

Peer through the murk until you find a lowered anchor, and head for this location. It must line up with the objective icon on your minimap. If you need to surface, bob up just below the bow of the boat so you're shielded from the enemy fire. Dive down immediately. Grab the nchor of the Emphyr's ship, and climb aboard. You beg parley.

You speak with the Emhyr who tolerates your mocking attitude (for now). If you didn't head to see the Emhyr during Main Quest: Blood on the Battlement, he asks where Ciri is (you can infuriate him and tell him "Zerrikania" or that she is close by). He also knows you want Fringilla, and makes it easy for you—Yennefer has already negotiated her freedom.

The dimeritium shackles are removed, and Fringilla ignores you suggestion at taking a boat back to the other sorceresses, forcing you to join her in portal travel. You appear back on Kaer Trolde Harbor, near Avallac'h, as this quest concludes.



Main Quest: Battle Preparations (Continued)

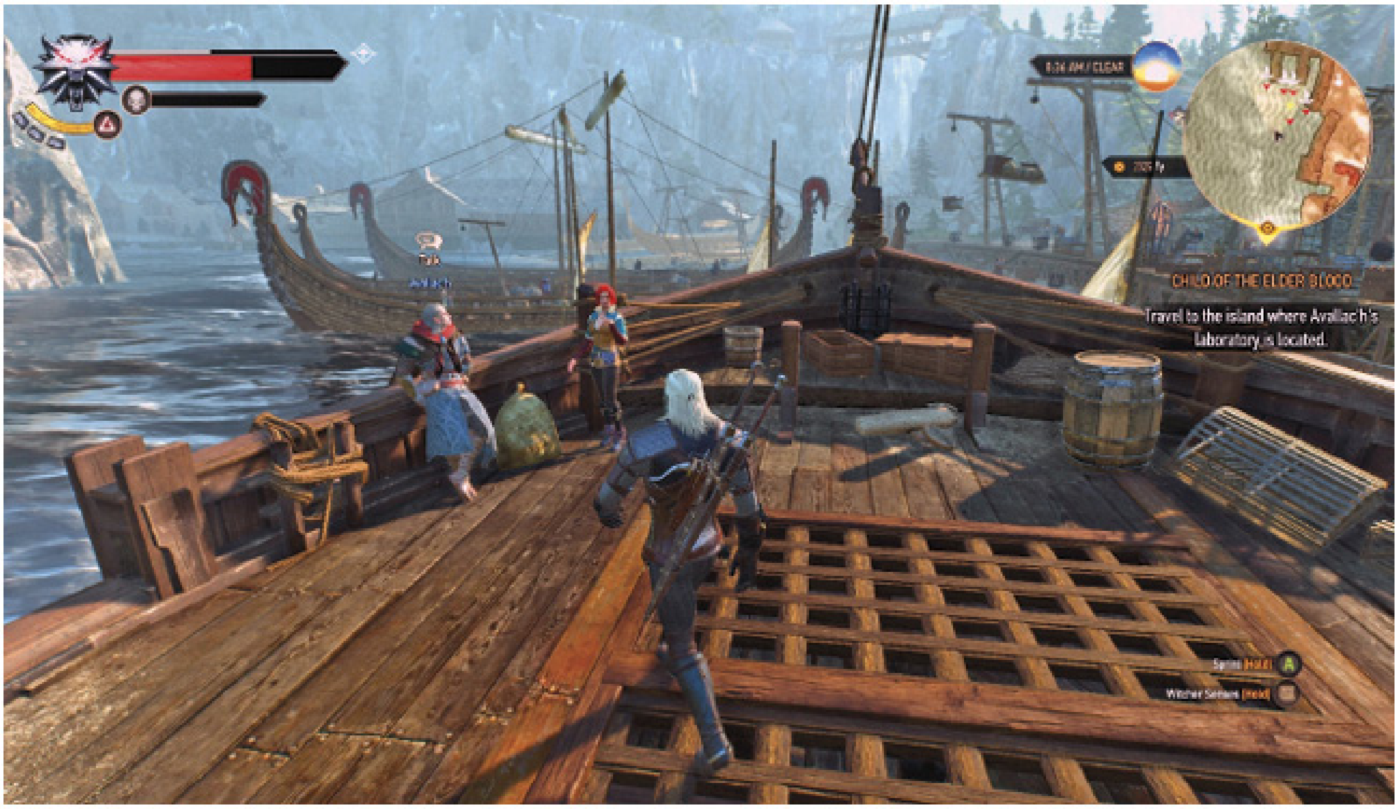
Above suspicion?

OBJECTIVE:

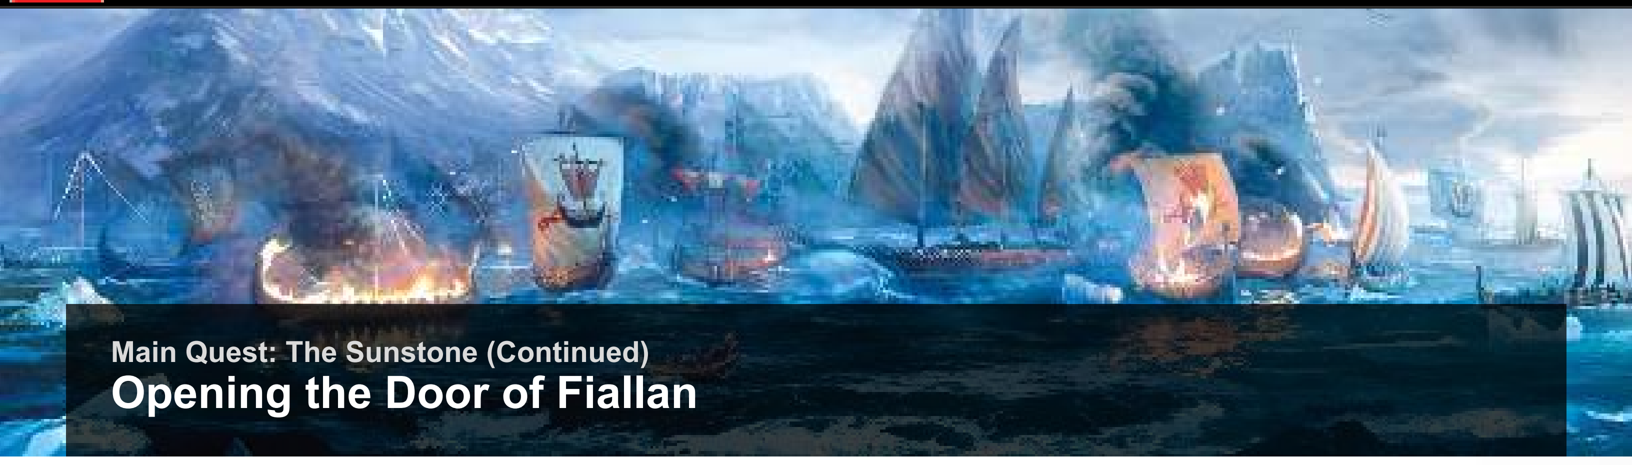
- Find out if Avallac'h is hiding something.

Ciri's elven friend is waiting on your boat, moored in Kaer Trolde Harbor. You have a wealth of (purely optional) questions to ask him: About why he is helping Ciri (he sees her Elder Blood, a power that must be kept from Eredin). About Caranthir (he reared him into "a golden child"). About Ciri not needing his help soon (he won't force her into a life he wishes for her—can you say the same?).

But most importantly, ask "How's Margarita?" (she is feeling better, and the sooner Eredin is brought here, the better). This is a completely optional objective.



Travel to the island where Avallac'h's laboratory is located.



Main Quest: The Sunstone (Continued)

Opening the Door of Fiallan

SISTER QUESTS : Main Quest: Battle Preparations, Main Quest: Veni Vidi Vigo, Main Quest: Child of the Elder Blood, Main Quest: Skjall's Grave

LOCATIONS : Kaer Trolde Harbor, Ancient Crypt

CHARACTERS : Philippa Eilhart

ENEMIES : Drowners, Siren, Golems, Wild Hunt Ghosts

QUESTING DECISIONS

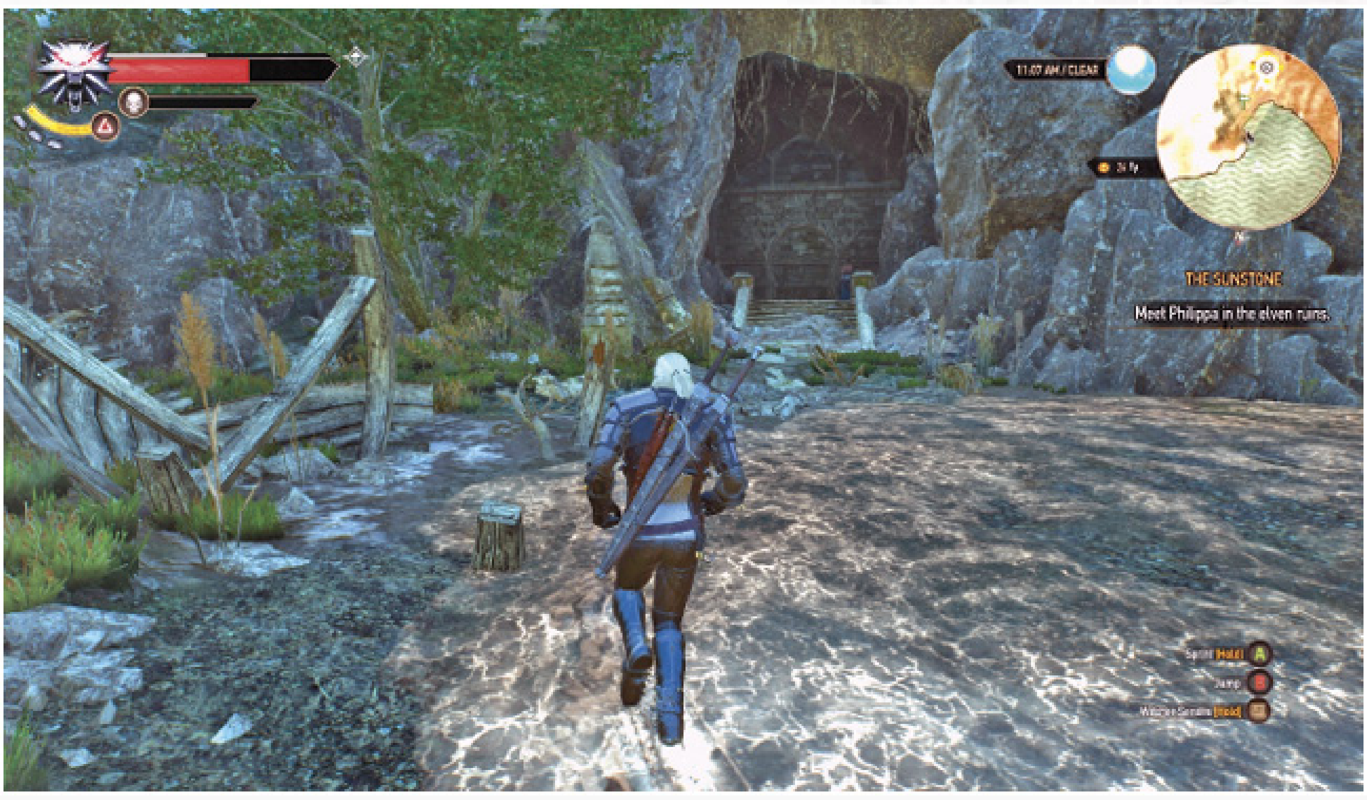
This quest continues just after Yennefer and Ciri teleport to Avallac'h's laboratory (Main Quest: Child of the Elder Blood), and Philippa departs for the elven ruins (this quest).

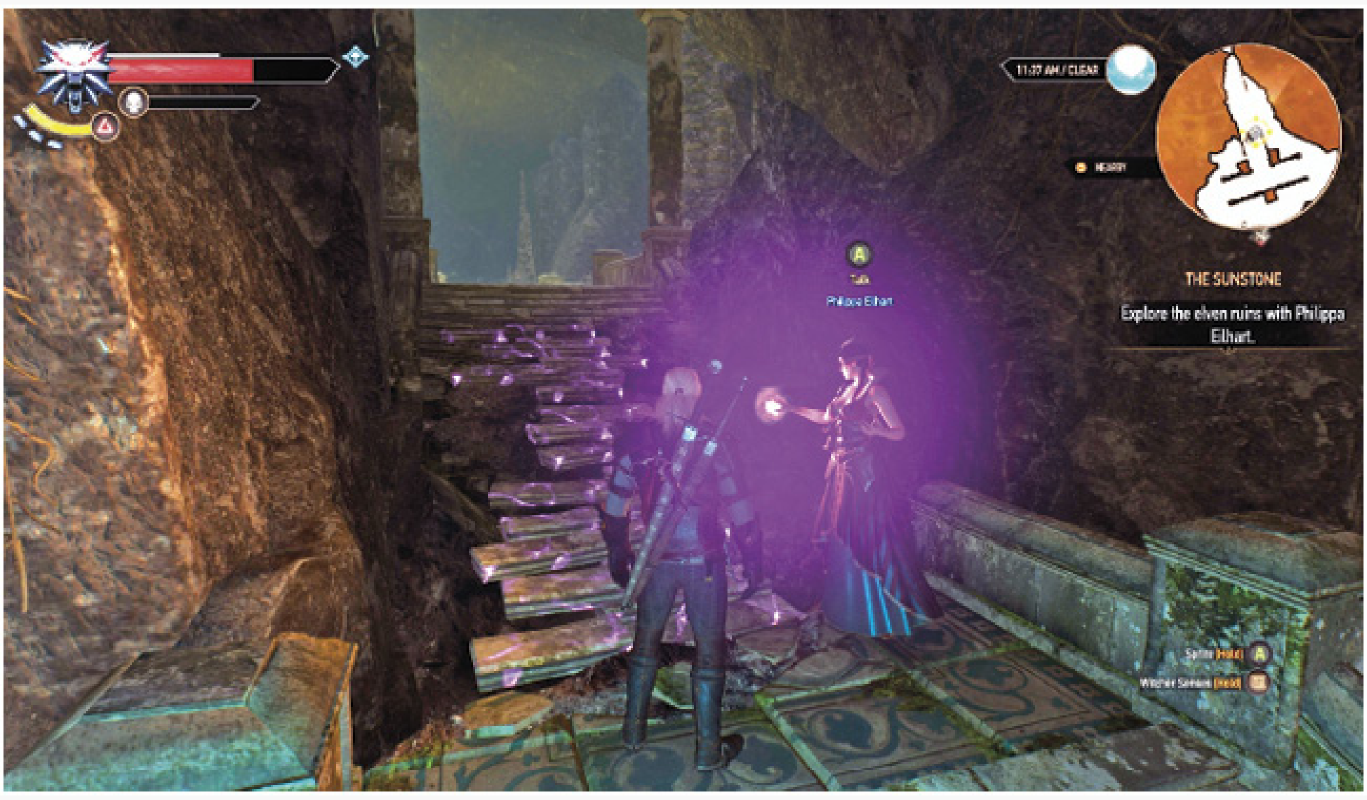
OBJECTIVES:

- Meet Philippa in the elven ruins.
- Explore the elven ruins with Philippa Eilhart.
- Exterminate the monsters.
- Nearest Signpost: Ancient Crypt.

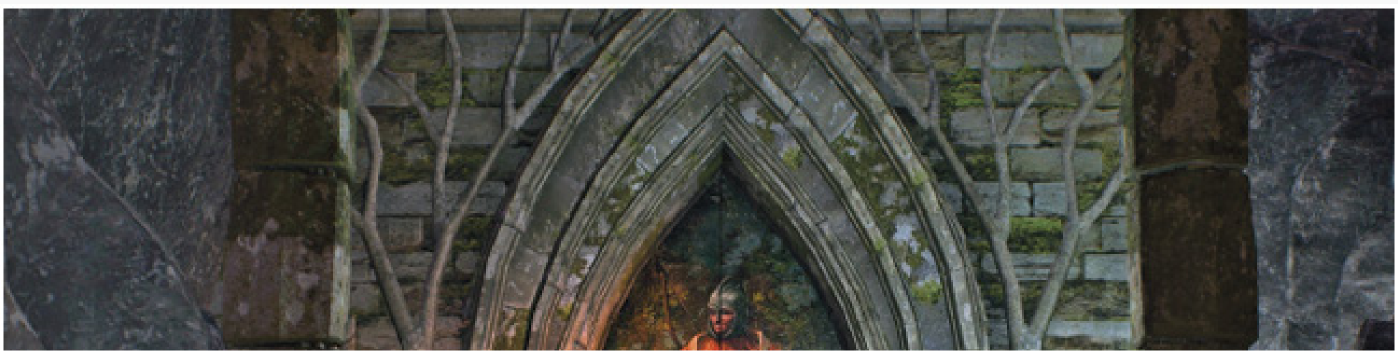
Travel by boat along the jagged northern coast of Ard Skellig. There is but a single signpost—to an Ancient Crypt. Moor your boat, and join Philippa at the sealed entrance. She removes the illusion from the entrance, and you walk into the ruins, speaking about Philippa's vision. After a winding tunnel is navigated, you hear a noise ahead as you move into a larger cavern, complete with an ancient cowled statue of great size. Four drowners and a siren are guarding this place. Slaughter them!

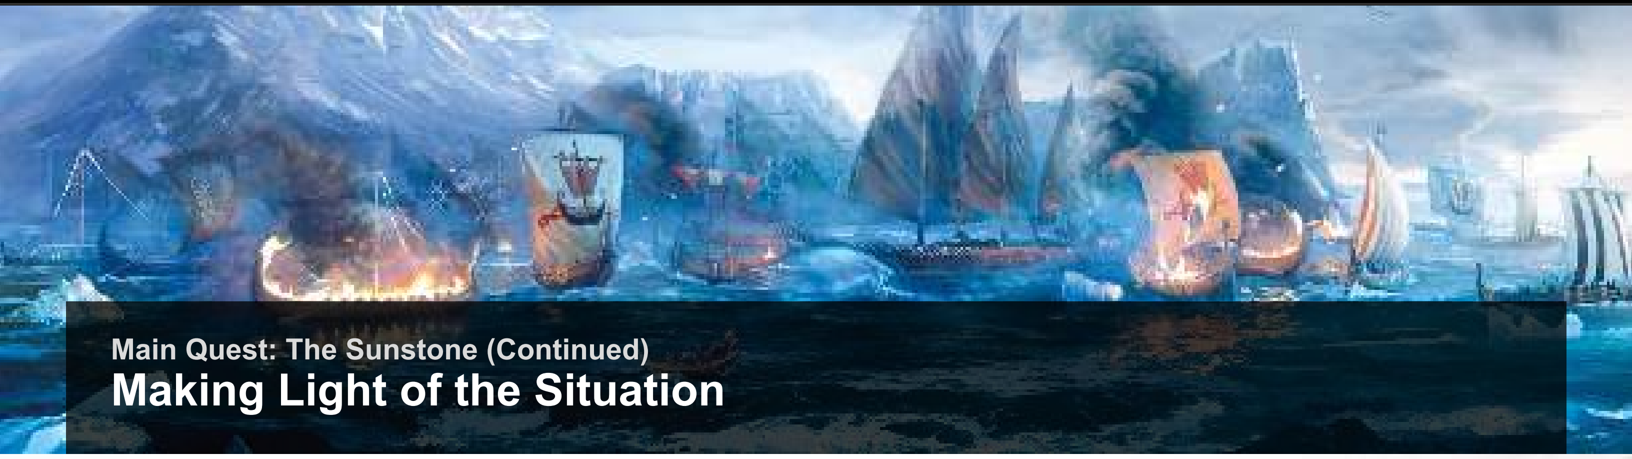
Head up the stairs by the statue, until there's a gap over a pit you can't cross. Philippa levitates some stones to make a passage, allowing you access southwards, upwards and deeper into the ruins.





The talk changes to inter-party animosity. Continue to follow Philippa, stepping in front of her to tackle an incoming golem at the pathway crossroads. Continue up more steps, behind Philippa.





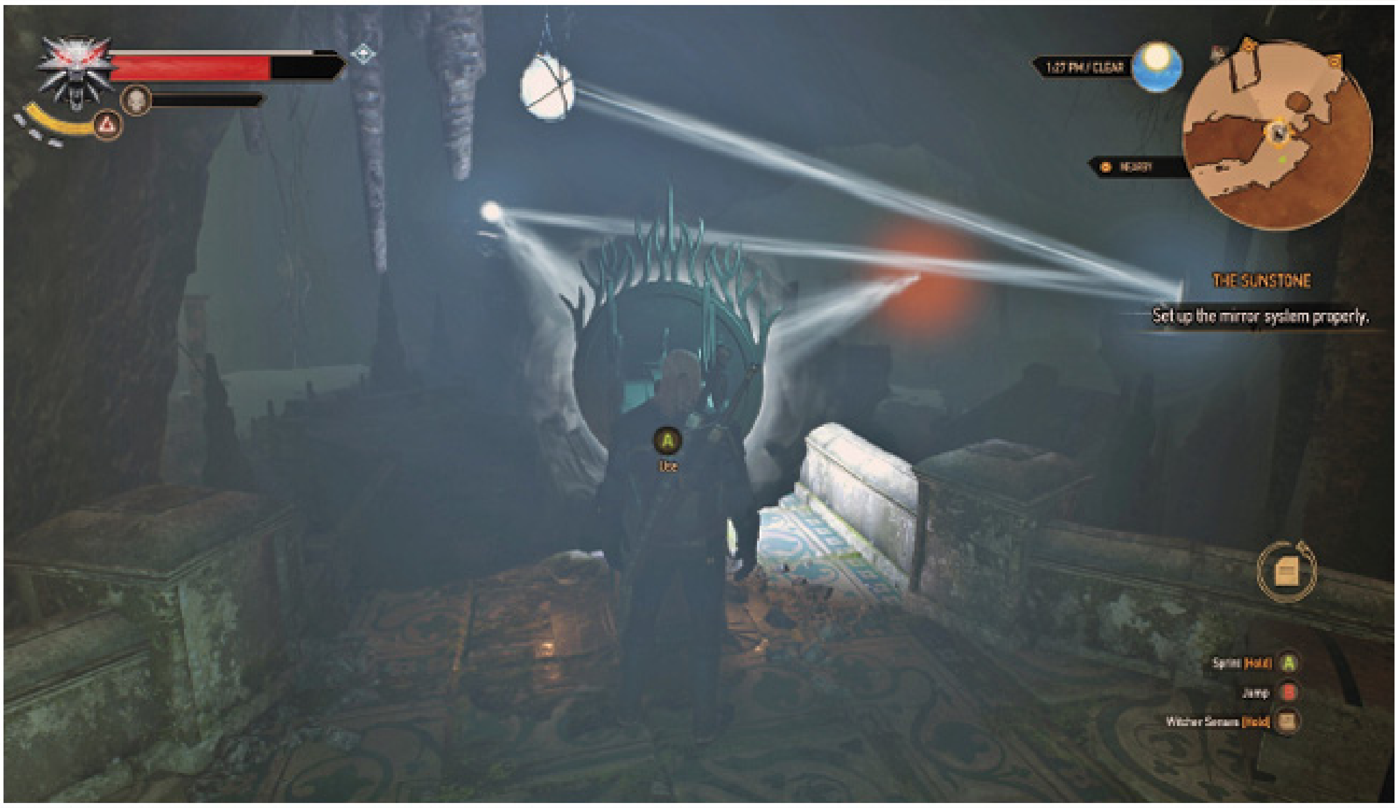
Main Quest: The Sunstone (Continued)

Making Light of the Situation

OBJECTIVES:

- Set up the mirror system properly.
- Examine the Sunstone.

This chamber features three mirrors that must be positioned correctly in order to reveal the Sunstone. This is easier than it looks, as you simply need to work your way to each mirror, and turn it once, so the beam is in the other direction to the one it was when you reached it. Access all three mirrors, pull each lever once, and beware Wild Hunt ghosts that may be guarding each of the mirrors during your positioning.



Now return to where Philippa is standing, on a raised stone platform within this array chamber. She clutches the Sunstone, delaying your mission, and wanting (as expected) to talk about herself. She wants to speak to you about her future. Answer her how you wish. She seems to suggest she wishes to take Yennefer's place next to the emperor. Answer again to conclude this quest, and begin your trek to the island where Avallac'h was last spotted.

ENEMIES : Golems

QUESTING DECISIONS

This quest continues just after Yennefer and Ciri teleport to Avallac'h's laboratory (this quest), and Philippa departs for the elven ruins (the continuation of Main Quest: The Sunstone).

OBJECTIVES:

- Travel to the island where Avallac'h's laboratory is located.
- Talk to Yennefer.
- Wait for the door to open.
- Neutralize the golem.
- Nearest Signpost: North of Tor Gvalch'ca (Undvik)

Peer over your map of Skellige and locate the island Ciri had pinpointed as the place where Avallac'h's laboratory is said to be. It is westward, between Undvik (to the south) and Spikeroog (to the northeast). Set sail for this uninhabited pair of rocks (or swim there if you're a maniac), and locate the cave entrance in the center of the land mass, between the two islands.

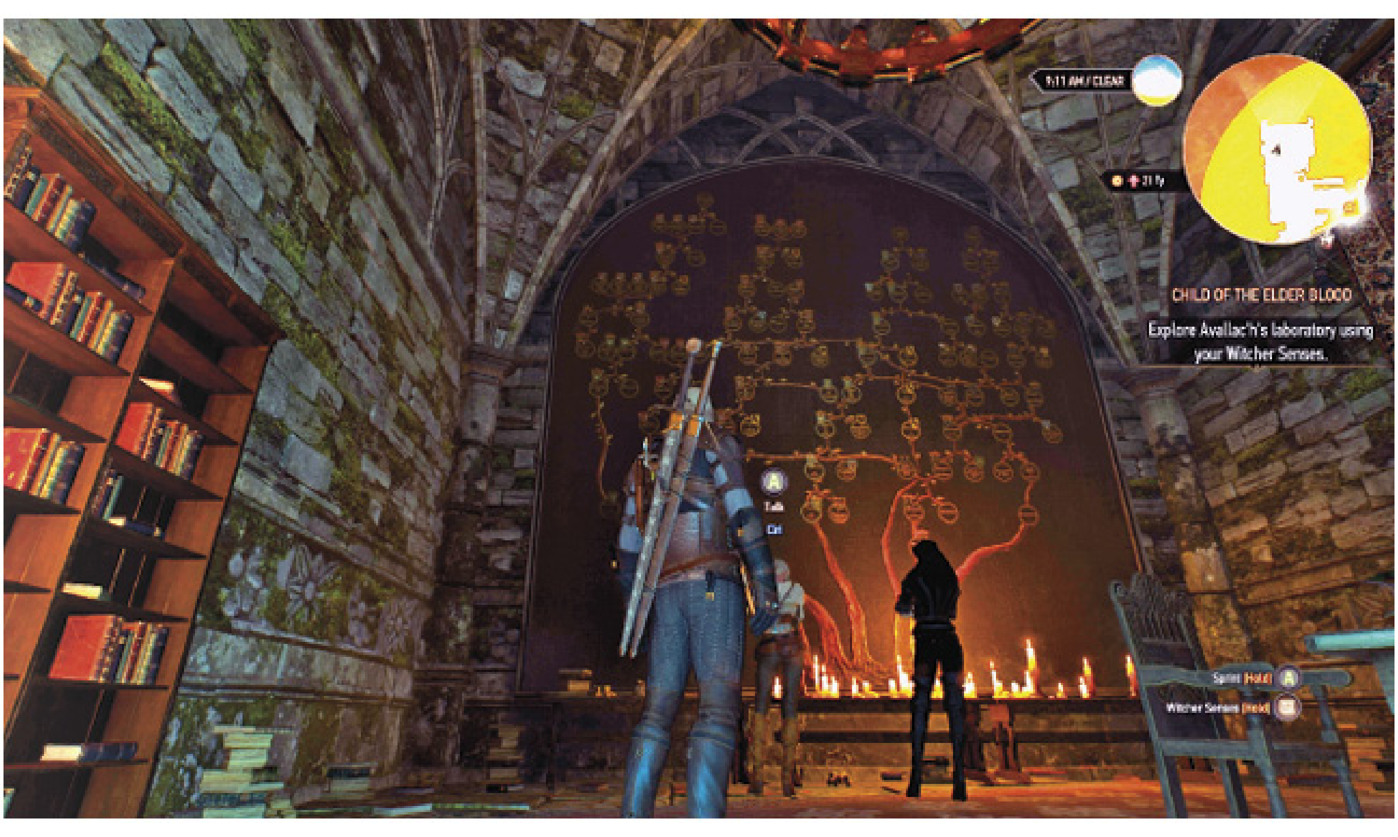
Main Quest: Child of the Elder Blood

The Aen Hen Ichaer

OBJECTIVES:

- Explore Avallac'h's laboratory using your Witcher Senses.
- Talk to Yennefer.
- Talk to Ciri.
- Search the laboratory using your Witcher Senses.
- Meet Ciri outside the laboratory.

Make a thorough inspection of this chamber, with your Witcher Senses picking up the following:



- A scattering of sweets and candy on a table with a jug on it. Now speak with Yennefer.
- A quick chat with Yennefer reveals that someone was just in this chamber.
- A hairbrush on a table indicates this to be more of a bedroom than a laboratory.

Follow the corridor down the steps, and into a lower chamber:

- A desk has perfume on it, and a standard mirror (not a portal). You can speak with Ciri about this.
- The largest surprise adorns the massive archway wall within this chamber. A genealogical chart of the Aen Hen Ichaer (or Elder Blood) from the start of the line to Ciri herself. It seems Avallac'h analyzed all the paths of Lara Dorren (the first), even those thought to be extinct. Tell Yennefer to look at the notes Avallac'h wrote, and you uncover a plan to cultivate a genetic mix like Ciri's, but without the human line. All attempts failed.

Head to the door on the opposite wall of this chamber. If you don't head there, Yennefer notices someone on the other side.

Avallac'h's Companion

Open the door, and enter what appears to be Avallac'h's bedroom. You interrupt a she-elf combing her hair. Avallac'h's lover demands you leave, until she sees Ciri, and tells you she remembers her from Tir Ná Lia. Answer her how you wish. This doesn't help the situation—the she-elf tells you Avallac'h mentioned Ciri shares Lara's features, but not her skill and intellect. Avallac'h told the she-elf he was following Ciri to save her, every time she did something stupid. She treats Ciri with contempt, hinting that Avallac'h is using Ciri for another task. Answer how you wish. She calls Ciri a degenerate half-breed.

FATE OF THE SWALLOW

Choice #4 Ahead:

You are about to make one of the five most important choices in your adventure, and one that has direct consequences on the Ending, and the fate of Ciri! If you wish to know more, reference the Endings section.

Ciri is furious, and wants to ransack Avallac'h's laboratory. Respond with:

"Go for it." You push over a bottle. Ciri cracks a smile. You encourage Ciri to throw a tantrum in the laboratory, venting her frustrations out on the furniture and assorted objects. This makes Ciri stronger.

Ciri's Fate (4 of 5): Positive Choice (+1)

"Calm down." You spend a few moments calming Ciri down, speaking of her great gift. Then you fasten Lara Dorren's necklace around Ciri's neck. Ciri leaves the laboratory, weakened in her resolve.

Ciri's Fate (4 of 5): Negative Choice (-1)

FATE OF THE SWALLOW

Choice #4 Ahead:

You are about to make one of the five most important choices in your adventure, and one that has direct consequences on the Ending, and the fate of Ciri! If you wish to know more, reference the Endings section.

Outside, Ciri says she would like to go to Hindarsfjall and meet Skjall, the boy who saved her from the Wild Hunt. Yennefer tells her Skjall is dead. A sorrowful Ciri now wants to visit his grave. Respond with:

"Yeah, I'll go with you." You encourage Ciri to say her final goodbyes to the fallen Skjall, and perhaps give him the hero's burial he was denied. Yennefer opens a portal, and you both teleport to Hindarsfjall. Main Quest: Skjall's Grave begins, and Ciri is stronger.

Ciri's Fate (5 of 5): Positive Choice (+1)

"No time." Although you understand she wishes to pay her respects to the "Craven" one, there simply isn't time to waste journeying to Hindarsfjall. The Wild Hunt must be stopped now! Main Quest: Skjall's Grave isn't available, and Ciri is weakened by your choice.

Ciri's Fate (5 of 5): Negative Choice (-1)

OBJECTIVE:

- (Battle Preparations): Help Ciri confront her past.

Main Quest: Skjall's Grave

Craven No More

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: SKJALL'S GRAVE

LOCATIONS : Avallac'h's Island, Lofoten Cemetery (Hindarsfjall), Skjall's Grave
CHARACTERS : Ciri, Skjall, Hindarsfjall Villagers

OBJECTIVE:

- Nearest Signpost: Lofoten Cemetery (Hindarsfjall).

Ciri is still seething after her encounter with the she-elf. But she isn't ready to return to Avallac'h yet. She seeks the whereabouts of a young man named Skjall, whom she met on Hindarsfjall. The bad news just keeps coming. Ciri is informed Skjall is dead. She softly asks whether you could accompany her to his grave. Agree to continue this quest, or refuse to ignore this quest. Yennefer opens a portal to Hindarsfjall. Use it, or meet Ciri there under your own steam.

Visit the isle of Hindarsfjall, and locate Lofoten Cemetery. After scouring the graves looking for Skjall's headstone, answer how you wish, but the grave cannot be found. Ciri is suddenly gripped by fury. Surely the villagers wouldn't have left Skjall to rot in the sheep pit beyond the village? She sets off to find out, and you discover the remains of Skjall, given a craven's grave.

You help pull Skjall's corpse up to a clifftop grave overlooking the sea. You are disturbed by a band of villagers annoyed at your defiance of the elders' writ. You can:

- Tell them to quiet down.
- Tell them their laws don't bind you.

Either utterance, coupled with Ciri's instance on a furious vengeance if the grave is disturbed, keep the townsfolk from desecrating the grave. At least in death, Skjall's honor is saved. Now you must return to the ship in Kaer Trolde—either together instantly, or separately—as this quest concludes.

Main Quest: On Thin Ice

I Give You My Heart. But I Shall Take Your Head.

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

MAIN QUEST: ON THIN ICE

RELATED QUESTS : Main Quest: Battle Preparations, Main Quest: Tedd Deireadh, The Final Age

LOCATIONS : Marlin Coast (Undvik), Nilfgaardian Camp, Naglfar Ship

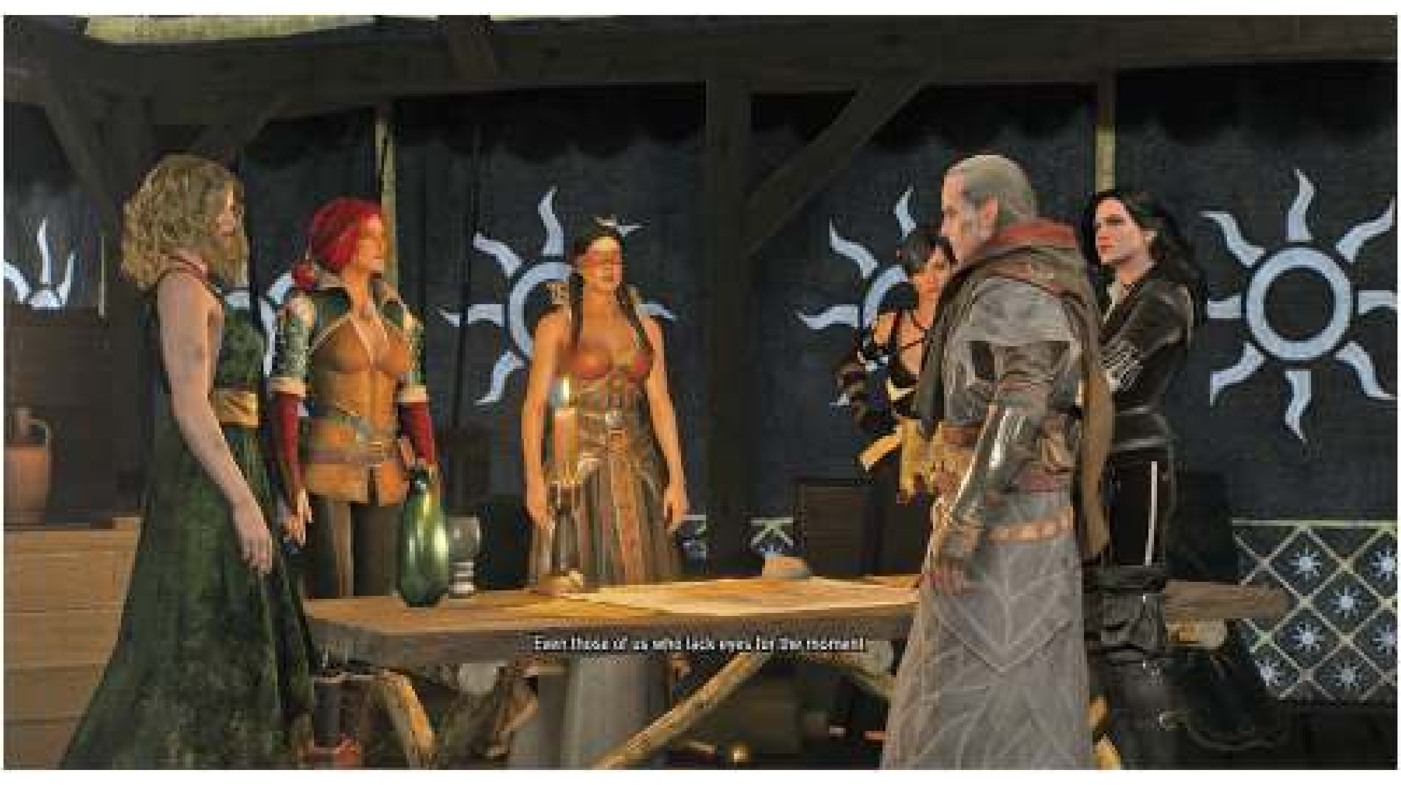
CHARACTERS : Margarita Laux Antille, Triss Merigold, Philippa Eilhart, Fringilla Vigo, Yennefer of Vengerberg, Cirilla, Avallac'h, Crach an Craite

ENEMIES : Hounds of the Wild Hunt, Wild Hunt Warriors, Carathir, Ice Elementals, Eredin

OBJECTIVE:

- Join Avallac'h and the sorceresses on Undvik.

Journey to Undvik Isle, and disembark at Marlin Coast (signpost) with the wrecks of various boats lying all around. Enter the Nilfgaardian camp, and you're ushered into a tent where battle plans are being hatched. A full coven of sorceresses is here. Margarita Laux Antille, Triss (if she didn't leave for Kovir), Philippa, Fringilla Vigo, and Yennefer stand around a table, with Ciri watching from the side. Avallac'h explains he will activate the Sunstone, hoping Caranthir will answer. The Wild Hunt's ship (the Naglfar) should then appear.



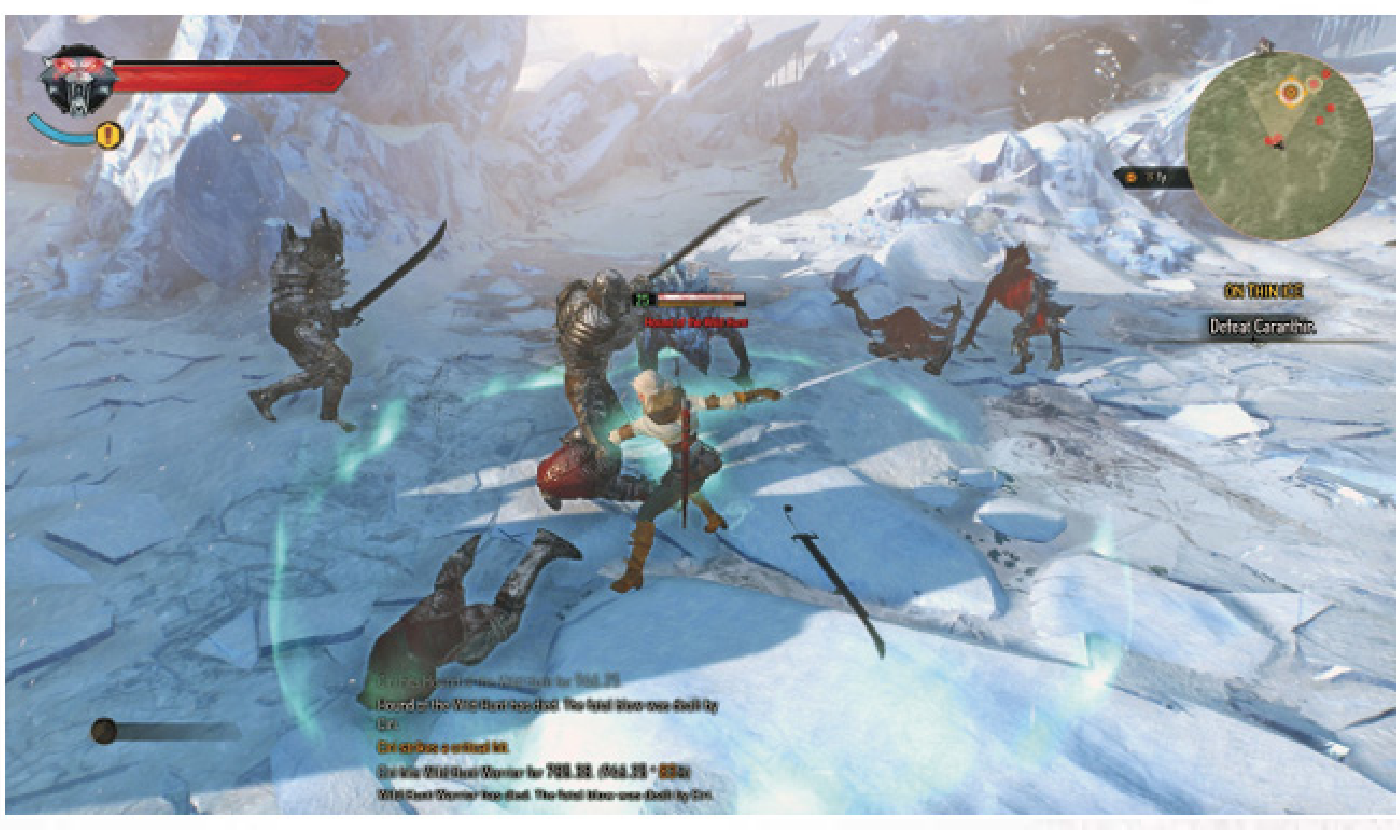
The sorceresses shall prevent the shio from returning to the world of the Aen Elle, while the imperials block it physically. The sorceresses set out to their clifftop positions, while Ciri protests at being left "at a safe distance." Answer how you wish.

- Then agree to join Avallac'h, heading to battle at once.
- Or join him later, look around camp, overhear soldier conversations, and commence any final preparations. Then join him at the Nilfgaardian ship at the pier.

OBJECTIVE:

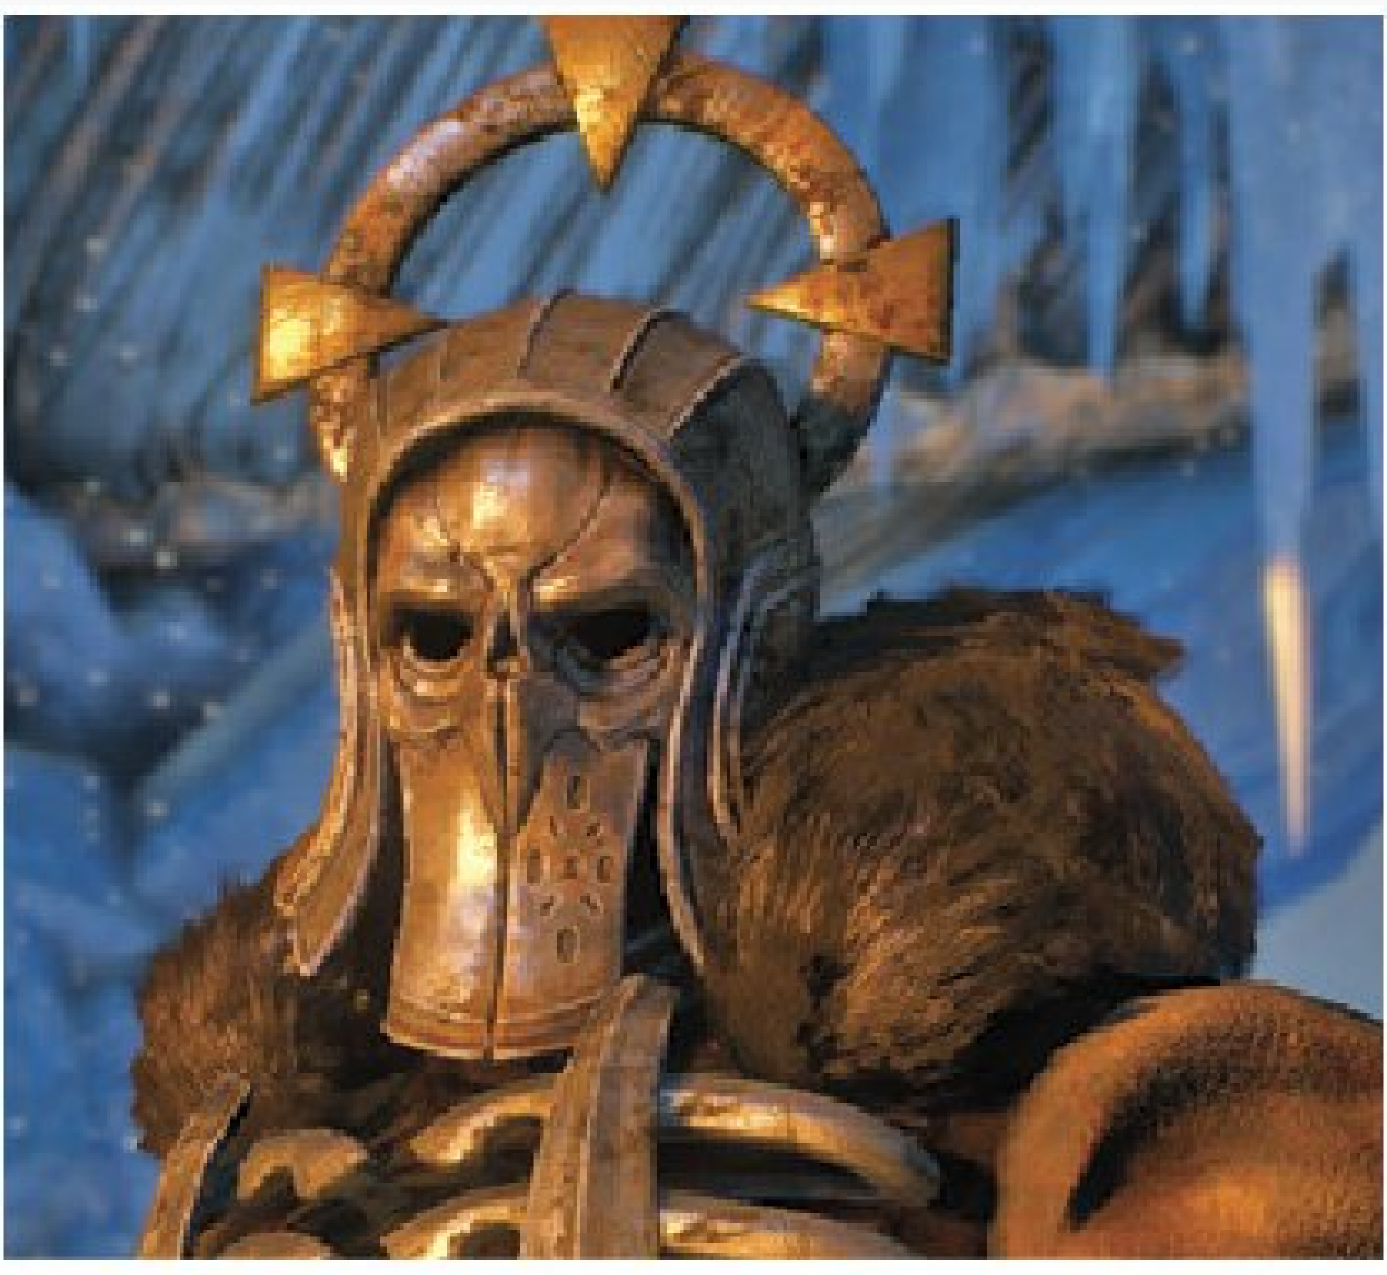
- Defeat Caranthir.

The Sunstone is used and the Naglfar appears from a rift. The sorceresses begin their spell. You travel aboard the Nilfgaardian ship, until the riders of the Hunt cast a spell that freezes the water, forcing you to search for the Naglfar on foot. Back at the harbor, Avallac'h sees this trap, and urges Ciri to find the mage that cast the spell, and destroy his staff.



You are Ciri. Utilize your Charge attack and sword strikes to cut through six Wild Hunt warriors and around a dozen hounds of the Wild Hunt with relative ease. The fight looks daunting, but isn't. Slice through the enemy troops as you head roughly north along the ice, onto the frozen shore and then out across an icy promontory towards the Naglfar itself. Expect to make short work of around 12 more warriors before you reach a large icy plateau—an arena where the dreaded Caranthir awaits.

You are Ciri. Begin to utilize your "Charge and Slash" technique against Caranthir. It works very well and, with some deft dodging, you're able to whittle his health down. But then he begins to teleport out of your blade's range. Darting in and out of existence, you clash and a massive explosion rocks the shoreline. You're knocked out, but blink out of Caranthir's gauntlet before he can grab you. Geralt now removes his icy garb and drops down into the ice arena. En garde!



Caranthir

Main Quest: On Thin Ice

I Give You My Blade. You Better End Up Dead!

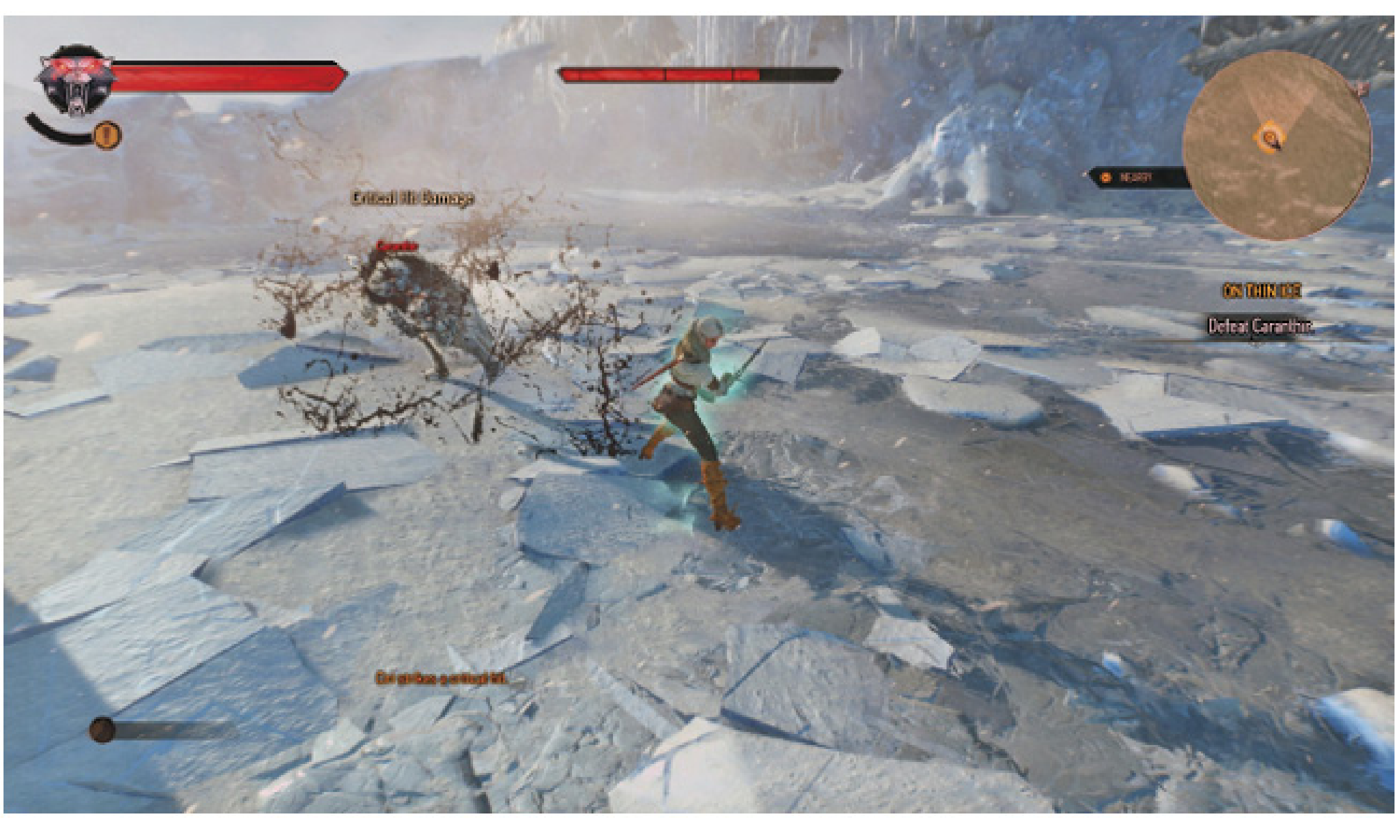
OBJECTIVE:

- Kill Caranthir.

Let battle begin! Close the gap between you and Caranthir by dashing forwards, then rolling to the sides to avoid his quintet of icy orbs, or his single projectile thrusts.

Time your rolls to occur just prior to the projectiles striking you. Make brief checks of your minimap when Caranthir teleports, so you can quickly turn to face him.

When he reaches around half his health, he summons a great slab of ice, which transform into an ice elemental. With Igni, talent, good dodge timing, and positioning yourself away from Caranthir so his projectiles actually strike this golem (protecting you in the process!), you're able to remove these threats.



Caranthir's projectiles are supplemented by a trio of orbs, one after the other. Roll and dodge them, and when slicing at your foe, make only three or four strikes before backing off, or you may be caught after he teleports and launches projectiles at you.

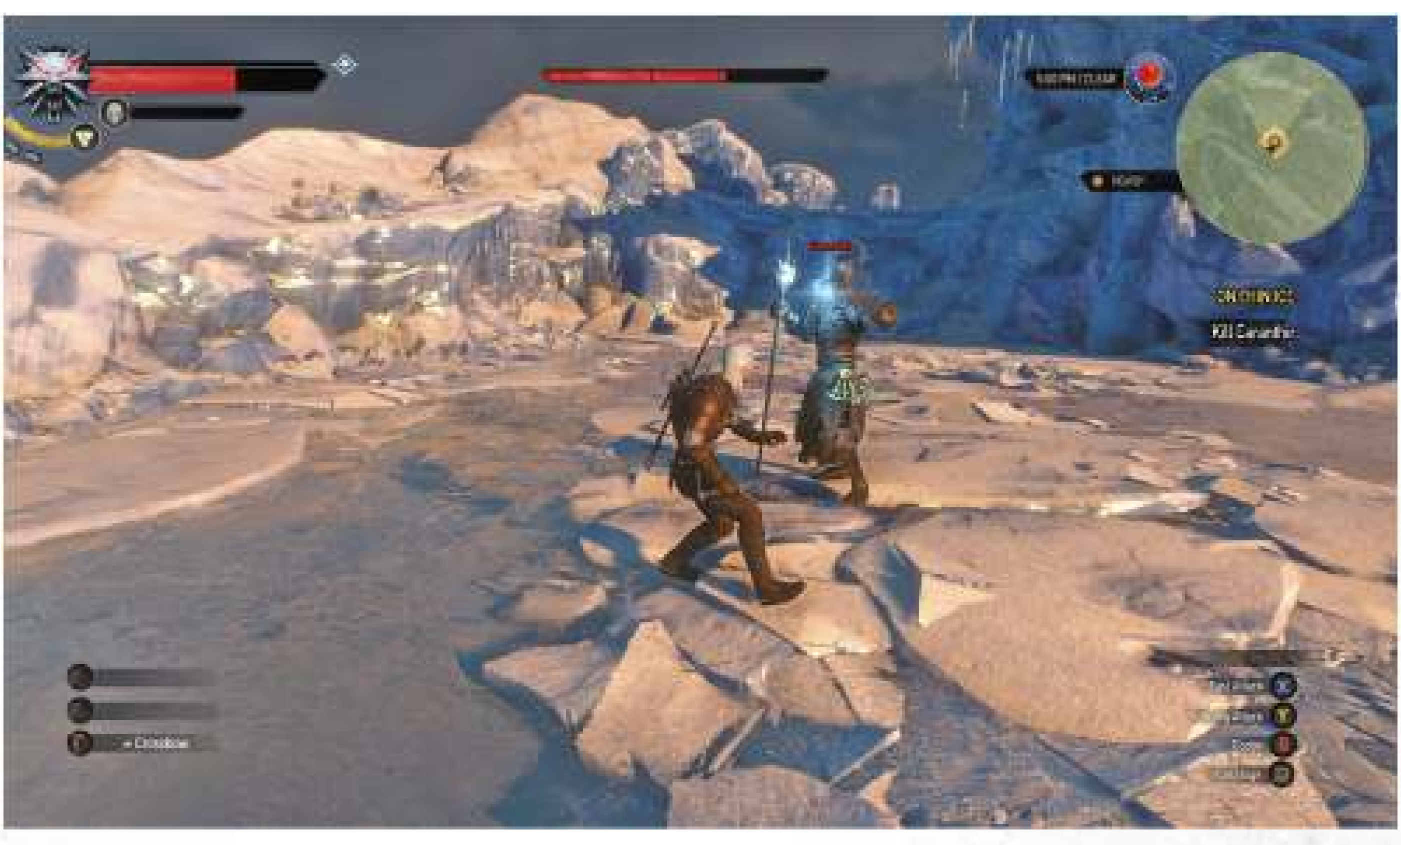
At around 5-10 percent of his health, Caranthir likely summons another ice elemental. You may be tempted to ignore this foe and concentrate on killing Caranthir, which is a worthwhile plan, as long as you avoid the elemental's attacks, and a second elemental summoned shortly afterwards.

KILLING CARANTHIR: BATTLE-TESTED TACTICS

There are two parts to this fight, beginning with Ciri. Caranthir attempts to engage in melee combat against the swordswoman, but as you are by now very familiar with, she is incredibly skilled and powerful. Rush him down and slash away with her sword.

He teleports when he takes enough damage, usually far enough away from Ciri that she cannot reach him during her lunging sword strikes. You can either sprint over to him to continue the offensive, or use Ciri's teleport slash to reach him even faster. Beware that Caranthir can also teleport directly behind Ciri for a surprise attack, but this can easily be countered with a fast attack or the teleport slash.

Once you deal enough damage to Caranthir as Ciri, an impressive cutscene plays out, with Ciri ending the spell Caranthir has been maintaining. After more drama unfolds, Geralt arrives to finish off the Wild Hunt sorcerer.



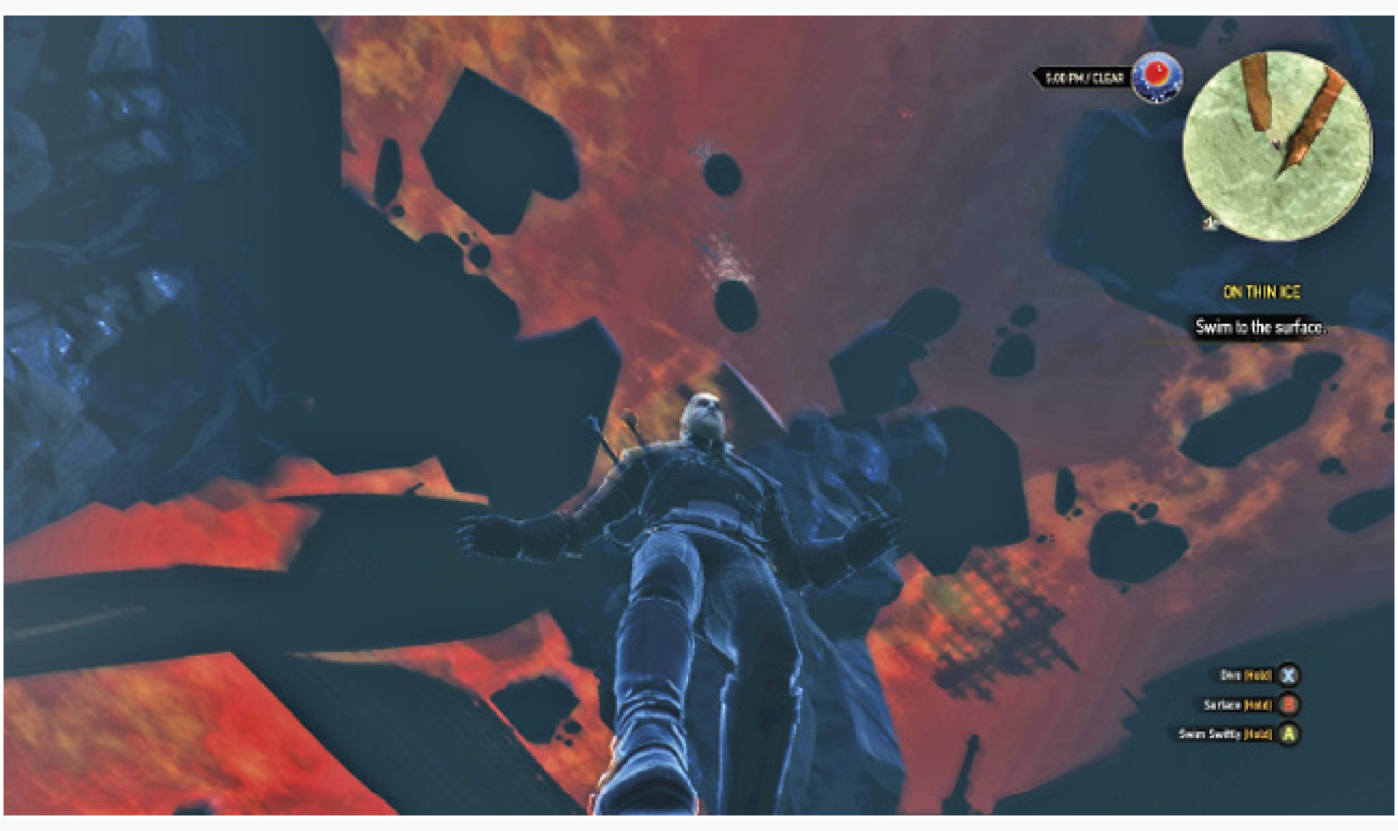
Caranthir steps up his efforts to defend himself with Geralt on the scene. One of his new attacks is to summon five lances of light over his head, and after a short delay he will fire them en masse at the witcher. Should he be struck by this barrage, Geralt will be partially frozen, slowing him down and making it harder to avoid other attacks.

Caranthir can also fire singular bolts of this powerful ice magic in fairly quick succession at Geralt. Roll to evade these targeted spells.

As when he fought Ciri, Caranthir teleports after sustaining damage from Geralt. After teleporting, he will use either version of his ice bolts. Work your way to Caranthir as quickly as possible to attack him, lest he teleports again. Striking him as he is preparing his ice bolts will cancel his attacks.

As you wear Caranthir down, he will begin summoning ice elementals into the arena. He is vulnerable during the summoning, so take that opportunity to hit him as much as possible before switching your focus to the ice elementals. Use Dimeritium Bombs on the elementals to help weaken them, but don't forget that Caranthir will still be firing his magic at Geralt. You'll have to be mindful of his attacks, while also dealing with the ice elementals own abilities. Try to get rid of the elementals first before returning your attention to Caranthir. If you allow multiple elementals to be summoned, it will be that much harder to address the sorcerer.

This can be a punishing and long fight to deal with, so stay focused on limiting the amount of harm Geralt endures. Once you do manage to defeat Caranthir, he attempts one last suicidal attack on the witcher, teleporting both himself and Geralt into the waters beneath the ice. Swim for the surface as fast as you can to avoid drowning!



DEFEATING CARANTHIR: THE BEST BATTLE TACTICS

Caranthir attacks with the following:

Ice shards conjured from a long distance. A few shards cast all at once, or a number one after another.

He summons ice elementals to act as bodyguard.

At close quarters, he casts a spell to toughen his armor with ice.

He also teleports to gain a better position on you.

Caranthir should be beaten with the following techniques:

Movement: At long range, dodge the ice shards easily. Then charge in between his spells. Use Fleet Footed to avoid incoming damage.

Signs: Use Quick Quen to ignore the multiple shards, an Alternative Quen to absorb incoming shards (if they are coming one after another). Caranthir's ice armor can be melted with Igni; save your Stamina (or Adrenaline) so you can cast it.

Alchemy: Fight aggressively, and if you're hit use Swallow and Whie Raffard's Decoction to replenish your health. Elemental Oil helps up the damage you inflict.

Ice Elementals: These can be kept alive, and used as cover from Caranthir's ice shards. These foes are slow, so slash at them to increase your Adrenaline points.

Finish him off: Caranthir teleports as soon as you begin to deal damage, so use Thunderbolt and heavy attacks to maximize your effectiveness.

Main Quest: On Thin Ice

Bearing the Brunt of the Wild Hunt

OBJECTIVES:

- Swim to the surface.
- Board the Naglfar.
- Kill Eredin.

With a sliver of health left, you plunge your sword into Caranthir, who collapses, grabs your ankle, and teleports beneath the ice. After kicking free, immediately swim upwards. Failure leads to death. As you grab an ice flow, you see Ciri's stumble into a portal. When you're able, rush up the ridge to the northeast, then drop down and lead the charge with a group of Skelligers to slay a trio of hounds. More appear, so be ready for them.

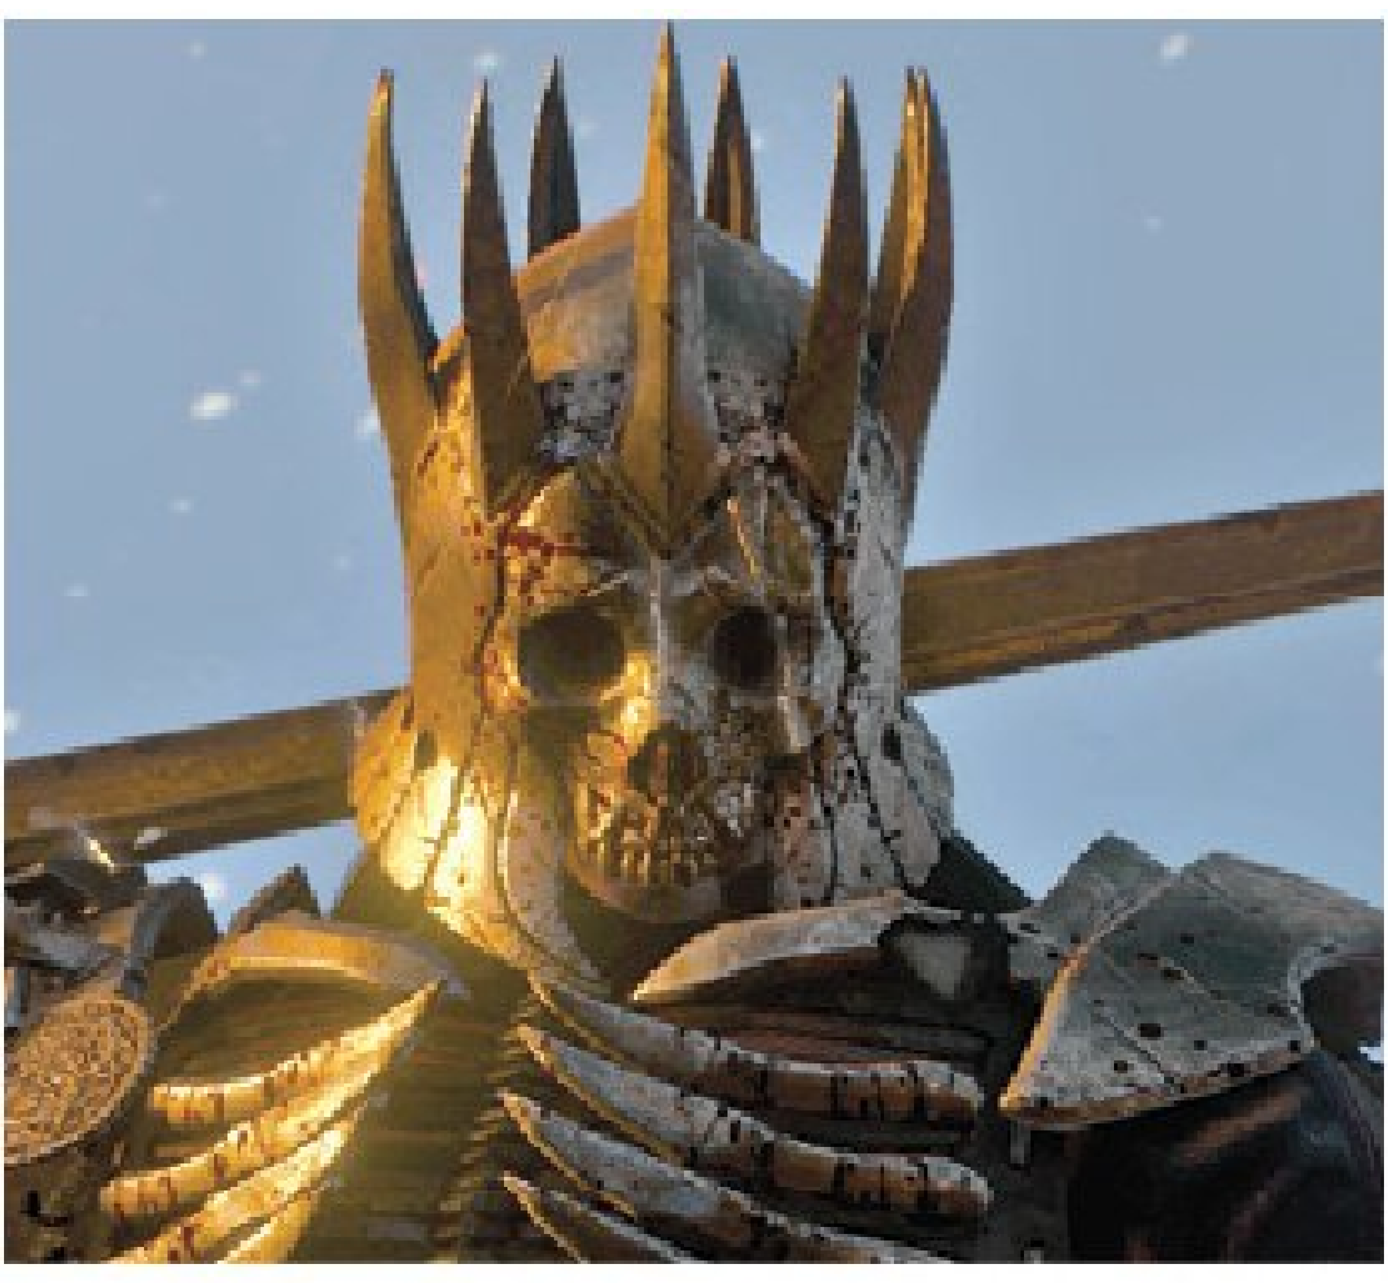
Jarl Udalryk is also here, fighting valiantly.

- His comments are different depending on whether you helped him during Secondary Quest: Possession.

Rush aboard the flaming Nilfgaardian ship, delivering sharp justice to up to five warriors as you progress to the ship's wheel. Leap off the vessel heading northeast, onto an ice flow. Kill two more warriors and four more hounds with the help of Skelligers and some Nilfgaardian soldiers. Then head north, boarding the Naglfar and bearing witness to Crach an Craite's valiant battle at the hands of Eredin. At this point, Hjalmar makes an appearance:

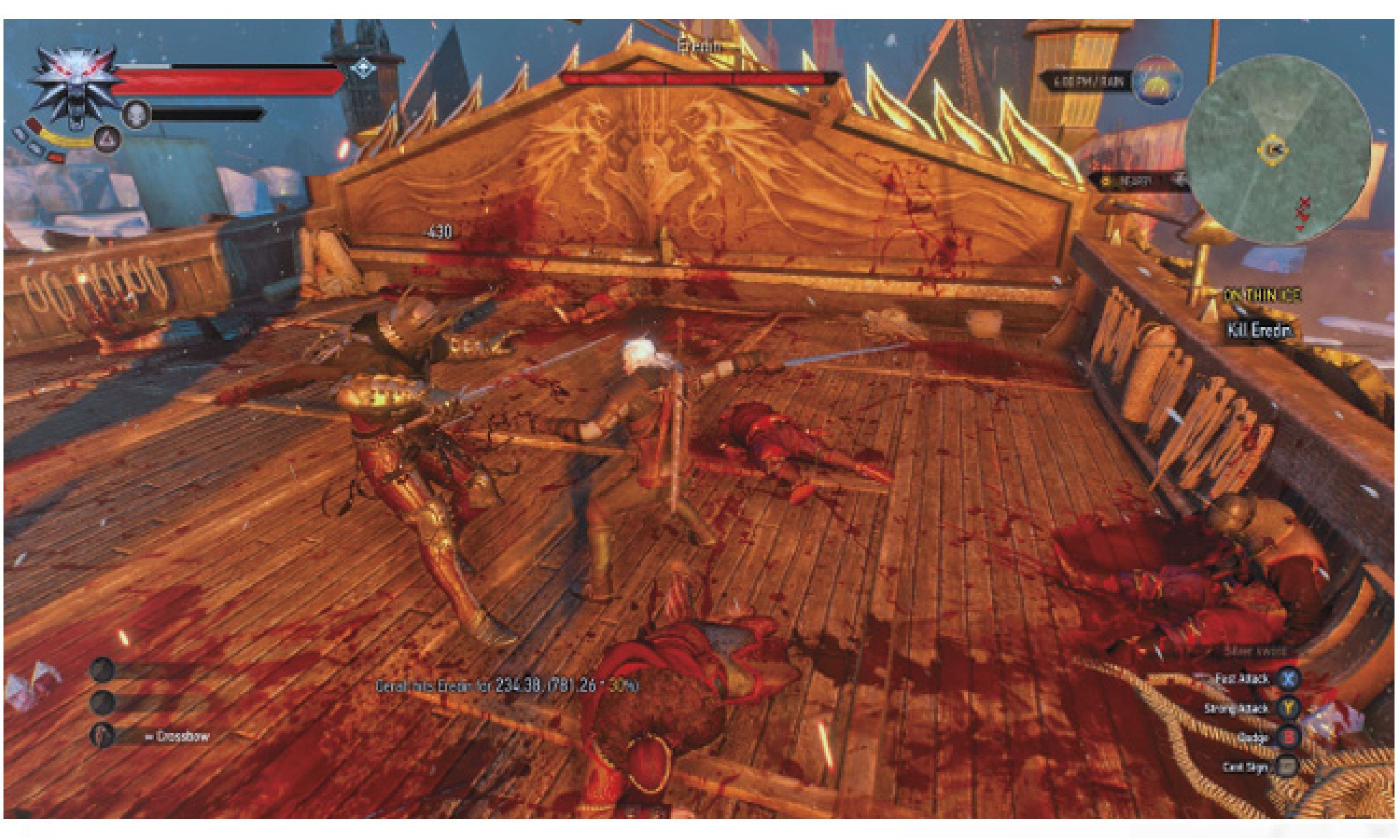
- If he is alive (you finished the Clan An Craite Quests), a burning Nilfgaardian soldier breaks down the burning cabin doors, and dies at your feet. A cheerful Hjalmar follows out afterwards.
- If Hjalmar is dead, a skellige soldier follows out afterwards.

Begin your battle with the leader of the Wild Hunt, watching for his almost instantaneous teleport. Roll or quickly sidestep as soon as you see this occur, then perfect your parrying and then counter-striking. Patience is key here. Swift retaliation, the odd in-and-out stabs are better than lengthy attempts at combination strikes. Expect heavy loss of health if you're struck. After whittling his health down a quarter, Eredin opens a portal, and throws you into a plateau on the cliffs atop Undvik!



Eredin

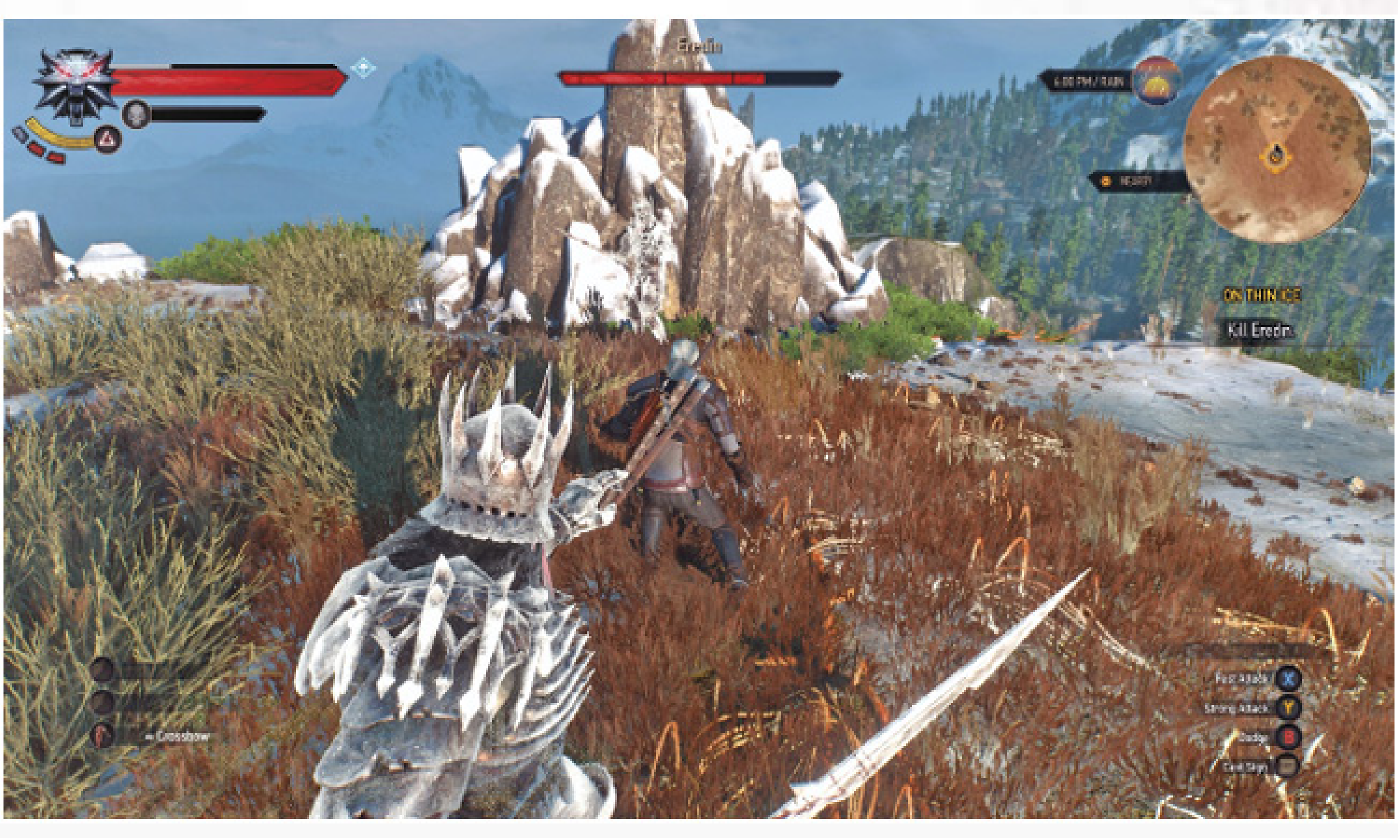
At this point, he adds a single, a trio, and a set of six fast ground waves—these must be dodged. Then expect him to blink away from you, summon an orb close by that saps your health. Flee from the orb, and close the gap before dealing more quick strikes. Should Eredin be clad in ice, use Igni to melt it so your attacks have more potency. Back up and avoid his series of strong attacks, retaliating with a well-timed strike at the end of Eredin's last swing.



KILLING EREDIN: BATTLE-TESTED TACTICS

The battle against the Wild Hunt overlord begins with him taunting you. Take that time to duck into your items menu and use potions that will help you stay in the fight. Tawny Oil, Swallow, and Full Moon are all good choices if you've made the higher quality brews. Blizzard is also a good potion for the fight. Eredin's swordplay can be difficult to parry or counter-attack.

The first phase of the fight can be very short, depending on your skill and your gear. Eredin hits quite hard even against a well-armored witcher. Eredin's defenses are quite stiff. Reckless attacking will only serve to get you killed when he inevitably counterattacks one of your swings. When he has his sword up in a defensive stance, he will block your attacks unless you manage to flank him.

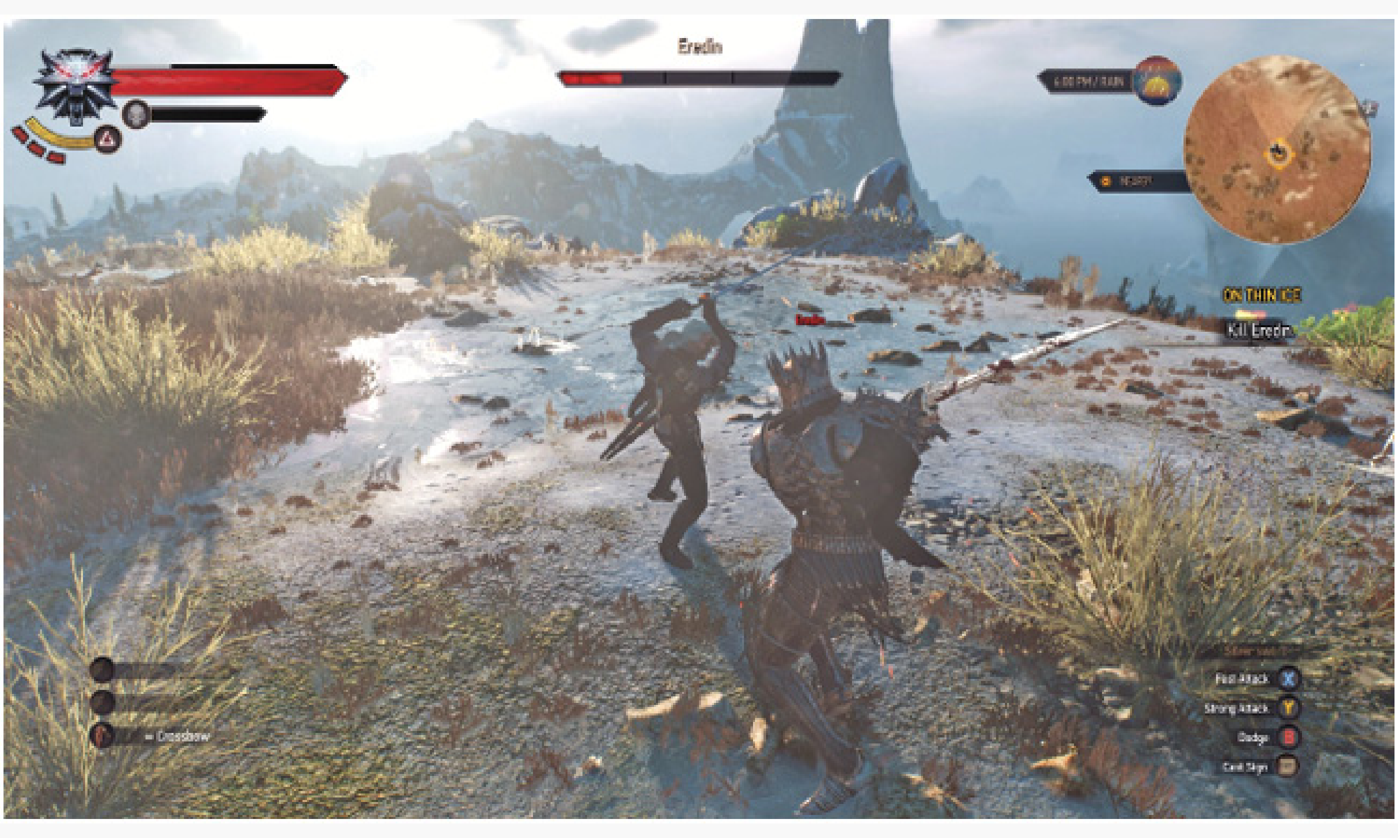


Like Ciri, Eredin can teleport. He appears behind Geralt to try and score a fatal series of sword strikes. Roll away from him in those circumstances, it's possible a simple dodge will not get you out of range.

Facing Eredin head on is a dangerous proposition. Not only is he a skilled defender with his sword, he is more than a match on the offense. His strikes come fast enough that it is almost completely unsafe to attempt heavy strikes unless it is after a counter-attack and he is temporarily off balance. If you cannot perform counters, parry or roll out of the way.

Watch for him to raise his sword overhead with both hands. This attack cannot be parried or countered, only evaded. The attack comes quickly, and can be done in the middle of his sword combos, after a teleport, or after he counters Geralt.

The key to fighting Eredin, at any point in the fight, is to dodge or parry any melee attacks, while remaining close enough to score a heavy strike when the opening presents itself. This is a fight won by inches, blow by blow. Getting greedy can be extremely painful for you.



Watch out for him to try backhanding or kicking Geralt. These attacks cannot be parried or countered, and if they land will stun the witcher long enough that he may not be able to roll or dodge the follow-up sword slashes.

After losing roughly a quarter of his Vitality, Eredin creates a portal and sends Geralt and himself to a clifftop arena. This marks the beginning of the second, and most difficult phase of the battle.

In addition to his melee prowess, Eredin gains several new attacks in this arena. The first is the ability to fire shockwaves from his sword. This is often telegraphed by him teleporting to a far point in the area, and holding his sword overhead. He fires one shockwave first, then three waves in a fan pattern, followed by five. It's a simple matter of running around Eredin to evade the attack, but if you are too far away, the last set of shockwaves can be hard to evade. Use the delay between each attack to close in and score a hit.

After a teleport, Eredin can also call down a storm of ice-laden meteors. Stay on the move, and avoid the projected impact zones, appearing as a patch of ground glowing brighter that the rest. If you get hit, you will be partially frozen and move much slower, making it more likely that you suffer multiple hits. You can run up to Eredin while he channels this spell, and get him to hurt himself with the meteors for a good amount of damage. This immediately cancels the spell, and leaves him open for an attack.

His final new attack is the ability to summon magical spheres at Geralt's feet, which explode after a short delay. As with the meteors, getting harmed by this will partially freeze Geralt and make him much slower on his feet. Keep moving, ideally towards Eredin, and land a heavy strike to cancel the spell.

After Eredin falls below a third of his total Vitality, he taunts Geralt again, and he becomes significantly more aggressive. Remain calm, and continue to concentrate on minimizing how much he hits you, while scoring hits whenever he presents the opportunity.

Just before defeat, Eredin will open a portal back to the ship the fight began on, presumably to try and leave Geralt stranded on the cliff top above the shores of the Marlin Coast. Follow the elf back through the portal, and finish him off!

Main Quest: Skjall's Grave

End: Battle Preparations: To War!

OBJECTIVE:

- Let Avallac'h know everything is ready.

Return to the ship moored in Kaer Trolde harbor, and speak with Avallac'h. In addition to any questions you didn't ask him earlier (when you thought he was hiding something), you can talk about the following:

- About using the Sunstone: Confide that you are worried Eredin will figure out where they are when the artifact is used. Avallac'h tells you the signal may be changed so Eredin won't know where it is emitted from. Oh, and there are other artifacts that could have been used.
- About your visit to his laboratory: He says his work isn't important any more, and it was to protect Ciri and others that carry the blood. Mention the she-elf, and Avallac'h refuses to discuss his feelings to her or Ciri.
- That everything is ready, and the ship can sail to Undvik. You can choose to automatically reach there (and begin Main Quest: On Thin Ice), or prepare for the confronation with Eredin first. Then all these related quests conclude.

Main Quest: On Thin Ice

End: Cold Contempt

When Eredin is almost brought down, he vanishes in an arched portal. Head through, appearing back on the Naglfar. After a few more well-placed slashes, you better Eredin in combat. Slumped and without his mask, he tells you Avallac'h has tricked you both—and has made off with Cirilla! As hounds bound up onto the deck, you're grabbed by Yennefer, and sucked back into her portal. The quest concludes, and Main Quest: Tedd Deireadh, The Final Age immediately begins.

DEFEATING EREDIN: THE BEST BATTLE TACTICS

Eredin attacks with the following:

Swords: He is adept at swordplay, enhanced by the Wild Hunt's magic. He can perform long combos, block your attacks and Signs, and can easily counter you and strike back viciously afterwards.

Teleports: He uses a short teleport to overpower your mobility. He gains ice armor every time he employs this technique. Once damaged, he drags you through a portal to a large arena.

Spells: On the cliff top arena, he uses three spells to defeat you: a single slashing wave of power, a multiple slash wave of power, and a rain of ice shards.

Eredin should be beaten with the following techniques:

Signs: Melt his ice armor with Igni. Eredin can block your channeled igni, but cannot perform any other action during this time, buying you some time to replenish your health with food or potions. Use Yrden to weaken Eredin's mobility.

Swordplay: Eredin's long combos are deadly, so hold your guard and wait for a good opportunity to strike.

Bombs: Samum is a low risk, high reward strategy; a well-timed throw lets you utilize a few extra attacks as Eredin staggers from the explosion.

Dodge Eredin's spells with swift movement, retreating, and Quen. The rain of shards is both chaotic and dangerous, so look for shadows of incoming shards and move away from them.

Finish him off: When Eredin is low on health, he desperately casts rain of ice shards and escapes through the portal; waste no time following him, and dodging any last shards.

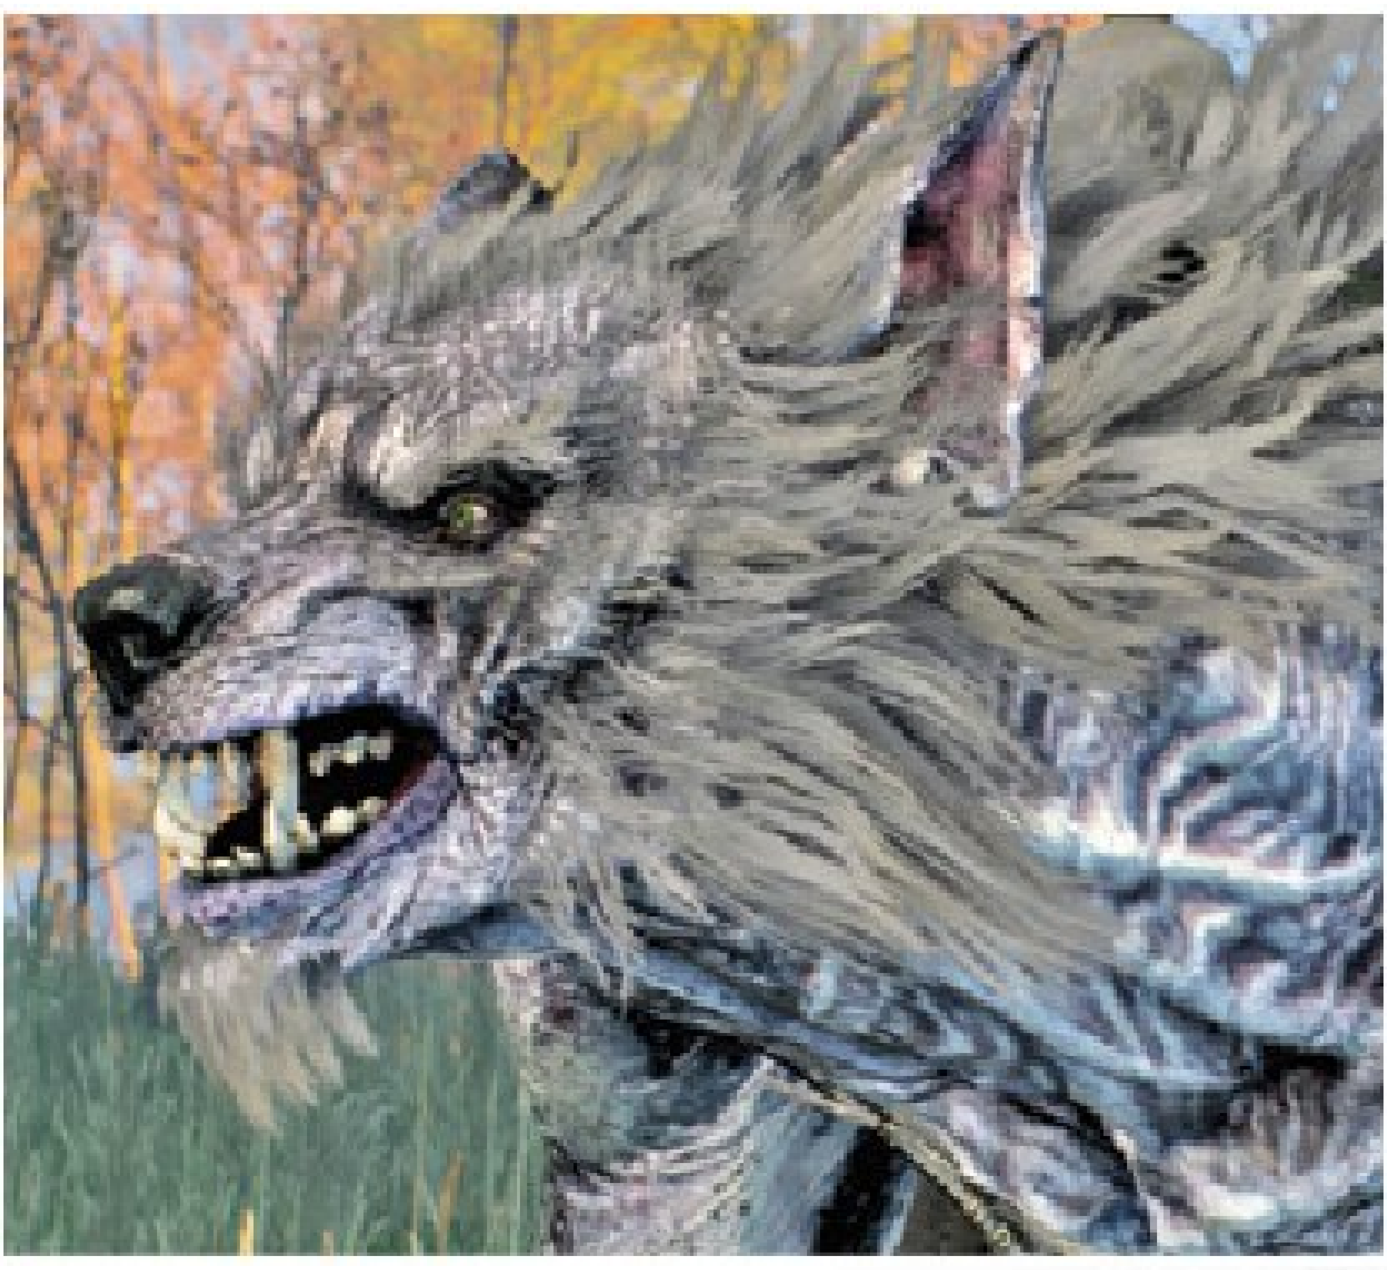
QUESTING DECISIONS

This conclusion of your Wild Hunt occurs if you made three of the previous five choices during your adventure:

- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you chose to drink with Ciri instead of engaging in a snowball fight.
- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you chose to take coin from Emhyr when visiting with Ciri, instead of refusing it.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Final Preparations, you decided to talk to the Lodge of Sorceresses instead of letting Ciri go in alone.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Battle Preparations, you gave Ciri Lara Dorren's necklace instead of letting her ransack Avallac'h's laboratory.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Battle Preparations, you refused to let Ciri visit Skjall's grave on Hindarsfjall.

OBJECTIVES

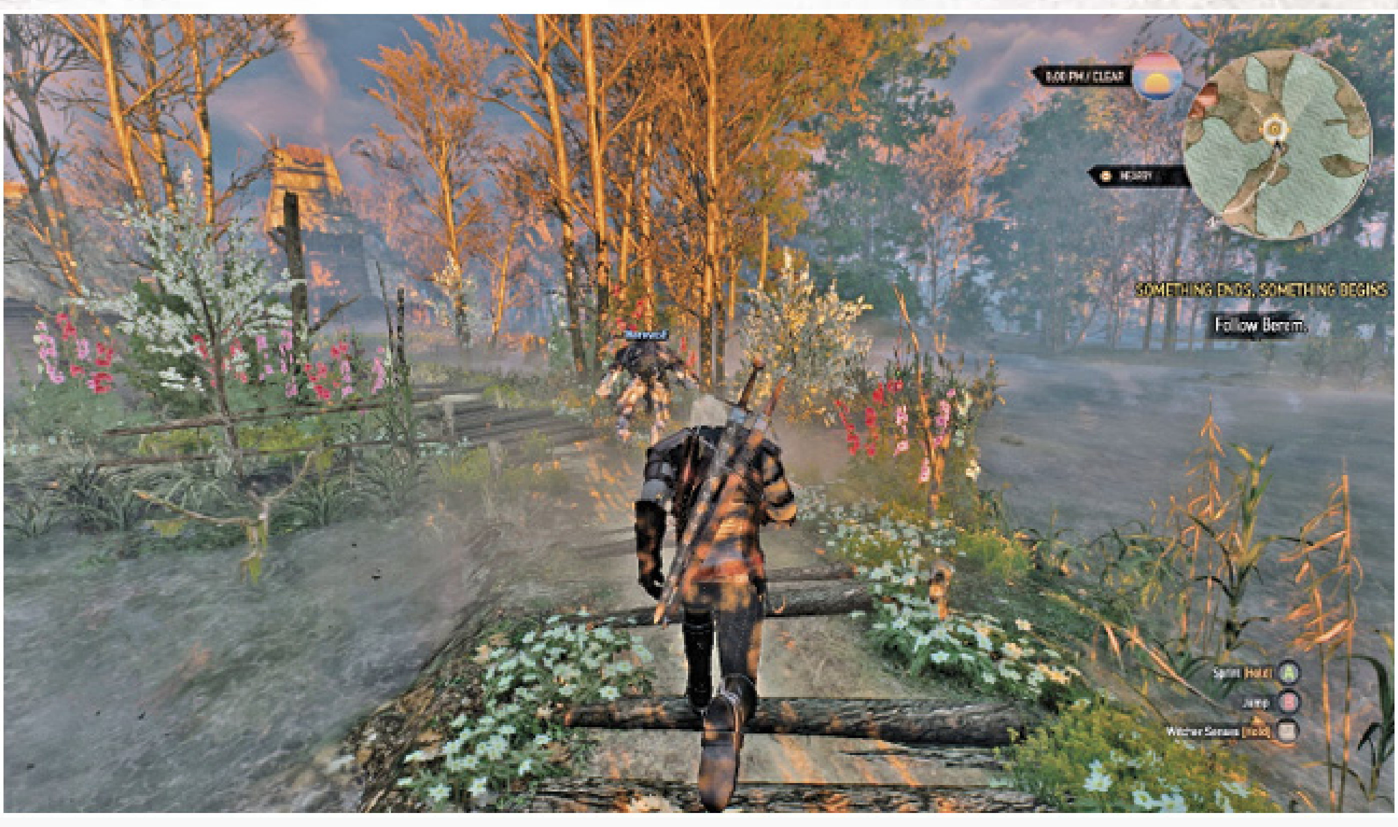
- Talk to the werewolf.



Berem

It is late in the evening as you slog your way through the muck of Crookback Bog. There is a murderous intent shining in your eyes. Head east to reach the werewolf. He seems to be resigned to his fate, telling you the swamp is poisoned, and he has no strength to hunt humans. You ask about the crone. The one that stole your dead daughter's medallion. Then you give the beast a choice:

- "No": A quick death, in combat against you. The werewolf and you engage in a vicious battle. This quest then skips to locating the crone you seek.
- "There's one": A sparing of life, of the werewolf that now helps you. Follow the werewolf roughly northwards, until Berem senses a wolf… and men.

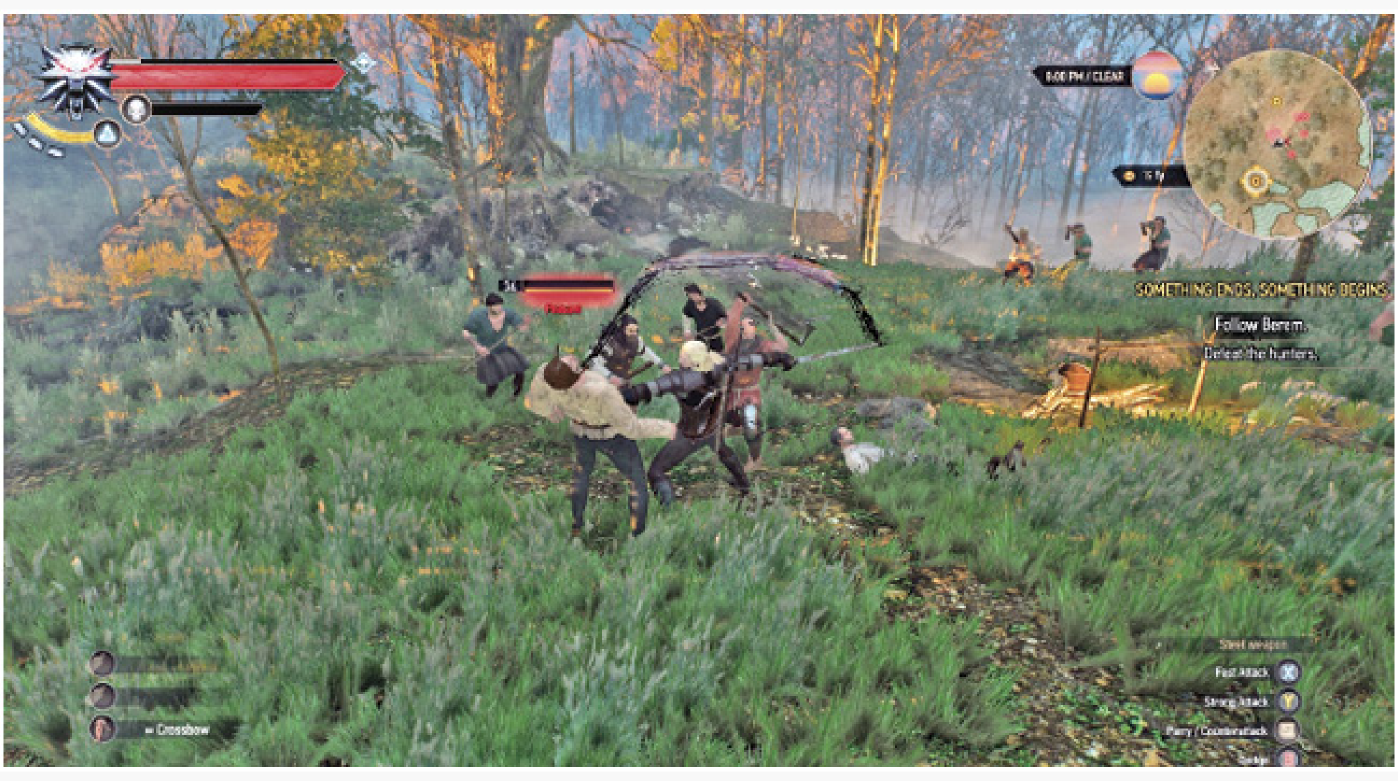


OBJECTIVES

- (Optional) Follow Berem.
- (Optional) Defeat the hunters.

The men have caught a she-wolf. They mean to kill her for sport. One of the hunters is missing an ear. Answer the hunters as you wish. They refuse to speak of the crone or free the she-wolf.

- After belting the earless one on his arse, a fracas begins. Slay all ten hunters, and two wild dogs they set upon you. Berem claws at these peasant too, and victory is assured.
- Telling them it's none of your business. You leave them to torture the she-wolf, and continue deeper into the bog with Berem.



You finish off your final foe, and Berem mentions one of the she-wolf's cubs has survived. You remain unmoved (but fleet of foot) there is no time to save the cub. Continue east across the great swamp, following Berem. You may have to tackle a water hag, but the familiar pathways leading to Crookbag Bog Orphans' Village soon appear. You dismiss Berem, telling him to rescue that cub. He must flee.

Main Quest: Tedd Deireadh, The Final Age

The Wild Hunt Are Defeated. The White Frost Is Not.

OBJECTIVE:

- Get to the elven tower.

Head roughly north up the winding steps and steep path of Tor Gvalch'ca, and into the central summoning circle where Avallac'h is. You tell him to draw his weapon, but he throws it away. You can:

- Tell him you're not falling for that.
- Tell him that won't spare him.

The outcome is the same: Ciri appears to prove Avallac'h isn't the threat you deem him to be. She aims to enter the tower. Answer her how you wish regarding this plan. She aims to rid the world of the White Frost. You have four conversation choices. Answer her how you wish (and choose from a second four choices with a timer), as she steps forward into the tower despite any protests. Her fate now resides in your past choices, as this quest concludes, and one of three Epilogues commences…

OBJECTIVES

FACING THE CRONE ALONE

If you killed the werewolf, simply head east through the swamp to the Orphan's Village within Crookbag Bog, and face the crone alone.

The last of the crones speaks to her dead sisters, vowing revenge. You reach her home, and coax her away from the tapestry. She mocks your dead daughter, and her accursed blood. When battle commences, prepare to face Weavess, two drowners, a water hag, and a grave hag. Concentrate on the crone, watching for her transforming disappearance into a flock of crows.

QUESTING DECISIONS

This conclusion of your Wild Hunt occurs if you made three of the previous five choices during your adventure:

- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you chose to engage in a snowball fight instead of drinking with Ciri.
- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you refused to take coin from Emhyr when visiting with Ciri, instead of taking it.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Final Preparations, you decided to let Ciri talk to the Lodge of Sorceresses alone instead of going with her.

- During Act III: Main Quest: Battle Preparations, you made time to visit Skjall's grave on Hindarsfjall, instead of refusing Ciri's request.

If you made three or more negative choices, Ciri is dead, and Something Ends, Something Begins (I) occurs instead.

For this ending, the following must also occur:

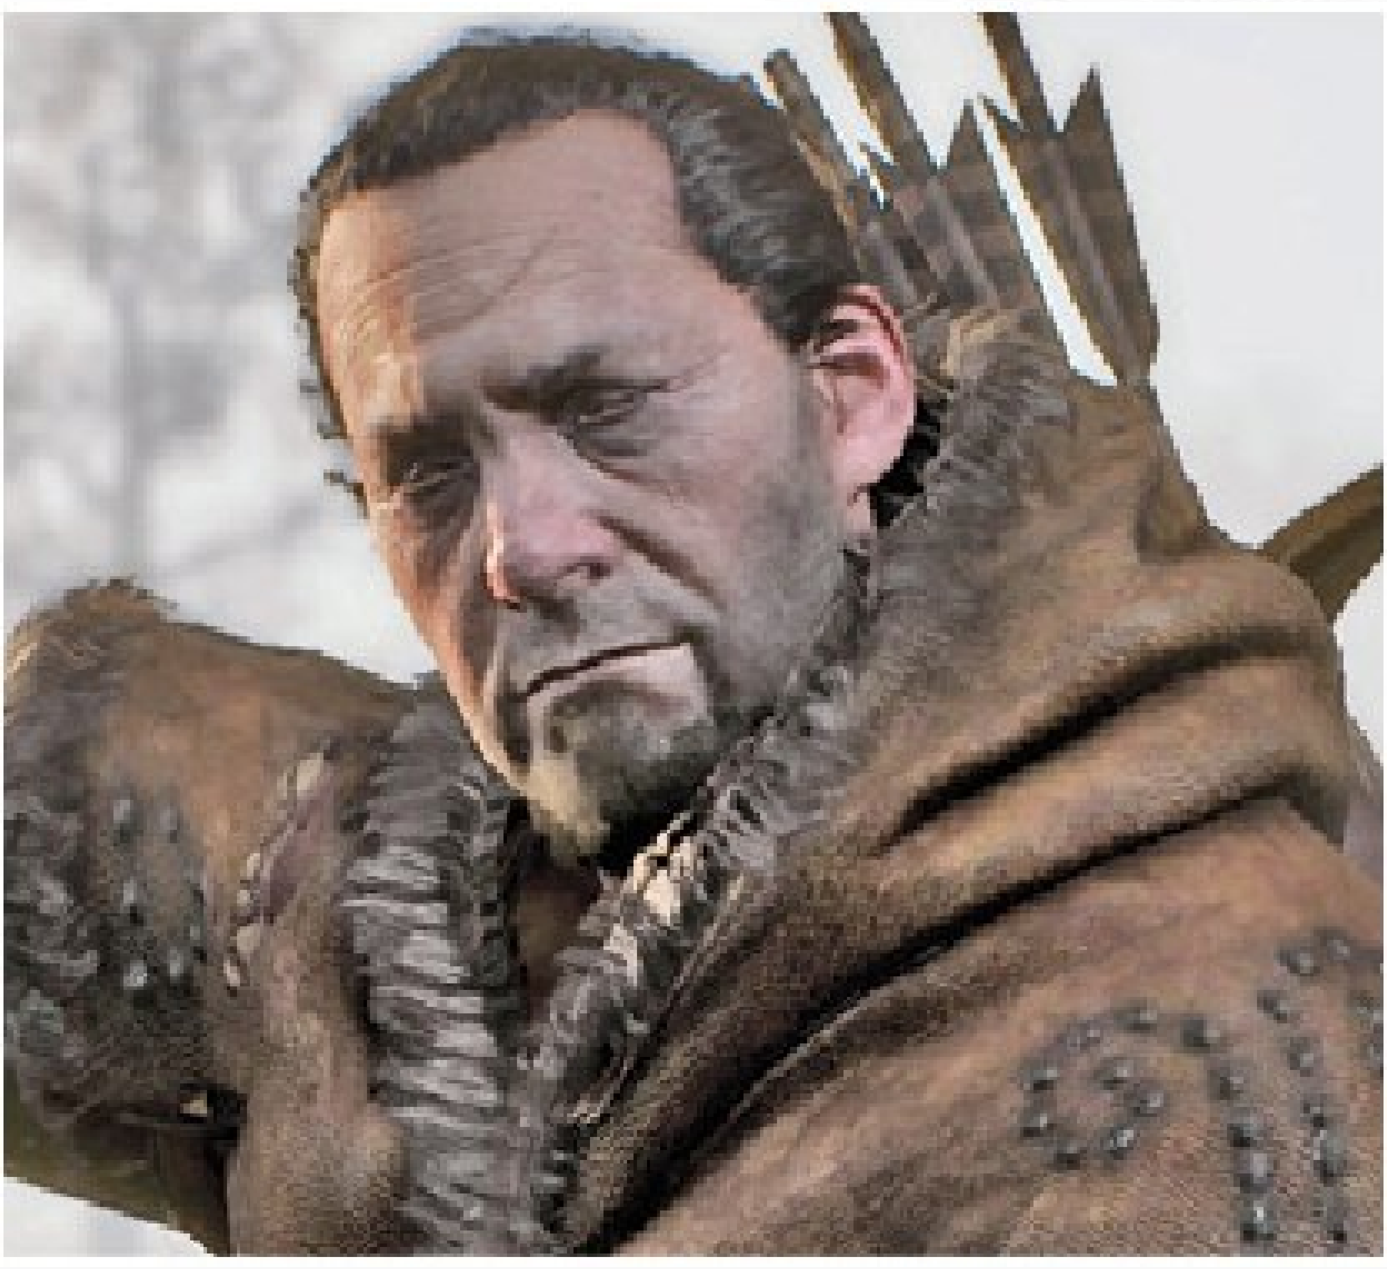
- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you agreed to visit Vizima and presented Ciri to Emhyr.
- During Act II, you completed The Assassins' Quests (Secondary Quest: An Eye for an Eye, Secondary Quest: A Deadly Plot, and Secondary Quest: Redania's Most Wanted), and during Act III you completed Secondary Quest: Reason of State, killed King Radovid, and sided with Vernon Roche. Subsequently, the emperor and Nilfgaardian army won the war over the Redanians and King Radovid.

OBJECTIVES

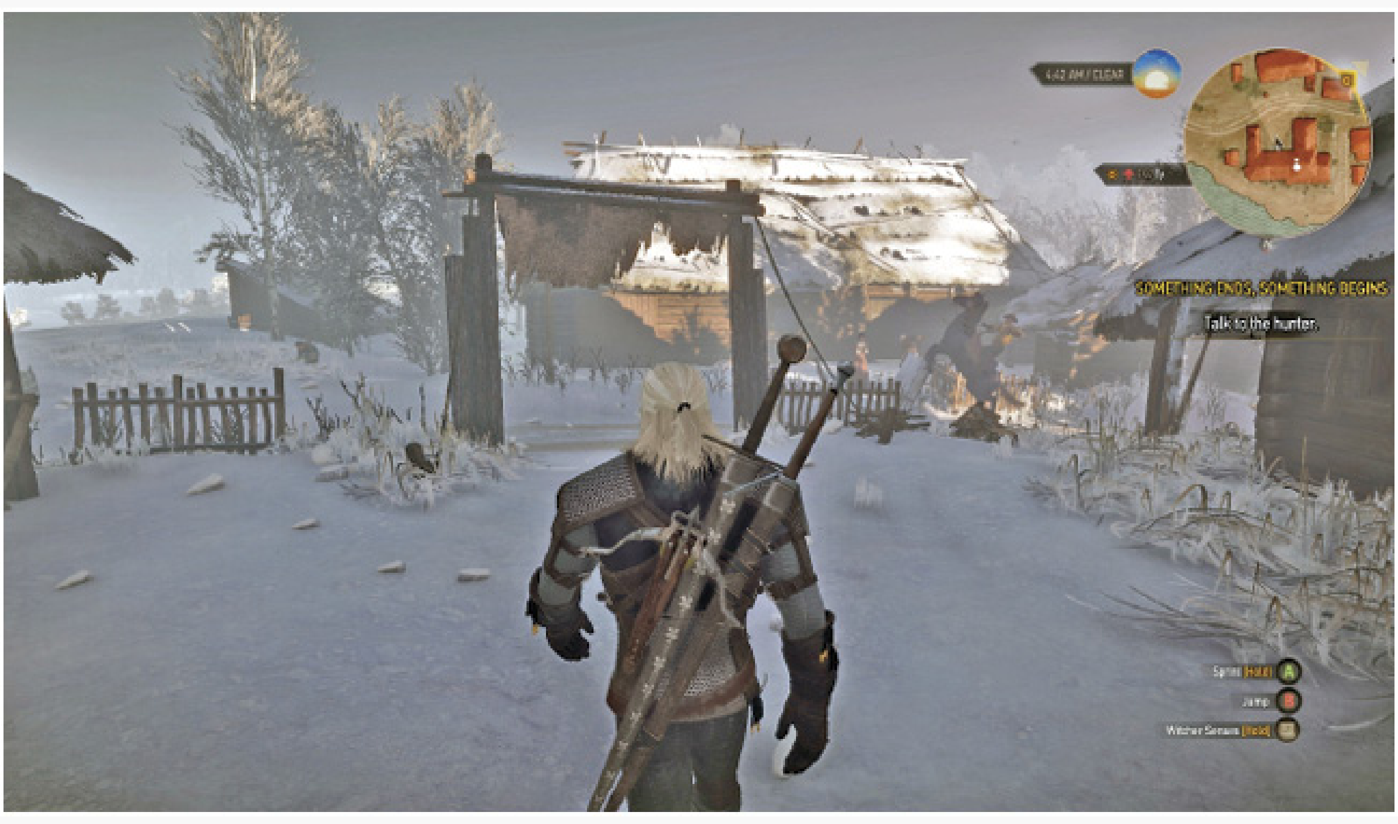
- Talk to the hunter.

A few months have passed. Dandelion and Zoltan are making merry in the White Orchard tavern, chortling about past conquests. You refuse a flagon of hooch, since you promised you'd be at the huntsman's cottage.

- If you are romantically involved with Triss Merigold, she joins in the revelry at the tavern table.
- If you are romantically involved with Yennefer of Vengerberg, she smiles at the festivities from the tavern table.
- If you have no romantic entanglements at this point, there is an empty chair at the tavern table.



Mislav



Time has passed, and it is chilly out. A thin blanket of soft snow shrouds the roads and thatched rooftops. A peasant is having trouble with his horse. Aid him (Secondary Quest: Faithful Friend), or continue. You pass a peasant in the village. You might stop by for some of his wife's pie later. Head roughly westward, out of the village, toward the hunter's cottage on the outskirts. Mislav is outside, tanning a hide. He tells you "she" is eager to roam the fields, and learn the ways of the hunter. But she is too impatient.

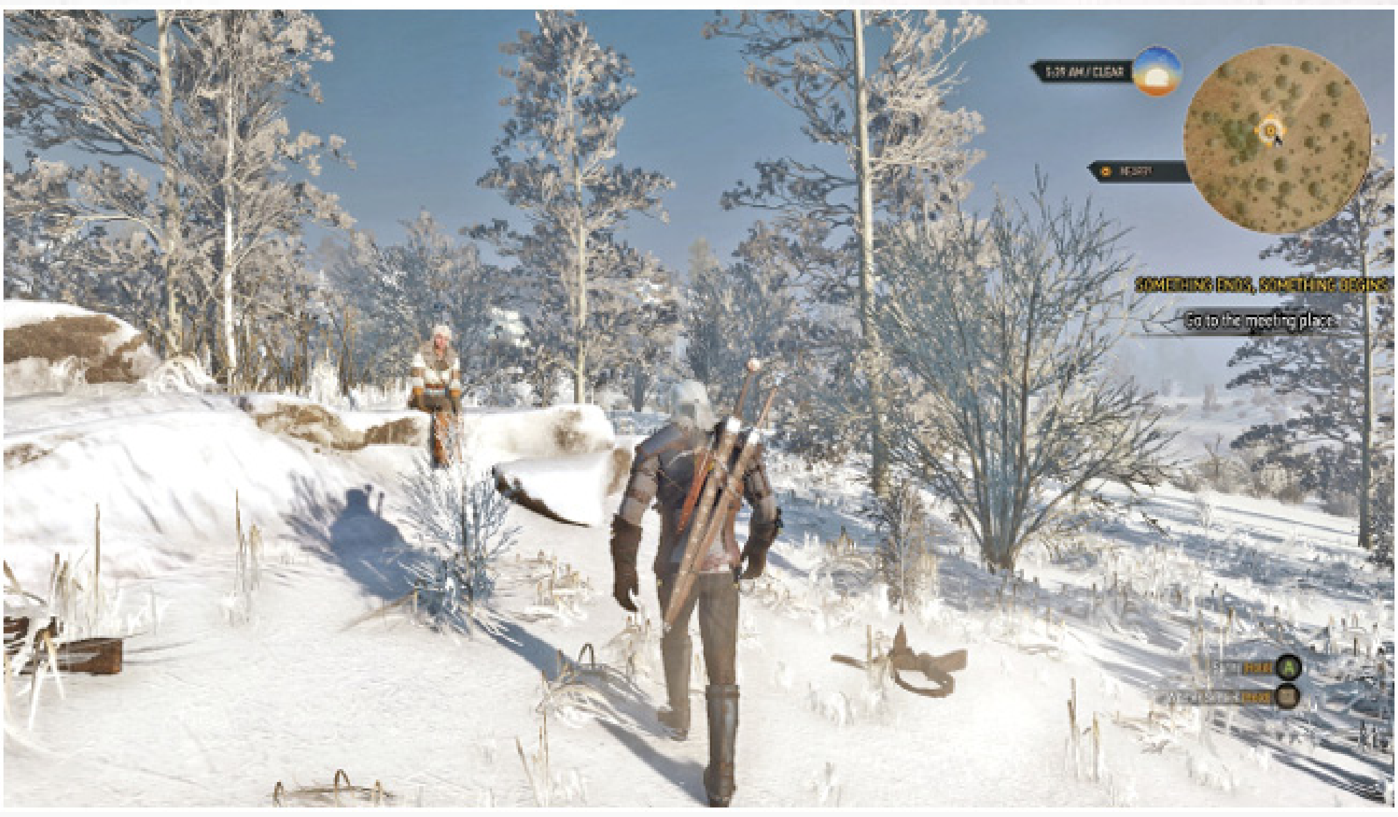
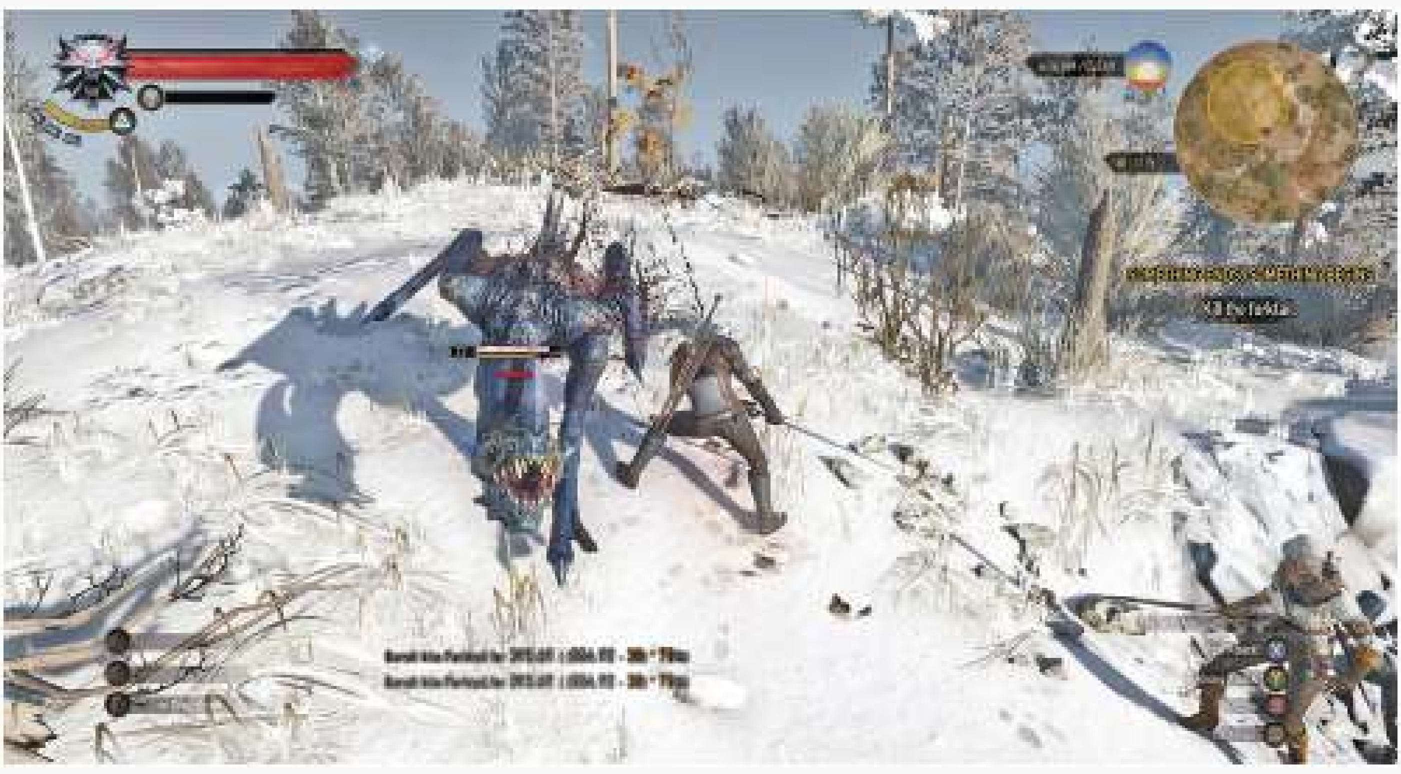
She seems a little melancholy, and isn’t up to snaring rabbits. She wants to see the griffin’s nest—the one you found many months ago. Answer her how you wish, before you set off.



SOMETHING ENDS, SOMETHING BEGINS
Go to the meeting place.

Follow the path south and begin to climb the stone ledges leading up to the griffin’s lair. Leap the crevasse, and you reach the nest at the brow of the hill. You warn Ciri to take care, but she refrains from listening. This is to her detriment, as a forktail has taken up refuge in this nest, and charges you both! Slay the forktail. Afterwards, you warn Ciri of her narrow escape, but she seems not to care. She’s frustrated by something. You offer to go fishing.



SOMETHING ENDS, SOMETHING BEGINS
Kill the forktail.

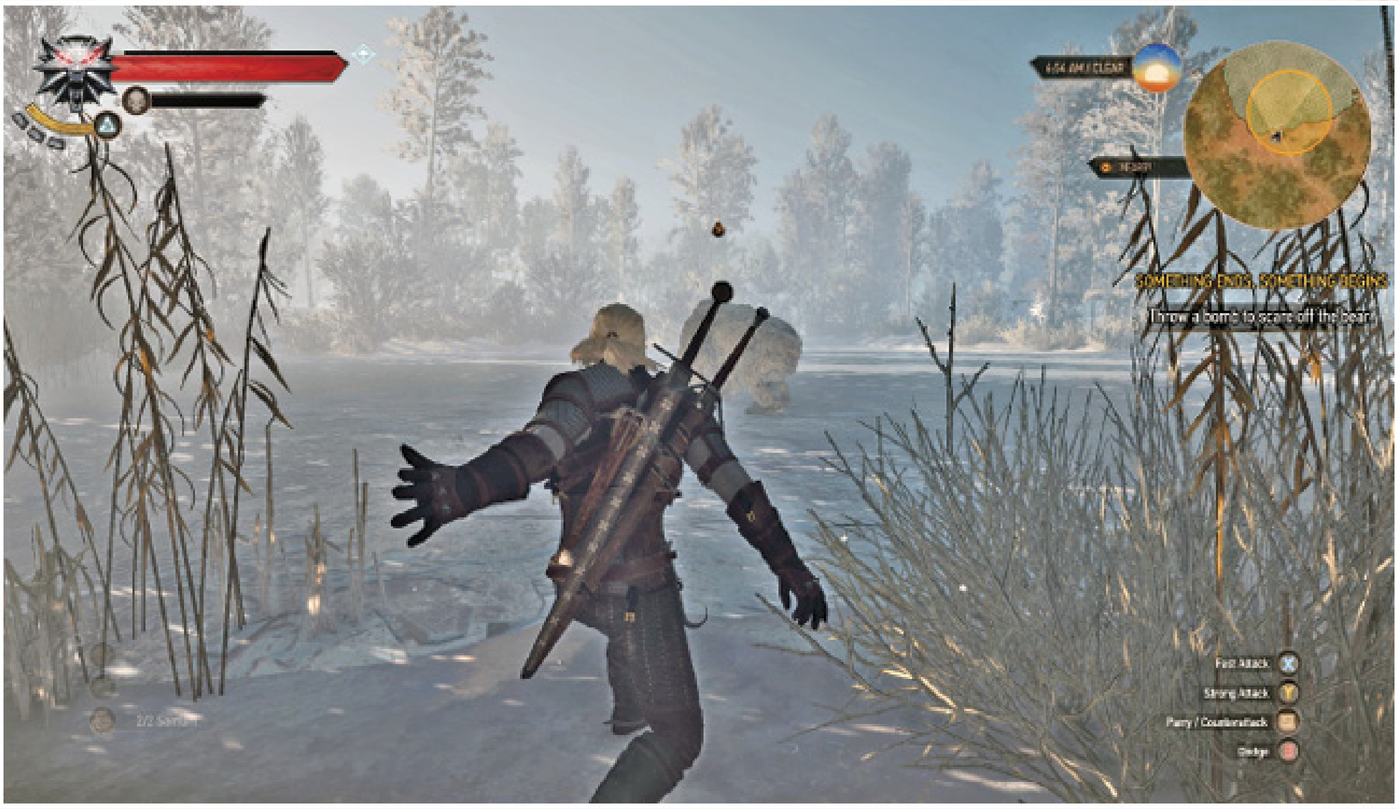
Vesemir's Technique

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the lake.
- Get rid of the bear.
- Fish with Ciri.
- Collect the fish (4).

Travel northeast, passing through the Abandoned Village where you fought the noonwraith. Just beyond, down the slope, is an iced-over lake where a bear is pawing for pollack. You plan to scare the animal off. This is achieved by either slaying it, or frightening it with a bomb or a crossbow bolt



4:54 AM | CLEAR
SOMETHING ENDS, SOMETHING BEGINS
Throw a bomb to scare off the bear.
Fast Attack
Strong Attack
Parry / Counterattack
Dodge

Without rods, fishing could be difficult. But you've a little trick to show Ciri. Something Vesemir might have taught you a long time ago… Choose a bomb, aim and lob it into the fishing hole, and wait for the explosion. The hole cracks open, and four pollack are blown up and onto the ice. Gather them all up, using your Witcher Senses if you can't immediately find one.

Something Ends, Something Begins (III)

The Gentleman Will Lead. The Emperor Will Follow.

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

SOMETHING ENDS, SOMETHING BEGINS (III)

LOCATIONS: Vizima Royal Castle, Redania, Nilfgaardian Garrison, White Orchard Tavern

CHARACTERS: Emperor's Chamberlain, Emperor Emhyr var Emreis, Master Ort, Cirilla

QUESTING DECISIONS

This conclusion of your Wild Hunt occurs if you made two or more of the previous four choices during your adventure:

- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you chose to engage in a snowball fight instead of drinking with Ciri.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Final Preparations, you decided to let Ciri talk to the Lodge of Sorceresses alone instead of going with her.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Battle Preparations, you allowed Ciri to ransack Avallac'h's laboratory instead of giving her Lara Dorren's necklace.
- During Act III: Main Quest: Battle Preparations, you made time to visit Skjall's grave on Hindarsfjall, instead of refusing Ciri's request.

If you made three or more negative choices, Ciri is dead, and Something Ends, Something Begins (I) occurs instead.

For this ending, the following must also occur:

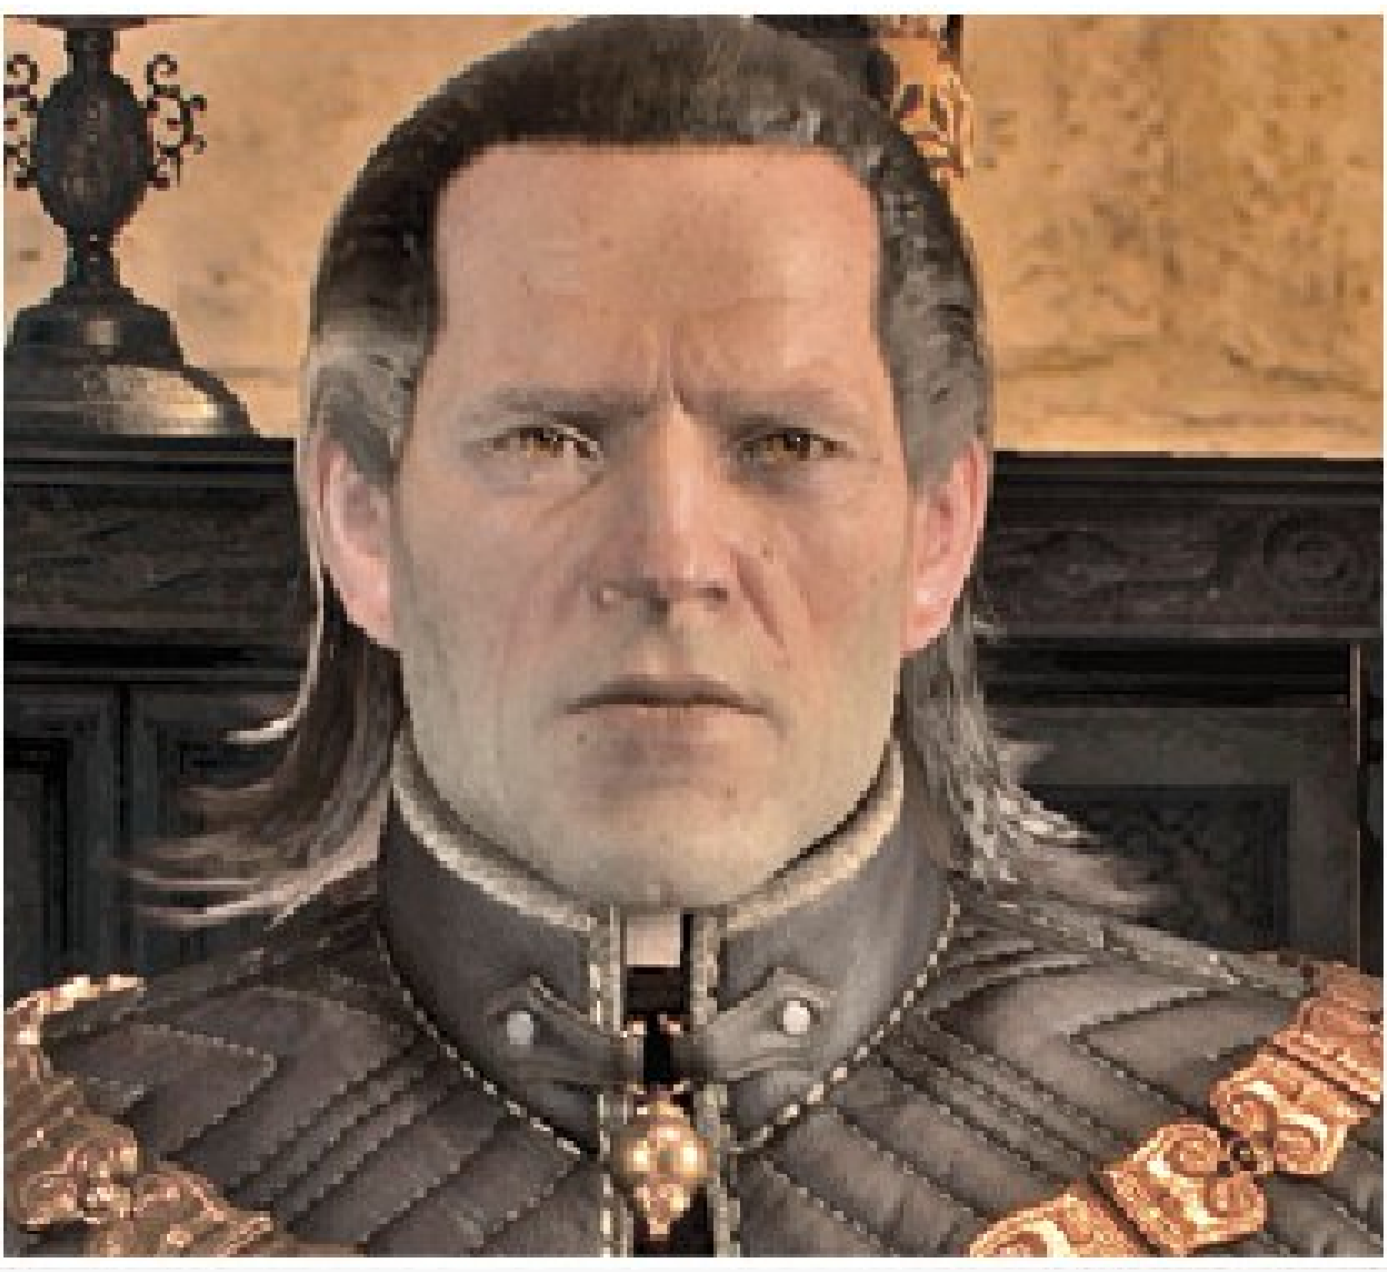
- During Act II: Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, you made sure not to visit Vizima and did not present Ciri to Emhyr.
- Or, if the Nilfgaard lost the war, and either Radovid lives, or Dijkstra rules Redania.

There are three variations to this ending. The first two require the following: During Act II, you must have completed The Assassins' Quests (Secondary Quest: An Eye for an Eye, Secondary Quest: A Deadly Plot, and Secondary Quest: Redania's Most Wanted); and during Act III, you must have completed Secondary Quest: Reason of State. How this quest ended influences this ending:

- If you killed King Radovid and sided with Vernon Roche and Thaler against Dijkstra, the Nilfgaardians rule over this land. The emperor moves his troops from Vizima Palace, leave this land, and free Temerian troops reclaim it peacefully. This is Ending III (I).
- If you killed King Radovid and sided with Dijkstra against Vernon Roche and Thaler, Dijkstra rules over this land. He isn't a violent despot, but his troops are seeking clues of conspiracy, driving spies and enemies of the crown away from the land. This is Ending III (II).
- Did you ignore Secondary Quest: Reason of State? Then Radovid is still very much alive, and rules over this land. The emperor needs to flee from Vizima Palace and witch hunters are everywhere, violently oppressing the population. Uprisings are crushed, and an air of despondency hangs like poisonous cloud. This is Ending III (III).

OBJECTIVES

- Talk to Emhyr var Emreis.

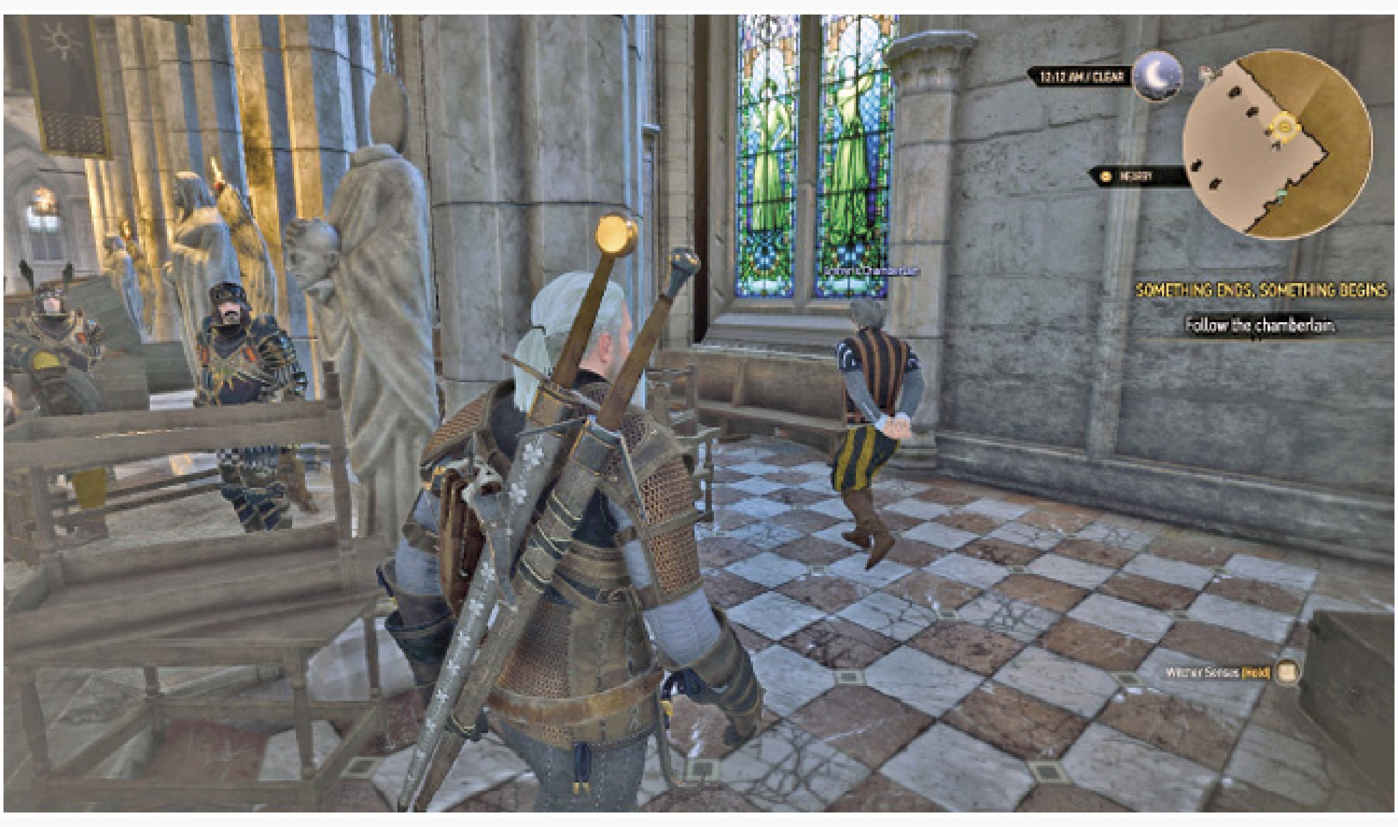


Emperor Emhyr var Emreis

One week has passed. The war between Nilfgaard and Redania has concluded, and you have been summoned to report to the Emhyr on the search for Ciri. You are beckoned forward by the chamberlain. In the hall, an officer is drilling his troops. What he says depends on who won the war:

- Ending III (I): If the emperor and Nilfgaardian army won the war over the Redanians and King Radovid, the wealth of Novigard is ordered to be guarded from looters. In addition, there is talk about an approaching delegation (probably the Redanians ready to sign a peace treaty).
- Ending III (II and III): If the emperor and Nilfgaardian army lost the war over the Redanians and King Radovid, deserters are ordered to be shot. In addition, there are further reports on deserters.

Other courtesans mention the war depending on the outcome, too.



You are shown into the emperor's quarters. You inform him Ciri is dead—slain as she attempted to stop The White Cold prophecy. Only Avallac'h knows this apart from you both. Yennefer has decided to stay in the north. And you?

Tell him you have post-war work to do.

Tell him it's none of his business.

He asks if Ciri conveyed anything to you about him. Answer him (your response elects a small modicum of sadness depending on how flippant you pretend Ciri was about the emperor):

She regretted not saying goodbye.

That he wasn't a good father.

Or she didn't talk about him.

The emperor requests that you leave. He never wishes to see you again.

Something Ends, Something Begins (II)

You'll Be Fine. You're A Witcher.

OBJECTIVES

- Go for a walk with Ciri.

Follow Ciri as you walk through the woods on this cold, crisp morning. You speak of past exploits and Ciri remarks that you never gave her the piggyback ride that she was promised. She jumps on your back. You dash around and both fall to the snow, laughing. It is time to head back. Follow Ciri in a vaguely northern path, recounting her youth at Kaer Morhen. Past the white orchards.

Ciri almost managed to forget today was the day. She rides to Nilfgaard. To her father, Emhyr. Today is the time for Ciri to stop running. If she wishes to enact change, it must be from a throne; not hunting monsters around forgotten villages. Ask her if this was her choice, and that you could have been told, then ask if this is what she wants. It is. You can answer her how you wish, before she hands over her sword, and gives you a long hug. Then she joins the Nilfgaardian company as they set off to crown a new empress.

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

This quest now concludes. After the Credits roll, you can continue to complete some, but not all Secondary Quests, though the Main Quest has now finished.

Something Ends, Something Begins (III)

A Blade Fit For A Witcher

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the ruined fortress.

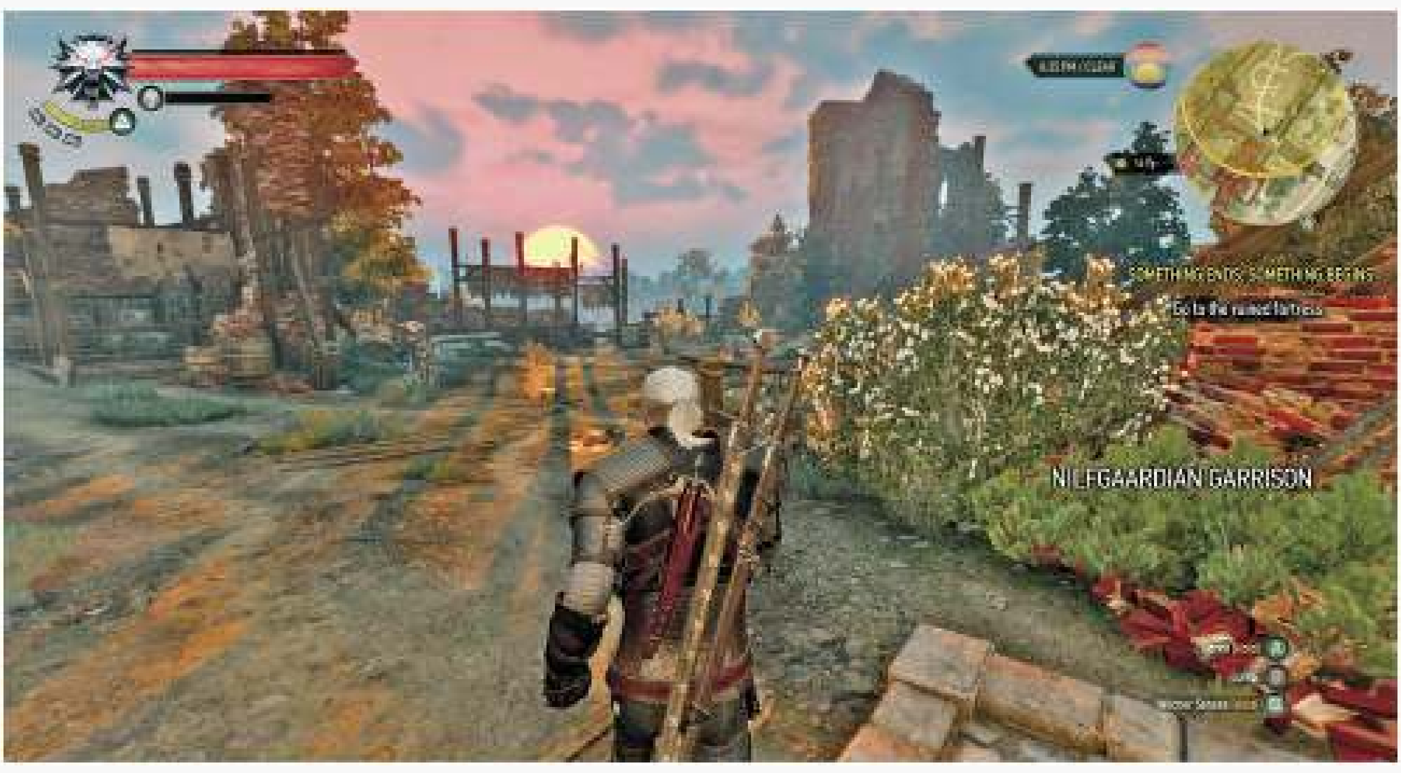
Master Ort

Some time later, having returned to White Orchard village on the road to Vizima, you sit a spell and speak with some merchants on the old road to the ruined Nilfgaardian Barracks. They speak of the war, and what is to come.

- Ending III (I): They mention the Nilfgaard are fleeing (in reality, they are retreating so the Temerians can fill the power void), and they've left some casks of wine behind.
- Ending III (II): They mention the fleeing Nilfgaard, and the bandits sensing the void caused by the ensuing chaos.
- Ending III (III): They mention that with the Black Ones gone, the witch hunters are moving in. But life will still roll on.

Mount your trusty steed, and ride Roach roughly northward along the road. On the way, you notice one of the following:

- Ending III (I): After the crossroads, you pass a large contingent of Nilfgaardian cavalry and infantry troops, having left the Garrison beyond the swamp.
- Ending III (II): At the crossroads, you pass a group of Redanian troops looting the corpses of a merchant caravan you hope they didn't kill.
- Ending III (III): At the crossroads, you see the corpses of a merchant caravan rotting in the sun. There are wolves nearby.



Follow the road north, through the small swamp and up the wooden steps of the Nilfgaardian Garrison. Your contact has been waylaid. You wait a few hours. Master Ort the weaponsmith approaches. He has forged the finest blade in over thirty years of sword-making. But what was the inscription you asked for?

- "Zireael," Ciri's elvish name.
- "The Flash that Cuts," the blade's name.

After you pay him in gems, he tells of a striga prowling the Maribor Forest. But you have a rendezvous at the White Orchard tavern, first. Or perhaps try this weapon out yourself, on a nearby training dummy.

Items: Quest Item: Zireael or The Flash that Cuts

The Sword And The Swallow

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the inn.
- Ending III (III): (Optional) Help the inhabitants of the village.

Gallop from the garrison, traveling south and then southeast along the river road, and into the village of White Orchard.

Ending III (I): There are no tents at the threshold of White Orchard, instead the flags of Temeria proudly fly. En route to the tavern, you pass the same contigent of Nilfgaard planning a route out of here. At the tavern, Lord Dagborg is reclaiming the lands for Temeria.

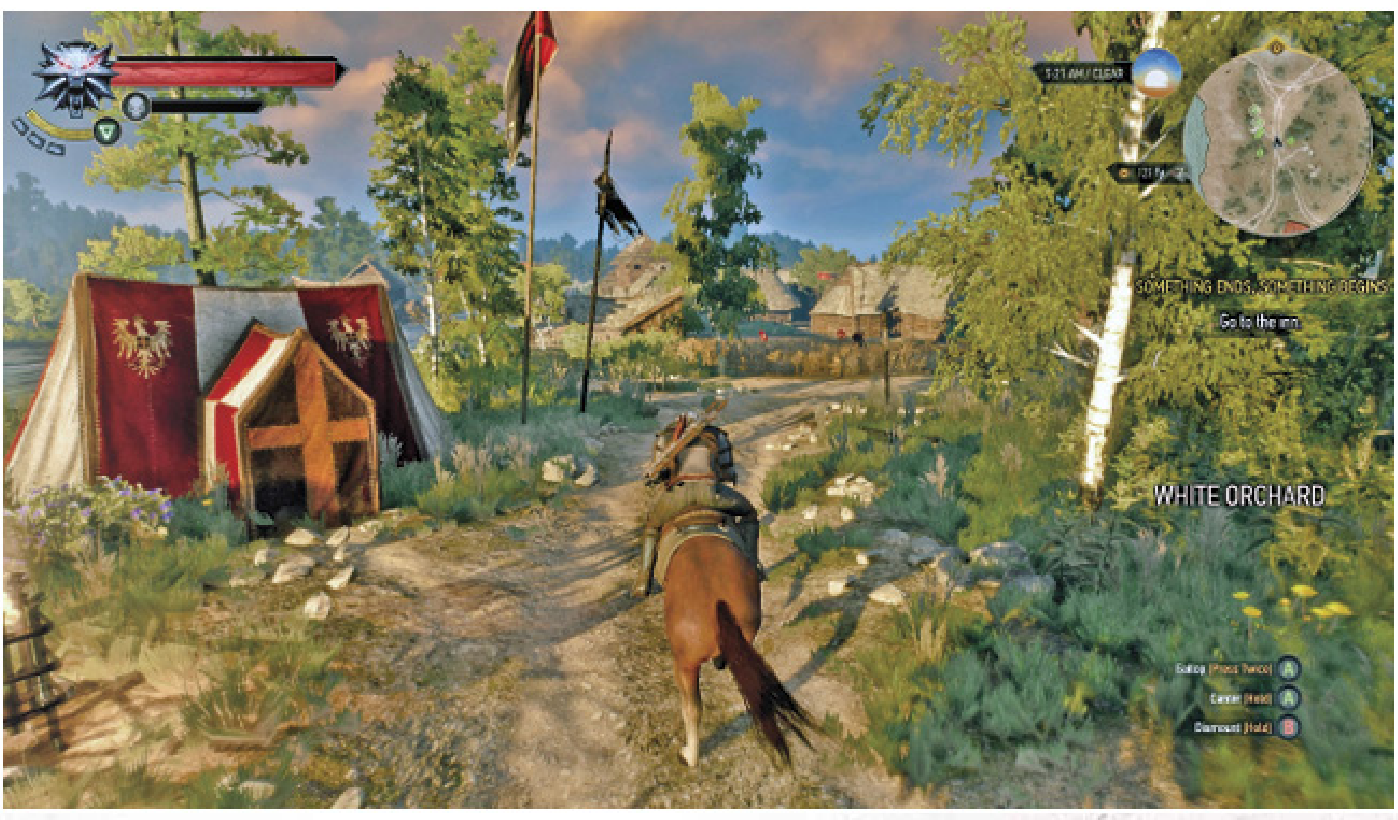
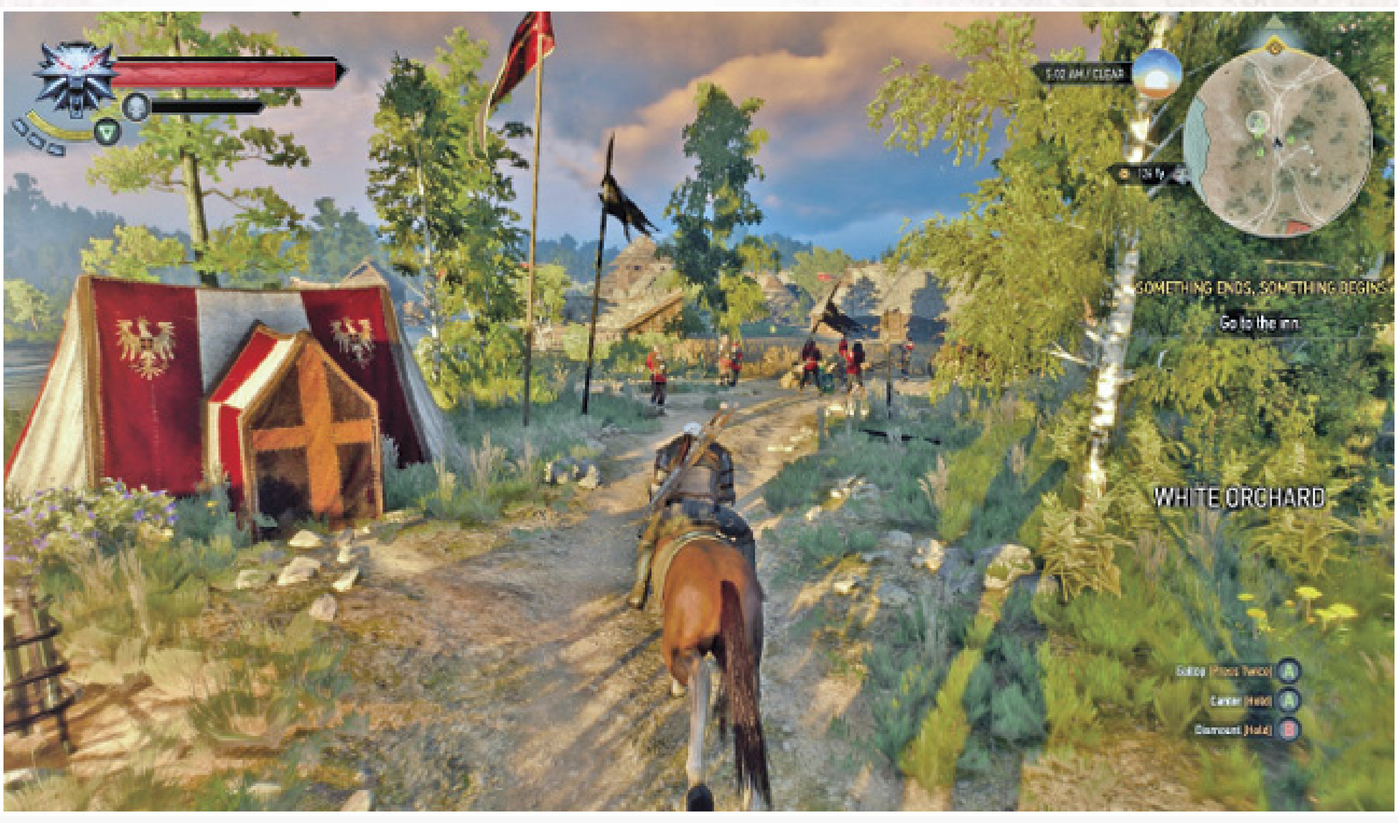
WHITE ORCHARD
Gallop (Press Twice)
Canter (Hold)
Dismount (Hold)

Ending III (II): The Redanian tents are still there as the leaderless troops of Radovid begin to retreat, and a more chaotic style of government starts. There are propaganda posters of Dijkstra everywhere. His troops are looking for conspiracy agents, and raising taxes.



SOMETHING ENDS, SOMETHING BEGINS
Go to the inn.
WHITE ORCHARD
Gallop (Press Twice)
Canter (Hold)
Dismount (Hold)

Ending III (III): The Redanian tents are here, as the troops go from hut to hut, looking for nonhumans and mages alike. As you head past one cottage, a small boy flags you down. Soldiers have half his family bound up in a nearby hut. Enter and slaughter the four Redanian soldiers inside (if you wish). Then ride to the tavern, which bears Radovid's propaganda.



SOMETHING ENDS, SOMETHING BEGINS
Go to the inn.
WHITE ORCHARD
Gallop (Press Twice)
Canter (Hold)
Dismount (Hold)

Enter the tavern and continue to the table where the hooded woman is sitting. You inform Ciri that the deed is done. She asks if the emperor believed you. You don't care either way. You talk of your next contract, and present Ciri's fine new blade. She'll have plenty of opportunities to wield it… as a Witcher!

DECISIONS, DECISIONS

This quest now concludes. After the Credits roll, you can continue to complete some, but not all Secondary Quests, though the Main Quest has now finished.

Main Quest: Endings

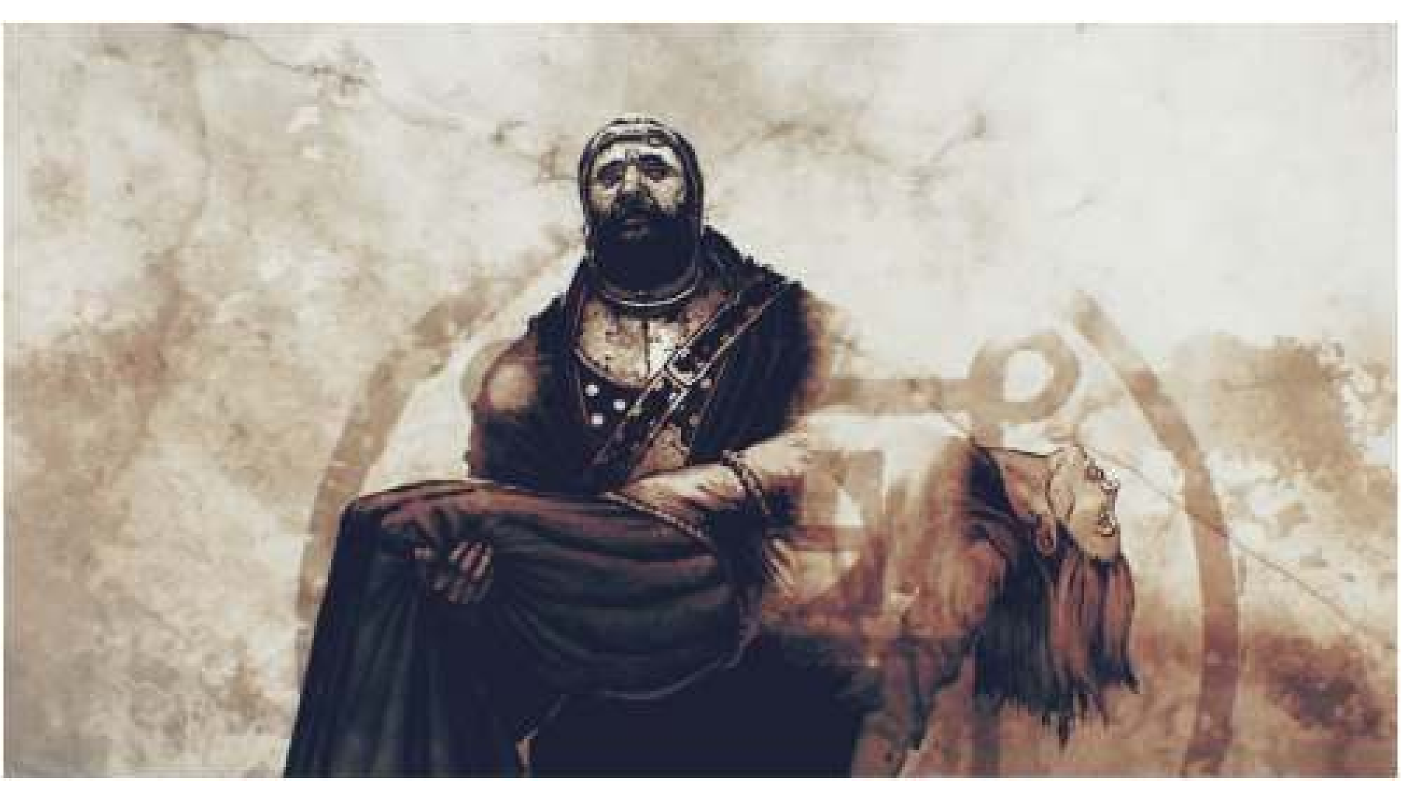
Character Endings

Congratulations, Witcher! You've made it to the end of your main adventure. Before you continue your explorations after the Credits roll, be aware of all the different endings that you can obtain, and how to obtain them. Some of these ending scenes play out prior to the very end of the Main Quest.

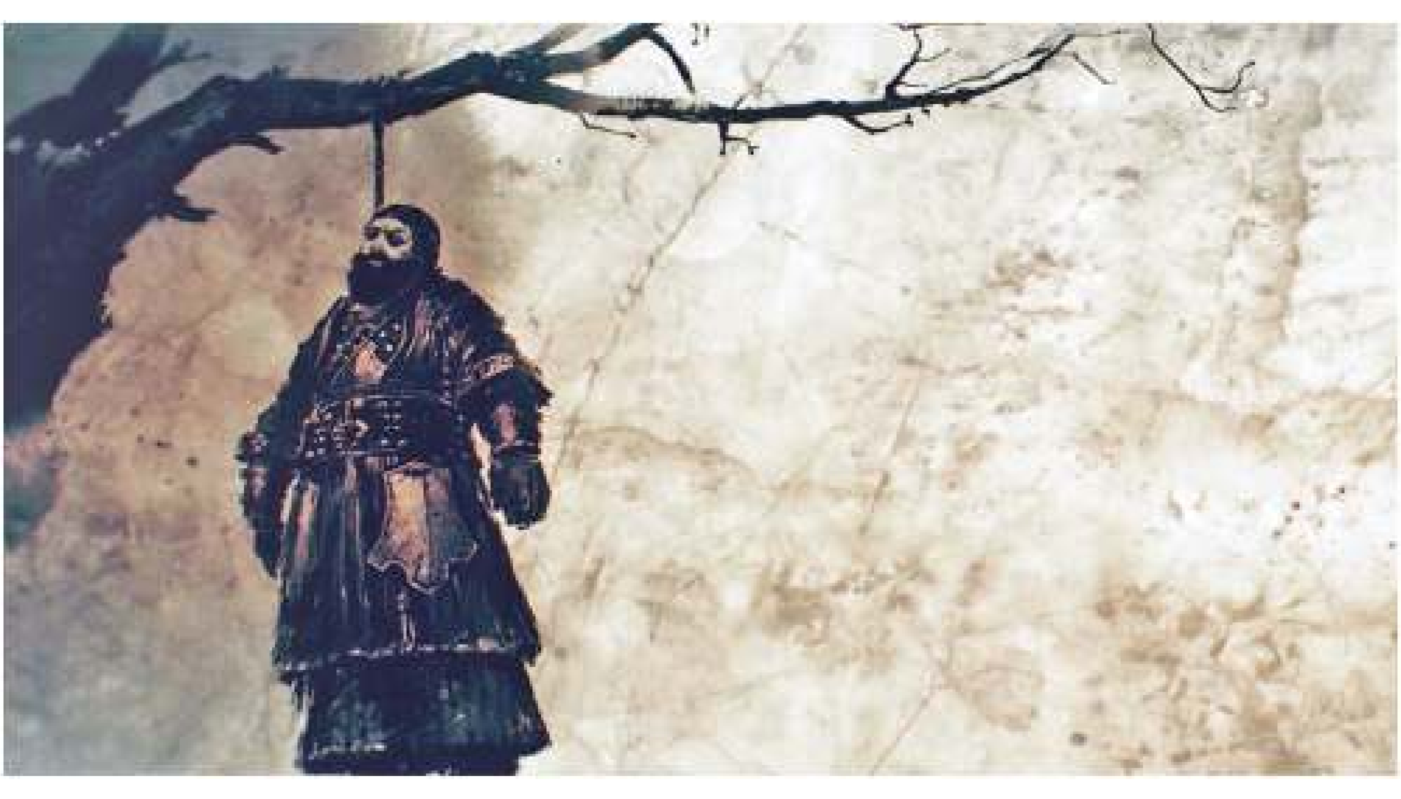
The following details the fates of characters prior to the end of the Main Quest.

CONCLUSION 1: THE FATE OF THE BLOODY BARON

A Changed Man: The Baron takes his wife Anna to the Blue Mountains, if you killed the tree spirit during Main Quest: The Whispering Hillock, and completed Main Quest: Return to Crookback Bog (since the Baron's wife Anna was turned mad by the crones).

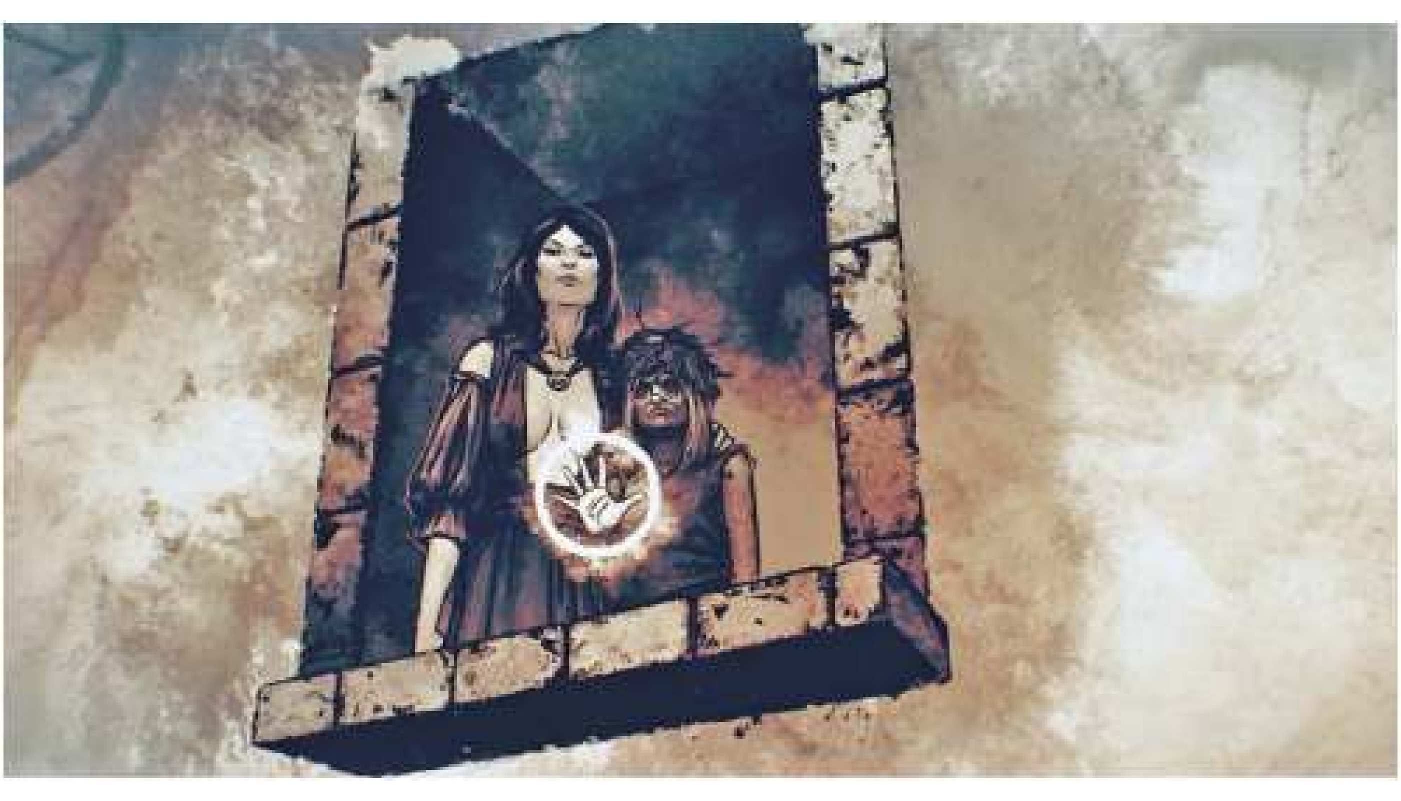


The Hanged Man: The Baron hangs himself, if you freed the tree spirit during Main Quest: The Whispering Hillock, and completed Main Quest: Return to Crookback Bog (since the Baron's wife Anna was turned into a grotesque hag and died).

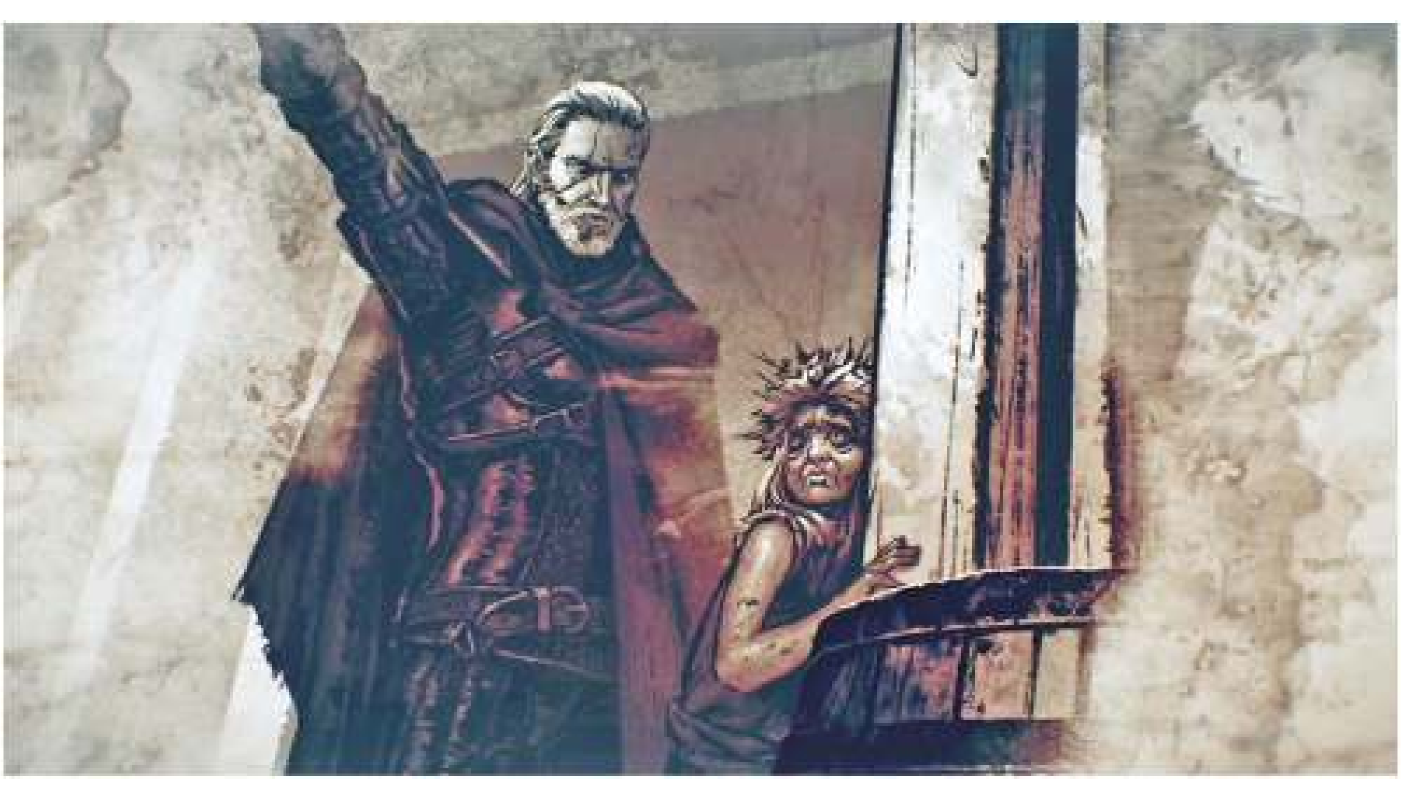


CONCLUSION 2: THE FATE OF SARA THE GODLING

In Godling We Trust: Sara stays in the dream house of Novigrad, if you chose to make a deal with her during Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming. You can visit Sara and Corrine in the house, where they live together.

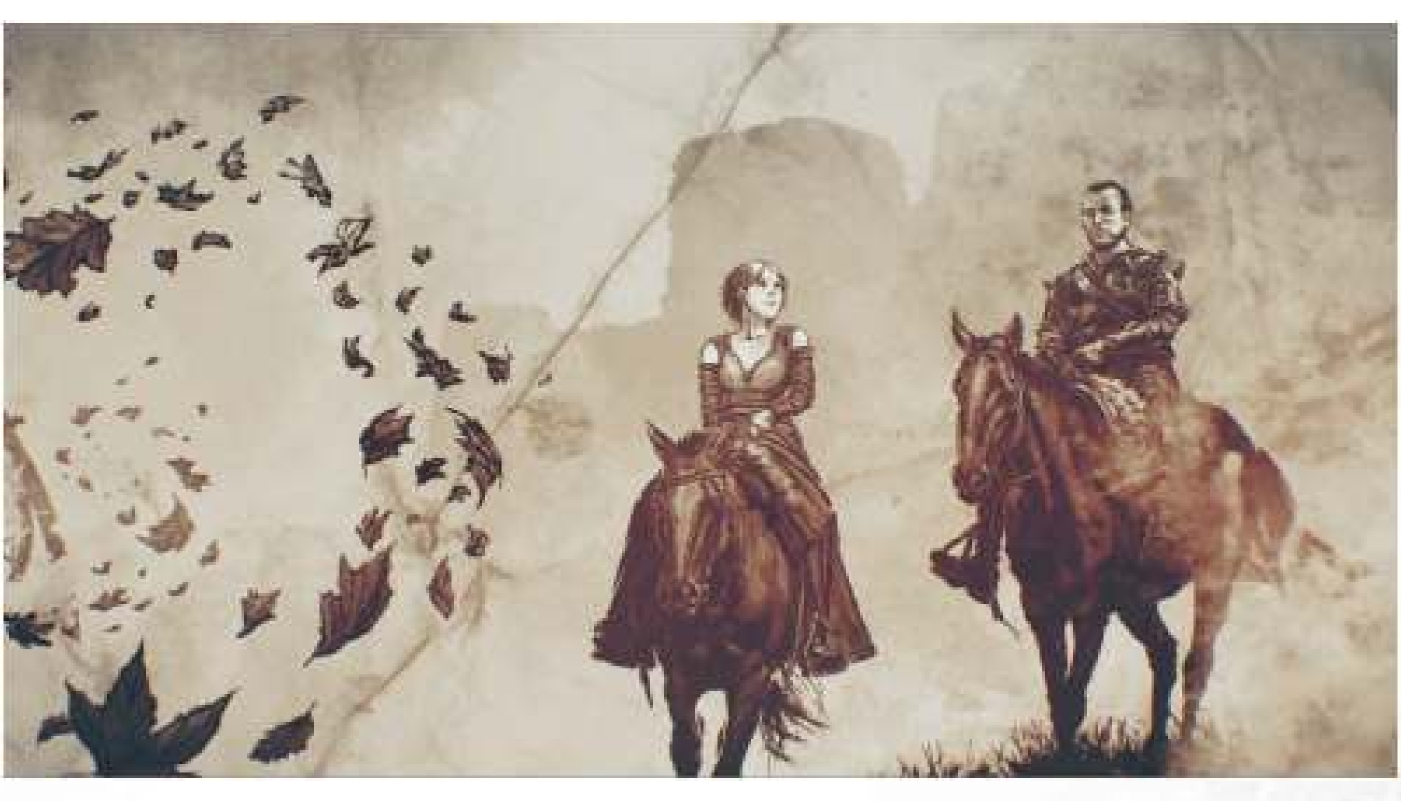


Banishment: Sara is cast out of the dream house of Novigrad, if you chose to throw her out during Main Quest: Novigrad Dreaming. She appears during Main Quest: Bald Mountain, having met and befriended Johnny.

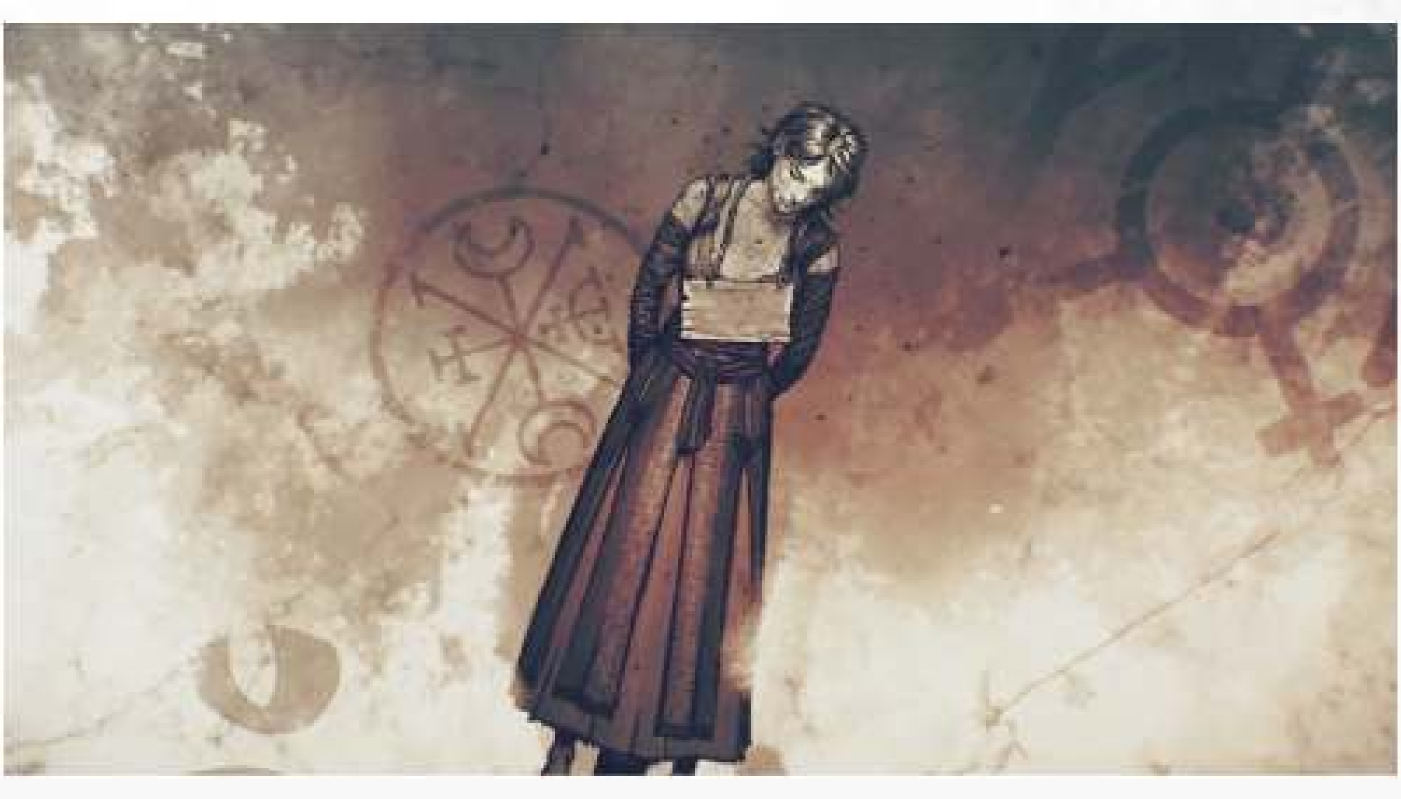


CONCLUSION 3: THE FATE OF KEIRA METZ

A New Friend: Having fought in the Battle of Kaer Morhen, the sorceress befriended the Witcher Lambert, and took him with her on her further adventurers. An odd couple to be sure, if you chose to convince her to head to Kaer Morhen during Secondary Quest: For the Advancement of Learning.

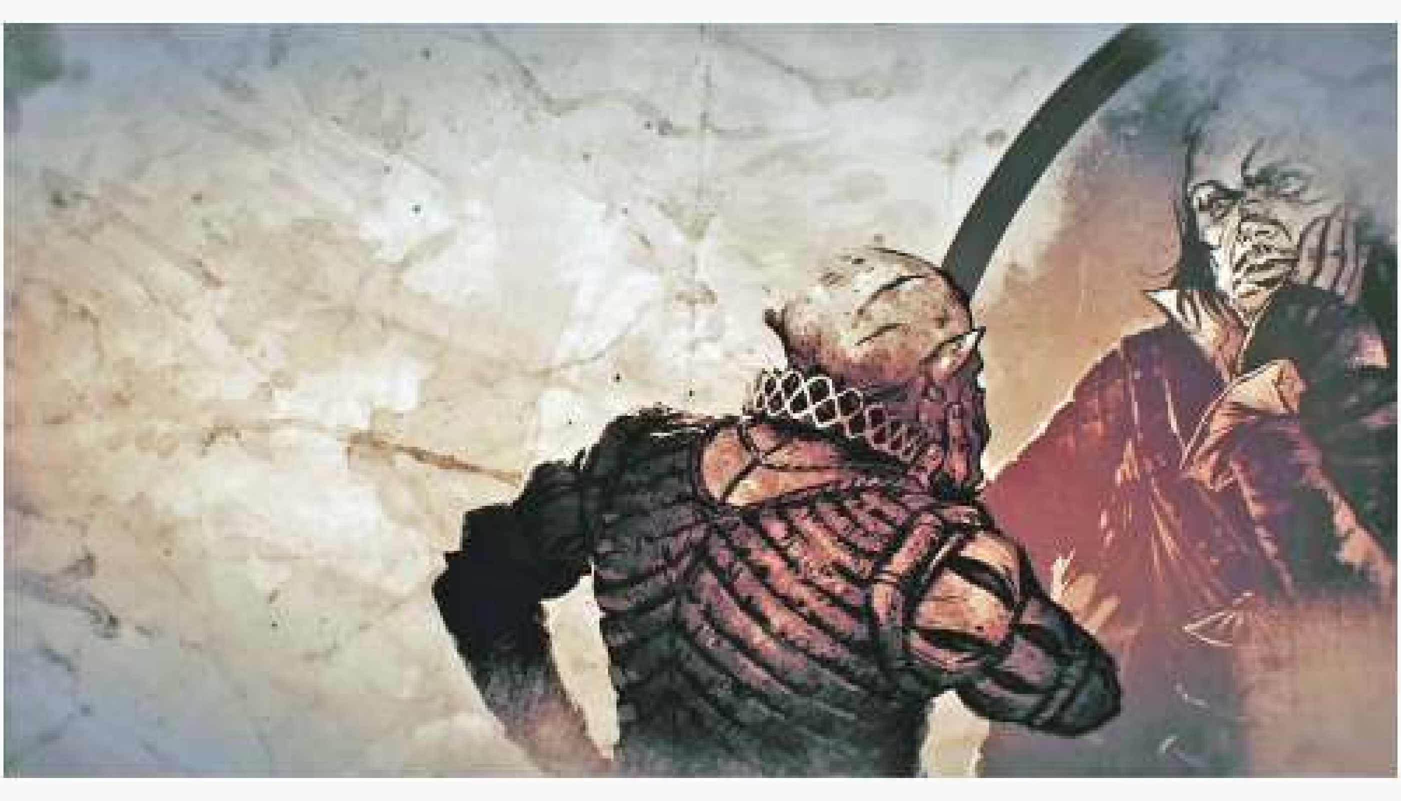


A Savage End: Headstrong but very, very wrong in her opinion that she could change Radovid's mind about her magical abilities. She was made an example of and put on a stake in Hierarch Square, if you chose to agree she should go to Radovid during Secondary Quest: For the Advancement of Learning.

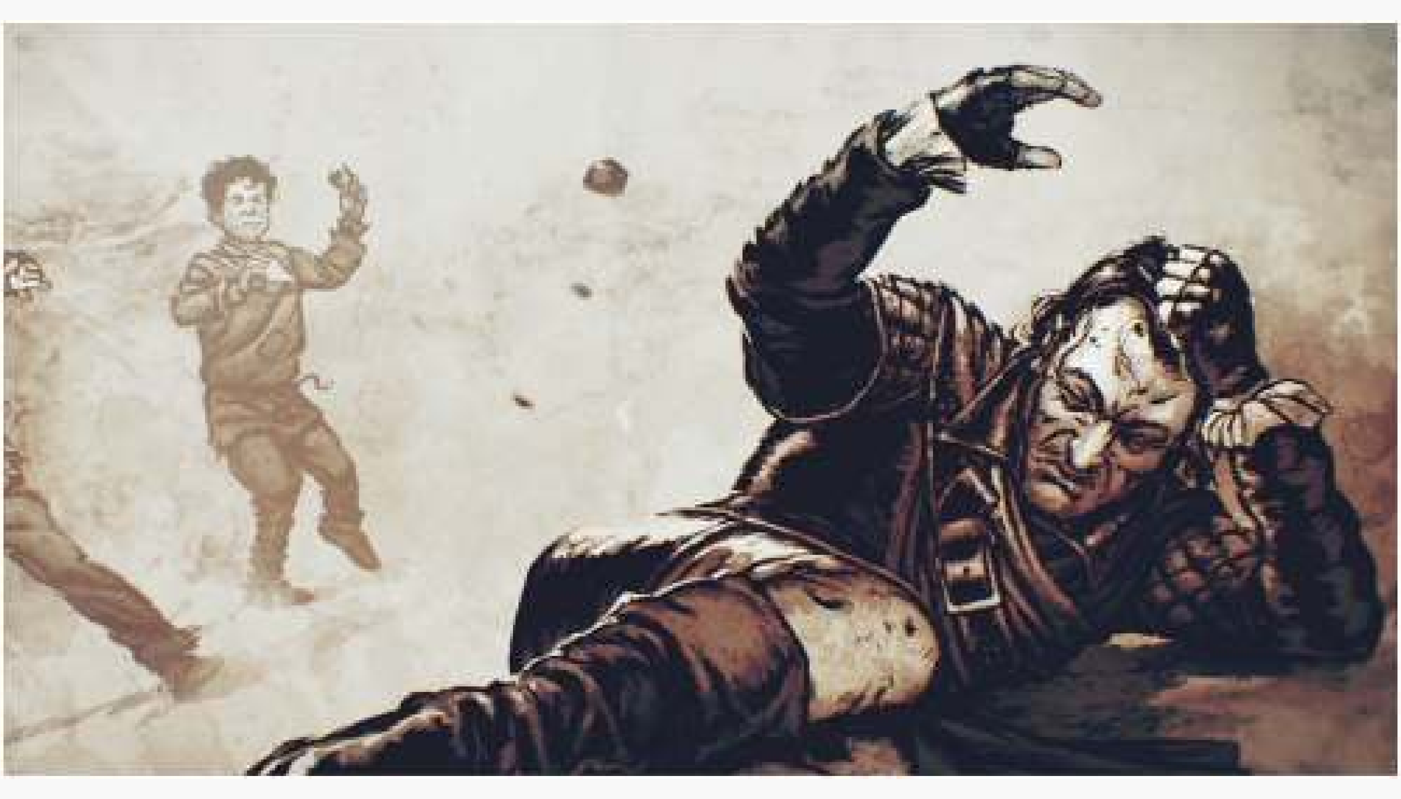


CONCLUSION 4: THE FATE OF WHORESON JUNIOR

A Changed Man: The doppler named Dudu successfully impersonated Whoreson Junior, and the whoremonger turned over a new leaf as his businesses flourished, if you elected to kill the real Whoreson during Main Quest: Get Junior.

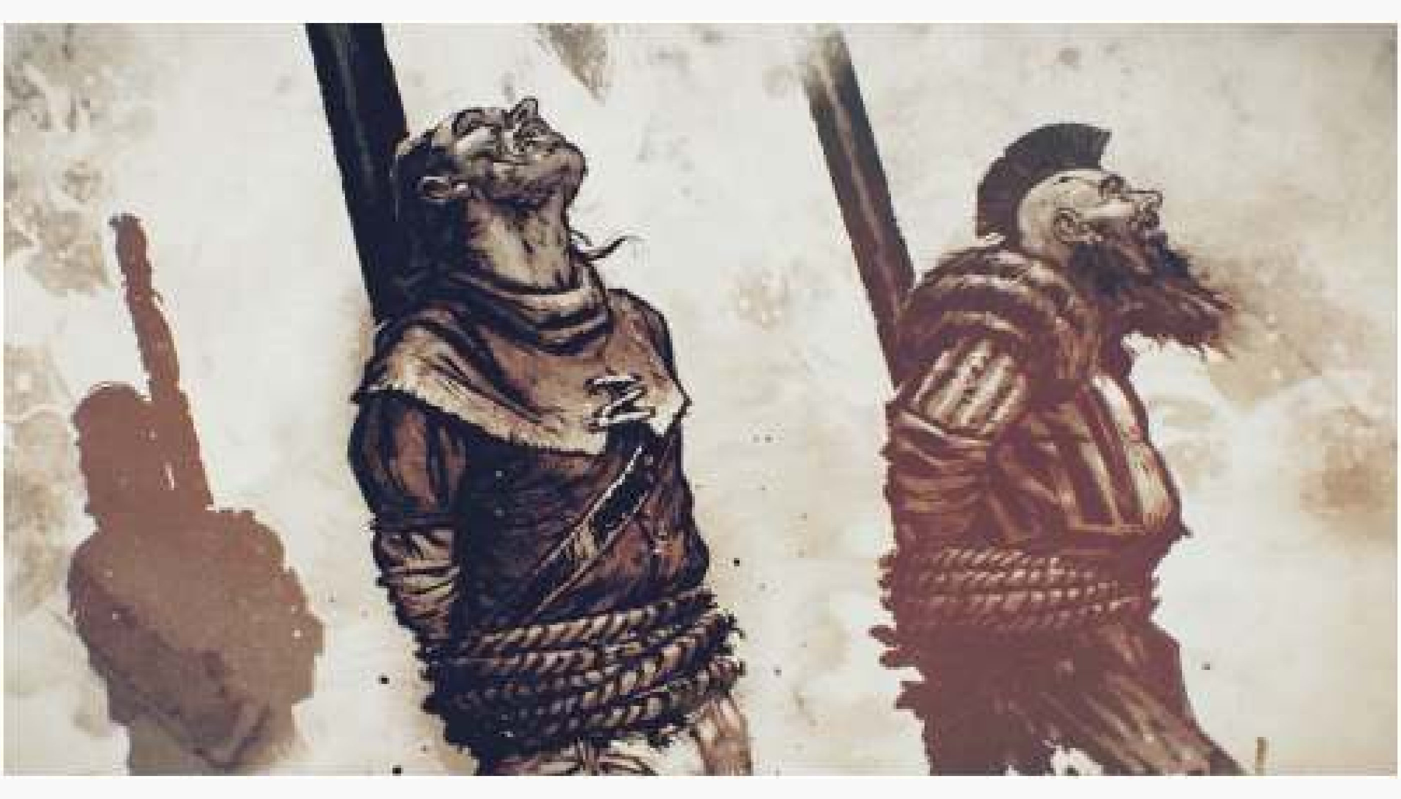


A Pitiful Wretch: The subsequent weeks and the wrath of the Big Four took its toll on the wretched Whoreson Junior, who fell from power into the effluent gutters of The Bits, if you elected to spare him during Main Quest: Get Junior.



CONCLUSION 5: THE FATE OF MAGES

All Aboard to Kovir: With Radovid's purge of the mages thwarted by you and Triss—having successfully completed Secondary Quest: Now or Never—the king turns his attention to nonhumans instead. But sorcery is safe. For now…



On Stakes in the Square: With Radovid's purge of the mages left unstopped by you or Triss—having ignored Secondary Quest: Now or Never—the king and his witch hunters turned Novigrad into a death trap for those of a magical disposition.

EVIL'S FIRST SOFT TOUCHES

RELATED QUESTS: Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Dead Man's Party; Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Scenes from a Marriage; Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: Enchanting Startup Costs; Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: Rose on a Red Field

LOCATIONS: Seven Cats Inn, Garin Estate, Oxenfurt Sewers, Novigrad Beach, Yantra

CHARACTERS: Olgierd von Everec, Wild Ones, Adela, Shani, Gaunter O'Dimm (Master Mirror)

ENEMIES: Drowners, Toad "Prince", Ofieri Soldiers, Ofieri Mage

OBJECTIVES

- Check the notice board outside the Seven Cats Inn.
- Go see Olgierd von Everec about the contract.

QUEST COMMENCEMENT

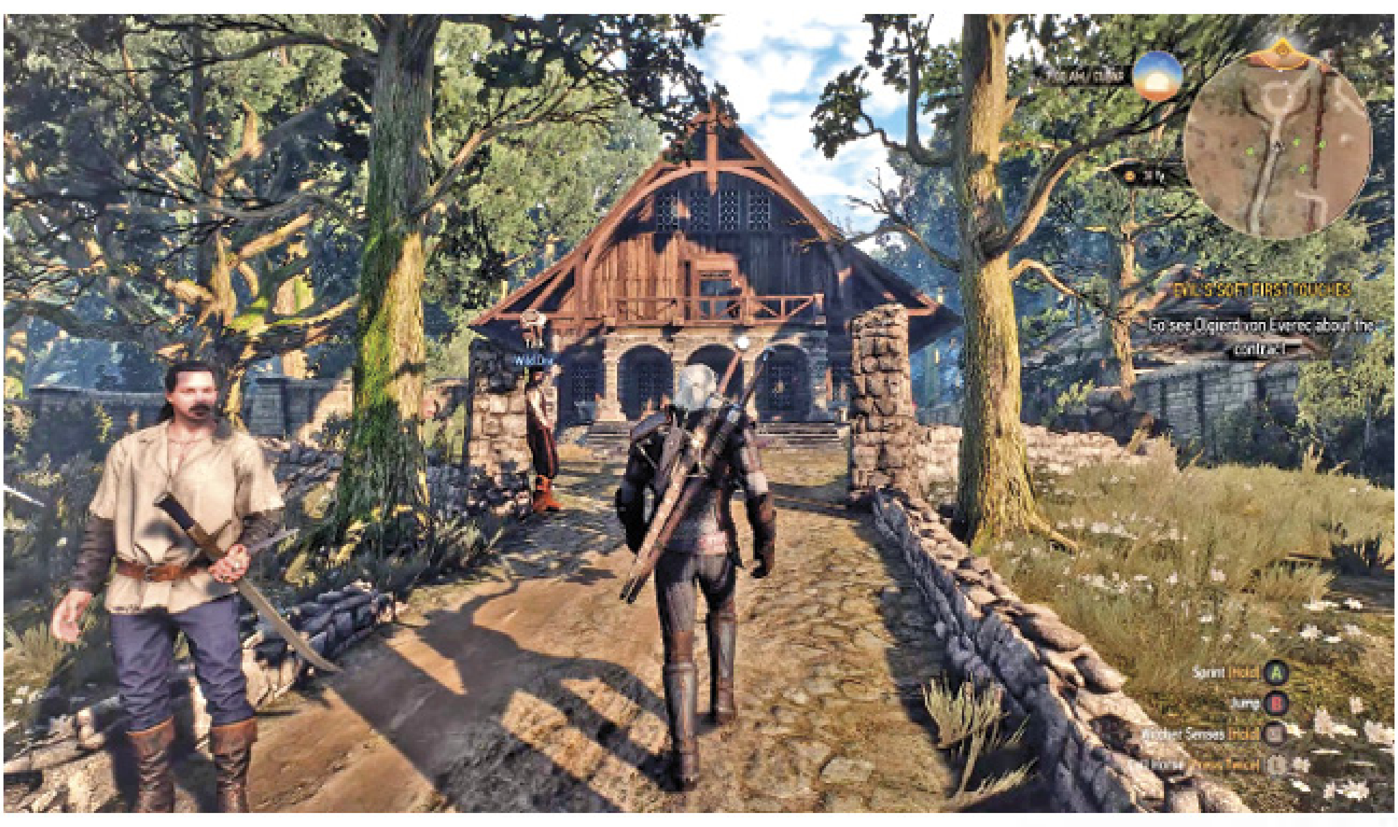
This quest is accessible immediately once you have the Hearts of Stone Expansion (check your Quest menu for the objective). It is advisable to be at least Level 30 before attempting this quest.

Gather an additional notice on this board; "A Runewright Upon Your Shores Has Landed" to begin Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: Enchanting: Start-Up Costs.

The Seven Cats Inn beckons; locate the Notice Board there, where you'll find a man hammering a note. Apparently there's something large and unpleasant in the sewers under Oxenfurt that requires a monster slayer. The man directs you to the issuer of this request; Olgierd von Everec.

SECONDARY QUEST: THE WRIGHT STUFF

Olgierd is currently residing in a manor house to the northeast of the Seven Cats Inn, in a newly-discovered part of Gustfields. Ride across meadow and vale until you reach the Garin Estate. The place is guarded by some uncouth (but reasonably friendly) ne'er-do-wells known as Wild Ones. Enter the premises, and you're accosted by more of these wisecrackers.



Find out more about the Wild Ones by asking them.

- Answer that they're a "bunch of idiots" to encourage a quick fist-fight with one of them
- Answer that you're "here on business" to keep your fists from becoming bruised.

Olgierd von Everec

After your chat, you're escorted upstairs to meet the Ataman himself.

You meet Olgierd in one of the rooms in the manor. After revealing that sculptured nudes by Votticelli aren't really his cup of tea (answer how you wish), he beckons you down to the great hall for a celebration (something his cronies seem to be perpetually engaged in). Feel free to ask what the celebration is about, before getting down to contract negotiations. Agree immediately (for an undisclosed sum), or ask specifically (Olgierd agrees to 450 crowns and any memento from the manor house). Then leave the revelers.

SECONDARY QUEST: HEY, PUSS PEEPERS!

Upon exiting the manor house, you're met by a blunt Wild One woman named Adela, who reckons teasing you about your cat-like eyes is going to win you over. Does it? This begins Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: Rose on a Red Field.

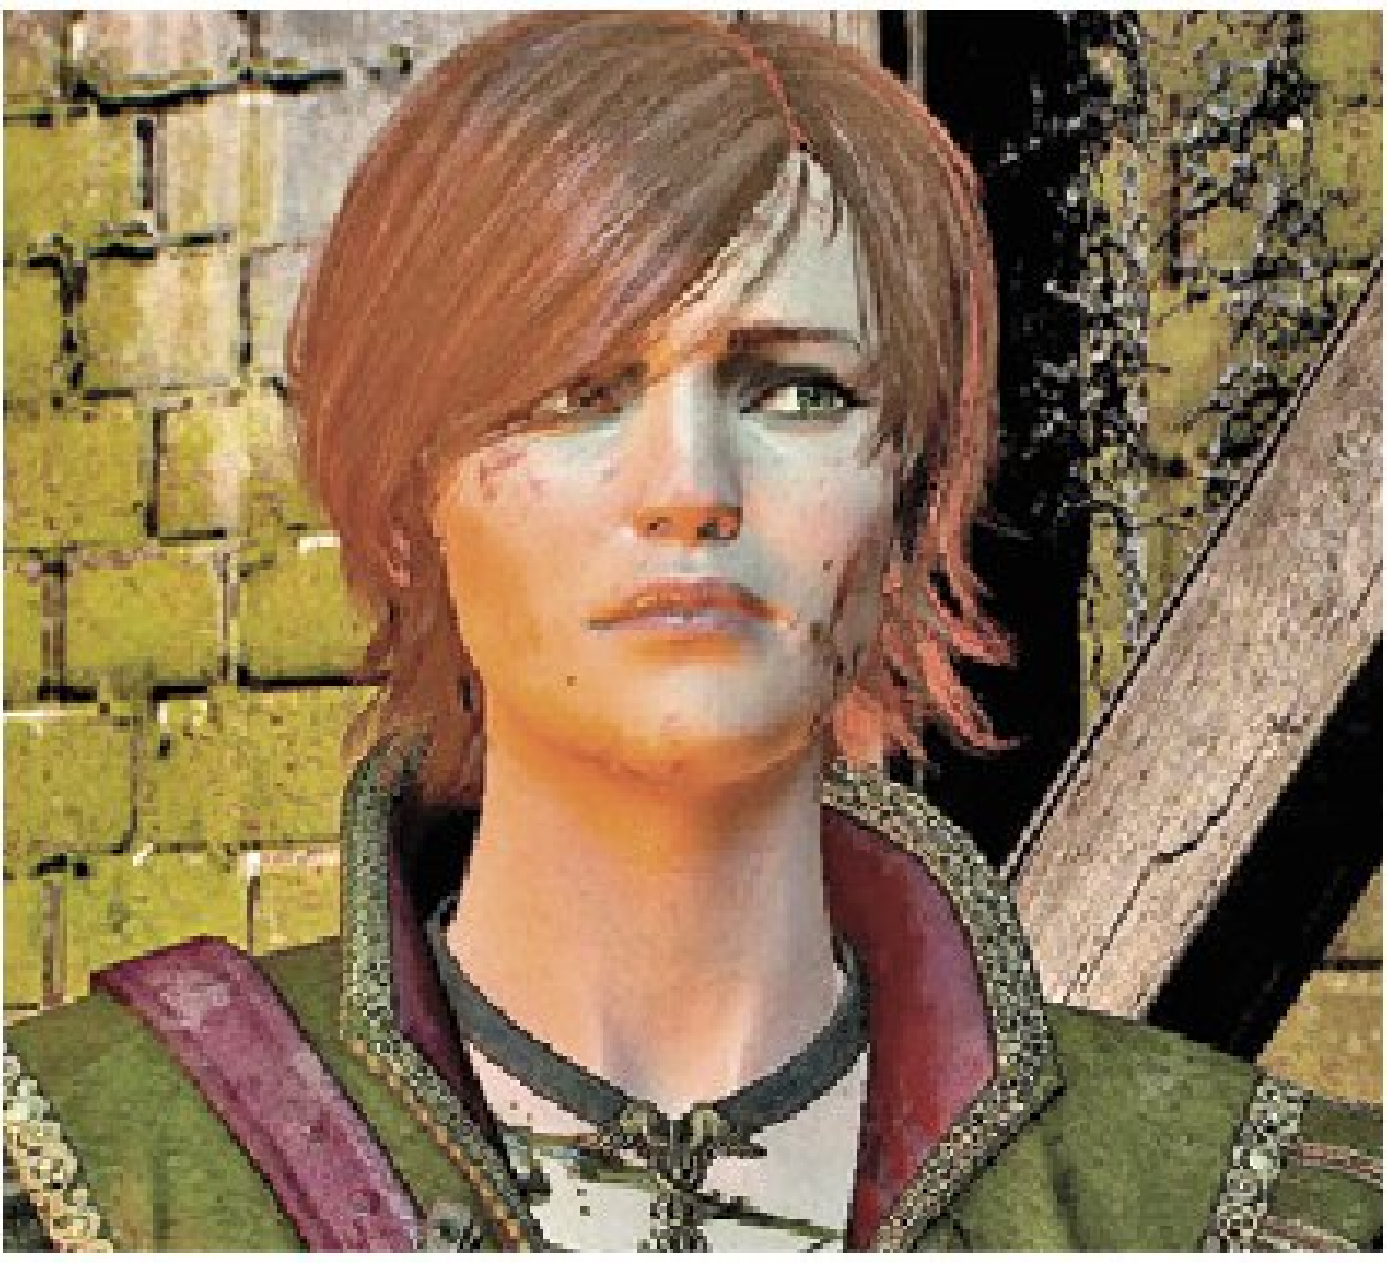
Gather an additional notice on this board; "A Runewright Upon Your Shores Has Landed" to begin Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: Enchanting: Start-Up Costs.

Evil's First Soft Touches

The Road To The Toad

OBJECTIVES

- Enter the Oxenfurt sewers.
- Search the sewers using your Witcher Senses.



Shani

Journey southwest to the second city of Oxenfurt, and locate the open well in the northern part of town. Climb down the ladder, and examine the following using your Witcher Senses:

- Boot prints from a man.
- A smaller set of boot prints from a woman. She came alone.

Continue into a large sewer chamber of grating and gates, and fight off a Drowner. Then continue your Witcher Sense search:

- Find a corpse in the south-east corner near a grating. It was felled by a blade, not a monster's claw.

Further into the chamber are the cries of a woman in distress. This turns out to be a field medic for the Redanian Army, vainly attempting to revive one of her soldier escorts. You're surprised to recognize her as Shani, an old and dear friend, sent here to gather a sample of venom spewed by the monster residing here. Converse as you wish. Though she needs no help, you both agree to find the location where the monster attacked.

CORRECT COMBAT PREPARATION

It's wise to Meditate, brew any potions and purchase provisions for your forthcoming sewer exploration before descending. Golden Oriole is a must-have!

Gather an additional notice on this board; "A Runewright Upon Your Shores Has Landed" to begin Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: Enchanting: Start-Up Costs.

OBJECTIVES

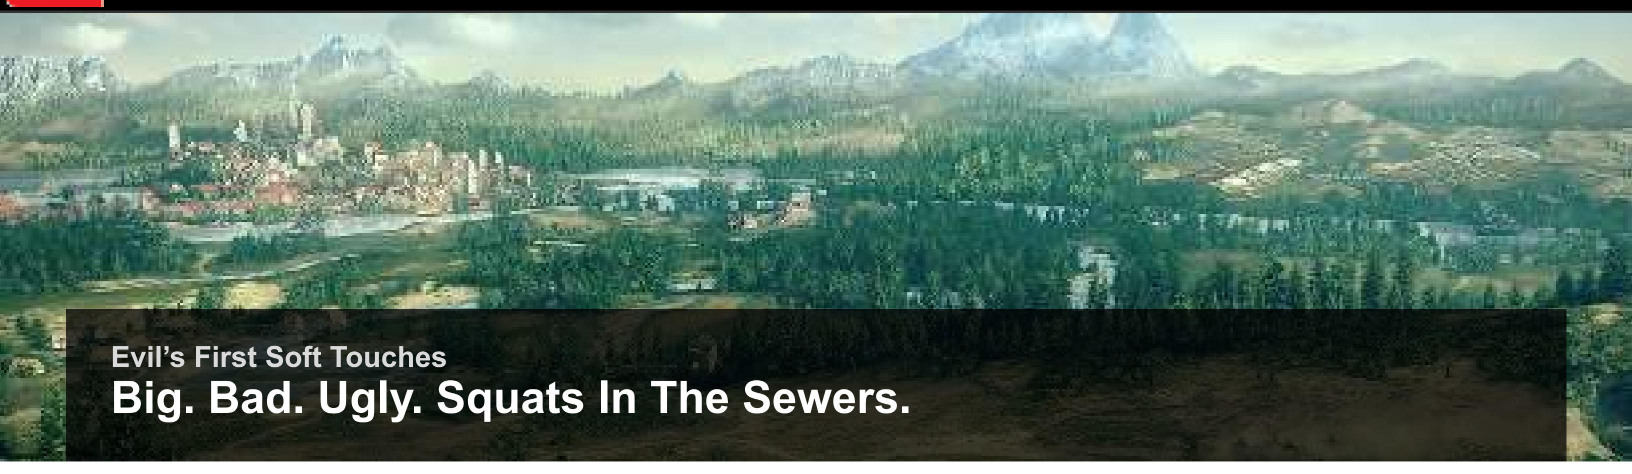
- Go to the spot where the monster attacked Shani and the Redanian soldiers.

Follow Shani to the bent grating. Use your Witcher Senses to reveal a section of weakened wall on the right, before using Aard to demolish the wall. Walk into a subsequent chamber, where further evidence of the monster's violence is found. Converse with Shani as you wish; only one of Shani's men is still unaccounted for. You can either search the area for the skeleton key held by the commander in order to make your way down the sewers or you can jump down the hole in order to explore the sewers more quickly.

OBJECTIVES

- Find the key to the lower level of the sewers using your Witcher Senses.
- Find the monster's lair.

After reaching the lower level of the sewers, prepare to battle around six to eight Drowners. Afterward, examine the corpse here where an interesting discovery is made. Battle a few Drowner stragglers until none remain, and optionally locate the slime patches (showing the beast was just here) and further corpses. Move toward the central sewer chamber where you agree to lure the beast out. Naturally, you're the bait.



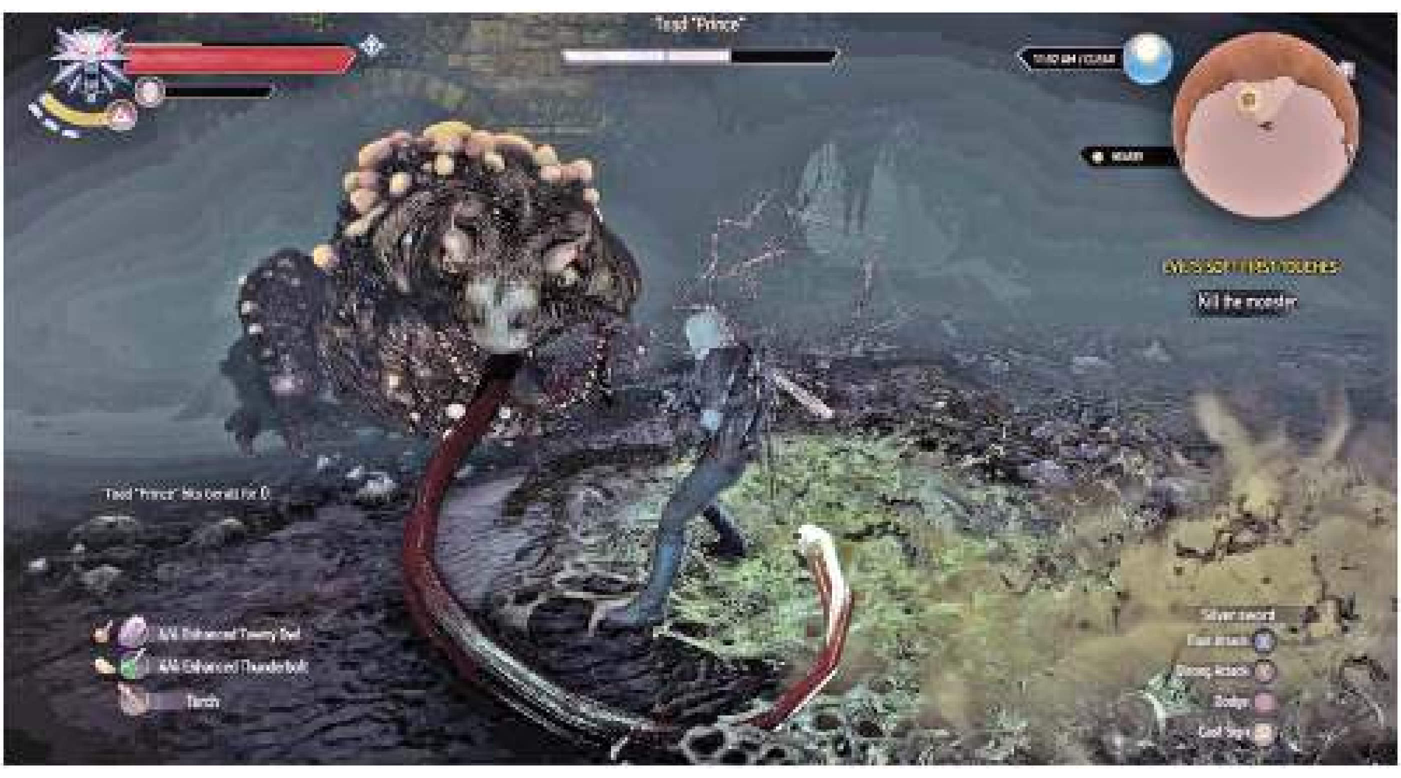
Evil's First Soft Touches

Big. Bad. Ugly. Squats In The Sewers.

OBJECTIVES

- Kill the monster.

A giant Toad lands with a disgusting squish on the ground of the circular chamber. You must vanquish this poisonous, bloated beast before you continue.



DEFEATING TOAD “PRINCE”: THE BEAST’S ATTACKS

The Toad Prince has the following attacks and maneuvers to be aware of:

Jump: Expect a leaping maneuver whenever the Toad jumps to face you, jumps forward to change position, or leaps back when you’re too close. It likes to leap and land behind or to the side of you, forcing you to change view. Simply lock onto the beast when this happens so you don’t lose sight of it, and roll or dodge so you aren’t a sitting duck.

Jump and Squash: Closer in, the Toad Prince’s leap sometimes ends with it knocking you down with the sheer force of its impact, staggering you. Make sure you rapidly react with a well-timed roll or dodge.

Vomit: This disgusting projectile is usually vomited out at closer ranges, obscures your vision like a Water Hag’s attack, hits in a wide arc, and is poisonous. It is also easily dodged.

Spit: Another revolting offensive technique, the Toad launches a blob of spit at you, inflicting poison damage if it connects, and turning into a poison cloud at the point of impact if it doesn’t. Dodge it!

Tongue Lash: When you’re at long-range, expect a darting lash straight at you. At mid-range, the lash is at a wider, horizontal angle. A roll or dodge, or a retreat when you see the monster’s maw open, helps minimize damage. A riskier plan is to roll directly at the Toad, slicing at it (usually at the side) while the tongue attack finishes.

Gaseous Emissions: Poison sacs on the Toad’s back throw up large poison globules that explode and cause a small puddle and poison cloud to appear when they impact (which are three random points in the arena). Avoid the puddle and cloud; backing up is a good plan here. Then light the gas clouds with Igni (assuming you’re not inside them!).

General Toad Tactics: As soon as the battle begins, the Toad utilizes ranged attacks to dominate the arena. Get in close, and the Toad jumps, landing and attempting to strike you to inflict tremendous damage and knocking you down. Stay too far away and remain defensive, and expect poison clouds (both via spit and gas attacks). The Toad’s large health and powerful attacks mean you need to keep moving, and looking for an opening to inflict as much damage as possible.

DEFEATING TOAD “PRINCE”: THE BEST BATTLE TACTICS

A Good Defense: As the battle begins, cast Quen to add an extra layer of protection. Even better is the Golden Oriole potion, which nullifies the Toad’s poisonous attacks, and allows you to heal yourself using the Toad’s previously deadly gas clouds!

Circling for the Kill: Keep yourself moving at all times, ideally circling left or right of the Toad and moving toward it. This usually allows you to more easily evade any of the Toad’s attacks, or at least gives you a greater chance to react to them.

Swordplay and Yrden: Cast Yrden at mid-range and retreat so the Toad follows you, enters your magic circle, and slows down considerably. Coat your sword in Cursed Oil, then make up to three strong strikes before retreating. Without Yrden, dodge or roll to the side (as you would attack a Bear), inflict two regular slashes, and retreat.

Igni and Ranged Attacks: Despite Shani mentioning the Toad’s lack of fearing fire, this foe can be damaged with Igni, though this isn’t as significantly damaging, and is mainly used to clear any poison clouds in your vicinity. At long range, lob in a Northern Wind bomb to immobilize this foe. Throw Superior Dancing Star from the chamber’s edge is another option, to stun the Toad before following up with sword violence.

OTHER ADVICE

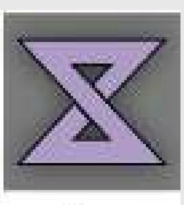
Never stay in the same spot for long, the Toad’s spit attacks leave poison clouds on the ground and his various other ranged attacks can damage you no matter where you try to hide. Approach the Toad and provoke it to jump up and slam down until it is facing you (dodge in close then dodge away as soon as the Toad jumps up. This keeps you out of its attack range but keeps you close enough to start attacking as soon as it’s safe). When close enough, cast Yrden on the ground to trap the Toad, then attack it with your sword. The Toad becomes un-trapped after three hits or five seconds. Northern Wind bombs also freeze and trap the Toad, preventing it from attacking, and allow you to get close and attack. The Golden Oriole potion causes the Toad’s poison to heal you instead of damaging you; use this potion during the fight as you’re almost guaranteed to be able to walk into a poison cloud. Using Igni forces the Toad to jump away. This is useful to interrupt the Toad’s maneuvers and force it to jump to a new location within the arena.

TOAD “PRINCE” VULNERABILITIES

Northern Wind Bomb

Golden Oriele

Cursed Oil



Yrden

After combat concludes, you’re coated in unpleasant slime after gutting the Toad Prince, and witness a transformation just as you slip into unconsciousness.

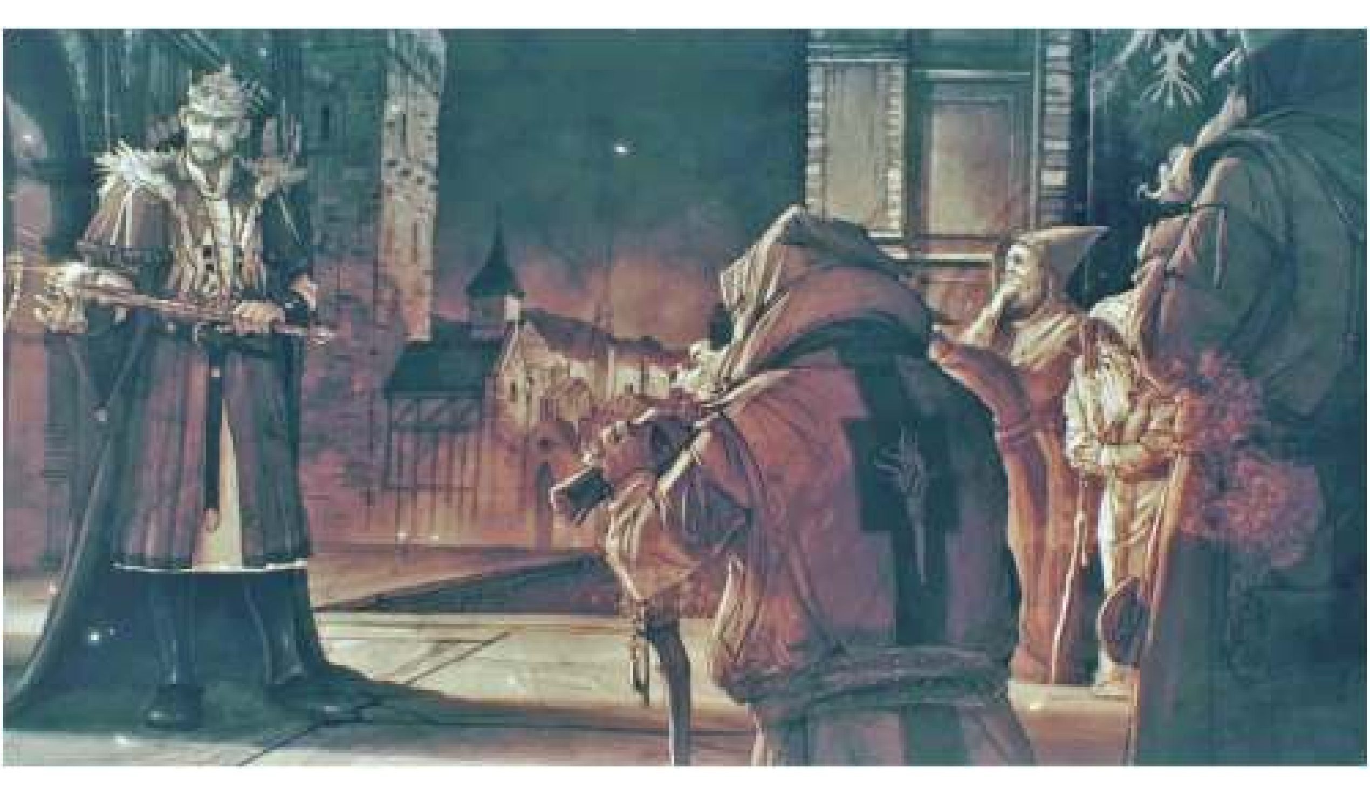
Main Quest: Endings

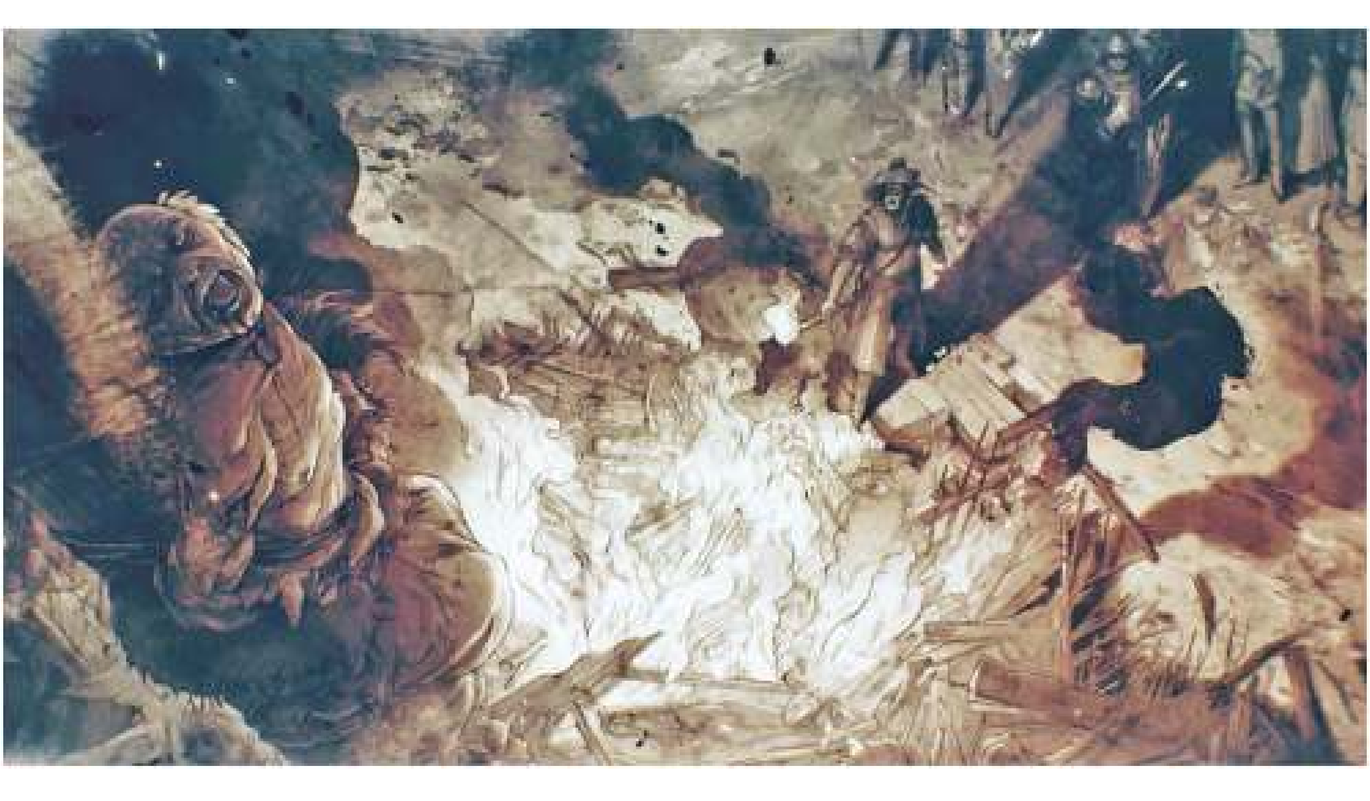
Final Endings

The following details the fates of characters after the end of the Main Quest.

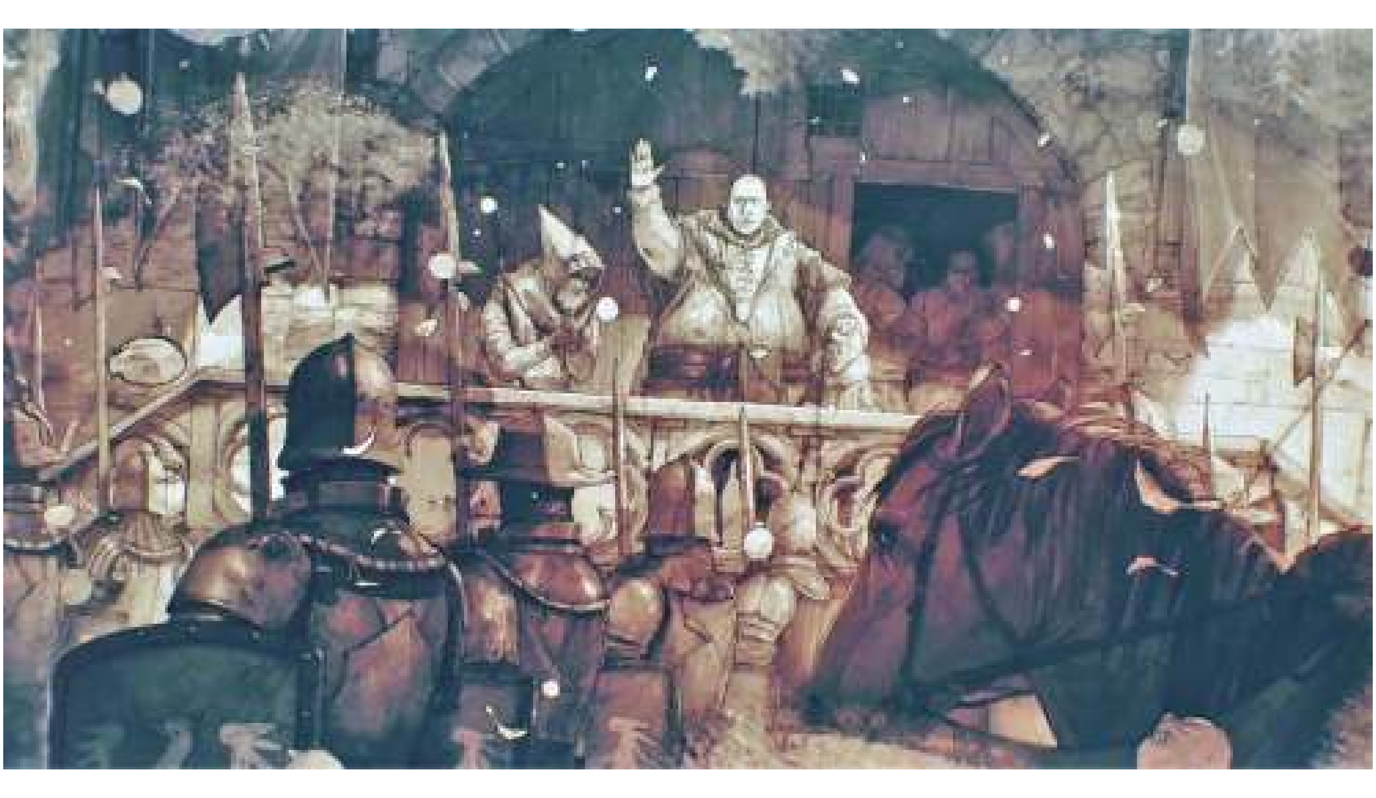
CONCLUSION 6: THE RULER OF NOVIGRAD AND VELEN (NO MAN'S LAND)

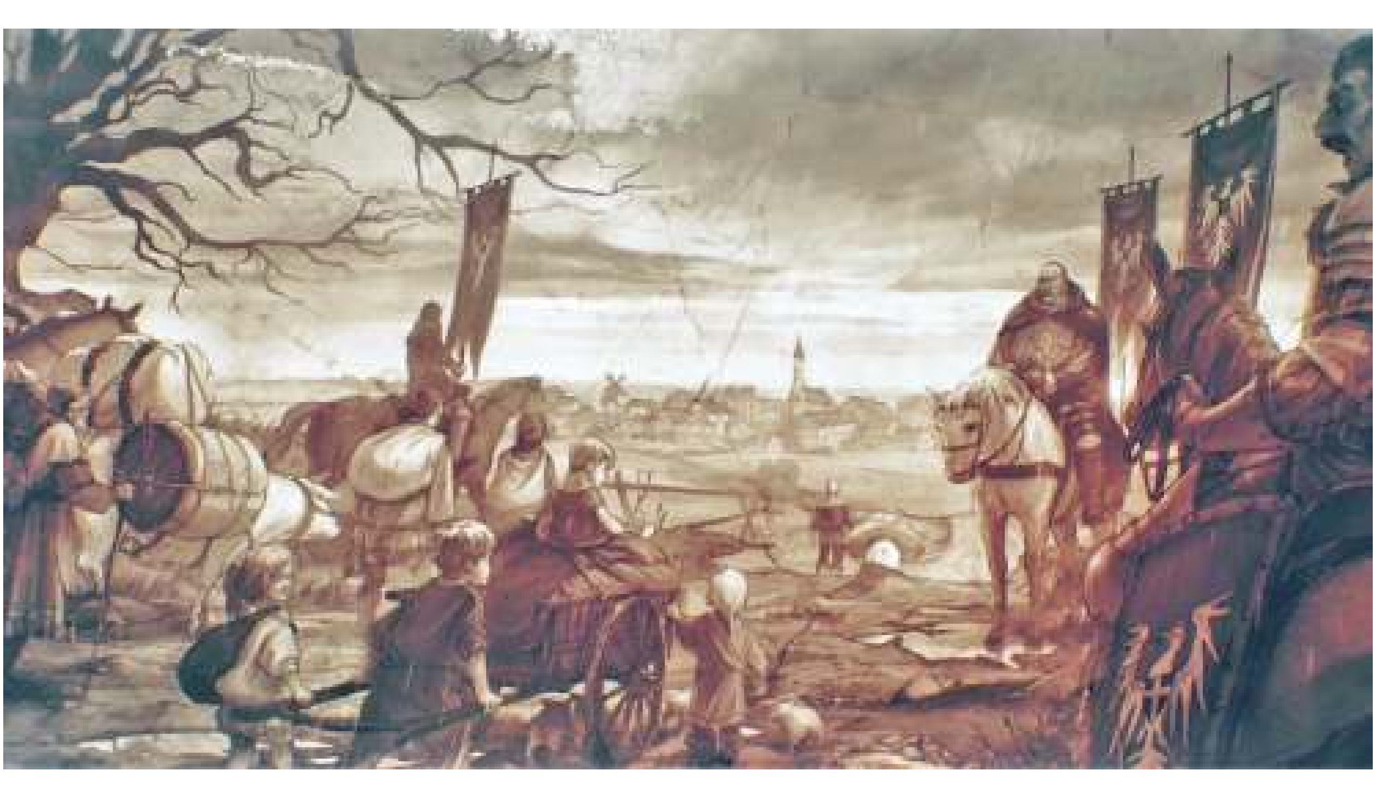
Radovid: A tactical genius, he handily defeated the Nilfgaardians to the south, and Radovid became ruler if you ignored all of the Assassins' Quests, and did not complete Secondary Quest: Reason of State. Radovid's subsequent witch hunt resulted in the murder of thousands of pellars, herbalists, and nonhumans.



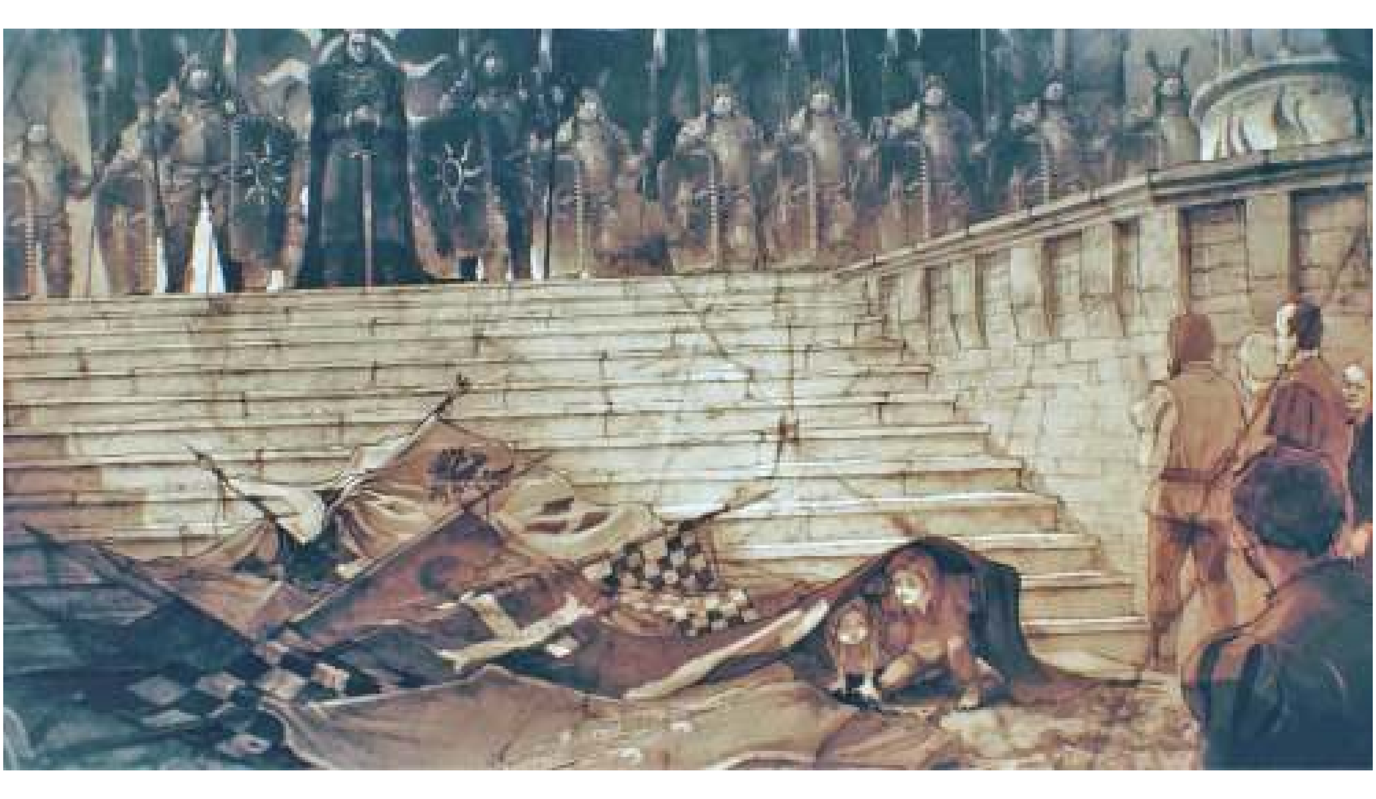


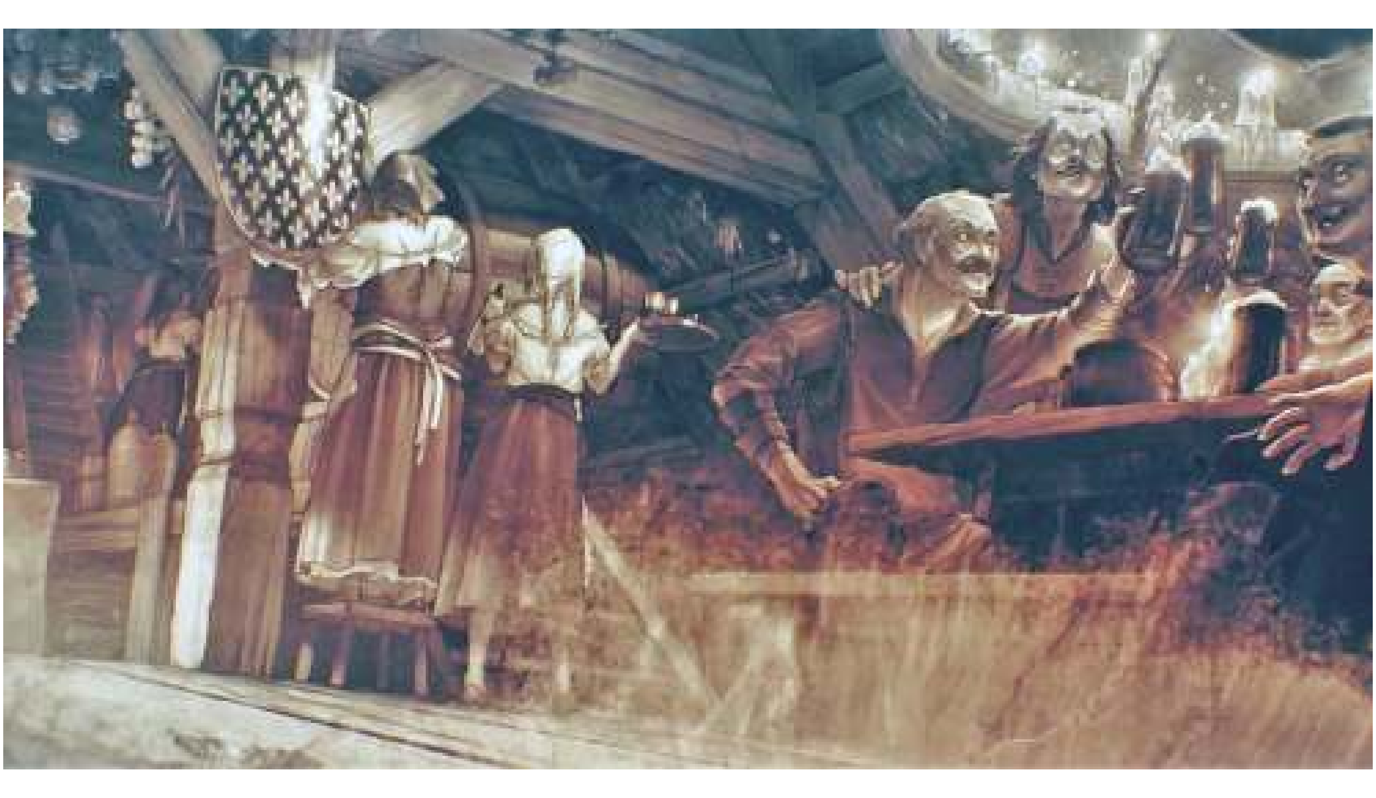
Dijkstra: The emperor was repelled in the field, Radovid fell victim to assassins, and a shadowy force took up the reins of power, if you completed all of the Assassins' Quests, Secondary Quest: Reason of State, and sided with Dijkstra. A consolidation of his rule and industrialization followed (for the good of his subjects, but contrary to their will).





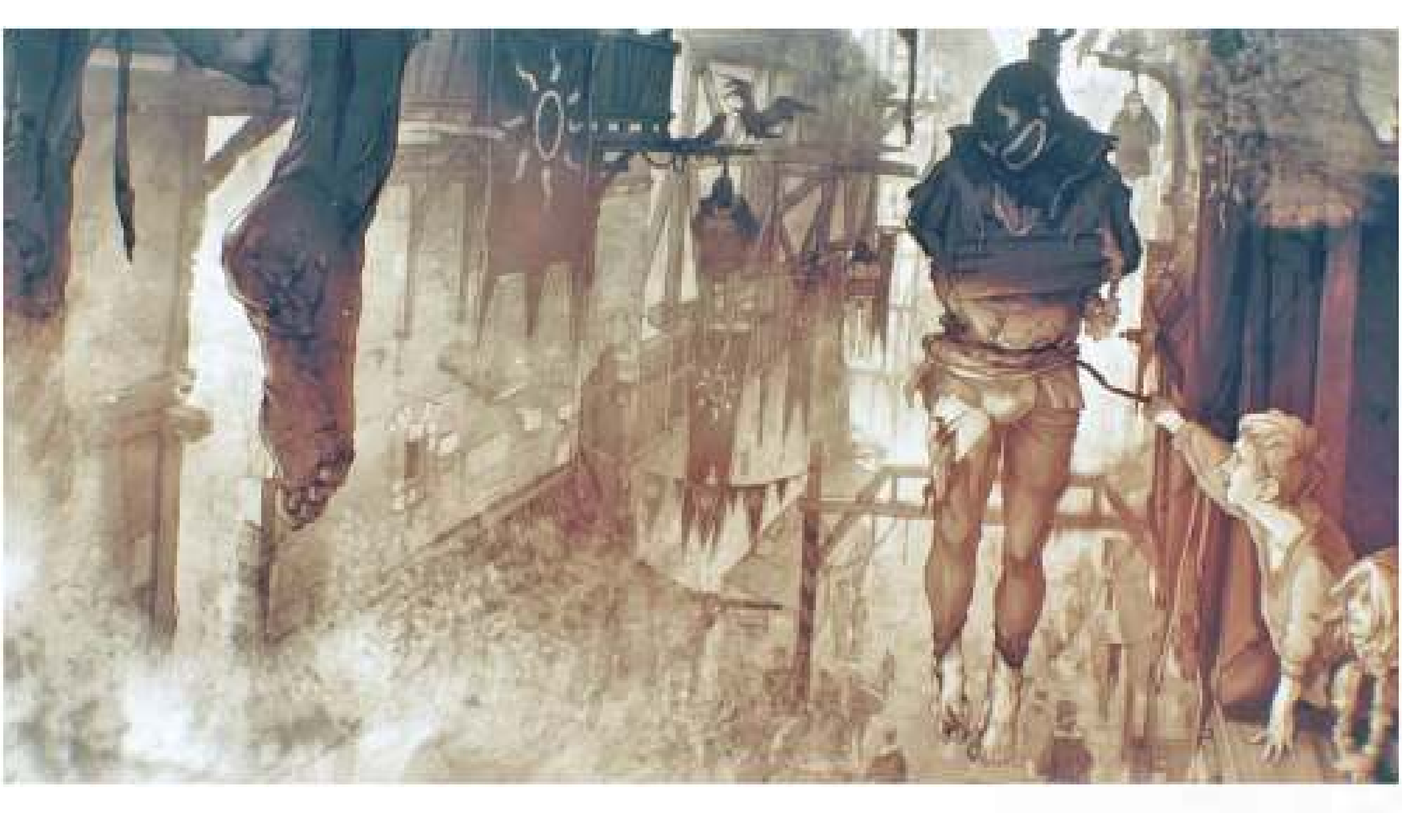
Emhyr var Emreis: With Radovid falling to an assassins' blade, the Northern Realms fell to the Emhyr's countless legions, if you completed all of the Assassins' Quests, Secondary Quest: Reason of State, and sided with Vernon Roche and Thaler. Emhyr redirected his forces, while the Temerians got their country back.



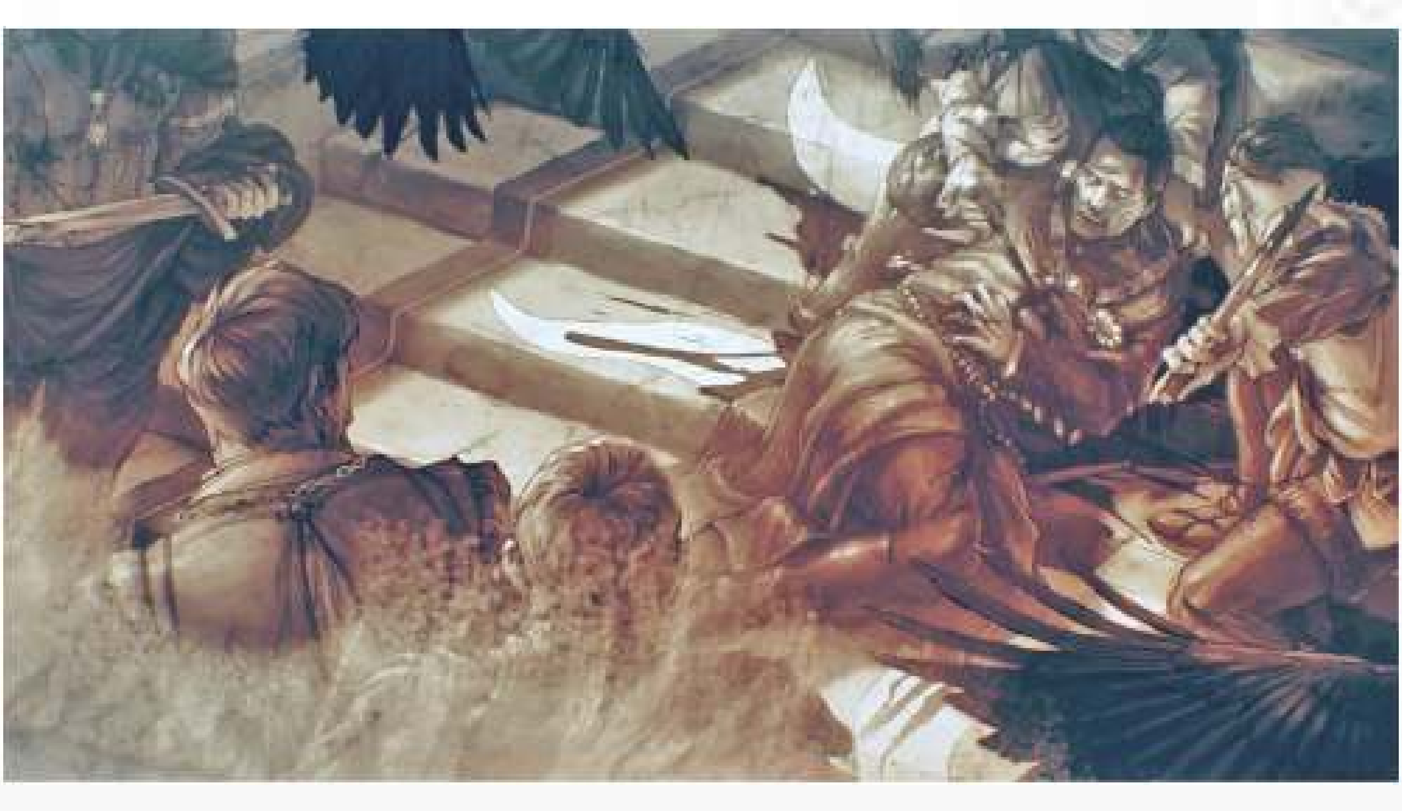


CONCLUSION 7: THE FATE OF THE EMPEROR

Emhyr var Emreis lives!: After Radovid's forces were dealt with, Emhyr turned to those who had conspired against him (soldiers and aristcrats alike) and showed no mercy. This occurs if the Ruler of Novigrad and Velen is Emhyr var Emreis.

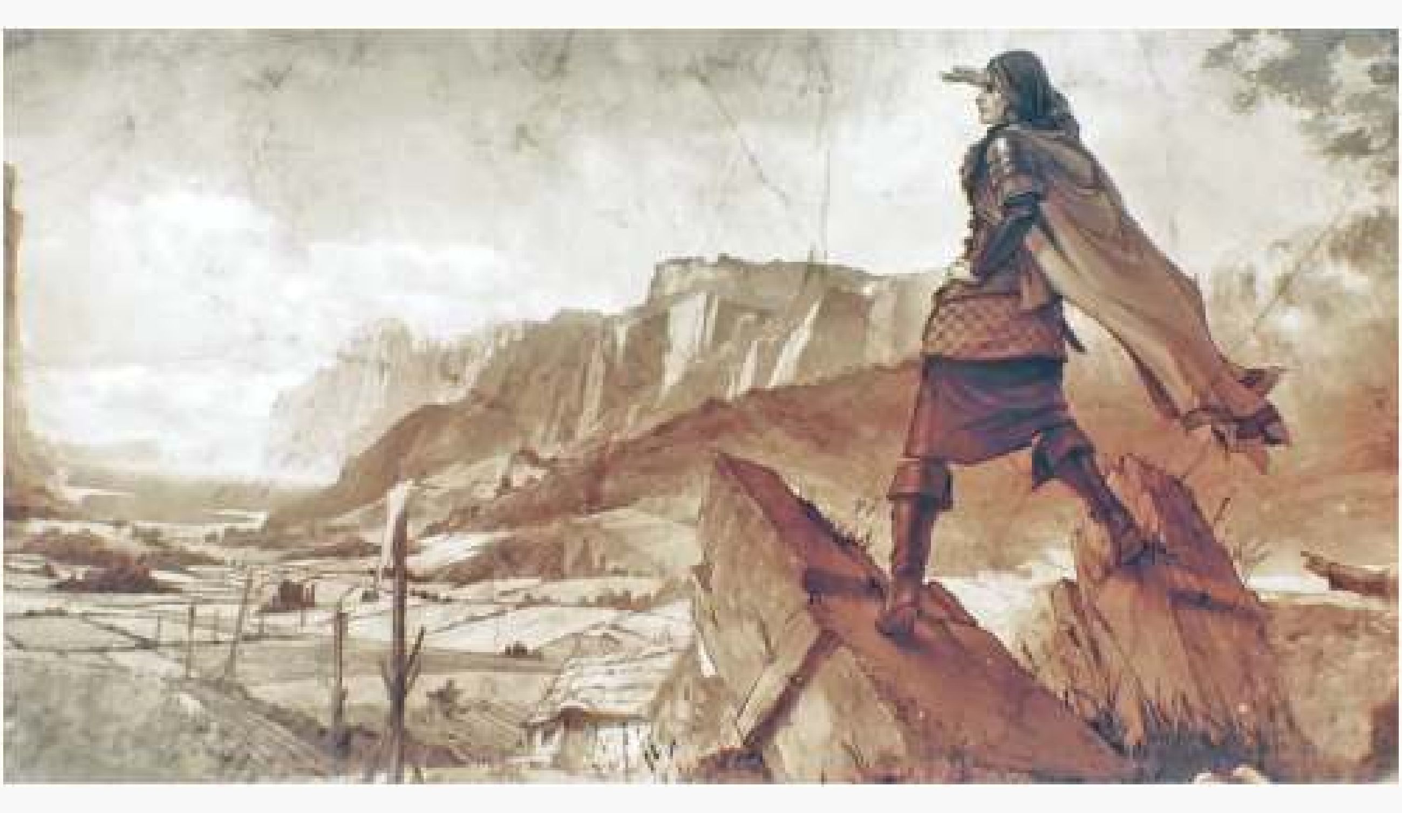


Emhyr var Emreis dies!: Boundlessly obedient as long as victory continued, Emhyr's subjects attacked after his string of humiliating defeats, and slew him on the steps of his palace at Vizima. This occurs if the Ruler of Novigrad and Velen is either Radovid or Dijkstra.

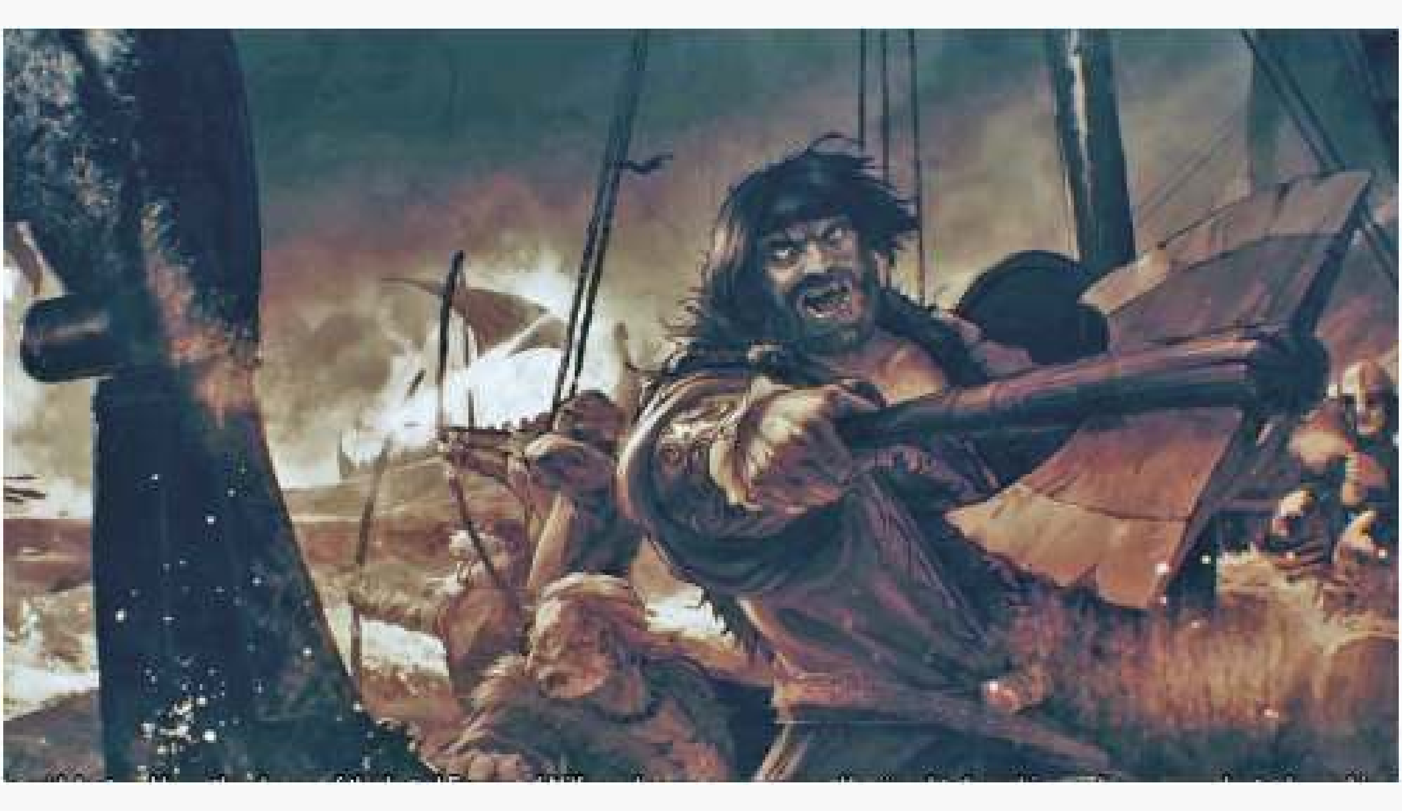


CONCLUSION 8: THE RULER OF SKELLIGE

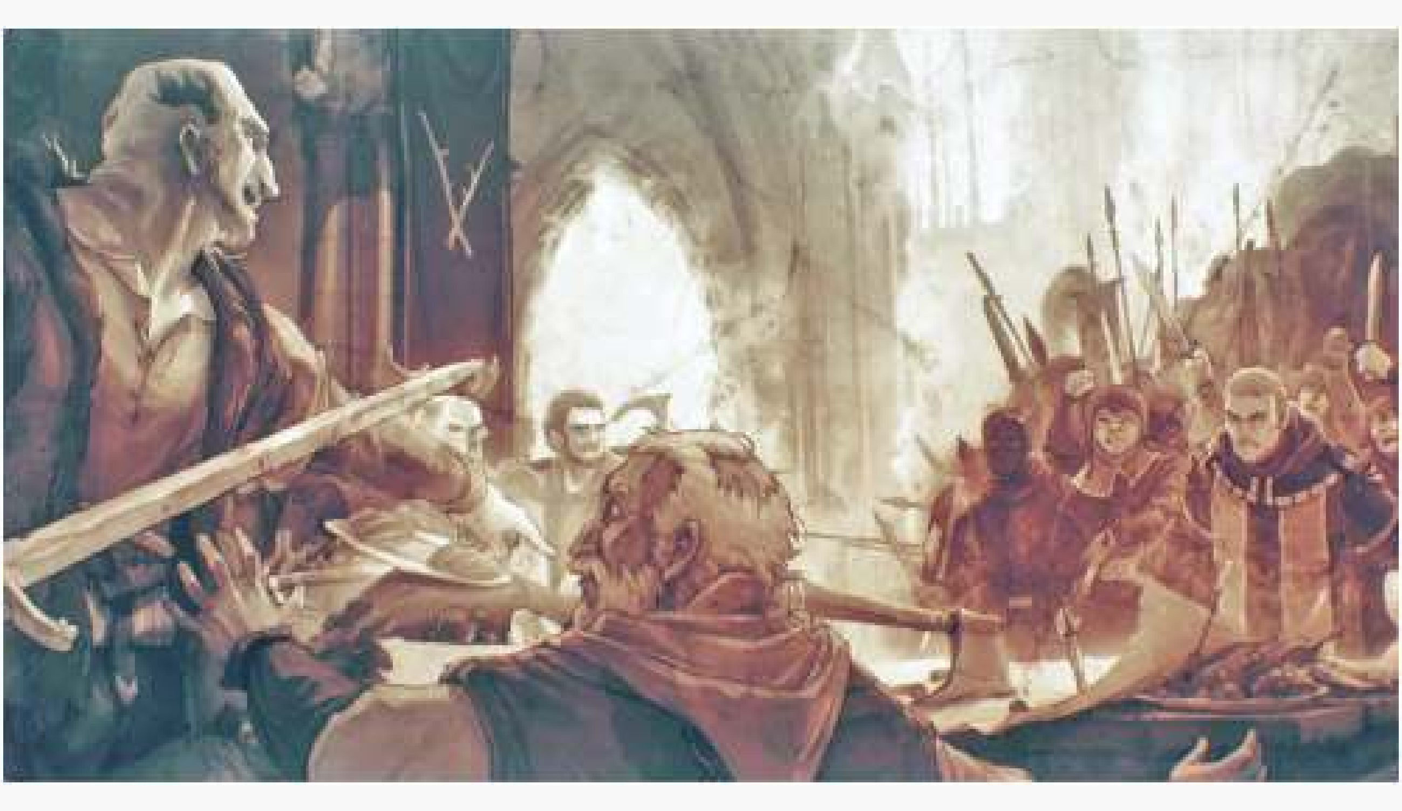
Cerys an Craite: There was no raiding of foreign shores, as Cerys turned to care for her own people and lands. Skellige prospered greatly, albeit with its fangs of yore dulled. This occurs if you completed the Clan An Craite Quests and sided with Cerys during King's Gambit.



Hjalmar an Craite: Despite the war on the Continent ending, Hjalmar vowed to loot and burn the shores of the hated Empire of Nilfgaard every spring, even if he was to drown his own people in blood. This occurs if you completed the Clan An Craite Quests and sided with Hjalmar during King's Gambit.

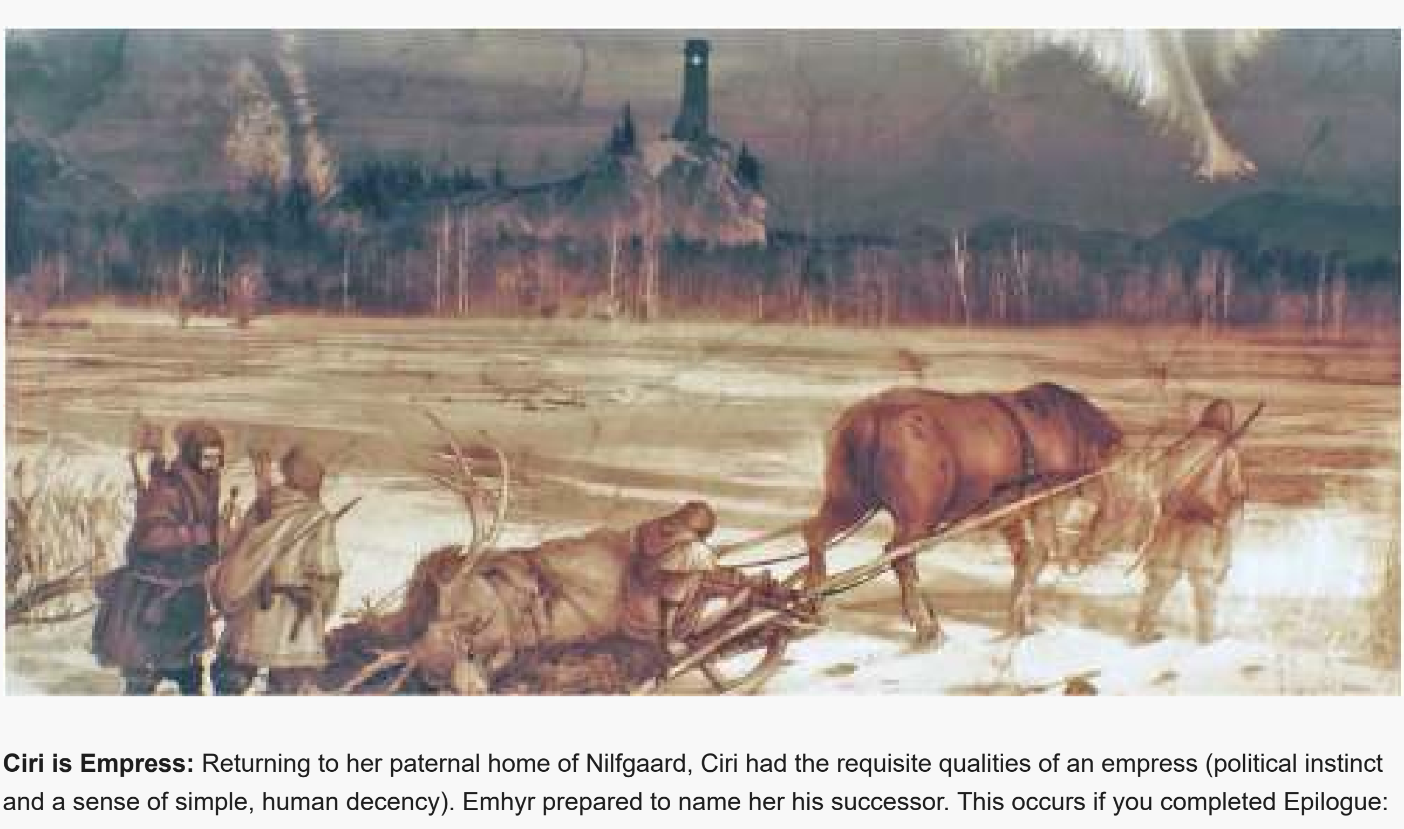


Svanrige Bran: The young king was no puppet. Tired of the Jarls' incessant feuding, he transformed the isles into an absolute monarchy like those of the Continent. This was an achievement thick with the blood of his countrymen. This occurs if you ignored the Clan An Craite Quest: Secondary Quest: King's Gambit.

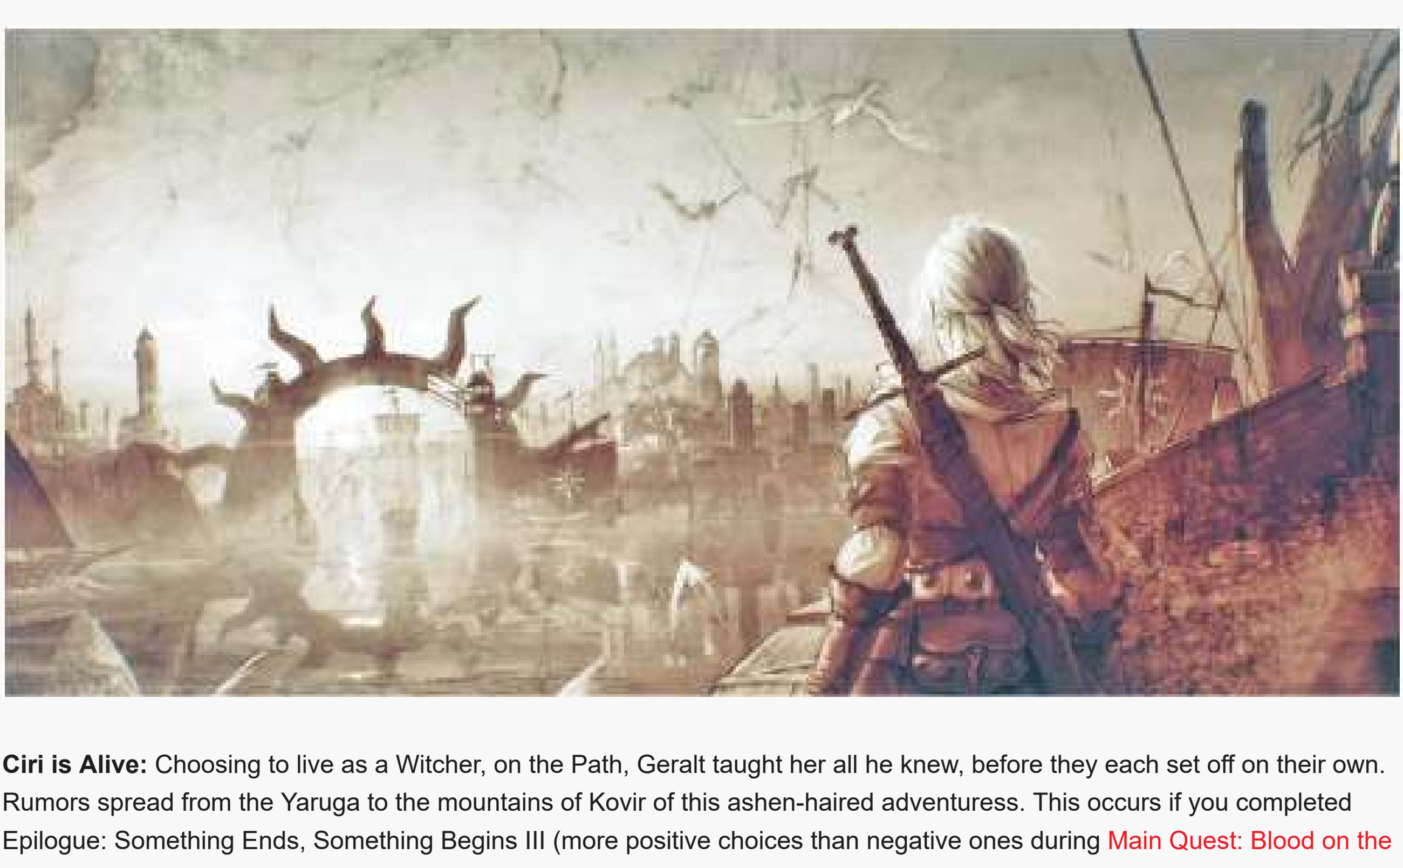


CONCLUSION 9: THE FATE OF CIRI

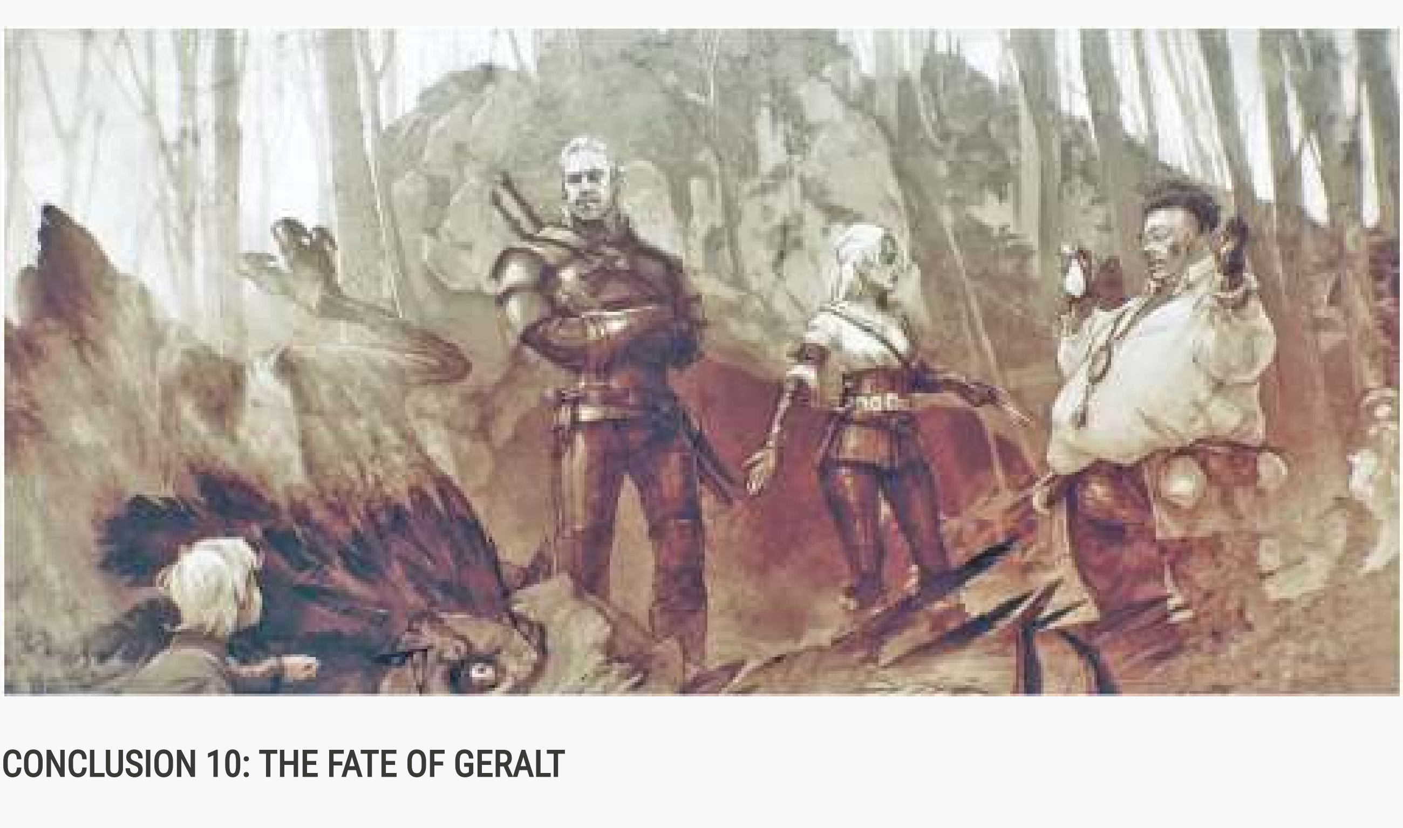
Ciri is Dead?: Since the memorable events on Undvik, Ciri is yet to be seen. Which hardly means she's never to return. This occurs if you completed Epilogue: Something Ends, Something Begins I (more negative choices than positive ones during Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, Main Quest: Final Preparations, and Main Quest: Battle Preparations).



Ciri is Empress: Returning to her paternal home of Nilfgaard, Ciri had the requisite qualities of an empress (political instinct and a sense of simple, human decency). Emhyr prepared to name her his successor. This occurs if you completed Epilogue: Something Ends, Something Begins II (more positive choices than negative ones during Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, Main Quest: Final Preparations, and Main Quest: Battle Preparations, and you visited Emhyr during Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield). Radovid must also be dead (you completed Secondary Quest: Reason of State), and you must side with Roche and Thaler.



Ciri is Alive: Choosing to live as a Witcher, on the Path, Geralt taught her all he knew, before they each set off on their own. Rumors spread from the Yaruga to the mountains of Kovir of this ashen-haired adventuress. This occurs if you completed Epilogue: Something Ends, Something Begins III (more positive choices than negative ones during Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield, Main Quest: Final Preparations, and Main Quest: Battle Preparations, and you did not visit Emhyr during Main Quest: Blood on the Battlefield).



CONCLUSION 10: THE FATE OF GERALT

With Triss: It is hard to believe, but Geralt finally planted roots in far away Kovir. The smell of freshly-baked cakes, an occasional job to undertake, and a fortune to spend as Triss was mage advisor to Kovir's king. The occurs if you completed

Escaping The Phakbarthojl

Gaunter O'Dimm, Master Mirror

You wake aboard a ship named Albatross (or in the Ofier tongue, "Phakbarthojl") with a crew of strange guards with stranger language, en route to Ofier. A fellow prisoner fills you in on the details; answer him how you wish. When the guards bring you food, and you ask the prisoner how to say "take me to your captain." Try to listen to him, as you're then presented with three choices:

- Choose the third option, "…alle'khe uhl eghullath!"

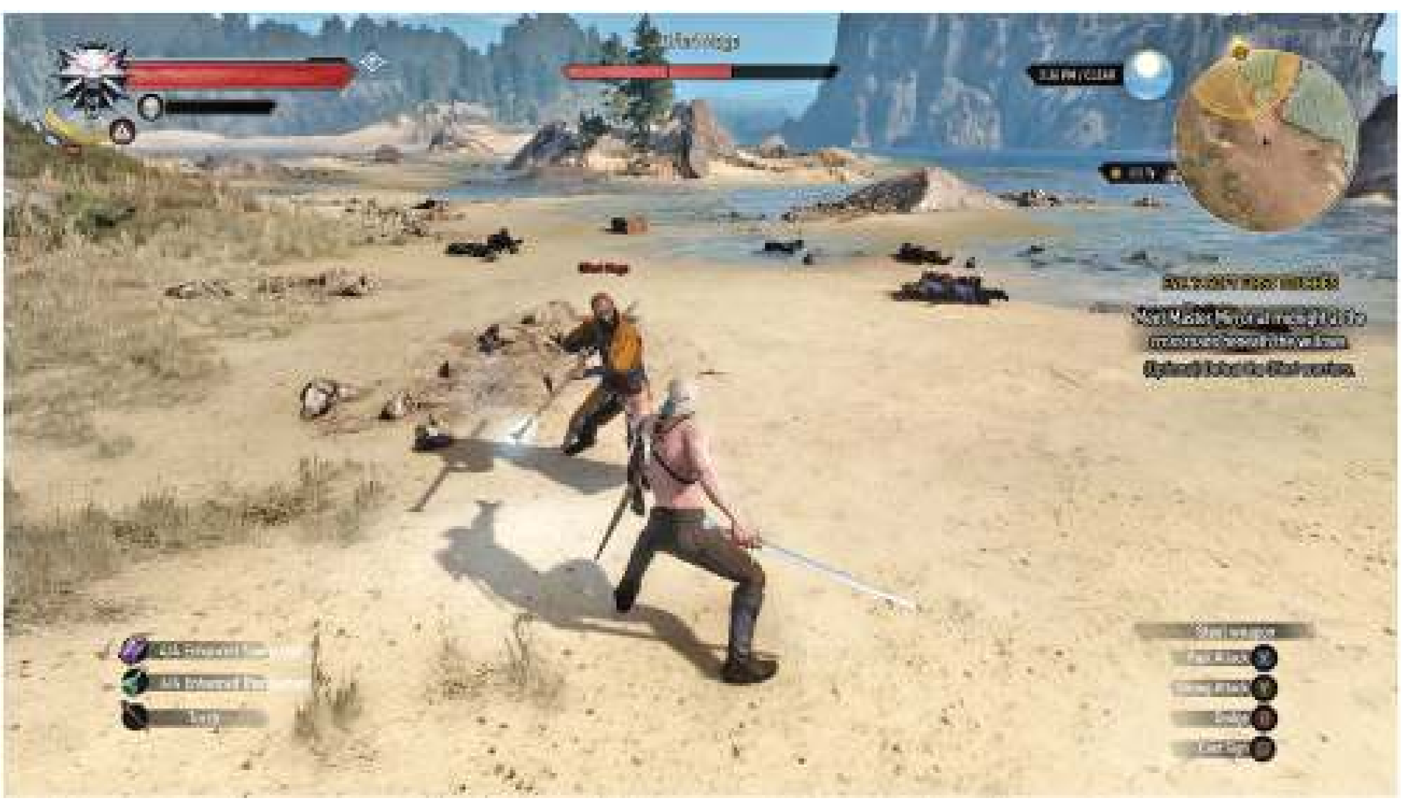
The guards are more impressed with your learned tongue, but otherwise the conclusion is the same; you're left here and your request ignored. Moments later, a figure strides out of the shadows and up to your cell, a man you might recognize if you met him in White Orchard during your initial search for Yennefer. Gaunter O'Dimm strikes a deal with you. You're extracted from this situation, after Master Mirror gives you something to remember him by.

Evil's First Soft Touches

Blood On The Sands

OBJECTIVES

- (Optional) Defeat the Ofieri warriors.



A mighty storm cracks open the Ofieri vessel, and it runs aground on the beaches northwest of Novigrad. After extricating yourself from a rather ignominious position, you are free to face a group of six Ofieri warriors lead by an impressively skilled Mage. You can:

- Run away, ideally in a southeasterly direction. Or,
- Battle them:

DEFEATING THE OFIERI MAGE: THE MAGE'S ATTACKS

Sand Cage: A number of small clouds of sand appear around you, before quickly closing in to damage and knock you down. Simply roll or dodge out of this maelstrom (the Mage's most damaging attack), and close the distance; the Mage doesn't tend to attempt this when he's facing you in melee combat. If you're fighting warriors too, back away from the Mage completely and coax the warriors into fighting first.

Sand Tornado (Long Range): A fast-moving whirl of sand whips toward you in a straight line. This gust causes damage and lifts you off the ground then throws you down just as violently. The tornado is signaled by the Mage whirling his staff around him, and he remains within (becomes part of) the tornado itself. As the tornado is relatively slow-moving, multiple dodge or rolls can quickly avoid this. It can be interrupted by casting Aard on the tornado as it comes into range.

(Close Range) Force Push: A quick wind gust attack that knocks you back, this is his way of exiting close combat after you strike him repeatedly. So don't be greedy when tackling him; roll in with a couple of strikes and then back up so you aren't struck by this and staggered.

Sand Coil Attack: The Mage points his staff in your direction and starts to spin it in a circle; sand shoots out of the staff (like a sideways tornado), causing damage and temporarily stunning you. Dodge to the side!

Staff Attack: At close combat range, the Mage uses his magic staff as a physical weapon (striking multiple times); simply parry and counter or dodge the attack as you would any other.

A Vanishing Act (Defensive): Expect him to disengage or avoid combat by simply vanishing, only to appear a few moments later with a whipping sand gust around him that damages those nearby. He can also dispel Yrden, reflect most bombs and bolts back at you, and tends not to burn or freeze for nearly as long as a normal human. Simply re-acquire the target once he vanishes (by locking onto the foe again) and roll out of his way until his attack concludes.

A Vanishing Act (Offensive): The Mage may teleport in close to you, while simultaneously causing a large sand blast that damages and staggers you.

Weaknesses: Sword Damage. The Mage is very susceptible to sword strikes. If you manage to get in close (after stunning the Mage), it is possible to hit him three times before he counters. This is the foundation of your attack plan.

DEFEATING THE OFIERI FOES: THE BEST BATTLE TACTICS

Begin by equipping the armor you're carrying, as it's not wise to fight the Ofieri bare-chested (despite what many a Skelliger might tell you).

Back up away from the Mage and save him for last. Then battle the warriors in the same way you would tackle a group of bandits or other human soldiers. All the usual tactics apply here.

Be advised that as long as more than one soldier is alive, the Mage only uses his teleports to stay away from you and any soldiers in the vicinity. When one soldier is left, the Mage begins using some ranged attacks. When only the Mage remains, expect him to utilize all his attacks. Expect him to teleport when you get too close. He also always counters if struck three times, using a force blast that knocks you down. So don't get greedy while hitting him. Instead, try a well-timed roll to get behind the Mage without being hit by the counter.

The Ofieri Mage is extremely dangerous at long range, and attacks from this distance that you might attempt are almost always dodged or reflected back at you. So close the distance as quickly as possible, using dodging and rolls to avoid any magical attacks along the way.

Once you're within sword-clipping distance, use Aard to stagger the Mage, and quickly follow up with two or three fast strikes. Then roll or dodge away, avoiding any sand he whips up.

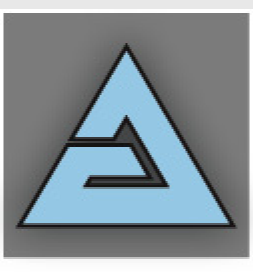
Continue with this "attrition" based tactic. Stagger him with Aard (or Igni, which is another option) and roll in to inflict two or three nasty sword strikes without being too greedy, before retreating back again, until the Mage yields.

Other Advice: After re-equipping your missing armor pieces, focus on the soldiers first. Dodge any area-of-effect attacks from the Mage, and once he's the only enemy left, quickly use Axii to stun him for long enough to reach him, and inflict sword damage. Igni and Aard can also keep the Mage occupied, allowing you to reach him.

Looting the Mage: This foe always drops a "Letter from an Ofieri Merchant" (read it at your leisure), as well as a (random) runestone, and (random) valuable trinket (such as a necklace).

OFIERI MAGE VULNERABILITIES

Hanged Man's Venom



Aard

End: Heads Will Roll

OBJECTIVES

- Go see Olgierd.
- (Optional) Defeat Olgierd.

Return to the Garin Estate, which is burning merrily (it seems the Wild Ones' merry-making got a little out of hand). Two Wild Ones bring out a prisoner, attempting an impromptu execution. You can:

- Answer the snotty executioners with "careful now," followed by "let him go or face my wrath," and face Olgierd himself in a spot of ferocious combat.
- Answer with neutral responses that aren't helpful to the prisoner's predicament, and watch the execution as Olgierd greets you.

DEFEATING OLGIERD: VON EVEREC'S ATTACKS

Advanced Swordplay: Olgierd is most adept at flurries of swordplay. He has incredible speed and power. Not only does he use quick combo attacks, but he can take on a shadow form and quickly dash toward you, launching powerful special attacks. Dashes and combo attacks end with special attacks that knock you down and inflict serious damage.

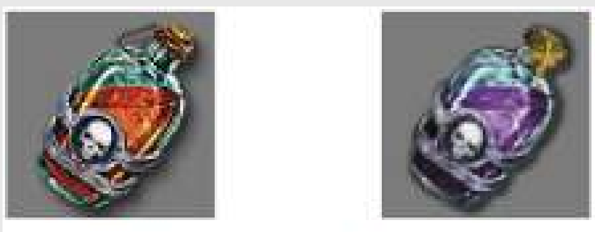
Using his Noggin: If you try to cast Signs on him, Olgierd dashes away. He's also immune to mind-control spells (so no Axii for you!).

Black Sand Counter Attack: When struck with swords or after you hit him thrice while he is stunned, Olgierd tosses a handful of black sand at you. If you are struck by this, it stuns and distorts your view. Plan your attack carefully to get out of this attacks range before it happens.

Zig-Zag Charge: A series of dashes with Olgierd's sword glowing red, and his form in shadow, usually ends in you being struck and knocked back or over. Dodge or roll to avoid this. With skill, try parrying the end of the technique and fight back with sword strikes.

Straight-Line Charge: An almost-instant dash forward and a mighty swipe, this looks like an impressively devastating technique. If you time a parry, you can counter and fight back, usually using this plan to win the fight.

OLGIERD'S VULNERABILITIES



Troll or Leshen Decoction

Hanged Man's Venom

Quen

DEFEATING OLGIERD: THE BEST BATTLE TACTICS

Initial Aggressiveness: Expect Olgierd to immediately launch a relentless series of attacks. The type depends on your location. If you're very close, he uses sword combo strikes ending with a very powerful attack. If you're further away, expect various dashing attacks so he can get in close and whittle you down.

Seeing Red: Olgierd's special attacks stand out thanks to the red energy surrounding them (and his sabre), as well as a brief period of slow motion right before the attack. Let's hope you can react in time!

Counter This! Are you a master of countering? Then you can complete this fight without ever being hit!

Oil and Quen: As you might not be expecting this fight, it's worth meditating first, and coating your weapon in Hanged Man's Venom. Next, cast Quen so you're protected from Olgierd's impressively-damaging sword swings. Certain decoctions (the Leshen, for example) that reflect damage are also helpful.

Patience and Dodging: The dashing and swordplay Olgierd employs is as impressive as it is dangerous, so fancy footwork is always a good option. Dodge (or roll) around him and make a trio of sword swings just after he finishes a technique (ideally followed by a dodge to the side). Yrden is also an option after his strikes, to slow him down.

Far Away Furiousness: If other techniques aren't working, feel free to back away from Olgierd, until he's prompted to try a straight-line charge you with his red sword a-glowing; the weakness after the charge is key to winning this fight.

Goading and Parrying: Waltzing in and slashing isn't wise. Though you can parry during his sword flurries (when he's in shadow), you're usually not able to parry them all. Wait until Olgierd makes his charge attack, and then parry it. Follow up with some damaging strikes. Repeat this process to wear him down and eventually he loses his head.

Other Tactics: When the fight starts, roll away from Olgierd, forcing him to be on the offensive, and thus leaving him open to your counter attacks. If you keep your distance, he always tries dashing. These maneuvers have a large window of opportunity for countering, right before Olgierd tries his special attack (easily seen by the red glow). Tap the parry button when his sabre glows red and time slows to counter; the energy from the blade is reflected back on Olgierd, stunning him. Then follow up with three sword attacks before Olgierd counters. As he starts to counter, roll backward and right so you're not hit. Then repeat this plan.

After the battle, or after watching the condemned man be executed, Olgierd speaks to you about the reasoning for the mob justice, and also of three unusual wishes he wants fulfilled. It falls to you to complete the first two of them:

- He wants his departed brother, Vlodimir von Everec, to be shown the time of his life. Which is a little tricky, as Vlodimir is currently dead. This starts Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Dead Man's Party.
- He wants the house of Maximillian Borsodi. Quite how one moves a house is currently a mystery. This starts Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Open Sesame!

You leave the Garin estate with the crowns Olgierd promised (though there's no chance to scavenge any valuables from the burning building). Before leaving, Gaunter O'Dimm appears again, providing some small hints (and some conversation choices to gain more knowledge) of your forthcoming tasks, as well as some blood to help with the summoning of Vlodimir's spirit.

ENEMIES: Wraiths, von Everec's ancestors, boars

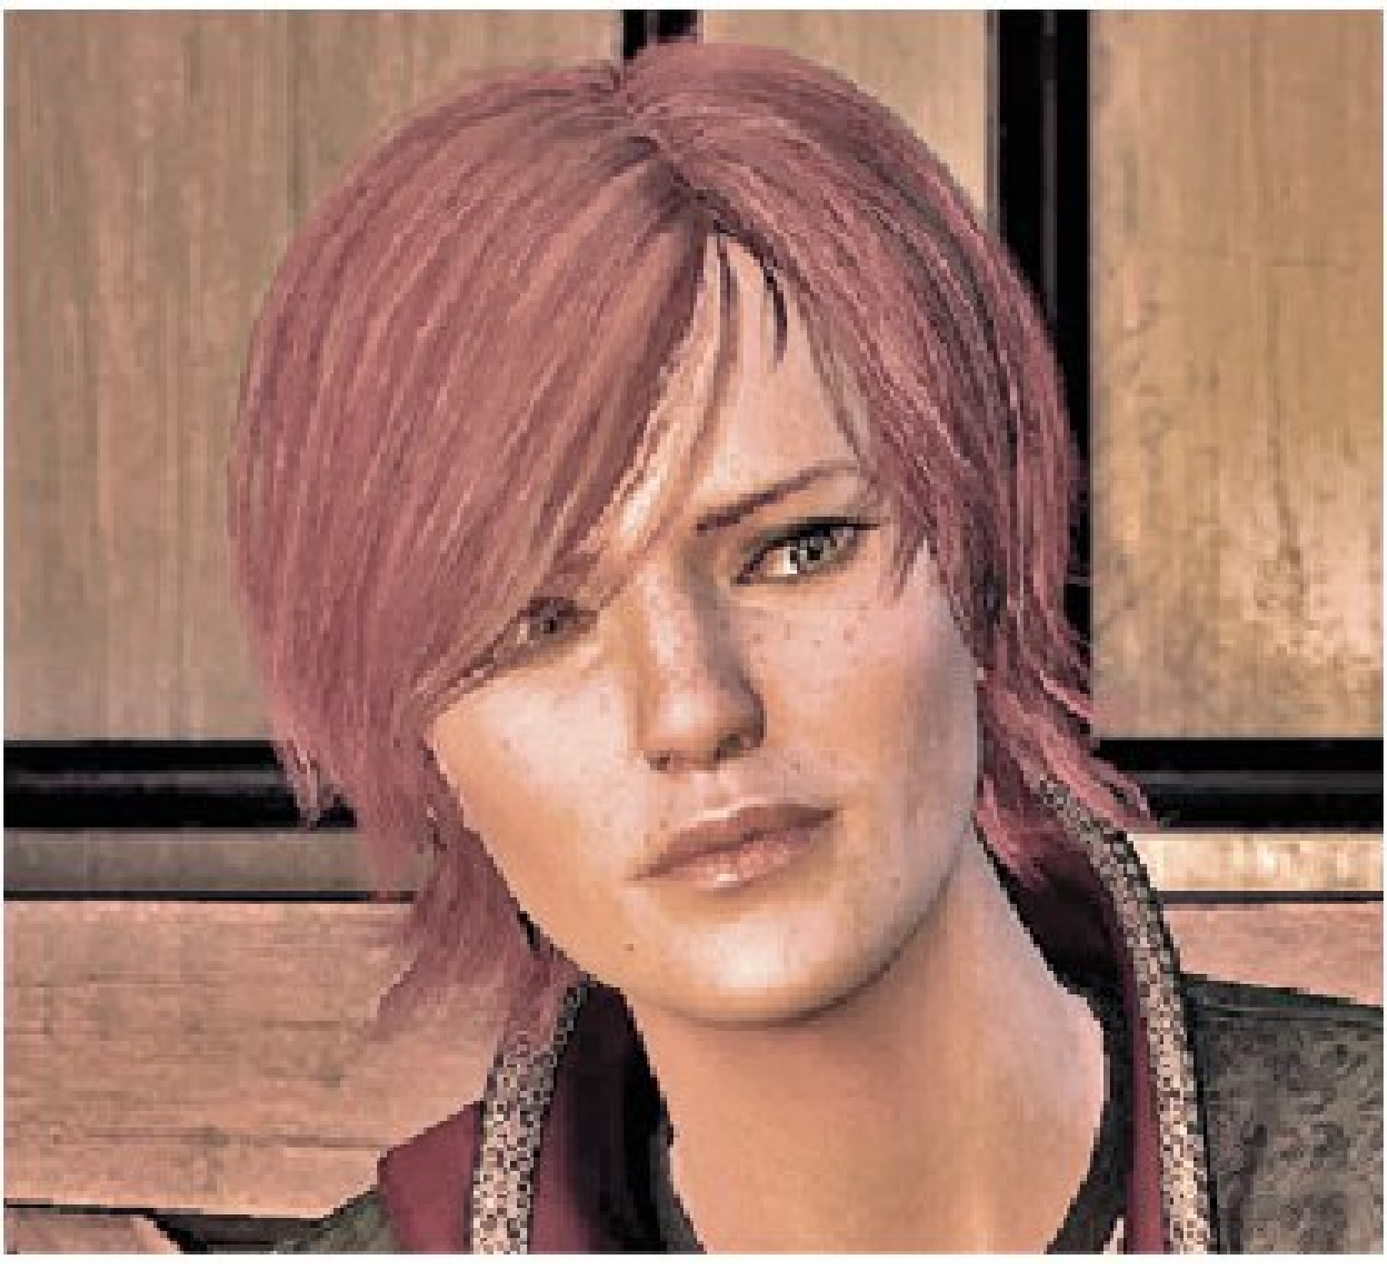
OBJECTIVES

- Talk to Shani about the von Everec family crypt.
- Meet Shani in front of the von Everec family crypt.

QUEST COMMENCEMENT

This quest is accessible immediately once you have completed Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Evil's Soft First Touches.

Your erstwhile companion Shani may have the knowledge to summon Olgierd's brother from the afterlife. She is practicing medicine within the walls of Oxenfurt, in her clinic just south of the Oxenfurt Harbor signpost. Head there, weave through the wheezing and coughing peasants, and up the interior stairs, where a group of Redanian soldiers is speaking to her in regards to the antidote she is concocting from the remains of the "toad."



Shani

Engage in some patter with the guard captain regarding scholars, and your opinion of Shani. Answer them how you wish. After the soldiers leave, ask Shani where she's been, before requesting her help. You explain your predicament. Shani offers to fetch a censer, and after you mention whose ghost it is you're trying to summon, she offers advice on finding the von Everec family crypt.

The crypt itself is a reasonably short gallop north and a little eastward of Oxenfurt, deep into the territory of Gustfields. You are wise to concoct potions and meditate before you reach the gloomy von Everec Estate. However, Shani is here gathering wild flowers to brighten up your day. She is fashioning a garland for a wedding. Would you mind accompanying her? Answer how you wish, before she hands you the censer.

Items: Censer

SUBTLE FLIRTATIONS WITH SHANI

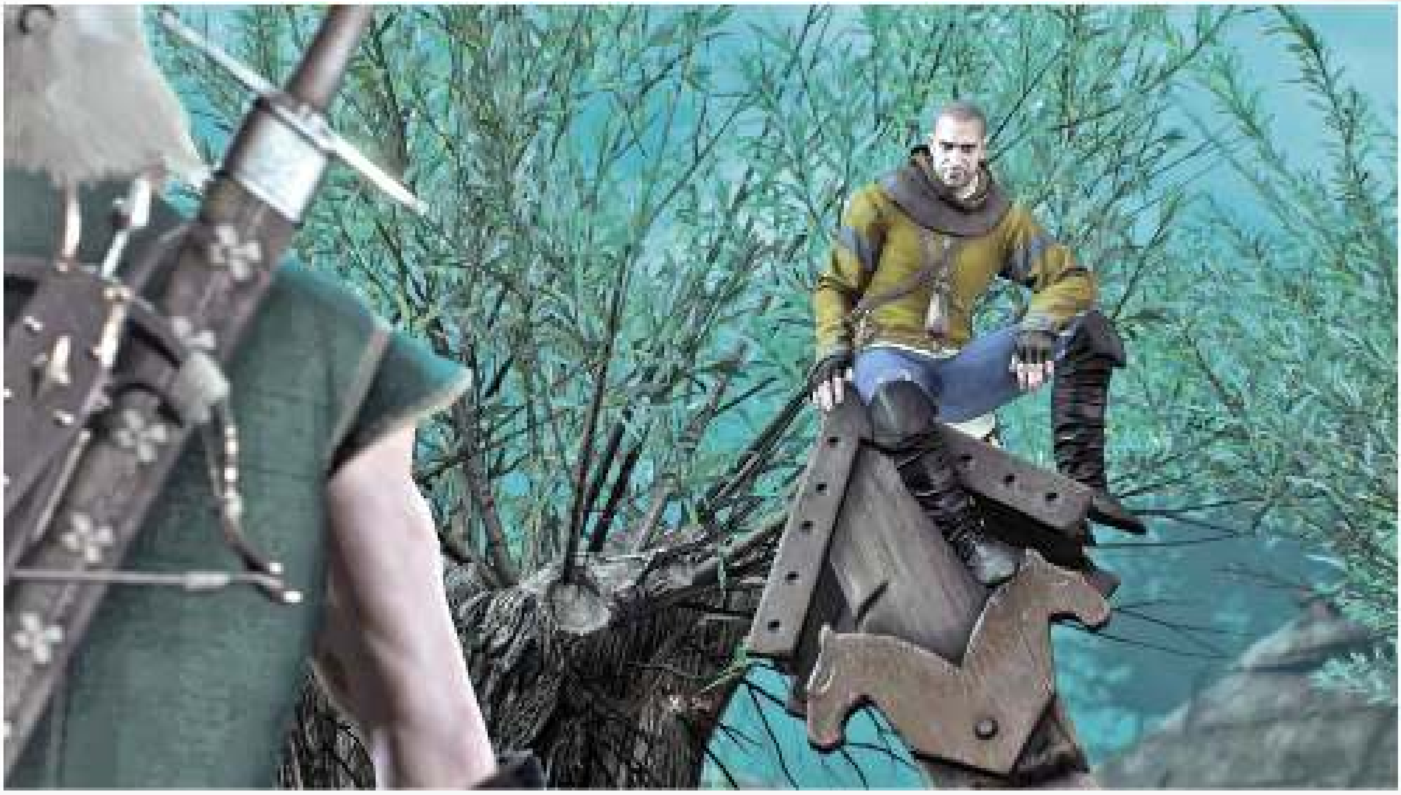
While you're speaking to Shani, think carefully about the questions and answers you give; this blossoming relationship requires subtle pleasantries over sarcasm and abruptness. Though the answers don't matter right now, becoming more than friends with Shani requires attentive answers and subtle flirtation.

Evil's First Soft Touches

The Vassal Of Master Mirror

OBJECTIVES

- Meet Master Mirror at midnight at the crossroads beneath the willows.



Once the Ofieri foes are vanquished, loot any chests or corpses you wish, and make your way eastward, past a beach cottage brimming with Drowners, to the village of Yantra in Gustfields. At the crossroads, just west of the village, look for the cluster of children singing nursery rhymes, near the sunflower fields. Wait or meditate until midnight, and speak to Master Mirror. Answer him how you wish.

The conversation can best be described as "strained." It seems you have little choice but to agree to Gaunter O'Dimm's orders, which involve collecting on a pact Gaunter made with that rapscallion, Olgierd von Everec.

Dead Man's Party

OBJECTIVES

- Defeat the wraiths as they appear.
- Use your Witcher Senses to explore the von Everec family crypt.
- Spread incense in every room in the crypt.

Shani decides to remain at the entrance to the creepy-looking crypt. Prepare your finest wraith-slaying equipment and enter the vault. Sure enough, a group of around six wraiths (attacking three at a time) have prepared an unwelcoming committee for you. Remove these threats as you would normally (consult the Bestiary of this guide for takedown tactics). Lure wraiths into side passages or escape back up to the surface if you're overwhelmed.

Return and light the votive fire.

Vlodimir von Everec (Ghost)

Vlodimir von Everec (Possessed Geralt)

Your activities meet with some success, though you raise every Von Everec family member except for Vlodimir. It seems they aren't happy with your actions. Prepare to defeat all five of them in combat, defending their weapon attacks as you would a bandit. After the ghosts are sent to the ether, Vlodimir von Everec makes an appearance. Feel free to ask him how he died, inquire about Olgierd, and answer how you wish. The conversation winds around to talking about the wish; you are to provide Vlodimir with one last evening of cavorting and debauchery. The only problem is, Vlodimir needs a corporeal form to manifest into. After a degree of protest, a host body is chosen—yours!

Dead Man's Party

Walking With A Dead Man Over My Shoulder

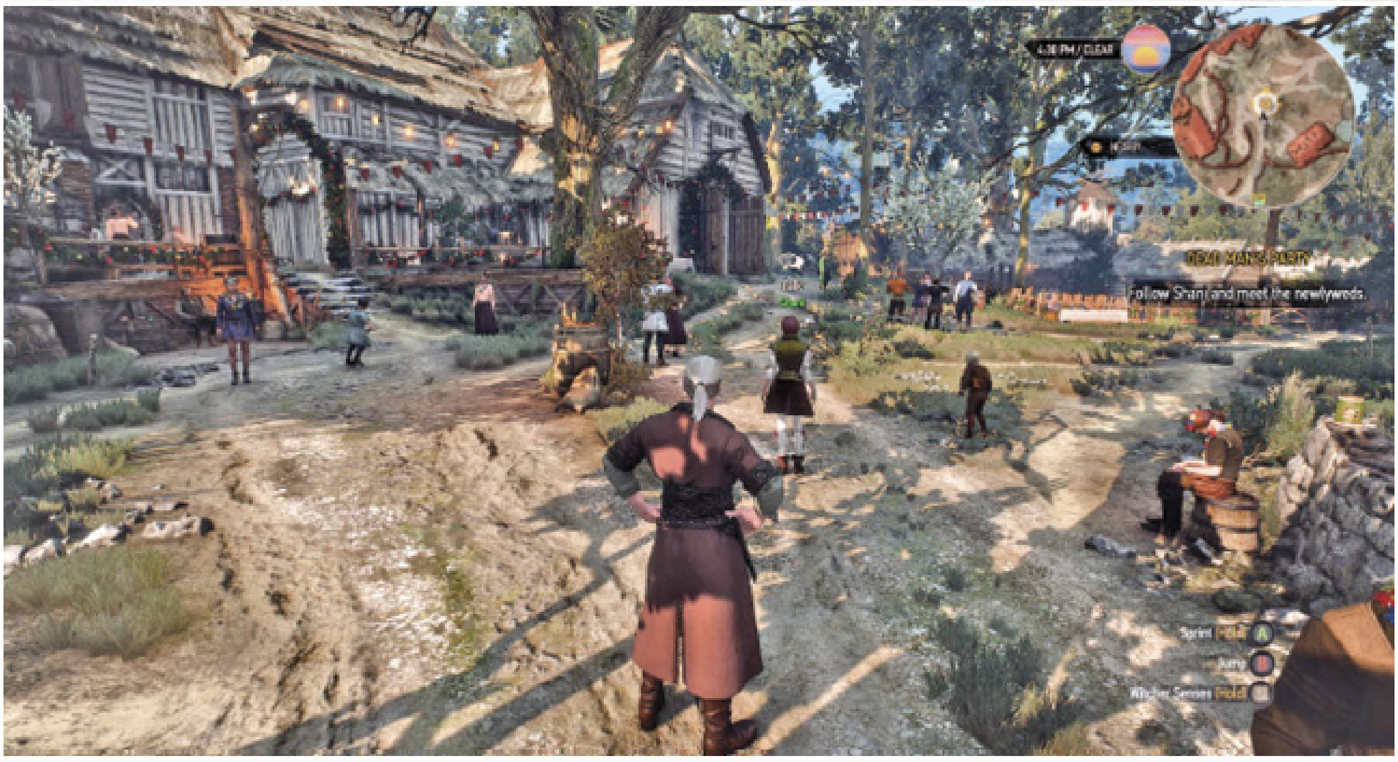
OBJECTIVES

- Follow Shani and meet the newlyweds.
- Talk to the newlyweds.

Aldona

Johnnus

After waiting with the insufferable Vlodimir until Shani arrives, you are forced to "borrow" a set of clothing from a nearby washing line, and take a razor to your stubble. After Shani is met (answer both of them as you wish, with an option to inquire about Shani's grudging acceptance of Vlodimir's incorrigible flirting), you enter the grounds of the manor farmstead, pause to look at a dog kennel (without a hound around), examine a rowan tree (one of Shani's favorites), and then must follow Shani to greet the newlyweds.



As Vlodimir is in control, Shani attempts to steer the conversation away from bawdy talk about the bride, and offensive talk about peasants. But feel free to ask the happy couple about the choice of groom, a hefty dowry, and their knowledge of Shani if you wish. Afterwards, you are free to roam the farmstead's grounds, giving Vlodimir the time of his life.

Ghost Dance

OBJECTIVES

- Talk to Master Mirror at the wedding.

LORD OF THE DANCE

This interval in festivities usually begins once you've completed two mandatory of the previously-listed activities (herding pigs and beating the planks is counted as one activity.

Gaunter O'Dimm (Master Mirror)

Guests are gathered into the main barn hall, where the Master of Mirrors announces you and Shani to the assembled guests. With Vlodimir in control, you both dance and exhibit the most fancy of footwork, before a more stately strut is undertaken. After your stealing a kiss, Shani is taken aback, and asks you to keep your hands to yourself. You have a timed response; answer as you wish. After Shani requests a talk with Geralt himself (answer as you wish), it comes time to speak with Master Mirror, but only after taking part in any remaining wedding activities you wish.

After the dance, you have the option to meet Gaunter O'Dimm (Master Mirror), who played host to this evening's festivities. He introduces himself to Shani, and then thoroughly demoralizes Vlodimir with his knowledge of von Everec's past. After Master Mirror leaves, Shani tells Vlodimir to cheer up. Continue to enjoy any further wedding activities until midnight.

Be aware that this is the last moment when you can take part in optional activities at the Wedding and achieve giving Vlodimir a hell of a night.

Dead Man's Party

Who Could Ask For More?

OBJECTIVES

- Take part in the wedding activities until midnight.

DON'T RUN AWAY; IT'S ONLY ME

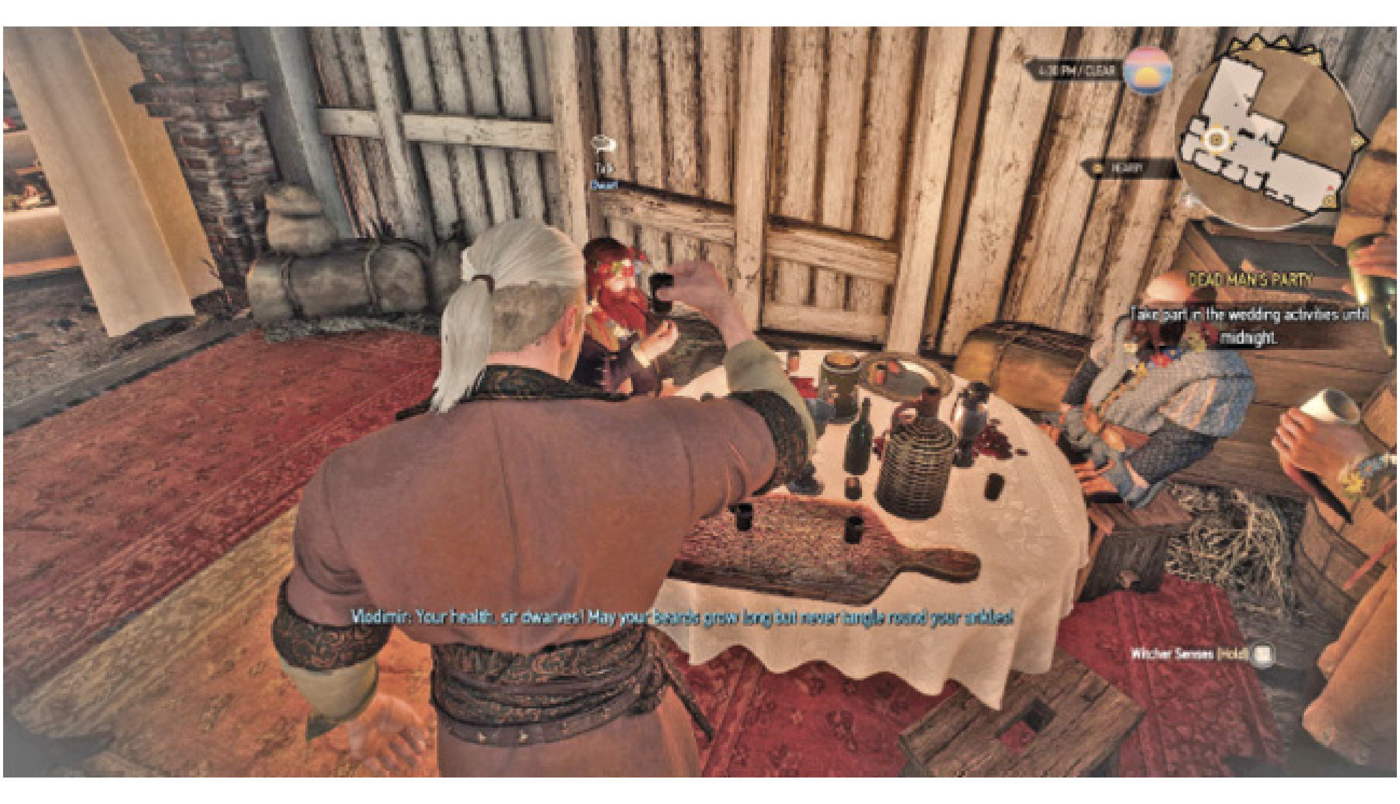
At this point, you are free to take part in the following wedding activities until midnight. Attempt each one to give Vlodimir every opportunity to enjoy himself. These can be completed in any order, and usually after the first two mandatory are concluded, the section marked "Ghost Dance" commences. After that, the rest of the activities can be completed.

OPTIONAL ACTVITY: BOTTOM'S UP!

Visit the small circular table and pick up the drink, toasting to the fair beauty here. And to Shani, naturally.

OPTIONAL ACTVITY: YOUR HEALTH, SIR DWARVES!

Locate the small circular table in the main building, pick up the drink, and toast the two diminutive bearded folk here.



Vlodimir: Your health, sir dwarves! May your beards grow long but never tangle round your ankles!

OPTIONAL ACTVITY: FUZZY AND WELL RIPE!

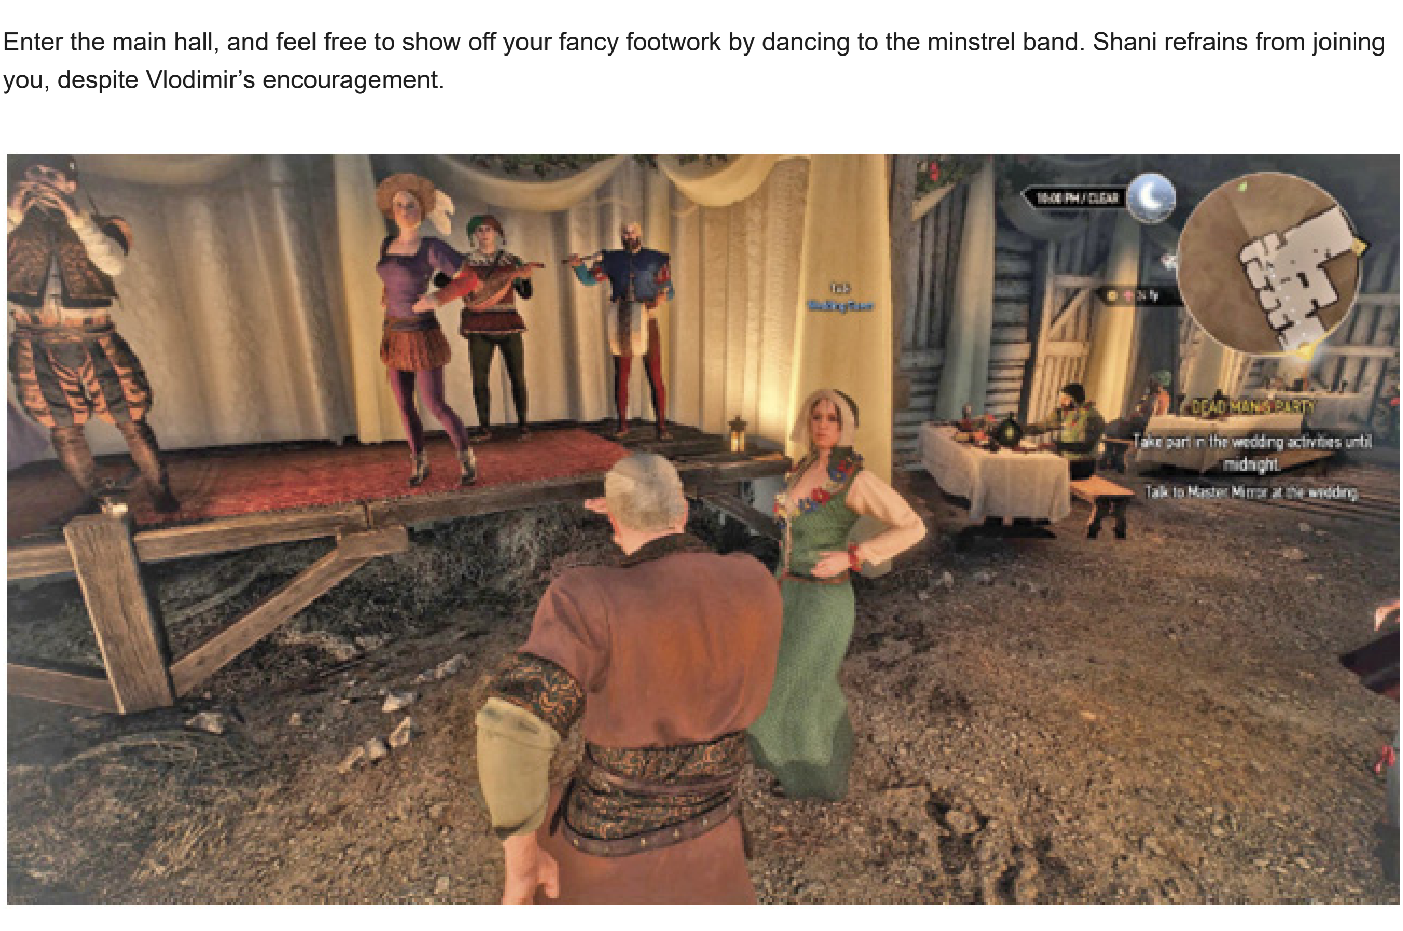
Wander the garden path near the loft ladder, and you chance upon a middle-aged woman. Vlodimir attempts his pick-up lines, causing the woman to blush and wander away. Still got it!

OPTIONAL ACTVITY: FIRE BURNS HOTTER IN AN OLD STOVE!

Locate the large oak tree, where an older lady is resting her back after pounding the churn. A short bout of banter then commences.

OPTIONAL ACTVITY: CUTTING A JIG

Enter the main hall, and feel free to show off your fancy footwork by dancing to the minstrel band. Shani refrains from joining you, despite Vlodimir's encouragement.



DEAD MAN'S PARTY
Take part in the wedding activities until midnight.
Talk to Master Mirror at the wedding.

OPTIONAL ACTVITY: HORSEPLAY IN THE HAYLOFT

Find the ladder at the edge of the garden steps, close to the side entrance of the main barn. You beckon Shani to follow. Use your Witcher Senses to locate a pair of cushions, and sit down. Vlodimir mentions he finds Shani intimidating, and she promises a little more romance. Before you leave the hayloft, search a nearby table for a unique Gwent card. Don't leave Brunwich without it!

Items: Gwent Card: Cow

MANDATORY ACTVITY: KING OF THE SWINEHERDS

OBJECTIVES

- Drive the pigs into the pen (2).

Find the pig pen, where a group of peasant partygoers are attempting to catch some slippery pigs. After inquiring about a possible prize, agree to chase some pigs. To avoid becoming an embarrassment, locate the two darker colored pigs with the painted circles on their backs. Use Axii to stun them into submission, and walk over to the pens so each one follows you.

But be warned, because those dirty tricks will be recognized by one of the peasants. If you want to win a fluffy pig mascot for Shani, chase the pigs to the pen with no Witcher tricks.

MANDATORY ACTVITY: THE MAIDEN AND THREE BROTHERS

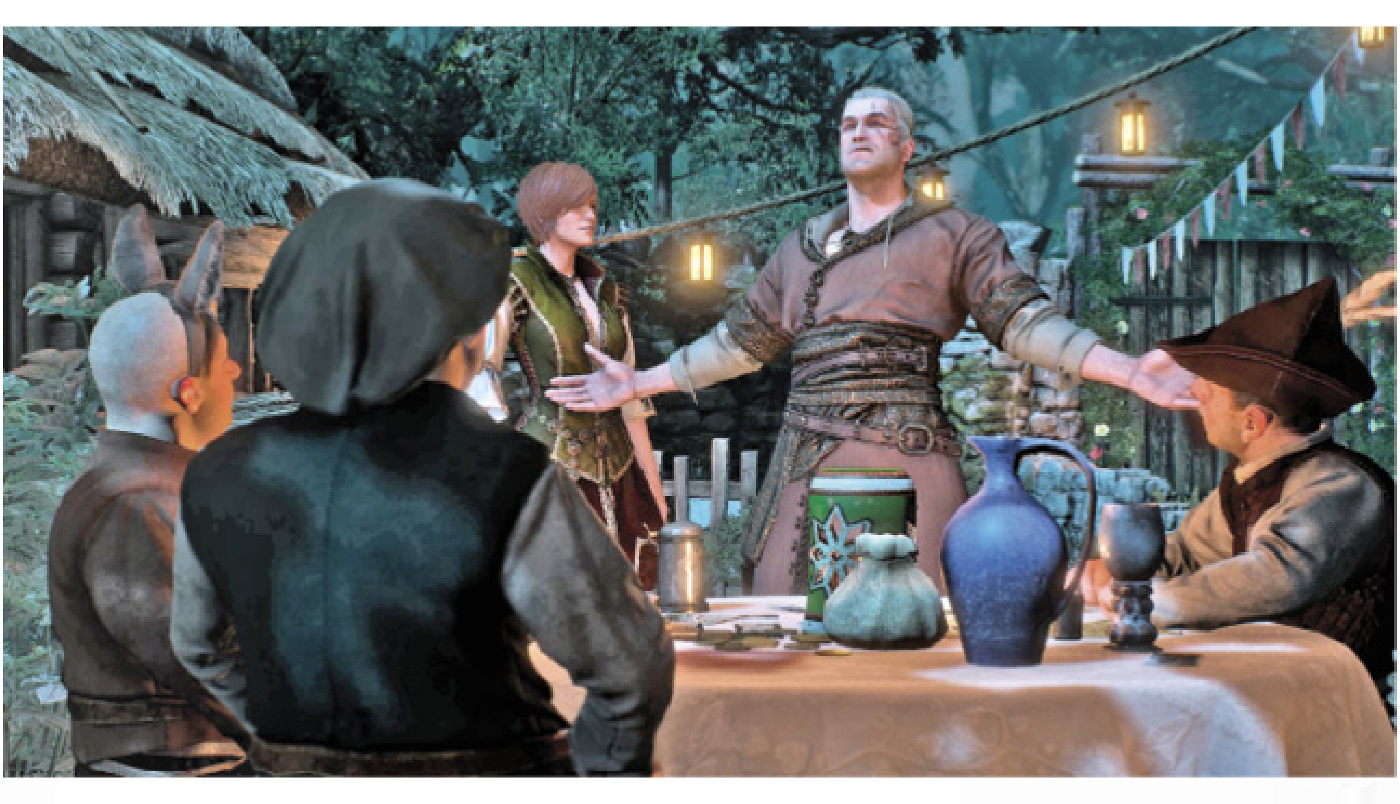
OBJECTIVES

- Defeat your opponents.

After completing King of the Swineherds by use of Axii, the method angers the peasantry, and you're not awarded the title. However, if you did it nicely, you will be given a unique wooden trophy of a pig's head to carry around on your horse and a fluffy mascot for Shani. Vlodimir is slightly dejected, while Shani indicates flirtation with a nearby maiden might brighten your spirits. Flirt with the peasant as you wish, until her three brothers appear and aren't too happy with your intentions. Answer them as you wish. The situation degenerates to a fight in the mud using wooden planks. Batter the three brothers and then have a final chat with Shani (answering her as you wish).

MANDATORY ACTVITY: A SMALL GAME OF GWENT

Outside, gathered around a table, a group of halflings are engaged in a game of Gwent. After Vlodimir insults their size, you can apologize (or not), and agree to a game. Despite Vlodimir waging Geralt's entire fortune, the halflings only take five percent of your coffers if you lose, with the added embarrassment of wearing a pair of donkey ears for the rest of the night. If you win, expect to gather some crowns.



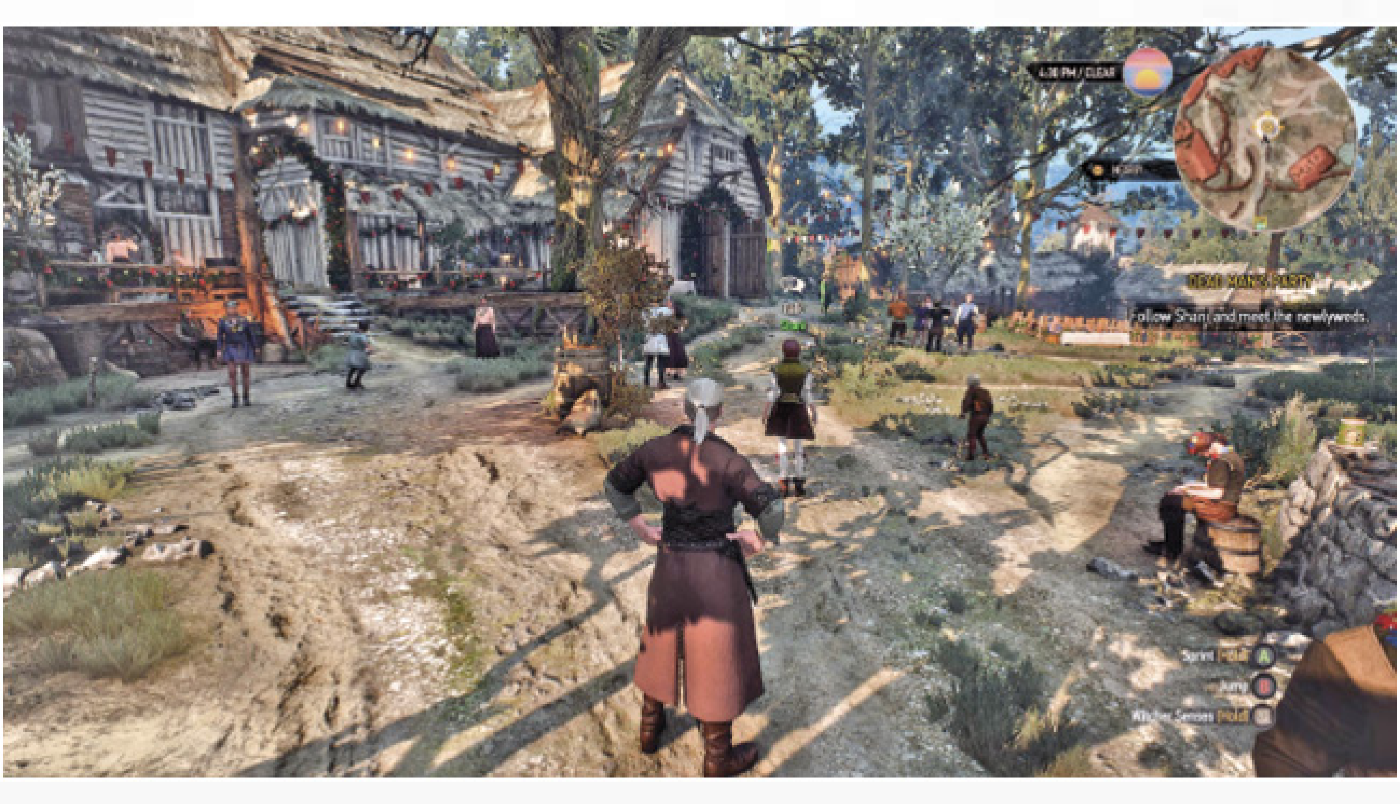
Items: Donkey Ears (loss)

MANDATORY ACTVITY: SLIP IN FOR A SLIPPER

OBJECTIVES

- Fish Shani's shoe out of the lake and give it to her.
- Defeat your opponents.

Saunter over to the small pond, where a group of peasants are playing a fishing game. After stripping to your skivvies, dive into the pond after Shani's shoe. Use your Witcher Senses to find it and two other soggy boots to prove you're particularly adept at this lark. In return, your "maid" is supposed to reward your gallantry. Perhaps later?

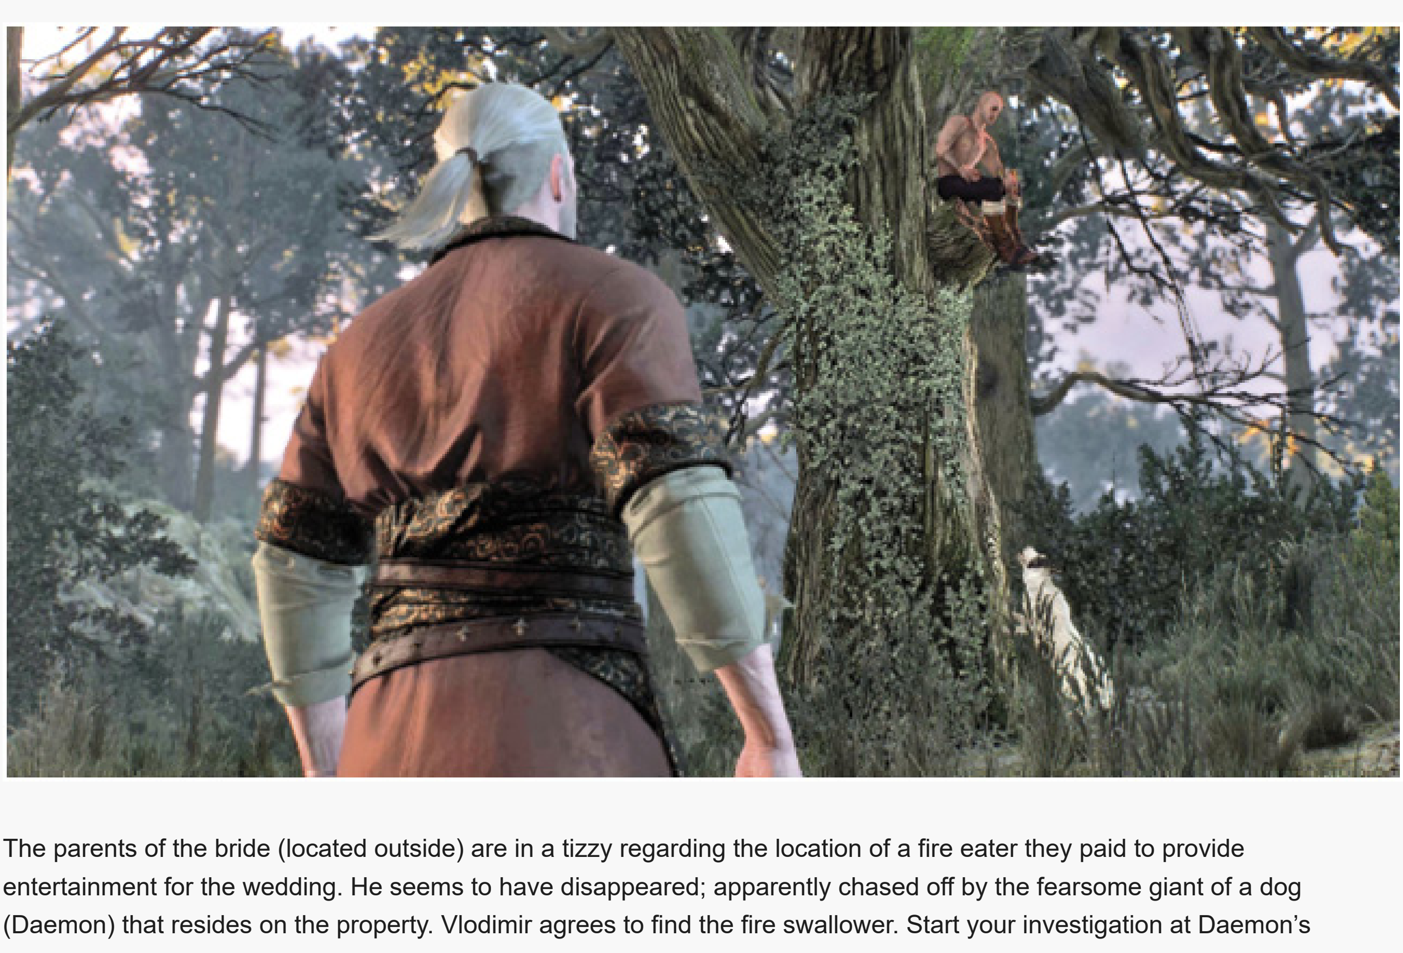


MANDATORY ACTVITY: MISSING MAN. MISSING MUTT.

OBJECTIVES

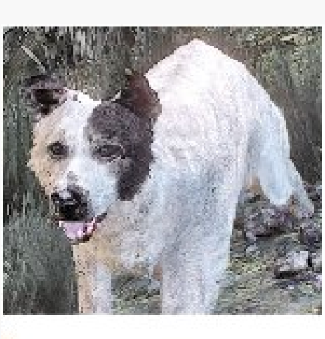
- Use your Witcher Senses to find the fire swallower.
- Escort the fire swallower back to the wedding.
- Protect the fire swallower from the "bear."
- (Optional) Inform the bride's mother about the fire swallower's fate.
- (Optional) Juggle to amuse the wedding guests.

Items: Lost Shoe (3)



The parents of the bride (located outside) are in a tizzy regarding the location of a fire eater they paid to provide entertainment for the wedding. He seems to have disappeared; apparently chased off by the fearsome giant of a dog (Daemon) that resides on the property. Vlodimir agrees to find the fire swallower. Start your investigation at Daemon's kennel:

- You find a gnawed bone and other oversized accouterments showing the dog to be an oversized beast.
- There are dog tracks, but small.



Daemon

David Artensborrow

While Shani waits at the wedding, exit the compound and follow the dog's trail north and west into the nearby woods. Continue until you spot a spark-spitter's cap on the ground.

Items: Fire swallower's cap

Continue across a stream, to a tree where the fire swallower is sitting, petrified by the beast at the base. Daemon isn't quite the behemoth you were expecting, but the scaredy cat up the tree isn't moving. You can:

- Axii: Calm the dog using this sign, after which Vlodimir has some fun giving Daemon some commands. You order the dog back home.
- Or you can rush the dog and it scampers off. But if you do, be warned that dog is never coming back home.

The fire-taster falls to the ground, and it quickly transpires the man is a stoneless coward. Optionally give him back his hat and then convince him to return to the festivities. You can:

(50 crowns) Bribe him, which annoys Vlodimir, but gets the job done.

(Axii Delusion Level 1) Inform the fire eater he isn't fleeing the area, and take the addled fellow back to perform.

Tell him to do what he wants, and he flees, leaving you no fire eater.

If you did obtain the hat, you can give it back to fire swallower. From now on he will always be wearing it.

Retrace your steps back to the wedding. Along the way as you cross the stream, you're attacked by a "bear" (according to the screaming fire swallower if you're chaperoning him, though the creature is in fact a Wild Boar). Be sure you keep the fire eater safe as one strike from the boar can kill him.

Should the fire eater survive, you have a quick chat where the fellow reveals his name, and the remaining journey to the farmstead passes without incident.

If the fire eater has wandered off, or the wild boar gores him, you must report back to the bride's parents without an entertainer.

END: ARTENSBURROW'S ANTICS

- Is your fire eater still alive and with you? Then report back to the bride's parents, and watch him perform.

END: THE DEFT JUGGLER

- Is your fire eater dead or disappeared? Then mention your prowess at juggling when speaking to the bride's parents, gather three juggling balls from the nearby table, and perform.

Dead Man’s Party

An Abrupt Departure

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the barn for the capping ceremony.

The capping ceremony to end the wedding festivities is about to begin. Head to the main hall, and optionally give a speech (despite Shani’s protests) to the bride and groom. At the conclusion, more merriment occurs and Shani catches the bride’s garland. Outside, Vlodimir is caught up in the revelry; but his tune soon changes when Master Mirror bids him a forceful farewell. Dismissing the ghost, you watch as Shani returns to be with Aldona, frustrated at your emotionless answers. Meanwhile, you receive some encouragement on matters of the heart. Answer any conversation topics as you wish.

CAPPING OFF

This usually begins once you’ve completed all of the wedding activities, or you’ve dawdled and not quite finished them all and the midnight hour arrives (whichever is first).

LOCATIONS: Brunwich, Miller's Lake (Brunwich)

CHARACTERS: Gaunter O'Dimm, Vlodimir von Everec, Shani

OBJECTIVES

- Read Shani's Character entry in the Journal to find out what might cheer her up.
- Use your Witcher Senses to find something that will cheer Shani up.
- Give Shani the present.

QUEST COMMENCEMENT

This (purely optional) quest is available at the end of Main Quest: Dead Man's Party. It automatically occurs once Gaunter O'Dimm arrives to remove Vlodimir from the proceedings, and forcibly dismisses him.

Shani

Your flirtatious nature (ostensibly under the guise of being possessed by Vlodimir) seems to have had an effect on Shani, though she seems to be a little put off by your lack of emotions now Vlodimir is dispelled. Gaunter O'Dimm encourages you to cheer her up. This is achieved by remembering what Shani said about her favorite blossoms; from the rowan tree. Read her Character entry and this is stated. Search for one of the following (using your Witcher Senses to pinpoint each item):

- A sprig of Chamomile, growing near an oak tree.
- A sprig of rowan; Shani used to weave the berries into necklaces. This is recommended.
- A bottle of mead, on a table near to where you talked with Gaunter O'Dimm last.
- A jug of Rowanberry brandy (just inside the main building, on a table); she might enjoy the taste as well as the blossoms.

A MIDNIGHT CLEAR
Give Shani the present

Once you've chosen your gift, find Shani inside the main building. Give her the gift, and her response depends on what you picked out for her:

- The Chamomile isn't well received; she thinks of it more as a type of tea. But the romance is still possible.
- The sprig of rowan is gratefully received, as Shani is surprised you remembered; she wears the berries in her hair from this point. Romance is in the cards.
- The bottle of mead elicits a single, only slightly positive response: "Thanks." Romance is still a possibility.
- The jug of rowanberry brandy causes Shani to ponder the taste of her favorite berry. Romance can continue.

Your conversation with Shani now continues. You can answer her as you wish as you drink tonight and listen to the off-key minstrels. You both decide to go for a walk.

Shani’s Quest: A Midnight Clear

A Stroll Towards Miller’s Lake

Conversation with Shani continues. When she asks how you enjoyed the wedding, you can answer with either response. You wander past Johnnus and his father-in-law, bonding after the wedding. This brings up a conversation about Shani’s own mother. Answer her as you wish.

You walk past the three “brave” brothers you bettered with a plank of wood earlier in Main Quest: Dead Man’s Party. When Shani asks if the brothers’ sister was worth a tumble in the hay, answer as you wish.

The conversation continues at the edge of the lake. Shani is taken by the natural beauty of the place, and you steal a kiss. When she asks how it compares, answer as you wish. When she asks whether you have time to waste, you have two important choices:

- Answer “kiss sure didn’t sate me,” and the romance continues.
- Answer “Let’s go back,” and you both agree to just stay friends. Before Shani leaves, you ask her a favor, to find out more about Olgierd. She agrees, and this quest concludes.

Dead Man’s Party

A Wish Fulfilled

Once you woo Shani, or ignore her completely and leave Brunwich, you can return to Oxenfurt, enter the Alchemy Inn, and speak with Olgierd regarding the evening’s merriment. This can be done whether or not you finish Main Quest: Open Sesame. Mention his brother, and you share a drink and Vlodimir’s Note with Olgierd. You can also quiz him about the company he keeps, his saber, the Ofieri “toad” prince, or play Gwent.

- If only Main Quest: Dead Man’s Party has been completed, you must finish Main Quest: Open Sesame.
- If both Main Quests: Dead Man’s Party and Open Sesame have been completed, the wild ones free a man from a barrel. Consult the end of Open Sesame for further details; Main Quest: Scenes from a Marriage begins.

RECOMMENDED ITEMS: At least 2,000 Crowns

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the Borsodi auction house in Oxenfurt and ask for the owner.

QUEST COMMENCEMENT

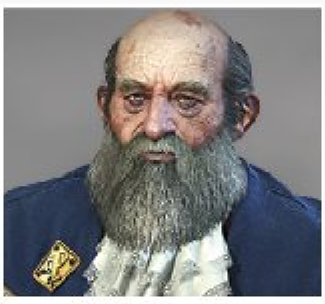
This quest is accessible immediately once you have completed Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Evil's Soft First Touches. It can be completed before or after Main Quest: Dead Man's Party.

AUCTION HOUSE ETIQUETTE: PART 1

The initial stages of this quest take place within the Borsodi Auction House, and there are some great finds to purchase or bid on! As many of these items are useful, and can't be found at any other point in your travels, be sure you're carrying at least 2,000 crowns to cover your expenses.

The next wish demanded of you is to bring Olgierd the house of Maximilian Borsodi; currently an object that's a mystery to you. Set off for the auction house in Oxenfurt, until you're stopped by two guards at the main entrance. A particularly po-faced soldier named Vatslav isn't about to let you in, no matter how you answer the conversations. That is, until Vimme Vivaldi (with the bank branch in Novigrad) saunters up, and brow-beats the guard into letting you through.

Lance Corporal Vatslav



Vimme Vivaldi

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the upper floor of the auction house.
- Wait for the auction to start.

You're here to talk to Horst Borsodi (the auction house owner), but Vimme reckons that might be a problem, as Horst is an antisocial sort. Optionally speak to the dwarf about the items up for bid, and why the Borsodis moved their auction house from Novigrad. Now optionally inspect the auction trinkets behind the glass cages, then head up the stairs. Vimme quickly points out some of his more important associates: Countess Mignole, Hilbert the Gwent player, and Yaromir the art dealer.

Shani's Quest: A Midnight Clear

Row Me To The Moon

If you promised Shani to be even more direct with your affection than Vlodimir, you both scout out an area where you can be together. The pier is taken, but Shani picks up a bottle of wine to swig as you gather a rowboat. At this point:

- If you gave Shani either the sprig of Chamomile or Rowanberries, the conversation continues.
- If you gave Shani either the mead or rowanberry brandy, you can either let her drink, or dissuade her from mixing her drinks.

You push the boat out onto the lake and the moon casts a soft light over your writhing forms. Abandoning your clothing, you both claim each other.

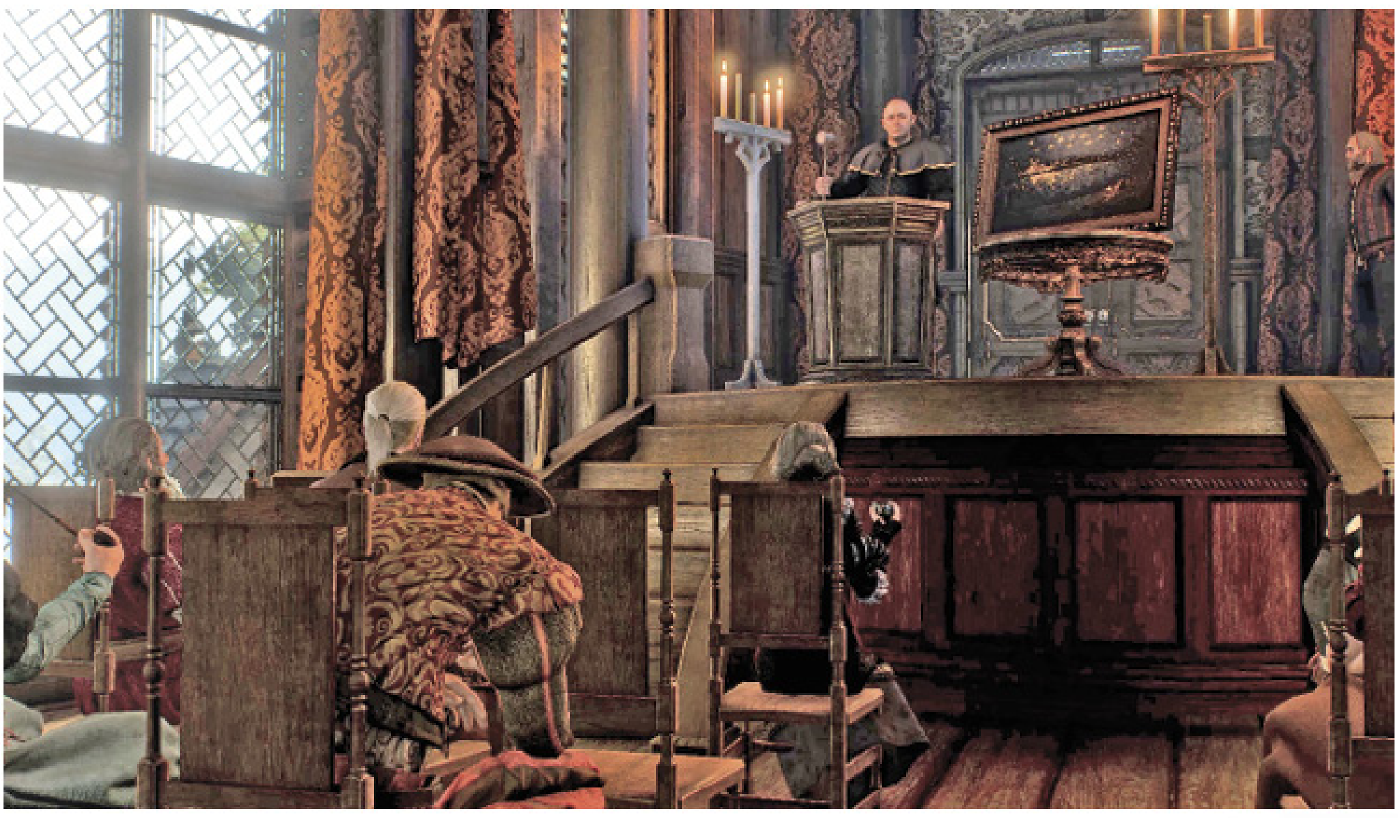
- The moonlit coupling hits a snag if Shani drunk both mead or rowanberry wine, and mixed it with a second drink of wine on the pier, as she throws up over the side of the rowboat, killing the mood ever-so-slightly.
- If the wine at the pier isn't mixed with previous alcohol at the party, there's further writhing.

The next morning, you wake at the lake shore, speaking to a (now fully-clothed) Shani as she prepares to depart for Oxenfurt. Before Shani leaves, you ask her a favor; to find out more about Olgierd. She agrees, and this quest concludes.

Once your night on the lake has ended, Main Quest: Dead Man's Party resumes.

Open Sesame (Part 1)

At The Auction: Do Your Bidding



When the auction begins, you take your seat with Vivaldi, who offers to loan you 100 crowns, at a “very favorable” rate of interest (one crown on ten when you pay him back). This is enough to purchase one, but not all three of the auction items. Then he asks if you’re prepared to bid. You can:

- Tell him of course, and wait for the auction to begin.
- Ask him to spot you “a couple hundred”; he responds with 100 crowns. Be sure to pay him back at his bank in Novigrad (at a 10 percent interest rate).

Items: 100 Crowns

- Tell him you’ll wait in the back. This skips the auction entirely, and doesn’t allow you to bid (or start the two smaller quests related to the items)! This isn’t recommended.

AUCTION #1: COUNT ROMILLY’S FIGURINE

First up is a brass figurine from the collection of the infamous Count Romilly. The rumored treasure inside can only be discovered by destroying the item itself. You can:

- Refrain from bidding.
- If you want it, you’ll need to bid 300 crowns for it (despite the item being worth only 150 crowns).

However, if this lands in your possession, you’re able to start Hearts of Stone Treasure Hunt: A Dark Legacy.

Items: Count Romilly’s Figurine

AUCTION #2: “STARRY NIGHT OVER THE PONTAR”

Second on the auction block is a charming piece by a young Novigrad artist named van Rogh. Bidding starts at only 20 crowns. You can:

- Refrain from bidding.
- Bid on it, after not previously mentioning its value to Vivaldi, and snap up the piece for its starting bid of 20 crowns. A veritable bargain!
- Bid on it, after mentioning its value to Vivaldi, who wants it for his own collection, bringing up the price you’ll pay to 60 crowns. Still, a reasonable sum!

If this painting is won, Hearts of Stone Secondary Quest: The Avid Collector continues.

Items: “Starry Night Over the Pontar”

AUCTION #3: THE PROFESSOR’S SPECTACLES

The final item is as rare as hens’ teeth—gold-framed spectacles with mountain crystal lenses polished by a gnome master! Once belonging to “the Professor,” you can:

- Refrain from bidding.
- Bid on it, getting into a bidding war with Yaromir, and eventually outbid the art collector at 350 crowns. Worthwhile? Possibly, as you can wear these, and add a rather esteemed aura to your visage; you look like a true professional!

Items: The Professor’s Spectacles

Open Sesame (Part 1)

Before The Auction: Vimme's Interesting Associates

OBJECTIVES

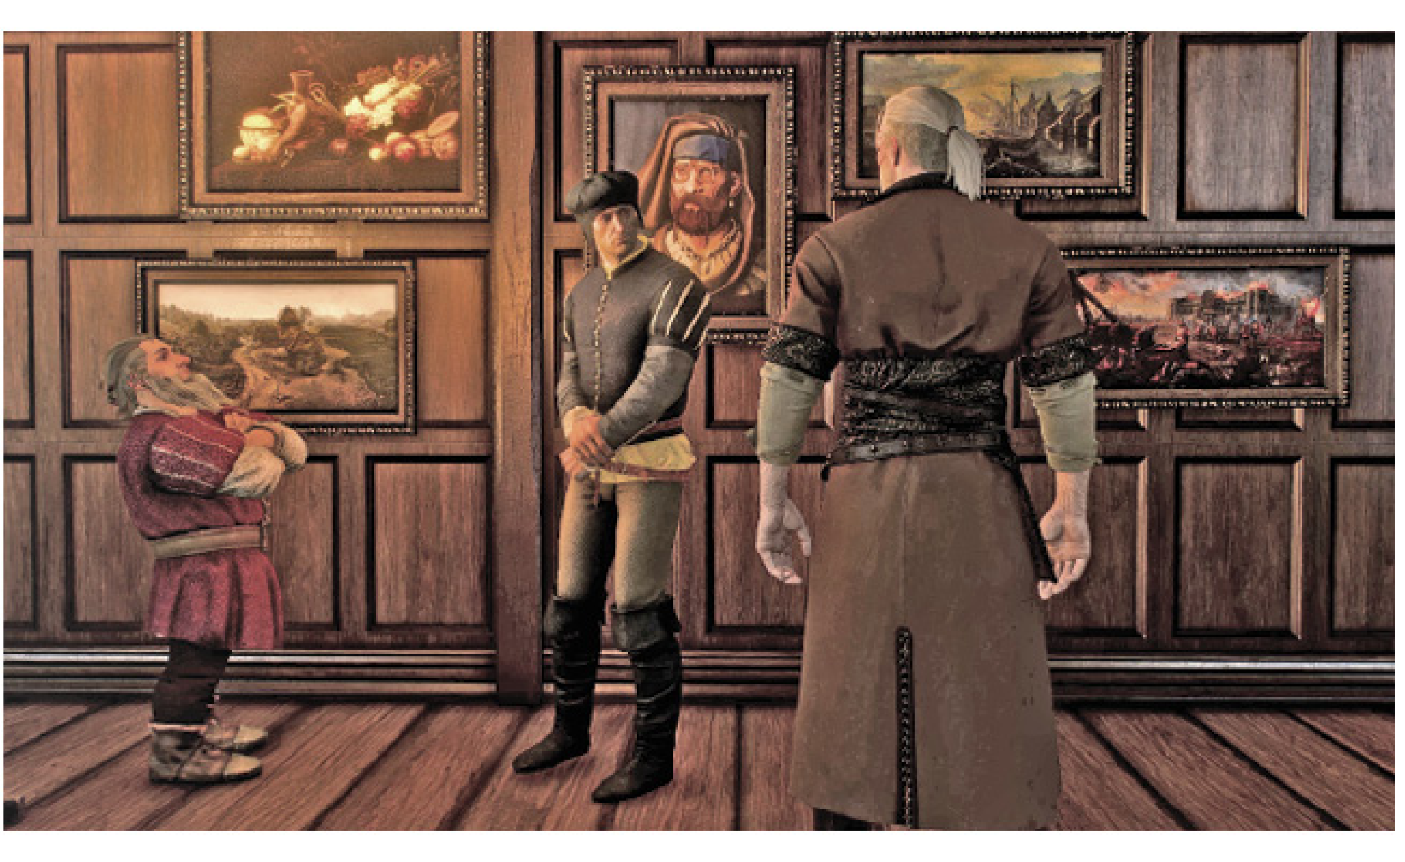
- (Optional) Meet Vivaldi's friends (3).

AUCTION HOUSE ETIQUETTE: PART 2

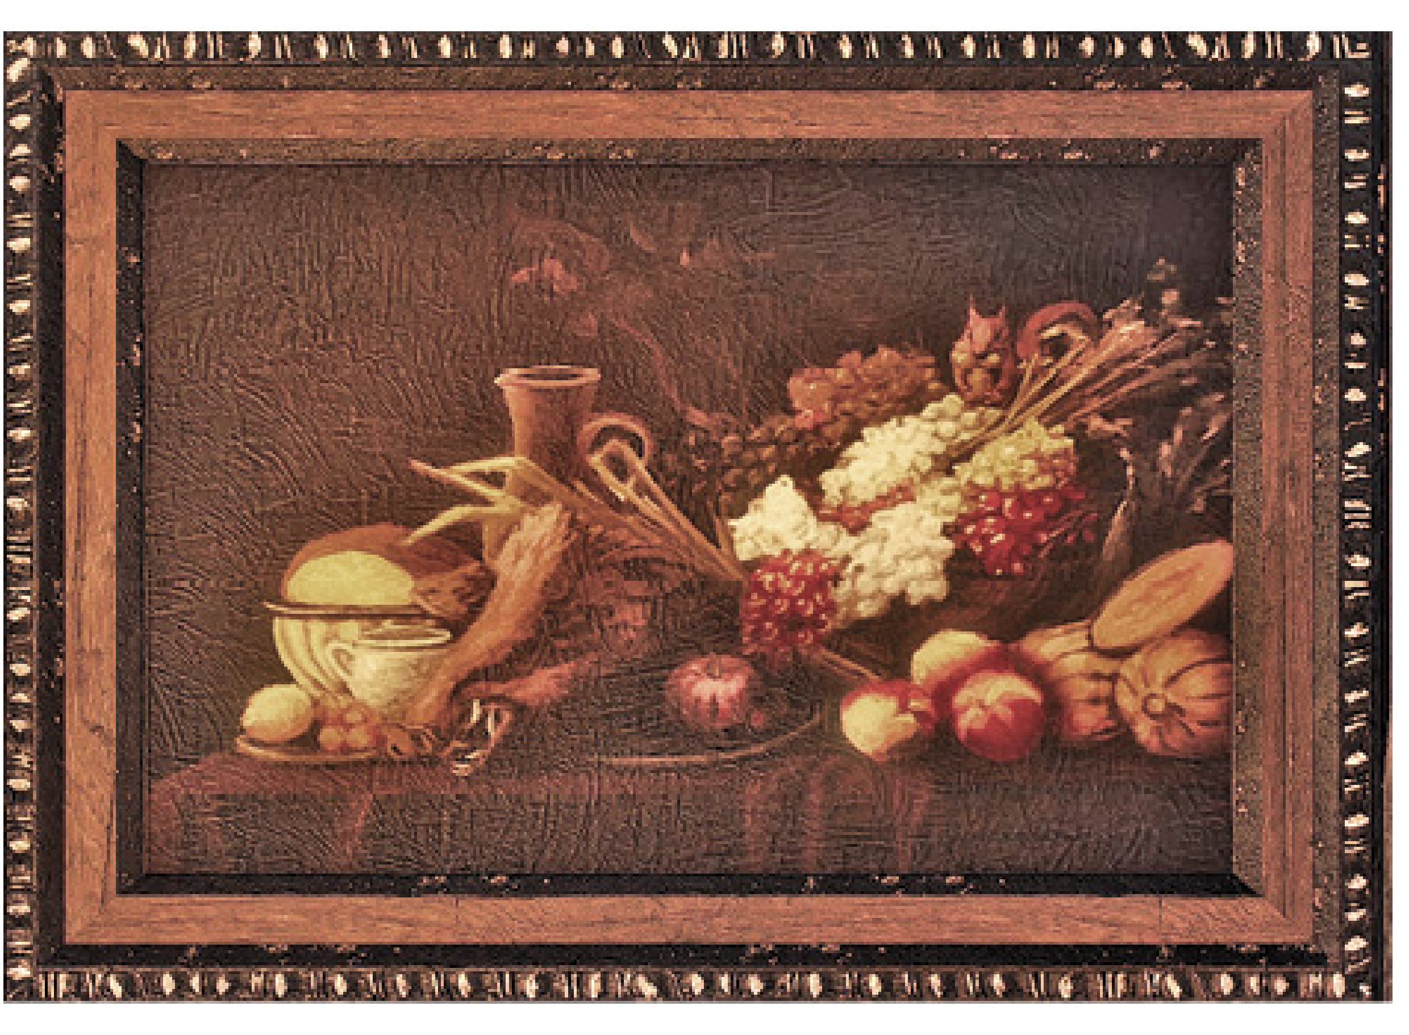
Feel free to interact with one, two, or three (or none) of Vivaldi's associates, in any order you like. You are encouraged to make acquaintances with all three to further the chances of accessing quests and otherwise-unobtainable objects.

Yaromir Ivanovitz Zaytsev

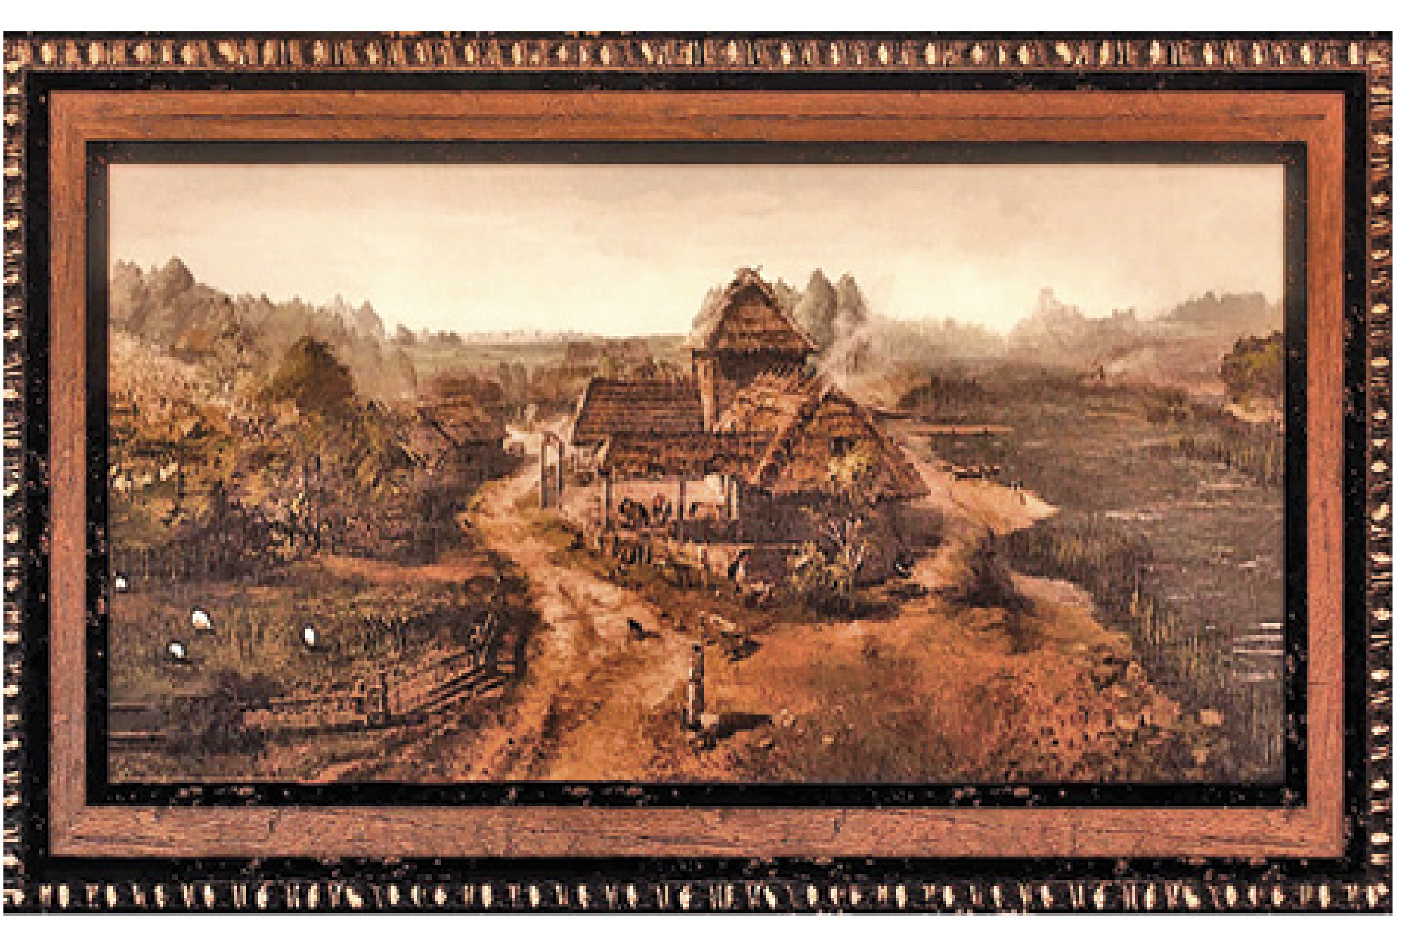
YAROMIR INTERACTION: HE'S AN AVID COLLECTOR



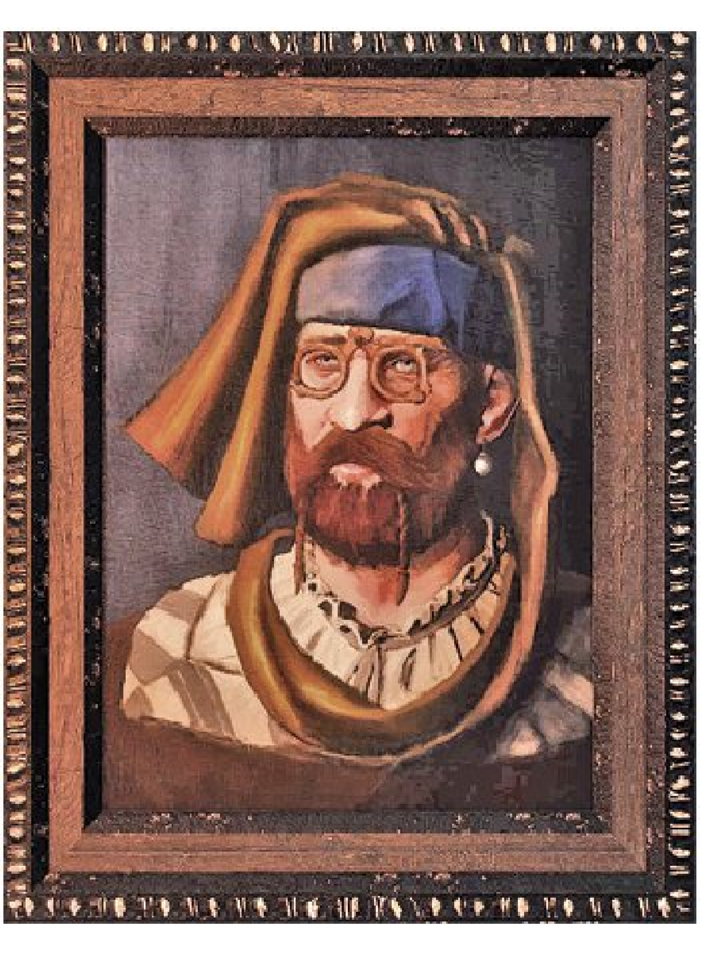
Walk over to the wall of paintings, which is being admired by the hoity-toity art dealer, Yaromir. He has disdain in his voice, and looks down his long nose at the likes of you. Before chatting to him, you may want to further your art appreciation by memorizing the following pictures:

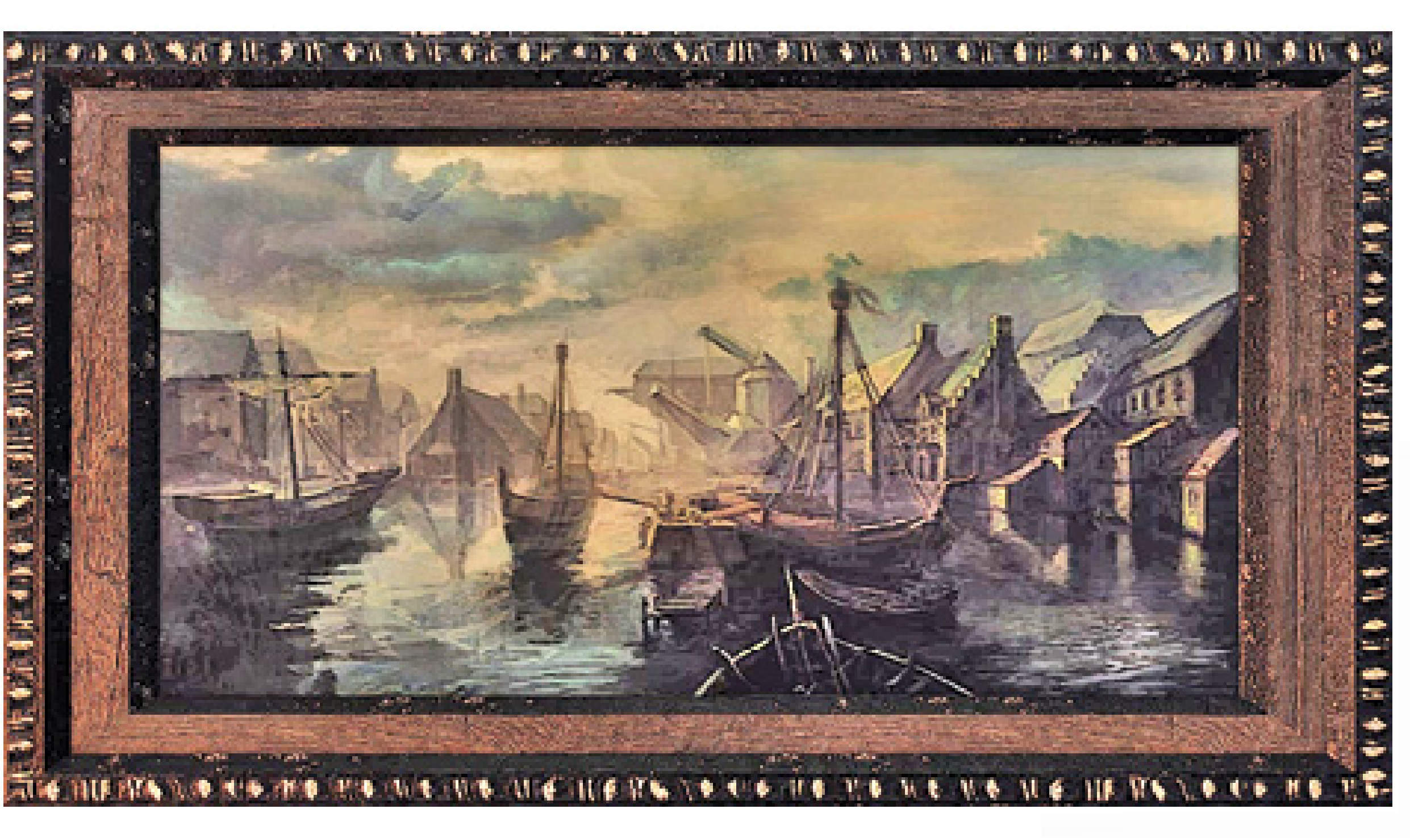


Still Life – J. de Varvari, 1222, oil on canvas

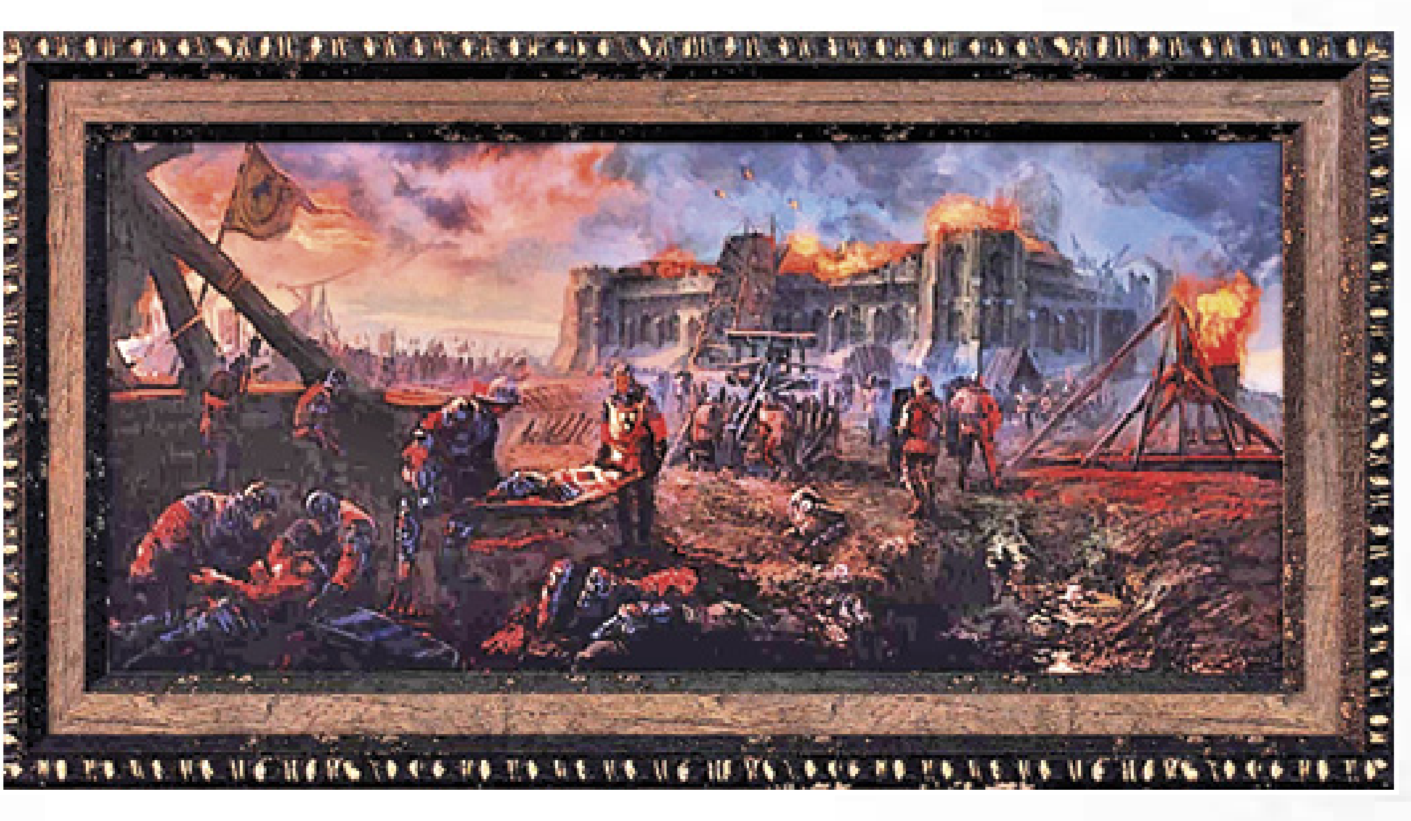


Et in Kovir Ego – N. Boussin, 1210, oil on canvas





A Vessel Leaving Port – 1220, by Z. Burner, oil on wood



Start your chat with Yaromir. You can make a rude response about not caring to learn about art. But it is recommended you tell Yaromir you have "a bit" of knowledge about art. Yaromir takes this as an opportunity to embarrass both you and the dwarf, as he's sure you can't tell a van der Knoob from a da Linci, and asks you to point out which painting is by Edward van der Knoob, the master from Maribor. You can:

- Choose the pastoral, the view of Novigrad, the still life, the battle scene, or tell Yaromir you have no idea; all answers are met with a scoffing and belittling reply. The conversation ends.
- Indicate the portrait of the merchant, and Yaromir is taken aback, asks for a brief word in private, and apologizes for his impertinence. He tells you a secret; there's a van Rogh in the forthcoming auction. Though this painter is a virtual unknown, the bookseller Marcus Hodgson is a fierce admirer. Buy the painting at auction, and you might sell it at a good profit, perchance? If you can trust that Hodgson, of course. This starts Secondary Quest: Avid Collector.

If you learn about the van Rogh painting, after this information has been imparted, Vimme asks you what that chat was all about. You can:

- Tell him you were told to buy the van Rogh. This causes the dwarf to bid for the painting in the auction, forcing you to purchase it at a higher price if you want it.
- Tell him "nothin' special," and the dwarf is none-the-wiser (and you can purchase the van Rogh for a song).

Hilbert

HILBERT INTERACTION: HE'S A RIGHT CARD

A man recently coming into wealth, Hilbert has his eye on a few fancy baubles, but he's also here to get a quick game of Gwent in with his Nilfgaardian Empire deck. After asking what deck you use (answer as you wish), he asks for a quick game. Then Vimme asks for a quick cut of your winnings. Agree or disagree with either option (feel free to maximize your bet at 250 crowns if you're confident). Lose the game, and you disappoint the dwarf. Win the game, and you receive the following (only available here, and during this one game):

Items: Gaunter O'Dimm (Gwent Card)

COUNTESS MIGNOLE INTERACTION: SHE'S A COLLECTOR OF VEDYMINAICA

OBJECTIVES

- (Optional) Find Countess Mignole's earring using your Witcher Senses.

Countess Mignole

Vimme introduces you to a lady of a certain age, and one that instantly recognizes your medallion. She is a keen collector of objects related to the Witcherly profession.

Ask her where she developed this interest, and she mentions a happy past, but doesn't elaborate. She does, however, allow you to view a selection of alchemy formulas, as well as four pieces of Viper gear. This is your only opportunity to purchase the following:

Items: Diagram: Viper Armor, Diagram: Viper Boots, Diagram: Viper Gauntlets, Diagram: Viper Trousers

WITCHER GEAR: GOING, GOING, GONE!

This Viper armor is medium in weight, offers poison immunity, and has the highest armor rating of all the Witcher gear. Each Diagram costs around 330 crowns, and this is the only opportunity to buy them! Consult Scavenger Hunt: Viper School Gear for locations of other equipment from this school).

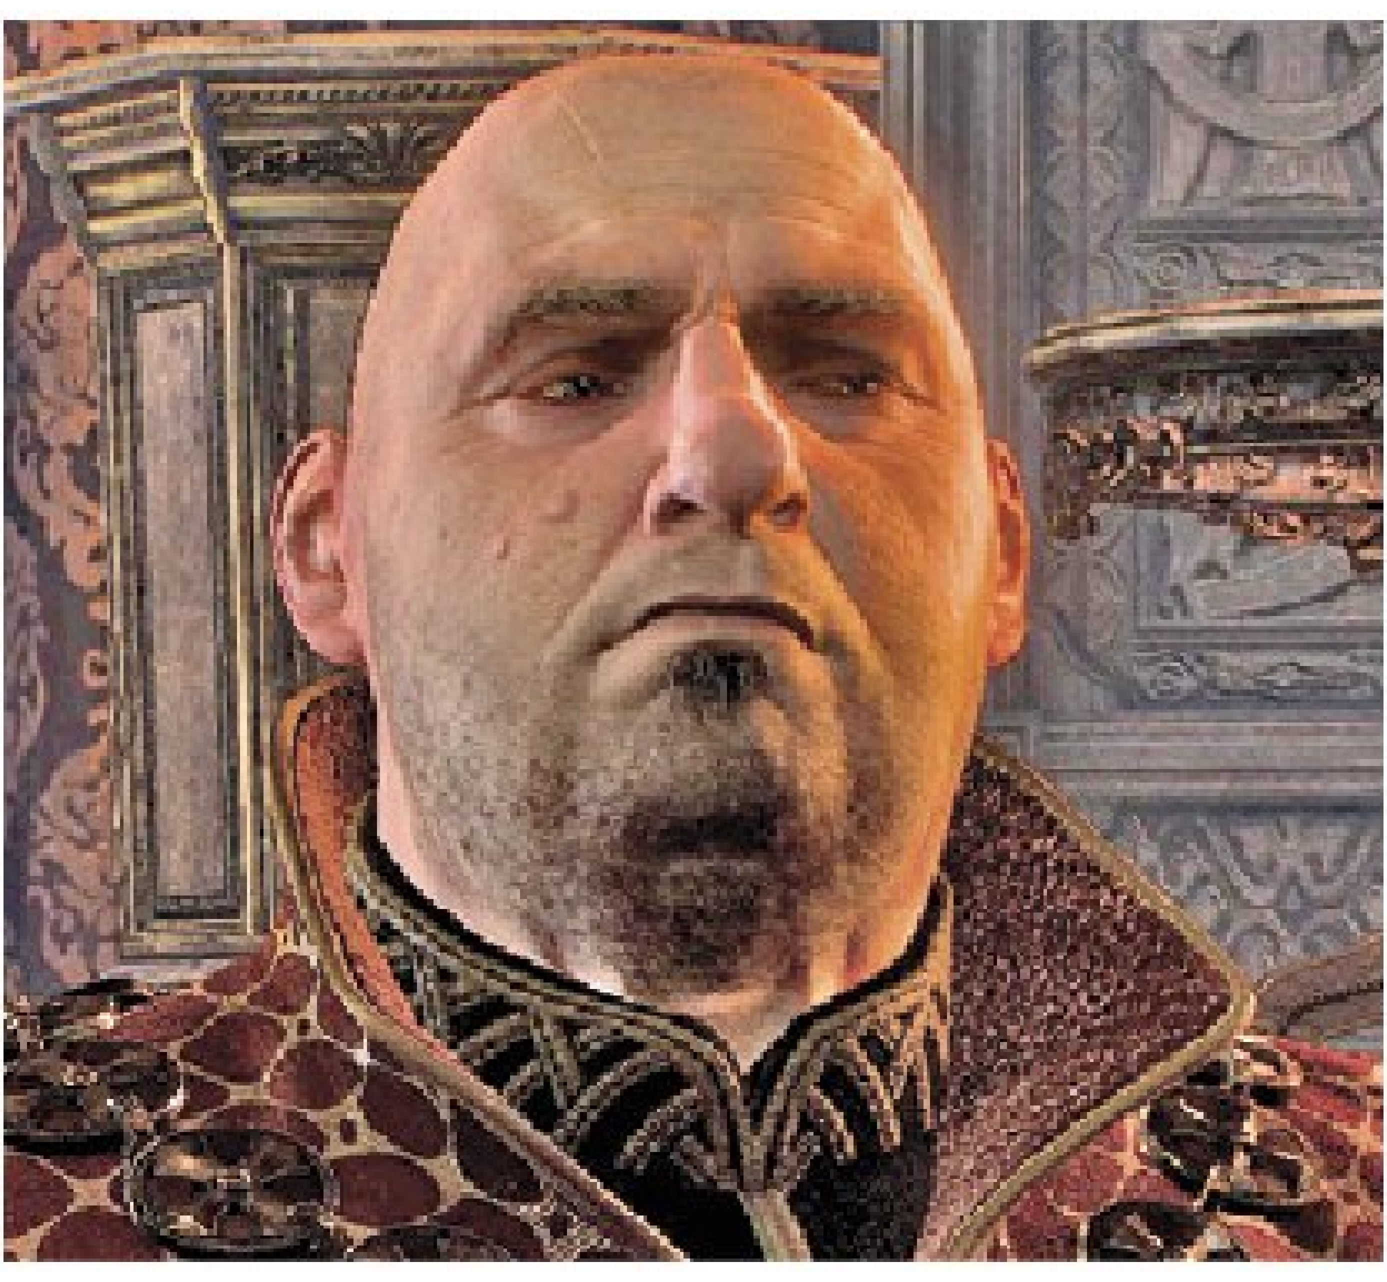
After a chat about the auction, the Countess hopes you might use your preternatural abilities to locate a missing earring. Oblige, head up onto the exterior balcony, and examine a spilt wine goblet. You soon realize the Countess has an ulterior motive for asking you outside; she wishes to learn more about a man she once knew with tenderness, Vesemir. Answer her as you wish, and leave her to her melancholy thoughts.

Open Sesame (Part 1)

After The Auction:don’t Expect A Warm Welcome

OBJECTIVES

- Defeat the guards.



Horst Borsodi

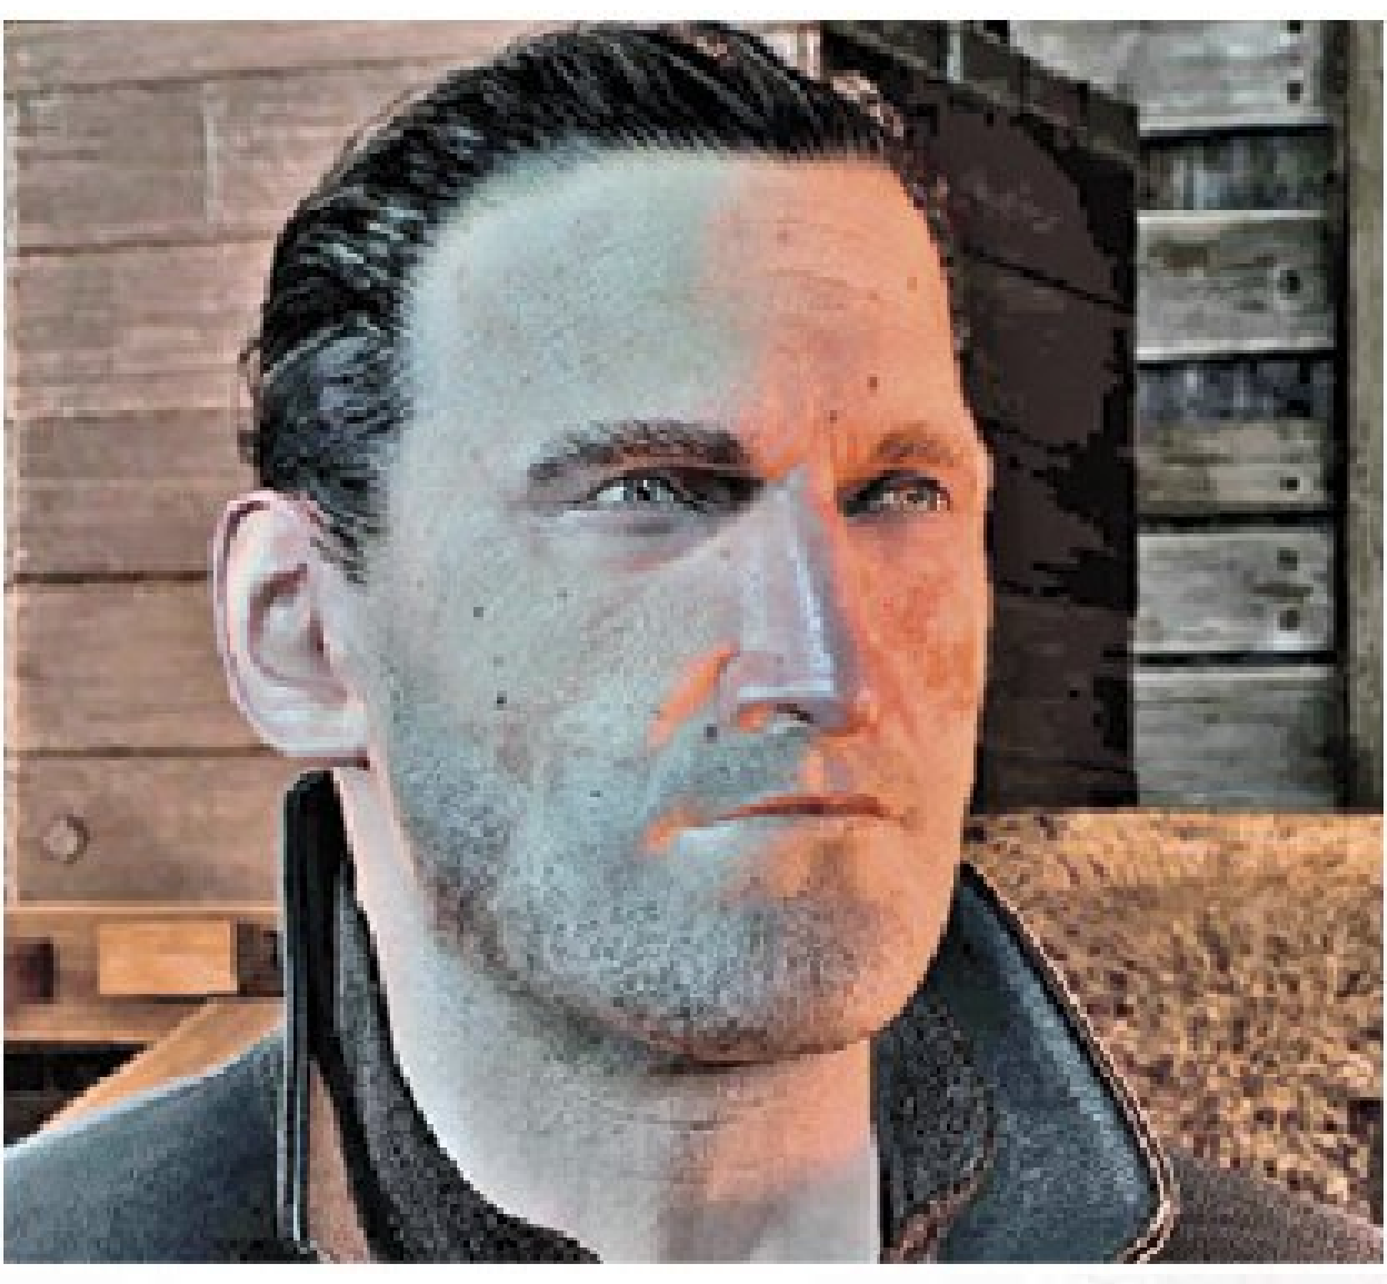
During the intermission, Vivaldi introduces you to Horst Bordosi himself. Feel free to answer his gruff determination about your uninvited status, in whatever way you deem appropriate. It doesn’t matter as you’re unceremoniously removed from the building, and dumped outside with two guards to fistfight. Defeat both guards (ideally using fists and Aard).

SECONDARY QUEST COMMENCEMENT

The auction is now definitely over. Secondary Quest: An Avid Collector is now active. Treasure Hunt: A Dark Legacy becomes active once you dismantle Count Romilly’s Figurine at an armory. Scavenger Hunt: Viper School Gear is also active.

OBJECTIVES

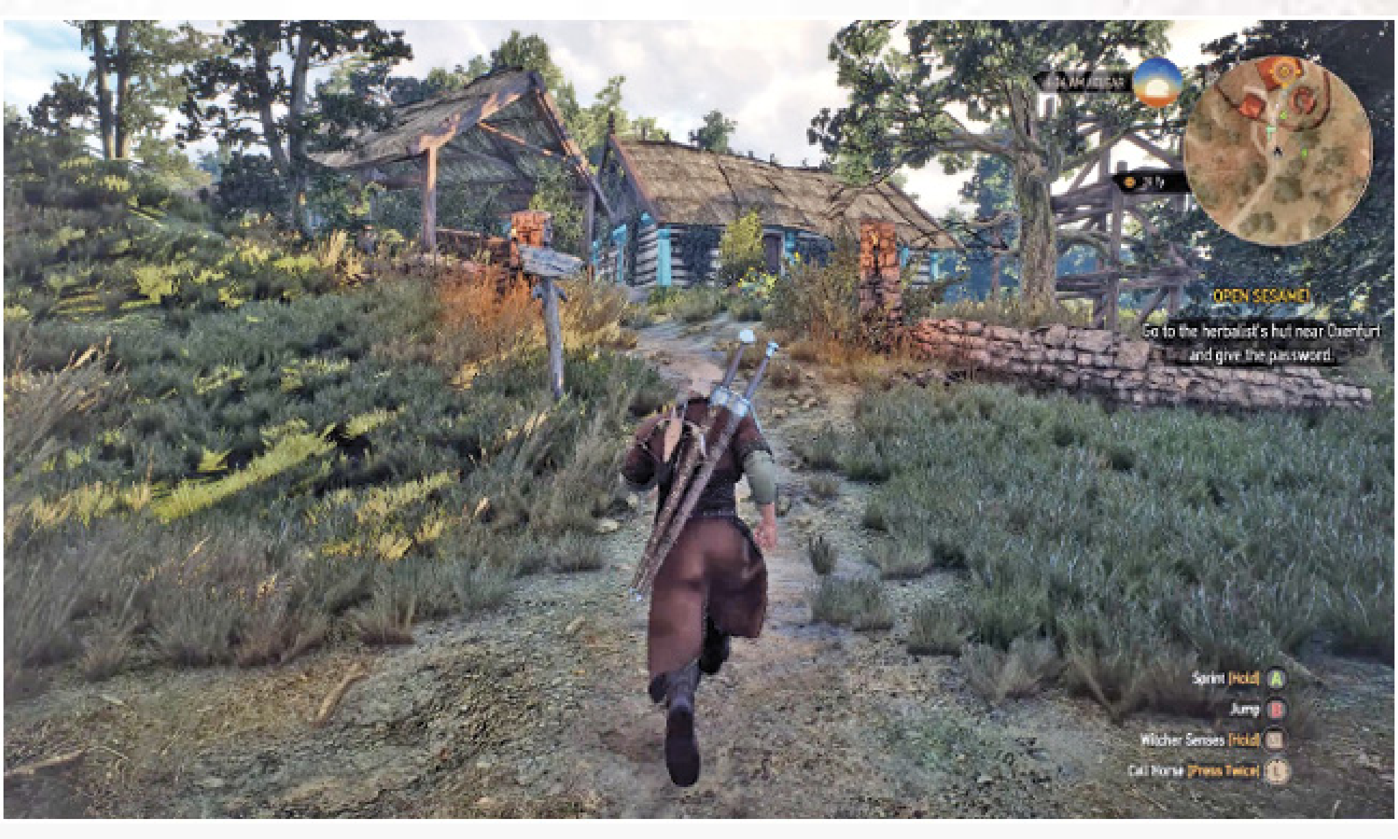
- Go to the herbalist’s hut near Oxenfurt and give the password.



The Stranger

Afterward, a hooded stranger beckons you to an intriguing chat regarding a different possibility of gaining entry into the auction house. Further instructions await at a nearby herbalist’s hut. Head north and a little east. As you ascend the hill the hut is on, prepare to fight a wounded wild boar. The hut itself has a trio of Fallen Knights, bandits in the armor of soldiers. Remove them as a threat, enter the hut, and speak with the Halfling merchant. You can:

- Trade, ask about master formulae, or play Gwent.
- Ask him for some “yarrow extract;” the password The Stranger mentioned.

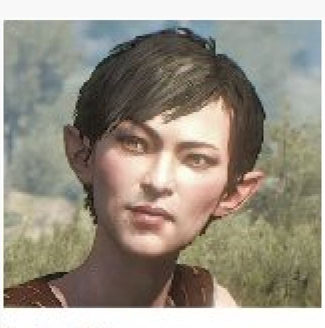


You’re prompted to descend into a small cellar, where The Stranger reveals his true intentions. During the conversation regarding a forthcoming raid on the Borsodi auction house’s vault, feel free to ask about The Stranger’s name, the House you’re here to steal, and what he wants from the vault.

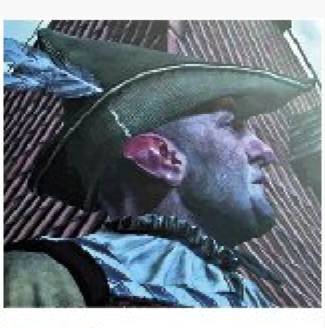
Once you agree to the plan in principle, a crew to help perform this breaking and entering must be assembled; both for getting inside the building and opening the vault itself. There’s also the Redanian patrols to waylay, too. Ask about each one during the chat.

GETTING INSIDE: BREAK-IN ARTISTS REQUIRED

As the initial plan is to assault the auction house from the rooftops, The Stranger’s favorite break-in artist is Eveline Gallo, a circus artist going by the name “The Ermine.” She has a troupe she’s associated with, camped nearby.



Eveline Gallo

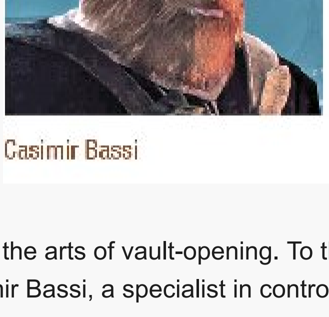


Hugo Hoff

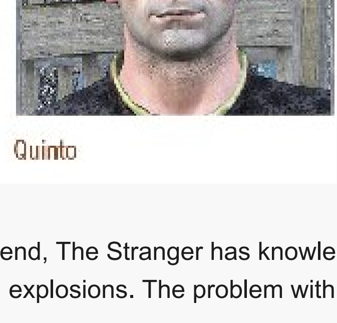
The other option is the Halfling Hugo Hoff, who’s notched up more break-ins than you’ve felled monsters. He’s modest in size, but quite the climber, and he is apparently holed up somewhere in Oxenfurt.

This starts Main Quest: Open Sesame: Breaking and Entering.

OPENING THE VAULT: HIRING A SAFECRACKER



Casimir Bassi



Quinto

You require someone skilled in the arts of vault-opening. To this end, The Stranger has knowledge of two possible safecrackers. The first is Casimir Bassi, a specialist in controlled explosions. The problem with this dwarf is that he’s retired, lives in Alness, and might turn down the offer.

The other possible hire is the North’s most famed safecracker, Quinto. The problem with him is that has infamy has resulted in numerous arrest warrants, and he’s been nabbed by a “prick mercenary” named Hans of Cidaris. You’ll need to rescue him.

This starts Main Quest: Open Sesame: The Safecracker.

CULLING THE PATROLS: A CLEANSING MIXTURE

You both agree the Redanians need to be indisposed, not slaughtered. You’re to approach the garrison’s cook, convince him to spike the soldiers’ nosh with something to keep them bedridden with gastrointestinal problems. You have a perfect formula to brew. This starts Main Quest: Open Sesame: Witcher Seasonings.

Items: Formula: Cleansing Mixture

HEIST PREPARATION: THREE SUB-QUESTS TO COMPLETE

The next part of Main Quest: Open Sesame now begins. There are three parts to this quest: Breaking and Entering, The Safecracker, and Witcher Seasonings. Complete them in any order you wish.

Open Sesame: Breaking And Entering

Option #1: Someone Has Hassled The Hoff

DANGER ALERT SPOILER ALERT

HOS OPEN SESAME: BREAKING AND ENTERING

RELATED QUESTS: Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Open Sesame, The Safecracker, Witcher Seasonings

LOCATIONS: Hugo Hoff's House (Oxenfurt), Circus Caravan, Herbalist's Hut

CHARACTERS: Hugo Hoff, Eveline Gallo, Meryn

ENEMIES: Bandits

RECOMMENDED ITEMS: At least 600 Crowns

PICKING YOUR BREAK-IN ARTIST

This quest is accessible after you meet The Stranger for the first time at the Herbalist's Hut, and agree to locate one of two possible break-in artists for the forthcoming heist. You can choose to visit Hugo Hoff or Eveline Gallo in any order you like, as well as the two safecrackers, and concoct a mixture to incapacitate the Oxenfurt guards.

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the house where Hugo Hoff is hiding.

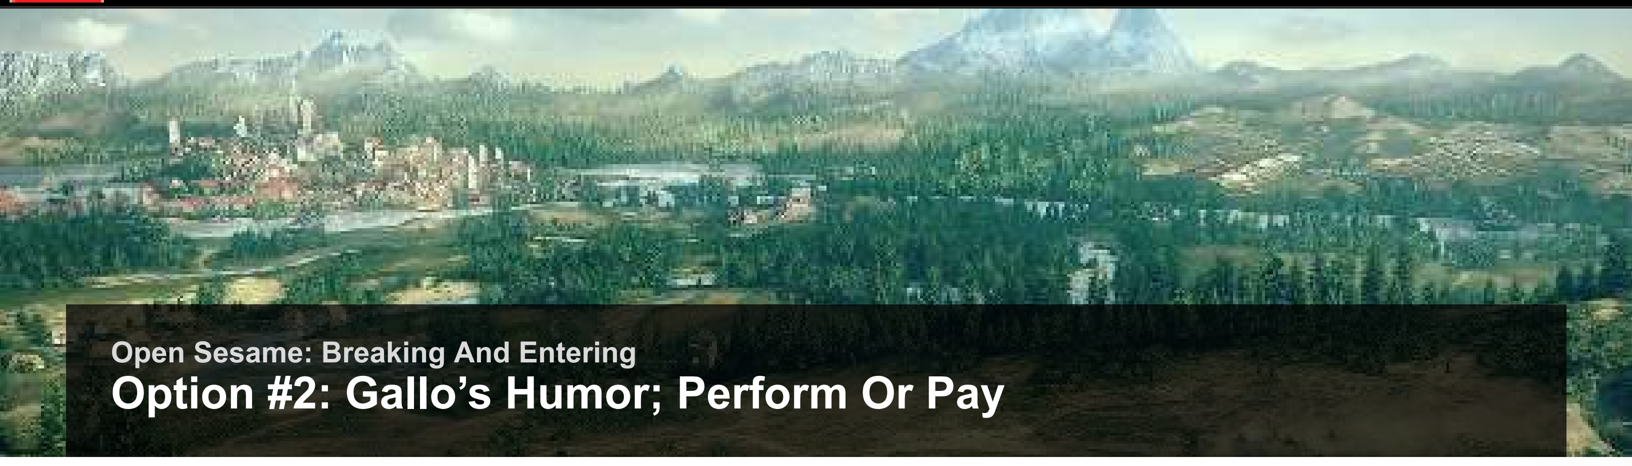
The Stranger mentioned that one of his choices—the Halfling climber known as Hugo Hoff—was holed up in an Oxenfurt house close to the confusingly-named Novigrad Gate. Make haste for Oxenfurt, head to the stone dwelling close to the gate, and knock on the door. There's no answer. But there's evidence of scratching and blood on the porch. Not good.

OBJECTIVES

- Explore around the house using your Witcher Senses.
- Follow the tracks using your Witcher Senses.
- Defeat the bandits.
- Search the riverbank for clues using your Witcher Senses.
- Return to shore.

Scan the porch beam to uncover blood; someone knocked their head on it. Close by are footprints. Follow them along the main thoroughfare in a roughly south-easterly direction, and down to the water's edge. A trio of bandits aren't happy you've wandered by; defeat all three of them. You sense Hugo is in trouble.

Use your Witcher Senses and check the nearby rowboat, still moist and used recently. The trail ends at the water's edge, but a quick looting of one of the bandits revealed a letter. It seems Hugo ran into a little bit of trouble, and has been taught a permanent lesson. Dive into the river, swimming south (and optionally using your Witcher Senses to pinpoint Hugo from the surface), and dive down to inspect the halfling, who's sleeping with the fishes. This leaves you no option but to attempt to recruit Eveline Gallo.

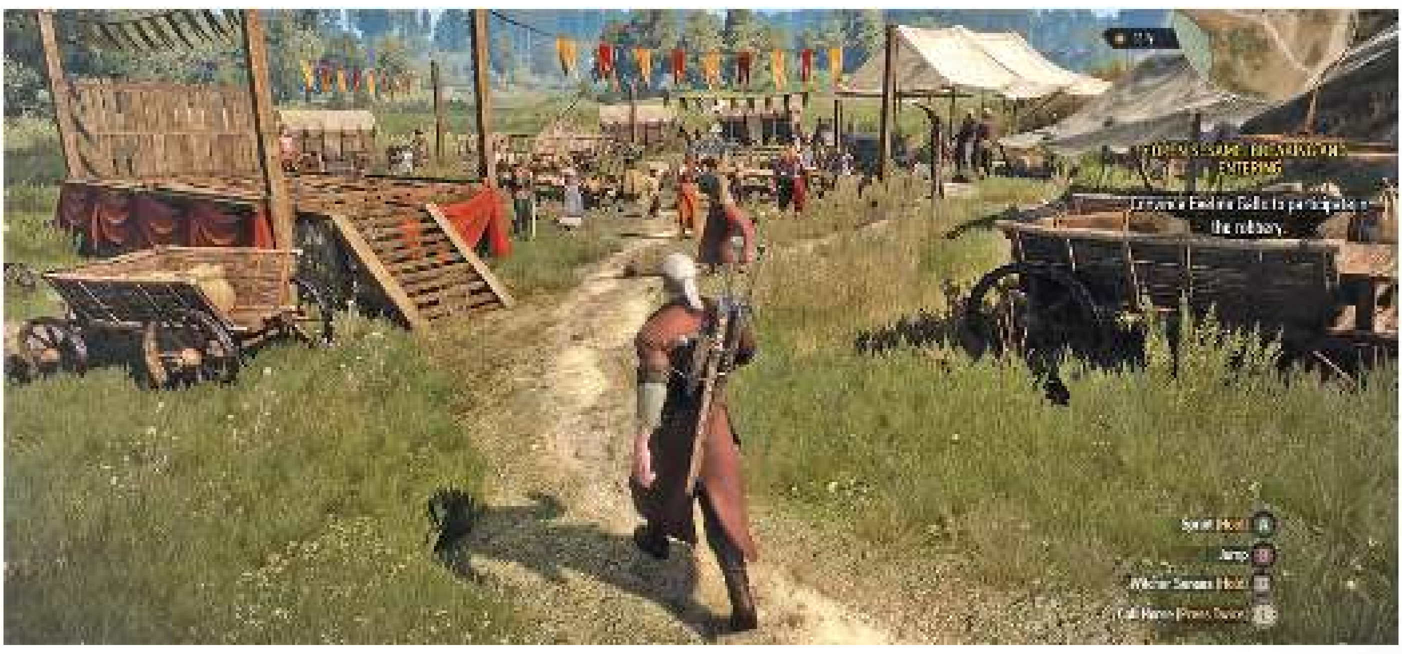


Open Sesame: Breaking And Entering

Option #2: Gallo’s Humor; Perform Or Pay

OBJECTIVES

- Convince Eveline Gallo to participate in the robbery.



OPEN SESAME: BREAKING AND ENTERING
Convince Eveline Gallo to participate in the robbery.
Sprint (Hold)
Jump
Witcher Senses (Hold)
Call Horse (Press Twice)

The Stranger mentioned his primary choice—the elven acrobat called Eveline Gallo—was performing with her troupe somewhere in Gustfields territory. Head to the fields just west of the Vegelbud Estate, where a small crowd of peasants are waiting for a circus performance. Find Eveline and her colleague Meryn arguing by the caravans. After she asks what you want, try the following:

- Request you speak privately.

Tell her (with Meryn present) you want her to work with you.

Your choice affects a possible payment you may incur shortly. Eveline tells you she’s about to commence a circus show, but her colleague “Hawkeye” Vann isn’t living up to his nickname. Quite the opposite in fact; he’s gone blind after drinking some questionable hooch. You’re asked to stand in for Vann, performing a trick involving a crossbow and some apples. Help her out, and she agrees to your request. You can:

- Agree to this request.
- Disagree, and reimburse the peasants who have bought tickets, and cancel the event. If Eveline is talking with you alone, she agrees that 400 crowns should cover it. If Meryn is with her, he prompts her to increase the amount to 600 crowns. Take it or leave it.

Eveline Gallo

Meryn

OBJECTIVES

- Shoot the apples with your crossbow.

Accept her request to stand in for Hawkeye Vann, and you find yourself on stage with a rabble of serfs watching your pinpoint accuracy with a crossbow. Meryn is balancing an apple on each arm, one on his leg, and one atop his head. Simply aim and fire at the apples. If you miss, simply try again. If you hit Meryn, Eveline still joins you, apparently that’s not the first time this sort of thing has happened.

After the performance or payoff, Eveline lives up to her part of the bargain and receives instructions for visiting the Herbalist’s Hut. Your infiltrator has been secured, and this sub-quest concludes.

ON THE CARDS: GWENT MERCHANT

Be sure to locate the caravan merchant here before you leave (or if you return) to purchase a couple of Gwent cards. Perhaps challenge him to a game and secure the Schirru card while you’re at it?

Open Sesame: The Safecracker

Option #1: An Explosive, Temperamental Cuckold

OPEN SESAME: THE SAFECRACKER

RELATED QUESTS: Hearts of Stone Main Quest: Open Sesame, Breaking and Entering, Witcher Seasonings

LOCATIONS: Herbalist's Hut, Alness, Mercenaries' Camp

CHARACTERS: Casimir, Quinto, Hans of Cidaris

RECOMMENDED ITEMS: Axii Delusion level 2, or 200+ Crowns

PICKING YOUR SAFECRACKER

This quest is accessible after you meet The Stranger for the first time at the Herbalist's Hut, and agree to locate one of two possible safecrackers for the forthcoming heist. You can choose to visit Casimir or Quinto in any order you like, as well as the two break-in artists, and concocting a mixture to incapacitate the Oxenfurt guards.

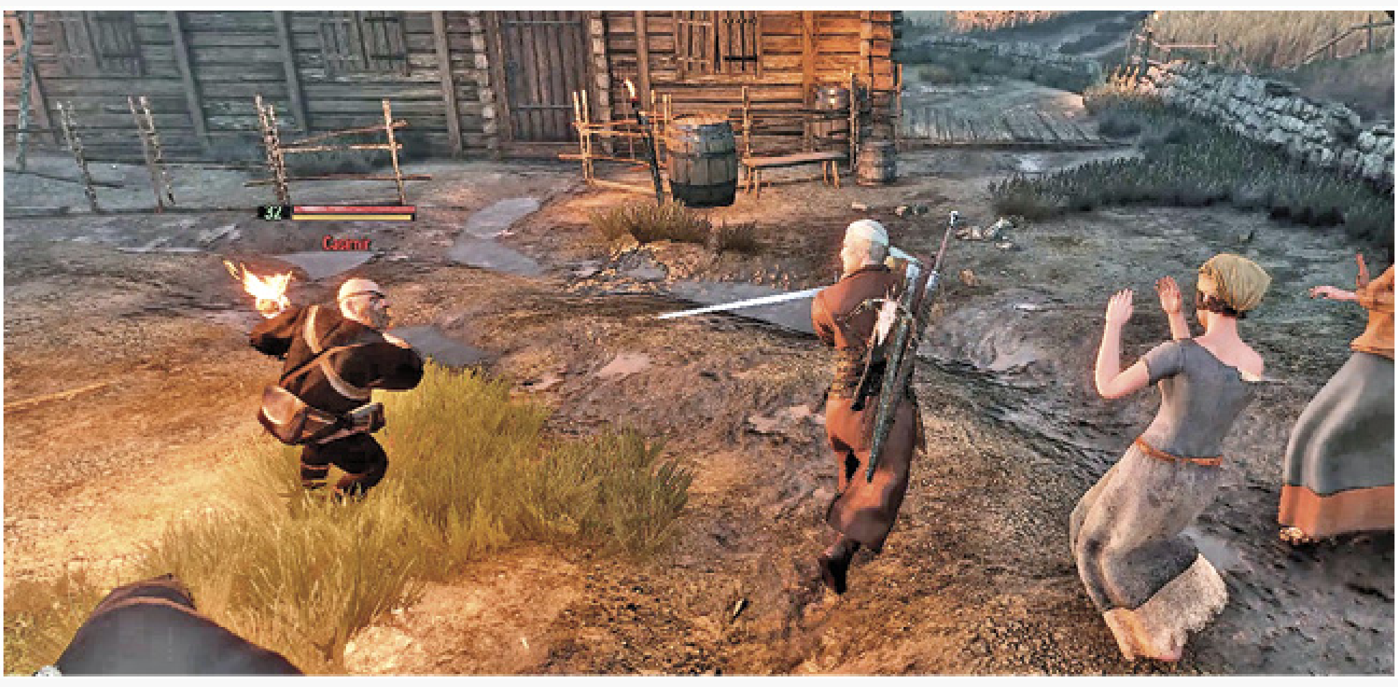
OBJECTIVES

- Convince Casimir to take part in the robbery.
- (Optional) Defeat Casimir.

Casimir

In the Gustfields east of Novigrad lies the village of Alness. As you arrive there, you spot commotion from one of the thatched-roof cottages. It seems Casimir has found out about his wife's infidelity, and is hellbent on blowing himself into tiny, fleshy pieces. He sits atop the roof waving a flaming torch, near a cluster of explosive barrels. The situation calls for quick thinking. You can:

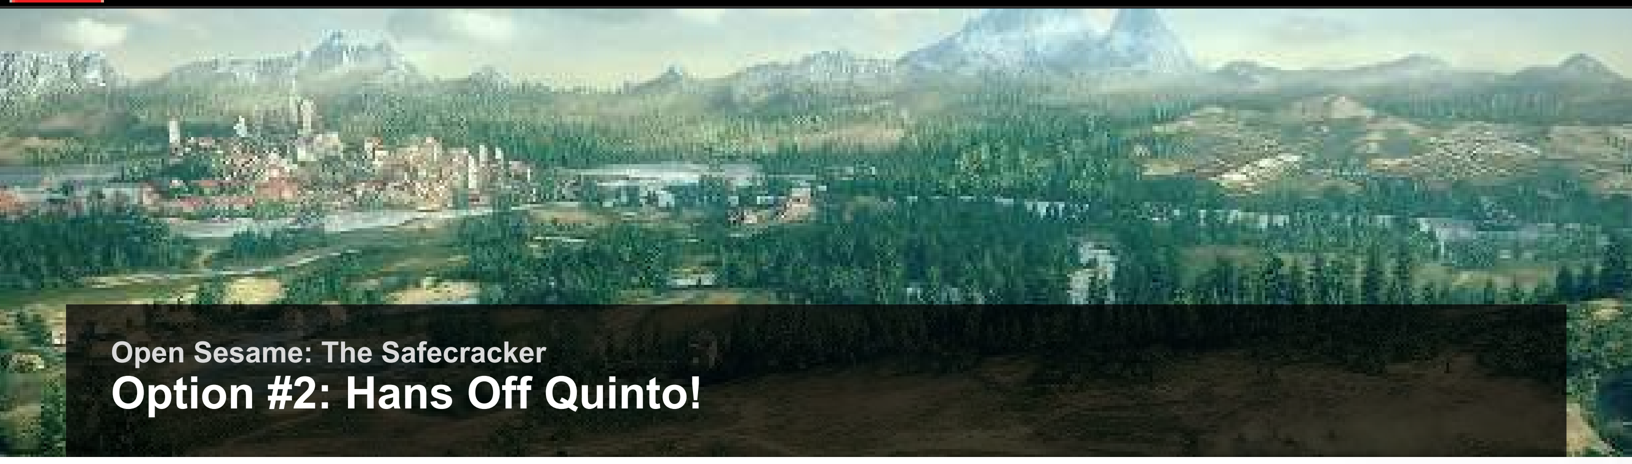
- Mention you're "really sorry" or that he should "set the torch aside" to "talk this out." Neither option is particularly helpful (unless you want to watch a hay roof burn), as it doesn't dissuade Casimir from detonating his barrels. This forces you to find Quinto.
- Tell Casimir "you're pathetic." This angers the dwarf so much, he clambers down off his perch, and challenges you to a fight. Best him in quick combat.
- (Axii Delusion level 2) Or addle the dwarf's brain and order him off the roof without having to belt him.



Choose either of the last two options, and Casimir agrees to help you. You give him instructions on reaching the herbalist's hut, and this quest concludes.

CASIMIR: PICKING SIDES WITH THE BORSODI BROTHERS

(Spoiler) If you pick Casimir, certain elements of the infiltration within the Borsodi auction house play out in a different manner. Be sure to read the subsequent quest to ensure Casimir's loyalties match your own.



Open Sesame: The Safecracker

Option #2: Hans Off Quinto!

OBJECTIVES

- Go to the mercenaries' camp and talk to Quinto.
- Defeat Hans in a fistfight.

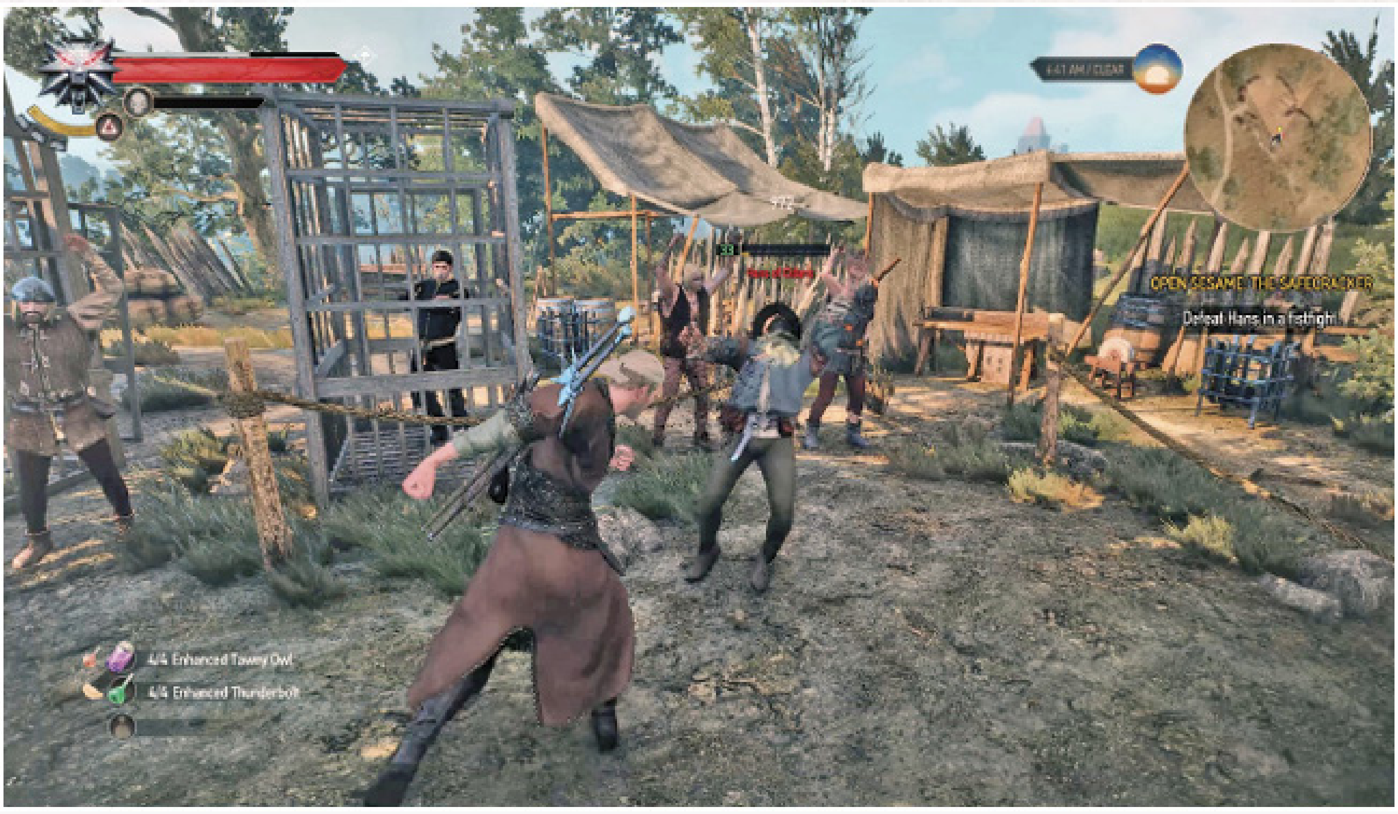
Quinto

Hans of Cidaris

A short distance roughly south from the Herbalist's Hut is a mercenaries' camp where you'll find Quinto caged, and guarded by a group of ruffians lead by Hans of Cidaris. You explain you require Quinto's services, and after some banter, you're left with having to offer Hans something. You can:

- (200 crowns) Pay Quinto's release fee of 200 crowns to Hans. If you forced Hans to pay you more money during Archgriffin monster hunt, Quinto's freedom is worth 400 crowns for you.
- Try to make a deal, usually dropping around 140 crowns in order to buy Quinto's freedom.
- Ask if Hans fancies a game of Gwent. To the winner goes Quinto. If you lose though, expect to pay double to free the safecracker.
- Mention Hans is "acting like a fishwife", goading him into a bout of fisticuffs. To the winner goes Quinto. If you're knocked on your arse and lose though, expect to pay double to free the lock-picker.

After Quinto demonstrates his skill at exiting cages, you give him instructions on reaching the herbalist's hut, and this quest concludes.



QUINTO: PICKING SIDES WITH THE BORSODI BROTHERS

(Spoiler) If you pick Quinto, certain elements of the infiltration within the Borsodi auction house play out in a different manner. Be sure to read the subsequent quest to ensure Quinto's loyalties match your own.

RECOMMENDED ITEMS: Dwarven Spirit (1), Rotfiend Blood (2), Wolfsbane (2), 500+ Crowns, Axii Delusion level 2

PICKING YOUR INGREDIENTS

This quest is accessible after you meet The Stranger for the first time at the Herbalist's Hut. You can choose to complete this quest in any order you like, either before or after you source the two break-in artists and safecrackers.

OBJECTIVES

- Prepare a cleansing mixture that will weaken the Redanian soldiers.

During your conversation with The Stranger in the herbalist's cellar, you're given a recipe to concoct, known as the Cleansing Mixture. It requires the following ingredients.

CLEANSING MIXTURE

Ingredient	Amount
Dwarven Spirit	1
Rotfiend Blood	2
Wolfsbane	2

Dwarven Spirit: This can be discovered randomly in chests, or purchased from any herbalist (including the Halfling whose shop The Stranger is using as a base of operations.

Rotfiend Blood: Consult the Bestiary to discover more about these disgusting atrocities that roam the battlefields, and slay two or more to loot the blood (randomly dropped). Journey to Velen, and visit any of the battlefield locations there to maximize your chance of encountering a rotfiend. The Secondary Quest: Funeral Pyres has rotfiends to face, down in Mulbrydale.

Wolfsbane: Aside from buying this commonly-occurring purple flower from any herbalist (including that Halfling), you can find wolfsbane growing, even in the garden and fields surrounding the herbalist's hut.

Open Sesame: Witcher Seasonings

Horrendous Uprisings From The Bottom

OBJECTIVES

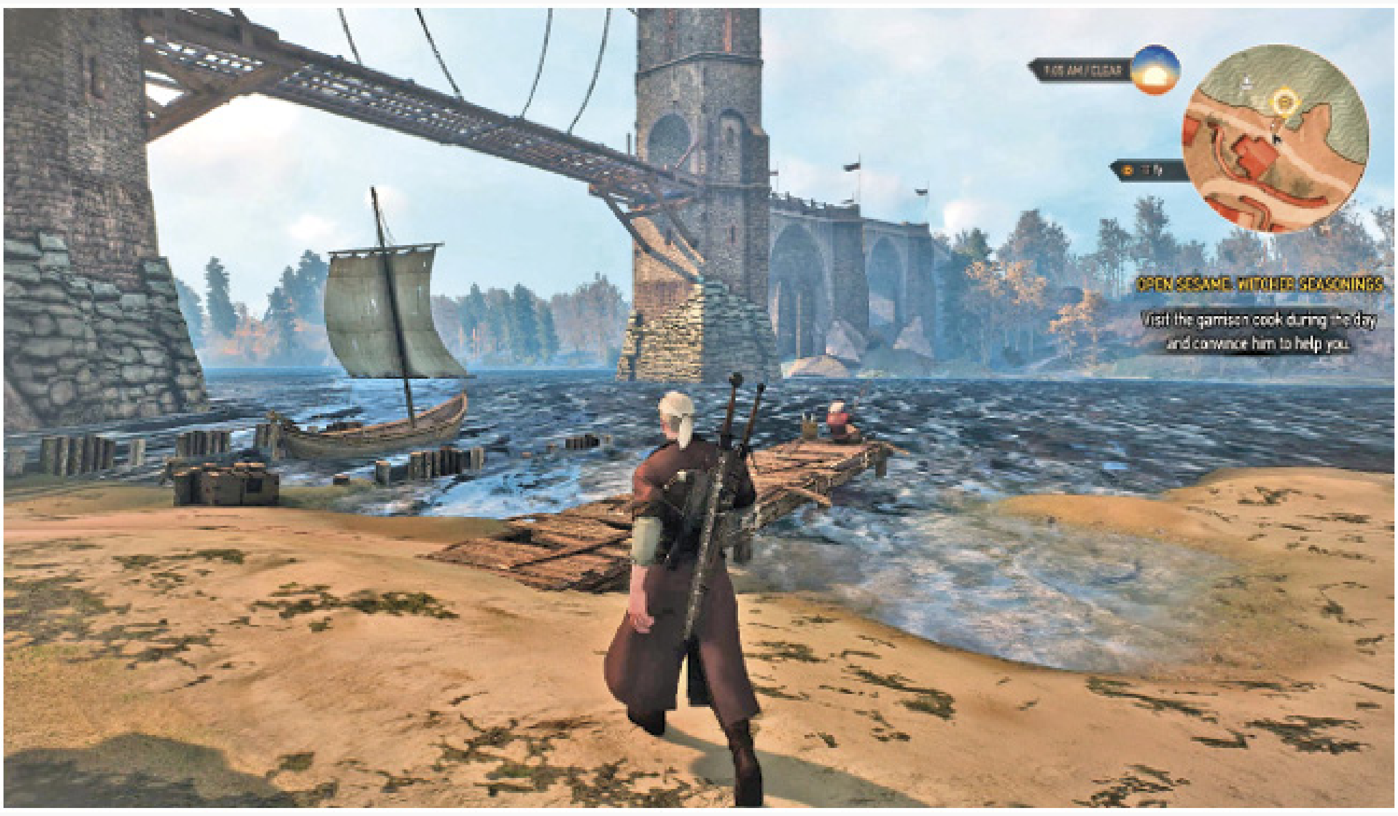
- Visit the garrison cook during the day and convince him to help you.

Maarten the Cook

Ensure you're searching for the cook during daylight hours (meditate until the next day if the sun has set), and find Maarten the cook on the pier, as expected. He's able to accommodate your extra ingredient into the guards' fish suppers, but at a cost. He wants 500 crowns. You can:

- (500 Crowns) Pay him what he wants.
- (Axii Delusion level 2) Or "persuade" him to help you free of charge.

Once the cook has been bribed or his mind befuddled into helping you, this quest concludes.



OPEN SESAME: WITCHER SEASONINGS
